The Club held its last meeting in the Hotel Statler basement, where the club was housed for 15 years, April 9, when Chester E. Lampson, Jefferson, O., historian and newspaper editor, was the principal speaker.

April 13 the club formally opened its larger quarters in the Allerton Hotel Club Residence, a new structure erec by the Allerton Company which oper similar hotels in Chicago and New Yo

The results of the Burton-Paish deb were interesting. A vote of the memb was taken when they entered the lunch room and another after the close of debate. Cancellation lost ground. Bef the arguments cancellation was favo by 16 per cent of the diners, while agai cancellation got 66 per cent in its fa The vote after the debate stood 12 cent for cancellation, 86 per cent agai only two per cent of the diners be undecided, whereas at the first ballot per cent were undecided.

Frank M. Strock, president of the cl presided, and former Secretary of W Newton D. Baker sat at the right Sir George Burton, being flanked City Manager W. R. Hopkins of Cle land, scores of other prominent Cle landers being guests.

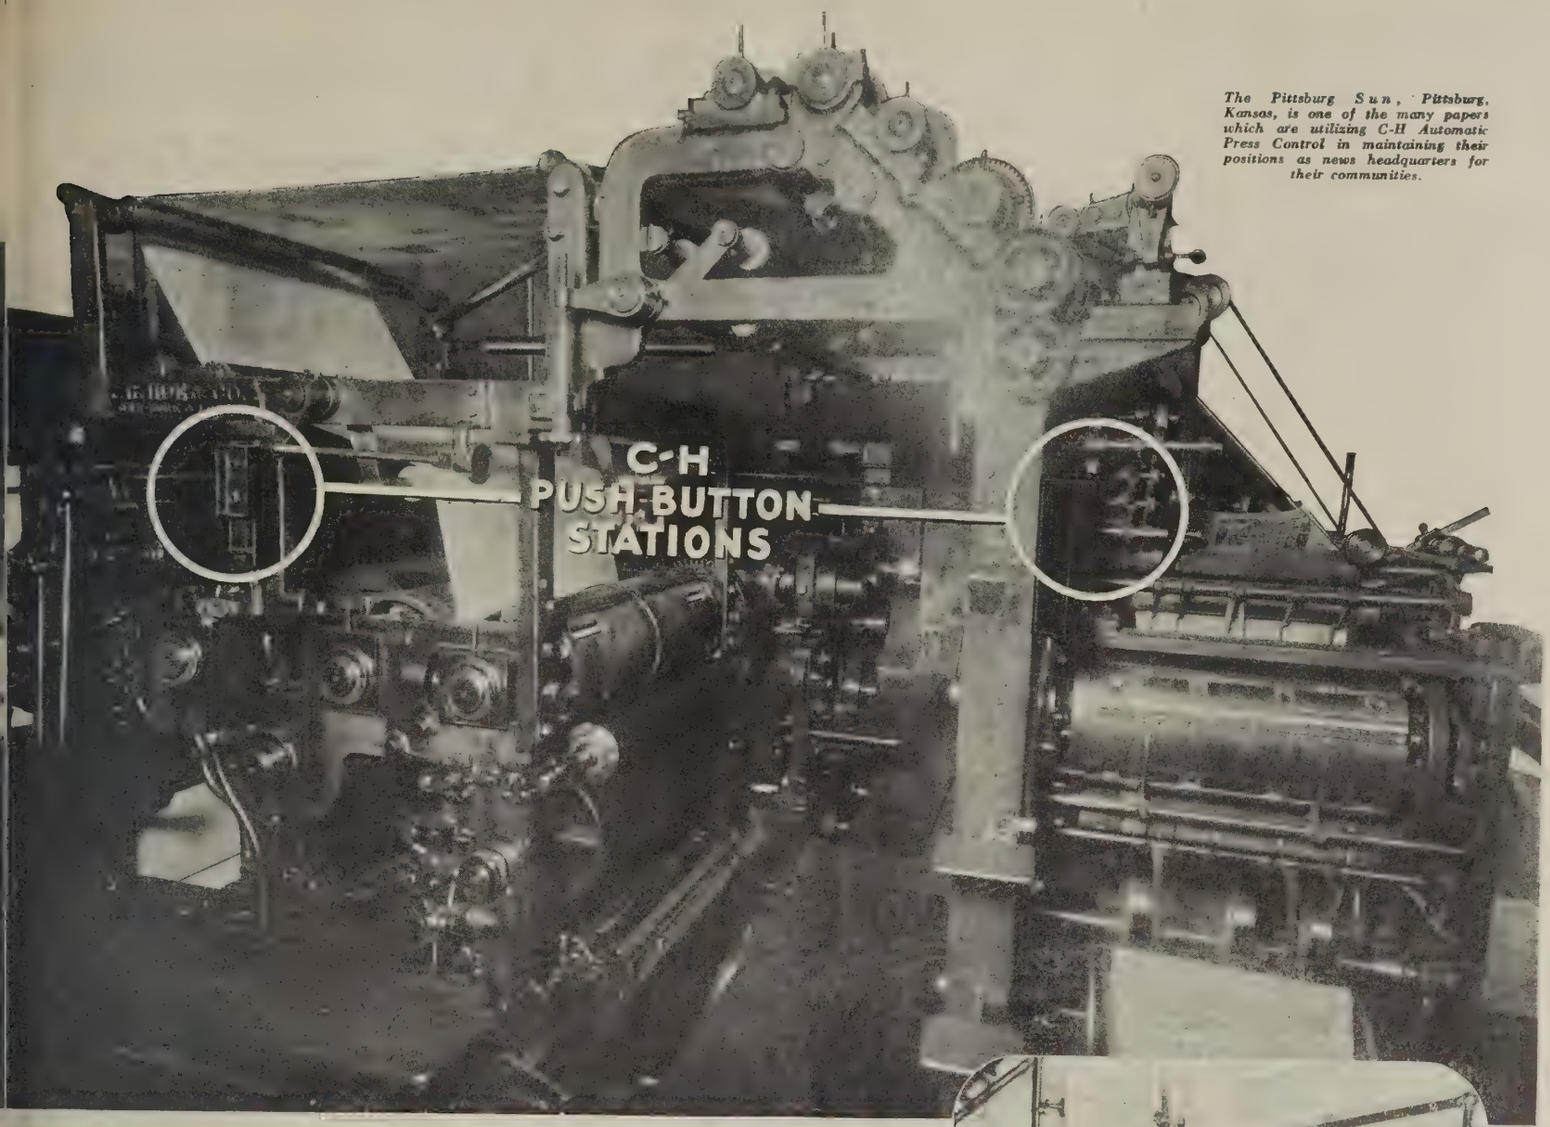
Advertising clubs in Ontario, Can., a Ohio cities sent representatives to house warming, April 13.

Paul Teas and John S. King are vi presidents; Robert J. Izant, former ne paper man, world war veteran and n advertising manager for the Central N tional Bank, is treasurer, and George Mills is secretary.

WORLD MAN RESIDEN OF CHINA 16 YEARS

Thomas F. Millard Considered For most Authority on Chinese Affairs—Founded China Press

Thomas F. Millard, who is writi weekly dispatches from China for t New York World, is considered perha the foremost authority today on affairs the Far East.



Mr. Millard has been in active newspap work for more than 30 years starting St. Louis after leaving the University Missouri. He served as a corresponde during the Spanish War, and was the on one present at the well-remembered acti at Matanzas, as well as at other mo important engagements. He served as correspondent in the Greco-Turkish a Boer Wars. His first visit to China w during the Boxer uprising of 1900. H represented the World in Manchur during the Russo-Japanese War. He h represented, beside the World, Scribne Magazine, the New York Herald and t London Daily Mail. For some time China he represented the New Yo Times.

Since 1911 Mr. Millard has been resident of China. He founded the Chi Press at Shanghai in that year, and co tinued its publication until 1917, when l established Millard's Review. During t Peace Conference at Versailles he was unofficial adviser to the Chinese deleg tion, as he was at the 1920, 1922 sessio of the League of Nations. In a lik capacity he attended the Conference Pacific Ocean and Far Eastern questio at Washington.

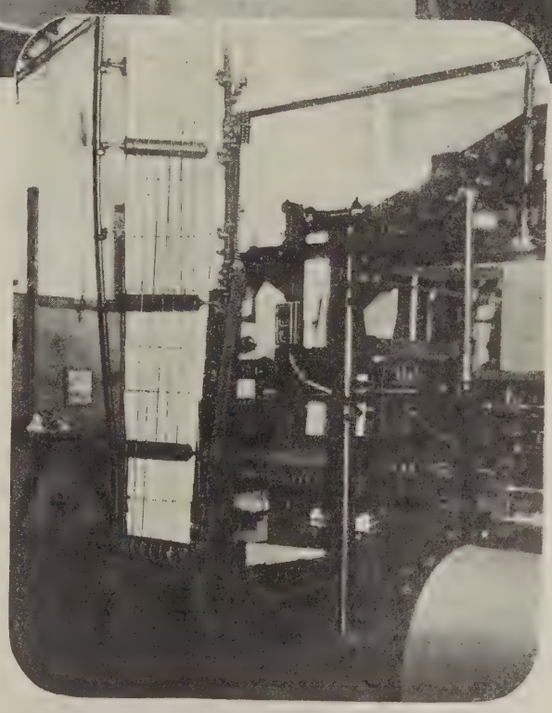
Books that have come from the pe of Mr. Millard in the last twenty yea include "The New Far East," "Americ and the Far Eastern Question." "O Eastern Question," "Democracy and t Eastern Question" and "Conflict Policies in Asia."

DINNER TO SMILEY APRIL 24

Ralph Pulitzer, editor of the Ne York World, will be host on April 2 at a private dinner to the directors the North American Newspaper Allianc in honor of David E. Smiley, newly ap pointed general manager.

The Pittsburg Sun, Pittsburg, Kansas, is one of the many papers which are utilizing C-H Automatic Press Control in maintaining their positions as news headquarters for their communities.

Holding reader interest



NEWS!—that is the reason your typical reader buys your paper. He wants the "latest" and upon his confidence that he is getting it depends his loyalty to your sheet.

By cutting the time between "deadline" and the instant when the first papers came off the press—C-H Automatic Press Control will help you get more of the "latest" into each edition, and thus help you to boost the leadership of your paper; it means reader interest, circulation, advertising lineage.

Papers in large and small cities profit alike from C-H Press Control. It automatically exercises the intelligence of an expert operator—without the human tendency to fail under pressure—eliminating break-downs when minutes are precious. Presses are accelerated smoothly, quickly, safely and the speed is easily controlled—all from conveniently located push-button control stations.

Over 30 years' experience with your problems enables C-H Engineers to make recommendations that will enable you to fortify the position of your paper. Write us today

The CUTLER-HAMMER Mfg. Co.
Pioneer Manufacturers of Electric Control Apparatus
1203 St. Paul Avenue
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

C-H Conveyors cut to an absolute minimum, the time required to get the papers from the presses to the street. Carrying the papers as fast as the presses can deliver them—up, around, in any direction, to any distance—and depositing them in counted piles—C-H Conveyors save precious minutes and costly labor. They save their cost in short order.

The Elizabeth Daily Journal, Elizabeth, N. J. (Circulation approximatey 25,000) is one of many medium sized newspapers which save time with C-H Conveyors.

CUTLER C-H HAMMER

ess Room Efficiency Depends on Electrical Control

ILLINOIS REPORTER ILLEGALLY JAILED

Spends Hour and a Half in Cell on Order of Grand Jury for Predicting Findings of That Body

Over-zealous estimate of court dignity last week led to the imprisonment of Rae Small, a reporter for the Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star, for an hour and a half in the Winnebago county jail, because he predicted the findings of a grand jury before that body had formally presented its report. Attorneys for the Star called county authorities' attention to the illegality of the procedure by which Small was committed without warrant or mittimus and he was released. Small has not yet decided whether or not he will seek damages from the county for his confinement in jail.

When Small appeared at the court house the morning after his story appeared he was subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury. Charles Bean, foreman of the jury, interrogated Small about authorship of certain stories concerning the voting of a no-bill against George Nubble, held for murder, and other stories of the grand jury. Small admitted he wrote the story and was questioned as to his source of information. He explained it satisfactorily to the jurors without violating any confidences and no one criticized his method. The jurors, however, were not satisfied. They feared the people might think they had told stories out of school and prominent white-wash of this charge was asked of the Star reporter. Suddenly one member made a motion that Small be sent to jail until the judge "saw fit to release him." Small objected, stating that he had work to do and that he wanted to inform the office of his detention.

"You showed us no consideration—we'll show you none," answered one juror. A vote was called and only one of 24 members voted against the motion. William D. Knight, state's attorney, in the grand jury at the time, did not protest against the action. Attorneys, agreed that the whole proceedings were without warrant, say the presence of the state's attorney, acquiescing in the commitment, has strengthened Small's case for civil damages if he cares to pursue it. An hour later Small was summoned to court before Judge Arthur E Fisher and after a brief statement of fact, the case was dropped.

"I told him myself that he could guess all he liked," Judge Fisher remarked.

STRONG CALLS MEETING

100,000 Group Will Hold Business Session at Waldorf, April 28

Purposes and resources of the organization known as "The 100,000 Group of American Cities" will be discussed at a luncheon meeting of advertising executives to be held under auspices of the group on the Roof Garden, Hotel Waldorf-Astoria New York, April 28, at 12:30. Walter A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, is president of the group.

Also at the luncheon the group's new book, "A Study of All American Markets" will be reviewed. Louis Wiley, general manager of the New York Times, is in charge of arrangements.

Two representatives of the group will be at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel during convention week to answer queries for market information. They are L. M. Barton and E. C. Tibbitts.

BUILDING MODEL HOME

A silver spade was used in breaking of ground in Highland Park Highlands for the model home to be erected under the direction of the Chicago Herald and Examiner. Among those present at the ceremony were M. C. Meigs, publisher of the Herald and Examiner, and "Prudence Penny," Mrs. Leona Malek, Herald and Examiner home economics expert.

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO ME

By Arthur J. Sinnott, Managing Editor, Newark (N. J.) News

Arthur J. Sinnott

THE Newark News regards the Associated Press as a very useful agency for collecting general news. We do not agree to the proposition that it should have a monopoly of its field. In its own interests it should have competition.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS FINED

But Judge Reconsiders When He Hears Jury Summons Was Lost

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy under Wilson, and editor of the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, left for Nashville to address the Tennessee Legislature after being excused from Superior Court jury duty and relieved of paying a $20 fine for failing to appear in court as a juror.

While in Atlantic City on March 25, Mr. Daniels was sought by a Raleigh deputy sheriff who had a jury summons for the editor. The officer left the legal paper with Mr. Daniel's stenographer, who put it on the editorial desk, where it became "buried."

Upon Mr. Daniels' failure to answer when called out in court, Judge W. A. Devin ordered the clerk to enter a $20 fine on the record for the former Secretary of the Navy. Not until after court had adjourned did Mr. Daniels learn of the fine. Satisfactory explanations followed.

LEAVES NOTE FOR REPORTER

When Arthur F. Ullman of Worcester, Mass., decided to commit suicide last week, he left a note for his friend, Thomas Charles Power, day police reporter for the Worcester Telegram, in which he explained his reasons for the act.

NOYES INSURANCE DIRECTOR

Stockholders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company have elected Frank B. Noyes, publisher of the Washington Evening Star and president of the Associated Press, a director, it was announced this week.

The Aberdeen Daily World
N'S QUAKE TOLL MO
Now Set In
TRADE LINOTYPE MARK
Ionic No. 5

An Old Friend Pays A Regular Visit

THAT'S what happens when Long Island community newspapers make their regular weekly or semi-weekly appearances in the homes of their subscribers. For these newspapers are "old friends" of the families they serve. They bring with them the intimate news of the towns or communities in which they are located. They are interesting and welcome visitors.

Their advertising columns guide the buying habits of Long Islanders.

Let these friends of Long Island families make a place for your nationally advertised product in the home life of these families. Your copy placed in the advertising columns of the newspapers listed below will assure your product of a hearty welcome in the homes of prosperous Long Islanders.

Town	Paper	Publication Days	Circulation	Rate per Inch
Babylon	Leader Suffolk	Friday	3,400	.35
Bay Shore	Consolidated Press (South Shore Sentinel, Islip Press)	Thursday	2,750	.45
Elmhurst	Newtown Register	Saturday	2,500	.75
Farmingdale	Post	Friday	1,100	.30
Floral Park	The Sunrise Trailer	Friday	5,200	.60
Freeport	Recorder	Friday	3,100	.42
Great Neck	North Hempstead Record	Wed.	2,400	.50
Jamaica	Queens County News	Friday	14,675*	1.00
Lynbrook	New Era	Tue. & Fri.	2,800*	.60
Mineola	Central Island Weeklies (Hicksville, Westbury, New Hyde Park)	Friday	4,000	1.00†
Oyster Bay	Enterprise & Pilot	Friday	2,000	.45
Patchogue	Advance	Tue. & Fri.	3,226*	.55
Queens Village	Queens-Hollis Times	Thursday	8,000	1.00
Richmond Hill	Long Island Weekly News	Friday	12,000	1.40
Woodhaven	Leader-Observer	Thursday	8,600*	.84

*Sworn Net Paid Circulation.
†This rate includes the Farmingdale Post.
Figures not marked with a star indicate total run of paper.

You Will See

The Circulation-Building Features of Universal Appeal

Produced By

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE

Wherever You See Newsprint

THE same comic strip that you are laughing over today is delighting marines and mandarins between skirmishes in China.

The serial story in your newspaper which is holding the attention of the American "younger generation" is being read by the youth of Europe, South Africa, Asia and Australia.

King Features are preeminent wherever newspapers are printed because they are the work of world famous artists, writers and leaders of thought. The wire news services sold exclusively by King Features Syndicate are just as their names describe them—INTERNATIONAL and UNIVERSAL.

The superior comics, magazine features, fiction, miscellaneous features, wire news and news pictures produced by KING FEATURES SYNDICATE and its allied services mean newspaper leadership because they meet every newspaper need. Whatever your newspaper requires can be supplied you by this organization. It stands ready also to confer with you any time on your feature and circulation problems.

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

M. KOENIGSBERG, President

241 West 58th Street New York City

Sole Selling Agent for International Feature Service

Newspaper Feature Service
Universal Service
International News Service
Star Adcraft Service
Premier Syndicate
International Illustrated News

WEEKLY EDITOR CLOSES CITY'S SPEAKEASIES

Kent Watson of Miami Beach Beacon Exposes "Subterfuge License System" and Gets Police Action

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., April 21.—This city suddenly has become as arid as the Sahara Desert as a result of an editorial crusade conducted by Kent Watson, editor of the Miami Beach Beacon, a weekly newspaper.

Nearly 30 saloons and "speakeasies" have been closed by the police under orders from Mayor J. Newton Lummus, Jr., since the publication of Watson's exposé of what he characterized as "a subterfuge license system."

"While the operation of bootleg establishments is banned by the Volstead law," said the Beacon, "the City of Miami Beach has for more than a year earned money for its treasury through the operation of saloons on a subterfuge license plan, the origin of which has not been revealed.

"It has been the custom of the police department to arrest one man in each bootleg establishment every five or six weeks. The man arrested was required to post a bond of from $150 to $250 and the bond was forfeited by Judge S. Grover Morrow in Municipal Court the next morning when the defendant, as was expected, failed to appear. Bench warrants were never issued in such cases.

"Through this system of extracting money, the city has been enriched to a great extent. Figures as to how much money was collected through the subterfuge license system are not available, but a conservative estimate would place the amount at $4,500 per month for the last year."

For several months, Watson has been conducting a crusade to "drive the dives from Miami Beach." Two months ago, several gambling houses were closed, when the Beacon made editorial demand for a police padlock order and published the names of the operators and the location of the resorts.

DAILY NOW SEMI-WEEKLY

Plant City (Fla.) Courier Now Under Management of Wayne Thomas

Wayne Thomas, for many years publisher of the Plant City (Fla.) Courier, has resumed the management of that property, following the recent resignation of John R. Wheeler, editor and manager.

The Courier was purchased two years ago by W. K. Zewadski, Jr., of Tampa, Mr. Wheeler becoming associated with the business a year later. In resuming the post of publisher Mr. Thomas and his associates announced the probability of their eventually repurchasing the property.

The publication was immediately cut from an afternoon daily to a Tuesday-Friday semi-weekly basis.

Mr. Wheeler has left by automobile for Houston, Tex. He was accompanied by Mrs. Wheeler.

Arthur G. Ivey, former editor and manager of the Courier, but who has not been associated with the paper for the past eight months, has returned to the paper as associate editor, succeeding Russell King.

Fred Moyse, formerly with the Thomas Advertising Service, of Jacksonville, has joined the Courier as advertising manager.

CONYBEARE TO SPEAK

Will Address United Typothetæ Atlantic City Convention

S. E. Conybeare, advertising manager of the Armstrong Cork Company, and president of the Association of National Advertisers, will be a speaker before the convention of the third, fourth and 19th district federations of the United Typothetæ at the Hotel Ambassador, Atlantic City, N. J., April 29-30.

"Selling Printing" has been announced as the theme of the convention. J. Horace McFarland of Harrisburg, Pa., will preside.

Other speakers will include: Frank J. Smith, Rochester; Robert Goldstein, Printcraft Press, New York; Kenneth L. Rolston, Clark Printing House, Philadelphia; Alfred G. Peters, G. A. Peters Company, Baltimore; Peter Becker, Washington, and Hugh Murrill, Jr., Charlotte, N. C. And also E. A. Kendrick, of the Andrew H. Kellogg Company, New York; Robert Pyle, president, Comard-Pyle Company, West Grove, Pa.; and Maurice Weyl, of the Edward Stern Company, Philadelphia.

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO ME

By Frank B. Noyes
Publisher Washington Star and President Associated Press

THE Associated Press to me means the only existing protection of the press and people of the United States against an individual domination of the news furnished them.

If the Associated Press did not exist it would be necessary to create a similar organization if our press is to be free.

SHOW STRESSES DAILY'S SLOGAN

"This Is The Place" Line Drew Applause from Audience

The Salt Lake City Deseret News is featuring and has featured for the past two years and a half, the famous slogan, first uttered by Brigham Young when he looked out upon the Salt Lake Valley.—"This is the Place."

This newspaper features a "This is the Place" page each week.

When the road show, "The Vagabond King" came to town, in one of the scenes the hero comes to a beautiful garden spot and says, "This is the place."

He could not understand why he got a good hand, but the audience applauded. The words were emphasized throughout the week, the actors learning the "why" of their unintended "hit"—for the lines were really a part of the show.

WANTS "OLD IRONSIDES"

The Chicago Tribune is running a campaign to have the historical frigate Constitution, or "Old Ironsides," cruise around the shores of the great lakes, and has asked newspapers in almost every city along the lakes to co-operate in pressing the demand upon the Navy Department to end the vessel inland.

BERWYN HUGHES

Berwyn Hughes, who had been a member at various times of the society departments of the New York Sun, Evening Post, New York Herald and the New York Telegram, died on April 13, in the Presbyterian Hospital in New York.

now
195,000 Daily
425,000 Sunday
and The largest ### home-delivered circulation of # any paper in its territory ####
Los Angeles Examiner

ILLINOIS
THE GREAT CENTRAL MARKET

RAW MATERIALS

Why is Illinois always the responsive market for the national advertiser? The answer is both simple and logical. Nature has blessed this State with an abundance of raw materials, particularly with coal and oil. This affords cheap fuel and power for the development of gigantic industries that give employment to hundreds of thousands of its people.

With its network of railroads and water ways, transportation is comparatively cheap and products can be distributed with facility.

Illinois ranks third in mineral output. The value of its coal production alone averages over 170 million dollars per annum, while in petroleum its average annual output is fast reaching the 10 million barrel mark.

A great agricultural state, an important wholesale and retail center, it represents the second largest market in the United States and should be on the list of every advertiser who has a worth while product.

The newspapers listed below dominate Illinois. They know its value and are ready to furnish facts.

Call upon them.

	Circulation	Rates for 2,500 Lines	Rates for 10,000 Lines
*Alton Telegraph .....(E)	9,814	.05	.05
†Aurora Beacon-News .....(E)	19,440	.07	.07
*Belleville Advocate .....(E)	6,554	.03	.03
Chicago Herald & Examiner.....(M)	403,806	.55	.55
Chicago Herald & Examiner.....(S)	1,185,881	1.10	1.10
†Chicago Daily Journal.....(E)	125,007	.26	.24
*Evanston News Index.....(E)	7,631	.05	.05
*Freeport Journal-Standard.....(E)	9,545	.05	.05
†Joliet Herald News.....(E)	20,107	.07	.07
†Mattoon Journal Gazette.....(E)	5,857	.04	.04
†Moline Dispatch .....(E)	12,292	.05	.05
Monmouth Daily Review Atlas...(E)	5,574	.035	.035
Peoria Star .....(S) 23,872 (E)	31,103	.085	.07
†Rock Island Argus.....(E)	12,124	.05	.05
Waukegan Daily Sun.....(E)	5,666	.035	.035

*A. B. C. Statement, Oct. 1, 1926
A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927
†Government Statement, March 31, 1927

for The World

The 28 Duplex press units recently installed at the New York World are driven by G-E Motors and operated by G-E Controllers.

With its large circulation, and with morning, evening, and Sunday editions, the presses at the World are seldom idle.

G-E Motors and Control are built for the exacting requirements of the modern metropolitan newspaper office where safety, reliability, continuity of service, and economical operation are essential.

Engineering problems of considerable difficulty were encountered in putting these new presses into the World Building, and where these problems affected the electric equipment, General Electric met them with capable and satisfactory service.

Apply the proper G-E motor and the correct G-E controller to a specific task, following the recommendations of G-E specialists in electric drive and you have G-E Motorized Power. "Built in" or otherwise connected to all types of industrial machines, G-E Motorized Power provides lasting assurance that you have purchased the best.

GE Motorized Power —fitted to every need

200-61

GENERAL ELECTRIC

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, SCHENECTADY, N. Y., SALES OFFICES IN PRINCIPAL CITIES

CEDAR RAPIDS DAILIES ARE COMBINED

Gazette Acquires Republican and Is Publishing Seven-Day Paper Alone in Its Field—J. L. Miller President

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., April 18.—The Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican, established in 1870 as successor to the Observer, issued its last edition April 17, and on Monday appeared in consolidation with the Cedar Rapids Gazette as the Gazette and Republican. The owners of the Gazette on Saturday completed negotiations for the purchase of the paper. J. L. Miller is president of the Cedar Rapids Gazette Publishing Company, with Verne Marshall managing editor.

"Ever increasing costs of production tell the story," said J. S. Farquhar, Republican publisher, in a signed statement announcing the sale.

The merged publications will appear as a seven-day paper, the first in the city under a single ownership. The new paper will be alone in the local field. It will be served by the United Press, Associated Press, Universal and International News wires with all special features of both papers retained. Correspondents' lists of both papers have been merged. The consolidated paper will be published six afternoons a week with a Sunday Gazette and Republican the seventh-day edition.

Circulation, good-will and equipment of the Republican was included in the purchase. The price was not announced. The Cedar Rapids Republican, as a corporation, was not included in the sale.

The Republican has appeared under a dozen group and individual ownerships since it was established in 1870, the last transfer in 1922 taking the paper from L. A. Brewer, who had previously acquired interests of his partner, Congressman Cyrenus Cole, both prominent Republican politicians in the state. Since then the Republican has been owned by J. S. Farquhar, R. G. Grassfield, H. M. Havner, W. G. Dows and Isaac B. Smith.

TELEGRAM CASE IN COURT

J. E. Wheeler Asks U. S. Court to Declare Oregon Daily Bankruptcy

Both state and Federal courts at Portland have been occupied recently by the affairs of the Portland Telegram, which is now being conducted by Amedee M. Smith, receiver. After creditors had obtained the receivership in the state court, J. E. Wheeler, owner of the capital stock of the Telegram, filed application in the Federal court to have the Telegram Publishing company declared a voluntary bankrupt.

Mr. Wheeler's action followed an order from Judge Walter H. Evans of the state circuit court, issued the same day, restraining Wheeler from interfering in any manner with the affairs of the publishing company while it was in the receivership.

When counsel for Mr. Wheeler appeared in the Federal court to start bankruptcy action they met with opposition from attorneys representing Telegram creditors. Judge Rudkin held that the order of the state court could not interrupt the bankruptcy action of the Federal court, but he allowed the Telegram creditors time to intervene and show cause why the bankruptcy should not be allowed.

Alfred A. Hampson, attorney for the Lumbermen's Trust Company of Portland, opposed the bankruptcy action. Counsel for Wheeler contended that bankruptcy was the best way to effect a quick sale and stop the losses in operation that the paper is now incurring.

The bankruptcy petition placed the liabilities of the company at $492,015 and the assets at $1,007,204. The largest unsecured creditors were J. E. Wheeler, $101,907; Meier & Frank company, $10,000, and 260 small creditors with total claims of $100,136. Liabilities on notes or bills discounted: Bank of California, $33,000; Northwestern National Bank, $120,000; Anglo & London & Paris Bank of San Francisco, $20,000; Crawford County Trust of Pennsylvania, $20,000; First National bank of Sharon, Pa., $3,000; Colonial Trust company of Sharon, Pa., $5,000; Graham Paper company, $16,789 George Johnson, $14,206; Western Bond & Mortgage company, $30,000. The Associated Press membership is listed in the assets at $600,000.

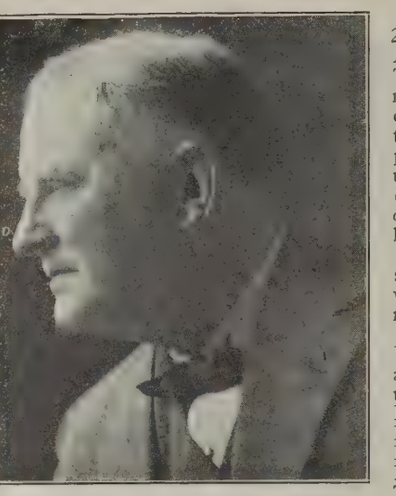
Meanwhile the Telegram employes, under the leadership of Harry Frye, city editor, have started a movement to buy the paper. At a recent meeting they made a beginning by subscribing $51,000, an amount that has since been increased somewhat.

The Portland Telegram was adjudged a bankrupt April 19 by Federal Judge Rudkin. Mr. Smith will continue to function in charge of the paper pending the election of a trustee by the creditors. Publication of the Telegram will continue, it is announced, and it is expected that the property will be sold at an early date. Among the many creditors is a group of syndicates and feature services and other small creditors which hold claims amounting to some $30,000.

BANKRUPTCY ACTION

Action in bankruptcy has been filed in United States Court, Scranton, Pa., against the Scranton Dispatch Publishing Company, publishers of the Sunday Dispatch.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT



Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell, Sr., on April 16 announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Nancy Carr, to William Thomas Healey of Atlanta, the wedding to be held in June.

$300,000 PLANT ADDITION

Plans for the immediate erection of a $300,000 addition to the plant of the Meredith Publications at Seventeenth and Locust streets, Des Moines, Ia., were announced this week by Fred Bohen, associate publisher.

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO ME

By William Allen White, Editor Emporia (Kan.) Gazette

William Allen White

YOU ask what the Associated Press means to a country paper like the Emporia Gazette. In the first place it means accuracy, and in the second place, it means all the speed that accuracy will stand. In addition to speed and accuracy, the Associated Press means intelligence. And in addition to speed, accuracy, and intelligence, the Associated Press means a fair and honest treatment for every phase of news.

PROMOTIONS IN PORTLAND

C. L. Baum, of the Portland (Ore.) Journal, has been appointed promotion manager, succeeding R. S. Thompson, who has been made classified advertising manager.

VANCOUVER PUBLISHERS INSPECT NEW PIER

R. J. Cromie, publisher of the Vancouver Sun, Mrs. Cromie, and F. N. Southam, photographed on the new Government Pier, Vancouver. Mr. Southam is publisher of the Southam papers of Canada which include the Vancouver Province.

NEW HAVEN DAIL IN MERGER

Times-Leader Buys and Cons Evening Union—Latter Daily cently in Receivership

The New Haven Union was o 20 merged with the New Haven Leader, a companion evening new The owners of the Times-Lead nounced that they have purcha evening and Sunday Union, and the future the two newspapers w printed in amalgamated form un ultimate name of the New Haven Union. William A. Hendrick, p of the Times-Leader, will direct t lication of the amalgamated newsp

The announcement of the Times said that plans were in process veloping and expanding the c newspaper properties.

Several weeks ago the New Union went into the hands of re and, at an auction sale, was pu under conditional provisions by D Fitzgerald, formerly Mayor o Haven and Chairman of the Com Democratic State Central Con Mr. Fitzgerald confirmed the sale Times-Leader.

The New Haven Union was f nearly 60 years ago by Alexander and has been owned and mana members of the Troup family u present time. The Union has Democratic party organ with P sive tendencies. The Times-Lead been independent Republican.

TO HOLD POSTER EXHI

Examples of British Work to B played at Olympia Conventi

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER

LONDON, April 9.—A 700 foot in the front of the main hall at O London, where the British Adve Convention and Exhibition is to b in July, will be devoted to a sh posters, representative of the fo examples of poster art in the Isles. "Hoarding beauties" will feature of the display and prizes will be given every day o exhibition to the public for the se of the most attractive posters.

In this connection much intere been aroused among British adve men by the pronouncement of Mrs. tine Frederick, of New York, at in London to study British adve methods, and who states that in A the pretty girl advertisement is re as belonging to almost prehistoric tising.

"Reason why" advertisements a ter calculated to sell goods to the can public, Mrs. Frederick said. "pretty girl" was now only go selling luxuries to men, such as rettes, etc.

Mrs. Frederick thought that women should be employed in Brit vertising than are at present. Wo England, she pointed out, were j businesslike as American wome Mrs. Frederick thought that th fluence would greatly increase th of advertised commodities to wom

PRINTING RECORD EDITI

What is claimed to be the larges of a single newspaper in Yiddis printed will be published Sund the occasion of the 30th anniv of the New York Jewish Daily ward. The paper will contain 40 of rotogravure and a special Engli tion in 24 pages. Nearly 100 from all over the world have cont to the issue. Two hundred and fif thousand copies will be printed.

BOXING WRITERS DINE

The annual dinner of the Writers Association of Greater York will be held at the Hotel April 24. Wilbur Wood, New Sun, is association president.

CLAYBOURN PRECISION MACHINERY
for Better Newspaper Printing

WE MANUFACTURE a complete line of PRECISION MACHINERY for newspaper publishers for producing accurate materials in making up the composing room forms.

Mats are no more accurate than the forms from which they are moulded—neither are the plates more accurate than the mats from which they are cast. To improve the quality of the printed sheet, provide the necessary means to accurately prepare the materials making up the forms before moulding. The net result of uniform height in the form is better plates and better printing.

Our machinery will precision curved stereos for color and magazine printing—greatly reducing make-ready, and produce a superior quality of printed product. Ask the users of our machinery—Pittsburgh Press, Milwaukee Journal, Philadelphia Inquirer, Detroit News, and other units now in process.

Never before has PRECISION played so important a part in newspaper publication, and is fast supplanting the old haphazard methods.

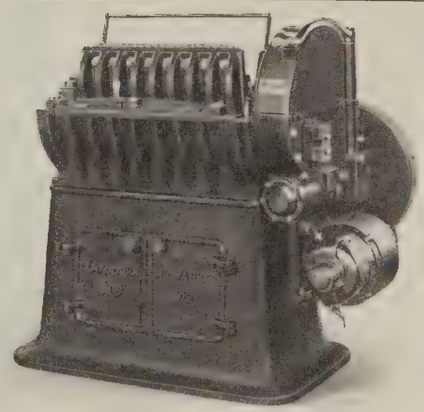
Follow that impulse and write for full information NOW!

The Claybourn Precision Double Head Flat Plate Shaving Machine

For shaving shell stereos, electrotypes, and stereo base for mounting zincs and shell stereos to accuracy, thus insuring level printing line in face of form before moulding.

Claybourn Precision Flat Plate Power Proof Press

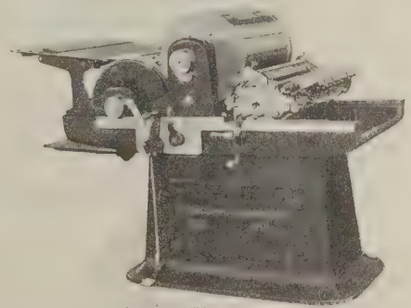
For proofing zinc etchings, shell stereos and electros, etc., for checking printing qualities before assembling in composing room form.



Claybourn Precision Gauging Machine

For checking stereo base mounting material, zinc etchings, shell stereos and electrotypes, in order to establish a standard height of all materials making up the printing form.

Curved saddles are provided for checking curved stereos for uniform thickness. Also used for checking product of type casting machines.



Adopt standards and maintain them by a definite method.

This applies to all materials in composing room, stereotype department and press-room.

Claybourn Precision Curved Plate Shaving Machine

For accurate shaving of curved stereos for newspaper, color comic and magazine printing. Has no equal for producing perfect plates.

Claybourn Precision Curved Plate Proof Press

For proofing curved stereos, after shaving, without make-ready, to check printing qualities before delivery to press room. Provides an accurate check on product of stereotype department.

CLAYBOURN PROCESS CORPORATION

Milwaukee, Wisconsin New York Office, 461-8th Ave.

Telephone Chickering 5656

Powers Engraving Companies

Operating Three complete Commercial Plants and one complete Newspaper Plant, Day and Night, and our own research laboratory, all of which are constantly working to develop new ideas in the Art of Reproduction and improving old ones.

"For Your Covenience"

POWERS PHOTO-ENGRAVING COMPANY
Telephone Beekman 4200
154 Nassau Street

POWERS REPRODUCTION CORPORATION
Telephone Pennsylvania 0600
205 West 39th Street

POWERS FOURTH ENGRAVING COMPANY
Telephone Circle 1300
208 West 50th Street

25 years' experience in supplying the requirements of the world's largest buyers of engravings

We Have

IMPROVED

Our

Well-Known Inventions

Publishers, and Others Interested,
May Visit Our Offices At

205 West 39th Street, New York City

MORNING, NOON, OR NIGHT

And See Our Machinery and Methods in Operation

We Can Save Money and Time, Also IMPROVE the QUALITY and SERVICE of Any Publishers in the United States Operating Their Own Photo Engraving Plants

POWERS ENGRAVING COMPANIES

POWERS PHOTO ENGRAVING CO.
154 Nassau St.~Tel. BEEkman 4200

POWERS REPRODUCTION CORP.
205 West 39th St.~Tel. PENnsylvania 0600

POWERS FOURTH ENGRAVING CO.
208 West 50th St. ~ Tel. CIRcle 1300

FRENCH PRESS MUSEUM OPENED FOR DAY

Journalism History Traced from 1631 Gazette to Present by Exhibition Under Patronage of Doumergue

PARIS, April 9.—Under the official patronage of the President of the French Republic, a museum of French journalism from its inception with the Gazette of Théophraste Renaudot in 1631 to current issues of Parisian dailies, was opened yesterday by M. Doumergue and is on view for one day only at the official residence of the President of the Chamber of Deputies, 128 rue de l'Université. The exhibition was organized by the Syndicate des Journalistes and the proceeds will go to its mutual aid fund.

In the afternoon an auction sale was held at which a great many historic issues and other newspaper relics were disposed of by M. André de Fouquieres, prominent figure in French art and literary circles. The exhibition occupies three large halls of the beautiful residence of the President of the Chamber.

Among a large number of first issues of French newspapers, one of the most interesting from an American standpoint, is a copy of the New York Herald dated October 3, 1888, and printed in gilded ink. In forty years since this paper was printed the gold has worn off and it is now difficult to read the news articles appearing in that first issue of James Gordon Bennett's new venture, the pioneer American newspaper in Europe.

In the various exhibits practically every prominent figure in French journalism and public life during the last several hundred years is represented either by photograph, drawing or caricature. The names of some of the most widely read of French authors are signed to the articles appearing in the old journals.

There are copies of newspapers published during the Revolution, the Seige of Paris and the Commune, as well as special issues and editions got out during the most eventful weeks of the World War.

Famous interviews, such as that of Pope Leo XIII by Mme. Severine, and articles which let loose revolutions and brought upon their authors the attention of the law and the police, are shown in manuscript.

ABYSSINIAN EDITOR JAILED

Punishment Follows Objection by Fascists to Article

The long arm of censorship exercised by the Italian Government reached out to Abyssinia when the newspaper Light and Peace of Addis Abada reproduced from the French newspaper Le Proletaire an article allegedly offensive to Fascismo and accusing the Italian government of carrying out expansion policies toward Abyssinia.

Following a protest from the Italian government, says the Rome Bureau of International News Service, the issue of the newspaper was withdrawn from circulation, its editor sentenced to one month in jail and a fine imposed on the writer of the article. In addition the school at which the writer was a teacher was ordered closed by the government as further punishment.

The Italian government expressed its satisfaction for the measures taken by Ras Taffari, Regent, which are said to have no precedent in Abyssinia.

PLANNING FARM EDITION

A farm edition has been announced by the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press for Sunday, May 1. An appeal for advertising is being made to owners of farms who desire to sell. They are offered special rates for ads carrying halftones of the property for sale. Sample ads are printed as well as blank forms for space buyers to fill in. It is the first attempt of Albany newspapers to publish a farm edition.

PRESIDENT DOUMERGUE OPENS NEWSPAPER EXHIBIT

In the Chamber of Deputies in Paris recently the first comprehensive newspaper exhibit was opened by President Doumergue of France. The photograph shows President Doumergue (center) inspecting rare copies of early European newspapers with the organizer of the exhibition.

"POTASH-PERLMUTTER" COPY RUN BY STORE

Finkelstein and Maisel "Factory to You" Firm, Do a Comedian Act in Advertising Columns of New York Newspapers

A notable characteristic of the Jewish people is their willingness to laugh at and make jokes about themselves. This trait is being exploited cleverly in advertising copy which is being placed in New York newspapers by Finkelstein and Maisel, a "From Manufacturer to You" store on Broadway. The copy has been appearing at intervals for some time. The two-column copy, written in the lingo of Potash and Perlmutter, is headed "Finkelstein said to Maisel—" One of their recent advertisements carried the sub-head. "No, No—It'll never be!" The text read: Finkelstein said to Maisel, "You know, Maisel, it almost broke mine heart Saturday when good customers had to wait to be waited on. Always somebody's mother-in-law dies when we got to do business. But," continued Finkelstein, with a broad smile on his face, "did you see how pleased they were when we did wait on them? It's a pleasure to wait on such people!

"I tell you," furthered Finkelstein, as he drove his hand down on the cutting table upstairs in the factory, "the Polo Grounds wouldn't even be big enough if every man knew what values we give. At $34.88 they can't buy better for $60.00, and at $24.88 and $29.76 they can't buy better for $45.00 or $50.00. I'll give 'em back their money if they can!"

At this point Maisel broke into Finkelstein's conversation. "Well, well, ain't we growing? Look at this beautiful showroom! Didn't we used to sell from here in the factory? Maybe yet it will come some day, a business in the Polo Grounds."

"Yes, you're right," retorted Finkelstein. "And you know everything we sell goes out like a customer tailor job. We are so particular with our alterations. Don't we fit everybody?" furthers Finkelstein, as he boils with enthusiasm. "Does it make any difference if he is short and stout or long and thin? I tell you, Maisel," says Finkelstein, as he follows up Maisel like a pugilist banking on a knockout, "if ever a customer is not satisfied, give him back his money!"

"No; no" Maisel replies as he backs away from Finkelstein, "it'll never be; we must satisfy everybody."

MUNCIE, IND., IS QUIET AFTER DEARTH TRIAL

Editor Dale Out on Bond on Libel Charge—Judge Dearth Orders Minister from His Courtroom

Things are quiet in Muncie, Ind., scene of many political wars and the long-drawn-out battle between George R. Dale, editor of the Post Democrat, and Clarence W. Dearth, judge of the Delaware county Circuit court, the climax of which came recently with the acquittal by the State Senate of Judge Dearth on seven impeachment charges alleging suppression of the press and jury fixing.

Dale, who was arrested on a charge of criminal libel the day before the trial ended in Indianapolis and who was immediately released on bond, has not been brought to trial.

The judge, after one apparent stroke of revenge against an opposition witness at his trial, has given no further cause for newspaper comment.

When the Rev. John W. Nicely, pastor of a Muncie church, who testified at the impeachment trial that Judge Dearth's reputation for honesty and integrity was bad, went to the Courthouse a few days after Dearth's acquittal to talk with the Court reporter, the judge ordered him from the courtroom, saying he "didn't want you around here." Criticized by the public and in the press, Dearth denied he had ordered the Minister from the courtroom, saying he found him looking at some of his private correspondence and merely asked him not to do that. The Rev. Mr. Nicely replied in a statement declaring that he had not been looking at anybody's correspondence and that he had been summarily ordered from the courtroom as soon as he entered. There the controversy rests.

Meanwhile public opinion and the editorial writers of several Hoosier papers, white hot with accusations and denunciations for the several weeks before and during the trial, have simmered down to such an extent that the familiar names "Dale" and "Dearth" have not been seen in a newspaper headline for more than a week.

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO ME

By Edward H. Butler, Publisher Buffalo (N. Y.) News

Edward H. Butler

THE Associated Press by reason of form of organization—mutuality gives the very best possible service in way of a news report to its memb and stands pre-eminent for the reliabil and all-embracing character of its ne report. It is part and parcel of m than 1,200 newspapers, nearly all which, on account of the mutual char ter of the organization, contribute news of their own respective localities the Association and are, therefore, vita interested in advancing the organizatio progress in a way that is not true purely commercial news distribut agencies operated for profit. Not actu ed for gain or self-aggrandisement, serves all alike without bias, prejud or "color" in its news report. The As ciated Press is non-partisan to the degree and, therefore, cannot be s jected to the charge of playing favori from any angle, but, on the contrary, be relied upon for its truthfulness authentic statement of facts. The ne report is conspicuous for its cleanlin and no member will ever have cause embarrassment through the publication this report. It is informative, instruct and enlightening.

Membership in the Associated Press one of the greatest assets in the field journalism.

STUDENTS EDIT DAILIES

Twenty-eight students from the vanced classes in journalism, Louisi State University, had full charge of news and editorial departments of two Baton Rouge dailies Tuesday, A 12, the Morning Advocate and the St Times.

AUTO HANDBILLS BANNED

With the signature of Mayor Woodi of Danville, Va., an ordinance became fective which prohibits the placing of c or poster advertisements in parked au mobiles also the placing of labels radiator caps. Car owners complai of the printed material they find in th cars, and the city authorities complai of the litter to be found in the streets.

FORD RADIO TALKER

Andrew W. Ford, managing editor the New York Telegram, will give radio talk on "The Making of a Ne paper" over Station WNYC on Fri evening, April 29, at 8:30 p. m.

Circulation Solicitors!

THAT'S what Dr. McCoy's daily health articles are. Read some of the letters that Dr. McCoy receives in his daily mail from all over America.

See how, in the homes of neighbors and friends, the paper carrying the McCoy Health Service is being sold in a big sincere way.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

"Your gospel of health and diet has become something of a religion with me. I practice it myself, my family practices it, some of my friends practice it, and I preach it with the ardor of a missionary.

"In our home, we are constantly testing something new along the lines which you suggest in our EVENING SUN and the expectancy with which we come to the table is—well, I may almost say, amusing, and this in itself is, I should say, health giving.

"I can truthfully assert that, to the extent of my ability as a judge, every suggestion of yours relating to diet that we have attempted has worked out according to rule."

(Signed) Joe Snelgrove, 1385 12th Avenue West,
Vancouver, B. C.

YORKVILLE, NEW YORK.

"Will say that I find more common sense in your Health and Diet advice in the ALBANY TELEGRAM than I have ever received elsewhere."

(Signed) David E. Larkin,
Oneida County,
Yorkville, New York.

MEDINA, OHIO.

"I have just commenced to read the articles printed in the TIMES PRESS, Akron, Ohio, on Health and Diet by Dr. Frank McCoy, and I think they are just what every American should read. They are fine, and I am so taken up with them that I wish to ask if it is possible for me to get those articles which appeared back in January and February, as I am told by others that these numbers were so very good. I have commenced to take the paper, and will take it in the future."

(Signed) George M. Buchannon,
Medina, Ohio.

DENVER, COLORADO.

"I believe your articles on Mucous Colitis saved my life."

(Signed) Mrs. Charles Archer,
860 Ogden Street,
Denver, Colorado.

OSHAWA, ONTARIO, CANADA.

"It is wonderful work you are doing—trying to educate people to the right way of living and caring for their bodies. At bridge parties, clubs, etc., even in our small town, one hears Dr. McCoy quoted on all sides, and I think I may sign myself 'Another McCoy Booster'."

(Signed) Miss Winnie MacPherson, Oshawa, Ontario.

PENNINGTON GAP, VIRGINIA.

"Your treatise booklet received last week is most comprehensive. I have never read a more concise explanation and treatment of gastric disorders.

"Doctor, it would surprise you to know the percentage of readers actually reading your syndicated health articles, and I know that my friends read your articles—I see to that.

"Relative to my wife's condition, she is progressing nicely. The gastric symptoms disappeared after a seven-day fast, and she is now eating without any discomfort, and is gaining.

"I have marked this letter 'personal' for I want you to know that we appreciate your service."

(Signed) L. C. Beard,
Box 201,
Pennington Gap, Virginia.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

"All I have heard speak of your wonderful health articles say you are the best the COURIER JOURNAL has ever published, and I most heartily agree."

(Signed) Mrs. Samuel P. Pope,
2045 Douglas Boulevard,
Louisville, Kentucky.

SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA.

"I have been reading your articles in the REPUBLICAN on Health and Diet. I also have a friend who is following your diet treatment for rheumatism and is so much improved that she asked me to write to you about my case. Will try and explain briefly. ....."

(Signed) Mrs. Willie Windrem,
1751 Lexington Street,
Santa Clara, California.

No subscription solicitation or newspaper promotion, even at twenty times the cost, will work as effectively night and day for your newspaper, as the McCoy Health Articles.

Inquire for your Convention Rooms at the Waldorf during Convention Week and let our representative show you the circulation possibilities of this fine service.

McCOY HEALTH SERVICE

Brack Shops Bldg. Los Angeles, Cal.

A. P. DIRECTORS FAVOR BOND REDISTRIBUTION

(Continued from page 6)

than he, that this campaign was precipitated by Adolph Ochs. Mr. Ochs, at the last meeting, utilized these two undemocratic inequalities, first—to make it appear that Hearst had more voice in Associated Press matters than he should have, and second—that he had protest rights that 1,000 other members did not have.

"If Mr. Ochs and his associates were sincere in these arguments, how will they answer the fact that Mr. Hearst is willing to surrender every extra bond vote he enjoys and is willing to extend to every member protection of the protest right, although he, Hearst, will not gain anything by these changes?

"Certainly, if it was a matter of reproach that Hearst possessed these rights in 1926, it cannot be a matter of recrimination in 1927 that he should be willing to put himself on the same plane as every other member of the Associated Press and relinquish any special privileges which he holds.

"Is it not more to the point to ask why the board of directors, who found occasion to utter the reproach, should not now align themselves with Hearst for the purpose of completely wiping out the cause for the reproach?

"Mr. Noyes in his letter to the members intimated that there are legal obstacles in the way of eliminating the bond votes.

"Mr. Neylan, in reply, tells the membership, that the reference to serious legal obstacles in the bond matter might fool a layman, but would afford hearty amusement to any one who had studied law for 48 hours—and he, Neylan, is a lawyer of high standing.

"Stripped of all side issues, all personalities, all special interests and pleadings, the case simply simmers down to this: shall the Associated Press continue to be controlled and practically owned by a coterie of bondholders, probably not more than 25 or 30, who influence other bondholders numbering 140 in a total membership of more than 1,220?

"If these 25 or 30 controlling bondholders can prevent the elimination of the bond votes, their absolute control in perpetuity will be assured.

"If the bond votes are wiped out, these controlling members will have to go directly to the full membership to secure their right to continue in control and they will have to convince a real majority of the membership that their continued control is for the best interest of the Associated Press.

"Why shouldn't they be willing to do this? If their position is strong, what are they afraid of? If they are doing the very best that can be done for the Associated Press, why can't they put their case before the members and frankly ask for an indorsement?

"If the Associated Press is all it should be under the bond voting control of the 'Old Guard,' why do they find it necessary to disfranchise 88 per cent of the membership?

"The right of franchise in the political world was once limited to property ownership. Long ago that relic of aristocracy was abandoned. Why should the directors of the Associated Press be so anxious to continue such an undemocratic policy in an organization that should be the freest and most democratic in the world—the Free Press of America?

"Whatever may be the view of the majority of the membership on bond control, there should be absolute unaminity on the question of 'equal protest rights for all.'

"Mr. Noyes, in his letter, makes no promises at all in respect to protest rights. Why should not all the members be placed on the same protected footing?

"Without the right of protest a member is at the mercy of any one who may care to enter his field. With it, he is armed with a strong weapon for his own protection.

"Why should 208 members of the Associated Press have this insurance on the exclusiveness of their Associated Press memberships, while more than 1,000 members have no such rights and remain subject to the unrestricted will of the board of directors?

"Those who are making the campaign for democracy in the Associated Press, have at heart the best interests of that organization. They are coming to the meeting next Monday in full confidence that they have the sympathy and support of a substantial majority of the membership.

"Every member who entrusts his proxy to the mutualization committee may do so in full confidence that it will be used to make his membership in that organization more valuable."

In regard to the bonds, the A. P. by-laws read as follows: (Article XII.)

"This corporation shall have power to borrow money and to make and issue bonds as evidences of indebtedness therefor, and to secure the same by mortgage upon its property; provided that such bonds shall not be issued to an amount exceeding the aggregate sum of $150,000.

"The board of directors, at any regular meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, may authorize the execution and issue of such bonds in such amounts not exceeding the aggregate principal sum of $150,000 to such persons in,-cluding themselves, payable at such times and with such rate of interest and in such form as it may deem advisable, provided, that every bond, so issued, shall contain a provision that the corporation shall have the right to redeem the same at its face value, with the interest due or accrued thereon, whenever it shall come into the possession of any one not a member of this corporation.

"And it shall be the duty of the board of directors, whenever the bonds are presented for registration in the name of any one not a member of this association, to exercise the right of redemption herein provided for and pay for such bonds out of any funds in the treasury available for the purpose or out of an assessment to be levied upon members in proportion to the weekly assessment paid by them. The board of directors may make such provision for the registration of such bonds as it may deem best. The board of directors may also authorize the execution of a mortgage upon the property of the corporation to secure the payment of such bonds.

"The registered owner and holder of any such bonds may file with the secretary a waiver of any claim to interest on the bonds held by him, and he shall thereupon become entitled at any meeting of the members of this corporation for the election of directors to cast one vote, either in person or by proxy, for directors upon each $25 of such bonds registered in his name for not less than 20 days prior to such meeting, provided that no bondholder shall have the right to vote upon more than $1,000 of such bonds, and shall not have the right to vote on any bond that shall have been called for redemption at any time before such election."

Ten candidates were nominated to succeed the five directors of the Associated Press whose terms expire in 1927, by the A. P. nominating committee meeting in Chicago. Names of the candidates follow:

W. H. Cowles of the Spokane Spokesman-Review, Frank P. McLennan of the Topeka State Journal, E. Lansing Ray of the St. Louis Globe Democrat, Frederick I. Thompson of the Birmingham Age-Herald, Robert R. McCormick of the Chicago Tribune, C. B. Blethen of the Seattle Times, I. R. Kirkwood of the Kansas City Star, Edson K. Bixby of the Muskogee Daily Phoenix, Leonard K. Nicholson of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, and Harry J. Grant of the Milwaukee Journal.

The committee made the following nominations to fill the unexpired term of one year caused by the death of Charles Hopkins Clark:

William J. Pape of the Waterbury Republican and Richard Hooker of the Springfield Republican.

The election will occur April 26.

Walter A. Strong of the Chicago Daily News, whose term expires, was not renominated, in accordance with his request.

LINDNER IN NEW YORK

Detroit Times Head Named Publisher of The American

Clarence R. Lindner, publisher of the Detroit Times, has been appointed publisher of the New York American by William Randolph Hearst.

The American has for some time been without an active publisher. George Hearst, son of the owner, was once listed as president and publisher but he is now in San Francisco, where he is assistant publisher of the Examiner.

NEWBRANCH BACK AT DESK

Harvey E. Newbranch, editor of the Omaha World-Herald, who received a badly mashed hand some three weeks ago when it was caught in the revolving door of a local hotel, will not lose his hand as it was at first feared. Mr. Newbranch is able to report to his office again, but will be forced to carry his left arm in a sling for at least six weeks.

NEW YORK STATE

Westchester County's

Fastest Growing Cities

Mount Vernon and New Rochelle and The Vicinity Towns

Are Covered Completely by

THE DAILY ARGUS

of

Mount Vernon

THE STANDARD STAR

of

New Rochelle

Both Members of A. B. C.

Westchester Newspapers, Inc.

Franklin A. Merriam, Pres.

Mount Vernon—New Rochelle

HATTIESBURG AMERICAN

Hattiesburg, the Hub of South Mississippi

Only Daily in Hattiesburg, Mississippi. Only Daily covering South Mississippi thoroughly.

Circulation 6,027. Published every afternoon, except Sunday. Has full leased wire Associated Press service.

Represented Nationally by

The S. C. Beckwith Special Agency,

New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, Atlanta, Kansas City, Los Angeles, San Francisco.

96 Per Cent of THE SUN'S readers live in New York and its Suburbs—the fifty-mile trading area from which New York merchants draw practically most of their trade and in which manufacturers have the largest number of retail outlets.

The Sun

280 Broadway New York

Los Angeles Evening Herald

Has A Greater Circulation and Carries More Advertising than any other Daily in this entire territory

Circulation

Sept. 30, 1926* Government Statement

196,050

*(Now over 200,000)

Largest in 41 States

Total Advertising

1926

17,505,474

Agate Lines

Representatives

New York: Herb. W. Moloney, 604 Times Bldg.

Chicago: John H. Lederer, 910 Hearst Bldg.

San Francisco: A. J. Norris Hill, 610 Hearst Bldg.

Burt P. Garnett of EDITORIAL RESEARCH REPORTS, Washington, will be at the Waldorf-Astoria during the week of the conventions and will be pleased to have clients or others interested in the service of EDITORIAL RESEARCH REPORT get into touch with him.

in Detroit—

Free Press circulation reaches 31,000 more than the total number of families owning their own homes.

The "Free Press"

"Starts the day in Detroit"

With a stable, uninflated, liberal pursed circulation productive of greater advertising returns at lower cost.

SUPREMACY IN building circulation

THE CHICAGO HERALD AND EXAMINER is conducting the greatest circulation-building campaign in its history. Naturally, the HOLLISTER CIRCULATION ORGANIZATION is in charge for publishers everywhere recognize this organization's unrivalled pre-eminence in increased circulation many thousands in sure and rapid-fire fashion, by absolutely clean and satisfactory methods. A line of metropolitan dailies, such as The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, The Memphis Commercial Appeal, The Indianapolis News and others attest Hollister supremacy.

C. B. HOLLISTER, general manager of the organization, will be at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel during the publishers' convention, and will gladly detail his plan to interested publishers.

The Herald and Examiner, CHICAGO

HOLLISTER

Circulation Organization

Home Ad.: 717-8 Commercial Exch. Bldg., Los Angeles

Editor & Publisher's

Net Paid Circulation

is growing—steadily, healthily

7014 was its average A.B.C. net paid for the six months ending December 25, 1926.

While its strictly net paid for the April 9th issue was 8026

910 New Mail Subscribers have been welcomed into the family since December 25, 1926

Net Paid, Including Bulk, by Issues:

Date	Copies	Date	Copies	Date	Copies	Date	Copies	Date	Copies	Date	Copies	Date	Copies	Date	Copies
July 3	6,804	Aug. 7	7,001	Sep. 11	6,842	Oct. 16	7,098	Nov. 20	7,277	Dec. 25	7,253	Jan. 29	7,753	Mar. 5	7,868
10	6,809	14	6,880	18	7,001	23	7,028	27	7,198	Jan. 1	7,297	Feb. 5	7,792	12	7,898
17	6,806	21	6,855	25	7,071	30	7,103	Dec. 4	7,207	8	7,395	12	7,783	19	7,915
24	6,864	28	6,870	Oct. 2	6,968	Nov. 6	7,065	11	7,163	15	7,502	19	7,838	26	7,955
31	6,897	Sept. 4	6,894	9	7,125	13	7,094	18	7,194	22	7,607	26	7,885	Apr. 2	7,990
														9	8,026

The Growth in Detail

Paid Mail Subscribers:	Dec. 25, 1926	Apr. 9, 1927
Newspaper Executives	3,215	3,410
General Advertisers	864	941
Advertising Agents	529	601
Newspaper Representatives	245	260
Business, Paper and Magazine Executives	234	241
Public Libraries	31	33
News Service and Feature Syndicates	271	283
Schools of Journalism and Libraries	101	103
Miscellaneous, including not yet classified	1,132	1,174
Total Paid Mail Subscribers	6,622	7,046
Single Copy Sales, including bulk	123	146
Newsdealers, net	631	980
Grand Total, Paid Circulation	7,376	8,172

	Dec. 25, 1926	Apr. 9, 1927
Total Paid Circulation	7,376	8,172
Correspondents	231	240
Advertisers in E. & P.	142	157
Exchanges and Complimentary	57	60
Canvassers and Samples	261	104
Employees	100	46
File Copies	100	100
Arrears over 6 months	43	20
Short Term Subs., in arrears	6	4
Credit Subs., over 3 mos. in arrears	18	11
Total Distribution	8,334	8,914
Estimated newsstand returns	153	281
Copies on hand, against future sales	13	5
Total number copies printed	8,500	9,200

Number of Copies of this Issue Printed, 11,000

Agency Coverage

The 601 Advertising Agency paid subscribers now served by Editor & Publisher achieve striking significance in their bearing upon the extent to which it reaches the important space buying units when it is remembered that only 570 Agencies, large and small, are recognized by the A. N. P. A., and that only 250 comprise the American Association of Advertising Agencies (A. A. A. A.)—especially when it is borne in mind that it is authoritatively stated that these 250 A. A. A. A. agencies place 95% of all national newspaper advertising.

Saturation—PLUS!

General Advertiser Coverage

Of no less striking significance are Editor & Publisher's 941 General Advertiser paid subscriptions, when compared with the total Association of National Advertisers membership of only 350, which number is said to do practically all the newspaper national advertising. Again: the combined Advertiser and Agency unit membership of the Audit Bureau of Circulations is only 166, while Editor & Publisher carries 1,542 paid subscribers in both classes.

Thoroughly Organized for Service During Convention Week

FROM early Monday morning until the last delegate shall have departed for home, every ounce of every energy of every member of the Editor & Publisher organization will be devoted to the one single joy of serving our good friends.

This service will be maintained at both our headquarters—Room 116, Astor Gallery Floor, the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and at Editor & Publisher's offices, Suite 1700, Times Building, Broadway and 42nd Street.

At both, you are cordially invited to use the facilities freely and abundantly placed at your disposal—phones, stenographers, stationery, desks, information clerks, directories, maps, flowers, smokes, radio, etc.

If you want to know anything, on any subject, wherever you are, just call "BRYANT 3052." There will be direct wires from our offices to the Waldorf headquarters, with plenty of alert people at both places to answer your beck and call.

CHAOS TO COSMOS IN PUBLIC THOUGHT

(Continued from page 17)

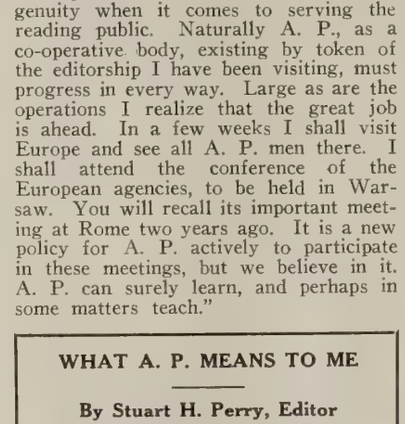
into the night. The compensation allowed by the rules would not cover the cost of their hotel rooms. I happen to know that every member of the board actually reads every report that comes in from the regional directors, reciting the details of operations everywhere. Our members hold 36 state or regional meetings twice each year at which minutes are written and forwarded to head quarters. These are read by all directors and prompt action is taken upon recommendations. President Noyes reads most of the letters that issue from headquarters. It is an extraordinary devotion, deserving comment.

"Associated Press men do not expect to get rich from their work. They have a right to expect to live respectably and they do. The institutional spirit that exists among them is one of the great binding cords. The A. P. insurance system protects them in old age and sickness on the basis of time served and is accepted as fair and liberal. Naturally I want to get as much as I can for the staff. There are limitations which are evident to all concerned. It is a harmonious group, extraordinary in many respects.

"Associated Press is constantly increasing its affiliations with capable news organizations in other lands and the principle upon which A. P. was founded and today operates is a model. For instance, the Canadian Associated Press, fashioned after this organization, is truly mutual and our relationship is an exchange of news at the border. J. F. B. Livesay, the general manager, will attend next week's convention. From Japan will come Mr. Iwanaga, managing director of Nippon Shinbun Rengo (Japan Associated Press) organized during the past two years on a mutuality fashioned from the organization in this country. Our members are served by this Japanese association and we serve its members, on a reciprocal basis very much like that obtaining among the members in this country. Naturally Associated Press staff men control the flow of news. Communications between the Orient and this country across the Atlantic are now direct with New York, the purpose being to conserve transmission time and also to prevent duplication as some material comes via Europe.

"Years ago A. P. perfected its exchange relations in Latin America, entering Cuba and Mexico and from that springboard South America accepted the co-operative principle. We do not fail to remember that we are in foreign countries as guests and there is no effort to exceed that limitation.

"A. P. affiliations with the official or semi-official news agencies of Europe, always a tremendous asset, are controlled absolutely by our large foreign staff. These foreign agencies provide us with a tip service that could not be excelled. However, it should be better known that not a single word in the A. P. report is filed on the responsibility of any foreign agency. When an exclusive announcement is made by one of them, or anything of a political nature is handled, the agency making the announcement is indicated by A. P. Actually the the A. P. service from Europe is almost completely the product of our 20 correspondents in London, 10 in Paris, 4 in Berlin, 2 in Rome, 2 in Moscow, etc., using local connections and with numerous correspondents in less important centers and special men where required, such as at Geneva. There are three trained A. P. men in China at present. All of these correspondents are schooled in A. P. practice. The heads of all bureaus, and often subordinates, are brought to New York every third year to refresh experience and renew local contacts. Altogether A. P. is now operating in 28 nations. The same rules that apply to domestic news regulate the foreign bureaus, and often their subordinates, are brought to New York every third year to refresh experience and renew local contacts. Altogether A. P. is now operating in 28 nations. The same rules that apply to domestic news regulate the foreign service. There is no stint on cable or wireless tolls, the news is given what it merits in the view of the sender and the meaning is not obscured by skeletonizing for economy.



Mr. Cooper spoke of the rapid conversion of telegraph service from the manual Morse system to machine operation in this country. A. P. now has 621 Morkrum printers in operation. "It is inevitable," he said. "The machine has high word capacity and is now out of the experimental stage. More and more it will replace Morse. It is a curious fact, however, that with all our machine operations we employ about as many telegraph operators as ever. But the machine is the future instrument of practically all operations."

One of the A. P. developments of the year was the installation of a picture service to augment the mail feature report. Of this Mr. Cooper said: "Many members appear to like it and it is rapidly taking its place as a fixture. It is a logical development."

"In the past two years," said Mr. Cooper, "I have been in every state and every A. P. domestic originating office. My observation is that the newspaper men of the United States form the most progressive body within the borders of this country. There is no limit to their ingenuity when it comes to serving the reading public. Naturally A. P., as a co-operative body, existing by token of the editorship I have been visiting, must progress in every way. Large as are the operations I realize that the great job is ahead. In a few weeks I shall visit Europe and see all A. P. men there. I shall attend the conference of the European agencies, to be held in Warsaw. You will recall its important meeting at Rome two years ago. It is a new policy for A. P. actively to participate in these meetings, but we believe in it. A. P. can surely learn, and perhaps in some matters teach."

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO ME

By Stuart H. Perry, Editor Adrian (Mich.) Telegram

TO me the most important aspect of the Associated Press is the disinterestedness of its service to its members and to the public. This is not merely the result of a good intent on the part of the management but is a natural outgrowth from its plan of organization. The Associated Press being based on co-operative service, with no factor of individual profit or personal advantage, and with its news service under incessant and critical scrutiny from 1,200 members of varying views, an accurate and unbiased news report is not merely possible but is a logical and inevitable result. It could not render any other kind of service and long survive.

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO ME

By William J. Pape, Publisher Waterbury (Conn.) Republican & American

I WAS in our editorial room one night during the war when the telegraph editor came to me with a sheet of copy in his hand and asked how far a big gun would shoot. I told him the biggest gun had a range of about 15 or 16 miles. He said he had an Associated Press story from Paris stating that the Germans had developed a gun which was bombarding Paris from a distance of 75 miles. Should he play the story up or keep it down? His first impression had been to run an eight-column head on it, but his second thought was that there was something wrong about the story.

I agreed that it had better be kept down. I suggested that he run it in a first page box with a note of interrogation in the head-line. Then I went out. I came back a minute later on a hunch, and said to him: "This is a very startling statement if it be true. It is so sensational that the A. P. will be very careful not to send it out without verifying it absolutely. The A. P. says that Paris has been bombarded today by the Germans with a piece of artillery located over 75 miles away. Very well, then, there is such a gun and the A. P. will be able to prove it. Play it up for all you are worth."

The story appeared under an eight-column head on our first page the next morning. For two or three days other press associations were ridiculing the beat, but the A. P. followed up with a story telling how the French artillerists had computed from the angle of penetration the flight of the shell and the approximate location of the big gun. French airplanes were sent out and located the gun and destroyed it by bombardment.

The fact that we were able to accept, almost instantly, an apparently incredible statement made by the A. P. with perfect confidence in the good old A. P. habit of concientious accuracy shows what the A. P. means to us.

HANKOW PAPERS SUSPEND

Nationalist Paper, Edited by Americans, Only Survivor

Due to labor difficulties, both the American-owned Hankow Herald and the British-owned Central China Post were recently forced to suspend, leaving the Hankow field for the time being to the newly organized Nationalist organ, the People's Tribune.

Mr. and Mrs. William Prohme, Americans, are editing the Tribune, which receives telegraph service from the Peking bureau of the United Press after it has passed through several fighting zones on its way to Shanghai and up the Yangtze river to Hankow.

Convention delegates are invited to make use of EDITOR & PUBLISHER facilities, 1700 Times Building, 42nd Street and Broadway.

17 AP. CORRESPONDE COVERING CHINA

Stiles, Foreign Editor, Tells Lin Inquiring Member—Babb, in Charge, Speaks Chinese

There are 17 Associated Press spondents in China, according to in tion which has been sent to an in A. P. member by M. N. Stiles, editor in the New York office. T of the letter was made public this contradict reports that the A. undernamed in the Orient to rep present war.

Glenn Babb, chief of the Peking has transferred his headquarte Shanghai, and is in charge of the nig of news in China. The letter that M. J. Harris, who has had four experience in China and Japan, enroute to the Orient.

The text of Mr. Stiles letter, wh addressed to Ives Collins of the City (N. J.) Journal follows in pa

"The gathering of news in Chi the Associated Press is under the tion of the chief of our Peking Mr. Glenn Babb, who has temp transferred his headquarters to Sha He has had extended experience in and speaks Chinese. I have not av at the moment his exact term of s but it is a number of years.

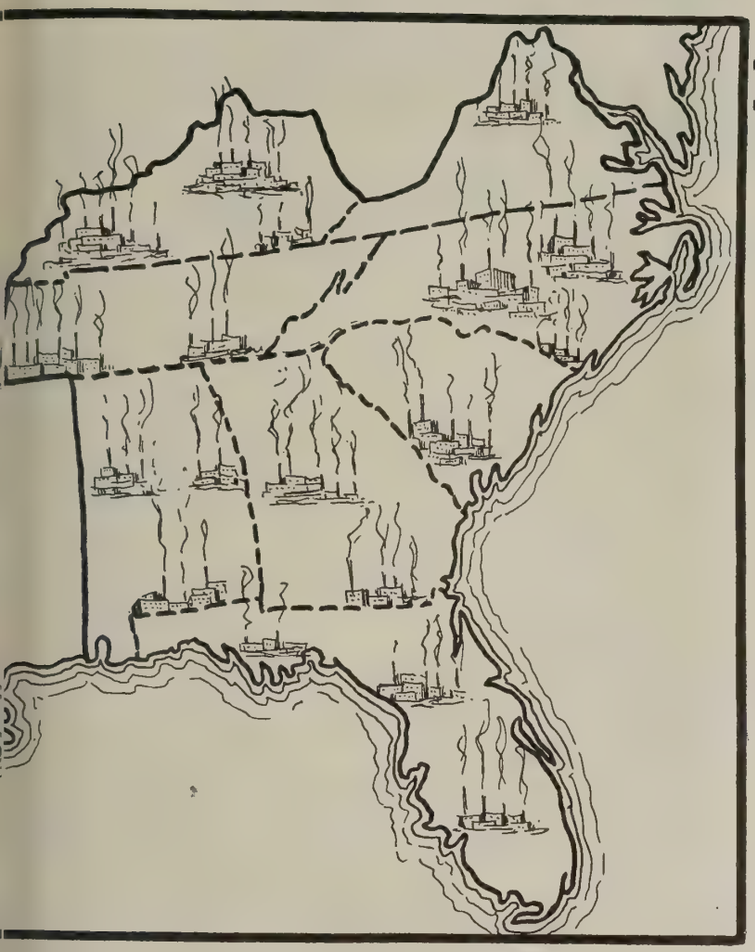
"Mr. Babb has under his direct Shanghai two trained American c pondents, and American correspo under his supervision at Hankow, t of the Nationalist Government, a strategic cities on the coast of Until recently he had corresponde the interior cities. Several of the were American missionaries and do have come out. In all, these numbe

"Their names are L. E. Claypo H. L. Felton at Shanghai, W. F. and Clarence O. Wheeler at C Frank T. Cartwright, Fukien; Swartz, Hankow; H. C. Vezey, H J. P. Braga, Hongkong; R. M. Kaifeng; Morton H. Howie, Mukd R. Craighill, Manchung; Harold E ton, Nanking; W. H. Hubbard, P fu; S. P. Kirn, Schenchow; M. I. gins, Techow; George W. V. P Tientsin; J. L. McCartney, Chun Some of these speak Chinese.

"Another Associated Press staff Mr. M. J. Harris, with four year perience in China and Japan, is n route from the United States.

"To your question whether ou respondents in China have direct ac important news sources, the answer

"The answer is yes also to your whether correspondents unfamiliar the language of the country to whic are assigned are required to lear language within a reasonable time. general rule our correspondents a given such assignments unless th familiar with the language. Most C leaders speak English.



"I take it from your letter th burden of the speaker's complaint the Chinese side of the present tro not accurately presented. In so far Associated Press has been able to information in China, both from Ca and northern Chinese sources, nev viewpoints from both of them hav transmitted. Our correspondents specific instructions to divide their to obtain news between these s and the foreign news sources.

"The speaker probably does not that the Cantonese censorship a times complete lack of communicati prevented our correspondent at H from sending out information. Re with the occupation of Shangh Cantonese forces, a branch of the bureau organized by them at Ha was set up in Shanghai.

"Whatever intelligence is with power of trained American new men, employed by the Associated and familiar with China and the C to obtain, the Associated Press mits on its news merits and without s the South growing?

The speaker referred to in the was a Jersey City clergyman.

n the short space of time that the South has oncentrated its energies in the manufacture f textiles it is remarkable to see the rapid trides it has made in the industry. 1473 mills epresenting an invested capital of approxinately 700 million dollars are engaged in urning out finished textile products that compete successfully with the markets of the world.

$700,000,000 Invested in Textile Mills—

This progress has been so rapid that it is predicted within a comparatively short time it will supplant New England as the textile center.

It is estimated that this industry is spending at the rate of from 200 to 250 million dollars for new construction machinery and supplies, not including raw materials. They are furnishing employment to thousands of people who represent part of the new buying power that has sprung up in the South.

This industry is helping the South in its growth to great prosperity and National Advertisers who have been quick to take advantage of the New South have found a quick and ready response to their products advertised in the local newspapers. These newspapers listed below are the leaders in the Southern territory. They are keeping pace with its progress and they are ready to help any National Advertiser who wants to come in and share in its new growth and expansion.

	Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
ALABAMA
†Birmingham Age-Herald (M)	40,205	.09	.09
†Birmingham Age-Herald (S)	51,178	.11	.11
Mobile News-Item (E)	12,479	.05	.05
Mobile Register (M)	21,713	.08	.08
Mobile Register (S)	32,951	.10	.10
FLORIDA
†Daytona Beach News (ES)	9,083	.065	.065
*Florida Times-Union (M) 50,640 (S)	63,430	.12(S.15)	.12(S.15)
Lakeland Ledger (E)	5,531	.03	.03
†Miami Herald (M)	44,668	.11	.11
†Miami Herald (S)	48,751	.12	.12
Orlando Reporter-Star (E)	9,072	.06	.06
*Orlando Sentinel (M&S)	10,105	.06	.06
Pensacola News and Journal (E&M)	9,490	.07	.07
†††St. Augustine Record (E&S)	3,382	.04	.04
*St. Petersburg Independent (E)	12,874	.065	.065
*Tampa Times (E)	27,813	.08	.08
*Tampa Tribune (M) 41,400 (S)	53,248	.10(.14S)	.10(.14S)
*West Palm Beach Post (M)	12,081	.07	.07
GEORGIA
†Augusta Herald (E)	14,244	.05	.05
†Augusta Herald (S)	14,947	.05	.05
†Macon Telegraph (M)	25,011	.08	.08
†Macon Telegraph (S)	25,011	.08	.08
Savannah Morning News (M), 21,405 (S)	22,040	.06(.07S)	.06(.07S)
KENTUCKY
*The Lexington Leader (E)	19,739	.07	.07
*The Lexington Leader (S)	19,772	.07	.07
†Paducah Sun (E)	9,695	.04	.04

	Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
NORTH CAROLINA
Greensboro Daily News (M)	27,656	.08	.07
Greensboro Daily News (S)	30,691	.09	.08
*Salisbury Post (E)	7,718	.04	.04
SOUTH CAROLINA
Columbia State (M)	22,627	.07	.07
Columbia State (S)	24,281	.07	.07
*Greenville News (M)	24,124	.08	.08
*Spartanburg Journal (E)	4,471 }	.05	.05
*Spartanburg Herald (M) 6,943 (S)	9,048 }
TENNESSEE
Chattanooga Times (M)	31,107	.10	.10
Chattanooga Times (S)	30,573	.10	.10
†Memphis Commercial Appeal (M)	103,168	.18	.18
†Memphis Commercial Appeal (S)	136,115	.25	.25
*Nashville Banner (E)	59,574	.11	.11
*Nashville Banner (S)	59,843	.12	.12
VIRGINIA
*Danville Register and Bee (M&E)	15,171	.06	.06
*Danville Bee and Register (E&S)	10,047	.07	.07
Newport News Times-Herald (E)	7,853 }	.05	.05
Newport News Daily Press (S&M)	5,332 }
*Roanoke Times & World News (M&E)	27,321	.08	.08
*Roanoke Times (S)	16,912	.07	.07
*Staunton News-Leader (M), Leader (E)	7,064	.035	.035

* A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
 A. B. C. Statement, October 1, 1926.
† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.
†† Government Statement, October 1, 1926.
††† Government Statement, March 31, 1926.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

WILLIAM B. McCOURTIE has just brought out the fourth edition of "Where and How to Sell Manuscripts" (Home Correspondence School, Springfield, Mass.). This new edition brings material down to date and possibly is the best directory for writers that has appeared in print.

In addition to listing the editorial needs of American periodicals, it outlines the requirements of photoplay producers, chats about the markets for photographs, tells how money may be earned through writing copy for greeting cards and contains a comprehensive chapter about what tunes house organs want to play. Its directory of employe magazines is remarkably complete.

Separate chapters take up the needs of Canadian magazines, Canadian book publishers, the editorial wants of British periodicals, etc. One of the most valuable features is the Writer's Calendar which lists topical subjects for the various months of the year.

* * *

THE ask-me-another feature has become very popular both in newspapers and in books. Of the numerous books giving questions and answers one of the most instructive is "Answers to Questions," by Frederic J. Haskin (published by the author, Washington, D. C.).

The volume has this unique feature: half of it is written by 5,000 people asking direct questions; the other half is written by one man who compiled the answers. Many, including those who work on newspapers, will want to have in permanent form the interesting information that Mr. Haskin has for some time been printing in various American newspapers. In a way, he has been a great teacher, and he probably has had the largest class in the history of American education. His school in a certain way may be said to have been endowed by the American press. He was forced to obtain funds from newspapers which he represented to pay for the cost of the research work necessary to answer the questions sent to him by newspaper readers.

The volume is to be commended for its absence of foolish questions. Those who sit at the copy desk may well dip into this volume between editions as even a hit-or-miss perusal ought to be useful in catching slips made by others. Mr. Haskins, it will be remembered, is the author of "The American Government"—a book that shows Uncle Sam at work.

* * *

RESPONSIBILITY for slips in copy will always be divided between the desk and the author. For some reason slips in the newspaper press are attracting unusual attention at the present time. John Granger in a letter printed in The Outlook for April 20 calls attention to newspaper slips in stories about the two hundredth anniversary of the death of Sir Isaac Newton.

* * *

A BOOK that deserves some mention in "Our Own World of Letters" is "History of the United Typothetæ of America" (University of Chicago Press), by Leona M. Powell. Even among newspaper men only a few know how the United Typothetæ changed from an employers' association into a trade association or what it is doing to put the printing industry on a sound economic basis. The volume consists of seven chapters. The first, historical in character, gives the origin and background and is evidently the result of painstaking research on the part of the author. The second chapter describes the period of national agreements with the unions. The third devotes itself to a discussion of the Typothetæ and the eight-hour day. The fourth outlines experiments with price maintenance and cost work. The fifth takes up the Typothetæ division plan and the amalgamation movement. The sixth limits itself to tests of the division plan. The concluding chapter comments about Typothetæ as a trade association.

So thoroughly has the author done the work that a real contribution has been made to trade association literature.

* * *

SEVERAL books relating to Japanese journalism, but printed in English, have been mentioned in "Our Own World of Letters." To this same group in a way belongs "Random Thoughts on Journalism" (Nihon Hyoronsha, Tokio, Japan), by Sojinkwan K. Sugimura. The text of this volume contains pages both in English and in Japanese.

Whether the chapters in Japanese contain the same subject matter as those in English I have no way of knowing. But the thoughts expressed in English on journalism by Mr. Sugimura are well worth reading because of the high position he holds on The Tokio Asahi.

The first of the three chapters in English takes up "Press of Japan, Past and Present." This chapter classifies the newspapers in Japan, where we find about the same types that exist in America. Attention is called to the popularity of signed articles which have more interest for Japanese readers than anonymous editorials.

Almost every Japanese newspaper features an "Appeal" department which is somewhat similar to the space devoted on the editorial page of the American newspaper to letters to the editor. The department in the Japanese press, however, has this difference: it often contains stories contributed by regular members of the editorial staff.

The chapter concludes with a comment about the large number of characters used daily in the vernacular journals of Japan. These have been estimated at between 3,000 and 4,500 in every issue. The newspapers of no other country, not even including those of China, use such an enormous number of letters or characters.

Chapter II, "Anonymity in Journalism," is a paper which Mr. Sugimura read before the Press Congress of the World when it met in San Francisco in 1895. Japan has its own peculiar requirements for press regulations established by law. In that country each newspaper must have a nominal editor, publisher, and printer duly certified to the authorities and printed in the paper in a certain form. These newspaper executives, however, seldom practice the work which their title would indicate. Their business is simply to represent the newspaper in a legal way when controversies arise and to them fall the punishment if the courts pronounce a verdict of guilty. Somewhat recently by a new amendment the press regulation has been broadened so that it may include the actual editor and the writer of the story. Strange to say, the editorial in Japan is not the expression of the newspaper itself, but merely a personal opinion of the editor or the expert who makes the comment.

Between Chapter II and Chapter III is reprinted an editorial by Arthur Brisbane on "What's the Purpose of a Newspaper?" It is, according to Mr. Brisbane, first, to stimulate thought; second, to give information and to direct the mind of the reader in a useful path.

The third chapter is entitled "Logical Basis of the News Value." It aims to answer the rhetorical question, "What should newspapers print?"

One feature that the Japanese newspapers print is thus described:

Kodan is a form of old romantic stories of Japan told by story-tellers. They are stories of martial bravery, love, revenge, etc. These stories are all familiarly known to the Japanese, and most of them have been already published in book form. As they are all known to the Japanese and written in books, it may appear at first thought a meaningless thing to reprint them in papers. But of all stories in newspapers what most interest Japanese readers is the Kodan and the quality of Kodan considerably affects the circulation.

In Japan it has been a custom to divide news into two kinds: "Koha," heavy news; and "Nampa," light news. The result, as might be expected, showed in two kinds of newspapers: one ... to heavy news and the other to light ... The former, though wielding a great ... torial influence, were not successful ... cially; the latter, though extremely ... itable to their owners, had neither ... cal nor social influence. Mr. Su... answers his rhetorical question ... ing that the logical basis of news ... is to interpret man.

"Random Thoughts on Journ... ought to do much to enlighten Am... readers about press tendencies in ...

* * *

ROLAND ST. ANBECK of t... torial department of the Van... Sun, British Columbia, is the au... "The Flask of Love and Other ... (The Sun Publishing Company, L... Vancouver, Canada). These poem... distinct literary merit. Some o... preach an excellent sermon, for t... worthy of the name is also a proph...

Thorough Coverage in One of ... World's Richest Buying Cente... Coupled with the Ability ... Produce Results

Pittsburgh Gazette Ti...
(Morning and Sunday)
AND
Pittsburgh Chronicle Teleg...
(Evening except Sunday)

These newspapers in News and A... tising have the confidence of ... readers.
Their readers have the powe... purchase.

Sold Singly or Combined

URBAN E. DICE, Nat'l Advg. M... Gazette Square, Pittsburgh, Pa.
E. M. BURKE, Inc., 1457 Broadway, New York. 123 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago. Constitution Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
R. J. BIDWELL COMPANY, 742 Market Street, San Francisco, ... Times Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal. White-Henry-Stuart Bldg., Seattle, W...

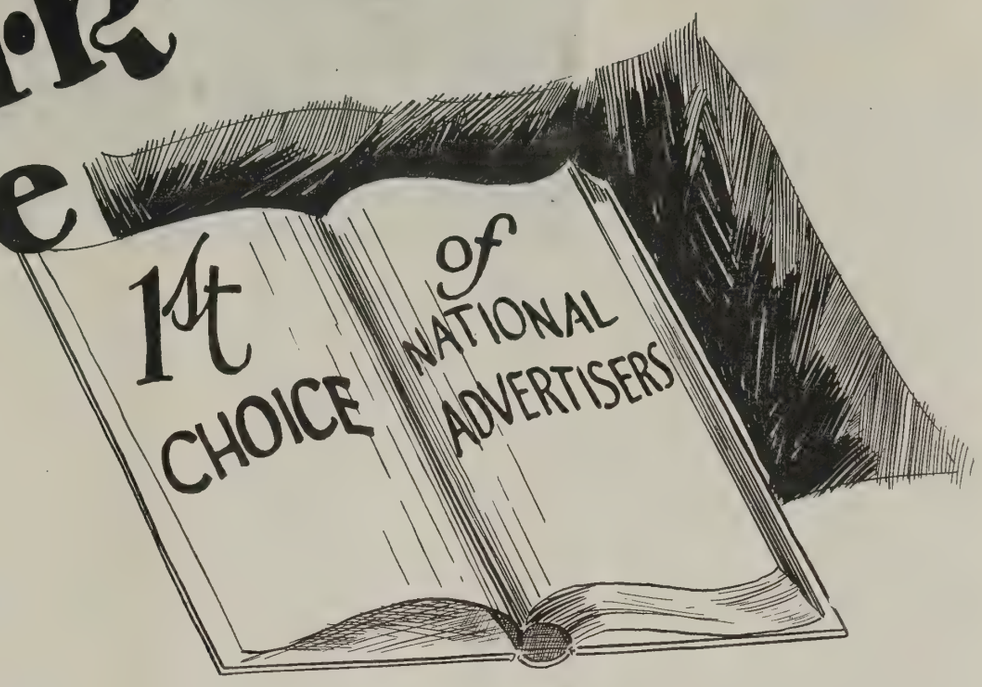
Where better Classified mediums are being built — the best publicity is helping build them

THE BASIL L. SMITH SYSTEM, Inc.
International Classified Advertising Counsellors
Packard Building, Philadelphia

THE WELFARE COMMITT...
of the
INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION MANAGE... ASSOCIATION

Can supply you with co... petent circulation men ... capacity and ability capa... to take entire charge of y... department or to fill imp... tant posts in the departm...

Address the Secreta... Treasurer please, Mr. C... ence Eyster, care S... Building, Peoria, Ill.



Largest Circulation
and Largest Volume of Advertising of any Daily west of the Missouri river
LOS ANGELES
EVENING HERALD
REPRESENTATIVES
Chicago, JOHN H. LEDERER, 910 Hearst Bldg.
San Francisco, A. J. NORRIS HILL, 610 Hearst Bldg
New York, HERBERT W. MOLONEY, 604 Times Bldg.

SERVICE
THE CHARLES PARTLOWE COMPANY
America's Largest Circulation Building Organization
RESULTS COUNT
OCCIDENTAL BLDG.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

If Quality
of circulation is your first consideration
The Evening Star
With Sunday Morning Editions
Washington, D. C.
will have your preference—same as it has the preference of practically everyone in the National Capital.
The Star's circulation is home circulation—both quality and quantity—the kind that counts most with advertisers.
N. Y. Office—110 E. 42nd St.
Dan A. Carroll
Chicago Office—Tower Building
J. E. Lutz

GRAVURE SECTIONS PRINTED
SPECIAL AND REGULA... EDITIONS, MAGAZIN... INSERTS AND COM... MERCIAL WORK
Standard Gravur... Corporation
LOUISVILLE

New York State

New York State offers:

1—Greatest wealth.

2—Greatest buying power.

3—Highest living standards.

4—Quick and economical channels for distribution.

5—Co-operation from a group of the country's leading newspapers who enjoy the confidence of both the dealer and consumer.

Why then shouldn't the Empire State be the first choice of leading National Advertisers?

National Advertisers always enlist the co-operation of these papers listed below. They can get results for your product and they can prove it if you will get in touch with them.

		Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
*Albany Evening News	(E)	40,552	.13	.13
*Albany Knickerbocker Press	(M)	36,970	.12	.12
*Albany Knickerbocker Press	(S)	55,870	.17	.17
*Amsterdam Recorder-Democrat	(E)	7,824	.04	.04
††Auburn Citizen-Advertiser-Journal	(E)	6,423	.065	.055
Brooklyn Daily Eagle	(E)	77,991	.24	.24
Brooklyn Daily Eagle	(S)	90,532	.24	.24
Buffalo Courier Express	(M)	110,686	.22	.22
Buffalo Courier Express	(S)	161,164	.30	.30
*Buffalo Evening News	(E)	145,648	.25	.25
Buffalo Evening Times	(E)	109,285	.21	.21
Buffalo Sunday Times	(S)	128,158	.21	.21
†Corning Evening Leader	(E)	9,098	.05	.05
*Elmira Star-Gazette Advertiser	(E&M)	34,370	.11	.11
*Freeport Daily Review	(E)	9,011	.05	.05
*Geneva Daily Times	(E)	5,292	.04	.04
*Gloversville Leader Republican	(E)	7,108	.035	.035
††Ithaca Journal-News	(E)	7,711	.05	.05
*Jamestown Morning Post	(M)	11,665	.04	.035
Mount Vernon Daily Argus	(E)	9,866	.05	.05
Newburgh Daily News	(E)	12,506	.06	.06
*New Rochelle Standard-Star	(E)	7,976	.04	.04
††The Sun, New York	(E)	267,520	.60	.58
New York Times	(M)	375,249	.80	.784
New York Times	(S)	653,427	1.00	.98
*New York Herald-Tribune	(M)	290,534	.6435	.624
*New York Herald-Tribune	(S)	343,716	.693	.672
*New York World	(M)	283,870	.595	.58
*New York World	(S)	553,400	.595	.58
*New York Evening World	(E)	295,472	.505	.58
*Niagara Falls Gazette	(E)	21,508	.07	.07
Port Chester Item	(E)	5,065	.045	.035
Poughkeepsie Star and Enterprise	(E)	13,411	.06	.06
*Rochester Times-Union	(E)	70,660	.21	.20
††Syracuse Journal	(E)	64,661	.18	.16
*Troy Record	(M&E)	21,709	.06	.06
††Watertown Standard	(E)	17,825	.07	.07

* A. B. C. Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
 A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
 Merged as Buffalo Courier-Express, June 14, 1926.
† Government Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
†† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

AMAZING STORY OF THE "STARS AND STRIPES"

(Continued from page 21)

"The Stars and Stripes is up at the top o' the mast for the duration of the war. It will try to reach every one of you every week—mud, shell-holes and fog notwithstanding. It will yield rights of the roadway only to troops and ambulances, food, ammunition and guns, and the paymaster's car. It has a big job ahead to prove worthy of its namesake, but, with the help of all of you, it will, in good old down East parlance, 'do its gol-derndest' to deliver the goods. So—For-ward MARCH!"

For a few weeks the paper had no regular office. The first issue was written largely at Neufchateau at field press headquarters, where Viskniskki was still censoring correspondents' despatches, and, to some extent, in Paris, where a "bed-room office" was previously provided in a local army headquarters at 10 Rue Ste. Anne. It was a case of "everyone get busy" for the first issues. As has been said, Hawley wrote most of the paper at the beginning. Viskniskki and Cushing did their share. Michael ran the business end. Lieut. Mark S. Watson at Chaumont—assistant to Colonel Sweeney, and a former newspaper man—gathered news from the offices of General Pershing's headquarters and telephoned it to Paris. And, of course, the inimitable "Wally" began to function.

Thirty thousand copies of the opening number were printed. It was enthusiastically read and praised by all who saw it. But getting out the first number was only making a start on the problems involved. How would the matter of subscriptions be handled? How could you collect subscriptions from and make delivery to organizations that were not only "all over the map," but here today and gone tomorrow? How, supposing that the subscriptions could be collected and the units located, would actual delivery be managed? Where was the transport to come from to deliver the paper everywhere in France? More serious still, how about military discretion in addressing the papers? You couldn't have papers sent out addressed to "Battery B, 151 Field Artillery, 42nd Division, Ansauville." Under those conditions, if the Germans could get hold of the mailing lists of the paper they would know about all that there was to be known concerning the A.E.F. How could the weekly be sure of getting the necessary paper stock? Print paper was extremely scarce in France, and was being rationed by the authorities. The supply might be cut off at any time. The biggest dailies in France were only being allowed four pages, and were not permitted to increase their circulation.

Little by little the distribution problem was solved, and in most ingenious fashion. At first, the paper was sold only for cash. There never was free distribution. Viskniskki felt that the paper would not be appreciated unless it was paid for; he had fought hard for this point at G. H. Q. and won out. The price was 50 centimes, ten cents in U. S. money. When the soldier paid ten cents for a paper that was obviously worth ten cents, the suspicion of propaganda that would come from getting something for nothing was avoided. The only exceptions to the rule of paid-for copies were the papers distributed to the sick and wounded in hospitals. The cost of those papers was divided between the paper and the Red Cross. The price of the weekly was kept purposely low in spite of high costs. Even the advertising rates were not as high as they could have been, if based on circulation and comparative prices of similar publications in America and France.

Gradually a large staff of soldier field agents was built up, (105 at the maximum), whose members were assigned to divisions, regiments, organizations, areas or hospital centers. It was their duty to solicit customers among the "outfit" to which they had been assigned, estimate the number of copies they could sell, collect payment, and forward the money with unsold papers to the Paris office.

Business office and treasury office, the latter handling checks which totaled more than 20,000,000 francs. The former handled the acquiring of newsprint paper, the printing arrangement, the distribution of the papers among 2,000,000 A. E. F. soldiers, and the business administration generally. A branch of the treasury department turned over nearly 2,500,000 francs to the Stars and Stripes Fund for French War Orphans contributed by the A. E. F.

The great publishing and distributing company of Hachette et Cie—corresponding in a way to the Union News Company of this country—proved of tremendous help in achieving circulation. All of the bundles for the field agents were wrapped, with the help of Stars and Stripes men, under the direction of this company. They were addressed to the field agents, (not the organizations), and shipped by railway express to the railroad station nearest to the unit for which they were intended. The agent came to the station in a car at train time, got the papers, and proceeded to make his delivery and collections.

The process was not as simple as it reads. It depended, to begin with, on effective co-operation between a French company and American soldiers in Paris. In the field, the agent sometimes had a Stars and Stripes motor car, but before the armistice, when cars were needed for purely military purposes, it was more likely begged or borrowed for the occasion. Then there was the problem of bad roads and no roads. In the advance zone there was often delivery under actual shell fire, and once even by airplane. Too much praise cannot be given the field agents, for the paper's success depended as much on them as on the Paris staff. In delivering the paper to the boys in the front line, Sergeant Joe Daly, Q.M.C., the head of the transporation work, once got a little too close and was captured by the enemy. Fortunately, it happened on the very day the Armistice was signed. But Sergeants David R. Bawden and Homer G. Roland died in hospital of influenza and penumonia.

After the cessation of hostilities, it became easier for the Stars and Stripes to get the cars needed for its field work. At the maximum, there were 91 automobiles in the service of the paper. Hachette et Cie undertook the distribution of the paper to out-of-the-way places, and put it on sale in places where only a few troops were located, and where it was not advisable to employ a field agent.

To Captain Richard H. Waldo, who became business manager of the weekly in April, 1918, belongs the credit of working out the field subscription problem. This was done by a coupon system of cash sales. Under this plan the field agent sold to the soldiers, for cash, a sheet of 26 coupons, good for six months, at the reduced price of eight francs. This plan had several advantages. It enabled the paper to get cash for advance subscriptions into its treasury without the book-keeping and the inevitable military indiscretion involved in carrying individual subscribers on its rolls. From the soldier's standpoint, he was able to assure himself, when he had francs, of receiving his favorite paper for many weeks to come. And francs were uncertain things! The plan lightened the burden of collecting by the field agents, and made accounting in the central office easier. And it afforded a practical means for the paper to make good on its promise to turn over profits to the various company funds.

It was estimated that the paper could pay expenses, including a margin of safety, by selling six months' (26 weeks) subscriptions for 6 francs 50 centimes. The coupon sheet was therefore sold to the men at 8 francs, the balance of 1 franc 50 centimes being deducted at the source and turned over at once to the company fund. This served as a strong inducement for the units to take their proper quota of papers, and gave also a substantial amount in cash to the units' company funds, many of which had, under field conditions, been sadly depleted. The Stars and Stripes in this way paid a "dividend" totaling well over 100,000 francs.

As time went on, it was evident that further distribution in accordance with the original profit sharing plan was impracticable. In the closing months many organizations had returned to the States or were demobilized, and army regulations also proved an obstacle. After the troops began to go home in large numbers, no more tickets were issued, and those outstanding were accepted for cash. From then until the end, cash sales were again the rule. Indeed, cash sales were always a large part of the paper's business.

While mail subscriptions on a yearly basis were not undertaken in France for obvious reasons, there was no objection to such subscriptions in the States. The field agents accepted money for mail subscriptions to parents or friends at home. Such subscriptions reached the remarkable total at one time of 70,000. Although an addressograph was used, owing to lack of other facilities these subscribers' papers had to be wrapped and addressed by hand. This big task was ably handled by Sergeant Harry L. Katz and a force of 15 men.

The print-paper situation remained serious until the Armistice. Careful planning was needed to keep the paper alive from this standpoint. Going upon the principle that every ounce of tonnage coming from America should be devoted to men and munitions, it was not thought advisable to have paper shipped from the United States. Accordingly one of the management's many pressing problems was to get the French authorities to have a certain amount of European made paper rationed to the Stars and Stripes each week, as was being done to all French papers. The amount was small, and by no means as large as was desired. The cost, too, averaged four times that of print paper in the States. The only answer until after the armistice—except for some slight reinforcement of Canadian paper via England obtained through the influence of Lord Northcliffe—was to hold down subscriptions by artificial means.

A bulletin was issued from G.H.Q. stating that no unit would be permitted to subscribe for a greater number of copies than that of one-third of its actual enlisted and official personnel. This rule was rigidly held to until after the cessation of hostilities. Then the War Department sent print paper in considerable quantity to the Stars and Stripes, and the now unrestricted circulation soared until the soldiers began to return to America in increasing numbers.

(The story of the Stars and Stripes will be completed in next week's issue.)

WHAT A. P. MEANS TO M

By A. H. Vandenberg, Editor Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald

A. H. Vandenberg

THE Associated Press means the greatest of all journalistic tutions—because, by record and tion, it stands for truth, depend and decency in news. These are values which American journalism not afford to desert. The America ple, through satisfied experience, come inherently to believe that th put their unreserved trust in repor are sterling-marked "A-P" That precious triumph. Since "news" "popular opinion" are consecutive since the latter controls in this racy, the Associated Press thus b one of the supreme agencies f maintenance of American instit Thus it is, to me, more than a "bus It is a cardinal public trust. This has been well and ably admini That it is builded on "co-operative ciation" makes it typically Americ profoundly unique. It is the c property of all of its members.

It would be well, in my humble ment, if this "commonality" coul even greater recognition than at in the system of voting control, this "property value" could have greater protection than at pres preserving this heritage to thos have made it possible. Dem within the organization is its g safe-guard—and equally its needed ulus.

Emphasized assurance to its m that they may enjoy the leg fruits of their own enterprise will resultful loyalties doubly sure—an ther acknowledge another great can principle, namely that thos create "property rights" deserve benefits.

While these latter observations, h are somewhat academic, yet they important and basic conside worthy of effectual attention—er cease to be "academic" and become The Associated Press is incal priceless. It has been administere rare fidelity to the tenets of hor journalism. The greater these are, the greater the importance th be bulwarked in every possible

DANA VISITS HAWAII

Arranges for Island Delegatio Coast Ad Clubs Meet

Marshall N. Dana, president Pacific Coast Advertising Clubs a sociate editor of the Portland O Journal, has been in Honolulu range for the attendance of an delegation at the coming Portland vention.

AD TIPS

en-Kynett Company, 1516 Chestnut street, elphia. Now handling account for the idated Cigar Corporation, New York.

W. Ayer & Son, 308 Chestnut street, elphia. Reported to have secured account C. H. Church Mfg. Company, "Sani Toilet Seats," Holyoke, Mass."

ns & Holden, 247 Park avenue, New Making contracts with newspapers in sections for the National Biscuit Com- New York.

on Chesman & Co., 1127 Pine street, New Placing orders with some Western for the Platao Laboratories, St. Louis.

ison J. Cowan Agency, 730 5th avenue, ork. Has secured account of the Cham- elt Mfg. Company, New York and Frank indle & Company, New York.

hfield & Co., 14 E. Jackson boulevard, o, has added several towns to the list estone Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, cy Adv. Company, 1501 Locust street, is, Mo. Sending contracts to newspapers advertising of Kelvinator Co., Detroit, Again making contracts with news- in various sections for Anheuser-Busch, t. Louis.

ance, Sullivan & Co., 130 West 42nd New York. Has secured account of Ehlers, Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y.

les Daniel Frey, Inc., 30 North Michigan Chicago. Placing orders with news- in selected sections for the Crane Com- plumbing and heating supplies, Chicago.

les C. Green Advertising Agency, Inc., h avenue, New York. Now handling t of the Reading Maid Hosiery Mills, eading, Pennsylvania, manufacturers of -made, full fashioned silk hosiery.

ell Advertising Agency, 912 Michigan e Building, Detroit. Has secured ac- of Huston-Mortenson Company, realtors, e Hacker Boat Company, Mt. Clemens.

ab-Crawford Company, 429 Broadway, ukee, Wis. May select a small list of for the advertising of Braumeister In- ent Products Co., Milwaukee (Malt).

g-Cooper Company, 507 Montgomery San Francisco, Cal. Is sending orders ific Coast papers for the advertising of Brandenstein Co., San Francisco.

e of Hubbell, 648 Huron Road, Cleveland, s taken over the accounts of the Na- Refining Company, Cleveland.

zki, Flack & Howard, 527 So. Warren Syracuse, N. Y. Placing orders with pers in various sections for Powell & in, Oneida, N. Y.

V. Kastor & Sons Company, 14 E. Jack- vd., Chicago. Is issuing renewal con- to newspapers for the advertising of Kraft & Co. (Cheese) Chicago.

& Thomas & Logan, 400 North Michi- enue, Chicago. Has added some towns April list for the advertising of Bruns- atke-Collender Co. (Records) Chicago.

). McAdams Company, 360 North Michi- enue, Chicago. May do some additional sing on Van Camp Co. (Bean-whole- Indianapolis, Ind.

. McDonald Company, Fisk Building, ork. Placing orders with newspapers in sections for the Cycle Trades of a, New York.

Manus, Inc., 82 E. Hancock avenue, , Mich. Is sending advertising to news- in scattered sections on Gabriel Snubber o., Cleveland.

is-Harris Company, 400 North Michigan , Chicago. Is issuing some additional ts to newspapers for the advertising of Products Co., Chicago.

or & Collier Company, Reading Road cMillan street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Re- to have secured account of Fallis, Inc., an beauty powder, Cincinnati.

am H. Rankin Company, 342 Madison , New York. Again placing orders with pers for the Bright Star Battery Com- Hoboken, N. J.

ur Rosenberg Company, 15 West 37th New York. Has secured account of the ar Shirt Corporation of New York City.

tz-McGregor Corporation, 270 Madison , New York. Placing orders with news- in some Eastern states for the Victor um Mfg. Company, New York.

Walter Thompson Company, 410 North Michigan blvd., Chicago. Is issuing contracts to newspapers for the advertising of Pickle Relish, a product of Libby, McNeil & Libby, Chicago.

United States Advertising Corporation, 250 West 57th street, New York. Again placing orders with newspapers in various sections for the Fisk Tire & Rubber Company, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

I. B. Wasson Company, American Bank bldg., Kansas City, Mo. Is sending advertising to a small list of newspapers in the South on Minoko Mineral Company.

BUSINESS PAPERS NAME PRIZE AWARD JURY

Group of Five to Pick Winners in Editorial, News and Service Contests Announced by Managing Director Feiker

Appointment of a jury to award the three prizes for editorial excellence among member papers of the Associated Business Papers, Inc., was announced this week by F. M. Feiker, managing director.

Those appointed are:

Dr. Julius Klein, director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.; James W. Brown, publisher, EDITOR & PUBLISHER; David Beecroft, vice-president, Chilton Class Journal Company; William M. Robinson, chairman, Business Paper Committee, American Association of Advertising Agencies; and W. A. Wolff, president, National Industrial Advertisers' Association.

The three awards are:

"An award of $500 to the writer on an A. B. P. publication for the best editorial or article of an editorial nature, to be judged for clearness of style, sound reasoning and power to influence.

"An award of $500 to the regular member of the editorial staff of an A. B. P. publication for the best article or series of articles or news reports, judged broadly on the basis of timeliness, accuracy, thoroughness, originality, clearness of expression and usefulness.

"An award of a suitable trophy to the A. B. P. publication contributing the most definite and outstanding service to the field with which the publication is connected."

Two changes have been made in the rules governing the contest. First, the time for submitting the material has been extended by the executive committee to Sept. 1, of this year.

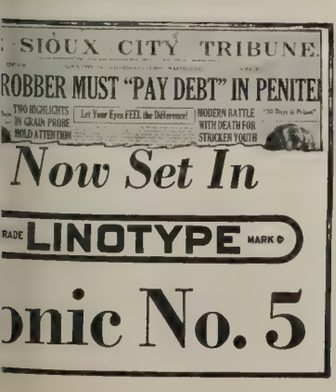
Second, the rule that the editorial must be accompanied by a brief explaining and developing its significance will be waived, i. e., the editorials and articles submitted need be accompanied only by proper letters of transmittal briefly describing the setting and results of such editorials, but not elaborating the accompanying material.

MICHIGAN MAY FORBID TARDY LIBEL SUITS

Bill Passed by Lower House Sets Limit of Year After Cause for Bringing Action Against Publisher

LANSING, Mich., April 18.—A belated libel action, sometimes brought against a newspaper when the story upon which it is based has long been forgotten and the files have yellowed with age, will be made impossible in Michigan if the senate and Gov. Green agree to the terms of a bill, introduced by Rep. Frank Darin of River Rouge, which has already been passed by the lower house of the state legislature.

The Darin measure would provide that libel or slander actions be brought into court within a year after the cause of the action. According to supporters of the measure, libel suits which are tardily filed are usually not brought in good faith, to obtain redress for damaging statements, but are either used as semi-blackmailing levers in an effort to force a publication against which they are directed to adopt a course of action to which its management objects or else they are bare-faced efforts at financial gouging inspired by a paper's prosperity.



During debate in the House on the measure, Rep. Charles Culver of Detroit announced that he was preparing to file a libel action against a Detroit daily, which, he claimed, has made a number of libelous statements about him. He declared that his feeling against this paper, however, would not move him to vote against the Darin bill which he characterized as a just measure.

BARGAIN BULLETIN EDITION

The Seattle (Wash.) Post Intelligencer inaugurated a new idea in bargain advertising in Seattle when it published its first Bargain Bulletin Friday, April 15. The bulletin consists of a page made up of 32 4x2 ads of various Seattle merchants giving their best bargains for Friday and Saturday in a brief and succinct form. This Bulletin will be published every Friday morning as an aid to shoppers searching for week-end bargains.

ADOPTS TABLOID SIZE

The Red Hook (N. Y.) Advertiser weekly, adopted the tabloid size with its issue of April 14.

Now Set In
TRADE LINOTYPE MARK
onic No. 5

A Simple Practical Solution

Just consider the detail work now done in a newspaper publishers office pertaining to checking proofs, and the high cost of newsprint, postage and clerks time in handling detail, and then consider the fact that under our Complete Checking Proof Service the only detail necessary is to send us a few complete copies each day—and we do the rest. In other words, we relieve a publishers office of all detail work and at the same time we give his agencies and advertisers a much more satisfactory service on which they can depend at all times . . . . and the cost is less.

NOW—400 subscribers

The Advertising CHECKING BUREAU Inc.
79 Madison Ave. New York (ACB) 538 So. Clark St. Chicago

From the Linotype Mailbag

Ionic No. 5

Many Compliments and No Complaints

It has been approximately two months since we changed our type face from the old 8 point to the new 6½ point Ionic on 7 point slug. During that time we have had no complaints because of the reduction in the size of the type and have had many compliments on the legibility of the new Ionic face.

We now feel, since changing to eight columns of twelve ems each, that we have an ideal combination in this new type face. We shall be glad at any time to recommend it to other publishers.

Arizona Gazette
Phoenix, Arizona

From the Bethlehem, Pa. Globe-Times

"In looking up our records today we found that the amount of national advertising which we ran at the time we first appointed you was just about the same figure as your commissions amount to today."

We have represented this newspaper for about ten years.

1920 was a good year with most papers. Yet we find that The Globe-Times had an income from national advertising in 1926 over four times their income in 1920.

The fertility of this field for the national advertiser has made this record possible.

All we have done has been to keep the city constantly in front of the national advertiser.

Howland and Howland
Newspaper Representatives
New York Chicago Phila.

"Fair dealing begets good feeling"

CLIP HERE

Howland and Howland
New York Office,
393 Seventh Avenue
(Equitable Life Building.
Opposite Penn. Station)

Gentlemen:

Please send some one to study our field and give an opinion regarding our possibilities for national advertising.

Name .....

Address .....

GUATEMALA PRINTING LAWS AMENDED

Newspapers Allowed Greater Freedom Under New Statutes—May Criticize Public Officials

The Legislative Assembly of the Republic of Guatemala has amended the law on printing, making this in some ways much less subject to official pressure than previously. Representative Cesar Izaguirre presented the proposed amendment to the assembly and in his address pointed out that the press of Guatemala now occupied a prominent place not only in the national life of the country but also in the literary life of Latin-America.

According to the amendments attacks against public officials in the press, whether by statements, allegations or caricatures are not punishable provided these derive exclusively from the fact that the individual attacked is a public official. Answers to such attacks, provided they do not exceed the intensity of the attack itself, are not punishable under the new laws.

The publication of articles which are treasonable, calculated to disturb the public peace or endanger the safety of the state are to be punished under the criminal or military codes entirely aside from the law on printing. In no case, however, may the machinery of the establishment printing the articles be seized for such offenses.

Attacks in the press against foreign governments friendly to the Republic of Guatemala are made punishable only in case the nation so attacked has laws providing for the punishment of attacks made by its own press against friendly countries.

OFFICIAL HONORS WRITERS

Indiana Lieutenant Governor Gives Dinner to Press Gallery

Lieutenant Governor F. Harold Van Orman of Indiana gave a dinner recently for newspaper men who covered the recent session of the Indiana legislature. Impromptu stunts by the newspaper men made up the program of the evening. The dinner was held in the Travertine Room of the Lincoln Hotel, Indianapolis. Among the guests were Claude Wolff and Morris Edwards, Associated Press; Philip Kinsley, Chicago Tribune; Robert Beard, United Press; Eugene J. Cadou and Robert Ginsberg, International News Service; Charles Crawford; Walter A. Shead, William L. Toms, Wayne J. Guthrie, Walter McCarthy and Dudley Smith of the Indianapolis News; Daniel Kidney and Frank Prince, Indianapolis Times; Maurice Early, Horace M. Coats, Herbert Eiler, Joseph K. Shepherd and Richard P. Overmyer, Indianapolis Star.

Preliminary plans were made for the organization of a legislative press club in Indianapolis.

PAPER CHANGES NAME

The Utah Democrat, published in Salt Lake City for several years past, will hereafter be known as the Utah Statesman.

LEGAL AD BILL KILLED

The Pennsylvania state legislature this week defeated a bill which would have permitted county advertising to have been published in both English and German newspapers. The vote against the measure in the house was 80 to 70. The sponsor of the bill said he wanted county advertisements published in weekly newspapers as well as in dailies. In some counties in Pennsylvania there are German weeklies but no German dailies, and on this account the two language proposal was arranged.

Business Offers

EDITOR & PUBLISHER Classified Advertising Information

TRANSIENT RATES

SITUATIONS (Cash with Order)

1 Time — .40 per line
3 Times — .30 per line

ALL OTHER CLASSIFICATIONS (Cash with Order)

1 Time — .60 per line
4 Times — .55 per line
13 Times — .50 per line
26 Times — .45 per line

White space charge at same rate per line per insertion as earned by frequency of insertion. Minimum Contract space, three lines. Special rates quoted for 52 insertions. The Editor & Publisher reserves the right to classify, edit or reject any advertisement.

ADVERTISING

General Promotion

If You Want More Local Advertising put us to work for you selling our "Worthwhile" Features. Write F. G. Hogan Syndicate, Lemcke Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind., or Kane, Pa.

Increase Your Local Linage with a weekly special page. No cost to publisher. Personal supervision. Let's show you. Interview anytime New York or within 200 miles. C-534, Editor & Publisher.

Supplies

Shading Sheets for Art work and Benday effects. Bourges Service, Inc., 144 West 32nd St., New York.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

Brokers

Omar D. Gray, Sturgeon, Mo., writes: "I have $3,500,000 in newspaper property for sale in 41 states. Send for printed list. I need few more dailies and weeklies in Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Oregon, Washington, California.

Real Opportunity for Quick Buyer—Weekly paper and job plant, Long Island; weekly and job plant, New Jersey; both within fifteen miles of new York. Price low, terms easy. J. B. Shale, Times Building, New York.

Offering Fine Weekly—Only paper in county seat town of south-central state, nets $4,000 annually and gaining steadily. Machine equipped plant. All for $14,000 and only $5,000 cash necessary. Prop. 1509x. The H. F. Henrichs Agency, Litchfield, Ill.

Offering High Class Daily in exclusive mid-West city of 15,000, yielding owners for time and investment about $25,000 a year. Growing, progressive, healthful field. Offer includes valuable building. Complete with $10,000 good accounts for only $165,000. Terms available on part. Prop. 892x. The H. F. Henrichs Agency, Litchfield, Ill.

Trade Journal, established, in good condition, capable of expansion. Gross about $20,000. Asking price, $17,500 cash. Harris-Dibble Co., 345 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Newspapers for Sale

$10,000 Cash buys fourth interest and secretary-treasurer's position with commercial printing plant and semi-weekly, showing consistent good profits last five years. Exclusive field, rapidly growing town 11,000, near Los Angeles, Calif. C-527, Editor & Publisher.

Controlling Interest in afternoon daily; now grossing about $40,000. Town of about 10,000 in border Southern state. All equipment new. C-516, Editor & Publisher.

Weekly Newspaper for sale in exclusive field in central state. Netting approximately $20,000 annually. Address C-537, Editor & Publisher.

Weekly Newspaper, established more than 30 years. County seat town of about 7,500. Best town of size in South. Capable man can earn $7,000.00 to $8,000.00 annually. No ordinary proposition but golden opportunity for right man. Business on solid foundation. $22,000.00—$10,000.00 cash, balance convenient terms. C-546, Editor & Publisher.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNIT

Newspapers Wanted

Newspaper Wanted—A newspaper man more than twenty years' connection on mi metropolitan daily, wishes to lease dail weekly newspaper or operate it on a sharing basis. Might consider a partne arrangement or purchase of property. All essary references as to my character and ity will be furnished. In answering please full details. Address C-519, Editor & Publ

CIRCULATION

Promotion

Circulation—When quick, additional circu coverage becomes necessary, remember tha twenty years in this one line of endeav your proof against experimenting. Wri wire Pacific Coast Circulation Service, Block, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Circulation Builders—Blair & Austin, 1504 tre ave., Reading, Penn. Originators of S manship Club Campaigns.

Mr. Publisher—Large, small, Daily or Wee let us build your circulation by experi Circulation Builders. Carolina Contest Durham, N. C.

Superior Circulation Builders—The W. S. dall Company, 104 North Bailey Ave., L ville, Kentucky. The circulation-building ganization that has set the standard for ag sive, successful circulation campaigns for n twenty years.

The World's Largest Circulation Building ganization—The only circulation-building ice in Newspaperdom furnishing publi affidavits of the exact results of its campaign. The Charles Partlowe Com Occidental Building, Indianapolis.

Wire Our Pottery Direct for supplies to a dish offer. Results—Low cost. The Alt China Co., Carrollton, Ohio.

15,000 New Subscribers on New York news in 7 weeks. New plan of campaign des and operated by former publisher with lishers' interests in view. Hudson Del Co., 1420 Bryant Park Bldg., New York.

Special Service

Local Appeal—Are you publishing a daily? you wish to add snap, sparkle, and pun its local appeal? Then you'll be interest this different but sound plan for incre that valuable factor. Local appeal att advertisers' dollars as well as new circul Here is a definite plan for that progr paper, large or small, which is seeking to prestige via the profitable route of incr local appeal. B-972, Editor & Publisher.

EDITORIAL

Syndicate Features

Are Girls Growing Bolder is just one articles by Mrs. Aimee Semple McPhers her series of daily discussions on pro confronting American Home Life today. fifty papers have already ordered. Imm release. Daily releases, about 1500 words llustrated. Matrices or photos furnished copy. Rush your order. Graphic Syndi Inc., 25 City Hall Place, New York.

Syndicate Features Wanted

Syndicated Editorial Service wanted, su for small daily newspaper; preferably by York state or eastern syndicate. B-996, & Publisher.

EMPLOYMENT

Help Wanted

Advertising Manager for a well estab metropolitan paper. Population 1,000,000. be well recommended. Good prospects first class man with organizing ability. in strict confidence, giving full partic Box 362, Room 200, Times Building, New

(Continued on following page)

Supplies—Equipment

Modern
Composing Room Furniture

as made by us will speed up production and reduce costs—a real saving in your Pay Roll. Are you interested? If so, consult your regular dealer in printers' supplies or write us direct.

Do it now!

HAMILTON MFG. CO.
TWO RIVERS, WIS.

Keep your message before your clients and prospects. The EDITOR & PUBLISHER is your ever-present salesman.

INVISIBLE EXPENSE

When your blankets are old and worn out, they cause poor printing and many delays, due to the sheets breaking.

Complaints from readers on late delivery and loss of sales.

Rebates to advertisers for poor printing.

Excessive waste paper and extra expense for power and light.

The saving in these items of Invisible Expense for one week will buy a new set of blankets.

You cannot afford to lower your efficiency by false economy.

New England Newspaper Supply Co.

Worcester, Mass., U. S. A.
Cable Address NENSCO, Worcester.

Employment—Equipment—Services

EMPLOYMENT

Help Wanted

sing Man, experienced, wanted; one who ite copy and sell it. An opportunity. d-Mercury, New Bedford, Mass.

sing Director—A large newspaper, in an nt Eastern city, is considering the ap- nt of an Advertising Director. Appli- with information as to age, experience racter will be given prompt considera- held as strictly confidential. Address re of Editor & Publisher.

ion Man wanted to take charge of city on. One who is able to promote and circulation. Must be familiar with mail and street promotion. Able to his department and get results. Thor- understand A. B. C. Audit. Should ch ability in his own department that ition of circulation manager will be him. Opportunity for a young, am- adroit man who desires a future and have full responsibility in his depart- Morning paper situated in mid-west at offers exceptional advantage for n. Full information as to salary, ref- etc., in first letter, or no consideration pplication. C-528, Editor & Publisher.

on Manager, experienced, wanted to nplete charge of all single, direct-by- scriptions. Publication morning, eve- d Sunday. Location, Middle West. be directly under Circulation Manager. able to assume responsibility, aggres- th the proper initiative to do things in ay. The man for this place must be y strong in building up attractive sales hat will bring results, and be able to large number of solicitors on a com- basis. Give age and experience along erences, present and past employers. ether married or single and salary ex- C-517, Editor & Publisher.

of experience and maturity wanted in ld who can invest at least $5,000 and part owner and editorial head of paper sized Northern city. Address B-979, Publisher.

er Man wanted, possessing editorial o unite with new incorporation, capi- at $100,000 or upward, to establish a per in a field having unusual potenti- Sufficient capital desired to assure per- erest in the development to its fullest For personal appointment during A. Convention, address C-531, Editor her.

litor or assistant to city editor on live, paper. Must be energetic, peppy and ed. A man with ideas, who can ndle copy, make up, think up assign- picture ideas, etc. C-522, Editor & er Men wanted, with clean and suc- record as reporters or on desk jobs. or experience in advertising or selling We have several openings for field and on inside jobs in connection with cet survey work. Permanent employ- d opportunity for men who make the Long hours—hard work—but crammed terest and experience. Give full details yourself by letter. R. O. Eastman, ited, Cleveland, Ohio.

Wanted—If you are a salesman call- ne newspapers, write for details of our n which will net a real salesman $100.00 weekly. State experience, ter- vered, and present line in first letter. salesmen will find our line easy to d one not conflicting with their pres- Address C-515, Editor & Publisher.

Situations Wanted

ng Solicitor, copywriter; 5 years' pub- ecretary, display man, classified man- motion and retail store manager. Age , Christian, reliable. Now employed. condary to prospects. Write or phone. litor & Publisher for interview in New ing convention.

ng Salesman for small daily or pro- weekly. Selling against strong com- as demonstrated ability. Desires po- at offers opportunity to grow with larried. References. B-993, Editor & ng Salesman, Classified Manager, at ccount consolidation. Age 34, well 7 years' experience, last three on aper with difficult competition, but n wonderful results. Want opening with future. $50 minimum. Best . Wire collect or write C. E. Hutch- Laura St., Jacksonville, Fla.

EMPLOYMENT

Situations Wanted

Advertising Manager—12 years' experience on state's now leading newspaper. Available upon reasonable notice. Hopes to make connection insuring conservative growth. 45 years old, married. References. B-953, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Man, special page and special edition experience. Have copyrighted pages that will add prestige to your paper. Interview in New York or at your paper. C-533, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising—Good organizer, experienced large and small dailies, display and classified. A "first" record for 1926 classified in large eastern city. Prefer East. At convention. Tel. Spring 2825, 6:00 P. M. or C-535, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Manager, seeks place on live daily offering minimum salary $75.00 week; worth $100.00 week to any publisher in America. Possess executive ability. Excellent record as business-producer and reliability. Write "Adv. Mgr." Box 376, Beaumont, Texas.

Advertising Manager or Solicitor on small daily. East preferred. Can produce copy for local advertisers that results in increased linage. Young, alert, energetic. Married. Looking for permanency. B-994, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Idea Man—Successful creating sales plans, visualizations and layouts; writes copy for trade papers, magazines and general advertising literature; open for negotiations. C-547, Editor & Publisher.

Business Manager or Assistant to Publisher—Where is the busy publisher who wishes to turn over the details of newspaper management? The writer has the necessary education and experience on the major newspaper functions to be of exceptional value. Salary moderate. A hard worker with excellent references. Go anywhere but prefer small paper. C-530, Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager seeks change. Able, energetic, enthusiastic, circulation manager, 31 years of age, desires change. Good record. Best references, including all past employers. Have added 2,000 in present connection in last ten months in spite of hard obstacles. Get the revenue and circulation. Keep things running smoothly. Twenty years' circulation experience covering from carrier boy to circulation manager. Good reason for desiring change. Address, in confidence, C-523, Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager wishes to make change. At present employed on New York City daily as circulation promotion manager. Can furnish best reference. C-538, Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager seeks change. At present employed on N. Y. State daily. Past record will prove ability. Substantial reference. C-542, Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager—Contemplating change, desires to form new connection in city or town under 100.000 population. C-525, Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager—Have been assistant and Promotion Manager on live daily. College education. Experienced accountant. Developer of carrier, home delivery system, dealers, and streets with remarkably low cost. Desire position of Circulation Manager on Paper 8,000-20,000 anywhere. Salary moderate with opportunity for increase with results. C-529 Editor & Publisher.

Desk Man, telegraph editor, copy reader, experienced, desires position on Southern afternoon daily. Address B-914, Editor & Publisher.

Editor—Now employed on metropolitan daily, 15 years' experience in all branches of news and editorial departments of newspapers, desires to connect with Democratic newspaper in South, of which he is native. Testimonials and references furnished. B-987, Editor & Publisher.

Editor with experience covering all desks, reportorial and feature work on metropolitan and small city dailies, desires change to newspaper or publicity field with future; college training; age 30, single. C-543, Editor & Publisher.

Editorial—Man with thorough newspaper experience and four years' unusual training in speedy and sound judgment of news seeks chance as managing editor. Now rewrite man on widely known daily. C-536, Editor & Publisher.

Editor-Manager who doubled net earnings of daily, open for position May 16. Nominal salary with bonus acceptable. Address C-539, Editor & Publisher.

Editorial Writer whose claims to unusual ability can best be presented in a budget of published work desires to establish contact with interested publisher. A writer who has power to combine good literature with opinion. Now advantageously employed and only interested in bigger opportunity. C-545, Editor & Publisher.

Editor—Young, but mature in experience, with successful fifteen-year record, wishes to change from powerful metropolitan morning paper to afternoon paper in town of 100,000. Am a university man and married. Let me show you what I have done and what I will do for your circulation and advertising through editorial magnetism. Will start at $5,000 or on circulation building bonus basis. C-541, Editor & Publisher.

EMPLOYMENT

Situations Wanted

Editorial Writer, college graduate, ten years' experience. Specializes modern literature, politics, drama, human interest. Young, with personality and ability. Wishes permanent location. C-510, Editor & Publisher.

Experienced Newspaper Woman—Book and art reviews, feature stories, M. S. reader, assistant to editor. Wants position with newspaper, trade magazine or other publisher in New York City. College, traveled, knowledge of French, Spanish. B-977, Editor & Publisher.

Former Sunday Editor wants work as special feature writer newspaper or magazine; handles camera. Samples, references. C-544, Editor & Publisher.

In Any Capacity—I am a cub. I want a job. I don't know it all and am willing to learn. 25 years old. Will go anywhere and do anything that will produce a living while I am getting a chance at a practical newspaper education. C-532, Editor & Publisher.

Manager seeks situation. Able take direct charge all departments, increase advertising to maximum, develop circulation to limit, operate plant economically, handle business details systematically, furnish owner with daily and monthly reports, write editorials, handle newsroom and produce Metropolitan paper. Prefer paper not on satisfactory paying basis. Can build business without adding expense and reduce costs without injury to paper. Can always make satisfactory net for owner. In former situation reduced payroll from $4,000 weekly to $2,300 and from 167 persons to 73; changed paper which was losing $60,000 annually to a profitable investment in less than a year. High grade man, hard worker, able to successfully cope with keen competition and put paper on profitable basis regardless of difficulties. References cover many years' successful work and will stand close investigation. Have been employed on large and small papers. Address B-881, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor, thoroughly capable and experienced, who can give the kind of paper you want. Can handle men to get the most from them. Present time engaged as manager big paper but resigning June 1st. Married, college graduate, 32 years old, will go anywhere. Real opportunity is offered for advancement. Address C-521, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor, thoroughly experienced. Young, married, educated. Best references. Start at $60. C-540. Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor—35 years old. seeks change because of impending consolidation. Willing to come for interview at my own expense. Sterling executive with record that will bear closest investigation. Would like to take burden from some ageing publisher. C-524, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor small city, wants desk or street work in bigger city. B-998, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor, thoroughly trained executive, 42, now on one of largest newspapers in New York City, for family reasons offers services to evening daily in smaller city. B-995, Editor & Publisher.

Mechanical Superintendent—Press Room Superintendent—Several years' experience in all forms of newspaper press work; knowledge of stereotyping, a working knowledge of other departments. Am 30 years old, a Mechanical Engineer by training and a univefsity graduate. Member of Web Pressman Union. Have the experience, training and ability to render and can guarantee any publisher efficient and satisfactory service in either position. C-500, Editor & Publisher.

Newspaper Man, thoroughly trained, wants chance to travel. United States preferred. Press agent, promotion or special feature stories. Experienced in camera work. Married, references. B-978, Editor & Publisher.

Newspaper Executive, capable of handling entire property and developing it to the best possibilities. Can furnish references and able to come at once. For full particulars, Address B-992, Editor & Publisher.

Newspaper and Publicity Woman, experienced, and accredited with "It," desires steady position on daily or weekly paper. Free, white, and 27. Energetic, responsible, and experienced in music, club, society, art, dramatic and religious news, and in campaign and special publicity. References in Chicago and in Oklahoma City. Available. Ready immediately. B-959, Editor & Publisher.

Real Reporter—Not a novice, but seasoned man, experienced on politics, sports and general assignment. Wouldn't have desk job. Know news and can write it. Married, college graduate, nine years' experience, will go anywhere. Free May 20. Write C-520, Editor & Publisher.

Reporter and Editor, capable, under thirty, wants to write any publisher who is in the market for loyalty, industry and experience. References and specimens of work freely offered. A permanent connection sought but special work of any kind considered. C-526, Editor & Publisher.

Reporter, 24, three years' varied experience, wants job. C-514, Editor & Publisher.

MECHANICAL

Equipment for Sale

Complete Printing Plant, suitable for daily paper, available at once on account of suspension of publication of New York Commercial. Address Journal of Commerce, 32 Broadway, New York City, for full particulars.

Duplex 24-page Tubular Press, with full stereotype equipment, for sale. Will be available in late summer. Now in use by publication moving into new building with new plant. For full information, address Journal of Commerce, 32 Broadway, New York.

Miehle No. 1, Duplex 10-page, Goss Comet, Duplex Angle-bar, and Stereotype Presses from 16 pages to Octuple capacity. A complete line of general equipment for weekly and daily newspapers. Griffiths Publishers' Exchange, Inc., 154 Nassau St., New York.

For Sale—4 or 5 Cutler-Hammer linotype pots complete; 200-250 volt A.C. 60 cycle, 1500 watts. The Daily Pantagraph, Bloomington, Ill.

Job Presses, Paper Cutters, Wire Stitchers, etc.—A complete line. Overhauled and guaranteed machines at bargain prices. Easy terms. Hoffman Type & Engraving Co., 114 E. 13th St., N. Y. City.

Linotypes: (save $1,400 each) Model 21, No. 32549; also Model 14, No. 27313, with motors; in perfect condition; can be seen running and you can thoroughly test them. Practically new machines; sell $3,000 each. Call, see them. Scientific Review, 206 E. 19th St., New York. Telephone, Gramercy 5733.

Printers and Bookbinders equipment, machinery, type, supplies, Kelly presses, cut cost material, send for revised pre-used machine sheet. Conner Fendler Branch A.T.F. Co., 96 Beekman St., New York City.

Used Goss Matt Roller for wet mats only, for sale cheap. The Goss Printing Press Co., 1535 So. Paulina St., Chicago, Ill.

Newspaper Properties
Bought, Sold and Appraised
All negotiations confidential
PALMER, DEWITT & PALMER
Business Established in 1899
350 Madison Ave., New York
Pacific Coast Representative:
M. O. Moore, 515 N. Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif.

CONSOLIDATION
The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.
We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.
HARWELL & CANNON
Times Bldg. New York

WE CONNECT THE WIRES
OUR MR. E. S. FERNALD will be at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York during the Publishers' Convention and will be glad to make appointments.
FERNALD'S EXCHANGE, INC.
Security Bldg. Springfield, Mass

DOLLAR $ $ $ $ PULLERS

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

THE highway departments of most states are able to furnish publishers with maps of the various state road systems. Using the map as the "spotlight" it's easy to sell a special motoring edition. The Franklin (Ind.) Evening Star recently "cashed in" on this feature.—Davis O. Vandivier.

At this time of the year folks are beginning to think about fixing up the summer cottage or camp for the opening of the season. Start a section of advertising under the heading of "For That Summer Place" and get the dealers who have stock that interests such buyers to advertise their wares in this section.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

At the present time the laundry owners are fighting with electric washing machine manufacturers and dealers the country over. Get a special on the merits of their methods from local laundries and also gets the arguments the washing machine dealers offer. Then run an article on each subject on different days, enclosing the article with advertisements of the business organizations concerned.—Paul M. Wildrick, Addison, N. Y.

The Wisconsin State Journal of Madison publishes each month a digest of supreme court decisions within a few days after they have been handed down. An attorney of the city prepares the digest. Lawyers are informed that the digest may be obtained in the State Journal 30 to 60 days in advance of any other source. If your newspaper is in the capital city, such a digest may bring a substantial addition in circulation.—Ruben Levin, Milwaukee, Wis.

Suggest to some of the stores writing their own ads that they let their employes write these ads. The heads of departments and their staffs will develop initiative and new ideas that will stimulate more interest in advertising, and the store may take space to announce to the public that its employes are writing the ads.—C. M. L., Seattle, Wash.

The "Payroll Builders of Racine" is the title of a page co-operative advertisement published periodically in the Racine (Wis.) Journal-News. Merchants and manufacturers contribute.—R. L.

A Chicago paper recently sponsored a 1c sale on used cars. By this novel bit of advertising they obtained two pages of used car advertising from dealers who do little or no advertising otherwise. The plan was to announce a 1c sale to last but four days. During that time the buyer could purchase a $75 used car for $50.01 or $49.99. Regardless of the price on the car the sale price always had that 1c difference. Try this stunt in your paper.—C. E. Pellissier.

The Columbia (Mo.) Evening Missourian, published by students in the School of Journalism, University of Missouri, runs a semi-annual fashion revue for one of the local drygoods stores. Each revue consists of a series of six half-page advertisements featuring the photographs of well-known co-eds, or students from one of the two girls' colleges in Columbia, wearing the latest creations selected from the stock of the store.

The models pose against a dark background, so the newspaper cuts will be clear and distinct. Students make cuts of the pictures in the photo-engraving laboratory of the School of Journalism.

One picture is run as the feature of an advertisement each Friday until the revue is complete. The merchant keys his window display to this advertising by building a window trim each Friday around the framed original photograph, with the actual garment displayed beside it.—James E. Daugherty.

found, the afflicted ones were with n children. In others, extra work w quired. Children who had never s a word were taught to talk and learned to "hear" through their tips.—Jack Sedwick.

The police reporter for the Dav (Iowa) Democrat has made it a to jot down all the criminal and slang he hears about the court roo station. A first-rate column stor sulted a week or so ago, made these words with their definition how they came into being.—De Ar Davenport, Ia.

"They Say This" is the title of ture published daily in the Mila (Wis.) Journal, in which opinion pressed at the moment by city o and well-known citizens, are printed out comment. Reporters on the submit the paragraph interviews, consist of anything the person viewed may want to speak on.—J Levin.

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

WHAT do the theatre men of your city think of the Theater Padlock Law just passed by the New York State legislature and signed by Governor Alfred E. Smith? What would your theater manager do in a case of immoral play presentation, offensive vaudeville, etc? What's his general notion of censorship? Does he preview shows and acts?—Oxie.

Here is an idea for a little feature of the "Competitive Essay" or "Letter-To-Editor" type that is different. Ask readers to discuss "My Funniest Dream." A sister of the writer once dreamed that she saw her mother, a woman of rather more than medium size, "tearing" down the street on a match box! Others have had equally funny dreams. What are they?—Fred L. W. Bennett.

A ten-year-ago war column from a local angle could be made quite interesting from now on. It could be any length, from a few short items to a column or two, without losing punch. The veterans now are reaching the reminiscence stage. —J. Harry Jones.

The fishing season will soon open. Regardless of what part of the country you are located in you have among your readers many enthusiastic fishermen. Why not write up a feature story devoted to fish and fishing. Tell about the fish caught in local waters, their habits, the laws governing the catching, photos of them, etc.—C. E. Pellissier.

A good Sunday feature, carrying a five-column layout of art, was worked up around Dayton public school classes for deaf children. In some subjects, it was

Largest Newspaper West of Chicago

500,000 Copies DAILY

The KANSAS CITY STAR

South America's Greatest Newspap

"Buenos Aires IS the Argenti Republic"—

"If you introduce an article in Bue Aires it is introduced in the wh of the Argentine."

"We know that LA PRENSA a larger circulation than all local papers put together, a that this circulation is amon the very best class."

(Extract from letter written by the distributor in Argentina of important American products, urging his principals to place their advertising in LA PRENSA—)

National sales and distribution Argentina can quickly be attai by advertising in LA PRENSA.

JOSHUA B. POWER Exclusive Advertising Representat 250 Park Avenue New Yo

IN some cities, the "leading" newspaper may have merely a few hundred more circulation than its competitor. The Press has 40,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two evening newspapers combined—and 35,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two Sunday newspapers combined.

THE PITTSBURGH PRESS

A Scripps-Howard Newspaper
Member of the A. B. C.

The World

These two newspapers offer the most powerful all-day service in New York available as a unit under a single contact. The 600,000 DAILY WORLD — EVENING WORLD readers constitute a highly concentrated force to be reckoned with in any campaign designed to effect distribution in Greater New York.

The Evening World

Pulitzer Building, New York
Tribune Tower, Chicago

Away Ahead!

2,196,676 - 1925
3,699,155 - 1926

1,502,479 - Gain

The New York Evening Graphic shows greater gain in lineage (41%) than any other New York paper.

IT WILL PAY YOU T HIRE TRAINED MEN

Ambitious young men, schoo in every branch of the newspa or magazine field, may be secu to fill that opening on your p lication by simply making y wants known to the Person Bureau of Sigma Delta Chi, p fessional journalistic fraterni

No Charge To Employe

Avail yourself of this free se ice to replenish your staff wh ever the occasion requires. W or wire John G. Earhart, Exchange Ave., Chicago, Ill., he will put you in touch with right man.

They are always able to buy—

in

NEW ENGLAND—

Every now and then you hear reckless statements made that New England is fast losing its leadership as one of the most important industrial centers in the Country. Some irresponsible person will remark that its textile mills are moving South or that it is losing out in the shoe industry, etc. Yet, when you delve into the statistical records you find that not only is it maintaining its leadership, but it is forging ahead in every line of industry. For example:

New England still leads in the production of shoes, It is still the most important market for rubber goods, wool, etc., and as far as textiles are concerned, it will take many years before the South even begins to manufacture the quality and quantity of textiles that this section of the Country produces today.

You will find that New England's savings deposits are increasing annually and it has increased its productive wealth two-fold in the past 10 years.

These facts are conclusive that the people in New England are not only able to buy, but every test of living standard will prove that they rank well above the Nation's average.

This prosperous market should be on every national advertisers list and if you want any special facts pertaining to this market, the newspapers listed below will gladly supply you with them.

MASSACHUSETTS—Population, 3,852,356

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
leboro Sun	(E)	5,497	.03	.03
ton Globe	(M&E)	278,988	.50	.50
ton Globe	(S)	325,234	.55	.55
ton Transcript	(E)	38,245	.20	.20
ton Post	(M)	394,851	.60	.60
ton Post	(S)	350,627	.55	.55
hburg Sentinel	(E)	13,069	.06	.045
erhill Gazette	(E)	16,061	.065	.05
n Item	(E)	17,004	.065	.05
ell Courier-Citizen and vening Leader	(M&E)	21,310	.07	.07
r Bedford Standard Mercury	(M&E)	32,787	.10	.10
r Bedford Sunday Standard	(S)	28,056	.10	.10
th Adams Transcript.	(E)	10,427	.05	.04
sfield Eagle	(E)	16,264	.05	.05
m News	(E)	21,495	.09	.07
nton Gazette	(E)	9,414	.045	.035
cester Telegram-Gazette	(M&E)	99,207	.28	.25
cester Sunday Telegram	(S)	52,740	.21	.18

CONNECTICUT—Population, 1,380,631

	Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
*Bridgeport Post-Telegram (E&M)	44,446	.15	.15
*Bridgeport Post (S)	21,910	.10	.10
*Hartford Courant (M)	34,725	.09	.09
*Hartford Courant (S)	57,795	.13	.13
††Hartford Times (E)	56,077	.13	.13
Middletown Press (E)	3,560	.05	.03
†New Haven Register..(E&S)	48,076	.145	.135
New London Day (E)	12,293	.06	.045
††Norwich Bulletin (M)	12,842	.07	.05
*Norwalk Hour (E)	6,196	.04	.04
††South Norwalk Sentinel..(E)	5,320	.04	.03
*Stamford Advocate (E)	10,619	.05	.04
*Waterbury Republican-American (M&E)	24,018	.08	.08
*Waterbury Republican...(S)	15,214	.08	.08

MAINE—Population, 768,014

Portland Press-Herald Express, Sun & Telegram....(M&E)	59,356	.20	.16

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Population, 443,683

Concord Monitor-Patriot..(E)	5,773	.0375	.025
††Keene Sentinel (E)	3,980	.036	.023
Manchester Union Leader (M&E)	32,585	.15	.12

RHODE ISLAND—Population, 604,397

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
††Newport Daily News....	(E)	6,249	.0336	.0293
Pawtucket Times	(E)	28,188	.08	.08
Providence Bulletin	(E)	71,443	.20	(B).27
Providence Journal	(M)	38,599	.12	(B).27
Providence Journal	(S)	74,009	.20	.20
*Providence News	(E)	28,189	.08	.08
*Providence Tribune	(E)	21,808	.10	.09
Westerly Sun	(E&S)	5,273	.03	.03
Woonsocket Call	(E)	14,880	.05	.05

VERMONT—Population, 352,428

Barre Times	(E)	7,282	.03	.025
††Bennington Banner	(E)	3,161	.03	.015
††Brattleboro Reformer	(E)	3,520	.035	.02
Burlington Free Press...	(M)	14,265	.05	.05
*Rutland Herald	(M)	11,539	.05	.05
††St. Johnsbury Caledonian-Record	(E)	4,061	.03	.02

* A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
 A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, March 31, 1927.
† Government Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
†† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.
(B) Combination rate Daily Journal and Eve. Bulletin.

Meat With His Mustard

WHO pays the Publishers' Bill?

Not the man who tosses you a few pennies for hastily-scanned headlines and comics, — but the reader who believes in your newspaper. He enjoys the frills, but he wants beef with his mustard.

He pays you in confidence backed by his purchasing power.

He is a specialist. He knows whether your writers know what they're talking about. Finance may be his forte; he may be interested in Mexico or China; perhaps he is an expert on national affairs, or business, or sports, or fashions. Anyhow he knows. He can check up on your staff.

If he has confidence in your news columns, he has confidence in the advertisements. He buys advertised goods. The advertiser pays the publisher.

How can you gain his confidence and profit by his support?

By printing a paper staffed with men who know.

The Consolidated Press Association was organized to furnish you with that kind of a staff. They are specialists on sports, finance, fashions, business, politics and foreign affairs written for men who know about sports, finance, fashions, business, politics and foreign affairs.

C. P. A. writers build confidence. Confidence builds support from readers who believe in your advertising columns as well as your news columns. These readers pay the publishers' bills.

The Consolidated Press Association

Executive Offices, Evening Star Building, Washington, D. C.

New York	Chicago	San Francisco	Paris
Eighth Floor	Third Floor	Third Floor	Fourth Floor
World Building	Daily News Building	Bulletin Building	19 Rue d'Antin

CONVENTION NUMBER

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

1884 The Oldest Publishers' and Advertisers' Journal in America 1927

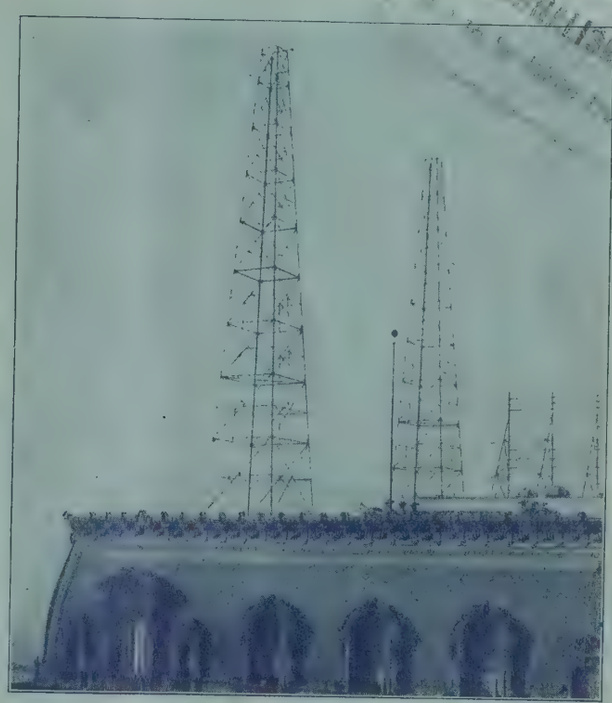
MEMBER A.B.C.

SUITE 1700 TIMES BUILDING, NEW YORK
42ND STREET AND BROADWAY.

MEMBER A.B.P.

Original second class entry The Journalist, March 24, 1884; Newspaperdom, March, 1892; The Editor & Publisher, December 7, 1901; The Editor & Publisher and Journalist, October 30, 1909; Advertising, February 7, 1925; Revised entry, Editor & Publisher, May 11, 1916, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879.

Vol. 59. No. 49 NEW YORK, APRIL 30, 1927 By Mail in Advance $4, U. S. A. $4.50, Canada; $5. Foreign 10c Per Copy



All-Day Broadcasting—Finer Programs
Leadership in National Radio Advertising

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has taken over the complete management of station WQJ, owned by the Calumet Baking Powder Company, and now operates this station in conjunction with The Daily News station WMAQ, with exclusive 24-hour rights to the wave length 447.5 meters.

The operation of two of America's foremost stations with a unified all-day program is welcomed by Chicago people and the radio public generally as another great advance typical of the five-year record of The Daily News in promoting the interests of radio.

WMAQ, the first newspaper-owned radio station in Chicago, equipped now with its third sending apparatus, has earned a reputation for fine programs that will be richly enhanced by the added facilities of station WQJ. The two stations are members of the chain of the National Broadcasting Company. The program schedule throughout will be one of highest quality and interest.

By advancing every interest of radio, on the air and in its columns, The Daily News has attained a popularity with Chicago fans reflected in its leadership six days a week in national radio advertising—it is the most effective daily medium for radio manufacturers and dealers in reaching the Chicago public.

Arrangements to participate in the broadcasting schedule of The Chicago Daily News may be made by addressing Director, WMAQ, The Chicago Daily News, 15 North Wells St., Chicago, Ill.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

Member of The 100,000 Group of American Cities

Advertising Representatives:	NEW YORK J. B. Woodward 110 E. 42d St.	CHICAGO Woodward & Kelly 360 N. Michigan Ave.	DETROIT Woodward & Kelly Fine Arts Building	SAN FRANCISCO C. Geo. Krogness 253 First National Bank Bldg.

*Average Daily Net Paid Circulation for February, 1927—447,762

The New Publication Building of the

NEW YORK EVENING GRAPHIC

the fast-growing New York Evening Tabloid Newspaper will be equipped with

Scott "Straight-Unit" PRESSES

Courtesy of N. Y. Evening Graphic

This installation of 12 Units and 4 pairs of Folders is equipped — in addition to the many high-class features of construction of the Modern Scott "Straight-Unit" Presses —with extra ink distribution, tabloid cross-association, non-smutting folding devices and automatic web tension control, all specially designed for the production of Tabloid Newspapers at higher speeds than is now practiced.

Scott "Straight-Unit" and "Multi-Unit" Presses are capable of running regularly, without undue wear, and producing good printing, at the highest practical speeds. They are the ONLY Presses regularly rated at 400 R.P.M. and capable of delivering this speed whenever it is desired. If you want Speed, you don't have to experiment. Scott Presses are doing it.

WALTER SCOTT & COMPANY

Manufacturers of

"Multi-Unit" and "Straight-Unit"
NEWSPAPER PRESSES

Main Office and Factory, Plainfield, N. J.

New York Office: 1457 Broadway at 42nd St. — Chicago Office: Monadnock Block

Baltimore "takes" them regularly

¶ Baltimore families need no physician to prescribe for them the newspapers to "take."

¶ They have found it pleasant and advantageous to follow the family prescription popular in these parts and to "take" the Sunpapers regularly—before breakfast and throughout the day on week days and in one heaping big "spoonful" on Sunday.

¶ Baltimoreans find it easy to take this "prescription" regularly, because the Sun Carriers deliver the Sunpapers direct to their homes, rain or shine, week days and Sunday, seven days a week.

¶ The Sunpapers provide a mental stimulus to their readers, and at the same time they have exceptional tonic properties for the advertisers who utilize their columns. The advertiser who uses the Sunpapers consistently is bound to build up his sales in Baltimore!

Average Net Paid Circulation for Month of March, 1927

Daily (M. & E.) . . .	254,962
Sunday	200,117

A Gain of 2,363 Daily and 9,433 Sunday Over March, 1926

JOHN B. WOODWARD
Bowery Bank Bldg.,
110 E. 42d St., New York

GUY S. OSBORN
360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago

C. GEORGE KROGNESS
First National Bank Bldg.,
San Francisco

Everything in Baltimore Revolves Around

THE MORNING  EVENING SUN SUNDAY

Baltimoreans Don't Say "Newspaper"—They Say "SUNpaper"

In Pittsburgh!

The most complete and most economical coverage is by the use of THE PITTSBURGH POST and THE PITTSBURGH SUN

FOR THE SIX MONTHS ENDED MARCH 31, 1927, THE SWORN AVERAGE CIRCULATION OF

The Pittsburgh Post

DAILY WAS - - - - - - - - - 159,883

SUNDAY WAS - - - - - - - - - 204,737

These figures represent a new high mark for an April sworn statement for the DAILY POST and a new high mark for any period for the SUNDAY POST. THE POST continues its overwhelming lead in the morning field.

BOTH PAPERS MADE UNPRECEDENTED GAINS FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1927

THE DAILY POST gained - - 16,144

THE SUNDAY POST gained - - 20,094

This record of gain is significant of the constant growth of THE POST. For the past twelve years it has consistently advanced—having increased its morning circulation more than 300% and its Sunday circulation almost as much.

Pittsburgh's Popular, Steadily Growing Afternoon Paper Is

THE PITTSBURGH SUN

It is Pittsburgh's complete, clean, free and fearless afternoon newspaper, representing the type of paper that naturally finds a welcome in the home of refinement and culture—the inner circle of the splendid average American family. The Sun's average circulation for six months was 81,378.

New Flat Rate, on Foreign Advertising: Daily Post, 26c; Sunday Post, 28c; Evening Sun, 20c

THE COMBINED AVERAGE CIRCULATION OF ONE ISSUE OF

THE PITTSBURGH POST, THE PITTSBURGH SUN and THE SUNDAY POST

FOR THE PAST SIX MONTHS WAS

445,998

And the Combined Issues of These Newspapers Every Seven Days

AVERAGED 1,652,303 COPIES

Not Equaled by the Output of Any Other Newspaper Plant in Pittsburgh

PUBLISHERS' REPRESENTATIVES

LORENZEN & THOMPSON, INC.

NEW YORK, 19 W. 44th St. CHICAGO, Peoples' Gas Bldg. SAN FRANCISCO, 507 Montgomery St.

Newspaper Advertising is Market Advertising

IT used to be the idea that advertising in a newspaper would cover only the city in which the newspaper is published.

Today, the newspaper serves not only its own city, but a vast outside territory which is tributary to the city itself, and which is accessible and closely related, principally because of good roads, bus lines and the almost universal ownership of automobiles.

Thus an entire market is covered by daily newspaper advertising rather than a city alone.

No advertising medium reaches as regularly and as effectively the homes of an individual market as the newspaper.

Hence, a market study, analysis and survey is always important and interesting in order that the fullest benefits may be derived from a newspaper campaign.

We are the national advertising representatives of twenty-four progressive newspapers located in prosperous and responsive markets.

We are at all times prepared—in conjunction with their respective service departments—to provide valuable and useful merchandising service and market reports that will assist the manufacturer of any commodity either in opening up the market or in extending distribution already under way.

THE JOHN BUDD COMPANY

National Advertising Representatives of Newspapers

York Chicago St. Louis Atlanta
San Francisco Los Angeles Portland

The IOWA NEWS

Vol. I, No. 1 April 30, 1927 Price, Two Minute

FACTORIES PRODUCE $800,000,000

Iowa Pulling Out of the Mud

STATE PROGRAM SOON IN EFFECT

Complete Chain of Surfaced Roads to be Ready by 1928

When the state legislature, during the session just closed, passed the measure which placed the state highway commission in full charge of the state highway system, the end of mud roads for Iowa became a certainty.

For years, road building and maintenance in Iowa was under county control. As is usually the case with such decentralization, roads were well cared for in some counties, and neglected in others. The result was a checker-board of alternate good and bad.

This situation is entirely changed under provisions of the new law. When the state highway commission takes control of the roads on July 1, a complete state road program is assured.

Under this program, every county seat in Iowa will be connected by surfaced road before the end of next year. In carrying on this work, the state will spend $15,000,000 during 1927 on road construction and maintenance.

Iowa has not been proud of the former condition of her roads. But adoption of the state-wide road program under state control is concrete evidence of her determination to have the excellent road system that would naturally be expected of the state which leads the nation in per capita wealth.

1927 Road Bulletins As We Go to Press

Highways now under complete state control by act of legislature.

State-wide road program provides for network of surfaced roads joining all county seats by end of next year.

State road appropriation for 1927, $15,000,000.

In addition to state work, counties have voted more than $29,000,000 for paving.

COUNTIES VOTING NEW ROAD BONDS

Expect $12,000,000 As Twelve Counties Ballot

In addition to the state road appropriation, Iowa counties have voted road bond issues totaling $29,681,321, of this amount nearly $10,000,000 will be spent for paving primary roads during the next two years.

Fully a dozen more counties will vote bonds for paving in the coming year, which will amount to not less than $12,000,000 more.

SPEED LIMIT PUT UP FIVE NOTCHES

Forty Miles an Hour Becomes Legal Pace for Autos

Everything is moving just a little faster in Iowa these days.

Even the legal speed limit has been increased. You can now "step on it" up to "40-per" on Iowa roads without attracting the unpleasant attention of motorcycle police.

Two years ago Iowans were content to spin along their country roads at 30 miles per hour.

Last year, they became restless, and set the pace at 35 miles per hour.

This year it's up to 40. And, according to unofficial observers, if it keeps on climbing, a lot of Iowans are going to have to buy new cars in case they want to break the law.

Iowa already has more cars per capita than any other state—one gasoline consumer for every 3.44 food consumers.

But still there's enough good road room so that you can take a pleasure drive on Sunday and still get a little pleasure out of it.

Industrial Highlights in Iowa, 1921 to 1926

Output, 1926..$800,000,000
Output, 1921..$503,000,000
Gain, 1921-26..$297,000,000
Employes, 1921 62,000
Employes, 1926 80,000

SIXTEEN PLANTS LARGEST IN U. S.

And Eleven of Iowa's Factories Lead the Entire World

Sixteen Iowa plants are the largest of their kind in the United States. Eleven of these plants are the largest in the world. Iowa has:

The largest cream separator factory in the United States—at Waterloo.

The largest furniture factory in the United States—at Burlington.

The largest basket factory in the United States—at Burlington.

The largest sash and door factory in the United States—at Dubuque.

The largest button machinery factory in the United States—at Muscatine.

The largest macaroni factory in the world—at Davenport.

The largest broom factory in the world—at Davenport.

The largest cereal factory in the world—at Cedar Rapids.

The greatest hydro-electric plant in the world—at Keokuk.

The largest drain tile producing center in the world—at Mason City.

The largest steel furnace factory in the world—at Marshalltown.

The largest stump puller factory in the world—at Centerville.

The largest wall plaster mill in the world—at Fort Dodge.

The greatest motor tractor factory in the world—at Charles City.

The largest creamery and butter factory in the world—at Sioux City.

The greatest steel car factory in the world—at Bettendorf.

IOWA INDUSTRIES GAIN 60 PERCENT IN 5-YEAR PERIOI

Payrolls of 3,500 Plants No Include 80,000 Employes

IOWA AGRICULTURE GAIN

Farm Income for 1926 Bigge Than for 1925

Looking at Iowa as an I dustrial State presents a ne picture to most business me

Iowa's agricultural leade ship is an old story. Fo years, Iowa has stood first i so many lines of agricultur production that the only re contest was for second plac

Yet Iowa's agriculture, su reme throughout the Unite States, has been forced to co cede first place to Iowa i dustry. For, in 1926, the ou put of Iowa farms was just few million dollars behind th output of Iowa factories.

This unusual situation is n due to shrinkage in the valu of Iowa's farm productio The agricultural output Iowa for 1926 totaled $720,000 000, about $20,000,000 ahead 1925 and over $100,000,0 ahead of 1924.

Instead, the situation is du to the sound, steady develo ment of Iowa industry. It a surprise to learn that Iow has 3,500 factories, with total output in 1926 of $80 000,000. Yet this industri development has been entirel logical.

Manufacturers have learne the economy of locating fa tories as near as possible t the sources of raw material

Your breakfast food, for e ample, comes from Iowa field to Quaker Oats at Ceda Rapids, or Kellogg at Dave port, and thence to your tabl

Tomatoes for your catsu come direct to the Heinz plan at Muscatine, and are shippe out from there in bottles, i stead of crates.

In addition to nearness t raw materials, manufacturer appreciate the wholesome li ing conditions, the excellen public school system, and th satisfactory labor situation i Iowa.

These are the forces whic together have drawn so man manufacturers into Iowa du ing the last five years, an which have put the productio of Iowa industry on a par wit that of Iowa agriculture.

ADVERTISERS who understand the Iowa situation know from experience that the consumers' market there cannot be properly sold without the use of newspapers in these twenty-one key cities.

IOWA DAILY PRESS ASSOCIATION

Ames Tribune
Boone News-Republican
Burlington Gazette
Burlington Hawkeye
Cedar Rapids Gazette
Centerville Iowegian & Citizen
Council Bluffs Nonpareil
Davenport Democrat & Leader
Davenport Times
Dubuque Telegraph-Herald
Fort Dodge Messenger & Chronicle
Fort Madison Democrat
Iowa City Press Citizen
Keokuk Gate City
Marshalltown Times-Republican
Mason City Globe-Gazette & Tribune
Muscatine Journal & News-Tribune
Oelwein Register
Oskaloosa Herald
Ottumwa Courier
Sioux City Journal
Sioux City Tribune
Washington Journal
Waterloo Courier
Waterloo Tribune

Compare

6½ Point Intertype Ideal News face enlarged about 10 times.

Like an Old Friend....Intertype Ideal News Face...Wears Well...on the eyes

It is not accident that certain type faces live through decades of time and continuous use. Think of the type families popular twenty-five years ago. How many have survived? The face upon which the design of the Intertype Ideal News face is based is one of the very few.

Easy-to-read is the final deciding factor in the length of life of a type face. The grotesque, the ill-proportioned faces have their day but they die a natural death, eventually. Faces which have lived invariably have the same fundamental characteristics. Study the specimen of the Ideal News face below. Note that the small lower case is not over 70% of the height of the caps and ascending letters, that the descenders are a pleasing length—and that each letter has the proper white space around it.

All of these features are of vital importance to the fullest legibility.

Ask your local oculist to test Intertype Ideal News face in comparison with the face you are now using.

6½ Point on Solid Slug

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary light-face type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type-makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs

5½ Point on 5 Point Slug

84TH, 19 WEST—Gentleman appreciating cleanliness; electricity; $7; breakfast. Hawley, Schuyler 3155.

84TH, 316 WEST (Apt. 2E)—Beautifully furnished double room; near bath; reasonable.

85TH, 342 WEST (Clarke Studio), professional people, business girl, elevator; references.

85TH, 327 WEST—Large, front; every convenience; housekeeping privilege; $10. Ludwig.

85TH, 119 WEST—2 rooms, bath, parlor floor; desirable front basement with kitchenette privileges.

85TH (2,345 Broadway)—Large front; private bath, foyer; kitchen privileges. Weaver (46).

85TH, 342 WEST—Lady share large room lady; piano, twin beds. Hallock.

85TH, 349 WEST—Charming large, sunny front living room; smaller, $8. Nash.

85TH, 349 WEST—Attractive room, private family; student or business women. 3W.

86TH (Riverside Drive)—Artistically furnished room; business women; references. Telephone Trafalgar 9667.

86TH, 11 WEST—Large, double rooms, well furnished; kitchen privileges; also small; reasonable.

87TH, 343 WEST—Large, beautiful, sunny front room; adjoining private bath, references.

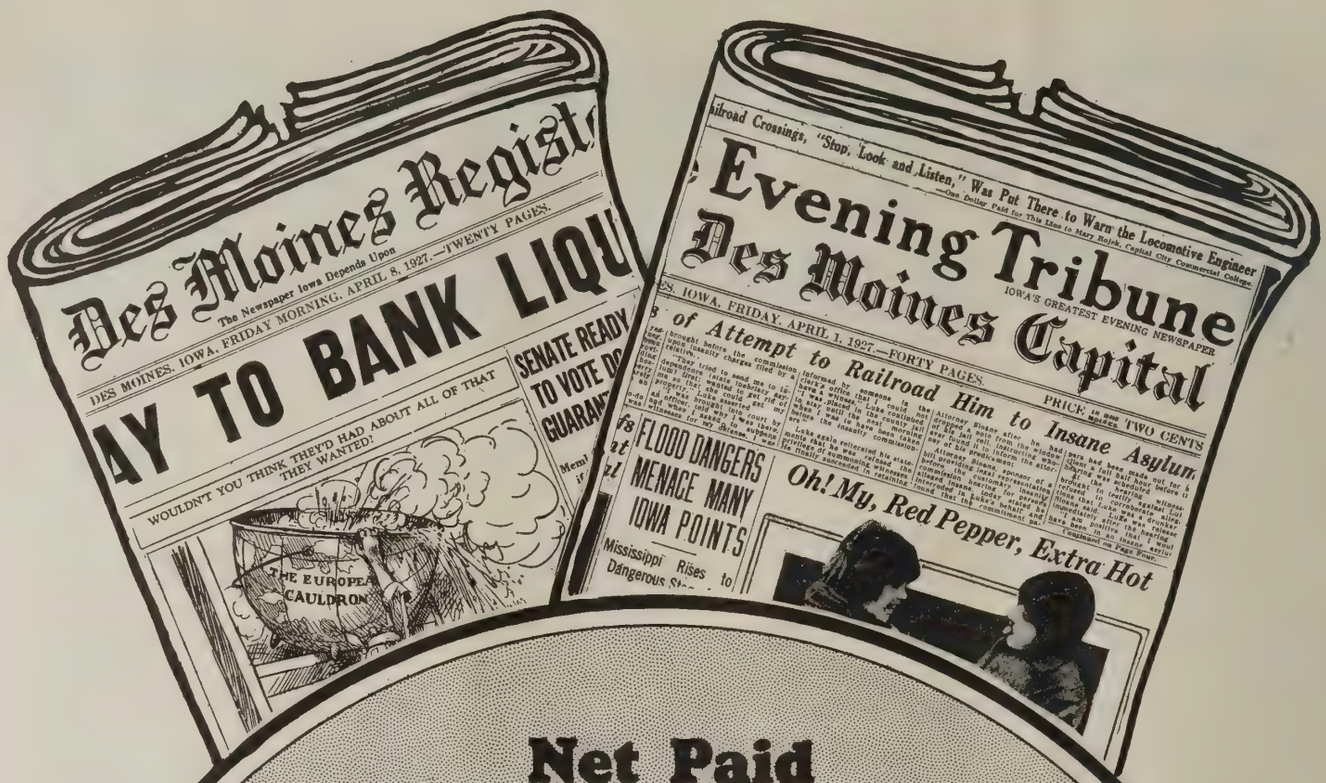
87TH, 121 WEST—Large room, two windows; semi-private bath; $12; gentleman.

7 Point on Solid Slug

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the ususal mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary light-face type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type-



Intertype matrices will run in other slug-casting machines

Write nearest branch for larger specimens

Standardized INTERTYPE TRADE MARK

Designed in 5½, 6½, 7 and 8 Point

INTERTYPE CORPORATION: New York 1440 Broadway; Chicago 130 N. Franklin St.; Memphis McCall Bldg.; San Francisco 560 Howard St.; Los Angeles 1240 S. Main St.; Boston 80 Federal St.; London; Berlin

Net Paid Daily Circulation

March, 1927

230,878

March, 1926

176,120

March, 1925

164,456

March, 1924

146,858

March, 1923

136,174

March, 1922

126,519

March, 1921

114,968

Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital

SEND FOR OUR NEW CATALOGUE

Or Obtain it at our A. N. P. A. Convention Exhibit, No. 100-101 Waldorf-Astoria

It Describes Features, Services and Serials

SUPPLYING ALL NEEDS OF A DISTINCTIVE NEWSPAPER

COMICS

"Hairbreadth Harry" By Kahles
"Somebody's Stenog" By Hayward
"The Family Next Door" By Thornton Fisher
"Steaming Youth" By Marjorie Henderson
"Dumb-Bells" By Gar
"Dizzy Dramas" By Joe Bowers
"Rolls Rosie" By Irma Benjamin
"Miss Information" By Hy Gage
"Sonnysayings" By F. Y. Cory
"Omar Jr." By Thornton Fisher
"Eve's Epigrams" By Agnes Hucke

CARTOONS

"Once Overs" By C. D. Batchelor
Sykes' Cartoons By C. H. Sykes
Chapin's Cartoons By A. B. Chapin
"Vignettes of Life" By Frank Godwin

MAGAZINE PAGE SERVICE

3-Color Cover Page
Short Story Page
Humor Page
Frank Godwin's Page—"Vignettes of Life"
Six Feature Pages

WOMEN'S PAGE FEATURES

Dorothy Dix Service
Love Problem Serials— By Hazel Batchelor
"Deb Days"—Daily Flapper Strip By C. J. Coll and Litta Mabie
"Milady Beautiful" By Lois Leeds
"The Latest" (Paris Fashions) By Eva Tingey
"How I Keep My Figure" By 36 Noted Beauties
"Your Jewelry & Your Personality" By Dorothy Stote
Daily Etiquette Hints By Helen Decie
Home Decoration By Jenny Wren
Home Handicraft By Jenny Hirsch
"Housewife's Idea Box" By Rae Ribler
"Correct English" By Charlotte Brewster Jordan

SPORTS FEATURES

"The Sportswoman" By Glenna Collett
"Today In Sport" By Jack Kofoed
"Sportfolio" By W. N. Taft
"Wearin' Out The Green" By Walter Trumbull
"The Listening Post" By Walter Trumbull

PUZZLES

Daily Cross-Word Puzzle
"Daily Puzzlette"
"Teasers"

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

"How Do You Know You Know?"
"Who-Why-What-When-Where?"
Correct English Quiz
Daily Sports Quiz

FICTION

"Harvey Garrard's Crime" By E. Phillips Oppenheim
Three New Sherlock Holmes Stories By Conan Doyle:
"Adventure of the Veiled Lodger"
"Adventure of the Retired Colorman"
"Adventure of Shascombe Old Place"
"White Fire" By Louis Joseph Vance
"They Call It Love" By Louis Joseph Vance
The Gray Phantom Stories By Herman Landon
"Red Ashes" By Margaret Pedlar
"The Secret Way" By J. S. Fletcher

MISCELLANEOUS

"The War Ten Years Ago Today"—Daily Strip
"Today In Astrology" By Belle Bart
"Indoor & Outdoor Gardens" By J. L. Kift
"Character Close-Ups"—(Physiognomy)
"Matrimonially Speaking" (Humorous)
"My Success Recipe" By Various Celebrities
"Why I Am Not Married" By Celebrated Batchelors and Spinsters
"The Marriage Problem" By Celebrated Authorities
"My Ideal Girl" By Noted Men
"My Favorite Dish" By Noted Chefs
"When Murder Would Not Out" (60 Murder Mysteries)

NEWS FEATURES—BY WIRE

N. Y. Evening Post Combination News Service (Complete Leased Wire Service, including Foreign, Domestic & Financial News)
N. Y. Evening Post Foreign Service
N. Y. Evening Post Financial Service
Public Ledger—N. Y. Post Washington News
Political Dispatches of Raymond G. Carroll, Clinton W. Gilbert, Louis Seibold, Ray T. Tucker
Daily Sports Letter By Walter Trumbull
Daily Horse-Race Service By J. B. Snodgrass

NEWS FEATURES—BY MAIL

Daily Mirror of Washington By Clinton W. Gilbert
"Gotham Day by Day" By Ross D. Whytock
New York Theatre Letter By John Anderson
Music Column By Olga Samaroff

LEDGER SYNDICATE—POST SYNDICATE

Independence Square, Philadelphia — 75 West Street, New York

JOHN ELFRETH WATKINS, Manager

"Over the Top" Again!

The Evening Bulletin is sold on its merits as a newspaper, no prize or guessing contests; coupons, premiums or other artificial methods of stimulating circulation are used.

The Evening Bulletin

continues to break all Philadelphia Circulation Records

560,832 Copies sold each day in March

1926 Average Sales were 537,974 Copies Daily

"That the people of Philadelphia and vicinity appreciate the efforts of The Bulletin to give them all the news of the day, as fairly, as exactly and impartially as it can be laid before them, is attested by the fact that not only has the name of The Bulletin become a household word among them but that its circulation reaches far beyond the highest point ever attained by a Philadelphia newspaper."

To the American Manufacturer and Advertising Agent:

Through this one newspaper you can reach nearly every home in and around Philadelphia at one cost.

Telling Bulletin readers what you have to sell, where it can be bought, how much it will cost—and telling it simply and truthfully and constantly, brings success.

Your advertisements are carried to the greatest number of possible purchasers in the Philadelphia market if printed in The Evening Bulletin.

Back of each purchaser of The Evening Bulletin is his or her family—a vast army of consumers.

Advertising in The Evening Bulletin is the most effective and economical form of publicity for reaching Philadelphia buyers.

The Bulletin's advertising rate (per line per thousand readers) is one of the lowest in the United States.

A page advertisement in The Bulletin costs less than one-third of a cent per copy.

"One of the family" in nearly every home.

The mass of buying in Philadelphia is done by the families of the readers of The Bulletin and the bulk of this business will come to those national advertisers who concentrate their advertising in The Bulletin

"In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin"

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Issued every Saturday, forms closing ten P. M. Thursday preceding Publication by The Editor & Publisher Co., J. W. Brown, Publisher; Marlen E. Pew, Editor; Suite 1700 Times Building, 42nd St., at Broadway, New York. Telephones, Bryant 3052-3053-3054-3055-3056. Charter Member Audit Bureau of Circulations. Member Associated Business Papers, Inc.

Vol. 59 NEW YORK, APRIL 30, 1927 No. 49

Press Faithful to Government Officials Is Ideal Expressed By President

Mr. Coolidge's Notable Address Delivered to Publisher Throng Attending United Press Association's Brilliant Birthday Dinner—Candid Talk on Foreign Relations.

FOREIGN relations of the United States, principally those with Mexico, Nicaragua, and the various factions in China, were discussed by President Coolidge before seven hundred and fifty newspaper owners, editors, and publishers and other guests of the United Press Associations at the 20th anniversary banquet of that body at the Hotel Biltmore.

Mr. Coolidge led into the principal portion of his address by pointing out that the three main avenues of contact with other nations were:

The political contact afforded by the activities of the national government.

Trade and commercial relations.

The public press, especially the daily newspapers and weekly periodicals, with enormous influence in creating a situation than can bring the blessings of peace or the perils of war.

From this belief Mr. Coolidge went on to develop his thought on activities of the press which might endanger friendly relations.

"There are two attitudes which the press may take which distinctly endanger our friendly relations," the President said. "One is the constant criticism and misrepresentation of foreign people. Human nature provides sufficient distrust of all that is alien, so that there is no need of any artificial supply. The world is in far more danger from nations not trusting each other enough than from their trusting each other too much. A press which is given over to a narrow and bigoted nationalism, accompanied by misrepresentations of other countries, not only misinforms and misleads the people at home, but produces the reaction of rankling bitterness abroad. An almost equally harmful attitude is the other extreme. It usually consists of malicious and misleading partisan attacks on the conduct of our own government in its efforts to defend American rights when they are threatened or invaded in foreign countries. Our government has usually been too remiss, rather than too active, in supporting the lawful rights of its citizens abroad. But when it it proceeding with moderation, attempting by peaceful negotiation to adjust differences, defending the rights of its citizens, and maintaining national dignity, great care is necessary to give the public the exact facts and avoid the appearance of seeming to support the positions of foreign governments.

"When such an attitude becomes known in the offending country, it is widely quoted there and, when all other arguments have been answered, becomes their chief reliance in maintaining their position. It not only furnishes ammunition for our adversaries, but attacks our own forces in the rear. An American press which has all the privileges which it enjoys under our institutions, and which derives its support from the progress and well-being of our people, ought to be first of all thoroughly American."

Mr. Bickel, introducing President Coolidge, reviewed the history of the United Press and called upon two of his predecessors at the head of that organization to rise—Roy W. Howard and William W. Hawkins. Mr. Bickel's address in part follows:

"We are highly honored by the presence of the first citizen of our country, who has come from Washington to be with us tonight. No greater distinction could be paid to us. I want to thank him for coming.

"In addressing us his voice will reach not only the audience in this room, not only the millions of American people who are now listening in by radio, but groups gathered on ships at sea, and the peoples of the countries of Europe and South America. Tonight in a number of the world's capitals United Press dinners are being held—in London, in Honolulu, in Santiago. A world-wide audience is waiting to hear the words of our guest of honor. Ladies and gentlemen, here and abroad, I have the honor of presenting the President of the United States."

Music was rendered by the 72-piece band of the United States Military Academy, which sat in the balcony immediately above the speaker's table, centering on the four-starred flag which hung behind the President's chair. The four microphones before the speakers carried their words over the nation-wide red and blue hookups of the National Broadcasting Company and also over the short-wave broadcast of WGY, which was expected to be heard at sea and in far distant lands.

Mrs. Coolidge did not attend the dinner. She was the guest of honor at an informal dinner served in a private dining room which was attended by wives of officials of the United Press, and with these ladies, listened to the speeches from the ballroom balcony. The ladies who dined with Mrs. Coolidge were Mrs. Bickel, Mrs. Howard, Mrs. Hawkins, Mrs. Ruth Barton, Mrs. Hugh Baillie, Mrs. Robert J. Bender, Mrs. J. H. Furay, Mrs. John W. Vandercook, Mrs. Fred S. Ferguson, Mrs. Ray Long and Mrs. Irvin S. Cobb.

Mr. Coolidge's address follows:

"The gathering and the distribution of news have long since ceased to be a local and individual occupation. They have become identified with great organizations having their representatives in all parts of the country and their publications in every important center. This service could only be performed by a mutual exchange of the most inclusive nature. How rapid and complete has been the growth of these organizations is exemplified by the United Press, which is now celebrating its 20th anniversary. In that short space of time it has spread far and wide over North and South America and become an instrument of both national and international publicity.

"This growth and power of the press carries with it great obligations. It is axiomatic that a free press can exist only in a free country. One of the first efforts of all kinds of absolutism is to control the press and the schools as the sources of information and education of the people. Where the press is free, as it is in our country under the guaranties of the national and state constitutions, it has a reciprocal duty of its own to perform toward the administration of the government, of giving true reports to the people of the actions of public officials. To do otherwise would be to establish a petty tyranny of its own. In America the general sources of information are so numerous and on the whole so correct that any publication which constantly misrepresents very soon becomes marked as unreliable and loses its influence both for good and for harm.

"It is natural that the press should represent the character of the government under which it lives and of the people which it serves. I have come to have a profound regard for the American press because it represents America. In the accuracy of its reports, the intelligence of its comments, and the freedom of its actions, I know of no other country where it is surpassed. There ought to be a deeper realization of these conditions on the part of those who are responsible for the conduct of our press which should be reflected on their part in a more intense and genuine Americanism. If you lived under some jurisdictions your news would be garbled and unfair, your editorial comments would be dwarfed and prejudiced, your conduct would be cramped and limited.

"Because America is what it is, you are what you are. Your own independent and exalted position fully demonstrates that this country is worthy at all times of your service and your support. Whenever any section of our press turns on America and on American institutions, and assumes a foreign attitude, every informed person knows that it has fallen from the high estate which is our common heritage, and becoming no longer worthy of regard is destined to defeat and failure. No American can profit by selling his own country for foreign favor.

"The policy that our nation is trying to promote throughout the world is one of peace and goodwill based on a better understanding through justice and fair dealing. It is perfectly apparent that there are three main elements on which we rely to advance this cause.

"First is the national government as it comes into contact through its duly constituted officers with the governments and people of other countries. I doubt if the belief exists in any informed quarter that this is a belligerent government desirious of oppression or bent on conquest. Our whole history and tradition, the moderation of our military establishment and the general attitude of our people, would altogether disprove any such assumption.

"Another very important consideration

The President and Mrs. Coolidge being received in New York by Karl A. Bickel, President United Press (photographed for EDITOR & PUBLISHER).

Speaker's dias at United Press dinner, the President with U. P. officials and their distinguished guests.

is that of trade and commercial relations. While a certain number of foreign people come to this country to transact business without intending to make this their permanent home, their number is negligible and any difficulty arising from their presence here is almost unknown. They have practically every advantage and every protection that is afforded to our own citizens. Of their conduct on the whole we have had little to blame and much to praise. In the past foreign interests have had investments in this country running into several billions of dollars. Being made at a time when we had insufficient capital to develop our own resources, such investments were most helpful in building our railroads, opening our mines, and supporting our manufacturing. As we have come into the possession of surplus capital we have shown an increasing disposition to extend this same kind of service to other countries. Our people have gone abroad with their investments, their technical skill and commercial ability, to assist in opening up undeveloped countries.

"This is the natural play of the forces of civilization. It is the result of natural and commendable enterprise which carries with it the same kind of benefits and advantages to the other people which we ourselves formerly received from abroad. It is the method by which the more prosperous and improved portions of the earth help to bring these advantages to the less fortunately circumstanced. This policy is distinctly one that is in harmony with the law of service. In principle it is the method by whch stronger communities minister to weaker communities. But these operations must be carried on with justice and humanity. They must not be permitted to sink to the level of mere exploitation. They do not justify a seizure, which is virtually by force, of the natural resources of foreign countries or the failure to give fair compensation for their labor. A just attitude in these respects by Americans when they engage in enterprises abroad will do very much to determine whether our country is able to maintain the respect and friendship of foreign peoples. Unless this course is pursued, unless this attitude is maintained, all the support which our government could give would fail to make these foreign enterprises successful. Unless they rest on justice and fair dealing they are bound to fail.

"A third factor exists which is in the long run more important than any other. A condition of understanding and goodwill among the people of the earth is very largely a state of the public mind. It is almost inconceivable that nations which have maintained friendly relations should all at once find themselves at war with each other. Armed conflict arises from a long series of misunderstandings and abuses which suddenly flare up on some unexpected provocation. Open hostility does not break out unannounced. It is a growth of long and assiduous cultivation. It can not be doubted that people as a whole desire peace. They can not long secure it if they are constantly harboring feelings of hostility. It is for these reasons that the public press, especially the daily newspapers and weekly periodicals, has such an enormous influence in creating a situation that brings the blessings of peace or is fraught with the perils of war.

"There are two attitudes that the press may take which distinctly endanger our friendly relations. If they do not bring us to the verge of conflict, they are injurious to our trade. One is the constant criticism and misrepresentation of foreign people. Human nature provides sufficient distrust of all that is alien, so that there is no need of any artificial supply. The world is in far more danger from nations not trusting each other enough than from their trusting each other too much. A press which is given over to a narrow and bigoted nationalism, accompanied by misrepresentations of other countries, not only misinforms and misleads the people at home but produces the reaction of a rankling bitterness abroad. An almost equally harmful attitude is the other extreme. It usually consists of malicious and misleading partisan attacks on the conduct of our own government in its efforts to defend American rights when they are threatened or invaded in foreign countries. Our government has usually been too remiss, rather than too active, in supporting the lawful rights of its citizens abroad. That has been so long our established policy that it is rather difficult to conceive it assuming a truculent and arrogant attitude. But when it is proceeding with moderation, attempting by peaceful negotiation to adjust differences, defending the rights of its citizens, and maintaining national dignity, great care is necessary to give the public the exact facts and avoid the appearance of seeming to support the position of foreign governments.

"When such an attitude becomes known in the offending country, it is widely quoted there and, when all other arguments have been answered, becomes their chief reliance for maintaining their position. It not only furnishes ammunition for our adversaries, but attacks our own forces in the rear. An American press which has all the privileges which it enjoys under our institutions, and which derives its support from the progress and well-being of our people, ought to be first of all thoroughly American.

"Progress and civilization have always depended upon effort and sacrifice. We have set up our institutions, established our ideals, and adopted our social standards. We believe that they are consistent with right and truth and justice. We live under a system that guarantees the sanctity of life and liberty through public order and protects the rights of private property under the principle of due process of law. We have thrown every possible safeguard around the individual in order to protect him from any invasion of his rights even by the government itself. It is peculiarly an American doctrine, now usually accepted in principle if not adopted in practice by all civilized countries, that these are inalienable rights, that they ought to belong to all persons everywhere, and that it is the chief function of government to provide instrumentalities by which these rights can be secured and protected. We have adopted these ideals because we believe that they are of universal application and square with the eternal principles of right. But we may as well realize that they will not continue to prevail unless we are prepared constantly to put forth great efforts and make large sacrifices for their support.

"While we have not been willing to assume any general attitude of crusading toward other nations, and realizing that institutions can not be bestowed but must be adopted have left them for the most part secure in their right to work out their own destiny, yet we have always been willing to encourage and assist, in so far as we could in harmony with international law and custom, other people in securing for themselves the benefit of these principles and ideals. In that conflict between freedom and despotism, which is as old as humanity, and which constantly recurs in one form or another, both among ourselves and among other people, it has always been the policy of this government to extend its sympathy and, in so far as it lawfully could, its support to the side of freedom.

"These are some of the standards which it has been the policy of our government to support among its people at home and in its dealings with other nations. While it is well-established international law that we have no right to interfere in the purely domestic affairs of other nations in their dealings with their own citizens, it is equally well established that our government has certain rights over and certain duties toward our own citizens and their property, wherever they may be located. The person and property of a citizen are a part of the general domain of the nation, even when abroad. On the other hand, there is a distinct and binding obligation on the part of self-respecting governments to afford protection to the persons and property of their citizens, wherever they may be. This is both because it has an interest in them and because it has an obligation toward them. It would seem to be perfectly obvious that if it is wrong to murder and pillage within the confines of the United States, it is equally wrong outside our borders. The fundamental laws of justice are universal in their application. These rights go with the citizen. Wherever he goes these duties of our government must follow him.

"It is all right to say that when our citizens enter a foreign country they should do so with the understanding that they are to abide by the laws of that country. They should, and they do, and our government would be the last to interfere in the just application of the law of his domicile to our citizens. But this is only a partial statement of the case. The admission of our citizens within their territory is a voluntary act of foreign governments. It is a tacit invitation. When we permit foreigners to come here, and when other countries admit our citizens, we know and they know that such aliens come and go not only under the rights and duties imposed by domestic law, but also under the rights and duties imposed by international law. There is nothing unfair, nothing imperialistic, in this principle. It has been universally adopted and recognized as right and just and is the only reasonable method by which enlightened humanity can safeguard friendly intercourse among the citizens of different nations. This policy has been adopted in furtherance of the humanitarian desire for a universal reign of law.

"These principles are involved in some of the difficulties that we have recently been trying to work out with foreign nations, especially with Mexico. We have had claims against that country running over a long series of years, growing out of the death of many of our citizens and the loss of their property, running into hundreds of millions of dollars. A very considerable portion of these cases has been due to revolutionary activities and other forms of public violence. Public order has never been entirely complete in that country. But lately our difficulties have been increased by the enactment of laws by the government itself, which we feel threaten the virtual confiscation of

(Continued on page 68)

NOYES FIGHTS AGAIN NEWS WARS OF NINETIES

President, in Principal Address at A. P. Luncheon, Reveals for First Time to Younger Members of Organization Details of Battles Which Led to Founding of Co-operative News Body

Board of Directors of the Associated Press. Seated (left to right): Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times; Frank B. Noyes, Washington Star and A. P. president; Melville E. Stone, counselor; Frank McLennan, Topeka (Kan.) State Journal. Standing: E. H. Baker, Cleveland Plain Dealer; W. E. Cowles, Spokane Spokesman Review; Stuart H. Perry, Adrian (Mich.) Telegram; J. R. Knowland, Oakland (Cal.) Tribune; Col. R. R. McCormick, Chicago Tribune; William Pape, Waterbury Republican; E. Lansing Ray, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; B. H. Anthony, New Bedford Standard; Richard Hooker, Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

THE Younger Generation were guests of honor at the annual Associated Press luncheon on Monday. Abandoning for this year his traditional role as toastmaster, President Frank B. Noyes held forth as the principal speaker of the day and reviewed for the membership the origin and development of the Associated Press since 1850.

The program differed from any that the A. P. has presented within the memory of most present-day newspaper men. No national figure or noted guest from without the newspaper field sat at the president's right hand. No flash of gold lace or aiguilettes gleamed at the long speakers' table. The luncheon, like the two-day meeting, was strictly A. P. business. President Noyes, and Henry J. Allen, publisher of the Wichita (Kan.) Beacon, were the only speakers, and the subject of both was "The Associated Press."

Decision on this form of program was reached several weeks ago when the directors felt that the discussion among the membership on the bond and protest right issues indicated the need of information among the younger members on the origins, aims and principles of the Associated Press, and the conditions which had called into being some of the conditions over which the dispute was growing warm. President Noyes, who with Melville E. Stone, the latter absent from the luncheon on account of illness, is the only member of the group which founded the A.P. now officially connected with the organization, was requested to tell the story of the early days. His address follows:

"As newspaper men and women you are all familiar with the alacrity with which our reporters and head line writers classify any one past fifty as aged and the zest with which they will relate how John Smith, an aged man of 58, had badly jarred himself by a fall on the ice, an accident that caused his family serious concern on account of his advanced years.

"For some considerable time I have viewed with distinct alarm this fashion of news treatment, and the newspaper that I am connnected with has a strict rule that no one is to be described as aged until he had at least reached 90.

"Nevertheless it is because of this prevailing habit of thought that I am wished on you today to take more of your time than has been my custom in an attempt to make clear the controlling causes for the formation of the first cooperative non-profit making news gathering organization of national scope in 1893.

"Those who decided on our program today were impressed with the fact that of those who took part officially in the conduct of the Associated Press, the Illinois Corporation, from 1893 to 1897, the period of the great battle for a free press in this country, only two remain officially connected with the present organization—Melville E. Stone and myself, and for the benefit of a younger generation 'who know not Joseph' have asked me to tell again the story of those days.

"It should be noted that Clark Howell who was elected a director of the Illinois Corporation in 1899 is the only director other than myself of that organization now serving as director of the present Associated Press.

"To make clear the situation as respects the machinery for gathering and distributing of news in 1893 it will be necessary for me to go back briefly to a period even beyond my recollections, for it was prior to 1850 that what was known as the New York Associated Press took form.

"This was a co-operative effort of six, afterward, seven, newspapers of New York City to gather news for their common benefit. From time to time they took on clients in other cities and sections, sometimes as groups and sometimes as individuals, the relation of the New York Associated Press to the others being simply that of a vendor of news, a part of the consideration being the furnishing of news by the clients to the dominating organization. Among the subsidiary organizations with whom relations were from time to time established were the Western Associated Press (a Michigan Corporation) whose field included the territory west of the Alleghanies, the New England Associated Press, the New York State Associated Press, the Southern Associated Press and local associations in such cities as Philadelphia and Baltimore.

"This ran on until 1882 when the Western Associated Press set up the standard of revolt, refusing to longer be subjected to the absolute domination of the New York organization. The war was a very short one and an agreement followed under which the relations of the two organizations and the conduct of the joint business was entrusted to a committee of five, three representing the New York organization and two the Western association, with the former general manager of the Western association acting as general manager of the joint operations.

"From time to time competing organizations appeared and one—the United Press—gradually became really important.

"This organization must not be confused with the present United Press which is an entirely different concern.

"Little by little it became evident that the joint operations of the New York and Western Associated Presses were being conducted in a close and curious harmony with the United Press.

"The United Press was at that time headed by Walter P. Phillips, a bright and energetic man who had started his business career as a telegraph operator.

"It was evident on the surface that the United Press had access to the joint Associated Press reports and the management of the two Associated Press organizations (the joint committee) was encouraging members of their organizations to take the United Press also.

"Thus, this boring-from-within process had resulted in the thorough honeycombing of the structure of both the New York and the Western concerns and later Mr. Phillips asserted that the United Press was drawing $164,000 a year from Western Associated Press papers, relatively a very large percentage of the revenues of the United Press.

"In 1891 a crisis came when it was discovered that not only was there an agreement for the exchange of news between the joint committee of the allied Associated Presses and the United Press, but that a majority of the members of the joint committee and the general manager had become stockholders and had a financial interest in U. P. prosperity.

"The board of directors of the Western Associated Press, shocked at these disclosures, changed their representatives on the joint committee and took steps to cancel the agreements made by that committee.

"The New York organization had been so effectively undermined that within a short time it passed out of existence, the United Press superseding it entirely and its owners (the seven New York newspapers) and clients all became clients and some of them stockholders of the U. P.

"During this period prolonged negotiations had resulted in an agreement for a working combination between the Western Associated Press (which was to become the Associated Press) and the United Press, under which broadly the United Press was to control the East and the Associated Press the rest of the country.

"In this situation, in Feb., 1893, Messrs. Lawson, Knapp and Driscoll, the executive committee of the new Associated Press, an Illinois corporation which was to succeed the Western Associated Press, came to New York to execute the contract that had already been agreed upon, but were met by William Laffan of the Sun, who spoke for his associates, with a peremptory repudiation of the agreement and a demand that certain moneys be paid before the close of banking hours that day, in default of which, service to the West and South would be cut off. Mr. Laffan also stated that he would later advise Lawson and his associates of the terms that the United Press would impose.

"I will always remember the calm courage of Victor Lawson on that day of dismay and discouragement.

"Futile negotiations ensued, the representatives of the Associated Press being willing to pay tribute if they could preserve the independence of their organization, but finally in July, 1893, Laffan notified the Associated Press that 'under no circumstances will the United Press reopen negotiations with the Associated Press or the Western Associated Press looking to a contract for news service.'

"The issue then became clear and within a short time the battle was on.

"On the one hand was the United Press dominated and controlled by three men, only one of whom could by any possibility be properly classed as a newspaper man, this one being William M. Laffan, business manager of the New York Sun. Phillips I have already alluded to. The third was John R. Walsh, a Chicago banker who incidentally owned a newspaper. Mr. Walsh was an exceedingly imperious man and later his conduct of his bank brought him into violent conflict with the Federal banking laws.

"These men were backed at the outset by a solid phalanx in the East and in the South. Those in control of the Southern Associated Press were entirely sympathetic with the United Press and later became avowed partisans.

"The Associated Press then was a stockholding corporation, but in its operation was mutual and non-profit making. Its membership (Western and Southwestern newspapers) comprised both stockholders and non-stockholders. There were only 62 stockholders while there were several hundred non-stockholding members, though at the outset many of these were in a congery of subsidiary associations of a State or regional character.

"Of the 62 stockholding members several were openly hostile and already co-operating with the United Press.

"In March, 1893, during the progress of the negotiations of which I have spoken, Melville E. Stone had been persuaded to become general manager of the Associated Press—a selection that I have always regarded as Providential and when the break came he was, in every sense, on the job.

"With the opposing forces which I have enumerated what was the issue that was to be fought to a conclusion, taking years of struggle, however, before that conclusion was reached.

"The issue was this: 'Shall the newspapers of the United States be at the mercy of a privately owned news collecting and distributing organization—at its mercy not only as concerns a money tribute but of much more importance—at its mercy as to the news received, whether it would be honest or perverted, whether it should be impartial or biased, whether it should be influenced by the interests and the opinions of its owners and the press of the United States and the people of the United States be subject to the unrestrained will of individuals or an individual so far as press association news was concerned.'

"This was indeed a thrilling battle cry and shortly the newspaper world resounded with it, for taking the aggressive the Associated Press enlarged its field of operation to include the whole United States and invited newspapers throughout the country to join in this effort to establish a mutual, co-operative non-profit making newsgathering organization that should gather for its members, and its members alone, a news report that should be non-partisan in the broadest sense, without bias of any sort and as accurate as is humanly possible.

"After the gage of battle had been thrown down, on Sept. 7, 1893, the Associated Press began its own independent service of world-wide news. Mr. Stone, having as his first activity as general manager, made a trip to England where he contracted for exchange arrangements with Reuter, Havas and Wolff and the other European news agencies allied with the three principal agencies. This in itself had been a master stroke.

"Coincident with the starting of the independent news service the assessments of the stockholding members, to whom no dividends were ever paid, were increased 30 per cent and an informal meeting of the stockholders held on Oct. 4, enthusiastically endorsed the action of the officers and subscribed to a guarantee fund, which with subsequent additions reached over $550,000 subscribed by 66 stockholders to meet deficits and in the course of the struggle $177,000 was called for and collected.

"Incidentally I may say that before these payments were made by the subscribing stockholders, 97 of the stockholders made voluntary increases in their assessments which amounted to $285,000 before the end of the war.

"I mention these contributions only to make clear that the stockholding newspapers of the Associated Press showed their faith in money as well as in words—and this is not always the case.

"The fight was at once carried into the East and almost immediately the new organization gained important adherents in that section of the country. Among the earliest recruits were the New York Evening Post, the New York Staats Zeitung and the Brooklyn Eagle. The New York World and six of the leading Philadelphia papers including the Inquirer and the Bulletin followed at once. Then the crusaders reached Washington and Melville Stone, Victor Lawson and Charles Diehl explained to me what they were seeking to accomplish and from that day I became a crusader myself, an attitude that has continued to this day for I have felt that no other public service that I could possibly render was comparable in importance with doing what lay in my power to safeguard the integrity of the news report received by the newspaper with which I am connected and by our partners—the other members of the Associated Press.

Keats Speed, managing editor of the New York Sun and William T. Dewart, publisher of the Sun photographed at Waldorf this week.

"It is hard to realize after the passage of so many years the intensity of feeling at that time in newspaperdom.

"Lawson and Stone devoted all of their time in making new converts to the cause of co-operative news gathering, travelling constantly from place to place, working as they never would have worked for any private interest of their own.

"As the contest went on—for it must not be supposed that the attacking was all on one side—it could be noted that aside from three or four desertions at the outset to the United Press all the progress was being made by our organization. Day by day, month by month, year by year our membership grew and the number of clients of the United Press dwindled.

"Both sides were running under heavy deficits, the losses on our side being divided between the considerable number of stockholders who had participated in the guarantee fund and the voluntary increases of assessment and those of the United Press by the four New York newspapers—the Sun, the Herald, the Times and the Tribune—who had in pride become the real backers of the United Press. These newspapers were in fact obliged eventually to give guarantees of a continuance of service to the more important clients of the United Press.

"This process of accretion on the one side and attrition on the other went on steadily and in 1896 and early in 1897 various fruitless conferences between the opposing leaders took place but the conflict continued until April 8, 1897, when by overwhelming vote by the directors of the United Press that concern threw up the sponge, though Mr. Dana and Mr. Laffan, their heads unbowed, fiercely denounced the surrender of their associates.

"There followed a wild scramble to secure membership in the Associated Press and our officers and directors were very busy for a considerable time in clearing away difficulties. They had definitely adopted a policy that no reprisals were to be exacted and exerted themselves strenuously to the end that no established newspapers should be left outside the fold.

"In this effort they were extraordinarily successful, as a number here today can testify. The only papers of any importance that were not provided for, as I remember the facts, were the New York Sun, which remained irreconcilable and which while abandoning the sinking ship elected to float around for many years on a raft of its own construction, and the Scripps-McRae papers—these were four in number located in Cincinnati, Cleveland, St. Louis and Kansas City. Application was made for the admission of these papers, a condition being that all four should be admitted or the applications were to be withdrawn. I was one of the committee appointed to attempt to secure the election of all four as stipulated. We were successful as to three of them but Col. Nelson—who mI kept up until four in the morning trying to exhaust him into assent—would only yield for a contract for a year for the Kansas City Scripps-McRae paper and as this did not meet the requirements the whole effort failed and none of the four was elected to membership.

"Col. Nelson insisted that the Kansas City paper could not live and he was right, as afterward developed.

"I was sorry to have failed in harmonizing this situation as were many of us because of a very real affection for Milton McRae, then the active head of the Scripps-McRae organization.

"For a short time life in the Associated Press was apparently tranquil, but a very large sized cloud was just beyond the horizon. The Chicago Inter-Ocean had been charged with violation of the by-laws—the section in question having been upheld by the courts in several jurisdictions. Persisting in the violation the Inter-Ocean was expelled, whereupon it sought reinstatement through the Illinois courts. The decisions of the lower court and of the appellate court were in favor of the Associated Press and the case was carried to the Supreme Court of the State.

"Perhaps I should here restate what the Associated Press was in fact, though it worked through the machinery of a corporation formed for pecuniary profit—there being at that time no provision in the Illinois law for a membership corporation of an available form.

"The essence of the plan was that a number of newspapers should agree between themselves to exchange their local news exclusively with others associated in the common effort in different places and to jointly collect for the joint benefit all the news not available to any one separately.

"I have already described the character of news insisted on and that is all in substance that the Associated Press of that day was and of this day is.

"Also we insisted that we had the right to select our own associates having due regard to the individual interests of th already associated in our enterprise of the joint interest of all of us.

"On Feb. 19, 1900, out of a clear came an astounding decision by the I nois Supreme Court. Although not m tioned in the pleadings, the Illin Corporation was declared a comm carrier—apparently principally on ground that in the original charter so one had entirely unnecessarily inser a clause authorizing the erection of te graph lines—a procedure that had even been contemplated so far as any us knew. The Court held, however, th this potential power, even though une ercised, made the organization a comm carrier and that any applicant must served.

"It may well be imagined that this cision brought consternation to the ficers, directors and the rank and file the organization. For a time confusi reigned.

"Suits were filed to compel the A sociated Press of Illinois to render servi to non-members. Counter-suits we threatened by members in other states their contract rights were invaded.

"With this situation came an annu meeting of the stockholders.

"A number of us believed that we cou form an organization in another state a under the protection of law preserve o essential rights.

"Accordingly, two of the directo whose terms expired refused re-electi and Melville Stone resigned as gener manager.

"After a most exhaustive investigati and after taking an enormous amount legal advice from the leaders of the b throughout the country, we formed t present organization and invited all mer bers of the Illinois Corporation to join in the new venture, assuring them that far as was legally practicable we wou give them the same status that they ha in the older organization.

"The response was practically unan mous and the New York membersh corporation began on Sept. 30, 1900.

"During the years since that date the have been only a few events of reall great interest even to newspaper men.

"Several legal assaults have been su cessively repelled.

"For years Melville E. Stone insiste that on a proper presentation in the court the open and avowed appropriation of ou news could be stopped and we won c his contention from the lower courts the Supreme Court of the United Stat and misappropriation of our property now forbidden by injunction.

"And now it is for us to conside whether all this struggle, all this effo has been and is worthwhile. Were th newspaper men of 1893 justified in be lieving that the thing of first importanc to them and the country was to guard th purity of their news supply through co-operative organization in which mem bers of every shade of opinion woul necessarily be critics and any partisanshi or bias shown in the report sure of ster rebuke? Were they right in insisting tha newspaper men, members of the organiza tion, from every section of the countr should be directors, trustees for our com mon interests?

"Have your directors—and in th passage of years I have served with 7 of them—been justified in so construin their obligations to you, that to atten the meetings of the Board and the Execu tive Committee consumes from one to tw months of each of their years?

"Has your news report been a fair an honest one and has it been a true one when decent allowance is made for th occasional human error?

"And most important of all these ques tions, were we right in 1893 and have w been right in the years since then in ou conviction that a dominant privately owned news-gathering and distributin agency would be a menace beyond word to the welfare and the safety of press an people? Leaving aside the question of a bad man, of a sinister control, would we today give any man, the best man, un restrained control of our life blood, our news supply, free to impose with long time contracts what money tribute he

(Continued on page 58)

A. P. BOND ALLOTMENT IN COMMITTEE'S HANDS

Protest Rights Will Also Be Determined by Six Who Have Handled Both Sides of Dispute—Conference Between Noyes and Neylan Leads to Adjustment Without Floor Discussion

MEMBERS of the Associated Press in annual convention this week unanimously adopted a resolution providing for appointment of a committee of six to recommend a plan for "an equitable allotment of bonds" and to consider the question of protest rights.

As named by Frank B. Noyes, publisher of the Washington Evening Star and A. P. president, the committee members are: Mr. Noyes; Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times; Maj. Robert McLean, publisher of the Philadelphia Bulletin; John Francis Neylan, publisher of the San Francisco Call; Col. Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans States; and Arthur H. Vandenberg, publisher of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald.

The first three members of the committee listed above were the same three who had been appointed last May by the directorate to investigate the bond situation, while the last named three were members of a self-appointed proxy committee, who, during the past year had been leading a campaign for what they termed "the mutualization of the Associated Press."

Representatives of both factions greeted the adoption of the resolution as a most happy armistice. Just prior to appointing the committee of six, Mr. Noyes said:

"I want to say, gentlemen, that this is the happiest day in my life."

Mr. Neylan, taking the floor to move for adoption of the resolution, declared in his opinion that appointment of the committee was the most practical manner of solving these two very important questions.

"I have studied both questions rather thoroughly," he said, "and am convinced that this committee, when it has devoted itself to the subject, will find no insuperable obstacles, and that at the end of the year at the next annual meeting, if not before, as provided in the resolution, we will be able to come here and present a report on which the entire membership can unite and adopt so that this great institution may go on and fulfill its destiny."

In a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Ochs reiterated an opinion he had previously expressed to the effect that argument and discussion among A. P. members was wholesome and to be encouraged.

"I view the whole discussion as very valuable," Mr. Ochs said, "because it creates and maintains interest in the Associated Press. Discussion is always a wholesome sign. The result of the discussion now terminated was the natural outcome. I am very happy at the solution."

Mr. Noyes commented to EDITOR & PUBLISHER on the "harmonious spirit" of the organization.

"I always had a feeling," he said, "that the Associated Press would meet this or any other eternal problem in the proper spirit. This has been a delightfully harmonious affair."

J. R. Knowland, publisher of the Oakland Tribune, presented the resolution, the text of which follows in full:

"WHEREAS, The Board of Directors has had under consideration the situation in regard to the outstanding bonds of the Associated Press carrying voting privileges, and has found the distribution of the same to be, by reason of changed conditions, increasingly disproportionate; and

"WHEREAS, The Board has submitted to the membership a report of its committee on the subject with a resolution adopted by the Board in relation thereto; and

"WHEREAS, It is advisable that said report and resolution and the matters therein discussed should be further considered; and

"WHEREAS, It is advisable that for like reasons the subject of protest rights shall be brought under review with the object of adjusting the same in a manner which shall be for the best interests of the entire membership.

"NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

"(1) That the President do appoint a Special Committee on bond and protest rights to be composed of six members of this corporation, of whom the President himself shall be one, to which committee there shall be referred in their entirety the several subjects mentioned in the preamble of this resolution (including the report made to the Board by its committee and the resolution adopted by the Board in relation thereto) with full authority to investigate and make report concerning the same, and to recommend to the Board of Directors and to the membership such action as should in its judgment be taken, whether by amendment of the by-laws or otherwise.

"(2) Said committee shall make report, as soon as may conveniently be done, to the Board of Directors and also to the membership in special or regular meeting assembled, but in no event later than the next regular annual meeting of the corporation.

"(3) The committee shall obtain the opinion of counsel for the corporation in regard to the legal aspect of any action that may be recommended by it.

"(4) Should a vacancy on said committee occur by reason of death, resignation or like cause, the President shall have the power to fill the same by appointment.

Mr. Noyes and Mr. Neylan met together last Saturday in New York and reached an agreement resulting in the resolution published above, which differs slightly from that appearing exclusively in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of April 23. The meeting between the two began early Saturday evening and did not adjourn until four o'clock on Sunday morning. At this meeting it was agreed that there would be no discussion on the floor of the convention over either the bond vote or the protest right. Consequently the procedure was a cut-and-dried affair.

After Mr. Knowland had presented the resolution, Mr. Neylan rose to urge its adoption, asking all in the room to do nothing to complicate the present situation.

"For the first time in my life and only with the belief that I am doing it for the best interest of the Associated Press, I am going to request everybody to refrain from discussion of the resolution," was the way Mr. Neylan concluded his address.

The text of Mr. Knowland's address in presenting the resolution follows in full:

"In pursuance of the report of the board of directors and the resolution proposed by that body dealing with the question of bonds and further in consideration of the widespread interest manifested by the membership in the question of protest rights, this resolution is presented.

"It emanates from a conference between members of the board of directors and the proxy committee whose minds have met and who have unanimously recommended this as the most practical method of considering these important questions where they may be accorded the most careful and judicial consideration by the appointment of a representative committee on the part of the president of this organization.

"It is recognized on all sides that these

(Continued on page 66)

Photographed for EDITOR & PUBLISHER

The Associated Press committee appointed by President Noyes to recommend a plan for equitable allotment of bonds and consider the question of protest rights. Left to right (seated): Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times; John Francis Neylan, San Francisco Call; Frank B. Noyes, Washington Star; Col. Robert Ewing, New Orleans States. (Standing): Arthur H. Vandenberg, Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald; Robert McLean, Philadelphia Bulletin.

NOYES' RE-ELECTION ENDS HARMONIOUS MEE

Publisher of Washington Star Starts 27th Year as A. P. Chief—Hooker, McCormick, and Kirkwoo New Directors—Pape and Thompson Vice-Presidents

FRANK B. NOYES, publisher of the Washington Evening Star, this week started his 27th year as president of the Associated Press, his re-election ending one of the most harmonious meetings of recent A. P. history. Storm clouds which threatened to break over this year's annual meeting were dispelled following an eleventh hour conference between Mr. Noyes and John Francis Neylan, chairman of the "mutualization" proxy committee, at which it was agreed that the bond and protest right controversy should be placed in the hands of a committee of six and no dispute or argument allowed on the convention floor.

The spirit of harmony manifest at the convention proper was carried over to the first meeting of the new board of directors held at A. P. headquarters on Tuesday afternoon, when two of the defeated candidates for position on the directorate were elected vice-presidents.

These two were Frederick I. Thompson, publisher of the Mobile (Ala.) Register, named first vice-president, and William J. Pape, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican, second vice-president.

In the voting for directors held late Monday afternoon the race between Mr. Pape and Richard Hooker, Springfield (Mass.) Republican, was particularly close, with Mr. Hooker polling 1,960 votes compared with 1,880 tallied by Mr. Pape. Before voting started it was rumored that the proxies gathered by the mutualization proxy committe in anticipation of the bond and protest right controversy which failed to materialize were to be thrown to Mr. Pape. There was no way of telling whether or not this was done. The winner, however, was generally recognized as the administration candidate.

Mr. Hooker's election was to fill the one year's unexpired term of the late Charles Hopkins Clark, editor and publisher of the Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

Votes were also cast to elect five five-year term directors. In this balloting, the defeat of Mr. Thompson of the Mobile Register, was viewed with considerable alarm by southern members of the Associated Press, who felt that they were being deprived of a representative of the board. Mr. Thompson was up for re-election and upsets such as happened this year rarely occur. R. R. McCormick, Chicago Tribune, was elected to Mr. Thompson's place, and, since Mr. McCormick was vice-president last year the election amounted simply to an exchange of titles.

Of the ten candidates to fill the five-year term, the following, in addition to Mr. McCormick, were elected: W. H. Cowles, Spokane Spokesman-Review; Frank P. MacLennan, Topeka (Kan.) State Journal; E. Lansing Ray, St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat; and L. R. Kirkwood, Kansas City (Mo.) Star.

The executive committee re-elected on Tuesday, includes President Noyes, Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times; Clark Howell, Atlanta Constitution; Mr. Ray; Robert McClean, Philadelphia Bulletin; and Benjamin H. Anthony, New Bedford (Mass.) Standard.

A resolution expressing sympathy for those in the flood was passed by the A. P. members on Tuesday. It was introduced by Jesse H. Jones of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, and read as follows:

"WHEREAS the high waters and overflow from the Mississippi river and some of its tributaries are at this time causing great loss of life and property, and

"WHEREAS the suffering and destitution so occasioned is fully realized by those in attendance at this meeting.

"BE IT RESOLVED that the sympathies of the entire membership of the Associated Press be extended to those so seriously and tragically affected, and that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and conveyed through the press."

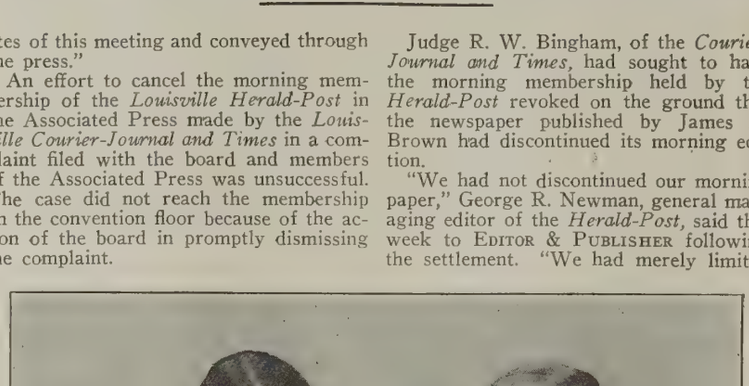
An effort to cancel the morning membership of the Louisville Herald-Post in the Associated Press made by the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times in a complaint filed with the board and members of the Associated Press was unsuccessful. The case did not reach the membership on the convention floor because of the action of the board in promptly dismissing the complaint.

Judge R. W. Bingham, of the Courier-Journal and Times, had sought to have the morning membership held by the Herald-Post revoked on the ground that the newspaper published by James B. Brown had discontinued its morning edition.

"We had not discontinued our morning paper," George R. Newman, general managing editor of the Herald-Post, said this week to EDITOR & PUBLISHER following the settlement. "We had merely limited our operations in the morning field. W were printing one edition in the hours fined for a morning publication and were delighted to consider with the boa the sufficiency of our publication. A co plete and satisfactory understanding w reached by us with the board.

"The A. P. board of directors wou not entertain the idea that the cancellati of our membership sought by the Couri Journal and Times be considered by me bers of the Associated Press, especia in view of the fact that no complaint w being made against the Herald-Post the board."

The Herald-Post was represented b fore the board by Ben Seelig Wash vice-president and attorney for t Herald-Post, and George R. Newma managing editor. The Courier-Journ and Times were represented by Eman Levi, vice-president and general manag and Brainard Platt, assistant to the vic president.



About a score of evening newspap members with Sunday morning editio appeared before the board of directors Tuesday afternoon seeking a readjustme of their assessments. They were head by Senator Thomas Reese, publisher the Springfield (Ill.) State Register. was their contention that the rate was t high.

When the board explained to them t principle on which the assessment w based, the majority appeared to be sati fied and the appeal was dropped.

The entire A. P. meeting, which h drawn a record attendance of nearly 6 members to New York in anticipation heated debate and a vote on the bo question, proved to be a tame and qui affair. After the request of Mr. Neyl that all attending refuse to discuss t question from the floor and the unanimo adoption of the resolution calling for a pointment of the committee of six, t convention died quickly. Only a corp ral's guard were on hand for the seco day of the convention, Tuesday, when r sults of the election were announced.

Although Mr. Noyes had issued a sp cial appeal to the membership to come the convention and hear both sides of t bond story, some of the surprise whi followed the abrupt ending of the contr versy was averted by the publication EDITOR & PUBLISHER of April 23 of t tentative resolution drawn up by the boa of directors and only modified slight before adoption.

The modifications were a change in t membership of the committee from 10 six, and an additional paragraph bringi in consideration of the protest rights.

Ben Seelig Washer and George R. Newman of Louisville (Ky.) Herald Post.

A. P. MEMBERSHIP 1,228, WIRE MILEAGE TOTALS 114,000, DIRECTORS REPORT

Members Asked to Express Opinions on Value of Advisory Board—Kent Cooper Describes Outstanding News Feats of A. P. Men

MEMBERS were called upon to express their opinions as to the value of the advisory board of the Associated Press in the annual report of the A. P. board of directors made public this week.

The board called attention to a feeling which it said existed that if the advisory board continued to function "it would only duplicate the work of the state associations."

Kent Cooper, general manager, made a report this year, the first time that the management has reported directly to the membership.

The report of the board of directors follows:

The Associated Press during 1926 had a normal, healthy growth in membership and the plans outlined for extension of and improvement in the service have been carried out by the management.

The total membership on Jan. 1 of this year was 1,228 as compared with 1,206 in 1925. The total wire mileage was 114,000 as against 111,000 in 1925.

The report of the general manager, which is herewith transmitted to the membership and made a part of the permanent records, gives in more detail the progress made during the year.

In the report of a year ago the board appealed to the membership for greater interest in and activity toward the development of the work of the association. It is more than ever obvious that without the interest and loyalty of the members of the organization an excellent staff will find discouragement.

In conformity with the resolution of the annual meeting a year ago respecting advisory boards, the board has received reports from the chairmen of the advisory boards. The work of the advisory boards is to be highly commended, but the board records the fact that there have been some expressions, including expressions by members of the advisory boards and others, that the excellence of the State organizations with their State meetings has created some feeling that the advisory boards, if they continue to function, would only duplicate the work of the State associations. The Board of Directors has no recommendation to make to the membership respecting the continuance of the advisory boards, but it believes each member of the advisory boards would welcome a general expression from the membership in the annual meeting as to whether they should be continued.

Respectfully submitted: Frank B. Noyes, Adolph S. Ochs, Clark Howell, W. H. Cowles, Elbert H. Baker, F. P. MacLennan, H. V. Jones, E. Lansing Ray, B. H. Anthony, Stuart H. Perry, F. I. Thompson, Robert McLean, J. R. Knowland, Walter A. Strong.

The report of Kent Cooper as General Manager was as follows:

To the Board of Directors:

The staff and membership during 1926 together brought a year of successfull achievement in this co-operative endeavor at covering the news of the world. The work of the staff, with a

(Continued on page 60)

TO HOLD FLOWER EXHIBIT

Employes of New York Sun Club Wi Compete for Prizes

The Sun Club, an employe organizatic of the New York Sun, has arranged hold an exhibition of Spring flowers the Sun Parlor at 280 Broadway in mi June.

Special prizes will be offered to clu members who live in the suburbs ar have flower gardens or greenhouses, ar who display the best specimens of the own cultivation, whether they be cut pot flowers.

There will be prizes for the best sing specimens, the best baskets of flowers an also for photographs of the best designe gardens of flowers.

After the judging, the flowers will b sent to hospitals.

VOTING ADVERTISING TAX

Citizens of Galveston will vote May 1 on a proposed charter amendment whic would authorize an advertising tax, t promote nationally the Texas port an resort city. The proposed levy is on cent on $100 property valuation.

A. N. P. A. LAUNCHES NEW WAR ON PRESS AGENTS

Decision to Enlarge Information Service Follows Withering Attack by Thomason—Bryan and Other Officers Re-elected—Newbold Heads Bureau of Advertising

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

MEMBERS of the American Newspaper Publishers Association took steps this week to strengthen their campaign against the ubiquitous press agent.

A new plan for expanding the bulletin service of the organization in order to keep the membership more fully apprised of proposed raids on newspaper news columns will be put into operation, it was announced on Thursday afternoon after S. E. Thomason, publisher of the Tampa Tribune, had delivered a stirring and satiric attack on the press agent from the convention floor.

Details of the expansion were withheld, but it is understood that the adopted proposal will furnish A. N. P. A. members with individual information on press agent activities. A newspaper will be notified, for example, when headquarters office discovers a press agent story which is being run in the news columns and which should be paid for in order to assist the publisher in buying more legitimate news and features and thus build up increased reader-confidence in his paper.

The convention was brought to a close on Friday afternoon with the re-election of John Stewart Bryan of the Richmond (Va.) News-Leader as president; Edward H. Butler, Buffalo Evening News, vice-president; George M. Rogers, Cleveland Plain Dealer, secretary, and Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune, treasurer.

Mr. Bryan appointed Fleming Newbold of the Washington Star to serve as chairman of the committee in charge of the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A., succeeding William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript, who has held the position for the last eight years. Mr. Newbold is a former chairman of the same committee, having held the post just prior to the election of Mr. Rogers. A vote of thanks was given the Transcript man who served ably and whose retirement was accepted with regret.

A resolution introduced by Marcellus Murdock, Wichita Eagle, was passed unanimously endorsing the work of the postal committee of which Jerome D. Barnum, Syracuse Post Standard, is chairman, and urging the Congress of the United States to relieve the publishers of oppressive postal rates by a return to the 1920 rates. The same resolution also urged the enactment of a measure providing for a new classification in the mails for shipment of newspapers by bundles.

Another resolution was passed empowering the general manager and agency committee chairman with the right to expend money for the investigation or prosecution of debtor members to the association.

Mr. Thomason's speech attacking the press agents and calling upon members to encourage their staffs to greater vigilance was one of the high spots of the entire convention.

One rule for every publisher to follow was thus expressed by Mr. Thomason:

"If anything comes in free from an outsider, throw it away. If a story is worth printing in a newspaper it is worth paying to get."

Mr. Thomason began his speech with a humorous reference to the proposed "Academy of Public Relations Experts," the organization of which is now underway in New York led by E. L. Bernays.

"The press agents held a meeting in New York the other day and are attempting to organize," he said.

"I understand that each and every press agent had his face massaged before he attended the meeting in order to keep it straight. Obviously it wouldn't have been proper for a press agent to crack a smile while a code of ethics was being formed.

"It is said that the press agents are continuing their organization plans in New York, but it is also rumored that there is some delay because a few have been unable to get their faces straight again."

After this opening sally, Mr. Thomason became serious, describing the free publicity problem as "one that goes more thoroughly into the guts of the newspaper business than anything else we have to discuss at these meetings.

"There is no other subject closer to our belts than this one," he said.

"If the press agent can continue to promise to prospective advertisers advertising of equal linage at a third the rate of legitimate paid space, and deliver the goods in clippings to his boss, we may as well wave goodbye to our revenue and make up our minds that reader confidence in our newspapers is doomed."

There was considerable laughter on the floor when Mr. Thomason read clippings from some of the most important newspapers in the country to show that the press agent was not able only to hoodwink the country editor.

He read examples of press agentry in the New York Times, the Boston Globe, the New York Herald Tribune and other newspapers.

The publicity in the Times cited by Mr. Thomason was for carbonated beverages. After he had concluded his speech, Louis Wiley, business manager, rose and expressed the belief that the story read by Mr. Thomason had been received by the Times over the wires at press rates and had been paid for by the newspaper at regular column rates.

Other examples of press agentry read by Mr. Thomason were promoting prunes, celotex, oranges, automobiles, and radio.

Mr. Thomason ended his speech with a recent personal experience. On the Tampa Tribune, he said, when he first became owner he found that an average of seven columns of free publicity was being carried each day. He cut it all out, and, instead of being condemned by his local advertisers, received their praise.

The morning session of Thursday was devoted to labor discussions during which the two schools of thought, the closed and open shop, were represented in reports and addresses from the floor. The whole tone of the discussion, it was explained to EDITOR & PUBLISHER afterwards, was plainly indicative of a general harmonious relationship between the men who publish and the men who print the newspapers of this land.

One promised action of the A. N. P. A. which developed out of the discussion is a survey of the press rooms of the leading metropolitan dailies in an effort to solve the press crew question which has long been a source of argument between members of the body.

This step is in line with a comprehensive codification of available union labor data, which has been started by Harvey J. Kelly, chairman of the special standing committee at Indianapolis, and which now is declared to be well underway. The purpose of this collection and classification of labor data is in order that members of the A. N. P. A. will have at their disposal a complete reference and information bureau for executives looking for assistance in local negotiations, it was explained.

The proposed survey of metropolitan press room crews was suggested when a member from the floor expressed the belief that the crews employed by the Boston Globe, a well known closed shop, were "far too large."

In reply, Charles S. Taylor, of the Globe, said the crew of seven men to each sextuple press included everybody, even fly-boys, packers, carriers, etc. Then it was that instructions were given for the survey of the eight or 10 larger cities in order to find out, if possible, of how many a crew for a sextuple press unit should consist. In addition it will be the purpose of the survey to obtain figures on the cost of labor for the different types of presses represented, a comparison, which, it was said, has never before been attempted.

After the morning session, Mr. Taylor said that his relations with the union had been most agreeable.

"In 40 years," he declared, "there has been only one illegal strike and no official strike in Boston.

"Personally, I would rather deal with an organized body in the mechanical trades. Of course Boston is a great union center. We get along very comfortably with organized labor there, the publishers having arbitration agreements with all but one union."

Crusaders for the open shop plan were Charles A. Webb, Asheville Citizen, who is chairman of the open shop committee; Col. Robert Ewing, New Orleans States, and Leonard K. Nicholson, New Orleans Times-Picayune.

It was on Thursday morning also that Victor F. Ridder of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung and Herold delivered his report as secretary of the committee on printing trade schools.

Others who joined in discussion of labor topics included: Edward J. Fehn, Evansville (Ind.) Courier-Journal; E. J. Lynett, Scranton Times; Philip Baldwin, Newark (N. J.) Sunday Call.

The resolution which makes it possible for the association to act as a body in the prosecution of bad agency accounts represents a new departure in A. N. P. A. practice. The association prosecutes many cases for members, but hitherto the cost has been borne exclusively by the publishers concerned. The resolution passed this year authorizes a fund of not in excess of $1,000 "for the purpose of investigating or prosecuting debtors to the association."

The full text of the resolution reads as follows:

"RESOLVED, That when the chairman of the advertising agents' committee and the general manager may conclude the interests of the membership require the expenditure of money for the purpose of investigating or prosecuting debtors to members of the association, and when other funds are not available for that purpose they may be authorized to draw for this purpose on the funds of the association up to but not in excess of $1,000 a year."

(Continued on page 19)

CALLED HOME BY MISSISSIPPI FLOOD

The imminent flood danger at New Orleans forced the return of James M. Thomson (left), publisher, New Orleans Item-Tribune, and Arthur G. Newmyer, associate publisher, even before the conventions opened this week. Photograph taken in New York before their return.

PUFFERY A MENACE TO ADVERTISING GROWTH

"New Competition" an Obstacle in Developing Certain Types of Newspaper Accounts States A.N.P.A. Bureau of Advertising in Annual Report—Associations Are Chief Prospects of Press Agents

A. N. P. A. Bureau of Advertising group. Left to right (standing): F. Guy Davis, Chicago manager; W. C. Flad, Jr., New York office; Thomas S. Moore, associate director; Allen B. Sikes, New York office; (seated): David B. Plum, Troy Record; W. F. Rogers, Boston Transcript; William A. Thomson, director of the Bureau. Mr. Rogers is chairman of the committee in charge.

ATTENTION of editors and publishers was called to "press agent competition" in the annual report of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association adopted this week by the committee in charge meeting at Bureau headquarters on April 25. Free publicity was described as "an obstacle in the way of developing certain types of newspaper advertising."

"The continued willingness of editors to give free space to advertisers who employ press agents has paved the way for actual competition between the press agent and the advertising solicitor." The report stated Advertisers, particularly associations advertising certain industries, are constantly approached by press agents who tell them they are unwise to spend money in legitimate newspaper advertising when they can obtain at the cost of a press agent's fee news column publication of promotional material.

Frequently these representations lead the advertiser to buy advertising in mediums other than newspapers and to employ a press agent to raid the columns of the dailies.

"The confident expectation of some advertisers in this direction may be found in the fact that at least two of them have complained to the Bureau that the halftone illustrations accompanying their press material were not printing well in newspapers. One of the advertisers offered this as a reason for not using newspaper advertising more frequently."

William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript, is chairman of the committee in charge of the Bureau. William A. Thomson is director and Thomas Moore associate director. Membership in the Bureau remained stationary last year at 366 newspapers. The organization had a total gross income of $99,318.30 and a total expense of $97,870.72. Activities during the past year of the Bureau were notably active as shown in the annual report herewith reproduced in full:

To the President and Members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association:

Your Committee in Charge of the Bureau of Advertising submits herewith its fourteenth annual report.

Estimates prepared by the Bureau indicate that newspaper national advertising in 1926 totaled $235,000,000, compared with $220,000,000 in 1925. This represents in increase of 6.7 per cent.

Reports of linage submitted by the membership suggest that Bureau members again averaged slightly better in national advertising than the general field. Sixty per cent of the membership reported to the Bureau their monthly volume of national advertising. An analysis of these reports discloses that the average volume of Bureau members showed an increase of more than 10 per cent in 1926 over the rpevious year.

The Bureau completed its fourteenth year of service with many indications of growth in usefulness and influence. Through its three offices in New York, Chicago and San Francisco, its representatives were in constant touch with national advertisers and agencies presenting the cause of the newspaper medium or responding to requests for help. Its activities covered a wider range than ever before.

The Bureau's custom of holding in confidence details of its daily work is well known to the membership. Your Committee, however, continues to keep itself informed personally and through written records of the organization's activities which are kept on file in the Bureau's three offices and are open to the individual inspection of Bureau members.

An analysis of these records shows the Bureau to have been in active touch with a long list of national accounts and, in many instances, the agencies handling the accounts. Each office covered its field to the limit of its capacity. Direct evidence continued to come to your Committee of the Bureau's constant influence in creating and conserving newspaper advertising.

It is, of course, understood that many factors enter into the development of advertising and that the Bureau's work is one of pure promotion. The result of much of its effort can never be measured. It is interesting, however, to observe that a surprisingly large percentage of the accounts on which the Bureau worked during the past year have shown an increase in the use of newspaper advertising.

For example, a study of 141 accounts on which figures are available showing newspaper expenditures in 1925-26 and on wh ch a record of Bureau solicitation exists, discloses the fact that 71 of these newspaper advertisers used $37,826,000 worth of advertising in 1926 compared with $22,830,000 in 1925, a gain of $14,996,000. Twenty-seven of the accounts in question showed that the previous average of expenditure was maintained in 1926.

Aside from this general picture, Bureau records contain at least 50 instances during the year where the Bureau's efforts to develop or conserve advertising were definitely rewarded. On occasion an advertiser makes a point of acknowledging the effectiveness of Bureau work. For example, the following letter is quoted from an advertiser for whose account an aggressive competitive fight was made:

"Our directors finally decided to make a test campaign in newspapers and the information which you submitted had a great deal to do with the decision."

That the impartial character of the Bureau's work in behalf of all newspapers places it in an advantageous position with national advertisers is indicated by the following comment from an officer of one of the growers' associations:

"It seems to me that the newspapers have in your organization a most valuable instrument for bringing about a widespread and intelligent understanding of the proper use of newspapers by advertisers. The very impartiality of your aymond Gunnison, Brooklyn Eagle, tells a good story, or Gen. Mortimer D. Bryant, his fellow Brooklynite (right) is due to be disappointed.

(Continued on page 62)

AS "E. & P." STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER SAW SOME CONVENTION-GOERS

W. H. H. Neville, advertising manager, and Rowe Stewart, publisher of the Philadelphia Record, take this photography business in all seriousness.

o of the many interesting visitors to the studio during the week were A. Rowley, Ashtabula Star-Beacon, and S. P. Weston, without whom no A. N. P. A. session for 30 years has been complete.

All the ivories flashed before the arc lights when photographer Jack Price chirped "Smile, now!" at W. W. Hawkins and Roy W. Howard.

nity personified in the countenances of E. J. Hayes and B. H. Anderson, Charleston (W. Va.) Mail.

Hoosiers swapped yarns and smokes when A. J. Wilhelm, Huntington (Ind.) Press, met E. J. Treffinger, Richmond (Ind.) Item.

RITCHIE ASKS REVIVAL OF "PARTISAN PRESS"

Governor of Maryland Says Newspapers Should Awaken Slumbering Political Consciousness of U. S —Vincent Massey Also Speaks at Brilliant Bureau Banquet

A PLEA for a return of the press to political leadership was sounded by Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland, addressing the annual dinner of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel on Thursday evening.

He deplored what he called the passing of "the old style partisan organ," and asked if it wasn't true that "politics is coming to be treated too much as a source of news only, and too little as a vital factor in our organized life."

"I suppose," the Governor ventured, "the answer may be that politics in the concrete and politicians in action, exhibiting their strength and their limitations, are news, while politics in its broader aspects is not.

"Yet if the average man is to be aroused to a consciousness of the importance of the political foundations which underly the whole social structure, if he is to be stimulated to sound political thinking, there is no effective agency to do it comparable to the press."

"I hope," the speaker concluded, "you will not regard it only as oratorical if I end by appealing to the press of the nation, not necessarily to preach and teach abstract politics, but as the most effective agency there is to assert and exert its enormous power of publicity in an endeavor, through selection, direction, creation and emphasis to reawaken this slumbering political consciousness of our people."

Another speaker at the brilliant Bureau banquet was Vincent Massey, the first Minister to this country from Canada. He spoke on economic conditions in the Dominion.

Toastmaster at the banquet was Marcellus Murdock, publisher of the Wichita Eagle.

A dash of humor was given to the affair by Sir Donald Campbell, introduced as editor of the Glasgow (Scotland) Herald.

Nearly 1,000 people attended, so large a gathering that tables were placed in the balcony of the Waldorf ball room.

In his address, Gov. Ritchie said in part:

"We are facing the constantly changing problems of a constantly changing world.

"In the field of business, we see an amazing growth and revolutionary changes. If the fundamentalists worry about religion, it is still true that the teachings of Darwin and Huxley have not introduced into our every day civilization the infinity of problems which have followed the discoveries of Watt and Franklin.

"In the Old World Mussolini prescribes for labor a charter of liberty which in some of its features is more like industrial servitude, while in this country through public opinion and enlightened self interest the workingman is developing his own charter of liberty, which is being shaped and directed by forces and factors constantly operating.

"In agriculture the problems presented by one who buys in a protected market and sells in the world market in competition with lower cost producing countries, cannot be belittled or ignored. We cannot blame them much longer on rural inertia or lack of organization or on merciless economic laws, and let it go at that.

"In world affairs we are playing a more and more dominating part, and as the creditor nation of the world and perhaps soon its international banker we are daily building bonds of union with other lands which are now shaping and must presently decide our ultimate international policies and relations.

"To newspaper men, like Solomon of old, there may be nothing new under the sun. Yet here we are in the midst of fermentation and revolution in almost every department of life. Read a work like Mark Sullivan's—that fascinating picture of these very days in which we live, and you are startled to see how nothing is old and that everything turns new with each recurring decade.

"The patterns of our social fabric seem almost as changeable as a woman's raiment. The greatest builders of all time, we do not hesitate to tear down tomorrow what we build to-day. Our economic structures and activities are constantly undergoing transformations and reorganizations that go to the very heart of old relationships and objectives. Applied intelligence and trained reason of the highest order are constantly searching for improvement, for new ways and new values. The brain of man was never so active nor so efficient.

"Yet in the midst of all this concentrated drive of brain and energy, politics in its fundamental and larger aspects seems to be regarded as relatively inconsequential. It is something to smile about or be bored about, to shout about or fight about, but not to think about.

"Its meaning and significance no longer grip the hearts and minds of the public. People do not pause to think what may be the relation of American political institutions to problems which concern them as intimately as those I have sketchily suggested—business, labor agriculture and world affairs, as well as an infinity of others.

"For the time at least the national disposition seems to be to regard questions of this kind as essentially economic and to leave politics to the politicians—unless perchance politics can confer some special boon. We regard talk about political philosophy simply as platform fulminations and look on practical politics as a sort of hypocritical craft that appeals chiefly to second rate men and to seekers after office. Thanks perhaps to the sporting impulse of the times, the masses incline to look on politics as a game between combatants rather than a fight for principles.

"As I try to understand the forces and cross currents of the hour, this shift of interest away from politics and political thinking in their larger aspects seems to me an outstanding and perhaps an ominous fact.

"Our civilization and all its superstructure rests on a political basis. The character and stability and integrity of our political edifice is of first importance, and for a people to forget that means real danger. It is not easy to avoid platitudes in discussing the subject, and yet one can hardly watch the play of economic laws and conflicts, or the startling diversities of our national life, without realizing the need for a reawakening of political interest and the application of political principles to the new perspectives, the new objectives, the new meanings of the day.

"Personally, I might call myself a political fundamentalist, and yet I know that in politics we all talk rather glibly about eternal principles and the wise and enduring pronouncements of the fathers. After all, in State-craft, as well as in other things, it is the experience of the past rather than its dogmas that have the most value. Even the fathers could not supply us with infallible political rules.

"What we should be strong for adhering to is that which has been tried and tested. If there is no such thing as political principles which have eternal validity, at least there are political precepts and practices which the experience of time teaches us are sound. There are certain old, fundamental truths of public policy and democratic government, certain proved principles of justice and liberty, which a nation forgets at its peril.

"It is to these we should adhere, not because they were pronounced by the fathers, but because they have been tried in the furnace of time and hammered out in the forge of experience.

"Yet my observation is that when you talk to the average man of fundamental political principles of this kind, and of their application to the conditions of today, he is apt to go cold. Speak to him of the necessity of maintaining the balance between the Federal Government and the States, of the need of strong States as factors in our national polity, of decentralizing the activities of the central government, of revitalizing the instrumentalities and the spirit of local self-government, of the liberties and freedom which belong to the individual not by grace or favor but by inalienable right—speak of these things and the average man is likely to yawn and pass it all as political clap-trap.

"With the public consciousness sen tive to a growing excess of governme of laws, of legalism, the public still d not seem to realize that we must ag fight out the old issue of what the St should be free to do and what the dividual should be free to do, and t there are a world of wrongs around which can only be righted through litical, action—not so much through political creeds as through new and libe and progressive application of old cre

"If there is a loss in political inte and values, I suspect this may be pa because the people feel, and with m justice, that the battles of politics too often sham battles, and that ther in them too much hypocrisy and pus footing away from realities, too m self seeking and often downright becility.

"Yet a democracy which refuses t political thinking is digging its grave, and particularly is this true w in the midst of a pervading prospe and surface quiescence, deep and fu mental forces are at work which, sibly sooner than we think, may expression in political acts and which will be constructive or dest tive, progressive or retrogressive, cording as the people shape and di them.

"So what interests me is how to awaken in the American voter consciousness of the meaning and portance of his political institutions his political rights and obligations the application of these to the prob around us; how we can get the pe to put into politics the same vital terest they put into all their other cerns and activities.

"All of which brings me back to Press. I would not have you think guilty of a platitude in alluding to power of the press. I do so only t mark that if this power has not ye tained its full development, it is n theless, thank God, a power which in law-ridden land is still free and regulated.

"In this seething world of humar pirations and human conflicts, I am vinced that we must look to the even more than to the forum, the or the class-room, for effective le ship. Particularly is this true in realm of politics.

"You make and unmake pol leaders. You set the tone of pol thought. The country's effective po thinking is really done or at least s by your newspapers, and I believe is done quite as much by your new porters as by your editors.

"If then political thinking is low ebb, may it not be because the has not been the effective agency it be to bring it back to its high estate

"Please do not understand m presumptuous enough to offer a lay advice, just as I would not hav charge me with flattery in speaki your power. My theme is the dec interest in political thinking, not shortcomings, if you have any. it not in some measure true that wi passing of the old style partisan politics is coming to be treated too as a source of news only and too as a vital factor in our organized li

"I suppose the answer may b politics in the concrete and politici action, exhibiting their strength an limitations, are news, while politics abstract or even in its broader asp not. Yet if the average man is aroused to a consciousness of t portance of the political foun which underly his whole social str if he is to be stimulated to soun tical thinking, there is no effective to do it comparable to the press.

David B. Plum, Troy Record, and William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript, retiring chairman, drink a toast in E. & P. punch to the Bureau of Advertising.

"Some historian—I do not recall whether it is Gibbon or another—speculates on just how different and better would have been the career of a man like Caesar or just what might have been the fate of Rome had there been anything like a public press. And I believe it true that if democracy had evolved nothing more than the institution of a free press, it would have justified itself as the world's greatest political discovery.

"Obviously this great power which is yours is not so much the power of intellect, great as that may be, as it is the power of publicity—a force relatively new in the history of mankind, and which if not directed by whatever may be the beneficent laws of its being could well prove a Frankenstein."

Mr. Massey said in part:

"The newspapers today, in a sense that applies to no other institution, are everybody's business. The modern Press is coterminous with civilization. One hundred per cent of the population of a great modern State is now under the influence of the daily newspaper. New types of journals have come into being to serve a section of the public to whom the older newspaper would be meaningless. Half the criticism that is levelled against the newspaper of today is due to the fact that, in the process of shaping itself to meet the needs of the outer fringes of literacy, the form and the content had to be altered and popularized. An English statesman of somewhat die-hard cast of mind once commented on the journalistic exploits of a contemporary—who shall be nameless—and in referring to the many pictures which one of his papers was created to carry, he said gloomily of its publisher: 'Not contented with creating a paper for people who cannot think, he has now produced a paper for those cannot read.' Adverse criticism of anything of course is crazy, criticism of any institution so close to us as the Press is inevitable. I do not intend for a moment to enter on the dangerous ground of the controversy as to whether the newspaper reflects or molds public opinion. (The discussion is perhaps as profitable as the classic debate on the curate's egg) but it is well, to remember, whatever may be the negative or positive force of the modern newspaper, the Press of no community can run counter to popular feeling, if we criticize the modern newspaper we must be equally critical of the civilization whose vagaries we require it to record for us daily, and for that civilization we each of us have our own measure of responsibility.

"It would be an impertinence for me to make any observations about the state of the Press. The layman is amazed by the stupendous growth of the modern newspaper and the unbelievable efficiency with which it is now produced (and in this development this country has played a brilliant part.) But this great mechanical enterprise must not obscure from us the fact, for I believe it to be a fact, that the quality, too, of the modern newspaper is steadily improving, that the best newspapers of the world were never better or so good. In a striking address to a group of fellow editors of the press, delivered by Whitelaw Reid, about fifty years ago, he forecast that the future of the newspaper lay in the attraction, on a greater scale, of first class minds to its production. If you will permit a layman to say so, I believe that Mr. Reid's prophecy is steadily being fulfilled, and that not only is the circulation of the modern newspaper infinitely wider, but, through the brains which serve it, the product is better which is being circulated."

A. N. P. A. LAUNCHES NEW WAR ON PRESS AGENTS

(Continued from page 15)

Mr. Barnum, of Syracuse, chairman of the postal committee, in a statement issued to EDITOR & PUBLISHER after the meeting on Thursday, said:

"Whether we see a return of the 1920 rates or not the members of this association are discovering an avenue of distribution which furnishes a faster and cheaper service than we could hope for under a revision.

"At this convention, for the first time, the members have come to a realization that a way is open for publishers to send newspapers to subscribers other than by mail at rates of about $1.75 other than by hundredweight, using motor truck. It has been proved by test that motor trucks furnish faster delivery at lower prices. Publishers are taking advantage of motor truck service in New York State, Indiana, Ohio, and Iowa at prices ranging from 50 cents per hundredweight to $1.00, depending upon the length of the haul."

An effort was made to obtain the passage of a resolution condemning the practice of pre-date editions. This is becoming an habitual debate at A. N. P. A. conventions. At French Lick, Ind., last November the protagonists on the subject were M. C. Meigs, publisher of the Chicago Herald-Examiner, and S. E. Thomason, then the business manager of the Chicago Tribune. Mr. Meigs supported the practice and Thomason argued the negative side.

It could not be learned by EDITOR & PUBLISHER before going to press who were the two chief debaters on the subject this week.

There was good natured chaff after the meeting in the corridors about how the resolution was offered and then rescinded. It is a generally known policy of the organization never to dictate to the membership either by resolution or more drastic fiat. The purpose of the organization is to aid publishers in gaining useful information and not to tell them how to run their business, it was explained by Mr. Taylor of the Boston Globe, who this year did excellent work in charge of convention publicity.

A frankly stated attack upon the Federal Trade Commission for its "vexatious, unjustifiable, and preposterous case" was the outstanding feature of the opening sessions Wednesday.

John Stewart Bryan, Richmond News-Leader, expressed the sentiments of the entire national newspaper organization, when in his address as president opening the convention, he warned the delegates that unless the association contracts for immediate and adequate legal defense the case might result in the "dissolution of the agency system; the abolition of the agents' commission, with removal of all differences between local and national rates; and the ultimate censorship of advertising by a government bureau.

"For more than a year this association has been a defendant in a vexatious, unjustifiable and preposterous case before the Federal Trade Commission," Mr. Bryan said. "Members generally are aware that the purpose of this proceeding is to convict this association of a violation of Federal statutes against unfair competition and a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

"There is no member of this association individually who is conscious of any such alleged dereliction and for the board it can be stated categorically that so far from entering into such conspiracy or agreement the association has on the contrary steadfastly avoided any such course of action.

"But in spite of conscious rectitude on our part it is due to the convention to point out that this proceeding involves the possibility of judgments being entered which in the absence of legal defense on our part may result in decisions being made and findings being enforced that will almost certainly result in:

"1. The dissolution of the agency system.

"2. The abolition of the agents' commission and the removal of all differences between local and national rates.

"3. The ultimate censorship of advertising by a government bureau."

The association took evident pains that this should be a public commentary upon the federal trade commission, which about a year ago started proceedings against the A. N. P. A., the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, the American Press Association, and the American Association of Advertising Agencies, charging conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The officials in charge of the conventions publicity saw to it that the portion of Mr. Bryan's address was copied out on flimsy for the convenience of the local newspapers and the press associations. It is the second time since the suits were started that one of the defendants named has voiced public disapproval of the action. The first time was at the Washington convention of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

The right of an association to support the theory of the propriety of a 15 per cent commission to advertising agencies for placing advertising business with its members is proving costly to defend. While no official of A. N. P. A. would make public the cost of the suit so far, it was estimated unofficially as involving a considerable sum. Whether or not a war chest will be voted will be one of the important outcomes of this year's convention which will end on Friday this week with the predicted re-election of Mr. Bryan who has ably filled one term as president.

On Thursday the man most commonly mentioned as successor on the directorate to the late F. G. Bell, Savannah Morning News, was Charles A. Webb, Asheville (N. C.) Citizen, who is now chairman of the association's open shop committee.

S. E. Thomason, formerly business manager of the Chicago Tribune, now one of the owners of the Tampa Tribune, started something when he attacked the dry mat basis of publication. Mr. Thomason made the assertion that shrinkage from use of dry mats during one year cost the Chicago Tribune an estimated revenue of $52,000.

There were dry mat defendants aplenty after this opening. Among the first to take the floor to advocate this modern printing practice was Victor Ridder, publisher of the New Yorker Staats Zeitung, who maintained that the shrinkage was easily taken care of to the complete satisfaction of the advertisers. It was pointed out that the shrinkage was easily overcome by use of an extra two-point rule. Mr. Ridder said the shrinkage was sidewise and not up and down.

Paul Patterson, Baltimore Sun, declared that the paper saving considerably outweighed any revenue loss, if the latter ever did result from use of dry mats. Before the Sun went on a dry mat basis, Mr. Patterson said, the width of the paper rolls they used were 72¼ inches. The Sun went on a dry-mat basis and the width was reduced to 71½ inches. A four point rule was used, further reducing the column width to 70½ inches.

W. E. Wines, manager of the mechanical department, whose report was made during the opening session, was the author of a book on dry mats which was highly commended by the members attending. He has also conducted a comprehensive survey on the subject of newsprint waste, comparing the experiences of some 100 A. N. P. A. members.

Other delegates who joined in discussion of mechanical problems and other topics brought up on the first day of this year's meeting included:

Chris H. Rembold, Cincinnati Times-Star; E. P. Adler, Davenport Daily Times; E. H. Butler, Buffalo Evening News; Charles D. Atkinson, Atlanta Journal; F. C. Withers, Columbia (S. C.) State; J. C. Peto, Paterson (N. J.) Press-Guardian; J. O. Adler, New York Times; B. H. Anthony, New Bedford Standard; John Parks, Chicago Tribune; W. A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; J. R. Walters, New York Evening Graphic; R. C. Patterson, Toledo Times; C. H. Stauffer, Phoenix (Ariz.) Republican; Paul Patterson, Baltimore Sun; F. S. Hoag, Pueblo (Col.) Star-Journal; J. E. Martin, New York Sun; E. J. Fehn, Evansville (Ind.) Courier; W. F. Schmick, Baltimore Sun; Frank A. Carroll, Indianapolis News; Hopewell L. Rogers, Chicago Daily News; and John H. Harrison, Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News.

Publication of firm names and trademarks in radio programs no longer presents the dangers to newspapers that were apparent a year or two ago, was the opinion expressed by several members of the radio newspaper station and studio operators which met in the Astor Gallery Wednesday afternoon under the chairmanship of Walter A. Strong, Chicago Daily News.

Mr. Butler, Buffalo Evening News, who is a vice-president of the association, was host to a dinner given to the A. N. P. A. directors on Wednesday evening at the Metropolitan Club.

Those attending the convention included:

Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press & Evening News—Arthur D. Hecox.
Allentown (Pa.) Call—P. W. Leisenring, D. A. Miller, C. J. Smith.
Alliance (Ohio) Review—Paul C. Siddall
Altoona (Pa.) Mirror—H. L. Johnston, Fred G. Pearce, D. M. Slep.
Amsterdam (N. Y.) Reporter-Democrat—Cardiner Kline.
Ashtabula (Ohio) Star-Beacon—H. H. Henes, C. A. Rowley.
Asheville (N. C.) Citizen—Charles A. Webb.
Athens (Ohio) Messenger—F. W. Bush.
Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution—Clark Howell, Jr.
Atlanta (Ga.) Journal—Charles D. Atkinson.
Attleboro (Mass.) Daily Sun—J. H. Vallette.
Auburn (N. Y.) Citizen—Victor J. Callanan, Rudolph W. Chamberlain, Lithgow Osborne, Charles D. Osborne, William O. Dapping.
Augusta (Me.) Kennebec Journal—Charles F. Flynt.
Aurora (Ill.) Beacon-News—A. M. Snook.
Baltimore Sun—W. F. Schmick, Paul Patterson, Stanley M. Reynolds, J. Edwin Murphy.
Barre (Vt.) Barre Times—Frank E. Langley.
Batavia (N. Y.) Daily News—G. S. Griswold.
Baton Rouge (La.) State Times & Advocate—Charles P. Manship.
Battle Creek (Mich.) Enquirer & News—A. L. Miller.
Battle Creek (Mich.) Moon Journal—N. E. Conine.
Beaumont (Texas) Enterprise & Journal—J. L. Mapes.
Beaver (Pa.) Daily Times—E. L. Freeland.
Beaver Falls (Pa.) Tribune—James H. March.
Bellingham (Wash.) Herald—S. A. Perkins.
Binghamton (N. Y.) The Press-Leader—Jules Livingston, A. B. Engelbert, R. E. Bennett.
Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald—E. D. DeWitt.
Birmingham, (Ala.) News—Victor H. Hanson.
Bloomington (Ill.) Daily Pantagraph—C. C. Marquis, Davis Merwin.
Bloomsburg (Pa.) Morning Press—Paul B. Eyerly, C. T. Vanderslice.
Boston American & Advertiser—W. L. Thomas.
Allentown (Pa.) Chronicle & News—John W. Stickle.
Bayonne (N. J.) Times—S. A. Lazarus.
Fort Wayne (Ind.) Journal-Gazette—L. G. Ellingham.
Kansas City (Mo.) Journal-Post—W. Laurence Dickey.
Little Rock (Ark.) Democrat—J. M. Branham.
Hearst Publications, New York—Victor Folacheck, J. C. Dayton.
New York Herald Tribune—Howard Davis.
New York Staats-Herold—Charles J. Fuerst.
Paterson (N. J.) Evening News—Harry B. Haines.
Philadelphia Bulletin—Lewis H. Hale, H. A. Hawkins.
Phoenix (Ariz.) Republican—Dwight B. Heard.
Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph—A. K. Oliver.
Pittsburgh (Pa.) Post—Harold G. Schryver.
Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette—H. M. Booth.
Passaic (N. J.) Daily Herald—Wm. C. McBride, Edw. H. Roomle.

(Continued on page 40)

CURIOSITY LET LOOSE AT WALDORF-ASTORIA

Information from Here and There Picked Up From Delegates Attending Annual Convention of Associated Press and American Newspaper Publishers Association—Publishers Report Good Business Across the Country

—By PHILIP SCHUYLER—

"HOW do you do, sir?"

"How do you do, sir?

"I wonder if your memory's as good as mine."

"Certainly is; bet you don't remember my name."

"Frankly, I must say ——"

"Wilson's my name."

"Of course, and mine's Jones."

Some 500 variations of this song were sung this week by 500 delegates, attending the annual meeting of the Associated Press and the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, as they walked along Waldorf-Astoria corridors getting practice for New York subway jams.

This is the great occasion of the newspaper year for editors and publishers to meet old friends and make new ones.

For the benefit of those at home and those who couldn't talk to all those present a troop of questions, after receiving the traditional EDITOR & PUBLISHER roses from Miss Ruth Smith, went walking in the hallways to pick up information and meet the delegates from east and west and north and south.

There was William B. Bryant, publisher of the Paterson (N. J.) Press Guardian, a director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, and chairman of the topics committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, wearing a black patch over his right eye. He had a good tale to tell about it, too.

There was trouble in his press room the other day. He was supervising the repair job. A crew was jacking up a machine with a two-by-four. Something slipped and Mr. Bryant paid for it through the eye. A painful gash two inches deep miraculously missed his eye.

Mr. Bryant was all for removing the bandage, but Mrs. Bryant came along to see that he didn't.

"I haven't been around the world this year," remarked Mrs. Zell Hart Deming, Warren (O.) Tribune, "Perhaps that is news."

And in addition Mrs. Deming reported business was unusually good out in her territory. Mills are all running and money is easy.

Jesse Jones, publisher of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, attended his first Associated Press convention. On the other hand he is quite at home at political conventions, undoubtedly understanding thoroughly the story behind the sudden harmony in A. P. ranks. He is director of finance of the Democratic National Committee.

"Speaking as a newspaper publisher," commented Mr. Jones, "I will admit that Al Smith is the outstanding Democratic leader at the present time. But I think the Southwest is more interested in Mr. Smith's position on prohibition than in his religious views. The Southwest is dry."

Hugh J. Powell, publisher of the Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal and Associated Press advisor, wasn't sure until the last moment he could come to this year's convention. The serious middle western floods cut off Coffeyville for two days and he was marooned there with no railroads running north, south, east or west.

Mr. Powell reported the flood was very serious, but, he said, it isn't "a knock-out."

"Kansas will have the biggest wheat crop on record," he said. "It is being estimated at 200,000,000 bushels, while the previous high was about 156,000,000.

"Only one-half of one per cent of the wheat crop will be hurt by the overflows. The big wheat belt is in western Kansas, safe."

Cyrus H. K. Curtis sailed into New York for the convention on his yacht, the Lyndonia. He had been in California and crossed the continent by train to New Orleans where he boarded ship and came up the coast, stopping at Tampa, St. Petersburg, Washington and other places on the way. With him at the Waldorf on Monday was Julian S. Mason, editor-in-chief of the New York Evening Post.

If you don't sail into Manhattan, motor in. P. S. McGlynn, president of the Moline (Ill.) Dispatch, and August Sundine, vice-president, elected the latter route, bringing their families with them in two cars.

They made the trip in leisurely fashion, using a whole week to cover the 1,500 miles between New York and Moline and spending two days in Philadelphia and two in Washington. Mr. Sundine's two children, Jack and Jean, were taking their second trip with their father to the A. P. convention by automobile.

Mr. McGlynn is one of the veterans among Illinois publishers. He started newspaper work as a printer's devil in Washington, Ia., in 1863. He was 13 years old then. In 1881 he went to Moline and five years later bought the Moline Dispatch, largely, he recalls, "on faith."

The Dispatch will begin the 50th year of its history next July 1 and is planning to celebrate the event.

Howard Davis, business manager of the New York Herald Tribune, and treasurer of the American Newspaper Publishers Association has new duties to attend to. The Seward National Bank of New York this week announced his election as a director.

Speaking of operations, Betty Brainerd, writer of "We Women" for Associated Newspapers, got up from a sick bed to be counted present at the Waldorf. Hardly more than two weeks ago, Miss Brainerd was operated on for appendicitis. She is a real trooper and absolutely refused to disappoint her public, quite successfully beating the censorship laid down by her friends who wanted to keep her safe for the summer tour. They carefully went through all newspapers with the scissors, cutting out references to A. P. and A. N. P. A. before permitting Miss Brainerd to read them.

On page three of the Sunday World, however, Miss Brainerd noted that quite a slice had been clipped out of a Franklin Simon advertisement. She came curious and looking at the table of contents she saw "Publishers' Convention starts . . .Page four."

After he had told about the purchase of the Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News, F. E. Tripp, general manager of the Gannett Newspapers, recalled Irvin S. Cobb's latest "favorite story."

It was at that dinner given at the Waldorf some months back in honor of William T. Dewart, president of the New York Sun. Some dancers, lightly clad, very lightly clad despite the winter cold, had held the spotlight, causing someone to remark about the low taste of the publishers.

Frank E. Tripp and Frank E. Gannett at A. N. P. A. convention.

"Of course," explained Mr. Cobb gravely, "It's the influence of the daily strip."

H. E. Ellis and the Denison (Tex.) Herald started housekeeping in a new building a few months ago. It's a compact two-story plant of re-inforced concrete, measuring 50 x 100 feet, and equipped throughout with new machinery of the latest and best manufacture. Business is looking up in Texas, Mr. Ellis declared.

"We Texans have learned our cotton lesson," Mr. Ellis said. "The cotton crop this year, I believe, will be materially reduced and there will be an increase in grain."

After having learned their lesson, Texans are going to spread the gospel among the northern heathen.

The Texas Daily Press League, according to William Edwards, publisher of the Denton (Tex.) Record Chronicle, has organized a special train, which will leave the Lone Star State on June 19 and spend 15 days visiting a number of important northern cities with 200 business and newspaper men on board packed in with samples of Texas products.

The train will visit Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, and Cincinnati.

Gov. Dan Moody will head the delegation.

"We want to show New York that there are more cowboys in it's night clubs than in the whole state of Texas," Mr. Edwards said. "All our cowboys moved to Hollywood long ago."

Tex Guinan thereupon rose and said: "Give this L'il boy a hand."

An interested spectator at the annual Associated Press meeting was Mrs. J. E. Pierce, wife of the owner of the Pottsville Daily Times. Although she doesn't work on her husband's newspaper she said she is keenly interested in all phases of journalism and hasn't missed an A. P. gathering in quite a number of years.

Thirty-nine public utility companies in Massachusetts reduced their rates, following the editorial crusade conducted by John H. Fahey through the Worcester Post when the local company was caught covering up some of its earnings in order to pay stockholders big dividends.

"Under Massachusetts law public utilities are entitled to take between six and seven per cent profit, with all money beyond that to go into reduced rates. Mr. Fahey explained. "When two local companies announced merger plans, recently, we uncovered what appeared to be irregulatities to permit money over the allowed 7 per cent to go into profits. The city government, although appraised, did nothing about it, and consequently of our own accord we engaged engineers, auditors, and put staff men to work on the story.

"Publicity, as usual, did the work, when city officials failed."

H. R. Dwire and Rufus Shore, who in August, 1926, sold the Winston-Salem (N. C.) Twin City Sentinel to Frank E. Gannett, renewed old acquaintances during the week. Both are now retired from active journalism, temporarily at least.

M. KOENIGSBERG ENTERTAINS 500 EDITORS

Newspaper Men Guests of I. N. S. and King Feature Syndicate — President at Seventh Annual "Garden Lark"—Many Notable Artists Entertain Gay Party of Publishers

Scene at M. Koenigsburg's "Lark" to throng of convention visitors.

NEWSPAPER editors and publishers estimated to number 500 were the guests on Monday evening this week at the Friars' Club, New York, of M. Koenigsberg, president of King Features Syndicate, Inc., International News Service and Universal Service. The party this year, the seventh annual affair of its kind, was given the name of "Garden Lark."

In keeping with the name, the Friars' banquet hall was decorated by King Feature Syndicate artists to resemble a garden and grove, the same theme being carried over into the table ornaments and souvenirs.

As in past years, the guests were entertained after they had dined by a musical and dramatic programme contributed by more than two score Broadway celebrities. Among these were:

Charlie Chaplin in person; Jane Cowl and Lester Allen, in a sketch, "Romeo and Juliet"; the Five Reillys, juvenile wonders, presented by Ned Wayburn; "Good Time Charlie," by William Collier; Francine Larrimore and company, in a "Chicago" scene, presented by Sam H. Harris; Bert Wheeler, comedian of "Rio Rita"; Howard Thurston; Eddie Jackson, Lou Clayton and Jimmy Durante; Leon Errol, Anastasia Reilly, Geneva Mitchell and Tiller Girls from "Yours Truly," presented by Gene Buck; Julius Tannen, the Chatterbox (courtesy of Earl Carroll); Will Oakland, radio tenor; Walter Kelly, dean of the Friars' Club; Jans and Whalen, comedy duo; Paul Whiteman and his band; "The Diplomats," with Vanessi; Allen Foster's dancing girls from "The Circus Princess" (courtesy Messrs. Shubert); the Pony-Service Plays; "Looloo Bull," with Nan Halperin, presented by David Belasco; the Hilton Sisters, Siamese Twins, presented by William Morris, and Theo Nelson by courtesy of Barnum & Bailey-Ringling Brothers.

There was also a "confidential demonstration of television."

The guest list follows:

Dais—M. Koenigsberg, William Collier, James C. Dayton, Herman Black, John Francis Neylan, Senator Capper, Senator Copeland, Mayor Walker, Hendrik Van Loon, B. C. Forbes, G. G. Young, Bradford Merrill, D. E. Town, V. H. Polachek.

S. K. Blandin, St. Paul, Minn., Dispatch; Frank S. Baker, Tacoma, Washington, Tribune; George Cameron, San Francisco, Cal., Chronicle; Gardner Cowles, Des Moines, Ia., Register Tribune; Clark Howell, Atlanta, Ga., Constitution; John Cowles, Des Moines, Ia., Register Tribune; Frank P. Maclenan, Topeka, Kan., State Journal; S. E. Thomason, Tampa, Fla., Tribune.

A. G. Carter, Fort Worth, Tex., Star Telegram; J. P. Considine, Philadelphia, Pa., Record; W. Lawrence Dickey, Kansas City, Mo., Post; C. W. Danziger, Pittsburgh, Pa., Chronicle Telegraph; Joseph J. Early, Brooklyn, N. Y., Standard Union; J. M. North, Jr., Fort Worth, Tex., Star Telegram; L. K. Nicholson, New Orleans, La., Times Picayune; Walter S. Deckey, Kansas City, Mo., Post.

Gene Tunney, King Features Syndicate; Dan R. Hanna, Jr., Cleveland, Ohio, News; Eugene Kelly, Sioux City, Ia., Tribune; James M. Kirkham, Salt Lake City, Utah, Deseret News; Col. Luke Lea, Nashville, Tenn., Tennessean; Norman E. Mack, Buffalo, N. Y., Times; A. K. Oliver, Pittsburgh, Pa., Gazette Times; E. G. Tripp, Sioux City, Iowa, Tribune.

Elzey Roberts, St. Louis, Mo., Star; T. A. Robertson, Cleveland, Ohio, News; Rowe Stewart, Philadelphia, Pa., Record; James A. Stuart, Indianapolis, Ind., Star; Frank W. Taylor, Jr., St. Louis, Mo., Star; W. F. Wiley, Cincinnati, Ohio, Enquirer; T. P. Welch, Philadelphia, Pa., Record; F. J. Burd, Vancouver, B. C., Province.

Paul Block, New York City; Richard M. H. Wharton, Harrisburg, Pa., Patriot News; Dwight E. Young, Dayton, Ohio, Herald; Ralph Jones, Dayton, Ohio, Journal; E. G. Burkam, Dayton, Ohio, Herald Journal; Joseph Kaufman, New York City; I. U. Sears, Madison, Wis., State Journal; C. C. Hamlin, Colorado Springs, Colo., Gazette and Telegram.

J. A. Callahan, San Francisco, Cal., Examiner; W. E. Miler, Hearst Newspapers; Roy D. Keehn, Chicago, Ill., Herald and Examiner; Clarence Lindner, New York, N. Y., American; M. C. Meigs, Chicago Ill., Herald and Examiner; W. M. McIntosh, San Antonio, Tex., Light; A. J. Kobler, American Weekly; H. M. Bitner, Detroit, Mich., Times.

W. A. Curley, Chicago, Ill., American; Dan Carroll, Albany, N. Y., Times Union; C. I. Pntuam, Washington, D. C., Times; Frank Knox, Manchester, N. H., Union Leader; R. G. Johnson, Albany, N. Y., Times Union; John D. Costello, San Francisco, Cal., Call; C. F. McCahill, Rochester, N. Y., Journal Post; James W. Brown, Editor and Publisher.

E. M. Alexander, New York American; F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson, Atlanta, Ga., Georgian; John E. Cullen, Baltimore, Md., News; Edgar D. Shaw, Boston, Mass., Advertiser; Avery C. Marks, Jr., Washington, D. C., Times; Edward F. Stumpf, Palm Beach, Fla., Times; W. A. Kelsey, Meriden, Conn., Journal; Lee Ettleson, New York, N. Y., American.

Moses Strauss, Cincinnati, Ohio, Times Star; I. N. Heiskell, Little Rock, Ark., Gazette; K. A. Engel, Little Rock Democrat; Lee Ellmaker, Philadelphia, Pa., News; Major John S. Cohen, Atlanta, Ga., Journal; Wm. L. Brice, Wheeling, W. Va., Register; A. R. Magee, Louisville, Ky., Courier Journel; G. B. Longan, Kansas City, Mo., Star.

Arthur C. Johnson, Sr., Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch; Edgar Wolfe, Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch; Harry Wolfe, Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch; A. E. Campbell, Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch; W. A. Ireland, Columbus, Ohio, Journal; Harvey R. Young, Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch; Harry Newman, Columbus, Ohio, Journal; Charles J. Reiker, Columbus, Ohio, Journal.

James Kerney, Trenton, N. J., Times; E. A. O'Hara, Syracuse, N. Y., Herald; E. H. O'Hara, Syracuse, N. Y., Herald; Frederick A. Stowe, Peoria, Ill., Journal Transcript; Dowdre Phinizy, Augusta, Ga., Herald; Merle Slane, Peoria, Ill., Journal Transcript; Walter Sterling, Houston, Tex., Dispatch; C. P. Slane, Peoria, Ill., Journal-Transcript.

Edgar Morris, Springfield, Ohio, News; D. J. Mahoney, Dayton, Ohio, News; John S. Knight, Akron, Ohio, Beacon Journal; M. M. Murdock, Wichita, Kan., Eagle; M. S. Foster, Clarksville, Tenn., Leaf-Chronicle; James G. Stahlman, Nashville, Tenn., Banner; Major E. B. Stahlman, Nashville, Tenn., Banner; J. H. Barry, Akron, Ohio, Beacon Journal.

W. C. Johnson, Chattanooga, Tenn., News; C. P. Hasbrook, Richmond, Va., Times Dispatch; R. B. Huber, Richmond, Va., Times Dispatch; P. S. Huber, Norfolk, Va., Ledger Dispatch; C. B. Johnson, Charlotte, N. C., Observer; Frederick Lewis, Norfolk, Va., Ledger Dispatch; S. L. Slover, Norfolk, Va., Ledger Dispatch; Frank B. Shutts, Miami, Fla., Herald.

John M. Branham, New York City; W. C. R. Harris, Toronto, Can., Star; John N. Harman, Brooklyn, N. Y., Times; Frank G. Huntress, San Antonio, Tex., Express; Harry Giovannoli, Lexington, Ky., Leader; Tom C. Gooch, Dallas, Tex., Times Herald; Carroll Shaffer, Chicago, Ill., Post; J. David Stern, Camden, N. J., Courier.

Charles A. Webb, Ashville, N. C., Citizen; Ed. Flicker, Bridgeport, Conn., Post; L. G. Ellingham, Ft. Wayne, Ind., Journal Gazette; W. C. Dowd, Charlotte, N. C., News; W. A. Dealy, Dallas, Tex., News; Ross S. Nelson, Ft. Wayne, Ind., Journal; A. Schaefer, Ft. Wayne, Ind., Journal; Emanuel Levi, Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal.

Burrows Matthews, Buffalo, Courier Express; G. M. Clendenin, Springfield, Ill., Register; George M. Bailey, Houston, Tex., Post Dispatch; A. C. Batten, British and Colonial Press, Toronto, Can.; William S. Bennett, Buffalo, N. Y., Courier Express; R. H. Booth, Detroit, Mich., Detroit Publishing Company; G. B. Bickelhaupt, Minneapolis, Minn., Journal; Thos. Rees, Springfield, Ill., Register.

Roland F. Andrews, Worcester, Mass., Telegram Gazette; George F. Booth, Worcester, Mass., Telegram Gazette; David J. Barry, Providence, R. I., Tribune; F. G. Billings, Hartford, Conn., Times; W. L. Thomas, Worcester, Mass., Telegram Gazette; D. J. Dwyer, Providence, R. I., Tribune; C. L. Sherman, Hartford, Conn., Times; H. G. Stoddard, Worcester, Mass., Telegram Gazette.

Theodore Bodenwein, New London, Conn., Day; S. Leigh Call, Springfield, Ill., State Journal; W. W. Chapin, Sacramento, Cal., Union; Lafe Young, Jr., Des Moines, Ia., Capital; L. E. White, Terre Haute, Ind., Star; Urey Woodson, Owensboro, Ky., Messenger; Harry F. Guthrie, Muncie, Ind., Star; O. G. Andrews, New London, Conn., Day.

Roger A. Connolly, New Haven, Conn., Register; L. B. Tobin, Lincoln, Neb, Star; Col. George A. Sweeney, Pueblo, Colo., Chieftain; Charles C. Maes, Houston, Tex., Post Dispatch; Marco Morrow, Topeka, Kan., Capital; M. R. Kane, Dubuque, Ia., Telegraph; Henry W. Marshall, Lafayette, Ind., Courier Journal; Brainard Platt, Louisville, Ky., Courier Journal.

John H. Sines, Trenton, N. J., Times; M. F. Hanson, Duluth, Minn., Herald; V. H. Hanson, Birmingham, Ala., News; Herbert S. Green, San Antonio, Tex., Express; O. G. Foellinger, Ft. Wayne, Ind., News Sentinel; Joel H. Bixby, Muskogee, Okla., Times Democrat; Arthur Remmel, Ft. Wayne, Ind., News Sentinel; W. M. Hines, San Francisco, Cal., Bulletin.

Rudolph Block, Charles Chaplin, Alexander P. Moors, George V. McLaughlin, Nathan Burkan, F. G. Bonfils, Denver, Colo., Post; M. L. Annenberg, Col. Robert Ewing, New Orleans, States.

C. B. Gillespie, Houston, Tex., Chronicle; Jesse H. Jones, Houston, Tex., Chronicle; Geo. Waldo, Jr., Bridgeport, Conn., Post; H. W. Brown, Cincinnati, Ohio, Tribune; W. H. Sammons, Sioux City, Ia., Journal; Will H. McConnell, Springfield, Ill., State Journal; J. W. Magers, St. Paul, Minn., Dispatch; J. E. Fitzpatrick, Salt Lake City, Utah, Tribune.

F. O. Larson, Tulsa, Okla., World; Eugene Lorton, Tulsa, Okla., World; F. R. Lord, Portland, Me., Press Herald; Hon. J. R. Knowland, Oakland, Cal., Tribune; E. J. Keist, Dallas, Tex., Times Herald; W. B. Jessup, Bremerton, Wash., News Searchlight; Guy P. Gannett, Portland, Me., Press Herald; R. L. Wardwell, Portland, Me., Press Herald.

Louis H. Brush, East Liverpool, Ohio, Tribune; Stewart Brush, East Liverpool, Ohio, Tribune; Roy D. Moore, Marion, Ohio, Star; W. P. McKinney, Marietta, Ohio, Times; F. B. McKinney, Marietta, Ohio, Times; Fred Bush, Athens, Ohio, Messenger; Grove Patterson, Toledo, Ohio Blade; E. M. Waterbury, Oswego, N. Y., Times.

A. A. Hoopingarner, Dover, Ohio, Reporter; L. N. Heminger, Findlay, Ohio, Courier; R. L. Heminger, Findlay, Ohio, Courier; L. S. Galvin, Lima, Ohio, News; W. J. Galvin, Lima, Ohio, News; A. L. Sedgwick, Martins Ferry, Ohio, Times; E. S. Myers, Middletown, Ohio, Journal; J. A. Chew, Xenia, Ohio, Gazette.

C. W. Gibson, Zanesville, Ohio, Times Signal; W. O. Littick, Zanesville, Ohio, Times Signal; J. J. Bernstein, Massillon, Ohio, Independent; C. F. Ridenour, Piqua, Ohio, Call; John D. Dun, Toledo, Ohio, Times; R. C. Patterson, Toldeo, Ohio, Times; Norman D. Black, Fargo, N. D., Forum; E. J. Ahern, Naugatuck Conn., News.

E. J. Lynett, Scranton, Pa., Times; W. R. Lynett, Scranton, Pa., Times; J. J. Mead, Sr., Erie, Pa., Times; J. J. Mead, Jr., Erie, Pa.,

(Continued on page 64)

Reports of A. N. P. A. Officers and Committees

ON this and following pages are the complete reports of the various officers and committees of the American Newspaper Publishers Association presented at the annual convention at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, this week.

PRESIDENT BRYAN'S REPORT

THE conventionalities of the occasion require me, as President, to make a few formal statements of the work of the Association during the preceding year. Like political platforms, these reports are necessarily almost inevitably a stereotyped recital of routine work which occasionally "point with pride." And unless the audience should think it was all plain sailing, the maker of a report like this is, just by the mere dramatics of the occasion, obliged once or twice "to view with alarm."

Even so, the past year has one or two incidents that should give every one interested in the publishing business a deeper sense of satisfaction and a higher assurance of intelligent co-operation than this organization has had for many years in the past. Though this advance has occurred during my incumbency, I have no hesitancy in referring to it, because I did not do it. I am just a herald of achievement. As has been said, others have labored, and we have gathered the fruits of their labors.

For some time your Board has been working on the very difficult problem of recasting the basis of dues. At a meeting last April the general report of the Committee on Dues was adopted, and the Board of Directors was authorized to adjust the basis with the purpose of establishing, as nearly as possible, full equality for all members. This has been done, with general satisfaction to the membership.

Having gathered the sinews of war, the next problem before the Association was how to use this new power. The first Fall meeting, held at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., under the administration of President S. E. Thomason, was an amazing success. Instead of having a sketchy discussion of piece-meal topics, the Association sat down and heard experts expound such vital problems as those involved in traffic or machinery. It was at once apparent that the Association needed, and would gladly support, two new departments. The Traffic Department, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Mathey, and the Mechanical Department, under the direction of Mr. W. E. Wines, were therefore set up. These departments were a part of the plan that the Board of Directors had in mind from the beginning, when it undertook to revise the basis of dues, and the success of these departments, even in the short time they have been functioning, has amply justified their existence.

It can be asserted that the Traffic Department has already, in its brief existence, saved more than its cost. And this is not all. Its mere existence, like the once celebrated gun behind the door, has had a markedly salutary effect upon the activities of railroads who were proposing new advances. Valuable as this Department has already proved to be, it can be rendered even more useful if the members will constantly bear in mind the fact that this Department is here in New York, and is maintained for the benefit of the members, and should be consulted and used by the members. If matters that are called to the notice of the Traffic Department require corrective action, that Department will do its best to bring about the necessary change. If, on the other hand, nothing can be done, the Department will advise the member that further activities would be useless.

Young as it is, the Mechanical Department has likewise proved its value and importance. If it had nothing else to its credit, the monograph on dry mats would have demonstrated the potentiality of this Department for the service of the Association. The motivating idea behind the creation of this Department was to collect and tabulate for the benefit of members the wisdom and the experience of all other members. Instead of giving the member the bare chance of stumbling on some other member who might know the answer to his problem, this Department was conceived with the idea that it would gather, codify and make available the experience of all members in the Association for the benefit of the other members. A really amazing number of queries have already been handled through this Department covering subjects such as protection of concrete floors, the proper height of bases, relative advantage of 12 and 12½ em columns, legibility of type faces, paste on dry mats, and numberless questions about matrix rollers, press blankets, paper breaks, press room troubles, paper hoists, and a flood of similar inquiries.

Of course, the Manager of this Department, Mr. Wines, is not omniscient, and, humanly enough, neither are the publishers, but an immense amount of lost motion can be taken up through this Department, and with each passing year its records, its experience and its value to the membership will increase in geometrical ratio.

The past year has been singularly free from labor troubles, and has been highly creditable to Mr. Harvey J. Kelly, who is Chairman of the Special Standing Committee. "Wisdom," once remarked King Solomon, "is profitable to direct." It would be hard to overemphasize the wisdom Mr. Kelly has brought to his Department; and now that we look back upon what he has done, it all seems so simple, that we wonder why it was not done before.

In the first place, Mr. Kelly has undertaken the task of codifying the record of eighteen years, thus making the various decisions and problems of every negotiation available to the members of the A. N. P. A.

Even of more important and spectacular value has been the studies in the scale analysis and survey of living costs and wages, which the Special Standing Committee has prepared. These analyses have been furnished to over 150 members, and in every case the Special Standing Committee has received immediate and grateful thanks from the members so assisted. It cannot be too strongly urged upon the membership at large to remember to use the office at Indianapolis as their liaison with the I. T. U. The latter organization has a president, four members of the executive council, with a statistical department, a corps of assistants, and twenty-five representatives in the field. To deal with so formidable and intelligent a body of negotiators would be an impossible task for an untrained and an uninformed publisher. And when skill and experience can be had by our membership for the asking, it is a piece of unwisdom amounting to stupidity not to avail ourselves of such assistance.

At the last Convention it was reported by S. E. Thomason, Chairman of the Committee on Arbitration Contracts, that he had negotiated a contract which had been tentatively agreed upon between his Committee and the Executive Committee of the I. T. U. This contract was approved by the Convention, with reservations providing for modification of the contract in several minor details. Shortly after the April Convention, our Committee met with President Lynch and the Vice-President and Secretary of the I. T. U., to consider the modifications suggested by our Convention. The Typographical Union's representatives presented no objection to the changes which we had suggested, but, to the surprise of our Committee, President Lynch insisted that the whole spirit of the tentative agreement should be changed by insertion of the provisions of those clauses of the old International Agreement which provided for the determination in advance of arbitrable matters on local arbitrations. Our Committee refused to make this change.

Last summer, President Lynch was defeated for re-election, by the Typographical Union, and was succeeded as President by former President Howard. President Lynch's four associates of the Executive Committee of the I. T. U. were re-elected. After the election, and before the I. T. U.'s Convention in Denver last Fall, Mr. Thomason had two meetings with President Lynch, but President Lynch refused to recede from his insistence that the whole spirit of the tentative agreement be changed. At the present time, with the President of the I. T. U. a member of one political faction of that organization, and its Executive Committee members of another faction, there appears to be no hope that the Union's officials will ratify the agreement as tentatively approved by its representatives and our own.

The growth of the work in the New York Office, and its services to the membership at large, have continued during the past year under the efficient and courteous management of Mr. Lincoln B. Palmer and his highly trained staff.

The Departments of Traffic and Mechanics have been housed at 270 Madison Avenue, and the whole administration of the Association is now under one roof.

The thanks of the entire Association are due to the Postal Committee and its amazingly efficient and active Chairman, Mr. Jerome D. Barnum. It is true that no change in postal legislation has been actually made, but Mr. Barnum's activity and insistence have jolted even the Post Office Committee of Congress into an appreciation of the fact that the newspaper publishing industry as a whole has been singled out for legislative oppression that was incredibly stupid, if it was not deliberately punitive. No more interest or vivid statement will be made at this Convention than that involved in the report of the Postal Committee.

The Open Shop Department has continued its valuable functioning in that it always has at the disposal of the members the names of men who can be called on in an emergency. It further functions in an administrative capacity, performing for publishers who do not desire Union contracts the same sort of work that is done for the Union offices through the activities of the Special Standing Committee.

For more than a year this Association has been a defendant in a vexatious, unjustifiable and preposterous case before the Federal Trade Commission. Members generally are aware that the purpose of this proceeding is to convict this Association of a violation of Federal statutes against unfair competition and a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

There is no member of this Association individually who is conscious of any such alleged dereliction, and for the Board it can be stated categorically that so far from entering into any such conspiracy or agreement the Association has on the contrary steadfastly avoided any such course of action.

But in spite of conscious rectitude on our part it is due to the Convention to point out that this proceeding involves the possibility of judgments being entered which in the absence of legal defense on our part may result in decisions being made and findings being enforced that will almost certainly result in:

1. The dissolution of the agency system.
2. The abolition of the agents' commission and the removal of all differences between local and national rates.
3. The ultimate censorship of advertising by a government bureau.

The excellent work of the Radio Committee under the Chairmanship of Mr. Walter A. Strong has been of great service to those members of the Association which have a personal or general interest in the field of Radio broadcasting.

Never in its career of usefulness has the Committee on Printing Trades Schools given a more impressive record

A. N. P. A. GENERAL MANAGER AT DESK

L. B. Palmer

f services. Especially valuable is the evelopment of the new school for photo ngraving. I direct your earnest attenon to the statements that will be made y Mr. Victor F. Ridder, Chairman of his Committee.

The report of the Paper Committee ives the statistics and opinions of that ple Committee, under the Chairmanship f Mr. T. R. Williams.

The investigations and suggestions of Mr. E. H. Baker, Chairman of the Committee on National Forest Resources are highly stimulating.

As all the reports will be submitted in printed form I take the liberty of urging that these researches into various branches of the publishing business be read and considered by the membership.

JOHN STEWART BRYAN,
President.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE A. N. P. A. TRAFFIC COMMITTEE

AT the Annual Convention held in New York, April, 1926, authority was ven for the establishment of a Traffic epartment of the A. N. P. A.

Your Committee, after thoroughly canssing the field, selected Mr. W. J. athey as manager of the new departent. Mr. Mathey had been connected ith the Freight Traffic Department of e Erie Railroad for about twenty years, tterly in the capacity of Assistant Genal Freight Agent in charge of rates id Interstate Commerce Commission atters.

He assumed his duties with the A. N. A. September 1, 1926. Appended reto is his report for the period from eptember 1, 1926, to March 15, 1927, nich speaks for itself and your comittee has no comments to offer thereon, cept to point out that the department s already achieved substantial results r the membership, and, in the short ne of its existence, has clearly demonrated its value.

In its last report, made to the 1926 nual Convention, your committee com ented on the general investigation of eight rates initiated by the Interstate ommerce Commission under the terms the Hoch-Smith Bill. This bill, it will recalled, directs the Commission to ake a survey of the rate situation with e idea of lightening the freight burden agriculture, which means, of course, at any reductions made for the benefit agriculture will of necessity result in gher rates on other traffic. In order to cilitate the work, the Commission has opted the policy of dividing its investition into separate sections, each one aling with one commodity. Thus far, ain, cotton, iron and steel, furniture d petroleum have been segregated and arings assigned. While, up to the pres- time, no definite announcement has en made as to paper, it is strongly mored in various quarters that paper ll soon be put on the list because of belief in certain circles that the rate ucture on paper is, as a general propoion, too low. This is a matter of vital concern to all of us and is a situation which must be carefully watched, so that when the time comes we may be prepared to resist strongly any attempt to place a further freight rate burden on the publishing industry.

The continuing shift of production of newsprint from the United States into Canada makes the problem of equitable rates from Canada one of increasing importance to our membership. There is one particular angle of this question which is viewed by us with a good deal of apprehension, and that is the question of jurisdiction. In several recent complaints before the Interstate Commerce Commission involving the reasonableness of rates on paper from Canada to the United States, the Canadian carriers have taken the position that the Interstate Commerce Commission had no jurisdiction and refused to comply with orders of the Commission affecting such rates. The Commission, on the other hand, has consistently held that it had jurisdiction, at least so far as concerns that portion of the haul performed in this country. However, the Commission has in recent cases invited a test before the Supreme Court and there are now several cases of this nature on their way to that tribunal. If the Supreme Court should decide in favor of the carriers (and many good lawyers believe it will be obliged to do so) it will, with the decreasing supply of paper available in the United States, place the publishers at the mercy of the Canadian carriers. This is a situation which merits considerable thought by all of us. Perhaps the problem can be solved by a treaty between the United States and Canada and the establishment of a joint commission to have jurisdiction over international rates, or by agreement between the I. C. C. and the Canadian Railway Board. In any event, some plan will have to be worked out to solve this difficulty.

E. M. ANTRIM, Chairman.
A. R. MICHENER.
WM. L. MCLEAN, JR.,
S. E. THOMASON.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE A. N. P. A. TRAFFIC MANAGER

OLLOWING is a report of the activities of the Traffic Department ce its inception Sept. 1, 1926.

When the department first began to ction it was necessary to secure from of the members certain information ich would assist the department in its lysis of the traffic situation. For this pose a questionnaire was prepared sent to members Sept. 7. The reinse to this questionnaire was very tifying and of the total membership y 85 have failed to respond up to this e. Those members which have not urned the completed questionnaire are ently requested to do so, as it is estial that the department have complete ormation as to the various items listed the questionnaire.

Following receipt of the individual rels, the department was enabled to disver various misalignments of rates, etc., some of them have already been taken for correction.

While there are many traffic matters of interest to the members which require investigation and adjustment, it has not been possible to begin work on all of them, but it has been necessary to proceed with the idea of first tackling the most flagrant maladjustments and those which involved the largest savings of money.

In the report to the fall convention in French Lick, last November, your traffic manager mentioned several matters which were receiving first attention. Brief comment as to their present status follows:

1st—Rates on newsprint to points in the territory between Buffalo, Pittsburgh and the Mississippi River. As explained by the chairman in his remarks at previous conventions, the rates from all producing points between Espanola, Ont., and Woodland, Me., to the territory in question are the same regardless of the vast difference in distances. It is our opinion that lower rates are warranted from the Western section of that rate blanket and the department has been giving consideration to the best method by which a better adjustment could be brought about. It is pleasing to report that one of the newsprint companies located in New York State has now filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission in which they attack the existence of this large blanket and are asking that it be broken up and lower rates established from New York State than apply from Maine and other points further distant. Your traffic department will intervene in this complaint to protect the interests of the membership and will do all in its power to co-operate with the complainants.

W. J. Mathey

2nd—Rates on newsprint to the South. The carriers have not as yet announced the new figures which they intend to publish from Eastern United States and Canadian points into Southern territory following the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Southern class rate investigation. Your department is keeping in close touch with this situation and at an opportune time will endeavor to bring about a readjustment of the rates which at present are in a rather chaotic condition.

3rd—Rates on newsprint to points in New England. Considerable time has also been devoted to a study of this situation and as a result the conclusion has been reached that the rates to points in New England, particularly to points on the New Haven Railroad, are out of line as compared with other rates. The matter was taken up with the N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad in an endeavor to arrive at an amicable adjustment but that carrier has declined to make any reductions on the ground of poverty. Recommendation has therefore been made to the New England members that a formal complaint be brought seeking a reduction in the rates and the department is now awaiting the result of a canvass of the New England members which has been undertaken through the New England Publishers Association to determine the sentiment of the members as to joining in this complaint. If the complaint is brought and your department is successful, it will mean a saving, roughly, of from $50,000 to $75,000 per year.

4th—Rates on newsprint paper to New York City. This is one of the most important adjustments from a monetary standpoint with which your department has to deal. The annual consumption of newsprint paper by members in Greater New York will run over 500,000 tons. Most of this paper comes from points in New York State and Eastern Canada. The rates assessed on these shipments, it is believed, have been and are altogether too high and out of line as compared with rates for similar distances and under similar circumstances in other sections of the country. Much time has been devoted to making an analysis of these rates and the conclusion has been reached that a reduction of $1.00 per ton would be warranted. Your department's findings have been submitted to the interested members in New York City and it is working on the preparation of a formal complaint to be filed in their behalf with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the New York State Commission. Of course, in an adjustment of this sort, it is almost impossible to induce the carriers voluntarily to reduce their rates, and resort to the regulating bodies, therefore, becomes necessary. In the event of a successful termination (which is strongly indicated), it will not only be of benefit to the New York publishers but also to the publishers throughout the entire Eastern Seaboard territory, and in the judgment of this department will result in a saving of over $500,000 per annum.

The foregoing are the most important adjustments with which the department is now confronted, but there are many other matters which also have been taken up with a considerable degree of success. A few of the more important are as follows:

1st—The question of rates for the transportation of newspapers in baggage service is one which has been prominent for some time past, particularly in connection with the rates in the territory lying between the Atlantic Seaboard and the Mississippi River. The situation has been that there have been various bases of rates existing on the various carriers. Generally speaking, in the territory between Buffalo and Chicago and St. Louis, the rates have been 60c per 100 pounds except that the Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroads have rates of 50c. Certain papers in Ohio took up with the New York Central Railroad the question of reducing rates on its line from 60c to 50c. That line had a rate of 60c applying on its line west of Buffalo whereas east of Buffalo the rates were on a 30c basis, except New York City in which case the rate was 60c.

That carrier, to meet the competition of the B. & O. and Pennsylvania, offered to make a uniform rate of 50c over its entire line except from New York City. This would have meant a reduction of 10c per 100 pounds in its rates west of Buffalo but an advance of 20c per 100 pounds in New York State or an increase of 66⅔ per cent. Certain other lines operating between Buffalo and New York also have 30c rates and the carriers decided to make all of the rates 50c. In conjunction with the New York State Publishers Association, this department protested against any such drastic advance being made in the New York State rates and at the same time endeavored to impress upon the carriers the justice of making the reduction west of Buffalo.

It is pleasing to report that these efforts have borne fruit because, effective April 1, practically all of the lines in so-called Central Passenger Association territory reduced their rates from 60c to 50c per 100 pounds which will mean a saving of thousands of dollars to the membership. At the same time the carriers operating east of Buffalo have agreed to postpone the advance in the New York State rates pending opportunity for a full and free discussion of the subject with the publishers. It is hoped that the department may be successful not only in blocking the advance but also in securing a further reduction in the rates west of Buffalo, particularly for the shorter distances. It is to be hoped that ultimately reduction may be secured from the present 50c rates now imposed on the traffic in the State of Pennsylvania.

It is only fair to say that the credit for securing the reduction on the New York Central Railroad belongs largely to G. M. Rogers of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, who initiated the proposition with the New York Central officials and carried it to a successful conclusion.

The special committee of the New York State Publishers Association, consisting of Messrs. Barnum, Butler, Gannett and Hecox, has been largely instrumental in securing postponement of the proposed advance in New York State.

Negotiations are under way with the lines operating west of Chicago and certain lines in the South to secure reductions in the baggage rates in those territories.

2nd—The department was successful in securing a favorable decision from the New York State Commision and the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with proposed advance in baggage rates by the Olean, Bradford & Salamanca Railway which line attempted to raise its rates from 35c to 50c per 100 pounds with a minimum charge of 15c per bundle. This increase if allowed to go into effect would have meant additional charges to members of approximately $1,500 per annum.

1st—The department has secured a reduction of $1.70 per ton in the rate on newsprint paper from New York State to Roanoke, Va. This will mean a saving to our members at that point of approximately $2,500 per annum, and in addition thereto the carriers have promised to submit to the Interstate Commerce Commission an application to refund the excess charges collected since Oct. 1, 1924, which will amount to more than $6,000.

2nd—A reduction has been secured of 70c per ton in the rate from Glens Falls and Corinth, N. Y., into Middletown, N. Y., which will save a member at that point approximately $250 per annum.

3rd—The department has also secured the promise of a reduction in the rates from the same New York points into Kingston, N. Y., of 50c per ton which will undoubtedly become effective in the near future.

4th—A reduction has also been obtained of 80c per ton in the rate from Ottawa, Can., to Brockton, Mass., which means a saving of about $900 per annum to one member at that point.

In addition the traffic department has presented to the carriers numerous other individual cases of misalignments in rates and in some cases has secured promises of reduction while in others it is still negotiating. The principal cases of this nature are rates from the Pacific Coast into Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico points, and rates from New York State producing points into Albany and other points in that vicinity.

In the report of the traffic committee submitted at the annual meeting last April, reference was made to the endeavors of the carriers to alter the description of cores. This proposition was revived last Fall. Your traffic manager appeared at several meetings of the classification committee and an agreement with the carriers has been reached for a description which will have the effect of enabling the carriers to rectify the objectionable situation with which they were confronted, and at the same time will result in no increased charges to the newspaper publishers.

In that same report reference was made to the question of proper rates on carload shipments of paper winding cores. It will be recalled that the Interstate Commerce Commission, based on a complaint of certain publishers, ordered the establishment of the sixth class rates from a few specific points but this decision did not apply to points in Canada. In October of last year this department took up with various carriers the question of making voluntary reductions based on the newsprint rates applicable in the reverse direction, and has met with a considerable measure of success. Rates on this basis are now in effect from Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Dayton, Indianapolis, Louisville, St. Louis and Cincinnati. Negotiations are still pending with carriers as to similar rates from other points where there is a carload movement of cores and there is little doubt that the department's purpose will be accomplished. There is no accurate data as to the amount of traffic involved but it is estimated that this will save the publishers several thousands of dollars per annum.

The department secured substantial reductions in the less than carload core rates for certain small papers in New England coupled with a refund of the excess charges assessed for the past two years, and now has before the Southern and Western lines propositions for reduction in the less than carload rates on cores which, if granted, will be of advantage to most of our members. It is intended, as soon as the carload rate proposition is disposed of, to approach the carriers for a reduction in the L. C. L. rates in the Eastern and Central territories.

Another matter in which this department was able to be of considerable assistance to members was in connection with a recent attempt of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. to coerce the trucking companies in New York to set a minimum figure below which they would not contract with the New York City publishers. The matter reached the stage where the carrier served notice on the trucking company that, unless it would agree to establish this minimum charge, it (the trucking company) would lose its contract with the carrier. If this attempt had been successful, it would have meant additional trucking costs for members in the City of New York of approximately $20,000 per year. However, in cooperation with a committee of the New York publishers, the department succeeded in having the New Haven Railroad temporarily withdraw its notice and it is hoped that it will not again be revived.

Effective Dec. 1 the service of auditing freight bills for our members was established, and for the months of December, January and February 7,100 freight bills were audited, and 71 claims for overcharge and reparation, many of which have already been collected, were filed with the carriers.

The question of rates on printing ink in less than carloads has also been receiving our attention. The National Association of Printing Ink Makers has filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission attacking the present ratings in Eastern and Western territories. The department intervened at the hearing, which was held on March 12 in order to assist the manufacturers in an endeavor to secure reductions which will, in a great many cases, accrue to our membership, particularly the smaller papers which buy ink in L. C. L. lots.

Other matters have come up during the past six months in which it was necessary for your traffic department to appear at public hearings before various freight associations to protect the interests of the membership. One of these was an attempt on the part of the New England lines to increase rates on paper winding cores within the New England territory. Another dealt with the proposed amendement of the classification with respect to the requirements for bundling shipments of old newspapers and scrap paper.

In addition to these major activities, it has also handled numerous other matters looking to the protection of members, the details of which will be omitted here.

Summing up the situation, experience up to the present seems to indicate clearly that the field for doing constructive work for members in traffic matters is practically unlimited. As yet the surface has been barely scratched and it is firmly believed that at the next Convention, a more substantial record of accomplishment can be submitted.

W. J. MATHEY, Manager.

REPORT OF THE MECHANICAL COMMITTEE

THE new mechanical department, which was authorized by this convention one year ago, and which, with the new traffic department, has been inaugurated as the result of the increased funds now available to our Association, came into actual being in November last, under the management of W. E. Wines, who at that time was associated with the Extension Work of the University of Wisconsin; earlier in Mr. Wines' experience he had been associated with the Chicago Tribune, Minneapolis Tribune and New York Times in connection with their manufacturing activities.

In considering the accomplishments of this new division of our work thus far, it must be borne in mind that your Committee and Mr. Wines have been confronted with the problem of creating a wholly new thing—with one exception, nowhere in this country, so far as I know, is there what might be termed a consulting newspaper engineer, having no interested collateral affiliations, although there are men of ability associated with the various newspaper equipment manufacturing companies. As in building any new thing, we have had to start at the foundation, and we hope and believe that we have built well what we have done.

As the structure rises it must be, first of all, efficient and wholly adequate to the needs of this association, but your Committee asks you to remember that we have, in the past six months, made only a beginning, and your suggestions for future direction are requested.

Your Committee will leave to Mr. Wines the privilege of telling you what has thus far been accomplished, and immediate plans for the future.

GEORGE M. ROGERS, Chairman.

A. W. Fell	John W. Park
Chas. F. Hart	Hawley Quier
F. H. Keefe	Timothy Beacom

REPORT OF THE MANAGER OF A. N. P. A. MECHANICAL DEPARTMENT

THOSE of you who attended the convention at French Lick last Fall may have some recollection at my attempt to discuss and vaguely outline the plans and aims of the mechanical department. It was a decidedly difficult task because the Mechanical Department then had no real existence. It was little more than an idea in the minds of those who sponsored it, and even those closest to it and most interested in its success had no exact ideas as to how the department and its work should be developed.

The situation today is very decidedly different. Not only have we made a real start and have, we hope, a few worthwhile accomplishments to our credit, but (and this is very much more important) the path along which we should proceed and the lines along which the work of the mechanical department should be developed are much more clearly defined. Whether or not our progress and accomplishments have been satisfactory, is left to your decision. The membership of this association is logically and rightfully the final judge of the measure of the success of any of the association's departmental activities.

You are all aware, of course, of the activities of the Mechanical Department which have manifested themselves in the form of bulletins or circular letters which have been delivered to you through the mail. It is not, therefore, necessary to devote any time to these items further than to say that that the bulletin on the dry mat, in particular, met with an apparently very cordial reception and that requests for about forty additional copies were sent in by our members for the use of their various mechanical staffs.

The dry mat bulletin touched upon and discussed briefly a matter of considerable pecuniary interest and importance to newspaper publishers, namely, the lengthwise shrinkage of the dry mat and its relation to and effect upon advertising revenue. It was suggested in the bulletin that a large but possibly unrecognized loss in advertising revenue may be associated with the use of dry mats.

Another service which the mechanical department has been rendering to the membership is the answering of specific inquiries. Up to the present time nearly ninety such inquiries have been received. These questions cover a wide range of subjects and are always welcome. Each inquiry, after a satisfactory answer has been obtained to it, adds something to the store of information in the files of the department which is immediately available to other members upon reque
Another reason such inquiries are w come is that they furnish clues as to m ters that are of interest, and in many ca the subject matter of the inquiry is such general interest or fundamental i portance as to suggest profitable fie for the extension of the department's tivity.

A number of letters have been ceived relating to topics directly connect with printing, or it might be more sp cific to say quality of printing. These quiries open up a vast field of investig tion as to the physical properties of pa and the relations existing, or which sho exist, between ink and paper in order make possible the production of a sat factorily printed newspaper. One speci subject which has appeared several tim in correspondence is the covering pow of ink, or to put it more concretely, h much ink should be required to pr some definite number of pages. Anot point in connection with printing wh has been brought up is the annoying a prevalent disposition of ink to stri through the paper and show on the verse side. Touching on these matters department has had some slight cor spondence with the Bureau of Standa in Washington and has obtained from and also from the Technical Associat of the Pulp and Paper Industry, so publications containing technical inform tion on the testing of paper and ink.

Another important matter which engaged attention is that of establishi a standard thickness for electrotypes a other plate matter sent out by advert ing agencies. This undertaking is outgrowth of an inquiry received fro member. That a standard thickness electrotypes, which will permit the use a base of standard height, is someth to be desired, needs no argument. St a standard would be of advantage b to the newspapers and to the adv
tisers.

Ink rollers and press blankets subjects concerning which considera interest has been manifested and wh have appeared with such frequency letters of inquiry as to prompt the se ing out of a rather considerable num of letters asking for reports as to experience of pressmen in various offi with different sorts of rollers and bl kets. Although much remains to be d in this direction, nevertheless considera valuable information, particularly w regard to rollers, has been collected some of it is fairly conclusive.

A few days ago a long letter was ceived from the business manager o western paper on the subject of the ba weight of paper. He presented a cussion of the merits of the system checking basic weight from product as compared with the method of find the weight of a sample sheet of defi size. This correspondent suggests t this is a matter worthy of attention investigation on the part of the A.
P. A., in which suggestion your mana heartily concurs.

Several letters have been received b ing upon such subjects as—choice of t faces for body matter; column widt and column rule sizes. Such inqui suggest that it would be desirable to p pare a bulletin dealing with the it mentioned and their relation to the e nomical utilization of white paper.
may be that such a study, includin careful consideration of the factors volved, will point the way to a desira page width, based on economic mechanical conditions. It is rather g erally admitted that a standard p width which, in turn, would permit sta ard paper roll widths is highly desira nd that such a standard would be of vantage to both publishers and pa manufacturers.

The largest project of the departm probably the most important that has b placed on its program, is the investigat of news print waste. Work on this p ject has been only recently inaugura and it is perhaps not too much to say t it will never be completed because ne print waste, like the poor, is always w us. The reason for placing this in tigation on the program at this time spite of the magnitude of the undertak

is the enormous amount of money involved and the very great saving which can be effected for our publishers if the work is prosecuted vigorously, intelligently and successfully. Reports covering various periods prior to March 1 have already been received from about 115 of our members, with promises that a larger number will report at a later date.

In the preliminary letter which was sent out to start this investigation, the statement was made that news print waste cost members at least $5,000,000 per year. The total annual news print consumption of our membership is at least 2,500,000 tons. It was assumed that news print waste would average 5 per cent, or 125,000 tons per annum. A fair average figure for the cost of print paper delivered in the pressroom is probably not far from $70 per ton. If an allowance of $10 per ton is made for the re-sale value of the waste, the net cost of all paper wasted will be $60 per ton. At $60 per ton 125,000 tons amounted to $7,500,000. In order to be on the safe side, the waste percentage was reduced from 5 per cent to 4 per cent and its net cost figured at $50 per ton, thus arriving at the figure of $5,000,000. It is entirely probable that it exceeds this figure. This belief is justified by the statement of one of the large paper companies that the average of total waste of all classes for twenty-three publications reporting to it during the year 1926 is 4.54 per cent. In evaluating this in money this company uses a figure of $72.50 per ton.

To what extent this waste can be reduced is of course problematical and at the present time is largely a matter of opinion, but it is believed that a 20 per cent reduction is possible, or, in other words, a saving of $1,000,000 per year. But even if this may be considered a piece of wildly extravagant optimism and the figure be divided by five, there is still the lure of a possible saving of $200,000 per year which is certainly well worth going after.

An inspection of the reports which have been received thus far furnishes food for thought and even for speculation. One of the most noticeable points is the wide variety and range of the percentage figures both for individual classifications and for grand totals. Some of the figures are so low as to raise reasonable doubts as to their accuracy. In this connection a letter recently received from the superintendent of one of the larger papers, who has devoted considerable time and attention to this matter of news print waste, is quoted:

"Not from experience here but from talks I have had with others who are interested in reducing waste figures to the minimum I think 'accuracy' should be stressed. I am inclined to believe that there are many in charge of pressrooms who will give a publisher whatever waste percentage he desires. I know of a case here in this city where this situation was disclosed within the past few weeks and I am inclined to think that it would become more prevalent as a result of the information disseminated by your office unless you will impress upon the publishers that your work is valueless unless they insure accuracy in reporting."

Upon examining the reported figures a little more in detail, wrapper waste is found to vary from .75 per cent to 2.50 per cent. These are the extreme figures, but even if left out of consideration there is still a variation running all the way from 1.1 per cent to over 2 per cent. There is, to be sure, an idea abroad that a reasonably heavy wrapper is necessary to properly protect the white paper from damage, but it would appear to even a casual observer, who devotes any thought to the matter, that there is not liable to be any good reason for a 100 per cent variation in wrapper weights. Furthermore, if a heavy wrapper is used in order to protect the white paper, then it would follow that the papers reporting a high percentage of wrapper weight would show a low percentage of transit damage and vice versa. But a further inspection of the figures discloses that there is no relation whatever between the percentage of wrapper weight and the percentage of transit damage. For example, a paper reporting a wrapper waste of 1.89 per cent claims to have transit damage of only .06 per cent, whereas a paper reporting wrapper as 2.41 per cent, reports transit damage as 2.36 per cent. We are therefore driven to the conclusion that the necessity for a heavy wrapper to protect the paper during shipment and handling is somewhat a delusion.

Experience and observation, fortified by the figures offered in evidence, leads to the belief that transit damage depends in a much greater degree on the care and facilities employed in the transport and handling of paper than it does upon the weight of the wrapper. One thing is very much needed and would prove beneficial, and that is an education of all the men handling paper to the end that they might better appreciate and realize that roll paper is both valuable and fragile, in spite of the fact that it may appear otherwise. Many plants have, to be sure, most excellent facilities for unloading paper at the pressroom, but it is probable that in many cases paper is severely damaged in transferring it from the freight car to the truck.

The following qotation from a letter from a paper mill man pertaining to this subject is illuminating:

"We have never adopted any particular method except that we have put heavy flexible end bands on the edge of the rolls. The best thing we ever used was a strip of good sulphite, but as this was too expensive a proposition, we were forced to drop it. At present, we are putting on the regular wrapping with an extra band crimped over the end."

Local conditions have a very important bearing in determining what is a fair and reasonable percentage of waste for any particular paper. This observation applies particularly to the items of core waste and printed waste, or, as it is frequently called, papers spoiled in printing. It is therefore much more difficult in these items to set up any figures which may be called reasonable and which may be justified on any logical basis. In spite of these limitations, however, it does appear rather astonishing to find core waste reported all the way from .05 per cent to 2.42 per cent. These again are extreme figures. Leaving them out of consideration, the reports show that core waste varies from .10 per cent to 1.25 per cent.

Printed waste figures also vary over an extraordinary range. The minimum reported is .07 per cent, which is suspiciously low, to 4.41 per cent which is abnormally high. Other figures run all the way from .05 per cent or less to over 2 per cent. To make any intelligent diagnosis of these figures, merely on the face of the returns and unsupported by collateral information, is well-nigh hopeless. Printed waste depends almost entirely upon local conditions and local men and upon the interest these men take in keeping this expense item at a minimum. An important exception is the fact that defective paper may run this item up to an astonishing and serious extent. It is too much to expect any paper mill to turn out 100 per cent perfect paper at all times, but experience demonstrates that the proper sort of intelligent co-operation between the mill and the pressroom will in most cases have a very salutary effect upon the quality of the paper. Vague and generalized complaints as to the quality of paper are not apt to be particularly conductive to a change for the better, especially in view of the more or less prevalent tendency among pressmen to blame a large percentage of their troubles on the paper mill. Constant, intelligent supervision is necessary if the percentage of paper spoiled in the pressroom is to be kept at a minimum.

In Mr. Thomason's presidential address to the 1925 Convention occurs this statement: "We could effectively sponsor meetings of our mechanical men." Encouraged by this and fortified by a conviction that a conference of this sort would be productive of valuable results, your manager made the suggestion to the Committee that such a conference be held this year. The subject was placed before the Directors at a meeting held in March and it was approved, with the suggested qualification that the meeting be held in May or June at some city in the Middle West. In order to get some line on the sentiment concerning such a conference, thirty or thirty-five letters of inquiry were sent out, the majority going to offices previously corresponding with the Department, asking for opinions as to such a meeting. A great majority of the replies have endorsed the idea, the remainder being either not in favor or merely neutral. An abstract of the proceedings of such a conference, published in bulletin form, should prove a contribution of very great value to our fund of information on mechanical subjects.

It is not the intention that this conference should be participated in only by those papers who have on their staffs recognized mechanical superintendents. Business managers, composing room foremen, pressmen, and stereotypers are not only invited but urged to attend.

The department has endeavored to learn of and to keep in touch with all new developments in the mechanical line which are or promise to be of interest to members. Among these are a new dry mat which is now being developed by an organization in the Middle West; a device for inspecting finished metal surfaces developed by the Packard Motor Car Company, which may be of use in testing the surface of paper; two new molding machines; some developments in press blankets; a device for changing rolls while the press is at full speed; and a new stereotype plate-finishing machine which, if it proves a success, will produce a much more accurate stereotype plate than we now obtain. It may be worth while to mention that your manager has attended a meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers' Committee on Printing Machinery and has arranged to co-operate with them in the effort which they are making to improve and standardize the design of printing machinery.

In conclusion, thanks are again expressed to all who have in any way contributed to the success of the initial efforts of this department and members are urged to utilize its services, because it will increase in value very largely to the extent to which it is used by the membership. I wish to repeat what I said at French Lick that the ultimate success of this undertaking depends as much upon the membership as it does upon the committee and the manager. It is my ambition to make this department the most valuable branch of the association's activities and if we all work together for this end, success is certainly assured.

W. E. Wines, Manager.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO NEGOTIATE NEW ARBITRATION CONTRACTS

At the fortieth annual meeting of your association, this committee submitted, for the approval of the convention a draft of International Arbitration Agreement which had received the tentative approval of the Executive Committee of the International Typographical Union, and after much debate, the tentative agreement was approved by the convention in the following resolution:

"Resolved that the proper officers of this association be authorized to execute an arbitration contract with the International Typographical Union in substantial conformity with that appended to the report of the committee on arbitration contracts."

Pursuant to this resolution, your committee revised the draft of tentative agreement in accordance with the directions of the convention, and then advised President Lynch of the International Typographical Union of its desire to confer with him. The engagements of this committee and of President Lynch did not permit of a conference until July 8, 1926, at which time Chas. H. Taylor, Edward H. Butler and the chairman met with President Lynch of the I. T. U. in Buffalo.

At this conference President Lynch accepted the changes made by our fortieth convention, but insisted that the tentative agreement be amended by providing for determination of the matters to be arbitrated in advance of local arbitration. In a conference extending throughout the day, your committee insisted that the modifications of the tentative agreement proposed by President Lynch negatived the entire spirit of that agreement, and could not be accepted. The conference adjourned with no agreement on this subject.

Subsequent to this conference, the result of the election of the I. T. U. was announced. President Lynch was defeated and ex-President Howard re-elected to the presidency of the international union. The four members of President Lynch's executive committee however, were reelected.

On the eve of the end of his term of office, President Lynch and the executive council submitted to the delegates at the annual convention of the union, held at Colorado Springs, Sept. 13, 1926, the draft of tentative agreement together with the amendments added by our convention.

In submitting this draft to the Union, the executive committee said:

"The executive council recommends the acceptance of the amendments as proposed by the publishers, which are in the main purely technical and corrective.

"The executive council also recommends that if approved by the convention, the agreement be referred back to the council with instructions to propose and insist upon a further amendment setting forth the procedure to be followed in event local publishers and the local unions cannot agree on the matters that are subject to arbitration.

If such an amendment proves possible the completed agreement to be submitted to the referendum."

Later, on the fifth day of the convention, the I. T. U.'s committee on arbitration reported as follows:

"The committee has also considered carefully the proposed arbitration agreement between the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the International Typographical Union and the code of procedure as outlined in the supplemental report of the executive council and approves the recommendation of the executive council that the amendments proposed by the publishers be accepted.

"The committee further approves the executive council's recommendation that if approved by the convention, the agreement be referred back to the council with instructions to propose and insist upon a further amendment setting forth the procedure to be followed in event local publishers and the local unions cannot agree on the matters that are subject to arbitration.

"If such an amendment proves possible the completed agreement to be submitted to the referendum."

By vote of 160 to 133 the report of the union's committee on arbitration was adopted.

Thereafter the executive committee of the union submitted to your committee a proposed amendment to section three of our tentative arbitration agreement providing that arbitrable points might be adjusted locally in advance, and failing in that, by the president of the I. T. U. and the chairman of the special standing committee of the A. N. P. A.

To this proposal the chairman of your committee replied as follows on Nov. 1, 1926:

"You can be quite sure that I regret that a further conference concerning the arbitration agreement which President Lynch and I framed could not be had while he was still in office. However, a desire of the union to change the tentative arbitration agreement in those provisions, which represented our understanding of a compromise upon the most vital of its elements, has made it apparent that little could be hoped to result from further conferences.

"As I see it, the amendment of the proposed arbitration agreement suggested by your executive council negatives the whole theory of the agreement. I cannot see that the definition of section three of the proposed agreement, as submitted to the convention of the A. N. P. A. in my report last April, in any way supports the union's present desire to abandon the arbitration structure set up in the proposed agreement and go back to the arbitration method in which the difficulties that arose under our former agreement originated.

"Be sure that as chairman of the A. N. P. A.'s committee to negotiate arbitration agreements I shall always be glad to discuss fully with you any phase of our negotiations, but I cannot see that our time would be well spent trying to get together on the proposal of the union to undo the whole job that I thought President Lynch and I had accomplished."

In January President Howard advised the chairman of your committee that he expected to call upon him at an early date "to discuss the work of completing negotiations for a new arbitration agreement."

We have pursued the effort to arrive at a workable arbitration agreement to the point where we feel that further discussion with the union, in view of the action of its 1926 convention, would be fruitless. We are, however, still firmly of the conviction that this negotiation should be vigorously pursued, and that the Typographical Union will eventually concede the wisdom of an arbitration agreement which recognizes the futility of a working arrangement based upon the inviolability of union-made laws in the operation of publisher-owned composing rooms. In the opinion of your committee, it is highly desirable that a new committee, with new personnel, be appointed to discuss this question further with the designated officers of the Typographical Union.

S. E. Thomason, Chairman,
E. H. Butler,
E. H. Baker

REPORT OF SPECIAL STANDING COMMITTEE

IN the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927, 162 new contracts between members of the A. N. P. A. and printing trades unions, were reported to the Indianapolis office as follows:

Typographical	66
Pressmen	43
Stereotypers	31
Photo-Engravers	14
Mailers	8
Total	162

Twenty-two of the 162 new contracts made no change in wage scales.

In addition to the 162 new contracts there were 64 old contracts continued in effect without change in wages or working conditions.

Of the aggregate 226 wage scales 86, or 38 per cent were continued without increase in the fiscal year.

The total number of contracts on file in the Indianapolis office March 31, was 565. Of this number 304 will expire before April 1, 1928.

The special standing committee furnishes to publishers entering wage negotiations, a complete scale analysis and survey. This involves an individual study of each case. An effort is made to furnish complete and accurate data on all factors involved.

During the past fiscal year, 159 original surveys were sent out. Duplicates (not included in the total) were furnished each member of the A. N. P. A., in each city concerned. A total of 1,903 graphic charts accompanied the typewritten data.

There were 6,089 letters and 736 telegrams dispatched from the Indianapolis office in connection with routine work.

An immense amount of codification of contracts and of the wealth of data in the files of the special -tanding committee has been accomplished. Much more remains to be done.

The codification of contracts is nearing completion. The amount of detail work is large. There are 565 contracts ranging from 10 to 70 sections. The classifying of these sections under the respective subject heads involves many thousands of items. Codifications, both as to contracts and as to other data, constitutes a huge reservoir of work, the draining of which absorbs any spare time of staff members which may result from a temporary lull in routine work.

We commend the loyal co-operation and energy which characterizes the clerical staff of the Indianapolis office in this big undertaking.

During the past year letters have been received from individuals and resolutions have been passed by regional associations urging that contracts be published in full in A. N. P. A. Bulletins.

The sentiment is not unanimous. Communications were received which expressed the opinion that the convenience would not be sufficient to justify the expense.

There is considerable foundation for the latter viewpoint. Nearly every contract contains numerous lengthy sections concerning subjects over which marked controversy seldom arises. Such sections contribute heavily to the expense of publication while adding no information of value to the published data.

If the publication of more detailed information concerning contracts is desired by the membership it is the opinion of your committee that the most useful and convenient method would be to publish periodically in booklet form, for each of the trades, a codification of only those sections which are generally controversial in negotiations.

For illustration, such a booklet would have in one place all priority sections arranged alphabetically by cities; all foreman sections; all slide hours sections and so on through the list.

All sections of all contracts have been codified in this manner by the Indianapolis office. From the master books in which this data is classified any publisher can quickly be furnished any special information which it would not be considered necessary to publish regularly in the booklets.

There are at present 142 International Arbitration Agreements in effect between the I. P. P. & A. U. and the A. N. P. A. Many of these contain local continuing clauses beyond the expiration date of the International Agreement, which is December 31, 1927.

While there is no International Arbitration Agreement as yet with the I. T. U., a majority of typographical contracts contain some form of arbitration.

There were 225 typographical contracts on file at the Indianapolis office, as of March 31, 1927.

Of this number disputes arising under the contract are covered by arbitration clauses in	79
Arbitration of a new contract (but no provisions for arbitrating differences arising under the contract) is provided in	5
Arbitration of disputes arising under the contract and also arbitration of a new contract is provided in	78
		162
Those providing no arbitration of any description number		63
Total		225

Out of the 162 typographical contracts providing some form of arbitration, I. T. U. laws and local union laws not affecting wages, hours and working conditions are exempt from arbitration in 84

I. T. U. laws are exempt from arbitration and no reference made to local union laws in.. 9

No exemption from arbitration of either I. T. U. laws or local union laws is provided in.... 69

Total 162

The special standing committee recommends that publishers refuse to sign contracts containing blanket requirements that the publisher must "respect and observe" local union laws and laws of the international union.

Contracts are underwritten by the I. T. U. if they contain a proviso that laws of the I. T. U. in effect on a designated date and laws of the local union not affecting wages, hours, and working conditions will not be subject to arbitration.

Contracts containing no reference to I. T. U. laws will not be underwritten by the I. T. U.

Some unions have submitted propositions for arbitration which contained "respect and observe" sections with reference to local union laws and laws of the I. T. U. The joint letters setting forth the arbitrable points in such cases have directed that such sections must conform to section 9 of the expired arbitration agreement reading as follows:

"Sec. 9. Local union laws not affecting wages, hours or working conditions and the laws of the International Typographical Union in effect January 1,——, shall not be subject to the provisions of this arbitration agreement, but all changes in and any new International Typographical Union laws thereafter adopted that affect wages, hours or working conditions shall not be operative until accepted by the International Board of Arbitration. All differences regarding or arising under such laws shall be referred to the International Board of Arbitration. Provided, that International or local laws enacted subsequent to the execution of an individual arbitration or local contract shall not affect either contract during its life, except by mutual agreement."

Of the 225 typographical contracts on file publishers have agreed to "respect and observe" I. T. U. and local union laws in	110
They have agreed to "respect and observe" I. T. U. laws, without reference to local union laws in	21
They have agreed to "respect and observe" local union laws without reference to I. T. U. laws in	4
Specified laws are set forth in contracts without further reference to laws in	3
A specific negative with reference to union laws is contained in	1
There is no mention of any union laws in	86
Total	225

Out of 115 stereotyper contracts on file March 31, 97 make no reference to union laws.

Out of 31 photo-engraver contracts, 30 make no reference to union laws.

Out of 32 mailer contracts, 18 make no reference to union laws.

Pressmen contracts are universally silent on union laws.

There are a number of oral understandings between Publishers and Unions which govern relations. These are not included in the foregoing data, formal contracts only being considered.

Early in 1926 a Pacific Coast Union submitted for arbitration a proposition containing a section which provided vacations-with-pay. A deadlock of several months resulted in agreeing upon the joint letter. Your committee refused to designate vacations-with-pay an arbitrable point on the ground that such things constitute a gift the same as a Christmas turkey. It would be as reasonable to arbitrate whether or not a Christmas fowl be furnished and if so what it should weigh.

Vacation-with-pay is a subject only for conciliation and will not be designated an arbitrable point. It exists in very few jurisdictions and where it does exist it is usually under arrangement whereby the remaining members of the staff get out the work without any substitutes being put on to cover the situations of vacations.

Much discussion, editorial and otherwise, concerning the five-day week f lowed the A. F. of L. Convention in D troit, which gave birth to a resoluti reading in part as follows:

"For economic as well as humanitarian reasons the time has arrived when the number of days worked per week should be reduced."

Affiliated unions were instructed make every effort to shorten the wo days per week. Many laudatory speech were made by prominent labor offici concerning Ford's five-day policy, u it was discovered five days' work me five days' pay except in cases where t worker could produce in five days wh he had formerly produced in six days.

Members of printing trades unions m avail themselves of a five-day week a time under that provision of their la which reads:

"Foremen shall not designate any particular day, nor how many days a member shall work in any one week."

It is apparent, however, that the u is for a five-day week at six days' p and without any increase in productiv On this basis the progress of the fi day week will, in all probability, be sl and uncertain.

When and if a period of depress occurs there may be an impetus given five-day week that is more apparent th real. In other words, there may be ma industries which, like the Ford insti tions, will consider it advantageous reduce their pay-rolls one-sixth. Wh and if that happens a majority of printing trades unions will commence clamor for recognition of the five-d week.

Any adoption of the five-day w which may be cited as a reason adopting it in the publishing indus should be scrutinized carefully.

President George L. Berry of the I. P. & A. U. is the one labor leader in printing trades who has publicly pressed himself in opposition to the fi day theory. In the "American Pressma for February, he states in part:

"The International Printing Press men and Assistants Union of Nort America has very frankly declare that it does not consider the tim propitious to even think about a fur ther reduction in the work week."

There were six strikes during the p fiscal year as follows: Charleston, Va. typographical; Cincinnati, Ohio, pographical; Parkersburg, W. Va., ty graphical; Hagerstown, Md., pressm and stereotypers; New Orleans, pho engravers. There were nine strikes d ing the fiscal year ending March 31, 19

At Charleston an authorized strike f lowed an ultimatum from the union t the publishers must grant the excess union demands at a given hour. B papers suspended publication for th days. Operations continue open shop date.

The Cincinnati and Parkersburg stri were illegal and of short duration.

The Hagerstown strike followed wage dispute. Operations continue op shop.

At New Orleans, the I. P. E. U. qui ly organized the open shop Photo-E gravers employed by newspapers. R ognition of the union was demand when the time seemed opportune. T the time was not opportune is eviden by the fact that operations continue op shop.

There were four sessions of the Int national Arbitration Board, one be held in New York City.

I. T. U. cases were:

A scale appeal from Denver and d ferences between the president of I. T. U. and chairman of the S. S. concerning joint letters on arbitra points for El Paso, Los Angeles (M ers), San Francisco, Seattle, and Spri field, Illinois.

I. P. P. & A. U. cases were appe from local arbitration awards in Toro and Oklahoma City.

One I. S. & E. U. case was heard being an appeal from a local arbitrat award in San Francisco.

Harvey J. Kelly, Chairman

REPORT OF THE A. N. P. A. COMMITTEE ON OPEN SHOP

SINCE the last annual report of the open shop department of the A. N. P. A. six daily newspapers have been added to the roster of the open shop—five in the composing room and one by way of the press department. These plants are now being run successfully on that plan.

In addition to the cities that have had trouble with the unions, several local unions have asked the International for strike sanction. In only one case was this granted. The sanction was not used. The union at the last minute agreed to accept the publishers' offer and continue at work without resorting to the strike weapon to try to gain what, at least, could only be considered a problematical victory. In this case the union showed rare good judgment, as the newspapers were ready to go to non-union shops and had made preparations along that line.

In the other cases where strike sanction had been asked for, the disputes have either been settled by the men's acceptance of the offers made by the publishers or by their continuance at work without contracts. There have been quite a number of the latter.

Only one city of size has made a contract for a lower wage scale. Miami, Fla., gives us that anomaly. The Miami local union had the distinction of enjoying the highest scale in the newspaper field. After the real estate boom exploded it was deemed expedient by the publisher of one of the dailies to reduce the scale. The union strenuously opposed that move, but finally acquiesced and a new scale was signed at a decided reduction. Several other Florida cities will face the same situation on the expiration of the present contracts, and lower scales may be looked for on papers in those cities. In the meantime mechanical forces have been reduced to the lowest possible point.

Requests from several cities have been received asking that crews be assembled and held for quick call. This is a wise move in cases where the situation seems to demand that publication be continuous. These crews were not needed, and after being held for a short time were released.

A dispute occurred in the pressroom of one of our Canadian members regarding the time the men should take lunch. A walkout was threatened, but President Berry, with his usual good judgment, instructed the men to keep at work, and refused to sanction a strike. The matter is in process of adjustment at this time.

On one of our member newspapers in a southern city the union had succeeded in obtaining a foothold. A walkout was called and several men responded. With the assistance of men from the job offices and another newspaper very little inconvenience was suffered, and in a few hours competent men were on the way from this office.

To a great extent the newspapers in a city control the complexion of the labor employed, not only in their own plants but in the job offices. This is illustrated in a city where a strike occurred during the past year. A solid union town, both newspapers and job plants, January, 1926, the two papers had trouble and lost their forces. Reorganization took place and both papers have fine crews of non-union men. Since the trouble on the newspapers, several of the job shops have declared for non-union or open shops and are running on that plan.

Greater attention should be given to apprenticeship training. Trained mechanics are an asset to the printing business. Through thoroughly trained apprentices the employer profits by getting full value for what he pays, without increased cost through waste, spoiled work and excessive labor turnover. Less time of the foreman is required by the boys who come from our efficient schools than has to be given to those taken on in the plant and allowed to train themselves. All sections of the country report a lack of trained workmen. Unskilled labor is fairly abundant, equal to the demand. A publisher asked this question: "Why are there not more boys and girls being trained in the business?"

There is a great need for skilled men for foremen, make-ups, etc. At the present rate of educating apprentices there will be a still greater demand at the top of the profession, and practically no boys coming up from the bottom to fill the places made vacant from various causes. The publishers of the country are delinquent. They are too often satisfied to let the other fellow educate the boy.

There has been a radical change on the part of the unions in the last few years in their relation to this question, brought about very unwillingly by the progress being made in the few independent schools now existing. But the unions still hold fast to the wasteful system of holding back the boy—five years to educate a boy that our schools have demonstrated time and time again can be done in one-half the time. By holding fast to the union idea the boy is forced to waste from two to three years of the most valuable years of his life. And in connection with this the available supply of labor is held down to the minimum, forcing the employer in many cases to take on men at full scale that are not worth more than sixty or seventy per cent. What are the publishers as a class going to do about this deplorable condition? Are publishers taking full advantage of the facilities now existing to train young men? You are helping pay for these schools. Are you sending likely boys and girls to be educated? Each and every newspaper in this Association should send at least one boy during the year to the school nearest his territory, and charge the expense to promotion. Think what that would mean to the mechanical departments of the daily newspapers in five years.

There is a decided trend in all labor unions towards a shorter week. If this is brought about it will mean that more men will be needed. A consensus of opinion of leading industrial organizations on this subject is that it will decrease volume of production; increase the cost of living; inflate wages, and ultimately result in great injury to the country generally.

Our office receives many letters from publishers asking for information as to what they will gain by refusing to make future contracts with the unions. One thing that the employer gains by operating his plant on the open shop or non-union basis is a force of more contented workers and a smaller labor turnover. And with more contented employees greater efficiency follows, as well as greater production, a larger measure of co-operation, and no lost production through strikes and lockouts.

A financier of considerable note says—"Every time you let a man give you less than full value for the wages that you pay him, you help to lower his wage and make it harder for him to earn a living. You can do a man no greater injury than to let him soldier on his job. The reason ought to be plain. The less work a man does, the less purchasing power he creates, which means a lessened number of people to ask for his services."

The claim by the union that the open shop means a decrease in earnings of the men is not borne out by the facts. Men who can deliver the product are frequently being paid higher wages in non-union plants than in union. And that is right. A man should be rewarded for honest effort, and proprietors of non-union plants realize this. The piece scale should be installed in every newspaper office where practicable. This can be done on all straight matter machines. The increase in production is astonishing. More production means a greater utilization of present investment. The piece system has been adopted by a few newspapers this year, and more will follow as the advantages are brought home to the executives. Under such a system the ambitious man obtains what he is justly entitled to and the lazy, shiftless operator receives pay for all that he produces.

The Open Shop Committee has been ready at all times to help members of the Association with advice as to the best method of changing union to non-union shops, giving the experience of publishers who are running on the non-union plan, and outlining the many advantages, both pecuniary and otherwise, to be obtained by the change. A letter or wire to the Chairman or any member of the committee, or to the executive secretary, will receive immediate attention.

The field of labor has been spotty for the last year. At times there has been an abundance of non-union labor available. But on the whole the demand for good men has been equal to the supply. In the newspaper field the great need is for trained executives, make-up and ad men.

CHAS. A. WEBB, Chairman,
Harry Chandler
Rowe Stewart
H. W. Flagg, Executive Secretary

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PRINTING TRADE SCHOOLS

DURING the past year the board of directors has approved your Committee's recommendation that another school be included among those to which contributions are made from the Printing Trades Schools Fund, with the result that the following schools have received contributions for students graduated during 1926:

Chicago Photo Engraver's Schools, Chicago.
Empire State School of Printing, Ithaca.
Pacific Northwest School of Printing, Spokane.
Southern School of Printing, Nashville.
Southwest School of Printing, Dallas.

There has also been contributed to the New England School of Printing the sum of $1,200 covering twelve students graduated April 1, 1927.

Careful consideration leads to the conclusion that an adequate charge for tuition should be made to secure real interest on the part of students, and therefore your Committee has not recommended to the Board of Directors the endorsement of schools which provide a free or nearly free course.

There has recently been inspected in addition to the New England School of Printing, at Springfield, Mass., the William Hood Dunwoody Institute at Minneapolis, which it is hoped will soon comply with all requirements.

The schools generally are neither union nor non-union. Most students, on leaving the schools, enter some small non-union shop, and work their way into the union shop, eventually becoming union men.

As you know, the printing trades schools assessment was eliminated Sept. 1, 1926, and all future contributions to schools must come from the Association's general funds. Your committee hopes the board of directors may find it possible to endorse its recommendation for a total distribution of approximately $30,000 per annum, to provide a contribution of $100.00 for each student graduated from such schools as may be approved by the Board.

Detailed financial statement follows, from which it will be noted that after all contributions have been made, there is in the printing trades schools fund the sum of $8,573.51, which it is estimated and hoped will be sufficient to meet contributions for the first six months of 1927.

This hope is based on the theory that the more students are graduated, the better it will be for the printing industry as a whole.

While the schools now in existence will, through gradual enlargement, meet the ever-increasing demand for compositors, there is still to be solved the problem of sufficient photo-engravers.

The bitterness of the fight waged against the Empire State School for Photo-Engravers has demonstrated to your Committee the importance attached to this step by the Photo-Engravers' Union.

On all sides, the need and advantage of training for mechanical men in newspaper work has been admitted.

It would seem that now is the opportune time to develop the work of your committee to include consideration of the training of mechanical superintendents. Newspaper publishing is getting to be more and more a matter of mechanical devices, and the growth of newspaper plants during the last few years has not succeeded in developing a sufficient number of men who can deal with the problems presented by the larger plants.

Your committee believes that some cognizance should be taken of this factor, and that some means should be found for the training and development of newspaper mechanical men. The ability to develop this idea, however, depends on the individual generosity of publishers.

Such a newspaper institute as the committee has in mind, it is believed, can only be established by individual subscriptions from newspaper men who feel that some form of recognition of our great profession is due from those who have been successful in it.

The co-operation of Cornell University has been secured, and a plan worked out, more or less informally, which would assure a complete education in newspaper mechanics.

No electrical engineering school stands higher than does Cornell. It has a school of mechanical engineering which ranks with the first three schools of Mechanical Engineering in the United States.

The plan of your committee is to develop a school for printing mechanics at Ithaca; to establish there a complete newspaper plant and laboratory; and to arrange for third year students at Cornell, who may desire an engineering degree in printing mechanics to do their practical work at the Institute.

Between the newspapers of the United States and the larger printing plants, your committee feels that ample support can be obtained so that a profession ranking fifth in size, and first in influence, may meet its obligations to those who are to follow us. Your Committee believes that in addition to supplying mechanical knowledge, a more important purpose may be accomplished, namely the creation of an ideal, and an understanding of the greatness of our profession—newspaper publishing in its highest form.

There is a general feeling throughout the publishing world that the days of easy money are past, and that newspapers must be prepared to earn, through economy and economical production, and that untrained men cannot help but hinder the solution of such problems as will be presented in the future.

Your committee confidently expects to have the full support of the membership in the work along this line, now being undertaken. The plans for such undertaking will be presented to you when sufficiently developed, and it is hoped, will lead to the establishment of an institution which will be of untold value and benefit to newspapers all over the country.

VICTOR F. RIDDER, Chairman,
Benjamin H. Anthony
J. D. Barnum
F. J. Burd
Frank E. Gannett
Wm. F. Schmick
Chas. A. Webb

WILLIAM F. KIEST

William Frederick Kiest, 63, secretary of the Dallas Times-Herald Publishing Company, and brother of Edwin J. Kiest, publisher of the Times-Herald, died at his home in Dallas April 21. He had been in ill health several years. Mr. Kiest is survived by his wife, sister and two brothers.

REPORT OF THE POSTAL COMMITTEE

YOUR Postal Committee has many things of interest to report—some of accomplishment and some of regret.

Since the annual meeting last year, the joint postal sub-committee of Congress, which was created by the Act of Feb. 28, 1925, completed and presented its report to Congress. Because of differences within such Committee itself, no recommendation was made on second class postal rates other than that in the preliminary report of last year, which recommended a reduction in the existing transient rate.

Following the presentation of the joint sub-committee's report, its recommendations were included in a series of postal measures which were introduced in the House and passed by that body. When these measures reached the Senate, the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads grouped them all into one bill, and included an amendment providing for the restoration of the 1920 rates on second class. It reported that bill to the Senate, where it passed towards the close of the session. The measure then went back to the House and was referred to conference.

Only a few days before Congress adjourned, the conferees reported a compromise bill, in which they eliminated the 1920 rates and substituted therefor the 1921 rates on second class mail.

Because of the filibuster, which stopped consideration of all legislation in the Senate, no action was taken on the conference report and therefore no action was taken by Congress providing for a revision of second class rates.

The question, therefor, presents itself to the A. N. P. A. as to what our postal policy should be next year. In the opinion of your Committee, much was accomplished in bringing about a recommendation on the part of both Houses of Congress for a reduction in second class rates, even though that recommendation was not all that we desired. However, much as it left to be desired, it did represent clearly the attitude of Congress, which for the first time since 1917, has looked with favor upon a reduction in second class rates, whereas heretofore all proposals which have been given any countenance have been for increases in second class rates.

After giving a great deal of thought to the matter, your postal committee believes that the Association should continue to battle, first for a return to the 1920 rates for the general distribution of newspapers through the mails; and second, for the creation of a bundle rate, which will provide for fair compensation to the Post Office Department for handling newsdealers' bundles, where the only service performed by the Department is that of transportation.

Your committee also believes that newspaper publishers should, during the next few months, scan their galley lists with even greater care than before for the purpose of obtaining distribution of every pound of newspaper tonnage where possible by some other agency of transportation or distribution at less cost to the publishers than mail rates now charged or that may be expected to be charged in the future.

The reason for the above recommendations are quite clear to your Committee. In the first place, more than 85 per cent of all newspaper tonnage now distributed through the Post Office Department is distributed on rural free routes. Of this rural free delivery tonnage, a large percentage is not subject to railroad transportation charge against the Post Office Department because the routes start from a place of publication; and of the remaining, in many instances the publisher himself, since no credit is allowed for cartage, pays all transportation charges and with his own truck service delivers the bundles of his papers to the Post Office at places distant from place of publication from which the rural routes emanate.

On the present basis of operation of the rural free delivery routes, it costs the Government more to handle mail than it can ever hope to get from postage. Publishers themselves have demonstrated that they are able to establish a delivery service to rural residents that offers daily service that is faster and cheaper than the Post Office Department offers through the rural free delivery. A notable example of a publisher's own rural delivery service is found at Indianapolis where the Indianapolis News delivers nearly all its own newspapers within a radius of 40 miles of that city by motor truck offering house to house service at less cost than the $1.50 per hundred pounds as provided in the 1920 rates which we seek.

Of the 15 per cent of the newspaper tonage which does not go on rural routes, all but a small fraction is made up of newsdealers' bundles. For the transportation of these bundles, the Post Office Department pays the railroads less than $.15 per hundred pounds and charges the newsdealers more than $1.75 per hundred pounds. Your Committee believes that this is too great a spread between the cost to the Department and the charge made by the Department, even where in villages and towns the Department does distribute some of this mail.

The single wrapper copies which go through the mails are so negligible in volume that they should not weigh in the consideration of Congress as against the great bulk of our tonnage, particularly in view of the fact that the single wrapper subscriptions mean but little or nothing to a newspaper and the service performed by the Department in their case is far more of a service to the subscriber than to the publisher.

Other agencies of distribution and transportation, as well as the publishers' own delivery distribution and transportation systems, afford so much more favorable rates than the Post Office Department that if the publishers will avail themselves of these other agencies large savings can be made.

During the hearings before the joint congressional committee, it was demonstrated that many publishers are now trucking their papers distances as great as the Post Office Department used to carry them and at a cost to the publisher of about one-third that which he used to pay the Post Office Department. There are more than 500,000 miles of hard roads now available in the United States for such trucking purposes and new hard roads are being completed in excess of 50,000 miles a year.

The reasons for continuing to urge Congress for a bundle rate are quite apparent to your committee. In the first place the establishment of a bundle rate at a fair cost to the publishers will bring to the Post Office immediately from all parts of the United States a large volume of newspaper shipments that will give the Post Office substantial increased receipts with no extra cost involved for the valuable service that will be rendered to publishers and readers. If a bundle rate is established comparable to the baggage rates and express rates now in force throughout the country it will offer publishers an alternative for delivery service that will result in large savings on newspaper shipments where delivery is required over two or more railroads. Your committee does not believe that publishers are aware of the number of daily shipments that their newspapers require to reach newsdealers and how in so doing regardless of the length of the haul, each railroad involved is paid the prevailing baggage rate. The result therefore is that for relatively short hauls in countless instances in every state, publishers are paying two or three times the cost of the prevailing baggage rates and therefore making the total baggage bill much larger than the cost would be if the Post Office Department had a special bundle provision for newspapers within a zone of 150 miles from place of publication.

Under the proposed Post Office bundle rate provision publishers would pay one rate regardless of the number of transfers involved in reaching the point of destination within the zone.

Throughout the trying period of the war publishers of this country did not comprehend the necessity for proper organized resistance to demands for increased baggage and express rates with the result that today you have no uniformity in prevailing rates. Railroad shipments have decreased over the last few years, the motor truck in many instances has been substituted both for speed and economy in result. Railroads have attempted to make up for the loss by increased baggage rates. Now we are finding voluntary reductions being made by railroads in the Middle West from 60 to 50 cents while demands are being formulated by newspaper representatives in other sections of the country for reductions in rates that have been far out of proportion to the cost for service rendered but fortunately the good work now being done by our traffic department will be of great aid in remedying this situation.

Since every means of distribution for newspapers to subscribers has a bearing on postal rates for the same delivery purpose, it will be interesting to publishers to observe that baggage rates vary from 30 cents per hundred pounds in certain Eastern states to more than $1.00 per hundred pounds in Western states.

Express rates, on the other hand, range from $.50 per hundred pounds for intrastate shipments to $1.00 per hundred pounds for inter-state shipments, where the length of haul does not exceed 500 miles. If the railroads carried this tonnage for the Post Office Department, they would receive but $.15 per hundred pounds for it, while, on the other hand, the Post Office Department, if it carried it for the publishers would receive in excess of $1.75 per hundred pounds for the service.

While it is not likely that Congress would vote a bundle rate as low as the present lowest baggage rate, if we are successful in our efforts it is our belief that such a rate would not exceed $.50 per hundred pounds for the first and second zones or for shipments not to exceed 150 miles in length.

The political situation in Washington is interesting to our Association. The failure of the conference report to pass means that we must start anew on whatever legislation we seek at the opening of the next session of Congress. Post Office legislation, being revenue legislation, must originate in the House. The House Post Office Committee has committed itself to a reduction in second class rates. The Senate, both by its Committee and its own action, has also committed itself to such a reduction. The details of such a reduction, however, will have to be worked out by the next Congress and this presents an interesting problem.

The House is Republican and no death can change that fact. In the Senate, however, this situation presents itself: At the present time, there are 47 Democrats assured of seats in the Senate; there is one Farmer Labor man, and there are 48 Republican Senators, but of these two will find their rights contested when they present their credentials. Should there be any deaths on either the Republican or the Democratic side of the Senate between now and December, it is possible that the Democrats might gain control of the Senate and organize it; or it is equally possible that the Republicans who have a paper control by reason of the fact that the Vice-President is a Republican and in the case of ties can cast the deciding vote, may find their advantage, slight as it is, improved should some Democratic member die and a Republican succeed him.

Also, in the Republican list of senators, there are several who in the past have not hesitated to vote with the Democrats on organization matters, so it clearly can be seen that, at this time, it is impossible to forecast just what will be done next December when the Senate meets to organize.

Your Committee has one other recommendation. A number of new Congressmen and Senators were elected last fall. It is important that member publishers should get in touch with these men and give them the full benefit of our views concerning second class mail rates. Those members who will carry over into the next session are pretty well informed, but nevertheless, it would also be well if publishers should keep in touch with them while they are at home on vacation this year and continue to insist not only upon the reasonableness but the justness of our cause.

J. D. BARNUM, Chairman.

E. H. Baker, Louis H. Brush, Amon G. Carter, Gardner Cowles, Howard Davis, A. L. Fish, Homer Gard, David W. Howe, A. L. Miller, F. A. Miller, E. B. Piper, Chas. A. Webb.

REPORT OF THE PAPER COMMITTEE

IT has been the policy of your Committee to keep you acquainted through the medium of our bulletin service not only with various news items of interest, but with the volume of production, of consumption and of advertising, on a comparative basis. We have sought to supply you with all facts within our reach rather than to attempt to offer advice.

The prevailing high prices of the past have resulted in abnormal expansion with the result that temporarily, at least, we find a condition of over-production and consequently a soft market. Already steps have been taken by manufacturers with a view to preventing an open break in the prevailing price but whether efforts to that end may prove successful can not be foretold at this time.

We have had our lean years and our years of plenty recurring with great regularity and therefore may not expect the soft market condition of today to continue indefinitely.

As reported in our bulletins, approximately one-half of the Canadian production will be marketed by a new selling agency comprised of The G. H. Mead Co., Canadian Export Paper Co., Ltd., and St. Maurice Valley Corp. interests, which presumably has for its object the protection of the market during the period of over-expansion, but the effect of which in future years is problematical.

There has been no change in the contract price since the begining of last year, although it is generally reported that much of the product, through freight or other adjustments, has sold at a mill price of less than $65 per ton.

During the last few months spot newsprint has been freely offered at prices well below the standard price of $3.25.

Imports from overseas for 1926 amounted to 99,926 tons or approximately 25 per cent less than during 1925.

The first two months of this year, however, show an increase of such imports.

Information regarding the quality and availability of the product of overseas mills, many of which produce a very satisfactory sheet, is always available for the use of inquiring members. We cannot too strongly urge securing such information prior to making commitment.

It is interesting to note that during the past year Canadian production for the first time exceeded that of the United States by some 200,000 tons.

Total available supply was 553,629 tons greater than 1925, and it will be noted from the following tables largely increased capacity will be developed for some years to come. These increases will not be net increases should conditions that may be expected to come about, make it advisable to discontinue the manufacturing of news-print on some machines or divert some United States mills to other uses.

Consumption for the twelve months of 1926 maintained an increased tendency approximating the increase of production.

For the first three months of 1927 over the same period of 1926 the increase was 5.2 per cent. There has been a gratifying increase in publishers' stocks on hand since May 31, 1926, when stocks were at the lowest point of record, namely, 25 days' supply.

Newspaper advertising continued to increase in volume during 1926 until November and December. For the twelve months advertising, based on 120 newspapers in 29 major cities, increased 5 per cent over 1925.

Thus far for the months of January, February and March, 1927, advertising volume shows a loss of 2.6 per cent as compared with the corresponding months of 1926.

Your committee urges members to co-operate with our traffic department by seeing to it that all contracts provide that publishers may designate the routing from mill to destination.

It seems to your Committee that long term contracts based on future fixing of price are not of advantage to the purchaser. Our endeavor to learn the views of our members on this question has not met with success.

The many benefits that would result from standardization of roll sizes are so obvious that it would seem that in time publishers will give further and serious attention to the subject.

The producers invite co-operation with a view to reduction of multiplicity of sizes now being used.

During the last few years roll sizes have shown marked decrease yet no tendency towards standardization has been observed.

During 1925 the Treasury Department on the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and various paper manufacturers, promulgated a definition of standard newsprint as used in the tariff which was wide from the mark of that term as used in the trade. It was apparently framed for the purpose of excluding from free entry much newsprint that came well within that term.

The United States Customs Court in its decision handed down last October in connection with an import of newsprint containing sulphate instead of sulphite, and therefore not standard as defined by the Treasury Department, upheld every contention used by your committee, in opposing the definition, by deciding that the term "standard newsprint" at the time of the enactment of the present tariff act, was used as synonymous with good quality and was not restricted to designate a sheet that would conform to the many technicalities contained in the Treasury Department's definition.

Notwithstanding this decision of the United States Customs Court the Treasury Department still maintains the accuracy of its inaccurate definition and has instructed the Customs to enforce its terms.

We are informed that on Saturday last the Treasury Department notified collectors to admit free of duty imports of newsprint containing not more than 30 per cent sulphate. This is the first evidence of weakening by the Treasury Department with respect to its definition.

Publisher interest is stimulated by announcement of development during the past year of a semi-chemical pulping process at the United States Forest Products Laboratories, Madison, Wisconsin, by which it is claimed hard woods may be used advantageously in the manufacture of newsprint.

It is claimed that paper of the weight and thickness of newsprint made wholly from semi-chemical pulp of black or red gum, or aspen, birch or maple, was found to have greater strength than the present commercial newsprint and to equal or excel standard newsprint in color. If this process proves to be practicable in every respect it is quite apparent that it will assist materially in continuing the newsprint supply in the North and Northeast where there is abundant supply of hard woods and it will also offer an excellent opportunity for the development of a print paper industry in the southern states where there is a very large supply of gum trees.

INCREASED NEWSPRINT CAPACITY, 1926

	Daily capacity tons
Canadian International Paper Co., Three Rivers, Quebec.	85	February
	85	March
	85	May
	85	June
Kenora Paper Mills, Ltd., Kenora, Ontario	125	April
Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corp., Port Alfred, Quebec	100	May
	100	August
	100	November
Newfoundland Power & Paper Co., Ltd., Corner Brook, N. F.	100	July
Powell River Co., Ltd., Powell River, B. C.	100	July
	100	September
St. Maurice Valley Corp., Belgo Division, Shawinigan Falls, Quebec	100	October
St. Lawrence Paper Mills, Ltd., Three Rivers, Quebec.	150	December
Total	1,315

INCREASED NEWSPRINT CAPACITY, 1927

	Daily capacity tons
Cushnoc Paper Corp., Augusta, Maine	70	*January
Brompton Pulp & Paper Co., Ltd., Bromptonville, Quebec	100	*January
St. Maurice Valley Corp., Belgo Division, Shawinigan Falls, Quebec	100	*February
Manitoba Paper Co., Ltd., Pine Falls, Manitoba	100	*February
	100	July
Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corp., Port Alfred, Quebec.	100	*March
Waterway Paper Products Co., Chicago, Ill.	90	*March
Canadian International Paper Co., West Templeton, Quebec	125	*April
	125	May
	250	July
Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Co., Fort Frances, Ontario.	100	April
Washington Pulp & Paper Corp., Port Angeles, Washington	100	May
Ste. Anne Paper Co., Ltd., Beaupre, Quebec	125	May
	125	June
Thunder Bay Paper Co., Ltd., Port Arthur, Ontario	125	July
Anglo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Mills, Ltd., Limoilou, Quebec	200	December
Jake St. John Power & Paper Co., Ltd., Mistassini, Quebec	100	December
Total	2,035

*In operation.

INCREASED NEWSPRINT CAPACITY, 1928

	Daily capacity tons
Price Bros. & Co., Ltd., Riverbend, Quebec	200	January
Lake St. John Power & Paper Co., Ltd., Mistassini, Quebec	100	January
Thunder Bay Paper Co., Ltd., Port Arthur, Ontario.	125	January
Spruce Falls P. & P. Co., Ltd., Kapuskasing, Ontario.	400	(1 machine July, 3 machines balance of year)
Anglo-Canadian P. & P. Mills, Ltd., Limoilou, Quebec.	200	December
Total	1,025

INCREASED NEWSPRINT CAPACITY, 1929

	Daily capacity tons
Nipigon Corp., Ltd., Nipigon, Ontario	200	January (Additional 200 tons, 1931)
Fort William Paper Co., Ltd., Fort William, Ontario.	250	.....

Other prospective developments include Abitibi Power & Paper Co., Ltd., Cochrane, Ontario; St. Regis Paper Co., Cap Rouge, Quebec; Bathurst Co., Ltd., Bathurst, N. B.; Great Lakes Paper Co., Ltd., Fort William, Ontario; Crown Willamette Paper Co., San Francisco, Calif.

T. R. WILLIAMS, Chairman,
E. P. Adler
Frank S. Baker
M. F. Hanson
H. V. Jones
F. I. Ker
E. Lansing Ray

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FOREST RESOURCES

SINCE the last report of your committee, there has been slow but steady steady progress in the development of the National Forestry policy with which your committee has been concerned for the past seven years. During this period the National Forestry Program Committee, on which your committee is represented and with which it has co-operated from the beginning, has in quiet but effective manner continued to work for the principles of the National Forestry policy originally set up in the Snell bill, and later very largely enacted into law through the general Land Exchange Act, the Clarke-McNary Act, and supplements thereto.

The underlying principle has been that of Federal co-operation with the states and timber land owners in the development and application of practical measures of forest management, forest protection and forest utilization, with each interest concerned making proper financial contribution and each interest performing the functions to which it is best adapted. This co-operative principle has now become so firmly established in law and practice that little more is heard of the once widely proclaimed theory of direct Federal control over timber land operations throughout the United States. Common sense and reasonableness have proved to be much safer guides than academic theories in the accomplishment of results.

Your committee has actively sustained efforts to secure, through the budget and from Congress, the appropriations authorized under the various sections of the Clarke-McNary Act. While appropriations are yet materially under these authorizations, it is encouraging to note that the Sixty-ninth Congress did make considerable increases for the next fiscal year over current appropriations for several important items. In round numbers these include increases of $223,000 for the general expenses of the Federal Forest Service, $100,000 more for White Pine blister rust control, $1,500,000 additional for forest roads and trails which will make the National Forests more accessible and be of much help in controlling forest fires, and an increase of $290,000 for co-operation with the states in forest fire prevention, bringing this item of the Clarke-McNary Law up to $1,000,000, compared with an authorization and ultimate objective of $2,500,000.

The item for the continued purchase of forest lands for the establishment of National Forests in the eastern states still stands at $1,000,000 per year, although it should be increased, and, despite the action of the Director of the Budget in adding $40,000 to the estimate for the Forest Products Laboratory, Congress passed an increase of less than $10,000 for this purpose. Efforts will be continued to secure adequate Congressional recognition of the necessity for more liberal appropriations for these several items.

Your attention is especially called to H.R. 17406, introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. McSweeney of Ohio, March 3, 1927. This is a basic organic act for forest research and investigation designed to put this highly necessary form of forest activity upon a permanent basis comparable with that under which the Agricultural Experiment Stations have been developed. Only by such means is it possible to carry out the long-time investigations and studies into the laws of forest growth and timber utilization which are vitally important in bringing a basic national resource to full use. The McSweeney Bill will be available for study and discussion throughout the country during the coming months and will then be introduced in the new Congress, hearings held and passage urged.

It is encouraging to report substantial progress in state forestry legislation. Forestry departments are being created in the few states which have not yet had them; a considerable number of states have passed the necessary constitutional amendments followed by statutory enactments which make possible the establishment of a more scientific and reasonable basis of forest taxation, the general principle being that of a small annual tax upon land value only, with a yield tax upon the crop when the timber is cut; the forest fire programs of the states are receiving increasing attention and being made more effective in co-operation with the timber land owners; and, best of all, very substantial progress is being made in the number of timber land owners who are actually beginning the permanent management of their properties according to the plans and under the supervision of competent foresters for the purpose of permanent timber production. This is taking place with holdings which are devoted to the production of saw timber as well as those whose chief product is pulpwood.

In view of the fact that 70 per cent of our forest area is privately owned, it needs no argument to point out the importance of all developments in the direction of permanent timber production on such lands. They now are and always will be our greatest source of supply of wood products.

In a valuable Bulletin by General William B. Greeley, Forester, the United States Forest Service, entitled "Present Needs in National and State Forestry," he says:

"Unstable forest-land ownership is today the greatest single obstacle to the rapid spread of timber growing throughout the country. It is represented by the land speculator, or the lumber company which intends to dispose of its holdings when cut over, or the State without a policy of permanent forestry for its timberlands, or the State, county, or town which is anxious to have tax-reverted lands chiefly valuable for timber growing put back on the assessor's rolls. If all or most of the 470,000,000 acres of forest land in the continental United States—close to one-fourth the entire land area—were in the hands of owners whose future returns rested on actual use of the land, the Nation's forest problem would be much nearer solution."

Forest Week (April 24-30) is now being observed throughout North America. It has become a truly international undertaking, with appropriate references to co-operation and forest protection in the proclamations of the President of the United States and the Governor-General of Canada. This is as it should be, because problems of forest protection and of forest utilization are the same in general principle regardless of national boundaries, and foresters everywhere are working in harmony upon matters of common interest. We are, of course, fully aware of the extent to which various kinds of weeks and days have degenerated into nuisances and very largely defeated their original philanthropic or other laudable objects. However, since much of the progress in forestry, because of the public responsibility for forest protection and particularly for carefulness with fire, depends upon the education of the public in these matters, your committee has felt it wise to co-operate in the observance of Forest Week, and is glad to note the extent to which, as heretofore, the newspapers throughout North America have helped in the undertaking.

The modern newspaper is dependent upon the forest, and, on the other hand, the development of an adequate national consciousness of forest problems depends almost entirely upon the newspapers. Your committee therefore bespeaks your continued help in the accurate and adequate presentation of the many phases of this great undertaking.

E. H. BAKER, Chairman.
Benjamin H. Anthony
Harry Chandler
R. R. McCormick
E. B. Piper

REPORT OF THE A. N. P. A. COMMITTEE ON RADIO

AN unusually eventful year in radio has passed since your radio committee reported at the fortieth annual meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. There was, first of all, the breakdown of federal control over broadcasting, a resultant increase in the number of stations, accompanied by an unprecedented confusion which threatened the destruction of a $600,000,000 a year industry. There were many pains and pangs endured in an effort to secure legislation which was eventually accomplished toward the end of February, and was immediately followed by the appointment of a Federal Radio Commission in Washington.

Your radio committee has played, I believe, an important part in shaping the destinies of the art and science of radio during the past year.

The breakdown of governmental authority over radio broadcasting dates from April 16, 1926, when Judge Wilkerson, in the Federal Court of Chicago, rendered a decision holding that the Secretary of Commerce had no right, under the law of 1912, to make arbitrary assignment of wave lengths. The Zenith Radio Corporation, owners of WJAZ, had sold its physical equipment and surrendered its right to broadcasting on a wave length of 370 meters. A new broadcasting station was built and was assigned to two hours per week on a wave length of 322.4 meters, the only time left available by KOA, at Denver, on that wave length. WJAZ thereupon began broadcasting on a wave length of 329.5 meters—one of the six wave lengths in the broadcast channel set aside by the Department of Commerce for use of Canadian broadcasting stations.

A criminal bill of information was filed by the Department of Commerce, but the government's case was lost. It was the hope of the radio industry and others interested in broadcasting that the WJAZ decision would speed the enactment of a radio control law. The White Bill had already been passed by the House, but the companion bill to the White Bill, introduced in the Senate by Senator C. C. Dill, had been withdrawn and a new measure substituting the commission form of control for control by the Secretary of Commerce was introduced by Senator Dill. That Dill Bill was passed during the closing days of the session. Both bills went to the conference committee, but the time was not sufficient to compromise the differences beween the two bills before Congress adjourned.

On July 6, 1926, Acting Attorney-General Donovan, in an opinion, advised the Department of Commerce that the radio law of 1912 required that it issue licenses to all applicants who were held to have the right to designate their own normal sending wave length, power, etc. From that moment forward confusion in the air increased day by day until a total of 733 broadcasting stations were on the air before radio legislation had been finally enacted. The confusion on the air was caused not only by the intrusion of more than 200 additional stations, but by wave jumping on the part of some of the existing stations, and power increases by many other stations.

Realizing the seriousness of the situation, the radio industry, in midsummer, started the formation of a co-ordinating committee. The chairman of the radio committee of the A. N. P. A. was asked to serve as chairman of the co-ordinating committee. The personnel of that committee was as follows:

Chairman: Walter A. Strong, chairman of the radio committee of the A. N. P. A.

Arthur T. Haugh, president, Radio Manufacturers' Association.

Paul B. Klugh, executive manager, National Association of Broadcasters.

Harold T. Wrape, president, Federated Radio Trades Association.

R. W. DeMott, president, Radio Magazine Publishers' Association.

Charles E. Stewart, vice-president, American Radio Relay League.

L. B. E. Raycroft, chairman, radio section, National Electrical Manufacturers' Association.

The first meeting of the co-ordinating committee was held in New York in September during the Radio World's Fair. A tentative plan of organization and work schedule was drawn up at this meeting. An open meeting was held, attended by approximately 400 representatives of the radio industry.

Another meeting was held during the Chicago Radio Show in October and it was planned that active work begin in the middle of November for formulating the recommendations of the industry for the conference committee of the House and Senate.

The committee opened headquarters in the Hotel Washington, at Washington, D. C., and placed L. S. Baker, secretary of the National Association of Broadcasters, in charge. Between Nov. 19 and Dec. 2, approximately eight days were devoted to considering the many problems involved in working out a legislative program that would be satisfactory to all branches of the industry and which, at the same time, would have the assurance of practicability.

The co-ordinating committee functioned under the unanimous consent rule, it having been determined that the industry must be united in its demands for legislation rather than being represented by minorities, each demanding a specific type of legislation.

The report of the national radio co-ordinating committee was hailed as a distinct achievement by members of both Houses of Congress who declared that for the first time they had been furnished a definite basis upon which to predicate their legislative views. The effect of the report of the national radio co-ordinating committee cannot be underestimated and the fact that the compromise bill to a very large extent follows the recommendations of the co-ordinating committee is in itself significant.

In addition to the members of the co-ordinating committee who signed the report, it also bears the signature of Elisha Hanson as representative of S. E. Thomason of the Chicago Tribune, who headed a committee of newspapers interested in broadcasting.

A copy of the report of the national radio co-ordinating committee is available.

The work of the co-ordinating committee was not ended with the preparation of the report containing recommendations on legislation. It was necessary to keep the headquarters open and to place at the disposal of the conference committee members the facilities of the co-ordinating committee in reaching their ultimate compromise.

The compromise was finally reached and on Jan. 29, 1927, the House, after very little delay, approved the compromise radio bill. It then went to the Senate and after three weeks of maneuvering the bill was finally passed on Feb. 18. President Coolidge signed the bill Feb. 23 and appointed a commission of five to administer the radio law. The nominations of three commissioners, General Bullard, J. F. Dillon and E. O. Sykes, were confirmed by the Senate the day before adjournment. The other two, O. H. Caldwell and H. A. Bellows, were given recess appointments.

The commission called its first public hearings March 28, 29, 30 and 31, at which your committee was represented.

The validity of the law has not yet been tested in the courts, although it is very probable that such a test will be made within a few months.

One beneficial effect of the new radio law, however, is to be found in the fact that since its passage no additional licenses have been issued, so that the confusion in the air will not be augmented through the addition of other stations. To date the commission has issued a few general orders. It has indicated that all stations must stick to the standard frequency channels which are separated by 10 kilocycles. This will require the moving of at least 100 stations. The six wavelengths originally allotted to Canada have been reassigned, which will require the moving of more than a score of stations. Temporary permits for broadcasting will be issued after April 24, good until such time as the commission is able to hold hearing on the wave lengths to be assigned.

It will be recalled that in the report of last year it was stated "the most important phases of radio broadcasting at the time this report is being prepared is the crying need for legislation for the control of radio. Control of radio comes under two headings, first, the control of the stations themselves, and, second, control of material needed by radio stations for broadcasting." The first of these has been cared for in the passage of the radio law of 1927.

The situation in respect to the use of copyright musical selections remains the same today as it did a year ago, except that the battle lines are being formed for the renewal of the fight to acquire a law which will provide for just compensation to copyright owners for the use of their music, to take the place of the present method of collecting all that the traffic will bear, now being charged by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Another outstanding event in radio in 1926 was the organization of the National Broadcasting Company, Inc., which on Nov. 1 took over Station WEAF, New York, and began the management of chain broadcasts which had hitherto been under the control of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and the chain of stations headed by WJZ, New York.

Another subject of concern to newspaper publishers in connection with radio is the increased use of radio as a medium of advertising. Fortunately, direct advertising by radio is well-nigh an impossibility. The advertisers, therefore, are limited to the broadcasting of good will programs on the air, thereby giving no serious competition to newspaper advertising. It is likewise fortunate that advertisers using this new medium have recognized the fact that they must back up their radio advertising with advertising copy in newspapers. The use of radio broadcasting by advertisers is the cause of additional perplexities in publishing program schedules in the newspaper columns. I am informed that newspaper publishers in New York City agreed to eliminate trade names from radio programs. Judging from recent copies of the New York papers, the editorial policy in this regard must have been reversed. One of the newspapers, I notice, bills its "new and comprehensive radio programs" in an eight-column top line and makes liberal use of trade names as a means of identifying programs.

The method of handling radio programs is a matter for the individual determination of newspaper editors. They should be guided by the needs of their readers, giving information that is necessary to complete understanding of radio programs. It is not possible, in the judgment of many, to eliminate trade names where a distinctive type of entertainment has been developed so that the radio audience is able at once to identify the type of program by reading the trade name.

There have been many interesting developments in the past year. Few of them, however, aside from those enumerated here, are likely to affect the newspapers interested in radio broadcasting.

I wish now to offer for your approval the recommendation that the national radio co-ordinating committee be continued as a paper organization in readiness to assume an active lead in emergencies facing the radio industry. The continuance of the national radio co-ordinating committee will not be an expense item, nor will any expenses be incurred in case of emergency without the approval of the officers and directors of the A. N. P. A. The entire cost of maintaining headquarters for the co-ordinating committee in carrying on its work was approximately $7,000, of which the A. N. P. A. radio committee has advanced $2,200. This sum will be reduced by the division of expenses to approximately $1,400, which, in my estimation, is an extremely low cost for the great amount of work done and for the actual accomplishment of radio legislation.

WALTER A. STRONG,
Chairman.

Julian Mason, editor of the New York Evening Post, and Cyrus H. K. Curtis, publisher of the Post, photographed at the A. N. P. A. convention this week.

BICKEL REVIEWS HISTORY OF UNITED PRESS

Development of Afternoon Newspapers Moved Forward a Decade by Aggressive News Methods of Organization Founded by E. W. Scripps, U. P. President Declares

By KARL A. BICKEL
President, United Press Associations
(Written for Editor & Publisher)

Karl A. Bickel

AT the international conference of press association experts held last ummer at Geneva under the auspices of ıe League of Nations a delegate, repre-ıenting one of the governmental news gencies of a European power, became ritated by the persistent reference to his nd similarly constituted organizations as official" or "semi-official." Thoroughly ognizant of implications the title involved, e uttered an emphatic and heated protest. ater in the day a resolution was brought ı and adopted in which it was provided ıat the governmentally subsidized or ıaintained news agencies of certain uropean and Asiatic powers, with their ffiliated and associated agencies, be nown as the "Allied Agencies." During ıe balance of the conference, out of de-erence to the sensibilities of the gentle-ıen involved, the delegates adhered crupulously to the new name in order ıat no further offense be given.

Nothing could more graphically or ramatically illustrate the tremendous ıange that has occurred in the last two ecades in the attitude of both editors ıd the ultimate consumers of news—the ewspaper readers—towards the princi-es and ethical standards affecting the reat business of collecting and distribut-ıg the history of today throughout the orld.

Twenty years ago the United Press was ounded by the late E. W. Scripps upon ıe principle that the collection and dis-ribution of news should be non-exclusive. or twenty years our organization has ood as a bulwark against any threat of news monopoly. Not only in America ut as the sphere of its influence ex-nded, throughout the world.

In direct contradiction to the basic rinciples of the governmental agencies ıd their associates who controlled the orld news field at the time, the United ress granted no exclusive privileges and sought none. Brought into being dur-ıg a period when the leaders of the old ne "official" agency group like the Cae-ırs of old, were cynically and autocrati-ılly dividing the world up into private pheres of news control, the founder of ıe United Press was frankly taking the osition that a news monopoly was not ıly a national menace but in the end the onopoly, if attained, became a greater ırse to its possessor than its victim.

Nineteen-seven was the opening of a irring era; a period of transition and ıange, a moving forward from old ositions and ideals to new frontiers in ought and action. It was a period of ental activity and questioning not only side the limits of the newspaper world ut in the fields of politics, finance and the me. Roosevelt and his political Rough iders, who later became insurgents and en Progressive, were making their first stures towards independence of the Old ard of their party; the Interstate Com-rce law had been given teeth; the Sher-an anti-trust act was a threatening eapon in the hands of every federal dis-ict attorney; child labor laws and others' pensions were being agitated; olliers' had opened its brave campaign gainst poisoned medicine and poisoned od; Dr. Wiley and his "squad" were coming known in every domestic itchen in America.

Into this period came the United Press; "mergling" as it were, from the com-hation of the old Scripps-McRae, the ublishers Press and the Scripps News. Young, independent, unhampered by tdition and unfettered by precedent, te United Press sensed the spirit of the rw era and swung into step with it.

"Todays News Today" became its ogan at a time when the afternoon wspaper was published on the theory tat of necessity it had to be a bulletin set as against the ponderous dispatches ried in its sunrise contemporary.

At a time when the interview was "taboo" in old line press association circles; when the "human interest" story was regarded as an exhibition of bad press association taste and commercial and financial news was not presumed to be authentic unless it was supremely dull; the United Press with the exuberance and vitality that only the youth and vision of its dominating personalities could give it plunged frankly into these forbidden fields and found things of tremendous interest and concern to the American newspaper consumer.

"The United Press," wrote Roy W. Howard in 1912 just after he had formally assumed the position of president of the organization, "is frankly and avowedly radical in its choice of news subjects, but painstakingly conservative in the handling of those subjects."

Conservative or not, as some of the elder statesmen in the opposition organization may have regarded their method of handling the chosen news subjects, the methods and spirit of the young organization blew across the stale air of journalistic world like a breeze from the sea. The afternoon newspaper was given its chance. The binding strings were taken off under the force of the competition of the new organization. The United Press gave afternoon newspaper publishers a complete sport report, relieving them of the embargo which had rested over their properties for years and had prevented them from expanding into their rightful field of late afternoon news.

Big stories breaking late in the afternoon were covered for the afternoon press; not merely bulletined and then the details held out for the then stronger morning brother.

Militantly and aggressively a business institution the United Press gave its publishers real "co-operation," co-operation when it counted—at press time—and roamed the whole world over looking for other hoary traditions of an outworn journalistic theory to smash.

Within far less than the first 20 years of its existence, United Press style and United Press news standards were being frankly and openly imitated by every press association in the United States while the creation of United Press "spirit" in their organizations was the cherished hope of rival press association executives.

Events move rapidly in this world and nowhere do they move with greater rapidity and leave fewer mental souvenirs than in the newspaper industry. Because of that fact it is hard, except perhaps for some of the veterans, to realize the tremendous revolution in afternoon newspaper publishing conditions that the United Press has brought about since 1907, either directly and as a result of its own initiative or by the pressure of its competition upon its opposition. Had it not been for the establishment of the United Press, guided by only one concept of conduct—the delivery of the most effective service possible at the time the publisher desired it the most—the development and progress of the afternoon newspaper would have been held back at least a decade.

In 1907 the newspapers of America were dominated by the great and powerful morning press with their own interests to protect And until the United Press flashed into the field, no power had been found strong enough to break that domination. The development of the American afternoon newspaper as it stands today, infinitely the strongest and most powerful newspaper group in the world, is directly traceable to the concurrent development of the United Press.

As it sought to vitalize and energize the editorial standards of the American press association, the United Press at the same time pioneered in the fields of faster and more economical news transmission. Revolutionary as was its work on the editorial side its contribution to modern news transmission has been fully as significant.

It was the United Press that first utilized the remarkable facilities of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for telegraphic news transmission and secured for its clients a standard of maintainence and delivery on "Morse" hitherto unequalled in this country. This remained an exclusive United Press feature until the irresistible driving force of the competition forced the opposition to using the same facilities.

It was the United Press that first developed the use of the telephone as a channel for the transmission of "pony" news reports and as a result immediately offered its smaller client papers and infinitely larger and better edited service via the "PNT" than had been possible on the old "five hundred word" telegraphic pony—and at a very real saving in rate. The first telephonic "pony" circuits were set up by the United Press in 1908. Since that time dozens of newspapers, able for the first time to get a really adequate report for the size of their field at a rate they could pay, have developed into papers of not only one but often two and three leased wires.

It was the United Press that first went into the extensive use of the printer telegraph machine for regular delivery of complete service to client newspapers. In 1915 a circuit was established in Greater New York, Newark and Jersey City. As the printer machine developed the United Press extended its range of usefulness. It was not long before the United Press, all over the country, was operating extensive printer telegraph circuits, without any operator attendant, on a one way basis, long decried as impossible and then as inefficient by competing associations. Today this one way printer machine delivery is being taken up by all press associations.

At a time when competing press associations were fearfully regarding the development of radio broadcasting as possibly containing the germ of destructive competition the United Press was first to welcome the radio, not as a competitor of the press association or the newspaper but as an immeasurably valuable ally. When the United Press took over the famous WEAF national "hook up" on the occasion of the last general election in 1924 and, through its co-operating client newspapers dominated the air that evening with election returns, the embargo on radio placed by other organizations crumbled and competition tumbled pell mell into line.

Being alive and therefore human and subject to error the United Press has made its quota of mistakes in the past. It will unquestionably make mistakes in

(Continued on page 53)

ADVERTISING AGENCY COMMITTEE REPORT

DURING 1910 the Association of National Advertising Managers, now known as the Association of National Advertisers—an organization of advertising managers of many national advertisers—started a campaign to destroy the agency commission system, under the operation of which the volume of advertising has been greatly stimulated through the past forty years or more.

They, or some of them, desired to substitute a fee system of compensation so that they might hire agency service by the piece, the week, or the month.

Publishers generally disapproved the proposed change but the agitation was continued and arguments against it were heard in many quarters.

Some two years ago some members and the Secretary of the Association of National Advertisers are alleged to have induced the Federal Trade Commission to issue complaint against the Association of Advertising Agencies, the American Newspaper Publishers Association—which includes the Bureau of Advertising—the Special Representatives Association of New York, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association and the American Press Association.

This complaint alleges conspiracy to accomplish various illegal acts, including price fixing with relation to agents' commission, oppression and restraint of direct advertisers, camouflaged house agencies, or advertising departments of direct advertisers, etc.; restraint of interstate commerce; exchange of information between the various defendants, and unfair methods of competition, all with a view to furthering the alleged conspiracy.

One of the objectives sought by the Commission is to make effective the program of these National Advertisers and to compel publishers to allow the same rate to all who advertise, whether or not they perform any special service in the development of advertising.

Your committee believes that should the Federal Trade Commission succeed in accomplishing its purpose the volume of advertising may be expected to decrease materially.

The Federal Trade Commission is also undertaking a censorship of advertising, all predicated on the assumption that advertising is not a service as repeatedly held by the Courts, but it is an instrumentality of commerce, if not, indeed, a commodity.

To what extent this may interfere with the successful conduct of our business and to what extent our counting room practices will be made a constant subject of investigation by bureaucratic officials and our members penalized in various ways, depend on the result of proceedings now pending. Nor is it far-fetched to see in the attainment of these ends an effective control of newspapers which amounts to a denial of the freedom of the press with all the consequences arising therefrom.

Let us again remind you that the credit ratings contained in our List of Advertising Agents accurately represent the surplus arrived at by careful analysis, which is constantly being made of the financial and other conditions of the advertising agencies of interest to the membership, which changes are reported to you through the medium of our weekly bulletins.

At rare intervals your committee has discovered situations in connection with either advertising agents or advertisers which should be subject to the most careful investigation with a view to recovering for creditors diverted or concealed moneys, rightfully belonging to creditors. Our only present method of handling such situations is to submit the facts to the known creditors, whose claims in most instances have been too small to create sufficient interest to lead to thorough investigation or prosecution. To the end that your committee may go to the bottom of similar conditions that may exist in the future we suggest, should it meet with your approval, that when the Chairman of your Committee and the General Manager decide the best interests of the membership necessitates a small expenditure of money for the general good, they be authorized to draw on the funds of the Association up to, but not in excess of $1,000 per annum. The following resolution is submitted for your consideration.

RESOLVED, That when the Chairman of the Advertising Agents Committee and the General Manager may conclude the interests of the membership require the expenditure of money for the purpose of investigating or prosecuting debtors to members of the Association, and when other funds are not available for that purpose they be authorized to draw for this purpose on the funds of the Association up to but not in excess of one thousand dollars ($1,000) per annum.

RECOGNITION, CANCELLATION, ETC.

Eighty-two (82) applications for recognition were received during 1926. Thirty-one (31) Advertising Agencies were granted recognition; forty-six (46) Agencies were refused; recognition previously extended to thirty-one (31) Agencies was cancelled; sixty-nine (69) changes of ratings were made; and recognition transferred on request for twenty-six (26) Agencies.

Since January 1, 1927, thirty-nine (39) applications for recognition have been received. Sixteen (16) agencies have been granted recognition. Ten (10) agencies have been refused recognition. Recognition of seven (7) agencies has been cancelled. Eleven (11) applications have been tabled for future development. Forty-five (45) applications have been withdrawn because they did not meet requirements. Seven (7) agencies requested transfer of recognition. Sixty-two (62) changes in ratings have been made.

GENERAL MANAGER'S REPORT

FOUR HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SIX publications were enrolled as members in this Association January 1st, 1926, of which 485 were active and one associate. During the year 29 new members were elected, of which 28 were active and one associate. One associate membership terminated. Eight members consolidated with other members. Two members suspended publication. One member was dropped for non-payment of dues, and 13 members resigned. One member went into the hands of a receiver, making a total membership Dec. 31, 1926 of 489 of which 488 were active and one associate.

Of the thirteen members resigning during the year 1926, seven resigned to curtail expenses, three because of the increase of dues. The Springfield Union was purchased by the Sprinfield Republican, but as the two publications are not published by the same corporation, the Springfield Union resigned. Two publications resigned because of dissatisfaction with the Association.

Since the Associate Membership Cl was created one hundred and thirty-s (136) publications have become associ members; eighty-nine (89) have beco active members; forty-six (46) memb ships have lapsed, and the associate te of one has not expired.

During the year 1926, 192 Offic Measuring Rules were sold. Eighty-t bulletin binders were sold. During t year 1926, 10,074 inquiries were receiv and answered, a decrease from the pr ceding year of 2,986.

Five thousand three hundred and sixt five claims were received for collecti during 1926, 460 more than during 192 amounting to $460,574.98, an increase amount of $124,016.13.

Three thousand three hundred and fo claims were collected amounting to $13 458.82, an increase of $16,157.56 ov 1925. Of the amount collected, $5,781. represented dividends in bankruptcy a assignments and $130,677.40 represent ordinary collections.

Claim reported uncollectible	$161,586.
Allowances	871.
Withdrawals	18,556.

	1925	1926
Commissions earned	$13,612.26	$12,310.

A decrease of $1,301.76.

Since Jan. 1st, 1927, sixteen membe have been elected. One member has be transferred from the associate to t active class. One member consolidat with another member. Two membe were dropped for non-payment of du Twenty-one members resigned. The tot membership at this date is four hundr and eighty-one members.

AD MEN GREET DISTINGUISHED VISITOR

When Portland's leading advertising men turned out to welcome the San Francisco "bathing beauty." Left to right, they are: Lindsey Spight, City Commissioner Pier, A. L. Steele (partially hidden), Harry Fischer, H. B. Robinson, Charles O. Chatterton, William P. Merry, president of the Portland Advertising Club, and Tommy Luke. They are gathered around the bathing beauty herself, Miss Lotta Quack

THE San Francisco Advertising club put over a fast one when it telegraphed the Portland Advertising club that it was sending to Portland the winner among San Francisco bathing beauties to stimulate interest in the on-to-Portland movement for the Pacific Coast Advertising convention in June.

The "bathing beauty" arrived and was duly met at the train by a formal reception committee from the Portland club. The reception committee registered surprise, not to say consternation, when the "bathing beauty" turned out to be the finest and largest tame goose to be bought on the San Francisco market.

There had been much rivalry for places on the reception committee that was to meet the California beauty. William P. Merry, president of the Portland club, was chairman, and Stanhope S. Pier, city commissioner, was present to represent his honor, Mayor George L. Baker.

Other members of the committee were Charles O. Chatterton, Harry Fischer, Tommy Luke, A. L. Steele, Lindsey Spight, H. B. Robinson and Miss Anne P. Keil, secretary of the Portland club.

All of the boys were dressed up in a manner befitting the reception of a reigning beauty. W. J. Hofmann, general chairman of the coast convention committee, was the only one in whom the San Francisco club had confided the identity of the beauty. Tommy Luke appeared at the Union Station carrying a corsage bouquet. It was finally offered to the goose who selected a few choice tidbits for luncheon.

The hoax was taken in good spirit by the Portland club group.

FLORIDA TYPOS ELECT

The Florida Typographical conferen in spring session at Daytona Beach, Fl Sunday selected Tampa as the place f the Fall meeting, and elected W. Spain, an employe of the Tampa Tr bune, president. Mr. Spain succeeds M Dosh of Orlando, acting president. Th next meeting will be in October. Tho attending from Tampa were Mr. Spai T. S. Brow, T. W. Barlow, F. R. Holde and Vernon F. Smith. The Sunday co ference was attended by representativ of the organization from all parts of t state. A banquet was held Sunday afte noon at the Chateau Lido.

AD TIPS

Atherton & Currier, Inc., 420 Lexington av nue, New York. Placing the following a counts: Allen Auto Specialty Company, N York, "Allen" Shutter Front; Enoch Morgan Sons Company, New York, "Sapolio"; Nor American Dye Corp., Mt. Vernon, N. Y., Su set Soap Dyes and White Witch.

Donovan-Armstrong, 1211 Chestnut stre Philadelphia. Placing the account of O Eisenlohr & Bros., Inc., Philadelphia, man facturers of cigars.

Dorrance, Sullivan & Company 130 West 4 street, New York. Handling the advertisi of Albert Ehlers, Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y., Gra A Products, coffee, teas and spices.

Albert Frank & Co., 14 Stone street, N York. Has secured accounts of the Ra Addressing Machine Company, Rahway, N. manufacturers of addressing and direct m machinery, and J. Lesquendieu, Inc., manufa turers of cosmetics.

Gorman Company, 49 West 45th street, N York. Handling the advertising of Smokad Manufacturing Company, New York, "Ashle Ashstand."

Koch Company, 432 Broadway, Milwauk Now handling account for the Frank F. Pas Company, Milwaukee, manufacturers and d tributors of water filters, etc.

Lord & Thomas and Logan, Inc., 400 Nor Michigan avenue, Chicago. Placing the accou of the Central Alloy Steel Corporation, Mass lon, Ohio, manufacturers of Agathon All Steels, Agathon Copper, Molybdenum Iro Agatha Enduro Shingles, etc.

McKee & Albright, 1606 Walnut street, Phi delphia. Placing account of Wheatena Co pany, Rahway, N. J.

J. X. Netter, Inc., 67 West 44th street, N York. Placing accounts for the F. L. Sm Company, Inc., manufacturers of the Stow Electric Washing Machines, the Milton Co pany, manufacturers of linens and the John Woodbury Laboratories, Inc.

J. Walter Thompson Company, 420 Lexingt avenue, New York. Making up lists for t advertising of Penick & Ford Sales Compa Inc., 420 Lexington avenue, New York, "B Rabbit Molasses."

O. S. Tyson & Co., Inc., 16 East 41st stre New York. Has secured account of the N tional Clamp Company, New York.

TOTAL NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING OF THE PRINCIPAL CITIES FOR MARCH

Summary of Advertising by Cities

30 cities listed	3 show gain	27 show loss
130 papers listed	39 show gain	86 show loss
	5 no comparison

	1927	1926
New York	15,287,006	15,642,260	355,254 Loss
Chicago	8,082,717	8,223,657	140,940 Loss
Philadelphia	6,771,104	7,525,842	754,738 Loss
Detroit	5,314,722	5,739,426	424,704 Loss
Cleveland	3,891,900	4,061,625	169,725 Loss
St. Louis	4,288,900	4,573,500	284,600 Loss
Boston	6,685,942	7,003,130	317,188 Loss
Baltimore	4,554,530	4,767,752	213,222 Loss
Los Angeles	7,134,598	7,645,994	511,396 Loss
Buffalo	3,188,245	4,008,624	820,379 Loss
San Francisco	4,825,937	5,297,477	471,540 Loss
Milwaukee	3,077,620	3,099,391	21,771 Loss
Washington	5,028,389	5,049,102	20,713 Loss
Cincinnati	3,887,100	3,908,700	21,600 Loss
New Orleans	3,880,555	4,263,038	382,483 Loss
Minneapolis	2,740,944	3,157,829	416,885 Loss
Seattle	2,996,462	3,123,120	126,658 Loss
Indianapolis	3,167,112	3,283,662	116,550 Loss
Denver	2,950,801	2,325,736	625,065 Gain
Providence	2,907,182	3,045,632	138,450 Loss
Columbus	3,517,908	3,705,386	187,478 Loss
Louisville	3,129,974	3,363,114	233,140 Loss
St. Paul	2,434,182	2,537,962	103,780 Loss
Oakland	2,533,916	2,687,622	153,706 Loss
Omaha	1,740,802	2,039,933	299,131 Loss
Birmingham	2,774,240	2,932,986	158,746 Loss
Richmond	1,973,902	1,983,720	9,818 Loss
Dayton	3,320,954	2,996,826	324,128 Gain
Houston	3,036,768	3,019,898	16,870 Gain
Des Moines	1,608,270	2,002,143	393,873 Loss
Totals	126,732,682	133,015,087	6,282,405 Loss

NEW YORK

	1927	1926
American	1,064,310	1,116,226	51,916 Loss
Herald Tribune	1,681,246	1,598,302	82,944 Gain
Times	2,560,242	2,549,226	11,016 Gain
World	1,328,506	1,513,760	185,254 Loss
*Mirror (Tabloid)	275,650	311,086	35,436 Loss
News (Tabloid)	814,968	669,454	145,514 Gain
*Evening Graphic	314,976	353,884	38,908 Loss
*Evening Journal	1,287,516	1,421,098	133,582 Loss
*Evening Post	512,260	455,162	57,098 Gain
*Evening World	879,004	950,296	71,292 Loss
*Sun	1,524,650	1,499,546	25,104 Gain
*Telegram	534,980	522,470	12,510 Gain
Brooklyn Eagle	1,456,854	1,517,864	61,010 Loss
Brooklyn Times	574,358	652,828	78,470 Loss
Standard Union	477,486	511,058	33,572 Loss
Totals	15,287,006	15,642,260	355,254 Loss

CHICAGO

	1927	1926
*Daily News	1,914,870	1,964,628	49,758 Loss
Tribune	2,863,842	2,896,536	32,694 Loss
Herald Examiner	1,173,630	1,136,454	37,176 Gain
*Post	480,609	547,065	66,456 Loss
*American	1,243,659	1,236,891	6,768 Gain
*Journal	406,107	442,083	35,976 Loss
Totals	8,082,717	8,223,657	140,940 Loss

PHILADELPHIA

	1927	1926
Inquirer	1,809,900	1,922,700	112,800 Loss
Record	761,100	803,700	42,600 Loss
Ledger	1,284,256	1,448,009	163,753 Loss
*Evening Ledger	1,318,648	1,445,333	126,685 Loss
*Bulletin	1,597,200	1,906,100	308,900 Loss
Totals	6,771,104	7,525,842	754,738 Loss

DETROIT

	1927	1926
News	2,750,202	3,088,148	337,946 Loss
Times	1,165,234	1,118,194	47,040 Gain
Free Press	1,399,286	1,533,084	133,798 Loss
Totals	5,314,722	5,739,426	424,704 Loss

CLEVELAND

	1927	1926
Plain Dealer	1,496,550	1,542,150	45,600 Loss
News-Leader	1,077,075	1,159,050	81,975 Loss
*Press	1,318,275	1,360,425	42,150 Loss
Totals	3,891,900	4,061,625	169,725 Loss

ST. LOUIS

	1927	1926
Post-Dispatch	2,090,200	2,242,800	152,600 Loss
Globe-Democrat	1,267,200	1,299,600	32,400 Loss
*Star	618,600	661,800	43,200 Loss
Times	312,900	369,300	56,400 Loss
Totals	4,288,900	4,573,500	284,600 Loss

BALTIMORE

	1927	1926
Sun	1,416,440	1,574,487	158,047 Loss
*Evening American	1,521,138	1,657,186	136,048 Loss
American	513,929	448,943	64,986 Gain
*News	753,090	712,565	40,525 Gain
*Post	349,933	374,571	24,638 Loss
Totals	4,554,530	4,767,752	213,222 Loss

BOSTON

	1927	1926
Herald	1,452,496	1,425,050	27,446 Gain
Globe	1,412,772	1,437,696	24,924 Loss
Post	1,056,047	1,154,333	98,286 Loss
Advertiser	496,529	506,322	9,793 Loss
*American	458,342	432,057	26,285 Gain
*Traveler	1,183,628	1,175,646	7,982 Gain
*Transcript	626,128	635,304	9,176 Loss
*Telegram	.....	236,722	.....
Totals	6,685,942	7,003,130	317,188 Loss

Telegram discontinued November, 1926.

LOS ANGELES

	1927	1926
Times	2,230,130	2,354,828	124,698 Loss
Examiner	1,871,886	2,038,728	166,842 Loss
*Express	845,740	839,818	5,922 Gain
*Herald	1,463,658	1,623,706	160,048 Loss
*Record	446,530	465,696	19,166 Loss
*News	276,654	323,218	46,564 Loss
Totals	7,134,598	7,645,994	511,396 Loss

BUFFALO

	1927	1926
Express	.....	517,081	.....
Courier	763,550	663,834	99,716 Gain
Times	1,124,945	1,229,677	104,732 Loss
*Star	.....	137,586	.....
*News	1,299,750	1,460,440	160,696 Loss
Totals	3,188,245	4,008,624	820,379 Loss

Express combined with Courier June 19, 1926.
Star combined with Courier June 19, 1926.

SAN FRANCISCO

	1927	1926
Chronicle	1,042,356	1,138,172	95,816 Loss
Examiner	1,631,459	1,721,597	90,138 Loss
Bulletin	531,384	672,476	141,092 Loss
*Call	959,560	941,500	18,060 Gain
*News	661,178	673,134	11,956 Loss
*Herald	.....	150,598	.....
Totals	4,825,937	5,297,477	471,540 Loss

Herald discontinued publication May 5, 1926.

MILWAUKEE

	1927	1926
Journal	1,505,812	1,587,494	81,682 Loss
S. T. & A. Sentinel	588,863,	609,211	20,348 Loss
*Leader	247,838	265,265	17,427 Loss
*Wisconsin News	735,107	637,421	97,686 Gain
Totals	3,077,620	3,099,391	21,771 Loss

WASHINGTON

	1927	1926
Star	2,569,671	2,531,718	37,953 Gain
Post	942,686	985,731	43,045 Loss
*Evening Times	693,939	727,453	33,514 Loss
Herald	593,238	570,096	23,142 Gain
*Evening News	228,855	234,104	5,249 Loss
Totals	5,028,389	5,049,102	20,713 Loss

CINCINNATI

	1927	1926
*Post	939,000	903,000	36,000 Gain
*Times Star	1,461,300	1,450,200	11,100 Gain
Enquirer	1,201,800	1,277,700	75,900 Loss
Tribune	285,000	277,800	7,200 Gain
Totals	3,887,100	3,908,700	21,600 Loss

NEW ORLEANS

	1927	1926
Times-Picayune	1,584,185	1,668,662	84,477 Loss
Item	933,528	972,365	38,837 Loss
States	797,050	884,432	87,382 Loss
*Tribune	565,792	737,579	171,787 Loss
Totals	3,880,555	4,263,038	382,483 Loss

MINNEAPOLIS

	1927	1926
Tribune	1,158,334	1,329,285	170,951 Loss
Journal	1,142,300	1,368,692	226,392 Loss
*Star	440,310	459,852	19,542 Loss
Totals	2,740,944	3,157,829	416,885 Loss

SEATTLE

	1927	1926
Times	1,455,188	1,467,368	12,180 Loss
Post-Intelligencer	870,436	892,486	22,050 Loss
*Star	573,692	626,500	52,808 Loss
*Union-Record	97,146	136,766	39,620 Loss
Totals	2,996,462	3,123,120	126,658 Loss

INDIANAPOLIS

	1927	1926
*News	1,598,235	1,595,265	2,970 Gain
Star	1,100,121	1,141,314	41,193 Loss
*Times	468,756	547,083	78,327 Loss
Totals	3,167,112	3,283,662	116,550 Loss

DENVER

	1927	1926
News	927,810	544,040	383,770 Gain
Post	1,204,111	1,318,688	114,577 Loss
*Times	818,880	463,008	355,872 Gain
Totals	2,950,801	2,325,736	625,065 Gain

PROVIDENCE

	1927	1926
Journal	829,527	864,491	34,964 Loss
*Bulletin	1,275,213	1,285,706	10,493 Loss
Tribune	375,117	421,602	46,485 Loss
*News	427,325	473,833	46,508 Loss
Totals	2,907,182	3,045,632	138,450 Loss

COLUMBUS

	1927	1926
Dispatch	1,835,094	2,001,747	166,653 Loss
Journal	624,841	675,480	29,814 Gain
*Citizen	1,057,973	1,028,159	50,639 Loss
Totals	3,517,908	3,705,386	187,478 Loss

LOUISVILLE

	1927	1926
Courier-Journal	1,250,682	1,202,488	48,194 Gain
*Herald-Post	291,042	533,206	242,164 Loss
*Times	1,190,554	1,106,704	83,850 Gain
*Post	397,696	520,716	123,020 Loss
Totals	3,129,974	3,363,114	233,140 Loss

Herald-Post morning edition discontinued with issue of March 5, 1927.

ST. PAUL

	1927	1926
*Dispatch	892,360	900,718	8,358 Loss
Pioneer	721,770	884,268	162,498 Loss
News	820,052	752,976	67,076 Gain
Totals	2,434,182	2,537,962	103,780 Loss

OAKLAND

	1927	1926
Tribune	1,569,372	1,699,796	130,424 Loss
*Post-Enquirer	859,796	864,332	4,536 Loss
*Times	104,748	123,494	18,746 Loss
Totals	2,533,916	2,687,622	153,706 Loss

OMAHA

	1927	1926
World-Herald	1,060,836	1,118,173	57,337 Loss
Bee-News	679,966	484,204	195,762 Gain
News	.....	437,556	.....
Totals	1,740,802	2,039,933	299,131 Loss

News combined with Bee, February 7, 1927.

BIRMINGHAM

	1927	1926
Age-Herald	631,974	817,992	186,018 Loss
News	1,555,460	1,643,516	84,056 Loss
*Post	582,806	471,478	111,328 Gain
Totals	2,774,240	2,932,986	158,746 Loss

RICHMOND

	1927	1926
*News-Leader	1,092,616	1,110,620	18,004 Loss
Times-Dispatch	881,286	873,100	8,186 Gain
Totals	1,973,902	1,983,720	9,818 Loss

DAYTON

	1927	1926
News	1,610,098	1,433,838	176,260 Gain
*Herald	1,032,402	909,524	122,878 Gain
Journal	678,454	653,464	24,990 Gain
Totals	3,320,954	2,996,826	324,128 Gain

HOUSTON

	1927	1926
Chronicle	1,248,254	1,360,030	111,776 Loss
Post-Dispatch	1,102,696	1,108,618	5,922 Loss
*Press	685,818	551,250	134,568 Gain
Totals	3,036,768	3,019,898	16,870 Gain

DES MOINES

	1927	1926
Register	738,904	675,574	63,330 Gain
*Tribune	869,366	826,639	42,727 Gain
*Capital	.....	499,930	.....
Totals	1,608,270	2,002,143	393,873 Loss

Daily Capital discontinued with February 12, 1927, issue.

ATLANTA

	1927	1926
Journal	1,286,152	1,314,124	27,972 Loss
Constitution	.....	.....	.....

KANSAS CITY

	1927	1926
Journal	475,559	514,854	39,295 Loss
*Post	452,134	463,988	11,854 Loss
Star	1,590,810	1,711,735	120,925 Loss
*Times	887,927	898,663	10,736 Loss
Totals	3,406,430	3,589,240	182,810 Loss

MEMPHIS

	1927	1926
Commercial Appeal	1,256,220	1,418,067	161,847 Loss
*Evening Appeal	621,999	.....	.....
*Press-Scimitar	827,043	.....	.....
*Press	.....	595,280	.....
*News-Scimitar	.....	630,112	.....
Totals	2,705,262	2,643,459	61,803 Gain

NEWARK, N. J.

	1927	1926
Ledger	.....	.....	.....
*News	1,916,482	1,938,185	21,703 Loss
*Star-Eagle	.....	.....	.....
Sunday Call	.....	.....	.....

PITTSBURGH

	1927	1926
*Chronicle-Telegraph	1,077,048	1,115,548	38,500 Loss
Gazette-Times	713,694	903,056	189,362 Loss
Press	2,207,940	2,318,988	111,048 Loss
Post	841,918	887,348	45,430 Loss
*Sun	.....	.....	.....
Totals	4,840,600	5,224,940	384,340 Loss

PORTLAND

	1927	1926
Oregonian	1,183,294	1,309,050	125,756 Loss
Oregon Journal	1,114,414	1,119,090	4,576 Loss
*News	496,426	494,522	1,904 Gain
*Telegram	388,679	573,218	184,539 Loss
Totals	3,182,813	3,496,880	314,067 Loss

U. P. EXECUTIVES GATHER FOR BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Group of U. P. business executives present at Waldorf this week. Front row (left to right): L. B. Mickel, superintendent of bureaus; Gilbert M. Clayton, assistant business manager; Hugh Baillie, general business manager; Clem J. Randau, sales manager; M. F. Bourjaily, eastern business representative; K. D. Gilmore, southern business representative. Standing (left to right): Edward C. Derr, Central Division news manager; Percy B. Scott, Albany bureau manager; Harry W. Sharpe, southwestern business representative; Tom W. Gerber, eastern business representative; Otis P. Swift, New England business representative; Carl D. Groat, Washington day news manager; John C. Moore, commercial manager; Frank H. Bartholomew, Pacific Coast business representative; Raymond Clapper, Washington night news manager; Charles McCabe, Great Lakes business manager.

OFFICIAL SPOKESMAN PASSES FROM SCENE

Coolidge Discards Time-Worn Device of Washington Correspondents at "Executive" Conference— News Leaks Out

Exit the Official Spokesman for the President of the United States!

No longer may the Washington newspaper correspondent fall back upon the thinly-disguised anonymity of this once peculiar personage. For President Calvin Coolidge himself has decreed the passing of the Official Spokesman through whom the views and utterances of the President of the United States have frequently been disseminated by some members of the Washington corps of newspaper writers since the days of Warren G. Harding.

Mr. Coolidge no longer desires what transpires between him and the Washington newspaper correspondents at the press conferences held at the White House each Tuesday and Friday to be interpreted or broadcast otherwise in the press by the Official Spokesman.

The correspondents who thronged the Coolidge private sanctum in the Executive Annex to the White House on Friday last were so informed. By whom such information was conveyed, clearly and unmistakably, EDITOR & PUBLISHER is not permitted to state more directly under the rules governing what was stated explicitly to be an executive session the correspondents held with Mr. Coolidge.

News of the demise of the Official Spokesman percolated, however, from the White House into political channels unfriendly to Mr. Coolidge, and became the theme of caustic public comment by anti-administration Senators over the week-end.

It is therefore no longer a secret, at the National Capital, at least that the Official Spokesman has ceased to exist, and will never again appear under a Washington date-line if the Presidential mandate consigning him to an unmarked grave is obeyed.

Some Washington correspondents have never availed themselves of the Official Spokesman. A number of them have long completely ignored him in seeking to reflect, without being able to quote directly, Mr. Coolidge's responses to the prepared questions submitted to the President in lieu of forbidden oral interrogations at the bi-weekly White House Press conferences. Those correspondents who have employed the Official Spokesman in conveying to the editors and readers of their newspapers the attitude of Mr. Coolidge on national and international affairs alone have been forced to find a new vehicle for their efforts to report what the President says, unquote, about this, that and so-and-so.

The sudden elimination of the Official Spokesman has left certain Washington correspondents non-plussed as to how far it may now be permissible to go in holding up the cold print of publicity to the Presidential tongue, which is often as noticeably loquacious as it is frequently reticent at Mr. Coolidge's press conferences.

The more cautious Washington correspondents will probably fall back upon the familiar statement that, "It is understood that President Coolidge, etc.," or "The announcement was authorized at the White House that the President's Chinese policy, etc." Some less cautious Washington corespondents have attributed as directly as possibly to the President without using the forbidden quotation marks many of Mr. Coolidge's utterances. Others have made it even plainer that Mr. Coolidge actually said so-and-so. The situation has so developed, largely as a result it is believed in some quarters at Washington of the strong exception taken recently by the President to criticism by one group of correspondents of Mr. Kellogg as Secretary of State, and to the suggestion by the same correspondents that he was to be succeeded by Mr. Hoover, that it may, perhaps, be interesting to study the various methods which will be employed henceforth to "get across" Mr. Coolidge's utterances to the newspapers and their readers now that the Official Spokesman is no more.

"MIGS" TOURNEY LAUNCHED

Forty Newspapers Participating in Fifth Annual Contest

Some 40 newspapers have already joined the Fifth National Marble Tournament, sponsored by Central Group of Scripps-Howard Newspapers, Howard Stephenson, national director, announced this week.

Headquarters have been established at Toledo, O.

Final matches will be held at Atlantic City the week of June 26-July 1. Champions and newspaper correspondents will be taken by the Philadelphia Bulletin, on of the tournament members, on a special pilgrimage to Valley Forge. Rings for marble-shooting will be erected on the beach at Atlantic City, near the board walk.

Local tournaments in most cities will be held during May and the early weeks of June. Tournament membership is not limited to Scripps-Howard papers, outside newspapers being invited to join on a co-operative basis.

DAWSON CABLES FELICITATION

Man Who Went With Roosevelt to Africa Congratulates U. P.

F. Warrington Dawson, who accompanied Roosevelt on his trip to Africa for the United Press, cabled congratulations to Karl A. Bickel, U. P. president, on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of that organization celebrated this week.

The cable said: "In memory of our association in strenuous years of upbuilding I add my congratulations on the day which celebrates your stupendous success."—F. Warrington Dawson, former United Press manager, Paris.

Dawson, has won a reputation for himself as a writer in the French language in his years abroad.

SALEM PAPER MOVES

The Salem (Mass.) Sunday Tribune now occupying its new quarters on Essex Street, a block away from its old office. A new press was recently installed.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING 1926 RECORDS OF LEADING NEWSPAPERS

(Corrected and Reprinted from Issue of April 23)

KEY—*Gain; †Loss; [1] Chamber of Commerce or other Local Authority; [2] Audit Bureau of Circulations figure; [3] U. S. Census Estimate of July 1, 1926; [4] State Census, 1926; [5] Outline type; M—Morning; E—Evening; S—Sunday.

CITY AND PAPER	Issued	1926 Classified Advertising in Agate Lines	Gain or Loss Against 1925	Per Cent. of Gain or Loss Against 1925	Number of Advertisements in 1926	Gain or Loss in Number of Advertisements Against 1925	Per Cent. of Gain or Loss Against 1925 in Number of Advertisements	Average Number Lines Per Advertisement	Population Estimated Jan. 1, 1927 (U. S. Census Estimate July, 1926)	Average Number of Lines Per Capita	Average Number Advertisements Per Capita	Largest Type Permitted in Classified Columns	Can Column Rules Be Broken?	Are Cuts Permitted in Classified Columns?	Do Linage Figures Include Rules, Heads, etc.?
Abilene (Kan.) Chronicle	E	105,000	25,000*	32.*	15,000	3,500*	34.*	4	5,500	5.	1	8	No	Yes	Yes
Akron (O.) Times-Press	ES	3,042,046	606,494*	.249*	212,575	25,141*	.134*	4	225,000	13.5	....	30	Yes	Yes	Yes
Albion (Mich.) Recorder	E	171,934	112,798*	1.95*	.....	.....	.....	....	9,000	19.	....	8	No	No	No
Albuquerque (N. M.) State Tribune	E	266,854	45,934†	17.†	54,171	698†	10.†	4.9	24,000	11.	2	5½	No	No	Yes
Adrian (Mich.) Telegram	E	536,662	19,026*	3.7*	42,723	898*	2.1	3	13,000	41.	3.9	10	No	No	No
Allentown (Pa.) Call	MS	1,680,854	194,796*	13.*	163,892	12,292*	8.*	10	95,000	18.	1.7	5½	No	No	Yes
Chronicle & News	E	842,100	158,634*	19.*	54,475	15,159*	28.*	15	95,000	9.	.57	6	Yes	Yes	Yes
Altoona (Pa.) Mirror	E	1,328,348	.....	3.2*	97,240	.....	.....	13	70,000	18.9	1.	6	No	No	Yes
Amsterdam (N. Y.) Recorder	E	295,498	12,166†	.....	32,138	5,926†	.....	....	35,000	8.4	....	6	No	No	Yes
Anaheim (Cal.) Bulletin	E	444,360	7,560*	2.*	.....	.....	.....	....	10,500	42.	....	18[5]	Yes	Yes	No
Antigo (Wis.) Journal	E	96,810	40,628*	41.*	.....	.....	.....	....	10,564	9.1	....	8	No	No	Yes
Ashland (Ky.) Independent	ES	628,320	171,990*	38.*	41,993	11,673*	38.*	15	24,628	25.5	1.7	8	No	No	Yes
Auburn (N. Y.) Citizen	ES	176,736	178,416†	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	40,173	4.3	....	....	No	Yes	Yes
Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle	MS	403,312	11,018†	2.†	.....	.....	.....	....	65,000	6.2	....	36	Yes	Yes	No
Aurora (Ill.) Beacon-News	ES	1,304,828	63,224*	5.*	.....	.....	.....	....	48,000	28.	....	36[5]	Yes	No	Yes
Austin (Tex.) American-Statesman	MS	933,160	110,702*	13.4*	.....	.....	.....	7	40,000	23.3	3	24	Yes	Yes	No
Bakerfield (Cal.) Californian	E	605,696	14,658†	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	23,000	26.	....	24[5]	No	No	....
Baltimore (Md.) Post	E	752,423	243,473*	47.83*	.....	.....	.....	....	797,716	....	....	....	Yes	Yes	Yes
Bangor (Me.) News	M	883,570	99,444*	12.*	.....	.....	.....	....	26,644	3.3	....	....	Yes	Yes	No
Bartlesville (Okla.) Examiner	MS	369,390	9,030†	2.4†	.....	.....	.....	....	18,000	20.5	....	18	Yes	Yes	No
Battle Creek (Mich.) Enquirer & News	ES	1,749,622	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	40,000[1]	43.7	....	24[5]	No	No	Yes
Moon-Journal	E	1,166,074	122,094*	11.6*	72,388	10,182	16.	16	45,000	25.9	1.61	....	Yes	Yes	Yes
Bayonne (N. J.) Times	E	725,868	150,300*	26.1*	88,715	5,475*	6 ½*	3	90,000	8.	.98	6	No	No	No
Beaver (Pa.) Times	E	347,200	42,000*	12.*	32,550	3,255	10.*	4¼	18,000	19.	1.8	18	No	No	No
Bellingham (Wash.) American	E	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	35,000	....	....	....	No	No	....
Bend (Ore.) Bulletin	E	134,148	19,992	17½	9,582	1,423	17	6.0	10,500	12.7	0.916	8	No	No	No
Bethlehem (Pa.) Globe-Times	E	599,158	9,918†	2.†	48,337	4,903*	10.*	12.3	62,947	9.5	.8	6	No	No	No
Biddeford (Me.) Journal	E	121,296	55,692*	31.4†	.....	.....	.....	....	24,832	4.9	....	6	No	No	Yes
Binghamton (N. Y.) Press	E	1,652,712	1,650,802	.1	.....	.....	.....	5	80,000	20.6	....	6	No	No	No
Birmingham (Ala.) News	ES	2,059,442	58,198*	2.9*	202,190	1,081†	.5†	10	250,000	8.	0.8	5½	No	No	No
Boise (Idaho) Idaho Statesman	MS	607,306	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	23,000	26.	....	6	No	No	Yes
Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin	ES	336,144	163,698*	94.*	54,326	10,088*	22.*	6	33,686	10.	1.5	6	No	No	No
Pantagraph	M	521,905	30,267*	6.*	127,875	681*	.....	4	35,000	14	3.6	5½	No	No	No
Boone (Iowa) News-Republican	E	90,748	9,800*	12.2*	.....	.....	.....	....	14,000	6.	....	8	No	No	No
Boston (Mass.) Transcript	E	2,633,235	107,921†	4.†	.....	.....	.....	....	800,000[1]	1.3	....	....	Yes	Yes	No
Bradenton (Fla.) Herald	ES	183,330	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	14,000	13.	....	10	No	No	No
Brockton (Mass.) Enterprise	E	938,644	3,640*	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	66,000	14.	....	....	....	....	....
Brooklyn (N. Y.) Citizen	ES	718,010	181,122*	.026	25,736	1,426	.....	25	2,350,000	....	....	....	No	Yes	No
Times	ES	1,499,780	93,978	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	2,350,000	....	....	5½	No	No	No
Brownsville (Pa.) Telegraph	E	200,914	21,630	12 ½*	.....	.....	.....	....	9,077	22	....	24	Yes	Yes	No
Buffalo (N. Y.) Evening News	E	3,854,832	11,373†	.29†	778,000	780,000	.26†	5	545,273[4]	7	1.4	12	No	No	Yes
Times	ES	1,464,648	251,618*	20.*	153,209	13,978*	10.*	9.5	545,273[4]	2.6	.28	24	Yes	Yes	Yes
Burlingame (Cal.) Advance-Star	E	57,600	.....	50.	.....	.....	.....	4.5	15,000	3.8	....	12	Yes	Yes	Yes
Burlington (Kan.) Republican	E	135,922	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	4	2,500	54	....	8	No	Yes	No
Butte (Mont.) Miner	MS	851,592	684,880	24.3*	.....	.....	.....	....	46,000	18.5	....	....	Yes	No	No
Caldwell (Kan.) Messenger	E	86,800	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	2,200	39.4	....	10	No	No	....
Canton (Ill.) Ledger	E	98,686	.....	21.†	.....	.....	.....	....	12,000	8.0	....	8	No	No	Yes
Canton (O.) Repository	ES	2,842,098	335,096*	13.*	223,841	27,570	14.*	12.7	106,260	27.0	2.0	60[5]	No	Yes	Yes
Carbondale (Pa.) Leader	E	117,862	6,027*	5.*	.....	.....	.....	3.0	20,500	6.0	....	18	No	No	No
Centralia (Ill.) Sentinel	E	188,398	24,542*	13.02*	22,959	272*	.012*	8.2	12,491	15.0	2.0	24	Yes	No	Yes
Champaign (Ill.) News-Gazette	ES	571,242	11,074†	2.0	.....	.....	.....	5.0	47,000	12.1	....	8	No	No	Yes
Chattanooga (Tenn.) News	E	929,301	5,118*	.½*	116,163	649*	.½*	8.0	131,832	7.0	.880	10	Yes	No	Yes
Chicago (Ill.) Herald & Examiner	MS	2,277,399	300,172*	15.*	327,899	18,072*	6.0*	6.9	3,000,000	.7	.1	24	No	No	Yes
Tribune	MS	8,518,705	55,303*	.006*	1,358,260	81,774*	.056*	6.27	3,000,000	2.43	....	24	No	No	Yes
Cleveland (O.) Press	E	3,419,752	72,801†	2.13†	702,120	5,856†	.82†	4.8	1,176,482	2.9	.60	....	Yes	Yes	No
Columbia (Mo.) Tribune	E	151,214	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	14,275	10.5	....	6	No	No	Yes
Columbus (O.) Citizen	E	1,853,570	201,290*	12.1*	187,287	12,982*	7.4*	9.8	310,622	5.9	0.6	36	....	....	Yes
Dispatch	ES	4,100,375	25,530	0.006	486,083	17,461	0.034	8.34	310,622	13.20	1.56	48	Yes	Yes	Yes
State Journal	MS	1,660,295	254,145*	18.0	136,288	23,980*	20.0*	12.2	300,000	5.0	.½	....	Yes	Yes	Yes
Concord (N. H.) Monitor-Patriot	E	199,332	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	24,000	8.3	....	....	No	No	Yes
Corning (N. Y.) Leader	E	183,456	.....	.....	21,373	610*	.028*	8.0	22,000	8.0	1.0	12	No	No	No
Cortland (N. Y.) Standard	E	67,770	.....	4.0†	22,570	.....	4.0†	3.0	16,618	4.0	1½	7	No	No	No
Corvallis (Ore.) Gazette-Times	E	285,292	64,806†	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	7,500	38.0	....	8	No	No	Yes
Coshocton (O.) Tribune & Times-Age	ES	421,862	462,308	.080	.....	.....	.....	....	12,000	35.0	38.0	12	No	No	Yes
Covington (Ky.) Post	E	614,366	153,666*	25.*	64,901	11,189*	17.*	9.46	160,000	4.0	.½	....	Yes	Yes	Yes
Crookston (Minn.) Times	E	45,618	45,794	.....	2,110	60	.....	5.0	6,500	7.0	32.0	8	No	Yes	No
Dallas (Tex.) News	MS	2,940,177	139,500†	4.5	391,910	17,098†	4.6	7.2	280,000	7.2	1.5	12	No	No	Yes
Danbury (Conn.) News	E	567,035	17,553*	.03*	.....	.....	.....	....	25,000	22.68	....	7	No	No	Yes
Danville (Ill.) Commercial-Review	E	.....	.....	.....	123,110	2,427*	2.*	7	42,202	20.4	2.9	6	No	No	....
Davenport (Iowa) Times	E	896,350	20,636*	2.3*	97,141	4,739†	.049	9.2	70,000	11.5	1.3	48[5]	Yes	No	Yes
Dayton (O.) Herald	E	1,470,854	1,414*	.....	120,173	5,867*	.....	12.0	177,000	8.0	....	24	Yes	Yes	Yes
Journal	MS	1,646,190	7,294†	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	177,000	9.0	....	24	Yes	Yes	Yes
News	ES	3,072,832	82,740*	2.7*	308,616	7,378*	2.0*	9.9	177,000	17.3	1.7	24	Yes	Yes	Yes
Decatur (Ill.) Review	ES	1,077,527	36,494*	23.0*	132,323	8,586*	6.0*	8.0	55,000	19.0	2.4	12	No	No	No
Denton (Tex.) Record-Chronicle	E	248,486	24,080*	0.10*	.....	.....	.....	....	11,000	22.5	....	6½	No	No	Yes
Denver (Col.) Rocky Mt. News	MS	900,928	100,492	10.0	211,656	4,031	0.53	4.0	328,308[1]	3.0	1½	24	Yes	Yes	No
(The above figures report only the Morning News with Sunday)
Des Moines (Ia.) Register & Tribune-Capital	MS	2,112,102	111,770*	5.58*	349,931	14,843*	4.42*	6.02	156,148‡	13.52	2.24	72[5]	Yes	Yes	Yes
(‡The population figures are those of R. L. Polk & Co.)
Detroit (Mich.) Free Press	MS	4,862,032	10,290†	0.2†	657,580	3,132†	.4	7.3	1,535,964	3.1	0.4	36	No	No	Yes
News	ES	7,803,824	4,760†	.06†	1,455,896	30,277†	2.0	5.3	1,535,964	5.7	1.0	5½	No	No	Yes
Times	ES	2,373,247	296,335*	14.0*	270,594	21,261*	8.0*	9.0	1,535,964	1.5	0.17	24	No	No	Yes
Dodge City (Kan.) Globe	E	454,118	336,913*	287.*	90,824	55,663*	158.0*	5.0	7,250	62.6	12.5	12	No	Yes	Yes
Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph-Herald	ES	458,542	35,434*	8.0*	.....	.....	.....	....	40,996[4]	11.0	....	36	No	Yes	Yes
Duluth (Minn.) News-Tribune	MS	1,153,824	63,366*	5½.0*	.....	.....	.....	10.0	119,070	9.2	....	18	No	No	Yes
Eau Claire (Wis.) Leader-Telegram	MES	358,344	2,366*	.007*	.....	.....	.....	....	24,042	15.0	....	18	No	No	Yes
Elgin (Ill.) Courier-News	E	942,634	75,404*	8.75*	97,996	10,683*	12.25*	9.0	33,384	28.0	2.93	18[5]	Yes	No	Yes
Elizabeth City (N. C.) Advance	E	130,627	13,748*	11.7*	9,853	924*	10.3	12.0	12,000	11.0	1.0	....	Yes	Yes	Yes
Elizabeth (N. J.) Journal	E	1,198,340	37,973*	3½*	175,305	1,059*	.075	6.0	110,000	10.8	1.5	5½	No	No	Yes
Elkhart (Ind.) Truth	E	791,182	1,722,242*	27.8*	93,792	15,313*	19.5*	8.4	35,000[1]	26.3	3.1	6	No	No	Yes
Elmira (N. Y.) Star-Gazette & Advertiser	ME	845,348	8,190*	.0098*	95,226	354*	.0098*	8.8	51,067	16.5	1.89	11	No	No	Yes
(The above figures do not include the morning figures)
Elyria (O.) Chronicle Telegram	E	228,340	9,632*	4.4*	.....	.....	.....	....	25,000	9.1	....	....	....	....	....
Erie (Pa.) Times	E	1,444,704	79,229	5½	197,185	17,216	8.75	3½	128,755	1.12	1½	18	No	No	No
Eugene (Ore.) Guard	E	831,544	124,950*	17.68*	.....	.....	.....	....	22,000	37.7	....	8	No	No	No
Fall River (Mass.) Herald-News	E	332,951	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	129,560	2.6	....	10	No	No	No
Fitchburg (Mass.) Sentinel	E	314,174	19,376†	5.8†	.....	.....	.....	....	44,034	7.0	....	5½	No	No	Yes
Flint (Mich.) Journal	ES	1,492,526	183,327*	0.14	.....	.....	.....	....	152,667	9.6	....	5½	No	No	No
Fort Madison (Iowa) Democrat	E	104,387	.....	.....	34,796	5,783*	20.0	3.0	14,000	7.5	2.5	....	Yes	Yes	No
Fort Meyers (Fla.) Tropical News	MS	487,529	272,461	126.7*	.....	.....	.....	....	20,000	24.38	....	12	No	No	Yes
Fort Worth (Tex.) Press	E	882,854	297,150*	50.0*	101,946	.....	.....	8.6	155,000	5.0	1.5	36	Yes	Yes	Yes
Star-Telegram	ES	1,588,284	235,704*	17.4*	194,160	21,028*	12.1*	8.13	155,000	10.2	1.25	12	No	No	No
Record-Telegram	M	1,108,436	1,274*	12.0*	194,160	21,028*	12.1*	5.70	155,000	7.1	1.06	12	No	No	No
Franklin (Ind.) Star	E	198,934	73,500*	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	4,909	40.5	....	14	No	Yes	No
Fremont (Nebr.) Tribune	E	250,922	.....	7.0	21,971	.....	5.0	9.0	12,000	21.0	2.3	7	No	No	Yes
Fresno (Cal.) Republican	MS	1,389,804	50,127*	2.77*	228,815	2,538†	1.10†	6.07	85,000	16.35	2.69	24	No	No	Yes
Gardiner (Mass.) News	E	307,391	51,031*	10.0*	.....	.....	.....	....	19,400	15.8	....	14	No	Yes	Yes
Gary (Ind.) Post-Tribune	E	1,428,735	1,209,227	18.0	129,467	114,327	13.0	1.17	110,000[1]	13.0	1.17	5½	No	No	Yes
Geneva (N. Y.) Times	E	29,332	30,394*	10.0*	.....	.....	.....	....	16,000	18.0	....	7	No	No	Yes
Gloversville & Johnstown (N. Y.) Leader-Republican	E	614,838	94,752*	18.2*	62,606	3,302*	5.57*	9.82	36,000	17.07	1.73	6	No	No	Yes
Grafton (W. Va.) Sentinel	E	64,680	12,936*	25.0*	5,852	1,463*	25.0*	12.0	8,500	7.7	0.6	6	No	No	No
Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press	E	2,211,076	161,854*	7.8*	325,986	36,515*	12.6*	6.8	169,097[1]	13.0	1.9	5½	No	No	Yes
Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune	M	389,746	23,184*	6.3*	.....	.....	.....	....	29,256	13.3	....	36	Yes	No	Yes
Hamilton (O.) Journal	E	390,698	81,564†	20.8†	39,018	6,575†	16.8†	10.0	51,000	7.6	0.76	9	No	No	No
Hanford (Cal.) Journal	M	147,084	5,616†	0.368†	.....	.....	.....	4.0	7,000	13.5	....	8	No	No	Yes
Hartford (Conn.) Times	E	2,035,836	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	....	173,000	11.7	....	6	No	Yes	No
Hollywood (Cal.) Citizen	ES	735,994	109,648*	17.5*	121,705	15,506*	14.5	6.0	120,000	6.0	1.0	14	Yes	No	No
Homestead (Pa.) Messenger	E	264,408	5,300†	2.0†	.....	.....	.....	....	20,452	12.9	....	14	No	No	No
Houston (Tex.) Chronicle	ES	3,492,972	691,986*	24.0*	467,330	73,839*	18.0*	7.5	250,000	14.0	1.5	30	Yes	No	Yes
Hudson (N. Y.) Star	M	216,482	23,450†	9.0†	.....	.....	.....	....	12,000	18.0	....	7	No	No	Yes
Huntington (Ind.) Press	MS	277,476	32,636*	11.0*	40,293	3,126*	7.0*	6.5	17,000	16.0	2.0	7	No	No	Yes
Huron (S. D.), Huronite	E	199,000	50,000*	25.0*	.....	.....	.....	6.0	13,000	15.0	....	12	No	No	Yes

SMALL TOWN DAILY BOOSTED LINAGE BACKING TWO LOCAL EXPOSITIONS

12-Page Automobile Section Sold for Show Week—Large Booths Taken in Merchants Exposition by Public Utilities

By EDWARD J. HUGHES
Editor, Port Chester (N. Y.) Daily Item

NOT knowing just what heading may be used on this story, I am taking the liberty of embodying in this opening paragraph the words that I would use if a story of this kind were to receive my own editing. I would be inclined to use "More Proof of the Small Town newspaper's Great Pulling Power." Or something quite similar.

For the sake of brevity it might be well to state what the small town newspaper in question has accomplished that justifices making a claim such as is indicated in the first paragraph, and then follow with facts pertaining to the methods of accomplishment.

The Port Chester (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce recently held two business boosting expositions of outstanding merit. The Port Chester Daily Item not only profited in a circulation and advertising way through the expositions in question, but is fully justified in assuming a great amount of credit for the success of the projects.

The first exposition conducted by the Port Chester Chamber of Commerce was the automobile show. This was the first of its kind ever attempted by the Port Chester automobile dealers and, therefore, comparative records of attendance and sales were impossible. However, the fact that all space was completely rented in less than ten days' time and all dealers reported sales during the show, would indicate that the affair was up to or above the standard set by automobile shows in communities the size of Port Chester.

The 1920 population of Port Chester was 16,373, and the present estimate is close to 20,000. Therefore, those familiar with competitive conditions and relative sizes of markets may appreciate that it is not a simple matter to conduct a successful automobile show in a locality of the size of Port Chester, situated so close to New York. That the automobile show was a success in the matter of space rental, attendance and sales, was due almost entirely to the fact that the Port Chester Daily Item co-operated in every way possible with the Chamber of Commerce Committee conducting the affair. The Daily Item in turn reaped a reward of a twelve-page automobile section on the opening night of the auto show, and a satisfactory amount of increased advertising space from the automobile dealers throughout the week.

The second exposition conducted by the Port Chester Chamber of Commerce under the direction of H. W. Slater, managing secretary, was the Merchants', Manufacturers' and Home Owners' Exposition, held for a period of seven nights and six afternoons. Affairs of similar character have been held in Port Chester on previous occasions, and it is, therefore, possible to make comparisons of attendance and all other statistical details. This having been done it is possible to make definite statements, and it is both interesting and impressive to note that this year's exposition broke all records of attendance, results to exhibitors, etc.

The Port Chester Daily Item co-operated with the Chamber of Commerce throughout the entire period of space renting, and was constantly in touch with the management of the exposition on all matters of importance. It was, therefore, extremely gratifying to have the manager of the exposition unqualifiedly state that in his opinion the success of the entire affair was due to the co-operation of the Daily Item.

If the reader will keep in mind the fact that the 1920 population of Port Chester was less than 17,000, and the present estimate only 20,000, and then refer to the Audit Bureau of Circulation's report of 4,695 circulation for the Daily Item, the full power of the small town newspaper will be realized and appreciated.

The attendance for the seven days was close to 10,000 paid admission, or more than 50 per cent of the entire population of Port Chester. And twice the circulation of the newspaper that made this attendance possible.

The Daily Item, as on the occasion of the automobile show, was amply rewarded for its co-operation, as evidenced by the unusual amount of extra linage obtained during the exposition. On the opening night of this affair one advertiser, through his several distributors, used four full pages of space. On Monday night of the exposition nearly 80 per cent of the advertising space carried by the Daily Item was secured from exhibitors with whom the popular size advertisement was at least a quarter page.

The editorial department of the Daily Item treated the event very liberally with discussions and comments concerning all exhibits.

Among the outstanding exhibits shown for the first time in Port Chester were the large booths of the big public service corporations.

The Westchester Lighting Company not only installed an extremely effective display but also conducted a series of Home Economics and Home Beautiful lectures every afternoon. These lectures were featured through the Woman's Page of the Daily Item.

The Port Chester Water Works used one of the largest displays. This was under the direction of E. J. Cooney, formerly associated with Worcester, Mass., and Providence, R. I., advertising agencies.

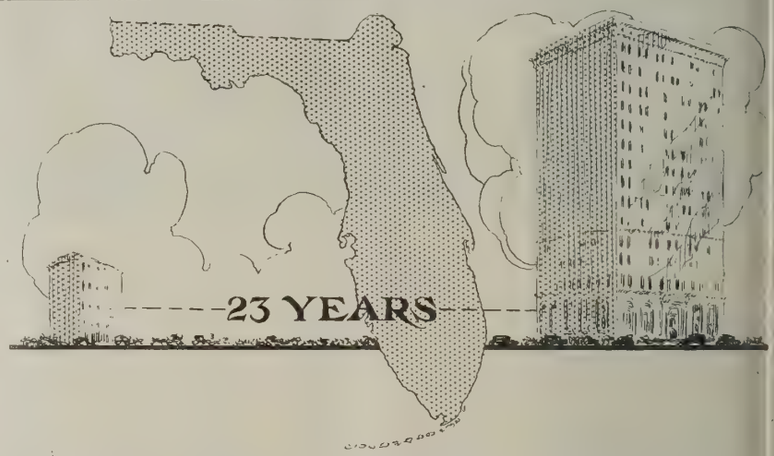
The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, under the direction of its New York representative, George S. Wheat, and Thomas Flavelle, Inspector in the Signal Division, installed a miniature railroad, operated in exactly the same manner as the New York division of the road. This was the second time that this attractive and costly exhibit has ever been shown in the United States.

The New York Telephone Company arranged a special display for the first time that this public service corporation has been known to exhibit in small communities.

Local merchants who distribute nationally advertised products of every character from women's apparel to electrical devices for the home were included among the exhibitors. From these local merchants the Daily Item secured extra advertising linage that broke all records for space carried during similar local affairs.

One of the outstanding promotion features was a popularity contest conducted through the co-operation of the Daily Item. Coupons were printed in the customary manner every day and those securing the largest number of votes were awarded prizes, and given an opportunity to appear in a fashion display staged by Steiger's, Inc., the largest department store in Port Chester. Incidentally this fashion feature staged by Steiger's, Inc., resulted in a generous amount of extra advertising space for the Daily Item.

The Popularity Contest above mentioned increased the circulation of the Daily Item every day for the four weeks prior to the opening of the Exposition.



Both the automobile show and the Merchants', Manufacturers' and Home Owners' Exposition were arranged and managed by J. B. Keeney, for several years business and advertising manager of Editor & Publisher. Mr. Keeney has prepared a large supply of specially designed portable booths quite unlike the average exposition booths in matter of construction, and also an attractive stock of decorations suitable as background for the display. Special arrangements were made by the Chamber of Commerce to secure these booths for their use, and also to obtain Mr. Keeney's services as director of both shows.

The Daily Item gave Mr. Keeney a flattering indorsement and praised the manner in which he co-operated with both the editorial and advertising departments.

To sum up this entire co-operative effort on the part of merchants and the local newspaper we might use the statement of Mr. Keeney at the close of the exposition, i.e., "It could never have been done without the Port Chester Daily Item. This newspaper has been more than generous with its space and service and deserved its reward of increased advertising linage and circulation."

Display booth at Port Chester exposition

Florida Property Values Increase 709% in 23 Years

JACK'S proverbial bean-stalk had nothing on Florida for rapidity of growth. For in the past quarter-century this state has startled the world with its remarkable development.

Tax records of the Florida comptroller's office show that the property of the state has increased some 709 per cent since 1903 . . . and Florida has just begun to grow!

Tax records also show that Duval County, in which Jacksonville is located, now leads all other counties in Florida, in value of personal property and of telegraph and railroad property.

Jacksonville and its rich surrounding territory offers a fertile field which the manufacturer or distributor can thoroughly and economically cultivate by advertising in . . .

The Florida Times-Union
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

STRICTLY A NEWSPAPER

Circulation

Average Daily and Sunday

Year	Copies	Sale Price Daily Edition
1896	21,516	3c
1897	22,456
1898	25,726
1899	76,260
1900	82,106
1901	102,472
1902	105,416
1903	106,386
1904	118,786
1905	120,710
1906	131,140
1907	143,460	1c
1908	172,880
1909	184,317
1910	191,981
1911	197,375
1912	209,751
1913	230,360
1914	259,673
1915	318,274
1916	340,904
1917	357,225
1918	368,492
1919	362,971
1920	342,553
1921	348,607
1922	356,671	2c
1923	362,361
1924	383,005
1925	387,005
1926	391,465
1927	414,990

The New York Times accepts no orders from newsdealers on consignment. The above figures represent net paid sale.

The New York Times gives its readers every morning the most comprehensive survey of the history of the world for the preceding twenty-four hours. The Times prints the news—all of it—accurately—completely—promptly—and through the efficiency of its unparalleled news-gathering service, frequently ahead of appearance in other newspapers.

Published for the intelligent, thinking, alert reader, The New York Times offers a liberal education to the student, the man or woman in the every-day affairs of business, home and social life. It makes for good citizenship.

The increased demand for The New York Times, a newspaper offering only complete, dependable news, impartial and non-partisan, is a vindication of newspaper readers. The Times' success in attracting such readers is proof that there is a large public, of great importance, desiring full, accurate information of what is going on in the world.

The advertising columns of The New York Times are unequaled in the interest they have for the reader—in the variety of goods and services they offer, in their trustworthiness, in the news information they contain. The careful censorship maintained to exclude misleading and fraudulent announcements has created a justified confidence among The Times readers.

Advertising

Year	Lines	Basic Rate per agate line Daily	Sunday
1896	2,227,196	30c	30c
1897	2,408,247
1898	2,433,193
1899	3,378,750
1900	3,978,620
1901	4,957,205
1902	5,501,779
1903	5,207,964
1904	5,228,480
1905	5,958,322	40c	40c
1906	6,033,457
1907	6,304,298
1908	5,897,332
1909	7,194,703
1910	7,550,650
1911	8,130,425
1912	8,844,866
1913	9,327,369
1914	9,164,927	45c	45c
1915	9,682,562
1916	11,552,496	50c	50c
1917	12,509,587
1918	13,518,255
1919	19,682,562	50c	55c
1920	23,447,395	55c	60c
1921	21,652,613	65c	75c
1922	24,142,222
1923	24,101,226	65c	80c
1924	26,283,924	70c	85c
1925	28,200,444	75c	90c
1926	29,788,828	80c	$1.00

RAG PAPER EDITION

For the better preservation of history of today told in its complete news, The New York Times is publishing a limited number of copies of the daily and Sunday editions on endurable rag paper. This paper will last in bound files for centuries. The Times is the accepted newspaper of record. The Times is kept on file in hundreds of libraries, public, college and business, for its complete report of the news of the world, its statistics and notices of importance. The New York Times is the only newspaper in the United States considered of sufficient value for permanent filing to warrant the printing of an edition on rag paper.

The New York Times

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

THE TIMES INDEX

Supplementing its contribution to the preservation of the journalism of today, The Times is alone among general newspapers in the publication of a complete index. The Times Index has been issued continuously in quarterly volumes since 1913. It is the standard newspaper reference in all classes of libraries all over the world. All news items are indexed by subjects and names, fully cross-referenced to persons and related events. The date, page and column of publication in The Times are given.

JUDGE ASKS CONTEMPT CASE BE BROUGHT AGAINST DETROIT DAILY

Request Based on Interview with Ford-Sapiro Juror Which Caused Mistrial in $1,000,000 Suit— Printed in Times

FEDERAL Judge Fred M. Raymond of Grand Rapids, Mich., who has been sitting since March 14, in the United States Court at Detroit in the trial of Aaron Sapiro's million dollar libel action against Henry Ford and his Dearborn Independent, after declaring a mistrial in that cause on April 21, directed John A. Baxter, acting district attorney, to prepare proceedings against the Times Publishing Company as having committed contempt of court.

Judge Raymond, in his remarks accompanying the granting of the Ford counsels' motion for a mistrial, had declared that the case had been greatly harmed by "Sensational Journalism."

The Times Publishing Company which publishes William Randolph Hearst's Detroit Times, evening and Sunday, was singled out by Judge Raymond for contempt proceedings because it carried an interview with Mrs. Cora Hoffman, one of the six women jurors in the case, who had been the subject by Ford and federal agents of an investigation dealing with her alleged intimacy with one J. Miller, a real estate broker, whose continued presence at the trial and in the court corridors had been noted.

Mrs. Hoffman was first questioned by Judge Raymond late on Monday, April 18, while the case was under adjournment due to the illness of Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, chief of Ford counsel. She was again questioned on the following morning, when another adjournment was taken, but before which Ford counsel announced they would file a motion for mistrial on Thursday.

Judge Raymond himself revealed to newspaper men the name of the accused woman juror on Tuesday morning.

To a Times reporter at her home a short time later Mrs. Hoffman gave an account of the questioning to which she had been subjected by the judge. She also volunteered the remark that "It looks to me as if certain parties are trying to get hold of something so they can get this case thrown out of court."

This interview was made one of the four grounds for a mistrial in the Ford motion given out for publication late on Wednesday, April 20 and supported by more than a dozen affidavits from Ford agents charging Mrs. Hoffman with improper actions and prejudice against Henry Ford. The next morning the court granted the motion and started contempt proceedings against the Times setting April 28 as the date for the information to be filed before him by the district attorney.

In an editorial April 22 the Times defended its position and asserted that it had interviewed Mrs. Hoffman in pursuit of its policy never to print charges against any person particularly a woman without giving that person an opportunity to present his or her side.

The interview dealt only with the charges against Mrs. Hoffman, not with any details of the Ford-Sapiro case, the Times contends.

After relating that she had admitted to Judge Raymond that she had unintentionally admitted a woman court spectator to the rest room set apart for the women jurors Mrs. Hoffman repeated the explanation she had given the court about her association with the man complained of, J. Miller, whom she described as a real estate broker.

"I told the judge that I had talked with Miller several times about selling a flat owned by my husband and myself, but I never discussed the Ford-Sapiro trial with him.

"As a matter of fact, the last time I talked to him I told him to quit hanging around the court room and pestering me and to get out and sell the apartment house.

"Before I was called on this panel, I had never heard of Sapiro and I knew nothing about Mr. Ford's matters. I did not even know the first day I went to court that it was this matter coming up.

"I've never before done jury service of any sort. I never said to anyone that I would give a verdict against Ford no matter how many weeks of testimony I had to hear. I've warned my friends not to talk to me about the case."

TRADE SCHOOLS SHOW WORK AT WALDORF

Specimens of Work Done at Ithaca, Chicago, Nashville, and Spokane Seen in A. N. P. A. Headquarters

Increased activity on the part of the committee on Printing Trade Schools, of which Victor F. Ridder is chairman, was shown by an exhibit in the Myrtle Room, headquarters for the A. N. P. A. The most extensive exhibits were made by the Newspaper Photo-Engraving School, Inc., of Chicago, the Empire State School of Printing and the Empire State School of Engraving at Ithaca. The exhibits were arranged by Bloor Schleppy, manager of the Chicago school, and Ross W. Kellogg, director of the Ithaca schools. They consisted of photographs of the school and specimens of work.

Bloor Schleppy

Other schools represented in the exhibit were the Southern School of Printing at Nashville, Tenn., and the Northwest School of Printing at Spokane, Wash.

The educational work of the A. N. P. A. brought to New York for the convention, Dr. Charles A. Prosser, director of Dunwoody Institute, Minneapolis, former federal director of vocational education and a national authority on the subject, and Tanner Ho Freeman secretary of the Employing Photo Engravers Association of America. This association has a well developed program of education within its industry.

Mr. Kellogg brought to the convention a limited number of portfolios displaying the work of students in his schools. These were distributed to publishers who displayed particular interest in the educational work sponsored by the A. N. P. A.

"Our School of Printing will be five years old on May 1 and is now firmly established," said Mr. Kellogg. "I have had the pleasure this week to report to the committee on education of the Publishers' Association of New York that their school, the Empire State School of Engraving, has successfully passed the experimental stage, that we are convinced that our courses are sound and that our graduates are making good in the trade."

CONVENTION DAILY PRINTED AT WALDORF

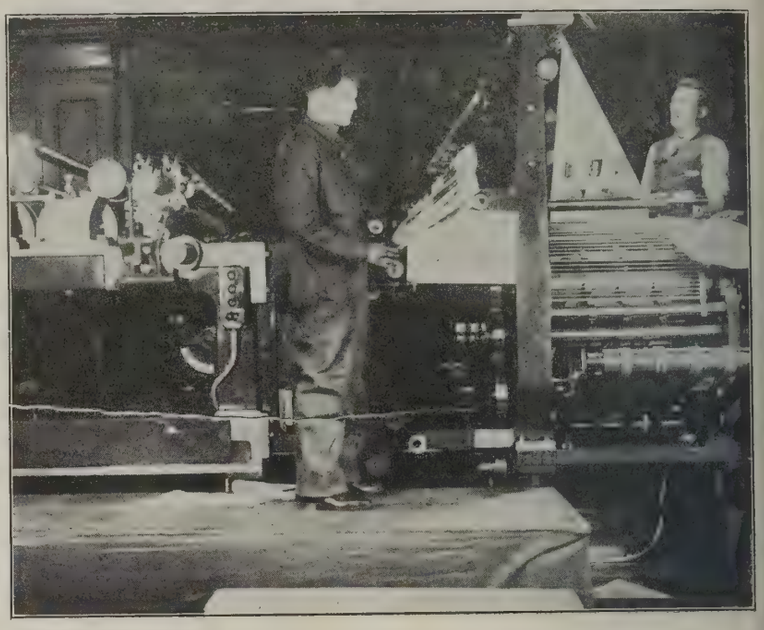

Photo shows the special Duplex newspaper press set up in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to print the Press, daily, A. N. P. A. Convention Paper. The enterprise was under the direction of the International Pressmen's and Assistant's Union of North America. Apprentice pressmen printed the paper.

CELEBRATE DAILY'S FOUNDING

More than 500 stockholders of the Eteenpain Co-Operative Society, publishers of the Worcester (Mass.) Eteenpain, Finnish daily newspaper, took part in a celebration of the sixth anniversary of the founding of the society on April 17.

EASTON EXPRESS LINAGE

Linage figures for the Easton (Pa.) Express for 1926, which were not carried in Editor & Publisher's recent tabulation of linage in U. S. newspapers, follow: Clasified, 940,212; local, 7,036,008; national 1,599,822; total 9,576,042.

OKLAHOMA CITY

is the center of a

BILLION DOLLAR STATE

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, Oklahoma's wealth for 1926 is divided as follows: Petroleum, $347,000,000; manufactured products, $450,000,000; plow crops and livestock, $414,212,000.

Oklahoma City is the geographical, commercial and financial center of this billion dollar state. The spending of a huge slice of this wealth is being influenced by advertising in the greatest morning and afternoon newspapers in the state—The Daily Oklahoman and Oklahoma City Times.

Combined Daily Circulation, 148,369; Sun., 93,377

The Daily Oklahoman
Oklahoma City Times

Represented by E. Katz Special Advertising Agency
New York, Chicago, Atlanta, Kansas City, Detroit, San Francisco.

117,861

is the combined net paid circulation for March, 1927, of the Washington Times and The Washington Herald.

139,472 is the net paid circulation for March 1927, of The Big Sunday Washington Herald.

51,555 is the combined daily home delivered circulation of the Washington Times and The Washington Herald, for March, 1927.

35,354

is the home delivered circulation of The Big Sunday Washington Herald, for March, 1927.

Combined Circulation Statement
March, 1927

	DAILY			SUNDAY
CITY—
Regular home delivery by carrier	45,599			30,441
Independnt carriers, dealers and street sales	57,133			29,903
TOTAL CITY NET PAID		102,732			60,344
SUBURBAN—
Regular home delivery by carrier	5,956			4,913
Independent carriers and dealers	2,417			2,891
Paid mail	694			41
TOTAL SUBURBAN		9,067			7,845
TOTAL CITY AND SUBURBAN			111,799			68,189
COUNTRY—
Dealers and mail	6,062			71,283
TOTAL COUNTRY		6,062				71,283
TOTAL AVERAGE NET PAID CIRCULATION			117,861			139,472
Copies for service			1,584			897
TOTAL AVERAGE NET CIRCULATION			119,445			140,369

RODNEY E. BOONE
General Manager, National Advertising
9 East 40th Street, New York

A. N. P. A. ATTACKS TRADE COMMISSION SUIT

(Continued from page 19)

Boston Christian Science Monitor—Norman S. Rose, Charles E. Jarvis, Willis J. Abbott, Chas. E. Heitman.
Boston Globe—Chas. H. Taylor.
Boston Transcript—Wm. F. Rogers.
Brooklyn Eagle—R. M. Gunnison, M. P. Goodfellow, E. C. Martin.
Buffalo Courier - Express — Burrows Mathews, William J. Conners, Jr.
Buffalo Evening News—J. F. Melia, E. H. Butler.
Burlington (Vt.) Free Press—David W. Howe.
Burlington (Iowa) Hawk-Eye—Jno. F. D. Aue.
Calgary (Canada) Herald—W. J. Watson.
Cambridge (Ohio) Jeffersonian—Harry W. Amos.
Camden (N. J.) Courier-Post—F. F. Willhite.
Centralia (Ill.) Sentinel—Verne Joy.
Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette—Robert L. Smith.
Charleston (W. Va.) Mail—B. H. Anderson.
Charlotte (N. C.) Observer—Curtis B. Johnson.
Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times—H. C. Adler.
Chicago American—Herman Black.
Chicago Daily News—Hopewell Rogers, L. R. Barton, Walter A. Strong.
Chicago Herald-Examiner—M. C. Meigs.
Chicago Post—Carroll Shaffer.
Chicago Tribune—Daniel McMahon, W. H. Whalen, John W. Park, E. M. Antrim.
Cincinnati Times-Star—C. H. Rembold, George Fries, Fred J. Oexman.
Clarksburg (W. Va.) W. C. Tetrick.
Cleveland News—D. R. Hanna, Jr.
Cleveland Plain Dealer—E. H. Baker, George M. Rogers, J. S. McCarrens.
Cleveland Press—R. A. Huber.
Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal—H. J. Powell.
Colorado Springs (Colo.) Telegraph-Gazette—C. C. Hamlin.
Columbia (S. C.) State—F. C. Withers, Wm. E. Gonzales.
Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch—A. E. Campbell, Harvey R. Young, C. J. Reiker.
Corning (N. Y.) Leader—John F. Rolfe, W. A. Underhill, E. S. Underhill.
Cumberland (Md.) Times—Jos. B. Finan.
Dallas (Texas) News—Walter A. Dealey, E. B. Dran.
Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News—J. H. Harrison, W. J. Parott.
Davenport (Iowa) Democrat-Leader—Frank D. Throop.
Davenport (Iowa) Times—E. P. Adler.
Decatur (Ill.) Herald—W. F. Hardy.
Decatur (Ill.) Review—H. C. Schaub, F. W. Schaub.
Denver (Colo.) News—Stuart S. Schuyler.
Des Moines (Iowa) Register & Tribune Capital—Harry T. Watts, John Cowles.
Detroit Free Press—W. H. Pettibone.
Detroit News—W. B. Booth.
Duluth Herald—M. F. Hanson.
Duluth News-Tribune—Reed T. Bayne.
East Liverpool (Ohio) Review Tribune—Louis H. Brush, T. S. Brush, Roy D. Moore.
Elgin (Ill.) Courier-News—D. A. McKenzie.
Elizabeth (N. J.) Journal—Elmer E. Stanion, Fred L. Crane.
Elmira (N. Y.) Star-Gazette—J. T. Calkins, F. E. Tripp.
Erie Dispatch-Herald—L. Benjamin.
Erie (Pa.) Times—John J. Mead, Sr.
Evansville (Ind.) Courier-Journal—Ed. J. Fehn.
Fargo (N. D.) Forum—Norman D. Black.
Findlay (Ohio) Morning Republican—L. N. Heminger.
Fort Wayne (Ind.) News-Sentinel—Arthur K. Remmel, Oscar G. Foellinger.
Fort Smith (Ark.) Times-Record—J. S. Parks.
Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram—J. M. North, Jr.
Fresno (Cal.) Republican—Geo. A. Osborn.

NEW YORK STATE PUBLISHERS GROUP

A group of New York State publishers, who came to New York for the A. N. P. A. convention at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel this week are shown in the picture above. Left to right (seated): William V. Jones, Utica Press; Chas. H. Congdon, Watertown Times; Prentiss Bailey, Utica Dispatch; Ed. H. O'Hara, Syracuse-Herald; Norman E. Mack, Buffalo Times; Frank E. Gannett, Rochester Times-Union; Jerome D. Barnum, Syracuse Post-Standard; Arthur Hecox, Albany Knickerbocker Press; Victor J. Callanan, Auburn Advertiser Journal; J. B. Pinkham, of the New York Publishers Association. Second row (left to right): C. S. Estabrook, Post-Standard, Syracuse; J. T. Calkins, Elmira Star-Gazette; John Rolfe, Corning Leader; Roy C. Kates, Rochester Times-Union; R. E. Bennett, Binghamton Press; A. B. Parker, Watertown Standard; Austin N. Liecty, Schenectady Gazette; David B. Plum, Troy Record; Jules Livingston, Binghamton Press; R. M. Van Wagnen, Niagara Falls Gazette. Back row (left to right): Frank E. Tripp, Gannett Newspapers, Elmira; Ed. H. Mills, Gloversville Leader; Rep. Fred D. Salmon, Port Jervis Union-Gazette; Edwin M. Waterbury, Oswego Palladium-Times; and W. J. Mathey, traffic manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Gary (Ind.) Post-Tribune—J. R. Snyder.
Geneva (N. Y.) Daily Times—G. B. Williams, W. A. Gracey, L. W. Gracey, R. L. Gracey.
Gloversville (N. Y.) Morning Herald—E. H. Cullings, F. M. Cullings.
Gloversville (N. Y.) Leader-Republican—E. H. Mills, Frank L. Rodgers.
Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press—E. J. Slemons.
Greensburg (Pa.) Review & Tribune—E. A. Sweeney.
Hamilton (Ont.) Spectator—James R. Allan.
Hannibal (Mo.) Courier-Post—E. L. Sparks.
Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph—A. H. Stackpole, A. R. Michener.
Hartford (Conn.) Courant—H. H. Conland.
Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette—Robt. L. Wright.
Hornell (N. Y.) Tribune-Times—S. Mabel Wombough, Mrs. Olive G. Buisch.
Houston (Texas) Post-Dispatch—Walter C. Sterling, C. C. Maes, Geo. M. Bailey.
Houston (Texas) Press—Roy W. Howard.
Hudson (N. Y.) Daily Star—Emory C. Van Loan.
Huntsville (Ala.) Daily Times—Mrs. J. E. Pierce, J. E. Pierce.
Hutchinson (Kan.) News—W. Y. Morgan.
Indianapolis News—Hilton U. Brown, Frank. T. Carroll.
Jamestown (N. Y.) Journal—F. P. Hall, H. M. Hall.
Jersey City (N. J.) Journal—Walter M. Dear.
Joliet (Ill.) Herald-News—L. F. Filson.
Kansas City (Mo.) Journal-Post—Marion B. Sharp, Jason Rogers.
Kansas City (Mo.) Star—Irwin Kirkwood.
Kewanee (Ill.) Star-Courier—L. D. Upton.
Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman—Jay E. Klock.
Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal—A. F. Sanford.
Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel—Wiley D. Morgan.
Kokomo (Ind.) Dispatch—Nelson P. Poynter.
Kokomo (Ind.) Tribune—J. A. Kautz.
LaCrosse (Wis.) Tribune—Frank Burgess.
Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer & News Journal—Henry C. Carpenter, J. Hale Steinman, I. Z. Buckwalter, M. L. Detwiler.
Lawrence Eagle—Irving E. Rogers.
Lawrence (Mass.) Tribune—George A. Mellen.
Lewiston (Me.) Sun & Evening Journal—L. B. Costello, Arthur G. Staples.
Lexington (Ky.) Leader—H. Giovannoli.
Lima (Ohio) News—Roy Galvin.
Lincoln (Neb.) Star—L. B. Tobin.
Little Falls (N. Y.) Times—John Crowley.
Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette—J. N. Heiskell.
Lockport (N. Y.) Union-Sun—E. D. Corson.
Los Angeles Times—Harry Chandler.
Louisville (Ky.) Courier Journal & Times—H. W. Stodghill, Emanuel Levi, R. W. Bingham.
Louisville (Ky.) Herald-Post—Ben S. Washer, George R. Newman.
Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen—Wm. G. Spence.
Lynchburg (Va.) News—Powell Glass, M. K. Duerson.
Lynn (Mass.) Item—C. H. Hastings.
Madison (Wis.) Wisconsin State Journal—I. U. Sears.
Manchester (N. H.) Union & Leader—J. A. Muehling, C. Dekker, Frank Knox.
Marietta (Ohio) Register—J. D. Chamberlain, Ray S. Sprague.
Marion (Ohio) Star—Louis H. Brush, Roy D. Moore.
Mason City (Iowa) Globe-Gazette—Lee P. Loomis.
Massillon (Ohio) Evening Independent—J. J. Bernstein.
Meriden (Conn.) Journal—C. H. Tryon, F. E. Sands.
Meriden (Conn.) Record—E. E. Smith, W. A. Kelsey.
Miami (Fla.) Herald—Frank B. Shutts.
Milwaukee (Wis.) Journal—H. J. Grant, C. B. Bickelhaupt.
Minneapolis (Minn.) Tribune—C. A. Prosser.
Moline (Ill.) Dispatch—P. S. McGlynn, August Sundine.

(Continued on page 42)

Advertising Preference

In a recent survey of Altoona made by the Emerson B. Knight Co., one of the questions asked was What newspaper do you prefer for advertising information?

Of the families who receive both the Altoona Mirror and the Tribune

87.35% are conscious of preferring the Mirror
1.15% are conscious of preferring the Tribune

96.87% of the families who receive the Mirror are conscious of preferring the Mirror for advertising information.

This is 89.07% of the Altoona families who receive by carrier an Altoona newspaper. Hence by placing your advertising in the Mirror you cover Altoona thoroughly at one cost.

Daily average for six months ending March 31st

29,231

THE ALTOONA MIRROR
Altoona, Pa.

Business Direct Fred G. Pearce, Mgr. of Adv.

The circulation of the Cleveland Press a Scripps-Howard newspaper, is now 235,458---a new high level---the largest circulation ever attained by any daily newspaper in Ohio. In the face of three of the largest newspaper circulation contests in the history of American journalism and despite the fact that one of its contemporaries has combined its circulation with that of the discontinued "Times", the Press has again---without circulation schemes---swept forward to new high levels of reader approval.

SCRIPPS-HOWARD

Represented by Allied Newspapers, Inc., 250 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Chicago Detroit San Francisco Los Angeles Seattle

A. N. P. A. ATTACKS TRADE COMMISSION SUIT

(Continued from page 40)

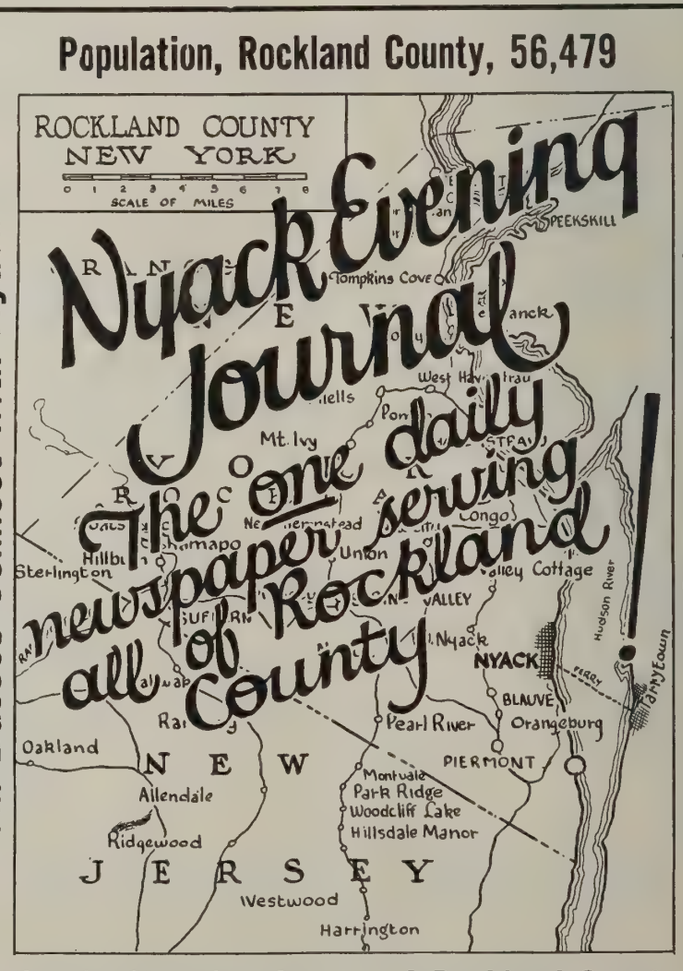
Mount Vernon (N. Y.) Daily Argus—Franklin A. Merriam.
Muscatine (Iowa) Journal—C. Rabedeaux.
Muskogee (Okla.) Phoenix—E. K. Bixby; Joel H. Bixby.
Nashville Banner—J. G. Stahlman.
Newark (N. J.) News—Eugene W. Farrell.
Newark (N. J.) Newark Star-Eagle—Gilbert Falk; H. J. Auth.
Newark (N. J.) Sunday Call—Louis Hannock.
New Bedford (Mass.) Standard—Benj. H. Anthony, Edmund Anthony, J. T. Murray.
New Britain (Conn.) Herald—T. F. Jackson.
Newburgh (N. Y.) News—F. H. Keefe.
Newburyport (Mass.) News—E. E. Hicken.
New Castle (Pa.) News—Fred L. Rentz.
New Haven (Conn.) Register—Miss M. C. Sheridan.
New London (Conn.) Day—O. G. Andrews; Theodore Bodenwein.
New Orleans (La.) States & Shreveport Times—Robt. Ewing.
New Orleans (La.) Times Picayune—John F. Tims, Jr.; L. K. Nicholson.
Newport News (Va.) Daily Press & the Times-Herald—W. S. Copeland.
New York Daily News—J. W. Barnhart.
New York Graphic—J. R. Waters.
New York Herald-Tribune—Geo. F. Hufnagel.
New York Evening Post—C. C. Lane.
New York Staats-Herold—Victor F. Ridder; B. H. Ridder.
New York Sun—John E. Martin; F. A. Walker; Edwin S. Friendly.
New York Times—J. O. Adler; Louis Wiley.
New York World—S. M. Williams.
Niagara Falls (N. Y.) Gazette—H. M. Van Wagnen; M. Bradley Norton.
Norfolk (Va.) Ledger Dispatch—S. L. Slover; P. L. Huber.
Norristown (Pa.) Times-Herald—Walter A. Wilson.
Norristown (Pa.) Times-Herald—John C. Dye.
North Adams (Mass.) Transcript—J. A. Hardman.
Oakland (Cal.) Tribune—J. R. Knowland.
Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman—E. K. Gaylord.
Olean (N. Y.) Times—M. G. Fitzpatrick
Ottawa Canada Journal — Michael Powell.
Ottawa Citizen—G. A. Disher.
Ottumwa (Iowa) Daily Courier—J. F. Powell.
Owensboro (Ky.) Messenger — Urey Woodson.
Owosso (Mich.) Argus Press—J. G. Campbell.
Parkersburg (W. Va.) News—Edw. McGrail.
Passaic (N. J.) Daily News—R. E. Lent.
Paterson (N. J.) Press-Guardian—W. B. Bryant, James T. Peto.
Pawtucket Times—W. E. Binford, Charles O. Black.
Peoria (Ill.) Journal-Transcript—Geo. W. Barrett, Merle Slane.
Peoria (Ill.) Star—Louis Proehl, Clarence Eyster.
Perth Amboy (N. J.) News—D. P. Olmstead.
Philadelphia Bulletin—J. W. Simpson, Robert McLean, W. C. McLean, Jr.
Philadelphia Public Ledger—John C. Martin.
Philadelphia Record—W. H. H. Neville, Rowe Stewart.
Phoenix Arizona Republican—Chas. A. Stauffer, Dwight B. Heard.
Pittsburgh Kansas Headlight—J. T. Moore.
Pittsburgh (Pa.) Gazette-Times—Urban E. Dice.
Pittsfield Eagle—D. B. Miller.
Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News—C. F. Stout.
Portland Oregon Journal—S. R. Winch.
Portland Oregonian—Edgar B. Piper.
Providence Journal—Allison Stone, A. L. Poorman.
Pueblo (Colo.) Star-Journal—Frank S. Hoag.
Raleigh (N. C.) News-Observer—Josephus Daniels, Jr.
Richmond (Ind.) Palladium—E. H. Harris.
Richmond (Va.) News-Leader — W. Brydon Tennant, John Stewart Bryan.
Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch—C. P. Hasbrook, Frederick Lewis.
Roanoke (Va.) Times & World News—J. P. Fishburn.
Roanoke (Va.) Times—W. E. Thomas.
Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat & Chronicle—Herbert Winn.
Rochester Times-Union—Frank E. Gannett.
Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star—Russell Chapman, R. S. Chapman.
Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel—A. R. Kessinger.
Rutland (Vt.) Herald—H. L. Hindley.
St. Johnsbury (Vt.) Caledonian-Record—Herbert A. Smith.
St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press—C. M. Palmer.
St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press—H. A. Sprague.
St. Louis Globe-Democrat—E. Lansing Day.
St. Louis Star—Elzey Roberts, Frank W. Taylor, Jr.
St. Paul (Minn.) Daily News—E. F. Coyne, C. D. Bertolet, E. A. Stein.
St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch & Pioneer Press—C. K. Blandin, J. W. Magers.
Salt Lake City (Utah) Telegram—A. L. Fish.
Salt Lake City (Utah) Tribune—J. F. Fitzpatrick.
San Antonio (Texas) Express—Frank G. Huntress.
San Bernardino (Cal.) Sun—O. R. C. Harbison.
San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle—Geo. T. Cameron.
San Jose (Cal.) Mercury Herald—J. O. Hayes.
Savannah (Ga.) Morning News—H. V. Jenkins.
Schenectady (N. Y.) Gazette—A. N. Liecty.
Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star—F. R. Champion.
Scranton (Pa.) Times—J. W. Flanagan, E. J. Lynett, W. R. Lynett, J. E. Bradley.
Sioux City (Iowa) Journal—W. H. Sammons.
Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune—John H. Kelly, A. T. Zellner.
South Bend (Ind.) Tribune—F. A. Miller.
Spokane (Wash.) Spokesman-Review—W. H. Cowles, W. H. Cowles, Jr.
Springfield (Ill.) State-Journal—Will H. McConnell, S. Leigh Call.
Springfield (Ill.) State Register—G. M. Clendenin, Thomas Rees.
Springfield (Mass.) Republican—Richard Hooker, A. H. Yunker.
Springfield (Ohio) Daily News—Edgar Morris.
Superior (Wis.) Evening Telegram—Morgan Murphy.
Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald — E. H. O'Hara.
Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard—J. D. Barnum.
Tacoma (Wash.) Ledger—Frank S. Baker.
Tampa (Fla.) Morning Tribune—S. E. Thomason.
Tarrytown (N. Y.) Daily News—Wallace Odell, Wm. L. Fanning.
Taunton (Mass.) Daily Gazette—Wm. H. Reed.
Terre Haute (Ind.) Tribune—A. C. Keifer.
Toledo (Ohio) Blade—Daniel Nicoll.
Toledo (Fla.) News-Bee—James F. Pollock.
Toledo (Ohio) Times—R. C. Patterson.
Topeka (Kans.) Capital—Arthur Capper.
Topeka (Kans.) State Journal—Frank P. MacLennan.
Toronto, Globe—R. K. Stocks.
Toronto Mail and Empire — Geo. E. Scroggie.
Toronto Daily Star—D. C. R. Harris.
Troy (N. Y.) Record—D. B. Blum.
Tulsa (Okla.) Tribune—Dean Palmer.
Tulsa (Okla.) World—Eugene Lorton, F. O. Larson.
Utica (N. Y.) Observer-Dispatch—Prentiss Bailey.
Utica (N. Y.) Press—Wm. V. Jones.
Vancouver Province—F. J. Burd.
Vancouver Sun—R. J. Cromie.
Warren (Ohio) Tribune Chronicle—Mrs. Zell Hart Deming.
Washington (D. C.) Evening Star—Frank B. Noyes, Fleming Newbold.
Washington Times-Herald—A. R. R. Onyun.
Washington (Pa.) Observer—J. L. Stewart, Howard L. Christman.
Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American—W. J. Pape, I. B. Myers.
Waterloo (Iowa) Evening Courier—Jackson McCoy.
Watertown (N. Y.) Standard—L. S. Chubbuck, A. B. Parker.
Wausau (Wis.) Record Herald—J. L. Sturtevant.
Westerly (R. I.) Sun—Geo. B. Utter.
Wichita (Kans.) Eagle—M. M. Murdock.
Wichita Falls (Tex.) Daily Times—J. H. Allison, Ed. Howard.
Williamsport (Pa.) Grit—Detrick Lamade, Chas. D. Lamade, Geo. R. Lamade, Howard J. Lamade.
Williamsport (Pa.) Sun—E. M. Case, Geo. E. Graff.
Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening—Wm. F. Metten.
Woonsocket (R. I.) Call—Samuel E. Hudson.
Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post—John H. Fahey.
Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette—Roland F. Andrews, Geo. F. Booth.
York (Pa.) Gazette—H. B. Hostetter.
York (Pa.) Dispatch—C. H. Meredith, E. B. Williamson.
Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator—Wm. F. Maag, Jr.

A. N. P. A. HOST TO VISITING CHIEFS

Officials of Inter-Regional Press Associations Given Dinner by National Association's Directors at Waldorf—Co-operation Is Theme

Co-operation between inter-regional associations and the American Newspaper Publishers Association was the theme of the annual dinner of the A. N. P. A. held Tuesday evening at the Waldorf.

The guests of honor were the officials of the various newspaper publishing associations attending the convention.



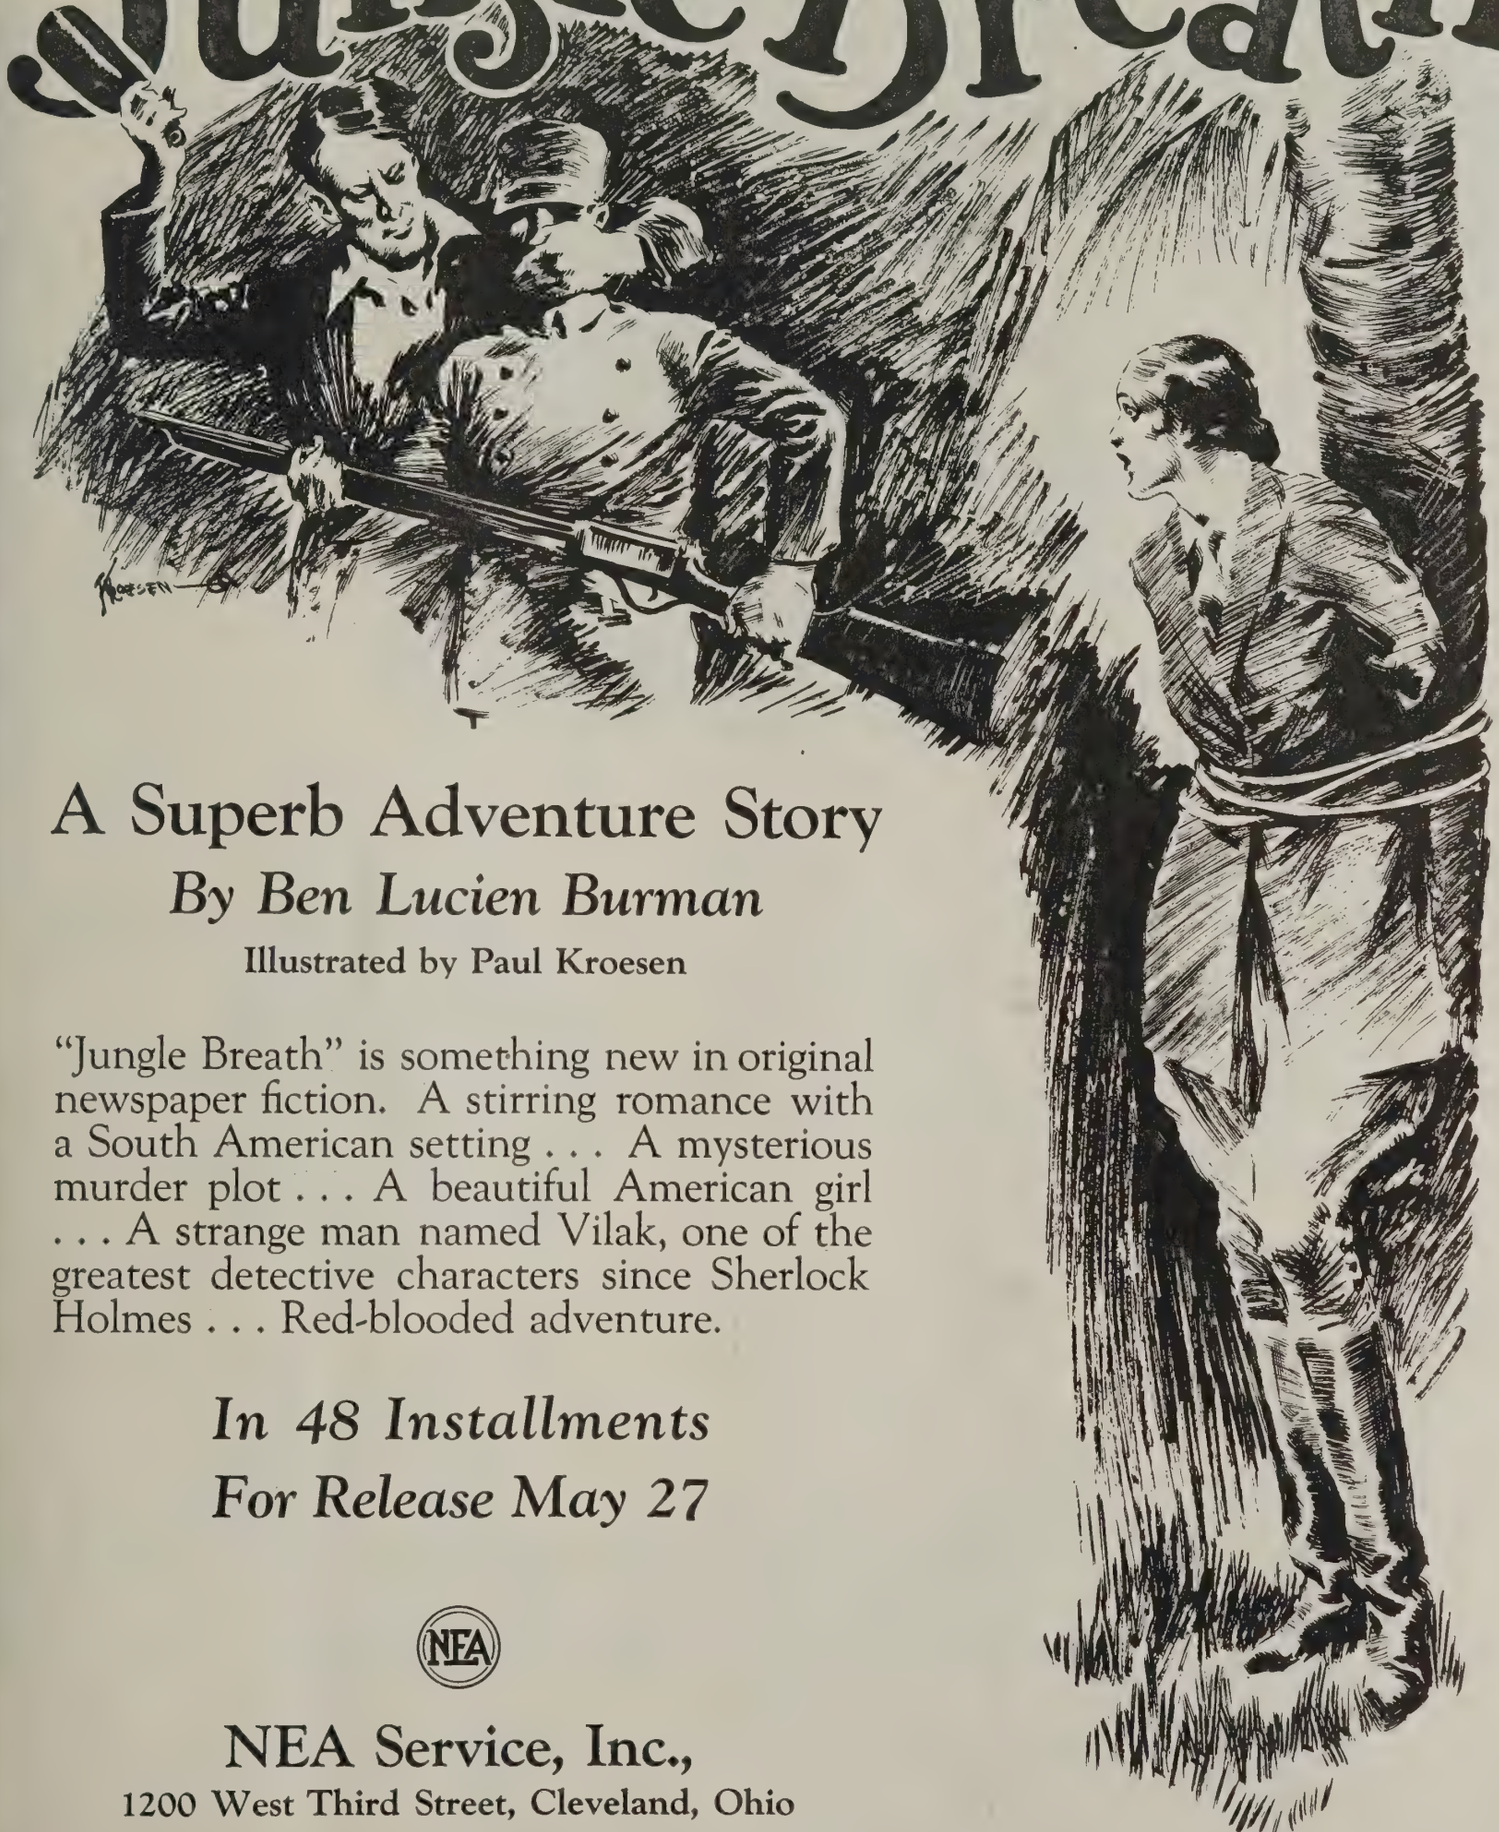
Those attending were John A. Park, Southern Newspaper Publishers Association; William J. Pape, New England Daily Newspaper Publishers Association; Arthur Partridge, Canadian Daily Newspaper Association; J. B. Pinkham, New York State Publishers Association; John H. Harrison, Inland Daily Press Association; W. G. Hooker, Pacific Northwest Publishers Association; A. W. Fell, Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association.

Managers of various A. N. P. A. local officers present were Lester L. Jones, New York; Bloor Schleppy, Chicago; and M. J. Lowenstein, St. Louis.

John Stewart Bryan, Richmond News-Leader, and A. N. P. A. president, presided, with the following directors and A. N. P. A. officials assisting him as hosts: E. H. Butler, Buffalo Evening News; George M. Rogers, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune; Charles H. Taylor, Boston Globe; J. D. Barnum, Syracuse Post Standard; L. B. Palmer, general manager of the association; T. P. Seymour, assistant general manager; H. W. Flagg, secretary of the standing committee; W. J. Mathey, manager of the traffic department; and W. E. Wines, manager of the mechanical department.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER classified advertisements bring results.

Population, Rockland County, 56,479



All Busses Connect with Nyack

Population of the Nyacks 13,000

Nyack, Shopping Center of Rockland County

Jungle Breath

A Superb Adventure Story

By Ben Lucien Burman

Illustrated by Paul Kroesen

"Jungle Breath" is something new in original newspaper fiction. A stirring romance with a South American setting . . . A mysterious murder plot . . . A beautiful American girl . . . A strange man named Vilak, one of the greatest detective characters since Sherlock Holmes . . . Red-blooded adventure.

In 48 Installments

For Release May 27

NEA

NEA Service, Inc.,

1200 West Third Street, Cleveland, Ohio

GANNETT BUYS DAILY IN PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Adds Courier-News to His String Purchasing Plant and Site from Frost Estate—Now Owns Seven Papers

Frank E. Gannett has purchased the Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News, including plant and real estate, from the Charles H. Frost Estate.

CHAUNCEY F. STOUT

Associated with Mr. Gannett in the purchase are Chauncey F. Stout and William Morrison, both for 20 years associated with the paper. Mr. Stout continues as manager, which he has been since Mr. Frost's death in June, 1926, and Mr. Morrison continues as plant superintendent. No changes are contemplated in staff.

The sale was made through the Plainfield Trust Company, one of the executors of the estate, and the details were handled by Herman Suter of Palmer, DeWitt & Palmer, newspaper brokers, New York.

WILLIAM MORRISON

Eventually and when practical the owners will make the Courier-News a more comprehensive newspaper. Usual Gannett plan of local management and localized editing will prevail. Improvement and expansion of plant is to be taken up later.

The property was announced for sale several months ago. The estate accepted bids and awarded the property to Mr. Gannett.

Chauncey F. Stout, who becomes one of the owners began his newspaper career as a carrier boy on the Plainfield Evening News in 1890, when twelve years of age. In 1895 he joined the Plainfield Daily Press as collector, and the following year, 1896, was made circulation manager. In 1901 he became business manager of the Elizabeth Evening Times. In 1905 Stout took charge of the circulation department of the Courier-News and continued in this capacity until the death of the late Charles H. Frost, when he was appointed business manager.

Mr. Morrison started as a newsboy with his uncle, the late T. W. Morrison, who was editor and proprietor of Plainfield's first daily newspaper, the Evening News. He remained with that newspaper in increasingly responsible positions until it was merged with the Plainfield Courier. After several years with the New York World Morrison returned to Plainfield and assumed the duties of mechanical superintendent of the Courier-News.

The Gannett newspapers now include the Rochester Times-Union, Utica Observer-Dispatch, Elmira Star-Gazette & Advertiser, Elmira Sunday Telegram, Ithaca Journal-News, Newburgh News, Plainfield Courier-News.

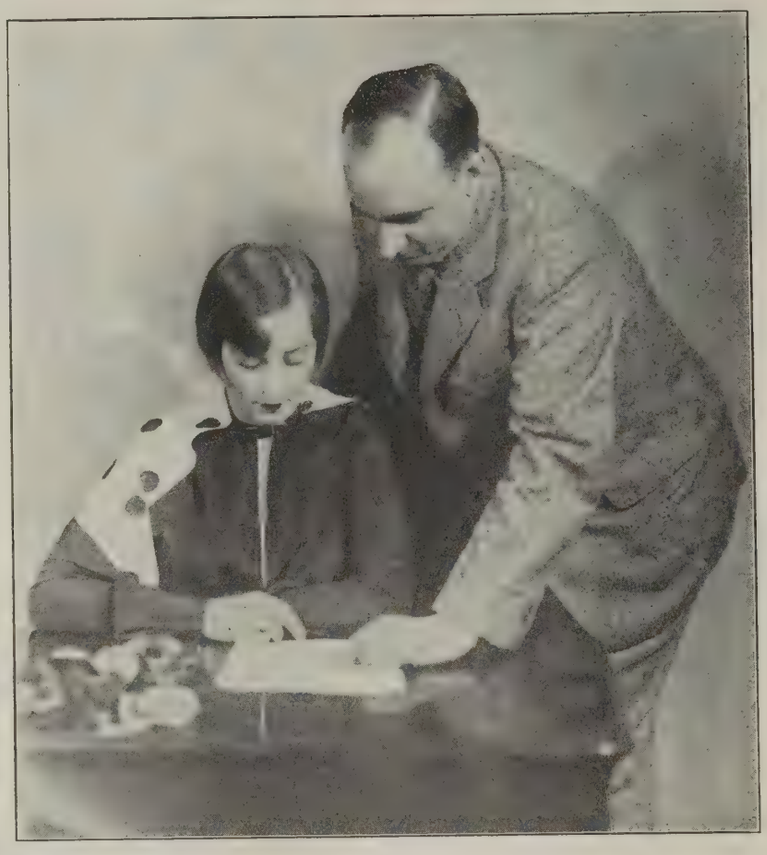
J. P. McKinney & Son will represent the Plainfield Courier-News nationally.



McDOUGALL HONORED

New York Friends Give Luncheon for London Agent Before He Sails

Anglo-American advertising meetings of the past few years were recalled Tuerday noon when New York friends of Thomas McDougall of London gave him a farewell luncheon at the Advertising Club of New York. Mr. McDougall, who has been in the United States for about two weeks, sailed Tuesday night on the Berengaria.

Short adresses were made by each of the guests who included: Frank LeRoy Blanchard, James W. Brown, Hugh Burke, H. H. Charles, Charles Edwards, George French, Hector Fuller, Carl Getz, A. J. Gibney, Colver Gordon, Charles C. Green, Gilbert T. Hodges, Frederic W. Hume, Clifton D. Jackson, G. R. Katz, Charles McGowan, D. Morris-Jones, William J. Morton, Earle E. Person, William H. Rankin, Stanley Resor, F. St. John Richards, M. C. Robbins, J. K. W. Trueman. Letters of regret were received from Sir Charles Higham, Harry R. Swartz, C. K. Woodbridge, and M. P. Gould.

PLANNING A NEW SERIAL STORY

Elsie Nichols, leading lady of "Abie's Irish Rose," is shown above, discussing with Howard Wheeler, editor of the United Feature Syndicate, illustrations for the scenalization of her sister Anne's stage success. Elsie Nichols is going to pose for the illustrations.

RICHARD HOOKER'S CAREER

A. P. Director Elected to Succeed Clark President of Springfield Republican

Richard Hooker, this week elected a director of the Associated Press to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Charles Hopkins Clark, Hartford (Conn.) Courant, has been president of the Springfield Republican since 1915.

It was his great grandfather, the first Samuel Bowles, who founded the Republican on Sept. 8, 1824.

Mr. Hooker was born in Augusta, Ga., on Feb. 20, 1878. He was a graduate of Yale University with the class of 1899. After his graduation, he spent a year abroad studying in France and Germany, returning to this country to start work on the Republican as exchange editor in 1900. Later he had experience as a reporter and in the business office. From 1904 until 1911 he was the Republican's Washington correspondent. He was elected president of the publishing company in 1915.

In 1924 on the occasion of the Republican's 100th anniversary, Mr. Hooker wrote a story of the Republican which was published by MacMillan under the title of "The Story of An Independent Newspaper." From 1919 to 1920 he was secretary of the Industrial Conference in Washington.

USING NEWSPAPER ADS NOT MAIL FRAUD

St. Louis Judge Sustains Demurrer in Case Based on Newspaper Copy—No Direct Correspondence Was Used

Evidence of the insertion of a newspaper advertisement is insufficient to establish a case of using the mails to further a scheme to defraud, it was held by Federal Judge Faris in St. Louis, Mo., April 16, in sustaining a demurrer to the indictment against Matthew J. Maloney and C. J. Wiedeman, charged with that offense.

The two advertised about a year ago for "men with small capital to invest." At offices in the Arcade Building, the applicants were shown what was said to be a high tension transformer for automobiles which were to be sold to filling stations and automobile supply stores. Some of the applicants paid up to $300 as security for quantities of the article, which is alleged to have been sold in 10-cent stores. They were then handed railroad tickets to distant places. An empty office greeted them when they returned with their inquiries and complaints.

As no correspondence passing through the mails was shown, according to Judge Faris, the insertion of the advertisement was insufficient to establish a case of fraud.

SCHOOL EDITORS MEET

One hundred delegates, representing 10 states, attended the second annual convention of the Southern Interscholastic Press Association, held in Lexington, Va., at Washington and Lee University, April 22 and 23. The convention was sponsored by the Lee School of Journalism and Pi Delta Epsilon, national journalistic fraternity, under the direction of Howard M. Thompson, professor of journalism at Washington and Lee.

Concentrated Circulation

in a

Metropolitan Area

The most recent audit issue by the ABC gives the daily Courier-Express 111,729 and the Sunday Courier-Express 153,837. In the City the daily has 74,466 and the Sunday 80,178.

Daily 111,729

Sunday 153,837

Largest circulation in Buffalo

Courier BUFFALO EXPRESS

LORENZEN & THOMPSON, Inc.

Publishers' Direct Representatives

New York Chicago

San Francisco Seattle

MORE

MORE PAID Advertising than any other Ohio Newspaper

Exclusive Advertisers

During 1926 there were 1218 National and Local Display Advertisers that used The Columbus Dispatch exclusively as compared with 180 in the only other evening newspaper in Columbus.

National Advertisers

During 1926 more National Display Advertisers used space in The Columbus Dispatch than in all other Columbus newspapers combined. . . . The total number was 866.

MORE Circulation than any other Columbus Newspaper 113,678 Daily Average

Local Advertisers

During 1926 more Local Display Advertisers used the columns of The Columbus Dispatch than any other Columbus newspaper. . . . There were 1608 of them, or more than twice as many as appeared in the only other evening paper in Columbus.

Classified Advertisers

During 1926 The Columbus Dispatch carried 486,083 individual Want-Ads, or more than all other Columbus newspapers combined by 165,808 ads.

Columbus Dispatch

OHIO'S GREATEST HOME DAILY

RADIO PICTURE MARVEL ON VIEW AT PUBLISHERS' CONVENTION

Photograph of Lord Burnham Sent from London to Receiving Device in Editor & Publisher's Room at Waldorf— Workings of Invention Described PUBLISHERS attending the A. P. and A. N. P. A. conventions at the Waldorf this week saw in operation the new transmission marvel, photoradio, which transmits photographs by wireless, and has been put into commercial use by the world wide wireless service of the Radio Corporation of America.

Photograph of Lord Burnham sent by photoradio from London and received at Editor & Publisher's convention headquarters.

On a receiving device in EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Waldorf headquarters pictures were continuously being recorded.

Greetings from Lord Burnham, proprietor of the London Daily Telegraph to American newspaper publishers were received Thursday morning, in the form of a facsimile reproduction of Lord Burnham's written message.

The message, addressed to John Stewart Bryan, A. N. P. A. president, read:

"Fraternal greetings to American publishers in annual convention at New York. All our pens may not be "made of a quill from an angel's wings, but they are used mostly today for friendship and understanding between English-speaking peoples.

"All good wishes from British Empire Press Union. Burnham."

A photograph of Lord Burnham was also transmitted.

Photoradio is now a regular feature of the World Wide Wireless Service Via RCA. News pictures, portrait photographs, fashion drawings, documents of interest to banks and bankers, legal papers, architectural plans, technical designs and wiring diagrams advertisements or any other important documents can now be transmitted across the ocean.

The photoradio circuits between New York and London and between San Francisco and Honolulu, provide adequate facilities for the sending and receiving of pictures, drawings, etcetera, between the United States and all parts of Europe and between the United States and Hawaii. Photoradiograms destined for addresses in New York, London, San Francisco or Honolulu are delivered by messengers immediately upon receipt, enclosed in special protective envelopes. Pictures destined for addresses in cities other than these are forwarded by special delivery registered mail, and air-mail wherever possible, and by "Telephoto" when requested.

As an example: A Photoradiogram originating in Paris and destined to Chicago can be airmailed from Paris to Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Company, Ltd., Radio House, Wilson Street, London, E. C. 2, and upon its receipt in New York will be forwarded by the Radio Corporation of America to the addressee in Chicago. Photoradiograms destined for London or Europe, must be forwarded to or filed at Radio Corporation of America, 64 Broad street, New York City. Those intended for exchange between the United States and Hawaii, must be forwarded to or filed at the Radio Corporation of America, 28 Geary St., San Francisco or 933 Fort street, Honolulu.

Photoradiograms are transmitted from a film 5 inches wide and the charges are based upon this dimension as the standard width. The rate is $16.00 per inch of length and the minimum charge is $50.00. Thus a standard 5 in. x 7 in. picture would cost $112.

It seems much too complicated to understand how radio pictures can be sent at all; but when it is realized that it is done by considering only one small part of the picture at a time, the reasonableness of the undertaking becomes more evident.

At the transmitting station, a photographic negative of the picture to be sent is placed around a glass cylinder in the center of which is a very powerful electric light. This light is focused down to a very small point on the picture, and is moved back and forth across the inside of the glass cylinder. This means that for any single crossing the transmitter has covered a narrow line width of the picture. At the end of each stroke the cylinder turns slightly forward to present a new line width of the picture to the light. So this light is picking up the values of all the small parts of a line across the picture as it makes the traversals. If it is a light part of the film, the light has no trouble in penetrating the picture; but if it is dark part, the light gets through but little, if any. Now this light passes to a photo electric cell which is the electric eye of the outfit. This cell is sensitive to the amount of light which gets to it, and it shows this sensitivity by changing a very small electric current which is passing through the cell. So, if much light gets through to the cell, maximum current will be passed. If but little light is transmitted through a dense part of the negative, but little electric current will be registered.

This controlled electric current is much too weak in itself to be of any use however, It has to be made many times stronger in a vacuum tube amplifier. This is done in much the same manner that the usual radio broadcast receiver builds up the weak radio signal to operate a loud speaker. But in this case, the photo-electric current impulses are made so large that they will actually control a radio transmitter—in fact the very largest that are in existence; so that the weak current impulses generated from the light values of the pictures are able to radiate signals which will carry to all parts of the world. The actual control is accomplished by having the amplified signals change the number and length of dots sent out. So, for a light part of the picture, very few and very short dots will be sent out. For a gray part of the picture, many small dots will be sent; and for a dark part of the picture, long heavy dashes will be sent out.

At the receiving stations, the signals which are received on the antenna in a rather weak condition are again amplified in much the usual sort of a way, and these signals are led to the photoradio receiver proper.

The recording of the pictures is accomplished by "hot air," but only that which is not wasted records. Special heat sensitive paper has been developed for this service, and it is held in the receiver in much the same way as with a typewriter, except that it is a continuous length of paper from a roll.

Back and forth, in front of the slowly advancing paper, travels what is called a hot air gun. This gun is shooting air heated electrically at the paper all the time, and when the hot air hits the paper, it makes a sepia mark on the paper. Now to control the action of the hot air and build up the picture, the hot air is either allowed to hit the paper directly, or is blown aside by a cold air stream on the side of the hot air gun. This cold air stream is controlled by a very small, electrically operated valve. If the valve is shut, the cold air is shut off, and the hot air has a free chance to make a good mark on the paper. This is the condition when there is a signal coming in on the radio, which actuates the valve to close off the cold air supply. The radio signal comes in when the photoelectric cell at the transmitting station is being traversed by a light passed through the film in the glass cylinder. As this occurs for every part of the picture where there is a clear space, a black mark will be registered at the receiver. As the transmitting film is a negative, it means that the clear spaces of the film are the ones to register black on the recorder which is just as it should be to make a negative into a positive; so, bit by bit, as the light at the transmitter and the hot air gun at the receiver travel back and forth, in strict time with each other, the finished picture is built up.

Photoradio receiving machine set up at convention.

Make the Next Test in Central Illinois—

THE FINEST CROSS-SECTION OF AMERICA

If it can be done with newspapers, it can be done with the amazing HOME coverage of

The Daily Pantagraph

PUBLISHED EVERY MORNING (EXCEPT SUNDAY) AT BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

Farmers—On Richest Soil in U. S.
Industrial Workers
Students—Two Universities
City Dwellers

Circulation Over 20,000

Into 85% of the homes of Bloomington
Into 77% of the homes of McLean County
97% HOME DELIVERED

REPRESENTATIVES—
CHAS. H. EDDY CO., 247 Park Ave., New York City; 294 Washington St., Boston; F. E. WALES, Room 1501, 140 S. Dearborn St., Chicago.
Member A. B. C. A. N. P. A., Associated Press.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE
NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE features

COMICS

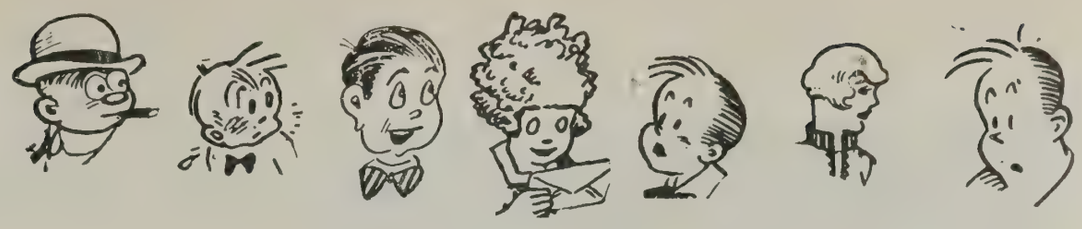
Ching Chow .....daily
Deer Family .....daily
Gasoline Alley .....D&S
Gumps .....D&S
Moon Mullins .....D&S
Orphan Annie .....D&S
Harold Teen .....D&S
Texas Slim .....Sunday
Winnie Winkle .....D&S
The Squire of Smithville....daily
"About Broadway" .....daily

CARTOONS

W. E. Hill .....Sunday
McCutcheon .....D&S
Carey Orr .....D&S
Gaar Williams .....D&S

FICTION

Blue Ribbon Daily Serial
Blue Ribbon Sunday Serial
Blue Ribbon Short Stories
Daily True Life Stories



MISCELLANEOUS FEATURES

Daily—Sunday

Doris Blake Chats
Cook Book by Jane Eddington
Antoinette Donnelley—On Beauty
Dr. Evans' Health Articles
Farm & Garden
A Line O' Type Or Two
Men's Fashions
What's Wrong Here?
Women's Fashions
Margaret Orr's "Stories of Girls"
Sentence Sermons by Roy L. Smith

WEEKLY

Westbrook Pegler
Donald Ogden Stewart
"Sam 'N' Henry"
Duke Bakrak
Snowshoe Al
"About Broadway" by Hellinger
Book Reviews
Cartoon Fillers
Confessions of Authors
Club Ethics
Etiquette
Fashions (Paris)
Justice Series
Maiden Meditations
Sport Page
Women's Pages
E. W. Kemble's Children's Stories
H. L. Mencken Literary Articles
Burns Mantle Theatre Letter
Weekly Hollywood Letter
New York Society Letter
Builders Page

The WORLD'S GREATEST 7 RING COMIC CIRCUS!

CHICAGO TRIBUNE comics make a 7-ring circus unequaled by any on earth! . . . Something different happening in each ring!

Ladies and Gentlemen—We Present—

THE GUMPS—Andy and Min and Chester and the Widow Zander—Will Uncle Bim escape her? . . .

In ring Number 2—we have—GASOLINE ALLEY by Frank King—Walt and the famous, lovable little mystery boy—Skeezix.

Number 3, MOON MULLINS, the irrepressible—the fastest growing strip in the world!

Ring Number 4—LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE—what a child!

Number 5—WINNIE WINKLE THE BREADWINNER—queen of the office force!

Ring Number 6—HAROLD TEEN, idol of the younger set!

Ring Number 7—SMITTY, the world's greatest office boy!

And So Different!

Each of these comic strips is different in its appeal from any of the other six. . . . Each was originated to satisfy a specific type of fun. . . . Each comic is built around characters—people, people so real that millions of readers think of them as personal friends.

To Concentrate a Moment—Take a glance at Ring Number 3—Moon Mullins—there's not another comic in the world like this one by Frank Willard. . . . Just now there's a mysterious $5,000 worrying Moon, and Percyfield, his dapper enemy, is hovering in the background, plotting no good to our hero. This is one of the most exciting episodes in Moon's career. . . . In Ring Number 5—Winnie Winkle's chum Patricia Dugan has become engaged to Winnie's ex-suitor Mike Mulligan—thereby complicating matters considerably! . . . Over in Ring Number 4—Little Orphan Annie has found a new home—Angus Flint and his wife of Bluebell, have adopted Annie and put her back in school—In less than a week Annie has licked the school bully! . . .

That Laboratory Test! Little Orphan Annie, by Harold Gray, is one of those miracle strips! . . . It caught from the start! . . . Today it is one of the fastest selling comics in the country. . . . Little Orphan Annie appears daily in the Chicago Tribune and the Daily News of New York . . . the two newspapers with the two largest daily circulations in America! . . . Little Orphan Annie has stood the Chicago Tribune Laboratory Test for Syndicate Features!

All the other entries in this World's Greatest 7-Ring Comic Circus have passed the same test! . . . Write, wire or 'phone for proofs and prices!

CHICAGO TRIBUNE Newspapers Syndicate

Tribune Square, Chicago

LEADER OF PROXY CAMPAIGN

John Francis Neylan, publisher of the San Francisco Call, photographed at Waldorf this week.

REPRESENTING THE NEWSPAPERS

Milton Towne Tells What He Likes to Hear from "Specials"—E. Katz Special Agency Entertains Publishers—Hamilton-DeLisser Luncheon

SUBJECTS which he was willing to discuss with newspaper representatives were listed in a recent address made by Milton Towne, president of the Joseph Richards Company, New York advertising agency, before the advertising club of the New York Times. The agency executive admitted he had talked to very few newspaper representatives in the last several years, but the ones he had seen stood out clearly in his memory.

"Why?" he asked, and answered his own question.

"Because they brought something to me that interested me. They have talked more in terms of advertising and markets than they have in terms of their own medium. In five minutes, in answer to a memorandum to our space buyer, I can get the essential information I need about a specific medium.

"I am cynical about the information that the average newspaper representative is prepared to give me, based on experience of more than 17 years in the agency business. A man who wants to see me has information that should properly interest me, and not my space buyer.

"I want to hear about the New York market. We do not know in our agency all there is to know about the New York market.

"The subject I am always ready to talk about to newspaper representatives is the analysis of the problems that any agency man is interested in. I am also interested in any definite stories of success in advertising. There is very little definite information on the subject in terms of actual sales experience, sales successes or sales failures."

Mr. Towne concluded with the declaration that he believed that the job of representing a newspaper was "a magnificent training for selling or for the advertising business."

The E. Katz Special Advertising Agency gave a dinner to the visiting publishers at the Plaza on Thursday, April 28th. It was an evening of national advertising shop talk by the publishers themselves. The same idea was successful a year ago and was repeated with the publishers interested desire and cooperation.

Among those present were: E. J. Tarte, Montreal (Canada) La Patrie; C. C. Hamlin, Colorado Springs (Col.) Gazette & Telegraph; H. F. Emerson, Ansonia (Conn.) Sentinel; L. L. Desaulniers, Ansonia (Conn.) Sentinel; E. F. Stumpf, Palm Beach (Fla.) Times; O. S. Stauffer, Arkansas City (Kan.) Traveler; J. J. Powell, Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal; W. Y. Morgan, Hutchinson (Kan.) News-Herald; H. J. Allen, Wichita (Kan.) Beacon.

B. F. Forgey, Ashland (Ky.) Leader; C. A. Webb, Asheville, (N. C.) Citizen; J. J. Bernstein, Massillon (O.) Independent; E. K. Gaylord, Oklahoma City Oklahoman & Times; J. J. Mead, Sr., Erie (Pa.) Times; W. C. Deming, Cheyenne (Wyo.) Tribune & Leader; G. A. Riley, Jacksonville (Fla.) Journal.

Rhea Howard, Wichita Falls (Tex.) Times; J. J. Allison, Wichita Falls (Tex.) Times; M. F. Murdaugh, Durham (N. C.) Herald; I. J. Hornstein, Reading (Pa.) Times.

J. P. Muller, New York; R. R. Black, Chicago; S. L. Katz, Chicago; W. D. Shank, Kansas City; Fred M. Bell, Atlanta; Axel Blomberg, Detroit; G. R. Katz, H. N. Kirby, G. W. Brett, M. J. Beck, G. H. Gunst, A. Doris, H. R. Goldberg, R. A. Parenteau, New York.

The following representatives of the E. Katz Special Advertising Agency met at the New York office during A. N. P. A. week for their regular sales meeting: R. R. Black and S. L. Katz, of Chicago; W. D. Shank, Kansas City; Fred M. Bell, Atlanta; Axel Blomberg, Detroit.

F. St. John Richards, president of the Six Point League of Newspaper Advertising Representatives, New York, has appointed the following nominating committee to nominate candidates for election at the annual meeting scheduled for June 2: W. C. Bates, chairman; H. C. Prudden, Frank Pita, W. A. Snowden, and J. F. Duffy.

Twenty publishers were entertained Wednesday this week at luncheon at the Williams Club by L. DeLisser, of Hamilton-DeLisser, newspaper special agency, New York.

E. & P. STUDIO POPULAR

Many Publishers Visit Photographic Plant at Waldorf

Among the novelties of the 1927 publishers' conventions was the photographic studio operated by Editor & Publisher on the second floor of the Waldorf-Astoria. More than a hundred publishers, singly and in groups, found their way to Room 244, where Jack Price, staff photographer, had set up his cameras, lights and backgrounds and by mid-week the walls were decorated with interesting and unusual picture studies of some outstanding geniuses of American journalism.

A number of the pictures were finished in time for this edition of Editor & Publisher and appear on other pages. Those which were made too late for the early edition will appear in the regular issue which will be mailed to all subscribers at the regular time Friday.

JENKS TO BOSTON ADVERTISER

H. I. Jenks, formerly assistant business manager of the New Haven Register, will join the advertising staff of the Boston Advertiser next week. He will be associated with the morning tabloid.

BILL REGULATING AD RATES IS PASSED

Legal Advertising in Pennsylvania Must Be Based on Circulation, Not Political Favor, Under Measure Introduced by Harrisburg Telegraph

A bill regulating the advertising rates to be paid by state officials was passed recently by the Pensylvania state legislature and is now awaiting the governor's signature, A. R. Michener, general manager of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph says.

The Telegraph engineered the introduction of the bill, Mr. Michener said, and piloted it through to passage. Mr. Mitchener said he was confident the governor would sign the measure.

Mr. Michener explained the bill was modeled after a statute passed in New York state about 10 years ago, revised and brought up to date, with newspapers of the state graded according to their circulation statements.

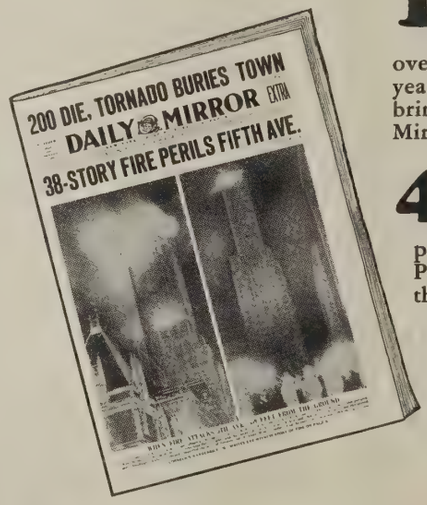
Without a law similar to the Pennsylvania bill advertising rates are frequently based rather on political friendship than on circulation.

Prosperous conditions in Harrisburg were reported by Mr. Michener, who is a delegate to the A. N. P. A. convention at the Waldorf. The state is building a large new civic center for the city, involving the expenditure of more than $6,000,000.

Use Editor & Publisher classified advertisements to satisfy wants.

People do want a BRIGHT newspaper

The New York Daily Mirror



a bright picture newspaper, shows

a gain of 101,475

over publisher's statement a year ago to A. B. C. This brings the circulation of the Mirror to per publisher's statement to Post Office for 6 months through March.

411,808

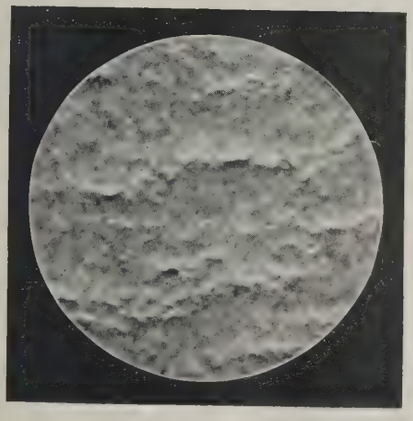
You can win Mirror readers as swiftly as WE

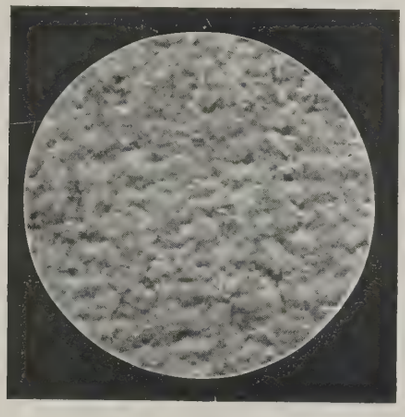
J. Mora Boyle, Advertising Director, 55 Frankfort Street, N. Y.
Western Office, 326 West Madison Street, Chicago

Compare the faces- they tell the story of Certified Printing

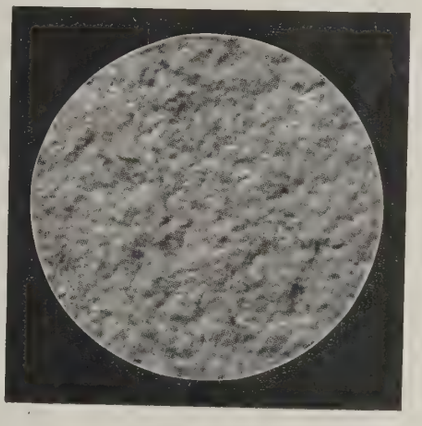
Face of finest tissue wet mat [steam table dried]



Note absence of "hills and dales" in surfaces of wet mat and Certified dry mat.



Face of 15c. Certified Dry Mat



All the dry mat reproductions are from photographic enlargements (magnification 20 times) made directly from the mats just as delivered to newspaper plants by the manufacturers.

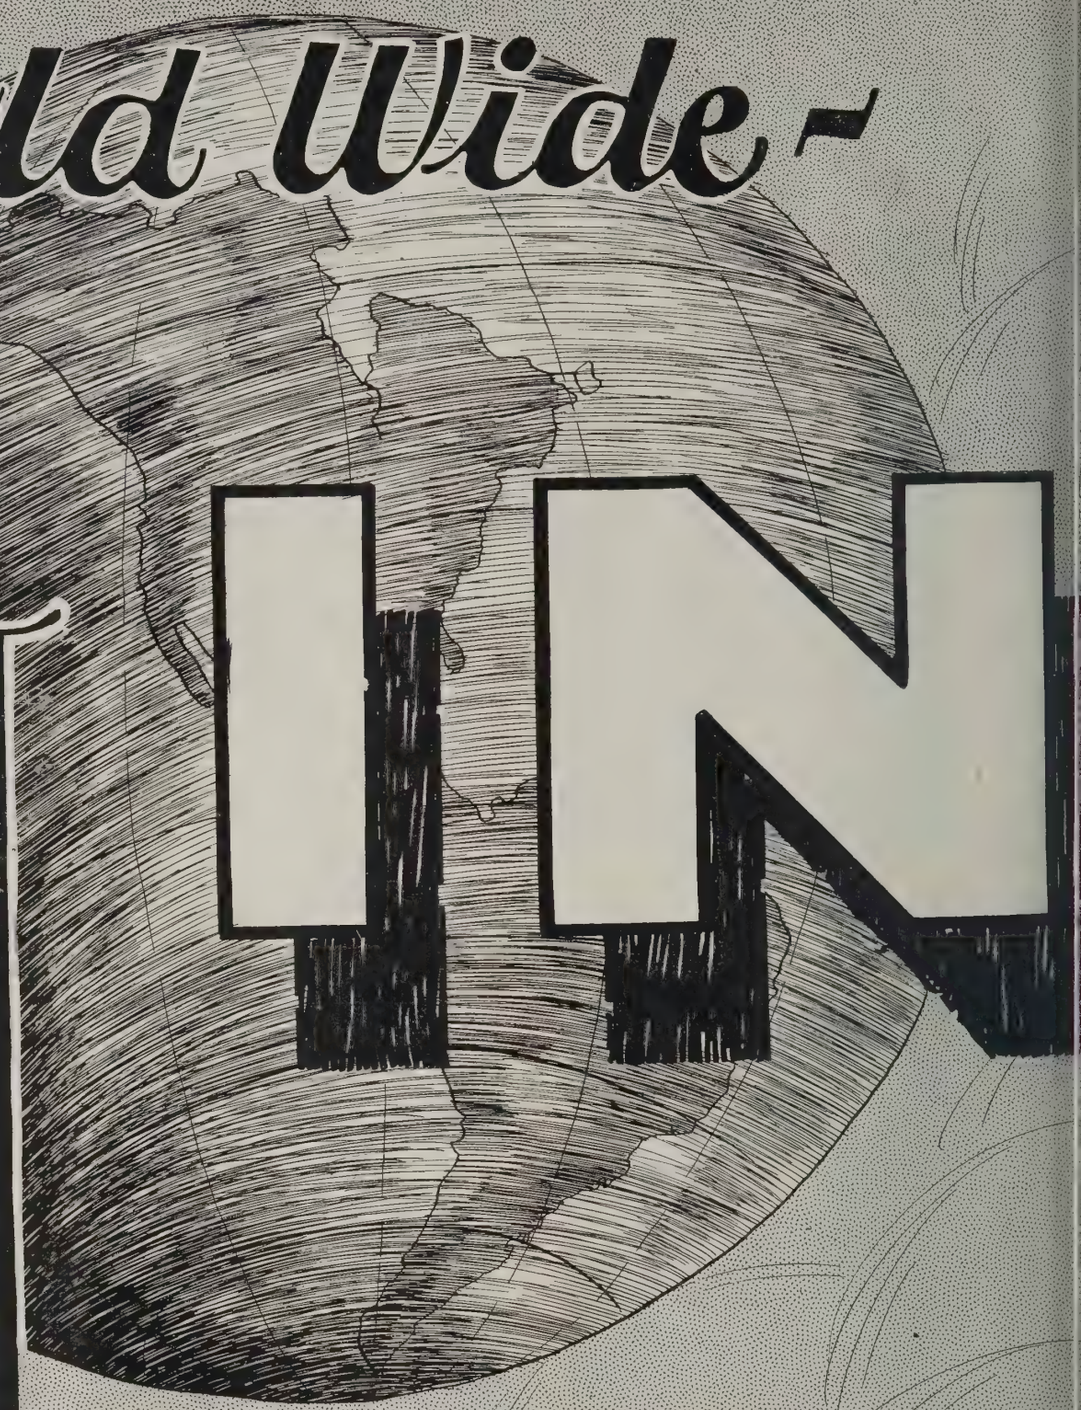
Faces of three typical grades of other dry mats

Note depressions in the surfaces of these dry mats.

We respectfully suggest that you place your magnifying glass on these reproductions and observe the smooth surface of Certified Dry Mats as compared to the others.

With its face free from grain marks and depressions every Certified Dry Mat assures the reproduction of solid blacks and clean and sharp halftones.

The same test directly with the mats does not require a microscope or magnifying glass; your eye is keen enough to observe the vital difference in the faces. To compare is to know.



CERTIFIED DRY MAT CORPORATION

340 Madison Avenue . . . . . New York, N. Y.

for wet mat printing with DRY MAT facility—use Certifieds

MADE IN U. S. A.

World Wide

SERVICE

FUNCTIONING throughevery department of our organization are men whose experience dates back for years. This, in union with great resources, large modern plants, distributing branches in 18 important cities that insure prompt deliveries to all customers, no matter where they are located, is assurance of our aims and desires to render a permanent, satisfactory service to the newspaper publishers.

The AULT &

CINCINNATI	PHILADELPHIA	CLEVELAND	ST. LOUIS	MINNEAPO
NEW YORK	RICHMOND	DETROIT	NEW ORLEANS	SAN FRAN
BOSTON	CHICAGO	BUFFALO	MILWAUKEE	LOS ANGE
BALTIMORE		ATLANTA		HOUSTON

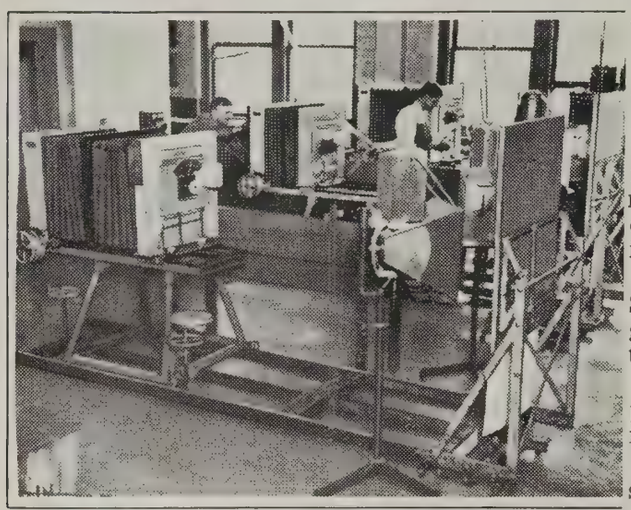
INKS

GRITLESS NEWS INK
known for its highest standards of American Newspaper Printing.

WEB COLORS
need no introduction to the publisher. Their popularity has long been established in the publishing world, as standard of comics and magazine sections.

INTAGLIO INKS
first made in America, and first with the publisher ever since.

VIBORG CO.



oreign Branches of the AULT & WIBORG CO.

UENOS AIRES, ARG.
OSARIO, ARG.
ENDOZA, ARG.
UCUMAN, ARG.

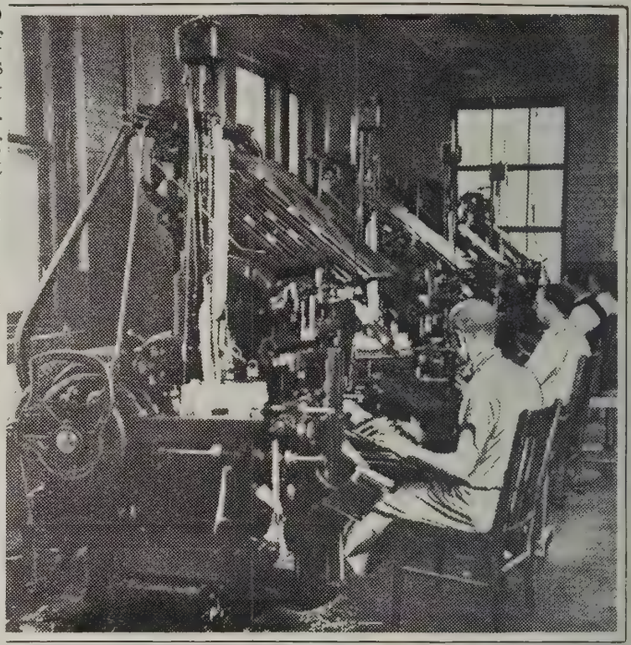
MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY
HONGKONG, SHANGHAI, CANTON—CHINA
MANILA, P. I. LONDON, E. C., ENG.

TORONTO, CANADA
MONTREAL, CANADA
WINNIPEG, CANADA
VANCOUVER, CANADA

EDITORS' FEATURE SERVICE, INC., IS IN ITS NEW PLANT

TEN THOUSAND square feet of floor space, carries the latest and finest engraving, stereotyping and composing room equipment necessary to take care of its rapidly increasing client list.

Editors' Feature Service is the fastest growing syndicate in the country



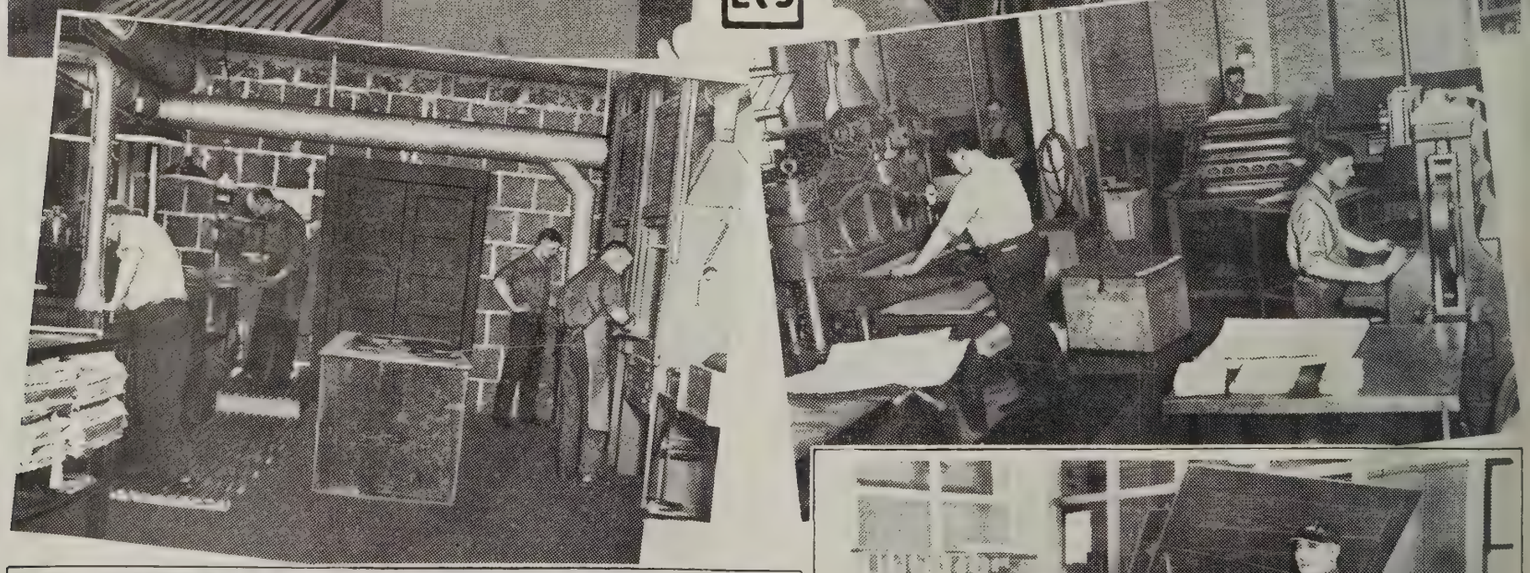
It insures a newspaper against rising feature costs.

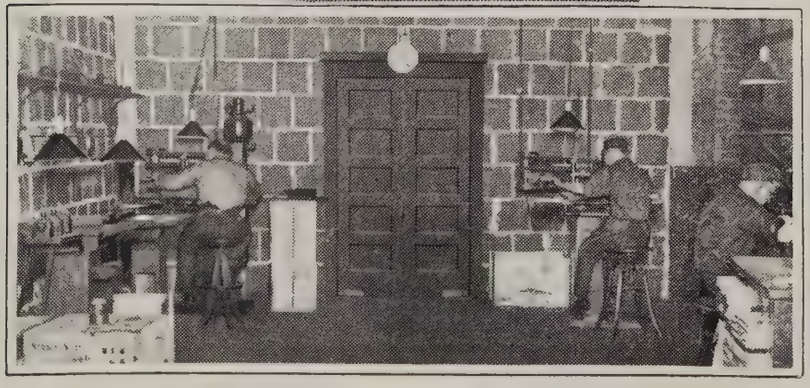
It has quality, versatility and balance.

It is a service so edited and compiled at the source, to save editorial and mechanical time in the client's plant.

It is a service of compelling reader interest.

Send for Sample Service.





Editors' Feature Service, Inc.
1435 E. 12th St., Cleveland, Ohio
New York Office, 1819 B'way

EFS

BICKEL REVIEWS U. P. HISTORY

(Continued from page 31)

ıe future. Only the dead are insured gainst error. But out of every import-nt error of judgment that the United 'ress has made in the past we have ound that there was always an asset f real value in the incident if we were nly wise enough and efficient enough find it. We look our mistakes honestly the face and try and refine out of them alues perhaps even greater than if we ıd not erred.

The development of the American ress during the last twenty years has en unparalleled in any other country the world. This is true because the merican press has been free. It has en free and unfettered and able to ilize to the uttermost its manifold op-tunities because of the fact that the elopment of its news resources, ough the American press associations, s been free. The American press has ver suffered from the handicap of a vernmentally subsidized news monopoly, e deadening effect of which has had marked a reaction upon European urnalism. It is obvious now that it ver will. The day of the real use-lness of the "official" agency, even to "keepers," is over. The newspaper tors of the world are sick of propa-nda. The gentlemen who dominated world's news resources in the early ars of the century and sought to divide earth among themselves no longer n dominate their own presumed neres of influence. The greatest asset it the United Press has had in the exampled expansion of its world serv-since 1916 is the fact that it has not onged, at any time, to the so called ficial agency" group; that it has never epted subsidy; that its independence absolute absence of nationalistic bias always been complete. The "official" "semi-official" agency tag today is far from being the asset it was pre-ned to be in the far away days of 6 and 1897, when the loss of the con-tion to the Associated Press was as-ned to be the death blow delivered he old United Press, that even the d and associated services with the icial agencies" rarely now permit the rd "official" or "semi-official agency" appear in the credit lines on their dis-ches. Such a connection now is a nite liability.

here are great newspapers today, lished in the important capitals of opean countries whose leading na-alistic news agency is of the "official" up who frankly assert they use United ss dispatches from scenes of import-international action, such for instance he recent Chinese war, because they ot trust the governmentally dominated s services of their own nation in event in which foreign governmental cy is inextricably involved.

nother tremendous asset of the United ss in the last twenty years has been ype of organization.

he United Press is a business institu-. It was organized upon the same and sound business principles that made the great business institutions he United States the marvel of the ld for efficiency, stability and perma-e. We have been charged, by less nately constituted organizations, with g a "commercial" institution and a fit making" concern. The United s rests easy under both indictments. United Press is organized as is great and enduring privately ed American newspaper, to render a ice and to make a profit and I know o properly operated newspaper in rica to date that has found anything ctionable in a proper profit. The test review of business history shows to secure a real guarantee of com-impartiality and genuine permanence rvice, concentrated business control, r normal business conditions, is es-al. The press association business irely a business; just as the news-business is a business, and there is ore reason to believe that a social-experiment in the press association field is the one and only method of attaining efficiency—experience having demonstrated to the contrary—than there is to believe that such an economic adventure is essential to make newspapers sound and prosperous.

The United Press is looking forward to its next twenty years with intensive interest and anticipation. Never in history were newspapers demanding so much from their news organizations; never were their standards so high. Every day we are forced to extend ourselves to further limits to attain better results than the day before. It is an absorbing business. It is ruthless in its demands for the best and all of the best that there is in every man in the organization regardless if he be in New York, Buenos Aires, San Francisco, Moscow or Singapore.

All of this, of course, has led to keen, healthy rivalry. There has even been silly rumors about "a press association war." The United Press is heart and soul in competition every minute of the day with every agency in the world in the business of collecting and distributing news. And we like it.

We are eagerly interested in extending our business because that extends our ability to serve. But that is not "war." It is clean cut, above board, business competition.

We seek no news monopoly for ourselves. A news monopoly in our hands would degenerate into an evil thing as quickly as it would in the hands of any other organization.

We are opposed to any character or form of news monopoly in America or anywhere else in the world. We will resist any attempted imposition of such a monopoly with all the resources at our command.

Fortunately, however, there is no danger of anything of this character dominating the press of the land.

FLORISTS PRAISE SALES POWER OF DAILIES

Cincinnati Group "Sold Out" Big Easter Stocks Through Advertising Campaign—No Other Medium Used

"Cleaned out and our daily newspaper advertising did it."

This was the jubilant tribute every member of the Allied Florists Association of Cincinnati paid newspaper advertising the day following Easter, in a news story in the Enquirer of that city.

The association is composed of both wholesalers and retailers, and stocks in both cases were depleted to the last flower and potted plant on sales floors. The growers are also members of the association. The florists and growers said they used no medium for advertising outside the daily newspapers of the community. They have adopted a policy of sending weekly messages to the public. Personal orders through the mail and others by telephone echoed the pre-Easter advertising. Dealers who thought they would "plunge" on Easter orders found that almost all their competitors were doing the same thing a few days before Easter, and wholesalers and growers found themselves compelled to make allotments to retailers.

"We were 'sold' on newspapers," said an official of the association, "as our best advertising medium when we launched our campaign. Now we are not only sold but we are enthusiastic boosters for Cincinnati newspapers. One surprising feature of the Easter selling caused by our newspaper advertising was the distant points from which our retailers received orders."

BUYS EAST ST. LOUIS PAPER

G. Edwin Popkess, publisher of the Dairyman's Journal and other trade publications, has purchased the East St. Louis (Ill.) News-Review, an afternoon daily newspaper, of which he will be president and general manager. The News-Review was organized in September, 1925, with various city officials as stockholders.

Annual Production 240,000 Tons

60,000 Tons Produced at Warkaus

FINNISH NEWSPRINT

The Outstanding Quality of European Papers

Has been shipped to this market steadily for nine years

Important original customers still using largely

FINLAND

We are prepared to discuss Forward Contracts.

PARSONS & WHITTEMORE
INCORPORATED
299 BROADWAY, NEW YORK
Telephone Worth 8091

Agents for
The Finnish Papermill Association
HELSINGFORS, FINLAND

WORLD PRESS CONGRESS PARTY HOLDS NEW YORK REUNION

Bottom row (left to right): Mrs. Wallace Odell, Mrs. Thomas J. Blain, Mrs. James W. Brown, Mrs. Reginald C. Snyder, Mrs. Dietrick Lamade, Mrs. Reginald W. Orcutt, Second row (left to right): Thomas J. Blain, Port Chester (N. Y.) Item; Dietrick Lamade, Williamsport (Pa.) Grit; Frank P. Glass, St. Louis; Secretary-Treasurer Wallace Odell, Tarrytown (N. Y.) News; Joe Mitchell Chapple, National Magazine; Miss Virginia M. Murray; Mrs. Mabel Shaw, Dixon (Ill.) Telegraph. Top row (left to right): Vice-President R. C. Snyder, Norwalk (Ohio) Reflector-Herald; James W. Brown, Editor & Publisher; Reginald W. Orcutt, Mergenthaler Co.; W. O. Dopping, Auburn (N. Y.) Citizen; Levon West, artist; C. K. Blandin, St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press and Dispatch

NEWSPAPER men and members of their families who were members of the Press Congress of the World party at Geneva, Switzerland, held a reunion meeting in New York Tuesday night. Thirty-five men and women attended a dinner at the Town Hall Club, after which they adjourned to the office of EDITOR & PUBLISHER in the Times Building, where motion pictures of the tour were exhibited.

W. O. Dapping, publisher of the Auburn (N. Y.) Citizen, who took the pictures in Europe last summer, accompanied with a brief and witty lecture, their projection by an official of the Eastman Kodak Company. The pictures shown covered the voyage across the ocean, the trip across France, scenes in Geneva and the Swiss Alps, then took the party through Venice, Florence, Milan, and Rome, thence to Paris and London. Scenes in the latter city had been photographed through a peculiarly London brown fog, with effects rarely seen in motion pictures.

Addresses were made by Wallace A. Odell, Tarrytown (N. Y.) News; C. K. Blandin, St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch; R. C. Snyder, Norwalk (Ohio) Reflector-Herald; and James W. Brown, EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

DEARTH SEEKING SALARY

Wants Pay Witheld During Impeachment Trial—Jury Commissioners Resign

Attorneys for Clarence W. Dearth, judge of the Delaware county, Indiana, Circuit court, who was acquitted recently by the Indiana Senate of impeachment charges alleging suppression of the press and jury fixing, have filed suit in Superior court in Indianapolis to mandate Lewis S. Bowman, state auditor, to pay Dearth the $350 of his salary which was withheld while the impeachment trial was in progress. The suit will very likely soon go to the state Supreme court, where the validity of the 1897 law under which Dearth was prosecuted will then be tested. Judge Dearth will be represented in the action by Frederick VanNuys of Indianapolis and Van L. Ogle and Wilbur Ryman of Muncie, his attorneys in the impeachment trial. T. J. Moll and Ralph Kane have been retained to represent the state.

The jury commissioner at Muncie around whom the charges of jury fixing centered in the impeachment trial, Jacob D. Cavanaugh, and a recently appointed jury commissioner, Charles H. Guthrie, both resigned last week and Dearth has not as yet filled the vacancies.

JOINS SHERMAN DAILY

W. J. White, former editor of the Van Alstyne (Tex.) Leader, has joined the staff of the Sherman Democrat. He was succeeded by J. L. Power of Mineral Wells.

MAJOR C. M. BARNES

Maj. C. M. Barnes, attorney, soldier and writer, former member of the San Antonio Express staff, died recently at the age of 74 in San Antonio. He once served as literary critic for the Chicago Tribune. He was a native of Louisiana. Major Barnes was an organizer of the "Flowers for the Living" club and spent much time in his declining years visiting and cheering the sick and other shut-ins.

NEW DETROIT AGENCY

J. M. Trittenbach, Detroit advertising man, has opened a new agency, to be known as Trittenbach, Inc., at 5057 Woodward Avenue, Maccabee Building. Harold C. Auer, formerly with Rolph C. Spinning, Inc., is associated with Trittenbach in the new agency.

COAST AGENCY MOVES

The Drury Company, San Francisco advertising agency, has removed to larger offices, now being established in the Adam Grant Building, 114 Sansome street.

Promenading In the First 100

Advertising lineage figures for 1926 show The Johnstown Tribune (printing evenings, six days a week) well within the First 100 American newspapers with a record of

Over 12,000,000 Lines

Printing All the News over a period of 75 years — while consistently avoiding the sensational—has brought The Tribune unexcelled reader confidence and trade coverage.

— — that always brings lineage and results from that lineage.

The Johnstown Tribune

National Representatives: Bryant Griffith & Brunson, Inc.

Dealers appreciate pulling Power of the The Times-Picayune—facts

ON THE SOUTH'S GREATEST MARKET

Population, New Orleans estimated by Bureau of Census	425,000
Population, trade area, estimated by Bureau of Census	800,000
Retail outlets, in towns of 1,000 or more in trade area	12,234
Annual valuation, manufactured products, trade area	$195,000,000
Annual valuation, manufactured products, N. O. industrial zone	$300,000,000
Annual valuation, farm products trade area	$86,017,564
Annual valuation, farm property trade area	$212,364,310
Valuation, 1926, New Orleans property	$585,982,065
Passenger traffic to New Orleans daily from 50-mile radius	2,340

NEW ORLEANS, 2nd PORT, U. S. A., EXPORT CENTER FOR LATIN AMERICA

Value of Exports, 1926	$413,792,520
Value of Imports, 1926	$238,805,205
Valuation of Building Permits, New Orleans, 1926	$18,789,434
Debits to Ind. Accounts, N. O. Banks, 1926	$4,130,070,000

THE enthusiastic response of New Orleans dealers to national advertising in The Times-Picayune is a double tribute to the pulling power of the paper and to its Merchandising Department. Manufacturers advertising in the New Orleans market find that with The Times-Picayune behind them their efforts to obtain distribution are minimized. Dealers not only stock Times-Picayune advertised goods liberally but co-operate in every way possible to display the goods and further stimulate sales.

The Merchandising Department of The Times-Picayune, the most comprehensive and, we have reason to believe, the most efficient maintained by any Southern newspaper, is at the service of every advertiser. Its personnel comprises men well versed in modern marketing methods and personally well known to the trade with whom they are in constant contact. The advertiser in The Times-Picayune is not a concessionaire, with only the right to do as best he can within a certain space of its pages. He has adequate and effective help with sales and distribution problems in this market, enabling him to reach the greatest number of consumers with the smallest investment.

* * * *

New Orleans is the South's greatest market. The Times-Picayune is the South's greatest newspaper—preeminent in circulation, daily and Sunday, in reader buying power, in consumer acceptance and dealer confidence, in merchandising service to advertisers.

Your share of the South's first market is ready—come to New Orleans and plan your campaign in The Times-Picayune.

The Times-Picayune

First For The South

Daily 83,904 Sunday 119,308

Member 100,000 Group of American Cities, Inc.

Representatives: Cone, Rothenburg and Noe, Inc. Pacific Coast Representatives: R. J. Bidwell Co.

MEMBER ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

Front-Page Teasers Attract Attention to Classified in Johnstown (Pa.) Democrat—Preparing Program for Denver Convention—Getting Type of Property and Location in Caption

A CLASSIFIED promotion advertisement that clamored to be read appeared recently on page one of the Johnstown (Pa.) Democrat. It is one of a series of front-page teasers the Democrat is using to get its readers to turn back to the classified pages.

This particular copy was written in the form of a playlet in two acts. It was one-column by seven inches. The caption in bold face was "I Love You! Shouted the Youth—How Much? Asked the Girl."

Text of the advertisement, which was illustrated with a pen and ink cartoon of the modern conception of the buggy ride, follows:

(The scene is in the living room of a Johnstown home. The time is 8 p. m. The characters are a beautiful young girl and a handsome young man about town.)

ACT ONE

He: "I love you, darling."
She: "How much?"
He: "All there is."
She: "Then why don't you take me out riding sometime—up to Westmont, out on the Somerset pike or just around town?"
He: "Er, er, darling, I haven't got a car. I can't afford one."
She: "I think that if you would read through The Democrat used car advertisements you would change your mind and find that you could afford one. Until you do that—goodbye."

ACT TWO

(The scene is the Somerset pike. He and she are joyfully speeding away.)

He: "You love me, darling?"
She: "Of course I do, now."
He: "That's fine."
She: "But I want to tell you one thing, young man. If you had not read The Democrat used car advertisements and bought this car—I'd be out with some other fellow tonight."

Moral: Turn to the used car advertisements on the classified page.

CURTAIN

The Democrat Reaches the Buyer First

Preparations for the Denver convention will be made May 8-9 at a meeting of the officers and directors of the Association of Classified Advertising Managers to be held in Baltimore. The Classified managers will meet in Denver in conjunction with the annual convention of the International Advertising Association, June 26-29.

The Baltimore meeting will be under the direction of Charles W. Nax, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and the following are expected to be among those attending:

James Finneran, New York Times; Harold Goldman, New York Sun; C. C. Armstrong, Baltimore News; H. G. Barringer, Indianapolis News; J. H. Butler, Houston Chronicle; H. A. Dryden, Peoria Journal-Transcript; C. T. Hardon, Columbus Dispatch; H. J. Moehlman, Baltimore Sun; C. L. Perkins, Chicago Herald-Examiner; F. L. Pape, Toronto Star, and O. S. Wespe, Louisville Courier-Journal.

The New York Times has changed its classification headings in order to get location as well as the type of property offered into the captions. Thus the old heading, "Houses and Estates" has been changed to read "Houses—Manhattan and Bronx." The same rule applies to lots for sale, offices for rent, etc.

Great success has attended a new venture in classified automobile used car advertising in the Cincinnati Enquirer in which dealers have been induced to use individual advertisements in daily space to sell used cars by individual descriptions. This is new in this territory.

Hitherto the used car dealers confined themselves to the use of Sunday block advertising space in the classified columns. They obtained remarkable results, but when William H. Hershey, classified advertising manager of the Enquirer, started to build up the daily classified section he conceived the idea that used car advertisers could get even better results by advertising their individual cars by descriptions. In the large advertising this was not done but the attention of the public was called to the number of cars to be offered and the model and class of standard makes.

By the use of the individual description of the car the used car dealer had a chance to tell his whole story to the daily reader at the regular daily rate and could take just what space he needed in the individual advertisements gauged on the number of individual cars he desired to advertise. Manager Hershey had little difficulty in convincing used car dealers of the value of the new daily medium and in the first campaign he obtained 45 dealers. The increased business totaled twelve columns.

The Worcester (Mass.) Sunday Telegram for April 17 contained more than 50 columns of classified advertising—more than six full pages—according to a Page 1 box announcement which was run a few days later. "The Telegram has seldom, if ever, printed a greater amount of classified advertising," the announcement stated.

DALE'S SUPREME COURT APPEAL DISMISSED

His Attorney Requests Action When Convinced Case Did Not Come Under Court's Jurisdiction

George R. Dale's appeal to the United States Supreme Court from conviction for contempt of court was dismissed on April 25 at the request of Former Senator Moses E. Clapp, attorney for the Muncie (Ind.) Post-Democrat editor. The attorney said he had carefully examined papers in the case and had concluded that no question was raised within the jurisdiction of the highest court.

Mr. Dale, when informed of the lawyer's action seemed uncertain whether or not he would continue his four-year fight to escape a sentence of 90 days.

Mr. Dale had a controversy with Judge Clarence R. Dearth of the Muncie judicial district and was sentenced to jail. Impeachment proceedings were brought against Judge Dearth and he was acquitted.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER classified columns bring quick results.

The Consolidated Press will be glad to see its friends in Rooms 363-365 at the Waldorf during the Publishers' Convention

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

"Reg'lar Fellows" by Gene Byrnes Under Herald Tribune Syndicate Beginning June 1—Covarrubias Signs with United Features—Miss Wills to Sail for England May 15

BEGINNING June 1, "Reg'lar Fellers", daily and Sunday comic will be handled entirely by the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate, which formerly only placed the Sunday pages.

Before sailing for France last Saturday, Miquel Covarrubias, whose caricatures in Vanity Fair, the New Yorker, and elswhere have brought him into mounting vogue, signed a contract with United Features, it was announced this week by Howard Wheeler, vice-president of the syndicate.

Covarrubias will supply a Sunday art feature under the title line "——And Other Famous Americans." The contract with Covarrubias adds another important name to the list that has been acquired by United Features during the past year, including those of Sir Philip Gibbs, Norman Hapgood, Anne Nichols, Blasco Ibanez, Viola Paris and Vida Hurst.

Many publishers attended the reception and afternoon tea held Tuesday in the Green Room of the Waldorf-Astoria by the United Feature Syndicate in honor of Miss Elsie Nichols, leading lady of the New York cast of Abie's Irish Rose, who is going to pose for the pictures to illustrate the serial and strip of the play which the syndicate is preparing. Miss Nichols is the sister of Ann Nichols, the playright. Also an honor guest at the tea was Miss Hope Hampton, moving picture actress. Howard Wheeler, manager of the syndicate, introduced the publishers.

A private showing of the new moving picture featuring Babe Ruth entitled "The Babe Comes Home" was given for publishers attending the New York conventions on Wednesday of this week, by the Christy Walsh Syndicate, which distributes the daily and weekly articles signed by the "Home Run King."

Miss Helen Wills, who draws tennis for the newspapers, as well as plays the game, will sail for England May 15 to train for the Wimbeldon tournament in June. She will spend a week in New York before sailing.

Edgar A. Guest, newspaper poet, spoke before the Business and Professional Women's Club of Worcester, Mass., April 28.

HUGE PAPER CONTRACT

Willamette Company Gets Hearst Order Covering Ten Years' Supply

What is hailed as the largest paper purchase contract ever made, exceeding $150,000,000 in total amount, has been signed by William Randolph Hearst and the Crown Willamette Paper company, according to A. B. Martin, vice-president of the paper manufacturing concern.

The agreement covers a ten years' supply of paper for the Hearst publications on the Pacific Coast.

The Crown Willamette company has large timber holdings and several manufacturing plants in the Pacific Northwest and a distributing organization in San Francisco.

TEXAS PUBLISHER DIES

C. E. Everet, 61, for the past six years publisher of the Corpus Christi (Tex.) Times, died of heart trouble at Mineral Wells, Tex., recently.

Announcing

A FOREMOST STEP FORWARD IN DRY MAT COLD STEREOTYPING

THE GADDEN DRY MAT MOISTENER

A precision machine which moistens the backs of the mats evenly, with a uniformity not otherwise possible, at the rate of two mats a minute.

Mats moistened with this machine assure sharp, even, deep molds, uniform shrinkage, and uniformly good printing plates.

Gadden moisteners are now in daily use at

Los Angeles Times
Los Angeles Express
New York World
Philadelphia Public Ledger
Editors' Feature Service
NEA Service, Inc., New York Office
NEA Service, Inc., Cleveland Office

Recommended and endorsed by leading mat manufacturers

Shaw Machine and Tool Co.

1151 Temple Street Los Angeles, Calif.

Steady Growth

DURING the year 1926 the Evening Post published the largest volume of advertising in its history. For the first three months of this year there has been a steady gain over the volume of advertising of last year.

Dry Goods. The Evening Post was one of two New York newspapers to gain in the dry goods classification in the month of March. The increase was 33,158 lines.

Automobiles. From January 1 to April 1, 1927, the Evening Post was the only newspaper in New York but one to gain in automotive advertising, an increase of 33,359 lines. While all other newspapers but one were showing loss in this classification the Evening Post made steady gains. Last year was the best year in automotive advertising in its history.

Financial. While other New York newspapers are fluctuating between gains and losses the Evening Post continues to increase in volume and representation in its financial advertising. The first three months of 1927 are its greatest in financial advertising volume.

Circulation. The Government Report published April 1st for the six months ending March 31, 1927, certifies that the average daily circulation of the Evening Post was 51,757. The average daily circulation for the month of March was 54,879.

This forward swing in circulation and advertising is due to the editorial direction of the Evening Post. Reliable information and able and entertaining news presentation mark the effort of Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis to make the Evening Post a conspicuous example of modern journalism.

New York Evening Post

75 West Street, New York

NOW 3c

Saturdays 5c

NOYES FIGHTS AGAIN WARS OF NINETIES

(Continued from page 12)

would, free to feed us news with what bias he desires, free to decide whether the news shall have a capitalistic bias or a proletarian sympathy, free to favor in news treatment the Republican or the Democratic side?

"Would any member of the Associated Press today regard it as thinkable that even if a majority of the members of the organization wished a report impregnated with bias in favor or against any measure, or any party, or any church or any man that the Associated Press would or should or could furnish such a report?

"I answer these questions for you. It is unthinkable and would call down on the general manager the riotous condemnation of every member of the Associated Press. And yet it was just such an unrestrained control that faced the newspapers in 1893, menacing us all and bidding us to be on our guard through all time.

"And what has been the success of our co-operative effort?

"Has it spread to other countries? I am glad to answer that it has and markedly. Our sister, Canada, first adopted it, taking our organization as its model. Great Britain followed, though not as yet completely, as some of the larger London newspapers remain outside the fold, though working amicably with the Press Association which has secured control of Reuter's, Sir Roderick Jones of Reuter's continuing as the controlling Director of the enlarged Press Association. Sir Roderick has many times told me that the plan and operation of the Associated Press has filled him with a desire and an ambition to have as his monument a British mutual institution adapted to British needs but with the aims and purposes of the Associated Press.

"In Australia and New Zealand mutual press associations thrive.

"In Japan, the Kokusai Agency has been taken over by the great newspapers of Japan—and they have very great and prosperous newspapers there. It has ceased to be a simply commerical enterprise and has become a mutual and co-operative concern under the name of the Nippon Shimbun Rengo, which in English means the Associated Press of Japan, and under the management of Mr. Iwanaga, previously the head of the Kokusai Agency and a long-time friend and ally of ours.

"And how has the Associated Press succeeded as to gaining new members and retaining old ones?

"It must be remembered that the Associated Press has never operated on the theory of the open door so far as membership is concerned. In the Illinois organization a considerable number of the members had a right to veto, forbidding the admission of new members in a prescribed territory without the consent of the veto holding members. These veto rights appear in the present organization in the form of rights of protest by which the holder may insist upon a vote by the full membership rather than by the board of directors. Only the veto-holders of the Illinois organization now hold protest rights as no new rights have been granted since 1900 and the old rights have been much modified by individual voluntary waivers.

"Where no protest rights appear the board of directors has the power to elect but it has been no part of the theory or the practice of the board to add members in local fields already represented in our membership and hundreds of applications in fields already represented in membership have consequently been refused—the exception being when for some especial reason it seemed clear that the general interest demanded an election, and these exceptions in twenty-seven years have been so rare as to be countable on the fingers of the two hands.

"Understanding then that we do not measure our progress by growth in number of membes, I may say that the membership in 1893 was approximately 300 and this had grown so that the present organization started in 1900 with something over 500 and the membership today is 1,222, not many more than at this time last year but still a little more.

"While making this steady growth from year to year, we have also from time to time lost minor newspapers to privately owned competitors usually because of some alluringly low price offer for news service, but these have been inconsequential.

"What is really significant, and enormously significant, as I see it, is that so far as I can remember, in more than 30 years, never has any newspaper that you or I would regard as of any importance whatever left the Associated Press, save only those which have been recently bought, lock, stock and barrel, for the Scripps-Howard chain, the owners of which are also the owners of the United Press and who are not in sympathy with the co-operative spirit that requires members of the Associated Press to supply their local news to the other members and to them alone.

"And now I am back again where I started and am thinking once more of the crowding years that impelled the directors to invite me to make this review of the past.

"It would be hard for me, without pathos, to even indicate to you how much the Associated Press has meant to me during the long years of my connection with it.

"Its honor, its integrity, its purity have been nearer to me and dearer to me than I care to try to say.

"In the work that I have been privileged by your confidence to do for it, I have found my greatest satisfaction and pride and I hope that in the coming years you of a younger generation will regard the Associated Press in as vital an aspect as it has appeared to me."

"The thirty-five years that have been described by President Noyes have seen the greatest changes in the history of the newspaper business," said Gov. Allen. "It was not a large world 35 years ago. Then we had no carburetors, no speedometers, no horseless carriages, no radio. If Gen. Harboard at that time wanted to send a message he rode a horse, or if the distance was not too great he walked. Hollywood was unknown. Arrangements had not even been made for the birth of the Dolly Sisters. New York then was further from San Francisco than it is today from Hong Kong. The past thirty-five years have demonstrated that apparently there are no limitations upon the power of man in the conquest of the physical world.

"New York is only a minute distant from all parts of the world today and this instantaneousness of present civilization is a challenge to all newspaper editors, a challenge which has been well met by the Associated Press.

"The A. P. is the mightiest doorstep in the world, and on it wait for the seal of A. P. approval the great of the world—soldiers, statesmen, and all of those who would benefit by having the truth told as they want it told. The A. P. has kept to the standards named by Mr. Noyes, standards difficult to define, yet ever present and tangible, and it stands with a clean record after 35 years. It was never stronger than it is today."

PLANNING LABOR WEEKLY

The Carolina Digest, Charlotte's newly projected labor organ, will make its initial appearance April 29, according to plans of the publishers. Morris A. Bealle, of Washington, D. C., will be the editor and publisher, and will begin selecting his staff at once. An office has been engaged in the Robinson building. The new organ, which will be issued every Friday, has been endorsed unanimously by the Charlotte Central Labor Union.

40 YEARS WITH DAILY

F. A. Miller, publisher of the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune will celebrate the 40th anniversary of his connection with the newspaper this coming July 1.

John Baker of Ithaca (N. Y.) Journal News receives a friendly light from friend Chauncey Stout, of Plainfield (N. J.) Courier News

60 YEARS IN ADVERTISING

W. P. Nightingale of Boston Globe Started as Office Boy

William P. Nightingale recently observed the 60th anniversary of his entrance into advertising work in Boston. During the Civil War, Mr. Nightingale was a newsboy. On April 1, 1867, Maj. Charles O. Rogers, then publisher of the Boston Journal, offered Nightingale a job in the counting room of that newspaper. He went to work as an office boy. Then he was assistant cashier. His health failed and he was about to resign but Col. W. W. Clapp insisted that he take charge of the advertising department. There was no advertising manager in those days and for several years Nightingale did all the work. Later he was given several assistants.

After 42 years with the Journal, Mr. Nightingale went to other papers for five years only to return to his old love, the Journal, in 1913. Later he went to the Boston Globe, with which paper he is now affiliated. He is married and has one daughter.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER classified advertisements plough the broad fields of journalism and yield good crops.

THE PASSAIC DAILY HERALD

PASSAIC, N. J.

Passaic's Leading Newspaper

Has an average daily circulation for the past six months, ending March 31st, 1927 of 15,059 per day.

This is the largest circulation ever attained by a Passaic newspaper.

THE PASSAIC DAILY HERALD

Leads the Other Paper by 988 per day.

The Herald leads in quality and quantity circulation. It also has the largest City Circulation.

The Herald leads in the larger suburban communities including Clifton, Garfield, Lodi, and Wallington.

Edward H. Roemle, Ass't Gen. Pub.; and Gen. Mgr.

Charles W. Delaney, Advertising Manager

Magazine Section

Bowling News

Health

Turf News

Real Estate News

Today's Radio Program

Photoplays

Musicals

Suggestions for Girls

BOOKS

Engagements

A Typeface for Every Need

EVERY appeal that enters into the effective advertisement can be expressed in a distinctive manner with Ludlow quality typefaces. Ruggedness, daintiness, refinement, dependability, formality, strength, exclusiveness, style, etc., are exactly portrayed by the correct use of always-new Ludlow typefaces.

With the full assurance that these typefaces can be renewed quickly and easily as often as desired, the Ludlow-equipped newspaper can select its departmental headings from appropriate typestyles and sizes, including the most delicate faces. Liberal use can be made of the graceful italics and of the sweeping swashes without regard to their fragility because, without injury, the most delicate faces shown in the headings on this page will withstand the severe pressure of the dry mat roller.

Always Fresh and Attractive

This freedom of choice and use of any style and size of face—made possible by an unlimited supply of new Ludlow typeslugs, always instantly available as needed—enables the newspaper to keep its pages fresh and attractive.

[At the will of the compositor, any Ludlow equipped with the new Ludlow delivery slide can readily produce any size face up to full-width 72 point, and even as large as 84 point. These are cast in sluglines, exactly as the smaller sizes of Ludlow typeslugs are cast, and delivered to the tray at the front of the caster without machine or mold changes.]

With its ever-widening assortment of distinctive typefaces that add snap and sparkle to ads and heads, the Ludlow is proving a valuable asset in the plants of leading newspapers, whether large, medium-size or small. Let us explain fully how it will prove a profitable investment in your plant.

Ludlow Typograph Co.

2032 Clybourn Avenue, Chicago

Boston: Harbor Bldg., 470 Atlantic Ave.
New York: World Bldg., 63 Park Row
Atlanta: Palmer Bldg., 41 Marietta St.
San Francisco: Hearst Bldg., 5 Third St.

LUDLOW QUALITY SLUG COMPOSITION

Personals

Fashions of the Day

Financial

Movies

Religious Activities

Automotive Talks

Theatrical News

Shipping

The Book Review

Fashion Notes

Women's Clubs

A. P. MEMBERSHIP NOW 1,228

(Continued from page 14)

low percentage of disappointments, is credited with a large number of unusual examples of ingenuity in developing interesting matter which is not confined precisely to spontaneous happenings. This has been done without encroaching upon the more important general news, the careful reporting of which always has been and shall continue to be the supreme effort of the staff.

With this conception of the real mission of the Associated Press ever in mind the staff has endeavored to present the elements of every important news development comprehensively and understandingly. The members have recorded their satisfaction with the adherence to this policy and have emphasized their appreciation of the inclusion of interesting matter not confined precisely to reports of spontaneous happenings.

There were some eight Associated Press interviews during 1926 which, as they appeared, constituted the biggest news of the day. In the interviews with interesting people in the sporting world the plan was to recognize the non-professionals. The series began with an interview with Bobby Jones, golf champion, who, through O. B. Keeler of the Atlanta Journal, gave the Associated Press his first, and what he said probably would be his last, interview. There followed Glenna Collett, then women's golf champion, Helen Wills, Suzanne Lenglen and William Tilden of tennis fame.

In other fields there were the interviews with Premier Mussolini, not forgetting that through the Associated Press President Coolidge in his own words gave an intimate outline of life as he lives it, as well as thoughts upon intimate problems of family and the home. All of these interviews were obtained in direct response from the Associated Press to the individuals interviewed. One of the Mussolini interviews was written by Robert H. Davis of the New York Sun. Bruce Barton reported what the President said. All of the others were written by regular members of the staff.

Outstanding news reporting achievements by various members of the staff are indicated as follows:

The hurricane damage at Nassau, Bahama Islands, was reported by R. P. Mitchell of the Florida staff after making an airplane trip to Nassau.

The tax legislation story of Dec. 13 was written by Walter W. Chamblin, Jr., of the Washington bureau.

The Armistice Day story by D. H. Oliver of the Washington bureau.

The story of the obsequies for former Speaker Cannon by G. D. Seymour of the Chicago staff.

Helen Wills and Glenna Collett interviews by Miss Ethel M. Halsey of the New York Staff.

William T. Tilden and Walter Hagen interviews by Alan J. Gould of the New York staff.

Suzanne Lenglen interview by Thomas T. Topping of the Paris bureau. Topping also did the story of the departure of French convict ship to Devil's Island, and from Damascus he wrote the story of what was happening to that most ancient city of the world.

Elmer Roberts of the Paris bureau visited Doorn and wrote the Kaiser's life in exile.

Mussolini interview by Percy Winner of the Rome bureau.

George Bernard Shaw interview by J. P. Howe of the London bureau.

The Yerkes Observatory astronomers' opinion of Mars reported by Charles E. Honce of the Chicago staff.

Martin J. Durkin's entrance to half a century's penal service reported by Fred Dye of the Chicago staff.

Eugene V. Debs's death reported by W. T. Brown of the Indianapolis staff.

Finding of Runic inscriptions within city limits of Spokane reported by Wilbur A. Sanders of Spokane staff.

Williams court-martial at San Diego reported by Oscar E. Werner of the Los Angeles staff.

London Armistice Day story reported by Bates Raney of the London bureau. Raney also wrote London child composer Christmas carol dispatch.

The word picture of Mexican religious emotion, also Tarahumare Indian 100-kilometer race, reported by Clarence DuBose of the Mexico City bureau.

Interviews with King Ferdinand and Queen Marie of Rumania and with Queen Marie of Yugoslavia by James A. Mills of the Moscow bureau.

The traditional loyalty and enterprise of the entire staff have been evidenced by the work which each individual has to his record. In the nature of things, each cannot have had, in the ordinary work of reporting the news of the world, exceptional opportunities to report outstanding incidents. Emphasis, therefore, must be put upon the work of the staff as a unit, and the management believes the members will join it in the opinion that the superiority of the report has been maintained.

On behalf of the entire staff keen appreciation is expressed to the members of the Associated Press for their obviously greater interest in and activity toward the development of the work of the association. The entire staff found this greater interest and loyalty of the members of the Associated Press an inspiration during the year.

U. P. BUREAU MEN AT ANNIVERSARY DINNER

Washington, Albany and Philadelphia Men Brought to New York— "Old Timers" Visit Headquarters Office

United Press men, past and present, from all parts of the country gathered in New York this week for the twentieth anniversary of that organization.

In some respects the occasion was like a "home-coming week." Men who were in the ranks of the United Press in "the old days" joined with newer staff members, and with veterans of many years, in celebrating the twentieth birthday of the U. P.

Among the former staff men around U. P. headquarters in the Waldorf this week, and at its general offices in the World Building, were Perry Arnold, who was news manager in the early days of the war; W. G. Shepherd, war correspondent; Harold D. Jacobs, now editor of the Baltimore Daily Post; John Gleissner, now editor of the Washington Daily News; Rodney Dutcher, now with N. E. A. in Washington; J. E. Nevin; Lowell Mellett, now head of the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance; and William Philip Sims, whose stories from the front during the war were a conspicuous feature of the United Press report.

It was impossible for the United Press to bring in a great many of its news men from throughout the country because the news machine must continue functioning, but the nearby bureaus sent representatives. It is the idea of Robert J. Bender, general news manager, to bring in a selected group of news department men on the occasion of each A. N. P. A. convention in the future. Among news men attending the twentieth U. P. anniversary were Carl D. Groat, manager of the Washington bureau, Percy B. Scott, manager Albany bureau, C. G. Morand, manager Philadelphia bureau, Ed. C. Derr, manager of the Central Division, Raymond Clapper, Dr. Mathis, Ludwell Denny and Paul R. Mallon of the Washington bureau.

Business office men attending the anniversary dinner included Gilbert M. Clayton, assistant business manager from Chicago; Frank H. Bartholomew, San Francisco; Charles B. McCabe, Columbus; H. W. Sharpe, Kansas City; K. O. Gilmore, Atlanta; Otis P. Swift, Boston; M. F. Bourjaily, New Haven and Tom W. Gerber.

DAILY PAYS TRIBUTE TO AVERAGE REPORTER

Brightness of His Work Not Obscured by Output of "Trained Seals" at Snyder Trial, Says Editorial

An editorial heralding the day-in, day-out reporter as victor over the highly exploited "experts" covering outstanding murder trials was given prominence in the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press last week with the announcement of the roster of noted personages working at the Snyder trial court.

The editorial, a tribute to the "ordinary reporter," said:

"Not because there are a plethora of murder trials crowded into the story of the day just now are the sensation-seeking makers of newspapers employing others than reporters to cover the proceedings. Preachers, ex-chorus girls, evangelists, writers of philosophy, dramatists, movie directors and novelists, crowd the press section in the court room, and attract the attention of the spectators, while the reporter is dwarfed to the vanishing point.

"And here again, the old story is repeated. Just as in the army where the men with the titles and bars across the chest, men with the aides, and the desks and the real beds to sleep in got popular attention, while the doughboy with a young cannon strapped across his back, and meals served when convenient, and a bunk under the broad and sometimes starry sky, did the work, so in this business of telling the story of what happened at a murder trial, there are preachers, et al., present, and the hard-boiled, anonymous reporter does the work.

"And how does he stand with this influx of 'non-union' labor engaged in reporting murder trials? Great! In the first place, he doesn't care if these outsiders do break in, except, that they rather clutter up the place and get in the way when one wants to make a dash to the telephone. He isn't anxious because his 'story' is placed alongside that of a D.D. or an LL.D., making a comparison easy. Just the same, his stories suffer not at all from the parallel columns; on the contrary, they shine in their lively simplicity against the background of drab mediocrity.

"Every man to his trade, and the reporter scores again."

TROY PAPER SOLD

The Sunday Budget, oldest newspaper at Troy, N. Y., has been purchased by the Troy Observer Publishing Company, publishers of the Sunday Observer. The Observer is being published under the name of the Troy Observer and the Sunday Budget. Former Senator Michael F. Collins is the owner of the Observer. The Budget was founded in 1797 as a weekly and, except for a brief period of interruption prior to the Civil war, has since been continuously published. The Observer was established in 1876. Mr. Collins is associated in the newspaper enterprise with his three sons, Frank M., J. Edward and Eugene R. Collins.

1893 1927

34 Years of Service! to Publishers

WE have consistently and persistently for 34 years exploited the advantages of newspaper advertising to the national advertiser and advertising agent. The benefit of these long years of service and experience are at the disposal of newspaper publishers, as well as national advertisers and agencies.

BENJAMIN & KENTNOR CO.

Advertising Representatives of Newspapers

Harry D. Reynolds, President; John T. Fitzgerald, Vice-President

2 West 45th St. NEW YORK
1524 Chestnut St. PHILADELPHIA
900 Mallers Bldg. CHICAGO
401 Van Nuys Bldg. LOS ANGELES
58 Sutter St. SAN FRANCISCO

"The Longer We Live, The More We Know" interesting figures

347,747

Present Population of Louisville as shown by the New Caron Directory, just off the press—A gain of 12,656 over the same date one year ago!

155,125

Daily Circulation of the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times as shown by Postoffice statement for the six month period ending March 31, 1927, 155,125 a gain of 15,689 over the same date one year ago!

130,513

Sunday Circulation of The Courier-Journal as shown by Postoffice statement for the six months period ending March 31, 1927, 130,513 a gain of 17,663 over the same date one year ago!

Everybody in Louisville reads The Courier-Journal and Times, and have for years, but as long as Louisville continues to grow like this, so will these progressive, aggressive newspapers.

The Courier-Journal

THE LOUISVILLE TIMES

LOUISVILLE'S Only MORNING NEWSPAPER

Louisville's Biggest and Best Afternoon Newspaper

REPRESENTED NATIONALLY BY THE S. C. BECKWITH SPECIAL AGENCY

Member of the 100,000 Group of American Cities

PUFFERY MENACE TO ADVERTISING

(Continued from page 16)

position makes it possible for you to furnish figures and facts that cannot be obtained from any other source. It is also much more satisfactory for an advertiser to deal with a joint organization representing all of the 2,000 daily English language newspapers."

Verne Burnett of the General Motors Corporation, having remarked in a speech that "national advertisers have been impressed by the constructive work being done by the newspapers to show that newspaper advertising is effective," added in a letter to the Bureau:

"In making the statement, I had in mind the progressiveness and effectiveness of the Bureau of Advertising."

In order to furnish an intimate picture of what bureau solicitations have meant, your Committee submitted to all members an analysis of the advertising carried by an average prosperous newspaper, showed in detail the accounts on which the Bureau had worked and gave a summary of the service rendered in each individual case.

In his letter submitting this analysis, the Chairman of your Committee said:

"The Bureau has stuck consistently to its job of pure promotion. It does not sell advertising for selected lists. It works for all newspapers—big and little. It is helping advertisers use the medium of newspaper advertising with success. It is helping to correct advertising failures. It is called in to save a newspaper account just as often as it endeavors to develop a new one. It has the respect of advertisers and agencies alike and its offices are the headquarters for all information on the subject of newspaper advertising. Its books are regarded as textbooks.

"Its work does not conflict with or duplicate the efforts of any other organization in the field, because its work is different from that of any other organization. In a word, it is selling the idea of the newspaper as a great advertising medium, leaving to the other factors in the field the job of selling the actual space in newspapers."

The Bureau's research work was pushed forward aggressively in many new directions. Demands for information from advertisers and agencies have necessitated further enlargement of this department and its operations have added materially to the Bureau's reputation and influence.

It is interesting to note how constantly Bureau figures, statements and expressions are utilized and quoted as textbook material.

The Bureau acted as a pioneer in estimating the amounts spent in newspapers by national advertisers, first attempting this project in 1924. It was able this year to announce estimates covering the expenditures of 329 national advertisers as compared with a list of 240 compiled in 1925.

This activity, in connection with a system of analyzing advertising figures from the membership month by month, has placed the Bureau in a position to measure a heretofore unknown quantity, also to gauge comprehensively the trend of national advertising.

Surveys made by the Bureau with the aid of the membership included inquiries into many lines of industry. More than 50 memorandums were prepared by the research department at the request of advertisers or agents covering subjects among which the following may be mentioned: beverages, foods, tobacco, candy, curtain rods, building materials, fish, toilet goods, electrical refrigeration, finance, milk, fresh fruit, furnaces, motion pictures, office equipment, oil burners, railroads, cleansers, radio, co-operative advertising, sampling, washing machines, shoes.

Studies of copy and illustration as shown in Bureau books have widened its sphere of activities. The Bureau is often asked for opinions upon the printability or general typographical effectiveness of newspaper copy. Its latest book on that subject produced more than a thousand letters of acknowledgement. A number of associations have distributed this book to their membership. Distribution of the book among schools and universities for the use of advertising classes is now being successfully carried forward.

The Bureau's bulletin service has been improved by the addition of a monthly bulletin in which some of the work of the research department is made available for the membership. This bulletin has been enthusiastically received, many members finding material in it which they have been able to use successfully in promoting advertising.

Members of the Bureau staff filled a number of speaking engagements during the year.

The Bureau prepared a Newspaper Day address at the invitation of the International Advertising Association in connection with Franklin's birthday. More than 150 advertising clubs observed this event and the Bureau's address was used on scores of programs.

Your Committee again draws attention to the fact that inasmuch as all newspapers profit by the work of the Bureau, all newspapers are financially interested in its welfare. To those newspapers not now members of the Bureau but who continue to reap benefits from its work, your Committee suggests membership in the organization as a sound investment. The Bureau covers a surprisingly large portion of the advertising field, but with its present equipment cannot cover it all. Your Committee knows how the Bureau can spend additional funds to great advantage in the promotion and conserving of further newspaper advertising. Every dollar coming from new memberships will be devoted to that end.

The Bureau continues to live within its income and to enjoy sound financial condition. Plans for increasing its efficiency, particularly in the direction of research, will require added funds which the Bureau expects to obtain from new memberships.

Your Committee once more asks the co-operation of the Association to devise some method by which all members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association will participate in the support of the Bureau as they now unquestionably participate in its benefits.

Your Committee again draws attention to an obstacle in the way of developing certain types of newspaper advertising—namely, free publicity. The continued willingness of editors to give free space to advertisers who employ press agents has paved the way for actual competition between the press agent and the advertising solicitor. Advertisers, particularly associations advertising certain industries, are constantly approached by press agents who tell them they are unwise to spend money on legitimate newspaper advertising when they can obtain at the cost of a press agent's fee news column publication of promotional material. Frequently these representations lead the advertiser to buy advertising in mediums other than newspapers and to employ a press agent to raid the columns of the dailies.

References have already been made to the wide circulation of advertising Bureau books.

The first new book of the fiscal year was "The Market and the Medium," issued after the last convention in an edition of 6,500 copies. This book has proved useful largely because of its discussion of the new buying power represented by newspaper circulation.

The book, "Good Copy," published in February, 1927, dealt wholly with modern examples of copy presentation and new techniques. The first edition of 10,000 copies has been nearly exhausted and a second edition may follow.

The Bureau's estimates of newspaper expenditures have been put into booklet form for distribution. A pamphlet has also been made of these estimates considered from the standpoint of industry groups and compared with similar figures covering expenditures of the same advertisers in previous years.

To obtain promotional copy for the use of the membership, the Bureau conducted a prize contest. A quantity of interesting material was contributed by the contestants and the first series of prize winning advertisements is now in the hands of the membership for release.

A book on community advertising is in the course of preparation and it is planned to compile a similar book on financial advertising.

Preliminary arrangements have been made for a work on market analysis and kindred subjects which it is planned to make the most comprehensive of any book yet undertaken by the Bureau. It is hoped to issue this book some time next year.

The President at the 1926 Convention, appointed the following to constitute your Committee:

Chas. D. Atkinson, Atlanta Journal; Frank H. Burgess, La Crosse Tribune; Harry Chandler, Los Angeles Times; Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune; William J. Hofmann, Portland Oregonian; F. I. Ker, Hamilton Spectator; John S. McCarrens, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Fleming Newbold, Washington Star; E. W. Parsons, Chicago Tribune; David B. Plum, Troy Record; William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript; Allison Stone, Providence Journal; Walter A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; D. E. Town, Hearst Newspapers; Louis Wiley, New York Times.

Your Committee organized April 22, 1926, by electing William F. Rogers, chairman; Harry Chandler, vice-chairman; Howard Davis, treasurer, and David B. Plum, chairman of the Finance Committee, with Louis Wiley associate member.

M. P. Linn succeeded Joseph F. Finley as advisory member of the Committee representing the Six Point League of New York, and George A. Noee was chosen to succeed John J. McConnell as advisory member, representing the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago. Your Committee continued as appointed until February of this year, when Mr. Parsons tendered his resignation.

Beside the organization meeting, the Committee held a meeting at the Chicago offices on Oct. 20.

The Chairman and individual members of the Committee kept in frequent touch with executives of the organization.

At the close of the fiscal year, there were 366 newspapers members of the Bureau, the same number shown at the beginning of the year.

Figures for the fiscal year showed a total gross income of $99,318.30 and a total expense of $97,870.72.

The Bureau's books were audited quarterly by Howard Greenman, C.P.A.

The annual dinner at the Waldorf Astoria on April 22 was the fifth held under Bureau auspices. Covers were laid for 920 persons. The program was in charge of a committee of which E. W. Parsons was chairman.

Mr. Rogers, Chairman of the Committee in Charge, called the dinner to order and introduced S. E. Thomason, retiring president of the A. N. P. A., who acted as toastmaster. The speakers included Sir Charles Higham of London, Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Col. Theodore Roosevelt and Will Rogers.

Your Committee expresses its thanks to the officers and staff of the A. N. P. A. for their cordial co-operation. Similarly it acknowledges the courtesies of the Six Point League of New York and the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago. Its thanks are also due the newspaper and advertising trade press for the interest displayed in the Bureau's work.

The continued support and confidence of the membership is particularly gratifying to your Committee, the members of which formally record herewith their hearty appreciation of the spirit of unselfish co-operation which makes this important work possible.

A Potential Market

In Northern Wisconsin
With a Population
of 200,000
Adjacent to Superior Reached Daily Only By The Superior Telegram

The Home Newspaper of North Wisconsin

Represented by Weaver, Stewart Company
New York Chicago

Constantly Growing Prestige is Responsible for

The Highest Sustained Average Circulation

In the History of

THE ST. LOUIS STAR

On October 1, 1926, The St. Louis Star's sworn circulation statement to the United States government was the highest ever achieved by this newspaper. The daily NET PAID circulation for the six months preceding October 1, was

117,022

That record is now broken by the sworn circulation statement for April 1, 1927, which reveals that for the six months since last October 1, the daily net paid circulation of The Star has grown to

120,962

The daily net paid circulation for the month of March alone was far ahead of the average for the whole six months' period reaching a net paid average daily of

125,532

The St. Louis Star is proud of these figures, but is far prouder of the growing esteem in which it is held by St. Louisans

THE ST. LOUIS STAR

Nothing Counts but RESULTS!

M. KOENIGSBURG HOST TO 500

(Continued from page 21)

Times; A. E. Sansoucy, Ogdensbrug, N. Y., Journal; A. B. Parker, Watertown, N. Y., Standard; L. S. Chubbuck, Watertown, N. Y., Standard; D. Hiden Ramsey, Ashville, N. C. Times.

Royal W. Weller, Allentown, Pa., Call; C. J. Smith, Allentown, Pa., Call; P. W. Leisenring, Allentown, Pa., Call; Clarence J. Pyle, Wilmington, Del., Journal; George Carter, Wilmington, Del., Journal; J. B. Sherrill, Concord, N. C., Tribune; J. L. Horne, Jr., Rocky Mount, N. C., Telegram; C. C. Bellamy, Wilmington, N. C., News Dispatch.

Fred L. Rentz, Newcastle, Pa., News; Paul C. Siddall, Alliance, Ohio, Review; Gordon K. Bush, Athens, Ohio, Messenger; Major Theodore Arter, Jr., Altoona, Pa., Times; Herbert D. Brauff, Altoona, Pa., Times Tribune; R. P. Habgood, Bradford, Pa., Star Record; Charles R. Long, Chester, Pa., Times; F. A. Hoiler, Alliance, Ohio, Review.

J. J. Devine, Devine-Wallis Corp., New York City; W. L. Mengert, Huntington, W. Va., Herald Dispatch; Dave Gideon, Huntington, W. Va., Herald Dispatch; Joseph B. Finan, Cumberland, Md., Times; W. E. Chilton, Jr., Charleston, W. Va., Gazette; W. E. Chilton, Sr., Charleston, W. Va., Gazette; Robert L. Smith, Charleston, W. Va., Gazette; M. G. Fitzpatrick, Olean, N. Y., Times.

R. E. Lent, Passaic, N. J., News; Harry B. Haines, Paterson, N. J., News; Lynn J. Arnold, Jr., Albany, N. Y., Knickerbocker Press; Arthur D. Hecox, Albany, N. Y., Knickerbocker Press; John J. Connors, Albany, N. Y., Knickerbocker Press; R. E. Bennett, Binghamton, N. Y., Press and Leader; Joseph Ruskiewicz, Buffalo, N. Y., Everybody's Daily; Alexander Ruskiewicz, Buffalo, N. Y., Everybody's Daily.

H. E. Ellis, Denison, Tex., Herald; Will C. Edwards, Denton, Tex., Record-Chronicle; Houston Harte, San Angelo, Tex., standard; J. L. Mapes, Beaumont, Tex., Enterprise; M. E. Foster, Houston, Tex., Press; W. Guy Tetrick, Clarksburg, W. Va., Exponent; M. Nachman, Clarksburg, W. Va., Telegram; B. C. Dow, Sioux Falls, S. D., Argus-Leader.

H. H. Bellaman, Columbia, S. C., Record; Roger H. Peace, Greenville, S. C., Daily News; Herbert A. Smith, St. Johnsbury, Vt., Caledonian Record; Munsey Slack, Bristol, Tenn.-Va., Herald Courier; C. J. Harkrader, Bristol, Tenn.-Va., Herald Courier; Thomas H. Pratt, Pulaski, Va., Times; N. R. Hamilton, Portsmouth, Va., Star; Bert H. Anderson, Charleston, W. Va., Mail.

J. Monroe Boyer, Morgantown, W. V., Post; James C. Herbert, Morgantown, W. V., Post; Edward McGrail, Parkersburg, W. Va., News; Emery A. O'Dell, Monroe, Wis., Times; Morgan Murphy, Superior, Wis., Telegram; D. S. Elias, Ashville, N. C., Times; J. D. Barnum, Syracuse, N. Y., Post-Standard; W. T. Anderson, Macon, Ga., Telegraph.

D. E. Dixon, Jamaica, L. I., Press; LeRoy L. Smith, Long Island City, N. Y. Star; T. Harold Forbes, New Rochelle, Standard Star; James E. Stiles, Rockville Centre, N. Y., Review; Oscar C. Rox, Rockville Centre, N. Y., Review; Walter V. Hogan, White Plains, N. Y., Reporter; W. Lee Tuller, White Plains, N. Y., Reporter; Earl D. Tobey, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sunday Courier.

James H. Skewes, Meridian, Miss., Star; E. L. Sparks, Hannibal, Mo., Courier Post; J. B. Jeffries, Hannibal, Mo., Courier Post; James Todd, Maryville, Mo., Democrat-Tribune; John H. Muehling, Manchester, N. H., Union-Leader; Frank H. Burgess, La Crosse, Wis., Tribune and Leader; Fred B. Stuart, Middletown, N. Y. Times Press; Harry Goodwin, Bronx, N. Y., Home News.

C. C. Cahn, Jr., Attleboro, Mass., Sun; J. H. Vallette, Attleboro, Mass., Sun; W. Y. Morgan, Hutchinson, Kan., News; William G. Spence, Lowell, Mass.; Courier-Citizen; D. B. Miller, Pittsfield, Mass., Berkshire Eagle; William H. Reed, Taunton, Mass., Gazette; A. L. Miller, Battle Creek, Mich., Enquirer and News; Birney Imes, Columbus, Miss., Commercial Dispatch.

P. H. Baldwin, Newark, N. J., Call; Arthur Sinnott, Newark, N. J., News; J. D. Gessford, Newark, N. J., Freie Zeitung; Edward H. Roemie, Passaic, N. J., Daily Herald; William B. McBride, Passaic, N. J., Daily Herald; Frank D. Schroth, Trenton, N. J., Times; F. A. Hoyt, Beacon, N. Y., Journal; W. J. Lyon, Binghamton, N. Y., Sun.

J. L. Stackhouse, Easton, Pa., Express; John H. McGrath, Easton, Pa., Express; Louis Benjamin, Erie, Pa., Dispatch Herald; A. Daneman, Erie, Pa., Dispatch Herald; A. H. Stackpole, Harrisburg, Pa., Telegraph; A. R. Michener, Harrisburg, Pa., Telegraph; Henry Walser, Hazelton, Pa., Standard Sentinel-Plain Speaker; J. R. Dershuck, Hazelton, Pa., Standard Sentinel-Plain Speaker.

J. L. Steinman, Lancaster, Pa., Intelligencer; J. H. Steinman, Lancaster, Pa., Intelligencer; A. E. McCullough, Lancaster, Pa., Intelligencer; W. L. Robinson, Lancaster, Pa., News-Journal; H. D. Bradley, Norristown, Pa., Herald-Times; I. J. Hornstein, Reading, Pa., Times; D. M. Turner, Towanda, Pa., Review.

O. J. Keller, Lancaster, Pa., New Era; F. S. Fox, Norristown, Pa., Herald-Times; Robert Fetridge, Scranton, Pa., Republican; Leslie B. Tyler, Scranton, Pa., Republican; M. L. Goodman, Scranton, Pa., Scrantonian; E. Tracy Sweet, Scranton, Pa., Scrantonian; Richard Little, Scranton, Pa., Scrantonian; B. F. Parrott, Shenandoah, Pa., Herald.

N. A. Frantz, Stroudsburg, Pa., Record and Times Democrat; Colley S. Baker, Stroudsburg, Pa., Record and Times; T. F. Hefferman, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Independent; J. J. Gorman, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., International Color Printing Co.; Colonel Ernest G. Smith, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Times-Leader; W. E. Gonzales, Columbia, S. C.; State; F C. Withers, Columbia, S C., State; R. B. Chandler, Greenville, S. C. Piedmont.

Harry Kingebeil, Moline, Ill., Dispatch; August Sundine, Moline, Ill., Dispatch; P. S. McGlynn, Moline, Ill., Dispatch; Elliott S. Bartlett, Rockford, Ill., Register-Gazette; Dale J. Crittenberger, Anderson, Ind., Bulletin; Ed. J. Fehn, Evansville, Ind., Courier-Journal; J. R. Snyder, Gary, Ind., Post-Tribune; E. J. Treffinger, Richmond, Ind., Item.

H. N. Newman, Fourth Estate, New York City; John V. Riley, Rockford, Ill., Star; Roscoe S. Chapman, Rockford, Ill., Star; Russell Chapman, Rockford, Ill., Star; William Toner, Anderson, Ind., Herald; Paul Poynter Kokomo, Ind., Dispatch; E. H. Harris, Richmond, Ind., Palladium; James C. Harrison, Augusta, Ga., Herald.

John F. D. Aue, Burlington, Ia., Hawkeye; Ed. Loftus, Cedar Rapids, Ia., Gazette; J. L. Miller, Cedar Rapids, Ia., Gazette; Frank D. Throop, Davenport, Ia., Democrat and Leader; Merritt C. Speidel, Iowa City, Ia., Press Citizen; L. P. Loomis, Mason City, Ia., Globe-Gazette; Jackson McCoy, Waterloo, Ia., Courier; H. J. Powell, Coffeyville, Kan., Journal.

Maury Paul, New York City; J. T. Moore, Pittsburgh, Kan., Sun Headlight; B. F. Forgey, Ashland, Ky., Independent; S. E. Phillips, Hagerstown, Md., Herald-Mail; William P. Lane, Jr., Hagerstown, Md., Herald-Mail; George A. Mellen, Lawrence, Mass., Eagle; A. H. Rogers, Lawrence, Mass., Eagle; Josephus Daniels, Jr., Raleigh, N. C., Observer.

J. S. Parks, Fort Smith, Ark., Times-Record; C. H. Tryon, Meriden, Conn.,Morning Record; E. E. Smith, Meriden, Conn., Morning Record; Elmer S. Hubbell, Middletown, Conn., Press; Burr E. Stevens, Middletown, Conn., Press., R. H. Gillespie, Stamford, Conn., Advocate; Paul Lockwood, Stamford, Conn., Advocate; A. J. Wilhelm, Huntingdon, Ind., Press.

William J. Pape, Waterbury, Conn., Republican; I. B. Myers, Waterbury, Conn., Republican; H. P. Warrington, Wilmington, Del., Star; Joseph H. Martin, Wilmington, Del., Star; Herbert Felkel, St. Augustine, Fla., Record; Edward Warren, St. Augustine, Fla., Record; L. E. Reagin, Sarasota, Fla., Times; D. H. Conklin, West Palm Beach, Fla., Post.

William F. Metten, Wilmington, Del., Every Evening; Davis Merwin, Bloomington, Ill., Pantagraph; Verne E. Joy, Centralia, Ill., Sentinel; W. J. Parrett, Danville, Ill., Commercial News; D. A. McKenzie, Elgin, Ill., Courier; E. E. Campbell, Granite City, Ill., Post; L. D. Upton, Kewanee, Ill., Star-Courier; A. O. Lindsay, Quincy, Ill., Herald-Whig.

George N. Seaver, Wilmington, Del., Journal; George B. Lindsay, Sarasota, Fla., Herald; A. N. Snook, Aurora, Ill., Beacon News; W. Kee Maxwell, Bloomington, Ill., Bulletin; B. K. Maxwell, Boomington, Ill., Bulletin; U. G. Orendorff, Canton, Ill., Ledger; Gardner J. Thomas, Marion, Ind., Chronicle; E. D. DeWitt, Birmingham, Ala., Age Herald.

E. J. Clapp, New York American; Sam Hecht, New York American; Chauncey Forgey, Ashland, Ky., Independent; E. B. Hatrick, International Newsreel; A. B. Chivers, New York Journal; George A. Bittler; Evansville, Ind., Courier; W. W. Krebs, Johnstown, Pa., Tribune; Philip Payne, New York Daily Mirror; Harry C. Kaulman, New York American; Walter Tushingham, Camden, N. J., Post; Mike Clofine, International Newsreel; George W. Williams, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Telegram; W. F. Hardy and guest, Decatur, Ill., Herald; A. S. Thompson, New York City; T. J. White, New York City; Frank B. Wilson, Fourth Estate; N. P. Spingold, Jerome Wilzin, L. B. Eppstein, Godfrey Dalkowitz, Harry A. Bratlow, Newark, N. J., Call; E. M. Carney, Hearst Newspapers; W. C. R. Harris, Jr., Toronto Star; Douglas Taylor, Printer's Ink; Nelson P. Poynter, St. Petersburg, Fla., Times; E. F. Birmingham, Newspaper News; Arthur Crawford, Chicago, Ill., Tribune; C. I. Chamberlain, Erie, Pa., Dispatch-Herald; John C. Dye, Norristown, Pa., Times-Herald; Harold B. Farquhar, Bethlehem, Pa., Globe-Times; Ross F. Walter, Akron, Ohio; W. C. Bullitt, M. M. Lord, New York American; Martin Huberth, Joseph H. Hoadley, Harry Parsons, Bronx, N. Y., Home News; Clarence Eyster, Peoria, Ill., Star; Louis Proehl, Peoria, Ill., Star; Charles D. Simeral, Steubenville, Ohio, Herald-Star; Arthur E. Garvey, Binghamton, N. Y., Sun; Cyril Dalkowitz.

NEWSPRINT PRODUCTION UP

Five Per Cent Increase in North American Output in March

Production in Canada during March, 1927, amounted to 174,094 tons and shipments to 169,061 tons, according to statistics issued by the News Print Service Bureau. Production in the United States was 133,731 tons and shipments 129,451 tons, making a total United States and Canadian news print production of 307,825 tons and shipments of 298,512 tons. During March 19,236 tons of news print was made in Newfoundland and 1,308 tons in Mexico, so that the total North American production for the month amounted to 328,369 tons.

The Canadian mills produced 58,360 tons more in the first three months of 1927 than in 1926, which was an increase of 14 per cent. The United States output was 24,787 tons or 6 per cent less than for the first three months of 1926, that in Newfoundland 10,153 tons or 25 per cent more, and in Mexico 421 tons or 14 per cent more, making a total North American increase of 44,147 tons or 5 per cent.

During March the Canadian mills operated at 86.2 per cent of rated capacity and the United States mills at 85.6 per cent. Stocks of news print paper at Canadian mills totalled 28,462 tons at the end of March and at United States mills 22,744 tons, making a combined total of 51,206 tons which was equivalent to 3.9 days' average production.

COOLIDGE HONORS FREY

A Cincinnati editor was signally honored by President Coolidge last week in being appointed as Advisor on Labor Questions to the American members of the Economic Conference of the League of Nations. The appointee was John P. Frey, president of the Ohio Federation of Labor and editor for many years of the International Iron Moulders' Journal with headquarters in Cincinnati. Mr. Frey left this week for Washington and will sail next week from New York. He will join the other American members of the conference at New York and proceed to Geneva where it opens May 4.

PRINTS RECORD EDITION

The Dayton (O.) Daily News published a 68-page edition on Friday April 14, which it claimed is a new high record in its city. There were 118,972 lines of advertising. Hughlett Hollyday, Jr., is national advertising manager.

BRITISH PAPERS REPORT LARGE PROFITS

$1,500,000 Net Reported by Sunday Pictorial Company—Daily Mirror Ltd., Reports Similar Sum

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

London, April 15.—The Sunday Pictorial Newspaper Company, London, Eng reports net profit, after deducting all working, office and other expenses, providing for contingencies, etc., for the year ended Feb. 28, as £325,046. Forty thousand pounds has been placed to reserve, which now stands at £200,000, and £5,000 has been appropriated again to provide pensions for employes. Dividend on ordinary shares of 25 per cent is unchanged (less tax.) During the year the company disposed of its shareholdings in the Daily Sketch and Sunday Herald.

Net profit of the Daily Mirror Newspapers, Limited, for the year ended Feb 28, last, amounted to £301,789. Twenty thousand pounds has been placed to reserve account, which now stands at £100,000 and £10,000 goes towards pensions for employes. In January the company's capital was increased to £2,200,000, by issue of 700,000 new ordinary shares of one pound each. Thirty per cent dividend on ordinary shares and eight per cent on preference shares is paid, leaving £29,295 to be carried forward.

Editor & Publisher $4.00 a year.

The Standard Union is the only newspaper in Brooklyn whose circulation is 100% readers.

No accident or insurance policies, prize packages of any description, contests of any kind are necessary to sell this newspaper to readers.

R. J. R. Hunsiman
President

LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY BROOKLYN NEWSPAPER

JIM BARTH SAID IT—

"I don't always buy newspaper space simply and solely because of large circulation or wide coverage although that is a most important factor. The pulling power of a newspaper is often best gauged by the quality of its circulation and the bond that exists between it and its readers. If this bond is strong, if the paper is received into the homes as a friend, if its editorial policies are admired and its news believed, then I want my advertising in that paper."

Score a big round bullseye for Mr. Barth, veteran agency space buyer and expert on modern merchandising methods!

But suppose, Mr. Barth, a newspaper, in addition to fulfilling every one of the requirements you enumerate, also completely covers its market—suppose it has by far the largest A.B.C. circulation in its field and the widest possible coverage?

Isn't it an ideal medium for carrying the sales message of any advertiser who wants results with the least possible expenditure of time, effort or money?

Thanks. We thought you'd think so.

May we then call your attention to The Binghamton (N. Y.) Press-Leader? You probably have noticed this newspaper has been invited to join the 100,000 Group. You probably know from your records that it has a 97% coverage in its own home field and that it has been used consistently for more than 20 years as an advertising medium by most of the country's leading advertisers. You probably know that it has but recently subsidized an independent survey of its market and its reader acceptance. But you may not have the facts and figures brought out by that survey. May we send you a copy of it?

THE JOHN BUDD COMPANY

National Advertising Representatives

New York, 9 East 37th Street
Chicago, Tribune Tower
St. Louis, Chemical Bldg.
Atlanta, Healey Bldg.
San Francisco, Sharon Bldg.
Los Angeles, Chamber of Commerce Bldg.
Portland, Security Bldg.

A. P. BOND ALLOTMENT IN COMMITTEE'S HANDS

(Continued from page 13)

questions present certain legal aspects and questions of very vital policy affecting the future and present welfare of the organization in which we all have a common interest. It is recognized also that with the growth of the Associated Press and with the great change in newspaper publishing within recent years that in the eyes of the general membership there are certain changed conditions that must be met by your board and by the membership, particularly touching the very vital questions of the bonds and the protest rights.

"To meet this objective and in a spirit of complete harmony, having in mind only the best interests of this great organization, your committee in conference has agreed upon the resolution which is now offered.

"The A. P. is our organization; we are proud of the splendid record it has maintained during these years. We are happy that the high ideals set by its founders have been maintained over this period of years and so we meet today in a spirit of complete harmony with the idea of giving these questions the most serious consideration, viewing all sides of the question with the hope that they may be brought before this body and the board of directors a report that will meet the views of the membership generally of this great organization.

"We are proud of its history; we are proud of the traditions of this organization, and we feel that those of us upon whose shoulders the burden now rests, faithful to the policy laid down by its founders, are able to meet and solve judiciously and carefully and wisely this problem or any other problem that the future may impose upon this great organization.

"I urge the adoption of this resolution."

Mr. Neylan's address follows in full:

"I have very little to add to what Mr. Knowland has just stated.

"I want to emphasize on behalf of Col. Ewing and Mr. Vandenberg and myself who have accepted a trust as we conceive it, the spirit in which we have been met, a spirit which resulted in the formulation of this resolution.

"I, too, agree with Mr. Knowland as to the tremendous value of the Associated Press. From the time of my boyhood, I have looked upon it as one of the greatest institutions I have ever known. Of necessity in every institution as important as this one with its widespread ramifications and its long history, there comes a time when conservatism, and what we conceive as progress, become questions which must be considered in detail if an institution is to retain its vitality and if it is to carry out the mission, which we believe is to be the mission of the A. P.

"I want to say to the membership of the A. P. that in my judgment the most practical manner of solving these two very important questions is by their reference to the committee provided for in this resolution. In the very nature of things there are details to be considered. I have studied both questions rather thoroughly and I am convinced that this committee when it has devoted itself to the subject will find no insuperable obstacles, and that the end of the year, at the next annual meeting, if not before, as is provided in the resolution, we will be able to come here and receive from this committee a report on which the entire membership of the A. P. can unite and adopt, so that this great institution may go on and fulfill its destiny.

"I would ask every gentleman identified with the A. P. who has given his proxy to the proxy committee or aligned himself with the proxy committee in the consideration of this matter to vote for the adoption of this resolution.

"I would urge everybody to do nothing to complicate the present situation, because in the last analysis each and everyone of us has a vital interest in the A. P.

"Each and every one of us must be concerned for its future and each and everyone of us, if we give thought to the subject, must realize that a committee purely representative of both sides will surely consider all the views that could possibly be expressed in an indiscriminate discussion of the matter where some things might be said or some misconceptions might arise, which it would be hard to explain later on.

"Therefore, I would ask that every member of the A. P. vote for this resolution, so that the committee to be appointed under it may go ahead with its duty with the feeling that they have the unanimous support of the entire membership.

"And, Mr. President, for the first time in my life and only with the belief that what I am going to do is for the best interest of the Associated Press, I am going to request everybody to refrain from discussion of the resolution. Not with the idea of preventing the presentation of any views, but because of the fact that this matter has been thoroughly considered and I believe it is in a condition under which the interests of the A. P. and of every member will be best conserved, and I am going to move for this question and ask for an immediate vote on the resolution."

DISCUSSING SHOPPING NEWS

Springfield, Mass., Merchants Appoint Committee to Consider Publication

Tentative plans for a Shopping News in Springfield, Mass., have been brought to a point where a committee of downtown merchants, members of the Chamber of Commerce, headed by Arthur D. Neff, formerly advertising manager of a large department store, as at work on a plan.

It is said that the plan is to distribute a free advertising paper made up of standard size.

The date of issue of the first edition has been variously set at any time from May 1 to next fall.

COAST DAILY ADDS TO PLANT AREA

Oakland Tribune Buys 15,000 Square Feet Adjacent to Plant and Plans New Six-Story Addition Doubling the area occupied by it present quarters, the Oakland (Cal. Tribune, April 21, announced purchas of 15,000 square feet of property adja cent to the Tribune building at Thir teenth and Franklin streets, in the hea of the downtown business district.

Plans for a new six-story addition t care for expansion necessitated by stead growth of the Oakland daily are alread under way, according to the announce ment. The new building will match i appearance the present structure. B purchase of the property, which is at th corner of Twelfth and Franklin street the Tribune has acquired ownership c the eastern half of the block bounded b Broadway, Franklin, Twelfth and Thir teenth streets. The ground area no held by the Tribune totals 30,000 squa feet.

The building plans of the Tribune, a cording to Joseph R. Knowland, pres dent and publisher, contemplate activ construction work as soon as the leas held by occupants of the Hippodrom Theatre building, which stands on th property, expire.

A pressroom extending the enti block from Twelfth to Thirteenth stree with a battery of modern, high-spe presses, is included in the plans no being given consideration.

One of the outstanding features of th building program, the announceme states, is the installation of an insi delivery system which will relieve tra fic congestion in the streets. A drivewa and loading platform will be construct under the new plant and the new paper's fleet of motor trucks will loa inside the plant instead of backing t to the curb.

THIS IS "ROSE-MARY"

In real life she is Miss Elsie Nichols, who will pose for the illustrations in the forthcoming newspaper serialization of

"ABIE'S IRISH ROSE"

A Novelization

By Anne Nichols

of her sensational stage success

The following territory is already closed:

NEW YORK
BOSTON
PHILADELPHIA
BALTIMORE
PITTSBURGH
CLEVELAND
SAN FRANCISCO
MILWAUKEE
NEW ORLEANS

Several New York producers who "passed up" the play, now in its sixth year, are sitting on the mourners' bench. Don't join them.

Write for territory and complete working plan for local exploitation.

UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE WORLD BLDG. NEW YORK

Does Newspaper Advertising Pay?

Ask the magazines that use it:

Magazine Expenditures in Newspapers, 1926.

Curtis Publishing Company Country Gentleman Ladies' Home Journal Saturday Evening Post	$950,000
MacFadden Publications Physical Culture True Story	900,000
International Magazine Company Cosmopolitan Good Housekeeping McClure's Smart Set	300,000
McCall's Magazine	50,000

Figures from Bureau of Advertising, A. N. P. A., March 5, 1927

Others are Crowell Publishing Company—American, Collier's, Woman's Home Companion; Pictorial Review; Red Book; Condé Nast Publications—House & Garden, Vanity Fair, Vogue; Delineator; Liberty; and others. Figures not available.

Invest in Newspaper Advertising

E. Katz Special Advertising Agency

Established 1888

Publishers' Representatives

Detroit
Atlanta

New York
Chicago

Kansas City
San Francisco

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE AT U. P. DINNER

(Continued from page 10)

the property of our citizens, even where their holdings are under titles which have been established for scores of years.

"In 1857 Mexico adopted a constitution. In its relation to the protection of acquired property it provided ample security. Under its terms many of our people acquired holdings both through individual and corporate ownership. During the more than 30 years of President Diaz we were especially encouraged to make investments, to promote all kinds of development of the natural resources, transportation, and industries. After he was driven from office by revolution much disorder existed, with presidents following one another in rapid succession.

"In 1917 a new constitution was adopted with provisions affecting agricultural, mining, and oil lands, which we thought threatened the holdings of our nationals with confiscation. Their constitution is not self-enforcing, but requires the promulgation of laws to put it into effect. While this was in process of being brought about a government was established which we did not recognize. In 1920 General Obregon was chosen president and sought recognition. In negotiations for that purpose it was repeatedly pointed out that we feared that the new constitution, although one of its provisions expressly prohibited the enactment of retroactive laws, might be interpreted as retroactive in its effect upon the holdings of real estate which our people had secured prior to its adoption. We sought assurances from the Mexican government that such was not the case.

"In order to prevent misunderstanding we sent two commissioners to Mexico City in 1923 to confer upon this subject, and also on the question of our claims, with two Mexican commissioners. Charles Beecher Warren and John Barton Payne represented our government. They had a series of conferences and kept written records of their proceedings, in which are set out the recommendation for the appointment of two claims commissions and the understanding that the constitution of 1917 was not to be given retroactive or confiscatory application. These records were duly signed and attested by the commissioners and were submitted to the president of Mexico and the President of the United States for their mutual approval, which was given. It was solely because of our understanding secured in this formal way that our property rights would be respected, that recognition of the government of President Obregon was granted on September 3, 1923.

"During the winter of 1924 revolutionary activities started in Mexico which it seems probable would have succeeded in displacing President Obregon had not our government furnished him with arms and ammunition largely on credit and given him the advantage of our moral support. Our help maintained his position. Soon after President Calles came into power he and the Mexican Congress proposed laws and regulations which we deemed threatened confiscation of American property. To prevent the appearance of acquiescence we so notified Mexico prior to the passage of such laws. Nevertheless they were passed. We have made further protest against their being put into effect, as they are contrary to our understanding of the conference as a result of which we granted recognition. In the notes which have been received the government of President Calles refuses to be bound by what we thought was the understanding arrived at with President Obregon. We closed the correspondence by notifying the Mexican government that we stood squarely on the understanding made with President Obregon and we expected it not to take any action that would deprive American citizens of their property or their property rights.

"Agricultural lands have apparently been seized from time to time for which no compensation has yet been made. While there have been threats to seize oil property, no such seizures have lately been made, and suits are now pending in Mexican courts to restrain such seizures. Former decisions of their courts are relied on to support these suits.

"Stripped of all technicalities and involved legal discussion, this is the main difference which our Government has with the Mexican Government. We do not question their right to take any property, provided they pay fair compensation. With their efforts to secure a division of great estates, so that more of their people may be landowners, we have every sympathy. We have even agreed that our government would accept the bonds of the Mexican government in payment for damages awarded by the commission for land taken for this purpose.

"Of course, we do not want any controversy with Mexico. We feel every sympathy with her people in their distress and have every desire to assist them. That they welcome conditions under which life and property are secure is shown by the hundreds of thousands of them who are coming to the United States, where, through their industry, they thrive and prosper. Under these conditions small land holdings would develop in Mexico as they have developed here. Those of her citizens who preferred to seek employment in industry, like many of our own people, would have an abundant opportunity in their own country. Instead of desiring to pursue any aggression or to take part in any oppression, we are endeavoring through the most friendly offices to demonstrate to their government that their attitude in relation to property will not only result in the economic disadvantage of their own people, by preventing the investment of outside capital so necessary for their development, but will greatly impair their friendly relations with other interested nations.

"It is a cardinal principle of law that private property should not be taken without fair compensation. This principle is declared in our national constitution and in those of all our states. I know of no written constitution that does not contain a similar provision. Under the constitution of 1917, and by-laws and regulations for carrying it into effect, we feel that Mexico is threatening to disregard this great elementary principle by undertaking a retroactive application of their constitution to property of our citizens acquired long before their constitution was adopted.

"The Senate recently passed a resolution supporting the protection of American life and property and suggesting resort to arbitration. We have at present two commissions of arbitration with Mexico, and the principle of arbitration has always been strongly advocated by our government. Everybody favors arbitration when the question at issue is arbitrable. Under the present circumstances I can see grave difficulties in formulating a question which the two governments would agree to submit to such a tribunal. The principle that property is not to be confiscated and the duty of our Government to protect it are so well established that it is doubtful if they should be permitted to be questioned. Very likely Mexico would feel that the right to make a constitution and pass laws is a privilege of her sovereignty which she could not permit to be brought into question."

"It has therefore seemed that we are more likely to secure an adjustment through negotiation. I am glad to report that the Mexican ambassador has recently declared to me that Mexico does not intend to confiscate our property, that she has shown diligence in capturing and punishing those who have murdered our citizens, and expressed the wish, which we so thoroughly entertain, of keeping cordial and friendly relations. With a strong sentiment of this nature, which, I am convinced, animates the people of both countries, it will surely be possible to reach an amicable adjustment.

"Our two peoples ought so to conduct themselves that there will never be any interference with our ancient ties of friendship.

"Our relationship to Nicaragua I have set out in detail in a message to the Congress. For a dozen years we kept a force of marines in that country at the earnest solicitation of its government. During this time the people were peaceful, orderly, and prosperous, and their national debt was greatly reduced. Almost at once after I withdrew the marines, revolution was started. Finally a President was designated by the Congress which appeared to us and to other Central American countries to have a constitutional title and we therefore recognized him. As the disorders continued, on his representation that he was unable to protect American lives and property, I sent a force of marines for that purpose. Their presence has undoubtedly prevented the larger towns from being pillaged and confined the fighting for the most part to uninhabited areas. We have sold arms and ammunition, as we did in the case of Mexico, to the Nicaraguan Government. The revolutionary forces appear to have received arms and ammunition from some source in Mexico. With a hope that we might be furnished with information which would better enable us to deal with the situation, I have sent Henry L. Stimson, former Secretary of War, to that country. Meantime, it is reported that the government forces have been apparently successful in driving the revolutionists from the field.

"In addition to the private property of our citizens, which is employed in lumber and agricultural operations, our government has secured the right to construct a canal and establish a naval base, for which it paid $3,000,000. Contrary to the general impression, there are no oil properties in this country. Nevertheless, I have seen cartoons that pictured it as filled with oil derricks. Our country consumes vast quantities of oil and gasoline in its use of automobiles, gas engines, and oil-burning furnaces. If these products are to be kept within a reasonable price, which is very important to a great body of our citizens, our people who go abroad to develop new fields and to increase the supply ought to have the encouragement and support of our government.

"We are not making war on Nicaragua any more than a policeman on the street is making war on passers-by. We are there to protect our citizens and their property from being destroyed by war and to lend every encouragement we can to the restoration of peace. While the destruction of life and property has been serious enough, had it not been for the presence of our forces it would undoubtedly have been much worse.

"Toward the governments of countries which we have recognized this side of the Panama Canal we feel a moral responsibility that does not attach to other nations. We wish them to feel that our recognition is of real value to them and that they can count on such support as we can lawfully give when they are beset with difficulties. We have undertaken to discourage revolutions within that area and to encourage settlement of political differences by the peaceful method of elections. This policy is bound to meet with some discouragements, but it is our hope and belief that ultimately it will prevail. This territory is rich in natural resources and under orderly governments is capable of a development that will give to its inhabitants all the advantages of modern civilization. It is a curious circumstance that some of those who have been willing to have us take mandates over far-off countries in Asia, where we have no interest that does not attach to all humanity, are most critical when we are attempting to encourage the maintenance of order, the continuity of duly established government, and the protection of lives and property of our own citizens under a general reign of law in these countries that are near at hand and where we have large and peculiar interests.

"Another important problem in our foreign intercourse relates to China. That country is undergoing a revolutionary convulsion. It is broken up into several separate parts, each claiming to represent a government, none of which we have recognized. Our main difficulty here is the protection of the life and property of our citizens. We have many missionaries there and some commercial establishments. We have nothing in the way of concessions. We have never occupied any territory. Our citizens are being concentrated in ports where we can protect them and remove them.

"It is solely for this purpose that our warships and marines are in that territory.

"While this process was going on the unfortunate incident arose at Nanking. One of our citizens was murdered, another was wounded, our consulate was violated, and when the house in which our people had taken refuge was surrounded and they were actually under fire it became necessary for one of our ships, and one of the British ships in the harbor, to lay down a barrage, to drive away the soldiers and the mob who were making the attack and to enable our citizens to reach a place of safety on our ships in the river.

"We presented with the other powers who had suffered like attacks identic notes of protest, to which a reply has been made, which although conciliatory in tone and to a certain degree responsive, leaves the final disposition of the issue a matter for further consideration by our government.

"Weeks ago we saw this situation developing and sent a suggestion to the contending factions that they exclude the foreign quarters of the city of Shanghai from the area of military operations. This they failed to do, making the dispatch of our forces necessary. In a public statement issued by our Secretary of State on the 27th of January we indicated that we were ready to negotiate a treaty giving China complete tariff autonomy and to negotiate the release of extraterritorial rights as soon as China is prepared to give protection to American citizens and their property. The friendship of America for China has become proverbial. We feel for her the deepest symphathy in these times of her distress. We have no disposition to do otherwise than to assist and encourage every legitimate aspiration for freedom, for unity, for the cultivation of a national spirit, and the realization of a republican form of government. In the turmoil and strife of the present time we realize fully that forces may be let loose temporarily beyond their power to control, which may do injury to American nationals. It is to guard against that eventuality that our forces are in Chinese waters and to do what China itself would do if peace prevailed. We do not wish to pursue any course of aggression against the Chinese people. We are there to prevent aggression against our people by any of their disorderly elements. Ultimately the turmoil will quiet down and some form of authority will emerge, which will no doubt be prepared to make adequate settlement for any wrongs we have suffered. We shall of course maintain the dignity of our government and insist upon proper respect being extended to our authority. But our actions will at all times be those of a friend solicitous for the well-being of the Chinese people.

"The recent period has brought America into a new position in the world. We shall have to bear the inevitable criticisms and try to discharge the inevitable obligations which arise from this condition. Because some others have pursued that course, it may be feared that we shall embark upon a program of military aggrandizement. Such, however, is not the spirit of the American people. If, even where our national interests and the protection of the rights of our citizens are involved, we attempt to assist in composing difficulties and supporting international law, we must expect to be charged with imperialistic motives. In our international intercourse we must hold ourselves up to high standards of justice and equity.

"We should be slow to take offense and quick to grant redress.

"The world knows that the whole genius of America always calls it to the support of the universal rights of humanity.

"The civilization of the world has been

(Continued on page 73)

IONIC No. 5

The Type That Is Kind to the Eyes

Eye Specialists Approve It—Hundreds of oculists and optometrists have endorsed Ionic No. 5 as a type that reduces eyestrain.

Readers Prefer It—Readers of The Chicago Daily News voted for Ionic No. 5 by a majority of more than ten to one.

Publishers Like It—Because it gives them a more readable paper, a cleaner-looking paper, less stereotyping and press-room trouble and the same or a better word count.

250 Newspapers Now Using It—Papers in all parts of the country from the largest Metropolitan daily to the smallest country weekly.

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

319.40

LINOTYPED IN THE CLOISTER FAMILY AND NARCISS EXCEPT LARGE TITLE LINE

Mrs. W. E. Coleman,
Springfield, Ill.

"Thank you for the large type you are using now. It sure is a treat for my eyes. I have read The Daily News for forty years."

Dr. Laura Lane Lingelbach,
Philadelphia, Pa.—Member of the Philadelphia Board of Public Education.

"It possesses two distinct features: First, its practicability; second, its artistic appearance. From the practical point it offers a more restful and more readable type than has been given the public in its newspapers before and will make the reading of newspapers a practice in which all are engaged a real pleasure. From the artistic point of view it adds much to the general appearance of the newspaper, increasing its appeal."

Ralph E. Power,
6 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.—Artist and Typographer.

"The 'new dress' not only makes The Daily News easier to read but it adds dignity and impressiveness to the appearance."

Dr. Brown W. Randel,
El Paso, Texas—Oculist.

"I have noticed articles in medical journals about the new Ionic type. There is no question about it being easier to read and much more desirable. It is similar to Snellen's test type used by oculists for years in making examinations for glasses."

R. L. Thornton,
902 Wrightwood Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"You have made a wonderful improvement by using the new type and deserve the thanks of every one of your myriad of readers."

Frederick A. Ebersold,
160 Yale Ave., River Forest, Ill.

"I have been a reader of The Daily News since the first issue, when I was a schoolboy at the old Jones school, and have always been one of its ardent admirers. Your change of type a few days ago is a great step in advance and pleases me immensely as I can read it easily now without eyestrain that comes when one grows older."

Mrs. Joseph O. Miller,
33 North Stone Ave., La Grange, Ill.

"Your new print is wonderful for my eyes. I have enjoyed The Daily News for forty-two years."

Dr. P. J. H. Farrell,
Chicago, Ill.—Chief Eye Surgeon for A.E.F. during World War.

"It is a relief to the eyes. A newspaper using this type can be read in much more comfort, with less strain on the eyes. It is not necessary to squint to make out the words and hence it is natural and easier for the eyes."

Clyde O. Williams,
6338 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"It was a pleasure to read The Daily News this evening, the type being more easily read. Thanks for making the change of type that is more readable. I have been a reader of The Daily News for thirty years."

Dr. R. V. Russell,
New Orleans, La.—Physician.

"Small print demands perfect eyesight. The majority of people have defective eyesight, therefore the larger print is a great improvement. We use the newspaper in our eye tests for the majority of our patients because they cannot read their paper. Their eyes are just a bit below normal and they will be able to read your paper printed in this type."

Dr. J. E. Boswell,
Greenville, Texas—Optometrist.

"Newspaper type that stands out such as that now being used in The Journal will prove a benefit to the general public. I have noticed that there are certain types which are very straining to the eyes. When reading The Journal, which has taken a bold step in the use of the new type, it is easy to determine the difference between the new type and the old as there is no irritating feeling left when the paper has been read."

P. C. Harris,
136 N. High St., Columbus, Ohio.

"I find that in using the new type it makes it much easier for people to read and consequently it is easier on the eyes, particularly for people over forty. Even those with normal vision find reading the new type less of a strain. In this day and age when the eye is called upon to do so much more than the eye of the prehistoric person, every little relief given the eye means more in reserve for future years."

IONIC No. 5
SAVES EYESIGHT

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

C. N. McDonnell,
Columbus, Ohio—Former President of the American Optical Association.

"The new type is a very decided improvement, particularly to people over forty years of age, whose eyesight is beginning to fail, it is a boon."

W. F. Savage,
46 E. Long St., Columbus, Ohio—Manager, Franklin Optical Company.

"I noticed the change in type instantly and after interviewing several friends found all emphatic in praise—except one lady, who claimed the type too clear. Testing it under three lamps at different angles, I found that the type was much clearer and easier to read than the old type."

Mrs. J. H. Troutman,
Shirley-Savoy Hotel, Denver, Colo.

"Permit me to offer my sincerest congratulations to the News for the new type used in its pages. When I picked up the paper the improvement was so noticeable as to be almost startling. The improved type surely must be of great benefit to the eyes of the News' readers."

Mathew Dudgeon,
Milwaukee, Wis.—Public Librarian.

"As one who is interested in more reading for every one, the great improvement in the legibility of The Journal type is a pleasing thing. The new type is easily read and, if possible, gives The Journal more personality."

J. L. Gregg,
Milford, Ind.

"I am 88 years old and am glad for a type I can see. I am certainly in favor of the new Ionic type."

Jay G. Tripp,
82 N. High St., Columbus, Ohio.

"The new type is bound to give much more reading comfort to the public and cause less eyestrain."

Gen. Abel Davis,
Chicago, Ill.—Vice President, Chicago Title and Trust Company.

"I have been reading The News for more than twenty years and I can tell you that I am happy over this latest improvement. I must confess that the old type was difficult to read. Thanks for making it easier."

Dr. David C. Williams,
New Orleans, La.—Optician.

"It is very readable. It is a great improvement, makes a neat appearance, and I am sure the readers will appreciate it. It is a great thing for the middle-aged folk whose eyesight is failing a bit; they will now be able to read their newspapers."

Dr. Georgie H. Jones,
Greenville, Texas—Optometrist.

"The new type is a great improvement over the old, being much cleaner and easier to read. The news is presented more clearly and boldly and will prove beneficial to public eyesight."

Dr. Paul M. Paine,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Librarian of the Syracuse Public Library.

"I was struck at once by the extraordinary legibility and beauty of the type. Papers in the old days were terrible so far as their type was concerned. As the years have gone by The Post-Standard improved until now, today, it certainly represents what remarkable progress has been made, in its new dress of type."

A. W. Magnuson,
5 N. High St., Columbus, Ohio—Harr Company.

"The new type seems much easier t read because it stands out better."

Rt. Rev. Dr. Warren L. Rogers,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Bishop Coadjutor of Ohi

"At breakfast I read The Post-Stand ard, and I admired the type very muc even before I read the announcemer that it was being introduced in th issue of the paper. The Mergenthal Company has scored with the Ion type, and I congratulate The Pos Standard upon its introduction. I a sure the proofreaders will be as we pleased as the subscribers."

Rev. Dr. Henry E. Hadley,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Rector St. Paul's Churc

"It is immense. I was greatly please with the new dress of The Post-Stand ard this morning. The Ionic type wi be appreciated by young and old, an will add greatly to the pleasure reading as well as in appearance."

Frederick E. Norton,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Secretary, Chamber Commerce.

"The new style of type used for th first time this morning by The Pos Standard impresses the reader at onc by the ease with which the eyes fol low the lines. It adds to the appear ance of the paper as well as makin it even more attractive to read."

John M. Cooney,
Notre Dame, Ind.—Dean of the School Journalism, Notre Dame University.

"The new Ionic type is easily read an it seems to rest the eyes. I took a cen sus of opinion in one of my journal ism classes and in a class of thirt favor for Ionic was unanimous."

James P. O'Donnell,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Secretary of the Grad Crossing Commission.

"I noticed it as soon as I started t read The Post-Standard this morn ing. The type seems thicker an broader. It is easier to read, and i an improvement."

Wesley W. Rasey,
Syracuse, N. Y.—United States Commis sioner.

"I enjoyed the news columns of Th Post-Standard in the new dress o type immensely. It makes far mor simplified reading."

Richard Kelly,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Chief Narcotic Inspecto in the Syracuse District.

"The new type is a great improvemen for the paper, a pleasant relief to th readers."

Chas. F. Bassett,
Richmond, Mo.—Richmond Missourian.

"Personally, with many years of ex perience, I think the Ionic is the bes readable type that I have ever seen.

James J. Crowley,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Assistant United Stat District Attorney.

"A great idea has been developed b The Post-Standard, an idea tha eventually will become a treat to it readers."

Edward H. Goodrich,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Assistant to Federal Di trict Attorney Burden.

"I am glad to see that The Pos Standard has introduced the featur of new type because I always foun much pleasure in reading the variou papers outside of the city which hav been using it."

Dr. James M. Britton,
El Paso, Texas—Oculist.

"The new type is more comfortable t my eyes. It looks good to me. It cleaner cut under the magnifyin glass than the old type."

The text of this folder is 5½ Point Ionic No. 5 with Italic and Small Caps and 7 Point Ionic No. 5 with Bold Face No. 2

Dr. F. P. Schuster,
El Paso, Texas—Oculist.

"At first I thought the Post was using vhiter and better paper. It certainly s a noticeable improvement. Newsıaper print generally is hard to read or two reasons; first, because of its rayness; second, because of lack of olor saturation in the letters. Anyhing that will saturate color and nake the outline more distinct, as this ype does, certainly is more legible nd easier to read."

Dr. James Vandevere,
El Paso, Texas—Oculist.

I noticed that the new Ionic carries much heavier color without the ıuddy effect which is so noticeable ı other type. Undoubtedly, there is ess strain on the eyes in reading the ew type than in reading the old. nything that can be done to make ewspaper print more legible is cerainly a thing to be commended."

. C. Cauble,
Mishawaka, Ind.—Principal, Mishawaka High School.

would certainly vote for the new nic type. I read the articles in the vo styles of type and compared them ry carefully yesterday and the Ionic certainly much plainer. I believe it ill be a very great help to any one ho may have any difficulty in readg easily. At the same time it is a tter looking type than the old style."

r. S. R. Edwards,
South Bend, Ind.

think the change is very good. The nic type has a soothing effect on the es. Being heavier and cleaner, it akes it more possible for normal foısing. I hope the same type might seriously considered by all newspers. It is a step in the correction all eye defects, as newspapers reach me to a bigger percentage of peoe than any other form of printed atter."

eo. W. Comparet,
Phoenix, Ariz.—Editor, The Arizona Gazette.

We find that the Ionic type face is ry acceptable to our readers and at the operators find it much easier set, requiring less hand spacing an the old 8 point we were using."

yde S. Reed,
08 S. High St., Columbus, Ohio.

The new type is much easier on the es. It is clearer and shows a greater ntrast."

iss Katherine M. Butcher, yracuse, N. Y.—Former City Missionary.

have read your paper every day for years, even having it follow me ıen I have gone on a vacation, and or one wish to thank you for the improvement resulting from the option of the new type. After readthe paper this morning, the first e with Ionic, I noticed my eyes were nearly as tired as they usually are er reading the paper through. ain we say 'Good for The Postndard, our fine morning paper.'"

M. Brodock, yracuse, N. Y.—City Passenger Agent, Consolidated Ticket Office.

always admire and enjoy The Postndard, and the introduction of the w Ionic type is a progressive step."

orge F. Zook, cron, Ohio—President, Akron University.

is a wonderful thing for your read-. I find it much easier to read. It a great thing when a newspaper nsiders the welfare of its readers' es. I believe the page appears much s confusing when I select an item read."

John Metz,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Registrar of the Bureau of Vital Statistics.

"It is plain. Some papers have too small a type. I really don't see how elderly people, with eyes growing dim, can read them."

Charles S. Coombs,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Chief of Fire Department.

"The new type is darker, bigger, brighter and easier to read, and that is what people want. The easier it is to read the better."

Mrs. Alexander E. Oberlander,
Syracuse, N. Y.—President of Syracuse Federation of Women's Clubs.

"The Post-Standard's new type is extremely clear and very good-looking. I noticed yesterday morning how clean and attractive the print appeared."

Eugene M. Stevens,
Chicago, Ill.—President, Illinois Merchant Trust Company.

"The new type makes the paper much easier to read. There is less strain on the eyes."

IONIC No. 5
SAVES SPACE

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

George McCord,
Akron, Ohio—Superintendent of Schools.

"It rests my eyes to read it. The page seems so much cleaner. There is no confusion with the new type. By comparing the page of Monday's paper in the new type with the page of last Saturday's edition in the old type, there seemed to be a confusion of vision in reading the columns of the Saturday edition. I do not know what it is, but the sense of so many columns of reading matter presented on the same page is gone. Each story stands out distinct and alone. I am sure it will be a great help to the news reading people of Akron. It makes it a greater pleasure to read the stories in the new type. It will be beneficial to both children and adults to read the paper printed in the new type."

Harry A. Appel,
Milwaukee, Wis.—Editor and Publisher of the National Printer-Journalist.

"The change in the face of the body type will have the advantage of making the paper more readable. The type itself is slightly bolder and appears somewhat heavier, but still maintains the outline of cleanness and neatness so long maintained by the Journal. I am confident your readers will appreciate the change."

Christopher C. Bradley, Jr.,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Commissioner of Public Safety and President-Treasurer of C. C. Bradley & Son, Inc.

"It is fine, bright and clear and does not blur. I like it."

Miss M. Louise Hawksworth,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Executive of the Americanization League.

"I like the new type immensely. It is a decided improvement over the old."

Charles B. Johnson,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Record Clerk, City Clerk's Office.

"The new type is better, brighter, clearer and easier to read. I like it much better."

Mrs. Lieber E. Whittic,
Syracuse, N. Y.—President of Syracuse Branch, National Woman's Party.

"The new lines are especially clear and easy to read, and the type leaves plenty of white space."

Frederick V. Bruns,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Insurance, Bruns, Allis & Munns, Inc.

"I think it is a wonderful improvement. It is something new and particularly restful, especially for the fellow who reads the paper at the breakfast table. The Post-Standard is to be commended on the change."

Charles F. Bower,
Philadelphia, Pa.

"The new type is easier on the eyes and not half as fatiguing as the style it supersedes. I am past eighty-two now and my eyesight is not as good as it used to be, so I am thankful for the new type dress. It enables me to read without feeling any strain on my eyes. I find the new type can be read with ease. It also reduces strain and fatigue and adds materially to the pleasure of reading. In fact, it invites reading. Its even tone is restful to the eyes but not monotonous."

F. W. Hanton,
Griswold, Iowa—The Griswold American.

"The new Ionic arrived and we have it working every day. Delighted with it, as it gives The American a much neater appearance. Have had several people come and tell us they are delighted with the change."

Miss Frieda F. Gates,
Syracuse, N. Y.—Secretary to Dr. Paine.

"I noted the change at first glance at today's issue. It is fine. It is easy to read, as easy to read as a book."

Chief Justice Lindsay, of Criminal Court—Chicago, Ill.

"The Daily News has made a big improvement over the old type. The whole paper is much easier to read."

Eugene Kelly,
Sioux City, Iowa—Manager, The Sioux City Tribune.

"It is being wonderfully received with compliments from all sides."

W. C. Jarnagin,
Storm Lake, Iowa—Publisher, Storm Lake Pilot-Tribune.

"We have received the new 7 point Ionic mats. They seem to me to solve a problem that has puzzled me since we changed to a 12 em column some months ago. Our previous mats were too fat for a column so narrow. The 7 point enables us to get more words in the line and at the same time seemingly enlarge the letters. I am sure that our readers will be even more pleased with this new face than will we."

Geo. P. Collins,
Carrington, N. D.—The Foster County Independent.

"We are wonderfully pleased with this type face and when we started its use several months ago our readers were quick to notice its exceptional readability."

DeLos E. Brandon,
Sheridan, Wyo.—Sheridan Journal.

"Without question the finest, clearest, most easily read type-face ever designed, we join your noted company in a just pride for a real boon to the printing trade and readers at large. We are proud of the new face, and we receive no end of compliments from readers each day."

Edward A. Evans,
Oklahoma City, Okla.—Editor, The Oklahoma News.

"We have been very much pleased with the 6½ point Ionic which we are using for the body of the paper, and with the 5½ point Ionic in which we are setting our classified pages. The News was the first Scripps-Howard paper to adopt the Ionic face. Since then, upon my recommendation to Mr. G. B. Parker, general editorial director of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, it also has been adopted by The Denver Evening News, The Rocky Mountain News, The New York Telegram, The Houston Press and The El Paso Post. The News also was the first daily in Oklahoma to use this type, but several others have now taken it up. I am attaching statements from four Oklahoma City optometrists which may be of interest to you. In addition, we have received letters from a great many News readers, speaking highly of the Ionic type."

J. S. Perry,
Arlington, Tex.—Arlington Journal

"You may be assured that Ionic 7 point as used in the past three issues of our paper has made an instant 'hit' with each and every reader. You would be surprised to know how many of our friends have called and complimented the new appearance of our paper. To say that Ionic works wonders and breaks up the monotony of a paper is putting it mildly. Regenerates means to make anew, and that is what it does. You could better appreciate what it has done for us if you could see one of our old copies. Accept our thanks, and shake the hand for us of the designer of this new, beautiful, symmetrical creation."

The text of this folder is 5½ Point Ionic No. 5 with Italic and Small Caps and 7 Point Ionic No. 5 with Bold Face No. 2

Charles L. Baum,
Portland, Ore.—Promotion Office, Oregon Journal.

"The writer has already heard quite a number of favorable comments on the new type and feels sure that The Journal organization is greatly satisfied with the change."

H. E. Vilwock,
Colville, Wash.—Manager, The Statesman-Index Company.

"The more we use this face the better we like it."

E. W. Wilson,
Prince Rupert, B. C.—The Daily News.

"We are very well pleased with the change we made. There is no comparison between the Ionic and the former Antique. We are thoroughly well pleased."

S. W. Thompson,
Dillaye Building, Syracuse, N. Y.—Optometrist.

"I noticed the improvement immediately. The new type is more easily read and restful to the eyes. From the standpoint of an optometrist, I believe it is a marked advance."

Chief Justice Olson, of Municipal Court—Chicago, Ill.

"You followed my wishes in changing the type because I was one of those who filled out one of the ballots and voted for the change. I could see that it was going to be an improvement but I didn't realize that the change would make the paper as easy to read as it has."

I. E. White,
22 E. Gay St., Columbus, Ohio.

"I like the new type better. It catches the eye quicker. The sharper contrast between the paper and ink makes it more readable."

Dr. J. R. McCrary,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

"I do not know just what it is about the type, but it is easier to read, hence is easier on the eyes. It apparently is more bold or stands out on the printed page more than the ordinary type. I called attention of several of my patients to it, and they noticed the difference."

Mayor Dever,
Chicago, Ill.

"At my age the eyes aren't what they once were, but this new type is going to make it easier for me to read The Daily News than it has been for a long time. I like it and I am glad that the change was made."

Dr. David W. Stevenson, Akron, Ohio—Eye Specialist.

"I think it is much easier to read. The type is clearer, stands out prominently and is more attractive. I like it and it should prove to be for the general welfare of readers' eyes."

Dr. W. S. Farmer,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

"I noticed it right away. I compared it with the old type and studied it from every angle. I am convinced it is easier to read and more restful to the optical nerves. Newspapers can do more than any other agency to improve general eyesight."

Mrs. L. A. Soderstrom,
1115 Hill Ave., Sioux City, Iowa—Graduate Nurse (Eye Specialist's Assistant).

"I think it is quite an improvement. It makes reading lots easier."

Dr. J. D. Batson,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

"I congratulate The News most heartily on its typographical improvement and upon its effort toward eyesight conservation. Before I knew that The News had adopted the new type, I read about the type in the Literary Digest. The News is to be commended for its progressiveness."

Dr. T. N. Batten,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

"Type should be as near the same proportions each way as possible. That is, it should be as wide as it is tall, for then the eye gets the proper slant. It should also stand out in contrast to the paper it is printed on. Your improvement along this line is to be commended."

Dr. L. W. Brock,
Greenville, S. C.—Hale's Jewelry Store.

"The new type will help people with glasses as well as those without them. It is an important improvement."

IONIC No. 5

EVERY ONE LIKES IT

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Dr. A. A. Odom,
Greenville, S. C.—Odom-Schade, Optometrists.

"Both The News and the public will gain from this improvement because there is no question that the new type is far better for the eyesight. It is a far-sighted service the paper is rendering to its public, the most far-sighted step any newspaper in this section has taken. Optometrists whose business it is to hear the complaints of people with tired, strained eyes realize that in this new day when burdens are added to the eyes the usefulness of old-fashioned, small newspaper type is a thing of the past; conditions call for clear type, easy to read, and the new type The News is using meets these requirements."

W. H. Marsh,
Riverside, Calif.—Business Manager, The Riverside Enterprise.

"The use of Ionic was a source of much gratification to the owners of the paper and we were the recipients of many congratulatory statements from the reading public as a result. The type is certainly a wonderful improvement over that previously used."

Dr. Paul J. Pontius, Philadelphia, Pa.—Oculist.

"This new type is simply marvellous. I consider the use of this new type as one of the most marked advancements made in the printing of newspapers for many years. Here is a type that can be read with ease, which reduces the eyestrain, relieves fatigue and adds materially to the pleasure of reading."

Dr. Robert A. Brown,
Greenville, S. C.—President of the State Optometrists' Association.

"It is a wonderful forward stride. The present artificial mode of living makes it imperative that everything possible be done to facilitate easy vision. I knew of the new and improved type through our optometrists' professional journals before I saw that The News planned to adopt it and I was glad to see the change made because I knew it meant relief for thousands of eyes. People have eyestrain in reading newspapers and this new type should go a long way in benefiting many people."

James M. Thomson,
New Orleans, La.—Publisher, Morning Tribune; New Orleans Item; The Item-Tribune.

"We are very favorably impressed with the type and have received a very favorable reaction from the public. The experiments of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company in the direction of producing a more legible type face which would relieve eyestrain without sacrificing space, are to be highly commended. The leading optometrists of New Orleans commented favorably on this type."

A. N. Damon,
Los Angeles, Calif.—Foreman Composing Room, Los Angeles Times.

"We have received many compliments on our new 6½ point Ionic dress. Set on a 7 point slug it is much easier to read and more restful to the eye than was the old 7 point dress. In setting it requires so little hand spacing that the operators' strings have increased over 5% since the change."

Dr. G. C. Gore,
Greenville, S. C.—Secretary-Treasurer of the State Board of Examiners of Opticians and Optometrists.

"Larger type is an important need of the day and the new type of the Greenville News fills this need. There can be no question that it is much better for the eyes."

Beach & Nichols,
Whitehall, Wis.—The Whitehall Times.

"The 6½ point Ionic No. 5 with Italic is indispensable in our office. We use the Ionic for all legal publications and it also saves much hand setting in job work. The combination with Italic is very satisfactory to us and we are making good use of the series daily. If our present series should be destroyed we immediately would order another series of Ionic No. 5 with Italic."

E. H. Mack,
Sandusky, Ohio—The Sandusky Register.

"We adopted the 6½ point Ionic after going into the matter very thoroughly for the following reasons—first, it was more legible than the face we had been using. Second, the half point of white space between each line provided relief for the reader's eye. Third, it is a decided space saver and an economy in that we are gaining sufficient letters to the line over what we had been using before to average practically two columns a day additional matter for our readers and for our advertisers without additional operating cost. Since putting in a new type dress we have been comparing The Register very carefully with other papers, both large and small, for legibility and I would not trade the 6½ point Ionic for any other face on the market under an 8 point; and 8 point is out of the question with us because of the additional space in pages that would be necessitated in our make-up."

Dr. John M. Foster,
Denver, Colo.—Eye Specialist.

"The new type is a very great improvement and I was greatly interested when I saw the first copy of The News this morning presenting its news clearly and boldly. It can be read with perfect ease under an ordinary light."

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

The text of this folder is 5½ Point Ionic No. 5 with Italic and Small Caps and 7 Point Ionic No. 5 with Bold Face No. 2

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE AT U. P. DINNER

(Continued from page 68)

accomplished by the acceptance and general observance of definite rules of human conduct. Our duty demands that it be clearly understood at home and abroad that we are unwavering in our faith in those principles. Those who violate them can not hope for our approbation. Our attitude toward all nations is one of friendship and good will. Toward those who are yet struggling to improve the conditions of their people and achieve a larger liberty, it is especially one of forbearance. We support the demands of right and justice, but we are equally solicitous to observe the requirements of mercy and compassion. In the attempt of your government to meet these great obligations by which alone an enlightened civilized society can be maintained, a united America must constantly respond with service and sacrifice."

At the speakers' table were: Marcellus E. Foster, Houston Press; A. E. Braun, Pittsburgh Post & Sun; Lucius R. Eastman, president, Merchants' Association of New York; Lincoln B. Palmer, general manager, American Newspaper Publishers Association; Gen. C. B. Blethen, publisher, Seattle Daily Times.

Henry J. Allen, publisher, Wichita Beacon; R. F. R. Huntsman, publisher, Brooklyn Standard-Union; John L. Stewart, president, Pennsylvania State Press Association; Gerard Swope, president, General Electric Company; Count Ernest Pereira Carneiro, publisher, Journal do Brasil, Rio de Janeiro.

James Wright Brown, publisher, EDITOR & PUBLISHER; Sir Thomas Lipton; David S. Houston, vice-president, American Telephone & Telegraph Company; Walter S. Dickey, publisher, Kansas City Journal-Post; Frank E. Gannett, president, New York State Publishers' Association.

Gen. James G. Harbord, chairman of the board, Radio Corporation of America; Philip L. Jackson, publisher, Oregon Journal, Portland, Ore.; Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president, National Broadcasting Company; Percy H. Johnston, president, Chemical National Bank; Will H. Hays.

Roy W. Howard; The President of the United States; Karl A. Bickel; Irvin S. Cobb; William W. Hawkins, general business director, Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

Ralph Pulitzer, editor, New York World; John L. Merrill, president, All-American Cables, Inc.; Elzey Roberts, publisher, St. Louis Star; Newcomb Carlton, president, Western Union Telegraph Company; Francis H. Sisson, vice-president, Guaranty Trust Company.

George B. Parker, general editorial executive, Scripps-Howard Newspapers; Kent Cooper, general manager, the Associated Press; James Kerney, publisher, Trenton Times; Fred S. Ferguson, president, N. E .A. Service, Inc.; B. W. Fleisher, Japan Advertiser.

Bernarr Macfadden, publisher, New York Evening Graphic; George V. McLaughlin, executive vice-president, Postal Telegraph Company; John N. Harmon, editor, Brooklyn Times; Charles C. Green, president, Advertising Club of New York; Darwin P. Kingsley, president, New York Life Insurance Company.

Gen. Merch B. Stewart, superintendent, United States Military Academy; Hilton U. Brown, Indianapolis News; Ray Long, Cosmopolitan Magazine; W. W. Atterbury, president, Pennsylvania Railroad; Charles F. Crandall, president. British United Press, Ltd.; Edward T. Clark, acting secretary to the President.

The guest list follows:

(A)—Willis J. Abbott, Carl W. Ackerman, George H. Adams H. S. Adams, Philip D. Adler, E. F. Albee, Lloyd Allen, Chester A. Aldrich, James R. Allen, K. F. Altio, Harry W. Amos, W. H. Anderson, Roland F. Andrews, Howard Angus, Joseph H. Appel, A. Arbib-Costa, Harry M. Archer, Perry Arnold, Theodore Arter, Jr., Albert B. Ashforth, A. F. Assal Bey, Charles W. Atwater, Chellis A. Austin, Clarence Axman, Geo. F. Authier.

(B)—Earl D. Babst, Hugh Baillie, Prentiss Bailey, Warren Worth Bailey, John Bakeless, A. W. Barmby, Julius H. Barnes, Jack Barnhart, J. D. Barnum, F. H. Bartholomew, Bruce Barton, Georg Bartleme, Luigi Barzini, Warren Bassett, Austin C. Batdorff, John H. Bauman, E. W. Beattie, Jerome Beatty, William Preston Beazell, J. T. Beckwith, Neal Dow Becker, Thomas Beck, Ward B. Belknap, Robert J. Bender, R. E. Bennett, Victor Berger, Richard E. Berlin, C. D. Bertolet, George B. Bickelhaupt, Judge Robert W. Bingham, E. R. Birmingham, Frank LeRoy Blanchard, Bruce Bliven, Paul Block, Christie R. Bohnsack, Ruggiero Bolino, C. M. Bomberger, R. Boone, Willis H. Booth, James B. Borland, A. Bornefeld, Theodore Bosshard, Ernest Bourdin, J. Bourgeois, M. F. Bourjaily, John McE. Bowman, Donald C. Brace, J. C. Brady, Peter J. Brady, A. E. Braun, William C. Breed, J. F. Bresnahan, Basil Brewer, William H. Briggs, Horace L. Brightman, David F. Brittle, Harold Brooks, Sevellon Brown, W. J. Brown, Capt. Wilson Brown, W. B. Bryant, Gene Buck, Percy S. Bullen, W. F. Bullock, E. P. Bulman, Frank R. Burd, E. G. Burkam, E. M. Burke, Hugh Burke, J. P. Burke, Whit Burnett, W. Sherman Burns, Gordon Bush, Harold Butcher, Edward H. Butler, Walker S. Buell, Clyde Byers.

(C)—Charles Campbell, Jose Camprubi, Hon. Arthur Capper, Joseph S. Carreau, Dan A. Carroll, David G. Casem, Harry A. Casey, Floyd Chalfant, J. D. Chamberlain, F. R. Champion, W. G. Chandler, Ziang Ling Chang, C. F. Chapman, John B. Chapple, William L. Chenery, S. A. Cheney, J. Y. Chidester, Howard L. Christman, Raymond Clapper, Sidney J. Clarke, A. E. Clayden, Gilbert M. Clayton, J. D. Coates, Negley D. Cochrane, Gene Cohn, Harry Cohn, Chas. H. Congdon, Thomas E. Conklin, D. H. Conkling, Nelson E. Conine, Jack Connolly, E. E. Cook, Richard E. Coon, Jr., S. R. Coons, E. D. Corson, Dr. Couval, William C. Courtney, Jos. Cowan, John Cowles, Fred L. Crane, Lindsay Crawford, Herbert Crowly, Merle Crowell, Paul C. Crowell, E. H. Cullings, Julian W. Curtiss, J. Bart Campbell, R. F. Collins.

(D)—Leigh Danenberg, W. O. Dapping, Howard Davis, Robert H. Davis, W. W. Davies, James W. Dean, Ludwell Denny, Robert E. Delaplaine, E. C. Derr, James Devine, Thomas Dewart, H. A. DeMasi, Sir Hugh Denison, E. D. DeWitt, Urban Dice, Carl C. Dickey, W. Laurence Dickey, Philip Dodd, E. B. Doran, Geo. H. Doran, Sturges Dorrance, W. L. Dotts, William R. Douglass, B. C. Dow, Thomas Dowling, Albert W. Drake, Arthur Draper, G. C. Drescher, George S. Duarte, J. Frank Duffy, Walter I. Duncan, Geo. Durno, William G. Dwight, Rodney F. Dutcher.

(E)—Aubrey L. Eads, L. M. Eaker, Guy C. Earl, Jr., Joseph J. Early, A. M. Easterling, Norman M. Eberly, John Eddy, Mark Edgar, R. E. Ellinwood, Sidney C. Erlanger, Charles E. Ervin, Paul R. Everly, Clarence Eyster.

(F)—William J. Fagan, George A. Fahey, E. W. Fairchild, Robert Fancher, Italo Falbo, Henry L. Farrell, James A. Farley, Harold B. Farquhar, Henry Fell, Ronald H. Ferguson, Carter Field, Eugene Filteau, J. B. Finan, Gesford Fine, Louis Fischer, A. L. Fish, J. P. Fishburn, C. E. Fitzgerald, J. J. Fitzgerald, Hal J. Fletcher, R. A. Fletcher, Oscar G. Foellinger, B. C. Forbes, Andrew W. Ford, B. F. Forgey, Chauncey Forgey, Geo. J. Foster, Albert Fox, Theo. F. Fox, E. L. Freeland, Walter E. Frew, Dr. G. Adolph Frick, Edwin S. Friendly, Elmer P. Fries, L. D. Froelick, Wilfred W. Fry, Dr. Hans Fuchs, Charles H. Fuller, James H. Furay, J. W. Foster.

(G)—Edward J. Gallagher, Lewis S. Gannett, Gilson Gardner, H. S. Gardner, Robert Garland, James C. Garrison, Louis F. Gautier, Thomas W. Gerber, Emile A. Gauvreau, Frank Getty, Kenneth Gilmore, A. J. Gillespie, Bernard F. Gimbel, Herbert B. Glover, V. Giordana, Louis Giovanola, John M. Gleissner, John L. Golden, William Goldman, H. J. Grant, W. T. Grant, H. H. Gray, Alfred H. Grebe, Dr. S. Gruszka, William Griffin, Carl D. Groat, Charles F. Groves, Simon Guggenheim, Raymond M. Gunnison, Aubrey A. Graves, William V. Griffin, Burt P. Garnett, Mark L. Goodwin.

(H)—Britton Hadden, J. M. Haley, Dr. Adolf Halfeld, Fred P. Hall, C. C. Hamlin, Ben Hampton, Pitt P. Hand, O. B. Hanson, Yoshizide Hara, R. C. Harbison, W. F. Hardy, C. J. Harkreder, E. H. Harris, Richard T. Harriss, Joseph M. Hartfield, F. W. Hartford, Frank W. Harwood, Penn. G. Hastings, F. J. Hause, Wm. Hawkins, Jr., Clarence A. Hebb, Thomas F. Heffernan, Michel Hellinck, William A. Hendrick, Louis E. Henrichs, L. N. Heminger, Frank J. Hickey, Charles D. Hilles, Sir Charles Higham, V. L. Highland, Walter R. Hine, Frank S. Hoag, Gilbert T. Hodges, Curtis Hodges, William T. Hoffmann, Kenneth C. Hogate, Will C. Hogg, R. P. Holland, S. P. Hollingsworth, R. C. Holliss, Erie C. Hopwood, I. J. Hornstein, R. T. Houk, Jr., Ed. Howard, C. H. Howell, H. H. Howland, Charles W. Hoyt, R. A. Huber, A. W. Huckle, T. O. Huckle, Frederic Hudd, Rupert Hughes, Murray Hulbert, Frazier Hunt, Roger B. Hull, Abe Hurwitz, Norris A. Huse, Carl E. Howell, Theodore Huntley, Richard Holliday.

(I)—H. E. Ingley, Rodney R. Iredell, Will Irwin.

(J)—Harold D. Jacobs, Harold E. Johnson, Harold B. Johnson, Robert L. Johnson, Harry Johnston, G. Wilfred Johnstone, Nathan S. Jonas, Guy Jones, Jesse T. Jones, Lester L. Jones, Joseph L. Jones, Ralph M. Jones, Verne E. Joy, William B. Joyce, L. E. Judd, Morton F. Judd.

(K)—Arthur G. Kaster, Roy C. Kates, Geo. R. Katz, John A. Kautz, F. H. Keefe, Oliver J. Keller, John H. Kelly, A. C. Keifer, Minor C. Keith, Arthur H. Kent, Thomas M. Kennett, J. H. Kirchner, Maurice Ketten, R. Kilbon, Gen. J. Leslie Kincaid, O. A. Kingsbury, Irwin Kirkwood, K. Kitano, Dr. Klee, I. A. Klein, Gardiner Kline, David H. Knott, A. L. Kohnfelder, Alexander Konta, Walter W. Krebs, Alvin W. Krech, Hillier Kriegbaum, L. F. Keemle, William Scripps Kellogg.

(Continued on page 74)

Covering the Syracuse, N. Y. Territory On Sunday

SUNDAY NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION FACTS

The circulation of The Sunday Herald still continues to make a steady, healthy growth. While its present circulation is in excess of 80,000, the figures quoted in the following tables are taken from Publishers' Statements for six-month period ending Sept. 30, 1926, these being the last available statements.

City & Suburban (Circulation in Syracuse and nearby towns)

Sunday Herald.....48,735—64% of Herald's total circulation

Sunday Post-Standard.33,631—55% of Post-Standard's total circulation

Sunday American....26,472—34% of Journal's total circulation

In the city of Syracuse and towns immediately adjacent to the city, which territory is defined by the Audit Bureau of circulations as "City & Suburban," The Herald lead over the second paper, the Post-Standard, is 15,104 and The Herald lead over the third paper, the American, is 22,263.

Country—(Circulation in Territory 40 to 200 miles distant of Syracuse)

Sunday Herald.....27,582—36% of total circulation

Sunday Post-Standard.27,421—45% of total circulation

Sunday American....51,559—66% of total circulation

The total Sunday Herald Circulation for six-month period ending March 31st, 1927, was 80,463.

Of this amount more than 70,000 is delivered directly into the homes before breakfast by carrier boy.

SYRACUSE HERALD

National Representatives:

PRUDDEN, KING & PRUDDEN, Inc.

270 Madison Avenue, New York — Globe Building, Boston — 28 E. Jackson Blvd., Chicago

507 Montgomery St., San Francisco, California — Leary Building, Seattle, Washington — Chamber of Commerce Bldg., Los Angeles, California

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE AT U. P. DINNER

(Continued from page 73)

(L)—John T. Lambert, Clifford Langford-Baker, H. B. La Quatte, F. O. Larson, Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Latshaw, Russell Law, David Lawrence, George W. Lawrence, Philip Le Boutillier, James Melvin Lee, John R. Lehman, Simon Lehr, P. W. Lennen, R. E. Lent, Cecil Lescher, David L'Esperance, Mark A. Leuscher, Leonce Levy, Aryah Lewis, Isaac Lieberman, Dr. Clarence W. Lieb, Julius Lieb, Ray D. Lillibridge, E. K. Lindley, W. B. Lister, Julius Loeb, Chas. R. Long, Jess. E. Long, George Longan, Lee P. Loomis, Arthur Lorsch, Eugene Lorton, Edson S. Lott, Eric H. Louw, William B. Lowe, Adam K. Luke, Eugene Lyon, Arthur B. Lule, I. D. Levy, G. Gould Lincoln, G. W. Lahey, W. F. Lynch.

(Mac-Mc)—Heber MacDonald, Roger W. McAdam, Judge John V. McAvoy, Frank V. McCabe, George Ford McClelland, Charles B. McCabe, Alfred J. McCosker, Jackson McCoy, J. X. McCarthy, James S. McClolloh, Allen McCurdy, A. E. McElfresh, James McDonald, J. L. McGovern, Edward McGrail, John J. McGuirk, James H. McGraw, R. H. McKinney, David J. McLean, Virgil V. McNitt, Patterson McNutt, William Slavens McNutt, Noel S. Macneish, A. G. Macherds.

(M)—Paul R. Mallon, W. B. Manley, Charles P. Manship, James H. March, Lester Markel, C. C. Marquis, George Martin, J. W. T. Mason, Julian S. Mason, E. A. Mathis, Dr. R. A. Mattfeldt, John J. Mead, Sr., John J. Mead, Jr., S. C. Mead, Lowell Mellett, Augosto Merchen Y Cortes, Davis Merwin, Stephen O. Metcalf, Homer H. Metz, C. R. Mickall, Wilson Midgley, S. Midzutani, A. L. Miller, W. P. Milligan, John L. Miller, H. E. Mitchell, J. T. H. Mitchell, E. Walter Mockler, Herbert W. Moloney, James J. Montague, J. Montoux, Joseph A. Moore, L. T. Moore, J. C. Moore, Norman T. Moore, Hal Moore, Geo. D. Morris, Julius Moritzen, William J. Morton, F. R. Moses, Warren Moscow, Robert Mountsier, Penfield Mower, E. K. Moy, T. F. Mulhern, Ralph R. Mulligan, William Mullis, J. C. Muniz, J. Edwin Murphy, Julian S. Myrick, Cyril Morand, Irving H. Meehan, J. P. S. Mahoney, Fred P. Motz, E. A. Mathis.

(N)—National Broadcasting Co. Engineers, Jaroslav Novak, Dr. A. M Nawench, John Edwin Nevin, F. B. Newkirk, H. M. Newman, William R. Newman, New York Herald-Tribune, New York Mirror, New York Evening Post, New York American, New York Journal of Commerce, New York Evening Journal, New York Times (2).

(O)—Alfred S. O'Brien, J. Albert O'Brien, Morgan J. O'Brien, E. A. O'Hara, E. H. O'Hara, George A. Osborn, C. D. Osborne.

(P)—Wm. J. Pape, C. N. Palmer, Dean Palmer, John A. Park, W. J. Parrett, Duke Parry, Jeffrey Parsons, W. J. Pattison, Philip Payne, F. G. Pearce, W. J. Peck, J. Westbrook Pegler, B. B. Peritz, S. A. Perkins, W. H. Pettibone, Marlen E. Pew, F. W. Phelan, Delavan Pierson, Lewis E. Pierson, Amos R. E. Pinchot, A. H. Flatter, Leopold Plaut, D. B. Plum, William E. Plummer, V. C. Poe, H. S. Pollard, Talcott W. Powell, J. B. Powers, Herbert L. Pratt, E. A. Pratt, Frank Presbrey, E. W. Preston, L. C. Prudden, Joseph Fulitzer, Frank Panciatichi, Sir George Paish, A. T. Polyzoides, Paul Patterson.

(Q)—L. U. Quigley, James R. Quirk.

(R)—Henrikas Rabinavicius, Norman W. Ralston, H. H. Ramsay, Clem J. Randau, William H. Rankin, Harry Rascovar, George H. Reichard, Franklin Remington, Arthur Remmel, Stanley Resor, Samuel W. Reyburn, Harry D. Reynolds, Stanley M. Reynolds, M. P. Rice, F. St. J. Richards, George L. ("Tex") Rickard, Victor F. Ridder, C. F. Ridenour, Arthur Robb, Harold M. Robinson, Ralph Roddy, Henry Tait Rodier, Henry W. Rogers, Walter Rogers, H. Wolcott Rogers, Romeo R. Ronconi, Norman Rose, H. W. Ross, A. Rothman, C. A. Rowley, L. T. Russell, Arthur Ryan, John D. Ryan, Wilfred D. Ryan, P. R. Rincones.

(S)—Dr. Henry San, David Sarnoff, Eugene F. Saxton, H. W. Schaefer, John K. R. Schropp, H. M. Schultz, Lincoln Schuster, Philip Schuyler, Stuart S. Schuyler, Walter Scott, (Butler Bros.), Walter Scott, Allen H. Seed, Frank Seaman, J. W. Searles, Ellery Sedgwick, Alfred Segal, Luciano A. N. Servadio, H. W. Sharpe, Frank G. Shattuck, John Shattuck, Albert Shaw, S. C. Shaw, Clarence J. Shearn, William G. Shepherd, C. R. Shipley, Alfred Shriver, Frank B. Shutts, Thomas L. Sidlo, Harry Sifton, Leon Siler, Percy B. Scott, L. Siebert, S. V. Silverthorne, William Philip Simms, Robert E. Simon, Lincoln P. Simonds, E. E. Sinclair, Saul Singer, Arthur J. Sinnott, Munsey Slack, Daniel N. Slep, M. S. Sloan, David E. Smiley, H. Clinton Smith, Hugo Sonnenschein, Courtland Smith, Henry W. Snevily, J. R. Snyder, R. C. Snyder, Meyer Solmson, W. J. Southam, Merritt C. Speidel, Keats Speed, James Speyer, Major E. B. Stahlman, J. F. Stahlman, James G. Stahlman, Solomon Starr, F. A. Stanger, Charles A. Stauffer, Oscar S. Stauffer, Frank W. Stearns, T. H. Steinman, Charles Stelzle, Francis M. Stephenson, J. David Stern, Miles D. Stettenbenz, Max D. Steuer, Edward Ford Stevenson, E. R. Stevenson, E. T. Stevenson, Edwin A. Stillman, Allison Stone, William J. Stitt, Charles Strauss, W. L. Sturtevant, Frederick Sullens, J. D. Sullivan, Col. William D. Swart, Otis P. Swift, Alfred H. Swayne, E. Arthur Sweeny, Herbert Bayard Swope, C. O. Swain, Harry Swartz, Henry Sweinhart.

(T)—Moto Takata, James T. Tatman, Evan Taylor, Frank M. Taylor, Frank W. Taylor, Harry E. Taylor, John H. Tennant, W. Orton Tewson, Ted Thackerey, Barney Thompson, E. T. Tomlinson, Jr., Wm. A. Thompson, Dr. Van Buren Thorne, Merle Thorpe, M. S. Tinsley, C. H. Tobey, James Todd, Wm. H. Todd, Dr. Geo. V. Todorovitch, Roi Tolleson, Frank Tripp, Philip J. Troup Henry C. Turner, Morris D. Tracy, R. H. Turner, M. E. Tracy.

(U)—Samuel Ullman, Universal Service.

(V)—J. H. Vallette, Johnston Vance, A. H. Vandenberg, John W. Vandercook, C. T. Vanderslice, Dale Van Every, Emory C. Van Loan, Eugene C. Van Wyk, Oswald Garrison Villard.

(W)—C. D. Wagoner, Paul Wakefield, Richard H. Waldo, Fred A. Walker, Elmer Walzer, Harry H. Watson, Thos. J. Watson, Martin H. Weyrauch, Richard M. H. Wharton, H. F. Wheeler, John N. Wheeler, Paul W. White, Frederic William Wile, Louis Wiley, W. R. Willcox, A. J. Wilhelm, A. Wyn Williams, F. Douglas Williams, T. R. Williams, Glenn S. Williamson, Simeon R. Winch, B. Winchell, W. A. Winterbottom, C. E. Woodbridge, William H. Woodin, William S. Woods, M. J. Woodworth, H. E. Woolever, Lyle C. Wilson, Maj. Sherburne Whipple, Albert E. Wiggam, F. O. Watts, Harry D. Wright.

(X)—Edmund Xavier.

(Y)—G. R. de Ycaza, Kenneth Youell, Dwight Young, John R. Young, J. Russell Young, Samuel Youngheart.

(Z)—Dr. Laureano Zelaya, Alberto Zalamea.

PRESIDENT OF BRITISH U. P. IN NEW YORK

C. F. Crandall Tells Formation of His Company—Was Formerly Editor of Montreal Daily Star

C. F. Crandall, of Montreal, president of the British United Press, a news agency allied with the United Press Associations, and holding the exclusive rights to its news service throughout the British Empire, was in New York this week. His company, representing a new departure in world news distribution, is only four years old, but it already covers Canada and supplies the newspaper press of Australia and New Zealand, serves 40 of the leading newspapers of Great Britain and delivers a daily cable report to large and growing groups of papers in South Africa and India.

Mr. Crandall, who was editor of the Montreal Daily Star until the organization of British United Press, spends a good deal of his time commuting across the Atlantic and the Pacific.

"While our head office is in Montreal," he said to an EDITOR & PUBLISHER representative yesterday, "our London office is rapidly becoming our great center of activity and is going to take most of my time for the next few years. Already we are established in the leading cities of Great Britain—London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Birmingham, Sheffield, Leeds, Manchester, Newcastle, Darlington, Hull, etc. —and our clientele is steadily growing both in the old country and in the various dominions. In London, for instance, we have now as regular clients the Daily Mail, Lord Rothermere's morning paper, with its million and three quarters circulation, Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express, the Daily News, the Evening Star, the Evening Standard, the Daily Sketch, the Evening News, and a notable group of Sunday papers including the News of the World, which has a circulation of about 4,000,000.

"The basis of our service is the report of the United Press gathered by its bureaus and reporters, but we maintain our own offices, editors and correspondents in London and other world centers, particularly throughout the British Empire, to gather news of especial interest to our British field. All this news supply is pooled in our London offices and distributed thence throughout the Empire in accordance with the specialized news requirements of each section. In Great Britain we serve our newspapers direct. The same applies to Canada, India and South Africa. But in Australia we supply the Australian Press Association which covers the whole Commonwealth and through this agency alone our service reaches over 300 newspapers.

"We are a new association and the similarity of our names is apt to give rise to the impression that British United Press is merely a British subsidiary of United Press" added Mr. Crandall. "I wish you would make it clear that we are an entirely distinct organization, the control of which is British. While we receive, and to a large extent depend upon, the U. P. world news report this is supplemented, collated and edited for British consumption by our own staff which is entirely British."

The Space Buyers "great desideratum"

Laconic, practical, not to say cold-blooded space-buyers do, nevertheless, have their happier moments. They can't resist the urge to reach for the contract blanks when they come across a newspaper with —circulation concentrated in a natural market area

—circulation that on analysis shows character, quality and buying power —editorial content and clean news that add to the value of the advertisers sales message —typography and page make-up that do not kill the effectiveness of advertisements —an evening paper that is exclusively an evening paper with no "predates"

—an evening paper that advertisers buy on its own merits and not as a part of a compulsory combination of morning and evening editions.

The prestige of the Boston Evening Transcript as one of the outstanding newspapers in America, is the heritage of almost a century of square-dealing with both advertisers and readers.

Boston Evening Transcript

Highest ratio of BUYERS to readers

National Advertising Representatives

CHARLES H. EDDY CO. — Boston New York Chicago

R. J. BIDWELL CO. — San Francisco Los Angeles

The net paid

CIRCULATION

of

The Detroit Times

as published in the Post Office Statement for the six-month period, ending March 31, 1927, was

Sunday 326,875
Evening* 294,183

In comparison with the corresponding six months' period ending March 31, 1926, the average net paid circulation of the Detroit Times shows an Increase of 22,096 Sundays

Increase of 52,702 Evenings*

Circulation Growth of The Detroit Times

Six Months Averages Ending March 31

	Evening (Except Saturdays)	Sunday
1922	62,342	(No Sunday Issues)
1923	156,125	160,760
1924	197,224	222,430
1925	220,243	271,731
1926	241,481	304,779
1927	294,183	326,875

The Net Paid Averages for MARCH ONLY:

Sunday . . . 337,520
Evening* . . . 308,531

*Evening Except Saturday

EDITORIAL

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH

DISCUSSING American foreign relations and the duties of the American newspaper with particular reference to news treatment of foreign affairs, President Coolidge delivered at the United Press Association's banquet one of the most important pronouncements of his public career.

The President stressed the growth and power of our press and its increased concurrent obligations. He said it is axiomatic that a free press can exist only in a free country, and might have added, we think, that no country can be free with a press that is not free. At this point in the address Mr. Coolidge said: "Where the press is free, as it is in our country under the guarantees of the national and state constitutions, it has a reciprocal duty of its own to perform toward the administration of the government, of giving true reports to the people of the actions of public officials." No honest journalist could quarrel with this claim on truth. Nor can there be any difference of opinion on Mr. Coolidge's condemnation of "malicious and misleading partisan attacks on the conduct of our government in its efforts to defend American rights when they are threatened or invaded in foreign countries." At this point Mr. Coolidge presented a philosophy which must challenge widespread debate. For our part we are in total disagreement with it, and sincerely regret that it continues to be Mr. Coolidge's view.

Speaking of his objection to newspaper criticism of the government's foreign policy, the President said that such criticism weakens the government's hand with other governments. "When," he said, "such an attitude becomes known in the offending country, it is widely quoted there, and when all other arguments have been answered becomes their chief reliance for maintaining their position."

The meaning of these remarks is crystal clear. Mr. Coolidge is of the political school that believes that good journalism must necessarily follow the lead of the government in foreign affairs. When the Secretary of State, for instance, sets out upon negotiations with a foreign government he should feel that, right or wrong, the press of the United States is behind him. Nothing contrary to the policy of the government must be published lest it reach the officials of foreign governments with whom our State Department is dealing and give them and their people aid and comfort.

New York Herald Tribune believes that the President is right in this contention, and in a strong editorial on the morning following the utterance at the Biltmore entered the debate with these remarks:

"The President was justified in reproving that portion of the American press which assumes so largely that whatever the Administration does in foreign affairs must be wrong. Why should the position of a foreign government or of a foreign revolutionary faction always seem the more righteous? Why attack American interests abroad instead of befriending them or at least giving them a fair hearing? Such bushwhacking embarrasses our diplomacy. In so far as it is due to domestic partisanship it is inexcusable and odious. As the President says: 'An American press which has all the privileges which it enjoys under our institutions, and which derives its support from the progress and well-being of our people, ought to be first of all thoroughly American.' The trouble with many of these critics is not only that they lean recklessly to the anti-American view of the case, but that they misunderstand and misrepresent international law."

EDITOR & PUBLISHER does not believe for an instant that there is in this country a section of the press that can be fairly called "un-American," engaged in bushwhacking any administration to maliciously embarrass diplomacy. The very best proof that there is no such press is that un-Americanism is the most perilous journalistic pursuit that can be imagined. Such newspapers die promptly at the hands of good citizenship. There is partisanship on public causes in this country, among both the people and the press, but who shall say that it is malicious?

We agree with the New York Times that Mr. Coolidge's stand on what the press should do in foreign relations is not only "difficult of attainment" but undesirable. There is no power to induce the American newspapers to speak with one voice, nor would it be advisable if possible. "Better have foolish and querulous things said by the press in the exercise of the judgment of individual newspapers rather than strive for a harmony which everybody would know to be artificial and meaningless," aptly says the Times.

Our feeling in this matter is that a government that is not strong enough to stand the battering of all kinds of decent criticism, intelligent and unintelligent, hot and cool, wise and foolish, is a faulty government. We do not, by the same token, expect to find a newspaper press, always merely a human expression, that is unanimously right or even sensible on all public questions. For our part we love the ceaseless controversy because it truly represents the spirit of democracy in the land. The danger is that the people will not discuss foreign relations and have diverse opinions concerning them. The danger is that the guide lines of public opinion will fade and disappear in a fog of apathy and put absolute power into the hands of government officials. The impenetrable problem always is that any public official operating in our scheme of life should want to pursue an uncriticized public course in anything.

When the American government presents a foreign policy that appeals to the intelligence, patriotism and sense of justice of the American people there is no question, nor has there ever been any question that the government can count upon the united support of the people and the press. When foreign or domestic affairs are questionable the people and the newspapers that express public thought will be found exercising their constitutional liberty by discussing them freely. When a federal officer is mistaken in a foreign policy he may continue confidently to expect the checks of criticism, for the press of this country will never subscribe to Mr. Coolidge's philosophy of blind following.

It would be a strange and twisted mind that would view Mr. Coolidge as anything but a peace-loving, earnest man who speaks his candid thought. We think he is badly mistaken in this matter, but honor the sincerity and frankness of his address. When Mr. Coolidge drops the foolish "spokesman" idea and dismisses the view that newspapers to serve must merely follow he will have greatly endeared himself to the newspaper profession and, may we venture, strengthened his role in his high office.

And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born. Acts of St. Paul, XXII; 28.

IN COMMITTEE'S HANDS

THE notable action of the Associated Press membership this week was the unanimous adoption of a resolution entrusting to a committee of six responsibility for solving the problems related to the bond rate and protest rights. The six men are representative of the two schools of thought on these subjects. They are to report to the membership, either at the next annual convention or, if feasible, at a special meeting in the interim. This action ends the debate. The directors have recommended reapportionment of the bonds to equalize voting privileges. With such a step taken adjustment of the protest rights situation seems merely a matter of legality and technicality which can best be worked out in committee.

Frank B. Noyes starts his 27th year as president of the organization, an unparalled honor in American journalism. Appropriate selections of officers and directors to support him were made. As the convention closed Mr. Noyes said "This is the happiest day of my life." It was the shortest speech ever made to the A. P. membership and was plainly fraught with a world of meaning.

UNITED PRESS BIRTHDAY

WITH the President of the United States honoring the occasion the celebration in New York this week of the 20th anniversary of United Press Associations was a brilliant event, marking a new milestone in the progress of that news organization. Our pages reflect not only the gaiety of the jubilee but tell in detail the story of the U. P. rise to its present plane of influence and service to the reading public of the world.

It is a remarkable story of success, based upon a journalistic code of idealism that found origin in the fertile imagination of the late E. W. Scripps. Twenty years ago Mr. Scripps and his associates determined that their previous struggling efforts to establish independent news agencies, which would be open to any newspaper with the price to pay for service, represented a correct policy. They believed it to be democratic and good newspaper practice. So, from the old Scripps-McRae, Publishers' Press and Scripps-Blade services, which had divided the territory of the United States, the United Press Associations was formed. Milton A. McRae, John Vandercook, Hamilton B. Clark, Roy W. Howard and others were the prime movers in the execution of the new organization that bore the appropriate title United. From the first day's operation the United Press has been an aggressive, able contender in the news field and its twentieth birthday sees it as a world-wide power, influential beyond the dreams of any of its founders.

It seems to EDITOR & PUBLISHER a singularly pleasant incident that this week of publishers' meetings in New York, traditionally emphasizing the progress of Associated Press, should this year conspicuously divide honors with United Press and the great group that follow its particular policies and philosophies. International News Service and Universal Service, as usual, entertained a large group of publishers who are devoted to those organizations and their policies. Our pages tell of numerous other entertainments during the week by other groups. Surely the great American publisher was called upon to step lively in New York this April to accept the hospitality and entertainment offered by the caterers to newspaper service. It has been a joyous occasion, with generous fraternizing of all naturally rivalous factors, all in the spirit of American journalistic good-will and progress.

DEFENSE

A FUND to aid Editor H. M. Flanders, of the Soperton (Ga.) News is being raised by the Greensboro (Ga.) Herald-Journal, and with splendid fraternal spirit the newspapers of the state are supporting the project.

Mr. Flanders, it will be recalled, is the editor who has been the target for infamous abuse by impudent ruffians in his county because he dared attack the illegal manufacture and sale of booze. Several years ago the editor was shot down on the streets of Soperton by Crosby Williams, a local merchant, whose ignorance and brutality are suggested by the fact that he could only answer the editor's arguments with gunfire. The attack was completely unjustified, but Williams was sentenced to only a year's imprisonment. He did not even serve the full year.

A few weeks ago another gang of "respectable" Soperton men, cowardly as Williams and determined to have their liquor without the objection of the local press, seized upon the crippled editor on a desolate road and unmercifully flogged him. Now his health seems ruined. His nervous system is broken and the abuse of the thugs has deprived him of his hearing. He cannot earn a living.

"The Flanders Fund will be turned over to this tortured brother editor to use as he deems fit," said J. C. Williams, editor and proprietor of the Greensboro Herald-Journal. "We shall be glad to receive contributions from any sympathizer anywhere."

Conscientious newspaper men in many cities and towns are on the defensive in support of law and order in the present amazingly desperate stage of our national life. Their enemies are powerful crooks who want to make money from illicit booze traffic and from half-crazed whiskey addicts. Human life is cheap as dirt to these fiendish people. If your heart is touched by the spectacle of an editor who was willing to sacrifice his blood and tissue in defense of the highest principle of citizenship send a check to J. C. Williams, Greensboro Herald-Journal, Greensboro, Ga.

PERSONAL

ADOLPH S. OCHS, publisher of the New York Times, was elected a vice-president of the Tennessee Society at its annual meeting held this week at the Yale Club in New York. Mr. Ochs started his newspaper career as a carrier boy in Knoxville. He is also owner of the Chattanooga Times. George W. Oakes was elected a trustee by the same society.

Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, editor of the Richmond (Va.) News-Leader, recently addressed the North Carolina Bankers' Association at Pinehurst, N. C.

John H. Fahey, publisher of the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post and a former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce will be one of the principal speakers at the third Pan-American commercial conference which is to be held in Washington, May 2.

Grove Patterson, editor of the Toledo Blade, will be the speaker at the fifth annual labor contests of Berea College, May 12, according to an announcement by President William J. Hutchins of that institution.

T. Roy Champion, editor and manager of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union Star, has been nominated for the presidency of the Rotary club at Schenectady.

Capt. Roland F. Andrews, editor of the Worcester Telegram-Gazette, was toastmaster at the annual Army-Navy Dinner held by the military organizations of that city recently.

Justin Barry, editor of the Cherokee (Ia.) Times has been elected delegate of the Cherokee Rotary club to represent it at the Rotary International in Ostend, Belgium, this summer.

L. F. Richardson, editor of the Sheffield (Ill.) Times, has been appointed postmaster and will assume his new duties at once. He has been editor of the Sheffield paper five years.

William Repine, editor of the Tiskilwa (Ill.) Chief, has been appointed postmaster in Tiskilwa.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

HARRY C. MILHOLLAND, business manager of the Pittsburgh Press, accompanied by Mrs. Milholland left recently for a tour abroad

Seymour Spring has been named national advertising manager of the Yakima (Wash.) Daily Republic and the Yakima Morning Herald. He replaces Jay J. Ector, who has been in this position for the last two years. Mr. Ector is leaving to enter an insurance firm as a partner.

Douglas V. Martin, Jr., manager of publicity for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, spoke recently before the "Big Men's" Class of the Compton Heights Christian Church, there, on "Church Advertising."

Paul W. Denman, associated with the Plant City (Fla.) Courier for more than a year, latterly as business manager, left Friday for Gainesville and Tallahassee, on a vacation jaunt.

Archibald Young has been named office manager of the Miami Daily News. C. E. Thomson has been named feature advertising manager.

Ed. Olson, formerly traveling representative of the Kansas City Star has joined the staff of the Shawnee (Okla.) Morning News.

George F. Lechler has been appointed local display advertising manager of the Miami Daily News.

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOMS

MORRIS G. YOUNG, reporter of the Indianapolis (Ind.) Times, has been named editor of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce Activities, monthly official publication.

Edwin B. Haakinson has been advanced from day police reporter to city editor of the Sioux City (Ia.) Tribune, succeeding Merle M. Moone, who resigned to join the publicity department of the Northwestern Telephone Company at Omaha. Mr. Haakinson has been on the Tribune seven years. Harold Nelson, formerly night police reporter, has taken the day police beat and Frank Helm has joined the staff as night police reporter.

Col. John S. Barrows of the Boston (Mass.) Transcript staff, spoke before the Fall River, Mass., Historical Society on April 18 on "The Famous Battle Between the Constitution and the Guerriere."

Mr. and Mrs. Paul F. Sifton are the parents of a son, born April 17. Sifton is a member of the staff of the New York World. Mrs. Sifton, the former Claire Ginsburg, was graduated from the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri in 1920 and was the first woman instructor in that school. She has done newspaper and magazine writing and editing in Chicago and New York.

Kenneth Duncan, formerly news editor, Toledo News-Bee, has resigned.

W. P. Huntington, formerly editor of the old Columbus (O.) Press-Post, but now editorial writer for the Toledo Times, addressed the forum of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, April 18 on "Days With Henry Watterson." Mr. Hutington is secretary of the Perry's Victory Memorial Association at Toledo.

Sam Jones, Toledo Blade reporter, is in Africa visiting regions which are not usually included on the tourist's itinerary.

George Straight has resigned as copy reader for the Toledo News-Bee.

Joseph R. Lilly of the Brooklyn Eagle's reportorial staff, has returned to duty after a leave of absence granted him for the purpose of writing a novel.

Naboth Hedin, manager of the American-Swedish News Exchange in Manhattan, and formerly Paris correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle, sails for Sweden on May 5, to be absent for about two months.

Kenneth Duncan, former news editor of the Toledo News-Bee, has joined the executive staff of the Springfield Union.

George W. Savage, for two years publicity director at Pomona, Cal., college, has resigned to join the San Diego (Cal.) Sun.

Bob Stanton, sports editor, Toledo News-Bee, has resigned. He is succeeded by Earl Aiken who has been a member of the News-Bee staff for years.

MARRIED

WALTER J. MONAGHAN, telegraph editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, to Miss Adele K. Knaus, in that city recently.

Leslie E. Moore, financial editor of the New Haven (Conn.) Evening Register, to Miss Margaret Caffery of that city, feature writer for New Haven and Bridgeport newspapers, April 17 at New Haven.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

CHARLES F. SPEARE, who has succeeded the late Stuart P. West as financial writer for the Consolidated Press Association, resigned the post of counselor on investments to Brown Brothers & Co., to return to newspaper work, his first love. He had left the staff of the New York Evening Mail in 1919 to become associated with the banking house.

CHARLES F. SPEARE

Throughout his entire career, both as newspaper man and bank advisor, Mr. Speare has been a first-hand student of finance and has traveled widely to familiarize himself with the physical assets behind the securities with which his work was concerned.

Despite his responsibilities with the Brown Brothers & Co. organization, Mr. Speare continued his writings.

For several years he contributed a monthly financial article to the Review of Reviews, and conducted the investment column of the magazine. He has written frequently for the American Bankers Journal, organ of the American Bankers Association, devoting himself in these articles to the field of railroad securities and foreign investments.

CHANGES OF OWNERSHIP

G. L. HANSEN of Wasta, S. D. has sold the New Underwood (S. D.) Times to A. G. Snesrud, who has been acting editor the last 15 months.

Waldo and Wendell Wettengel, brothers, last week purchased the Covington (Okla.) Record from W. S. Martz, former publisher.

SPECIAL EDITIONS

BOSTON (Mass.) EVENING TRANSCRIPT, annual Spring Yachting section edited by William U. Swan, 8 pages, April 17.

Boston (Mass.) Herald, Easter Church music section. 18 pages, April 16.

New York Herald Tribune, Model Home gravure section, four pages, April 17.

Marblehead (Mass.) Messenger an 8-page special section, "Marblehead Development Number," April 22.

Quincy (Mass.) Patriot Ledger, annual Real Estate number, April 16, 20 pages.

Three Good Features by One Writer

Full of Human Interest That Is Not Sob Stuff

A GAY WRITER AND A GOOD ONE

ROE FULKERSON

Sunday Morning Breakfast—Weekly
Andrew and Imogene—Daily
Hotel Stenographer—Daily

The McNaught Syndicate, Inc.

V. V. McNitt, President — Times Building, New York — Charles V. McAdam, Vice President

ELLA CINDERS DAILY STRIP SUNDAY PAGE

"It is not often that we have a feature about the popularity of which there is no argument. In the case of Ella Cinders, the verdict seems to be unanimous for Ella."

Marvin Creager,
Managing Editor,
The Milwaukee Journal

The Ella Cinders Strip and Page are syndicated by Metropolitan Newspaper Service, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

ON THE MECHANICAL SIDE

A CHARITY ball was held Monday night April 25 at the Elks home in Boston by the three Boston printing pressmen's unions. The proceeds will be devoted to the widows' and orphans' fund of the union. John A. Dart was general chairman of the committee. John A. Badaracco, president of the Web Pressmen's union, was vice-chairman; William J. Barrus, secretary and George Gallagher, treasurer. Maj. George L. Berry, international president was present.

W. J. Rollman of the Lancaster Intelligencer has been elected a director of the Central Pennsylvania Typothetæ. Mr. Rollman is manager of the printing department.

Thomas J. Conway, Jr., employed in the Boston (Mass.) Globe composing room was the recipient of a purse of gold from his fellow workers last week marking his approaching marriage to Miss Margaret Norton of Revere, Mass. James Leggett made the presentation.

SCHOOLS

WILFRED HENSCHEL, Brooklyn, has been elected editor-in-chief of The Pioneer, the student newspaper at Cooper Union, for 1927-28. William Vanderhout, Queens Village, N. Y., has been named managing editor and Merle Koblish, Jackson Heights, L. I., associate editor. The new business manager will be Raymond Kunz, Union City, N. J.

Sol Abrahamson, editor of the Daily Emerald, student publication at the University of Oregon, is making a fight for freedom of the press in that institution. The student council recently issued an edict that the editor of the Emerald must submit to the council for approval all editorial policies before supporting them in the Emerald. Abrahamson balked at this and has been getting support for his stand by telegraphing to editors of newspapers throughout the Pacific Northwest. The journalism faculty of the university is said to support the stand of the student editor that the Emerald should be a "free press."

Parsons college, Fairfield, Ia., has chosen Friday, May 13, as the date for its second annual Journalism Day. Among the speakers expected to be present are William Allen White of Emporia, Kan.; Harvey Ingham, editor, Des Moines Register, and Gov. John Hammill of Iowa. Newspaper editors of southeastern Iowa have been invited to attend.

ASSOCIATIONS

ADVERTISING representatives of the Portland newspapers were given ten minutes each recently to tell the PORTLAND ADVERTISING CLUB why their respective newspapers were best for advertisers. Those participating were: Joseph A. Davidson, local advertising manager of the Oregonian; Harry Failing, advertising director of the Oregon Journal; F. C. Dahlquist, advertising manager of the Telegram, and C. W. Myers, advertising manager of the News.

Annual Spring dance of the EAGLE CLUB of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle will be held on Tuesday evening, April 26.

Fifteenth annual dinner-dance of the BROOKLYN PRESS CLUB was held Tuesday evening at the Hotel Imperial. Year books were distributed.

Louis H. Hastings, past president, with Robert E. Lamb and Allen Adams, have been appointed a nominating committee for the ADVERTISING CLUB of WORCESTER, Mass., to arrange for the election on May 18. George H. Johnson is now president.

ADVERTISING CLUBS of ILLINOIS will not hold a state convention this year, C. H. Fernald, college of commerce and business administration, University of Illinois, acting president of the state organization, announced this week. Proximity of the Denver, Col. convention and failure to get plans started for a state meeting, resulted in decision to abandon the convention.

KIRBY VIEWS MURDER TRIAL REPORTING

SECTION OF THE PRESS IN THE MURDER TRIAL

ADVERTISING CLUB of BOSTON, Mass., held its first social event of the season at the Statler Hotel, Georgian room, Tuesday evening, in the form of a dance and buffet supper. Sir Charles Higham was the speaker at the meeting of the club Tuesday. Major Patrick J. O'Keefe, president of the club, presided.

Thirtieth annual dinner of the PRESS LEAGUE of BERKS and MONTGOMERY COUNTIES was held at the Berkshire Hotel, Reading, Pa., on April 23. The annual election resulted as follows: President, John W. Sprenkle of the Perkasie, News; vice-president, Dr. C. Q. Hillegas, Pennsburg, Town and Country; secretary, Marco G. Bean, Sellersville, Herald, and B. Whitman Dambly, Skippeck Transcript, treasurer.

William G. Hay, known to radio fans as Bill Hay, manager of WGN, the Chicago Tribune radio station, has been elected president of the CHICAGO BROADCASTERS' ASSOCIATION. He succeeds Robert B. Beniel, director of WEBH, the Chicago Herald and Examiner station. Miss Judith Waller of WMAQ, the Chicago Daily News station, was re-elected secretary and treasurer.

Annual convention of the EASTERN INTERCOLLEGIATE NEWSPAPER ASSOCIATION will be held at Amherst College May 6 and 7 with a dinner Friday night. C. W. Cole of Amherst is president of the association, with E. T. Richards of Brown vice-president.

Thirty-fifth annual convention of the KANSAS EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION will be held at Topeka Friday, May 6. Jack Harrison of Beloit, president of the Association, is arranging the program.

BOSTON CLUB OF PRINTING HOUSE CRAFTSMEN were addressed by Arthur S. Allen, of the Ruxton Color Service, New York, at their meeting last week at the Hotel Westminster, Boston.

NEW ENGLAND WOMEN'S PRESS ASSOCIATION, meeting at the Hotel Victoria in Boston last week, voted to raise the annual dues to $3 to meet the increasing expenses of the association. Four new members were elected. Announcement was made that the annual breakfast of the club would take place on May 4 at the Hotel Victoria.

A round-table discussion of newspaper problems featured the informal luncheon of the New England Newspaper Alliance at the Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, April 20. Among those present were Frank C. Hoyt, Fitchburg (Mass.) Sentinel; James A. Hardman, North Adams (Mass.) Transcript; T. F. Dwyer, Providence (R. I.) Tribune; Frank E. Phillips, manager, New England Daily Newspaper Association; William J. Pape, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American; Charles Morse, Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette; J. P. S. Mahoney, Lawrence (Mass.) Telegram-Sun; John C. Harringston, Lowell (Mass.) Sun; William H. Reed, Taunton (Mass.) Gazette; Col. Frank Knox, Manchester (N. H.) Union and regional director of the Hearst newspapers; Robert L. Wright, Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette; Charles H. Hastings, Lynn (Mass.) Item, and Charles L. Fuller, of the Brockton (Mass.) Enterprise.

FLASHES

An appropriate name for Sinful Sinclair's latest book would have been "A Clerical Error."—Milwaukee Journal.

"Have another" has been superseded by "Ask me another."—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

Paris evidently is trying to be known as the Reno of France.—J. J. Montague in New York Herald Tribune.

Another thing George Washington in his policy of fine aloofness from foreign messes did not have to worry about was American oil companies, sewing machine agents, tobacco representatives and missionaries all becoming, at critical moments "nationals" to be protected at any cost.—Columbia State.

Pullman Company lost half a million in three months, which will afford fiendish delight to its insomnia victims.—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

Does college education pay after all? The only two robberies we ever heard of co-eds attempting were dismal failures. —Worcester (Mass.) Post.

Difference between a taxidermist and a taxi driver is that the latter skins only human animals.—Wall Street Journal.

Some men marry for looks, but not for the kind they get when they come home late for dinner.—Boston Transcript.

ST. REGIS
Paper Company

Manufacturers of High Grade

Newsprint and Catalog Paper

General Sales Offices

49 Wall Street, New York City

Branch office: Farmers Bank Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.

10,989 MILES OF GOOD ROADS plus 685,532 MOTOR CARS in AMERICA'S 3rd MARKET

IN these twenty-five Michigan counties that make up the Greater Detroit market, 10,989 miles of good roads assure to the owners of 685,532 motor cars safe and rapid transportation to any part of the area.

¶

Thus Bay City in Bay County, Battle Creek in Calhoun County or Lansing in Ingham County are less than one hundred eighty minutes from the Detroit City Hall.

¶

These thousands of miles of roads plus an automobile for every four persons are the links that weld this remarkable market into a compact homogeneous whole providing easy selling for the advertiser and easy buying for the consumer.

In these twenty-five counties are 538,828 homes. Every other home in the area is influenced by The Detroit Free Press—a coverage of one of America's greatest markets that literally guarantees the greatest possible measure of advertising responsiveness at lowest cost.

The Detroit Free Press

Starts the Day in Detroit

VERREE & CONKLIN, Inc.
National Representatives

New York Chicago Detroit San Francisco

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

General Motors Reports New High Net—Continental Motors Executives Complete Air Trip—Van Wie Resigns from Beechnut Company

GENERAL Motors Corporation reported a new high record of $52,551,408 in net earnings for the first quarter of 1927, comparing with $44,911,618 an increase of $7,639,790. Alfred P. Sloan, president, reported present conditions as satisfactory. The advertising program of the General Motors Corporation is notable for its comprehensiveness. The bulk of money invested in promotion is placed in newspaper space. Verne Burnett is secretary of the advertising committee of the General Motors Corporation.

Ross Judson, president, W. R. Angell, executive vice-president, and Harry D. Kline, advertising manager of the Continental Motors Corporation, have completed an 8,000-mile trip to the Pacific Coast in a giant three-motored Fokker.

The storage battery business of the Prest-O-Lite Company has been sold to the Prest-O-Light Storage Battery Corporation, a new company wholly controlled by the Automotive Corporation of New York, which in turn is controlled by the heads of United States Light and Heat, which makes USL batteries.

Seaman Brothers, Inc., distributors of White Rose Quality Products, is buying newspaper space in New York to call attention of women to a slogan contest it is conducting to obtain copy for a car card to be displayed next fall.

In the newspaper advertisement the purpose of the car card is explained as two-fold:

1. To impress women with the fact that besides White Rose Food Tea, Seaman Brothers also market other food products.

2. To impress women with the fact that other White Rose Products have the same uniform high quality as White Rose Tea.

Stanton Van Wie has resigned as advertising manager of the Beechnut Packing Company, at Canajoharie, N. Y. He has accepted a similar position for the Hecker H-O Company of Buffalo. He was with the Beechnut company for nine years.

W. A. Sheaffer, president of the W. A. Sheaffer Pen Company, has returned to his desk at Fort Madison, Ia., after spending more than three months in Florida.

Robert H. Bennett has joined the advertising department of the Postum Company, Inc., and will be in charge of export advertising. Mr. Bennett was formerly assistant advertising manager for the Devoe & Raynolds Co., Inc., and prior to that was with the Ajax Advertising Agency, New York City.

"A careful study has convinced our company," said T. T. Boulware, national representative of the Thompson's Malted Milk Company, "that the daily newspaper is the best medium to carry an advertising message into the home." Mr. Boulware was speaking before a group of business men at Worcester, Mass.

A list of 815 newspapers is being used by Anheuser-Busch, St. Louis, to promote the sale of Budweiser Real Hop Malt Syrup. The copy will be placed in frequent insertions from now until September.

Since its introduction, sales of Budweiser Malt have climbed so rapidly that it was recently necessary for Anheuser-Busch to double production facilities in order to produce Budweiser Real Hop Malt rapidly enough to take care of current business. The new unit recently added to the hop-malt division is now in operation, and is expected to take care of production demands during the next few months at least.

Explaining the sensational progress made by Budweiser Real Hop Malt Syrup since 1924, an Anheuser-Busch official said: "Three things are responsible. First, we have a product that repeats. Second, we are proud to put our name on the label—and the American people have learned through experience that we never put our name on a product until we know that that product represents the finest quality that can be produced. Third, we back our product with consistent, uninterrupted advertising in the medium that is read by the people who are the real buyers of hop malt—the daily newspaper."

L. C. Stowell, president of the Dictaphone Sales Corporation of New York, spoke last week before a meeting of the Quota Club at Worcester, Mass.

An advertisement, placed by Lever Brothers of Cambridge, promoting Lux, won last week's award in the Prize Review of Current Advertising being conducted by the Boston American, under the direction of H. James Gediman, department of research and promotion. According to the American's plan, Lever Brothers received a receipted bill for the cost of the Lux advertisement. The judges agreed that the advertisement "achieved a compelling eye rythm and an effect of neatness, cleanliness and whiteness" and that the copy succeeded in "presenting a unified appeal, appearance and impression." The Lux advertising is handled by the J. Walter Thompson Company.

Judges in the American's contest were:

Allen H. Wood, president of Wood, Putnam & Wood Company.

George G. Rorke, District Superintendent, Dictaphone Sales Corporation.

Ralph E. Conder, advertising manager, Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co., Cambridge.

Floyd L. Miller, the Barta Press, Cambridge.

Jacob S. Witchert, publicity manager, Mellins Food Company.

Lucian L. King, advertising manager of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company for the past fifteen years, has announced his resignation from the Goodyear organization effective May 1.

Mr. King has been with the Goodyear advertising department since 1911 and was named manager shortly after becoming identified with the Akron rubber company.

He has been a director of the Audit Bureau of Circulation for many years, Goodyear representative in the Association of National Advertisers, and other like organizations. His experience covers all advertising mediums, including radio as he was manager of the Goodyear station "WEAR" at Cleveland during its existence.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

C. H. Bradley Joins Chandler & Co.—Dorrance, Sullivan Get German Cocoa Account—Nathan Agency Opens Seattle Office—Slater Opens Own Agency in Albany

CHARLES H. BRADLEY, Jr., who has been in advertising agency work in Boston since 1913 and who for the past eight years has conducted an agency under the name of Bradley, Incorporated, has joined the Cleveland A. Chandler & Co., advertising agency, Boston. Mr. Bradley will continue personally to supervise the accounts which he has been handling.

The Reichardt Cocoa & Chocolate Co., Inc., New York, the American Division of the Kakao-Kompogriel Theodore Reichardt G. M. B. H. Wandsbek-Hamburg, Germany, has placed its advertising account with Dorrance, Sullivan & Company. Pending the completion of large American factory, plans for which are under way, Reichardt products will be placed on the American market including Reichardt's Malted Milk Cocoa and various Reichardt Cocoa and Chocolate products, as well as Reichardt's Chocolate Dessert. Plans for introductory newspaper campaign are being prepared and will be released in the early summer months.

Edwad N. Nathan Advertising Agency, Chamber of Commerce building, Los Angeles, Cal., has opened a new branch in Seattle, Wash., the third link in a chain of offices giving service in the Pacific Coast. Hal Nelson, former Pacific Coast newspaperman, is in charge of the office located in the Lloyd building, Stewart street. Mr. Nathan opened his first office in Los Angeles seven years ago and added an office in San Francisco about four years later.

Samuel Slater, for six years with the Lurie Department store of Albany, N. Y., and for eight years with the Federmann Stores syndicate in advertising and sales promotion work, has returned to Albany and opened his own offices at 50 Green street. He is engaging in a general advertising and sales promotion business.

The Haskell Sign Service & Poster Advertising Company, 17 West Harrison St., Danville, Ill., has been sold to Burt T. Loveridge of Ottawa, Ill., and associates. M. J. Haskell, former owner, will continue as president and retains stock in the new corporation which took over the business.

Charles E. Townsend, associate editor of the Advertisers' Weekly and formerly of the Federal Advertising Agency, has joined the staff of Barron G. Collier, Inc., New York. Mr. Townsend will edit a promotional publication soon to be issued by the latter firm.

The Bush Terminal Company, New York, operating extensive warehousing, distribution and manufacturing facilities, together with a large sales building and Bush House in London, have retained Reimers & Osborn, Inc., New York advertising agency, to handle their account.

MILL TO BE "OPEN SHOP"

Officials of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers at headquarters in Albany have announced that an agreement has been made allowing employes of the DeGrasse Paper mill, to be taken over by the International Paper Company, to work under an "open shop" plan. All fear of a strike is now believed past. The DeGrasse mill specializes in newsprint paper.

THE SIOUX CITY TRIBUNE.

HOME EDITION SIOUX CITY, IA., FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, 1927 22 PAGES

TERY IS SCENE OF HUNT FOR GREAT TREA

Now Set in Ionic No. 5

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

TODAY'S QUESTION

What do you think of The Tribune's new type dress?

THE ANSWERS

E. C. Lidster, 10 Shore Acre court, optometrist—I think it makes reading much easier. The printing stands out more and seems to relieve much of the glare that was present when the old type was used.

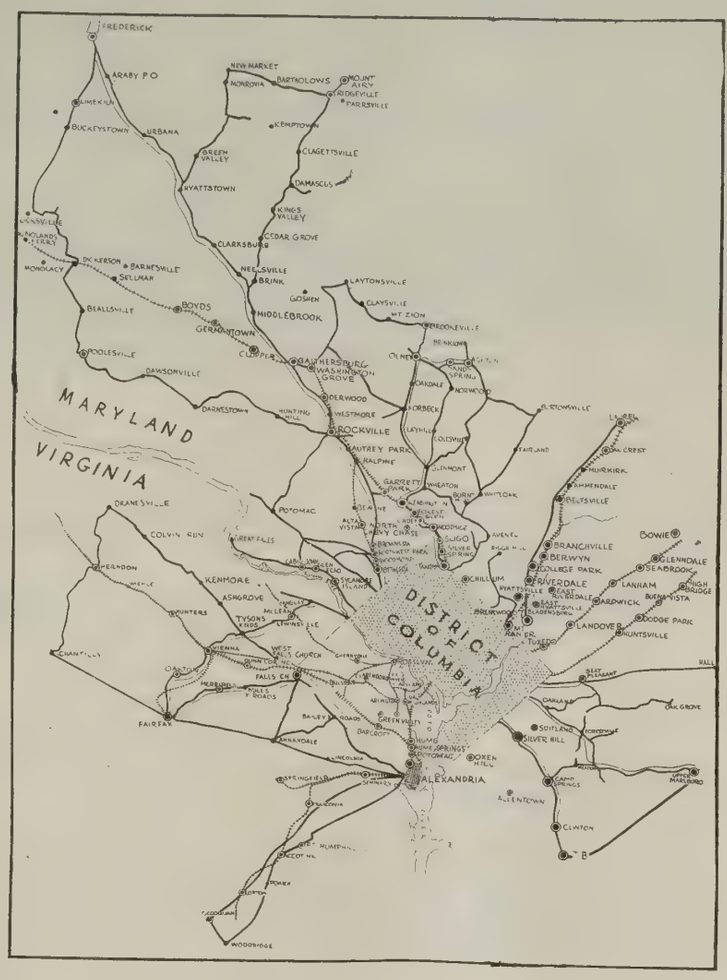
Dr. L. R. Tripp, 3236 Jackson street, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist—Well, it should be productive of less eye strain for prolonged reading. And I think it makes quick reading easier.

Mrs. L. A. Soderstrom, 1115 Hill avenue, graduate nurse (eye specialist's assistant)—I think it is quite an improvement. It makes reading lots easier.

M. Blank, 2324 Grandview boulevard, optometrist—I have taken special notice of the new type and I think it is a wonderful aid to people with poor vision. It brings the printing out very clear for them. And I think that it makes reading in general easier and more pleasant.

R. C. Green, Chicago, salesman—It makes the paper very much easier to read.

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY



Brooklyn, New York

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

LINOTYPED IN THE CLOISTER FAMILY

This Is A Rich Market

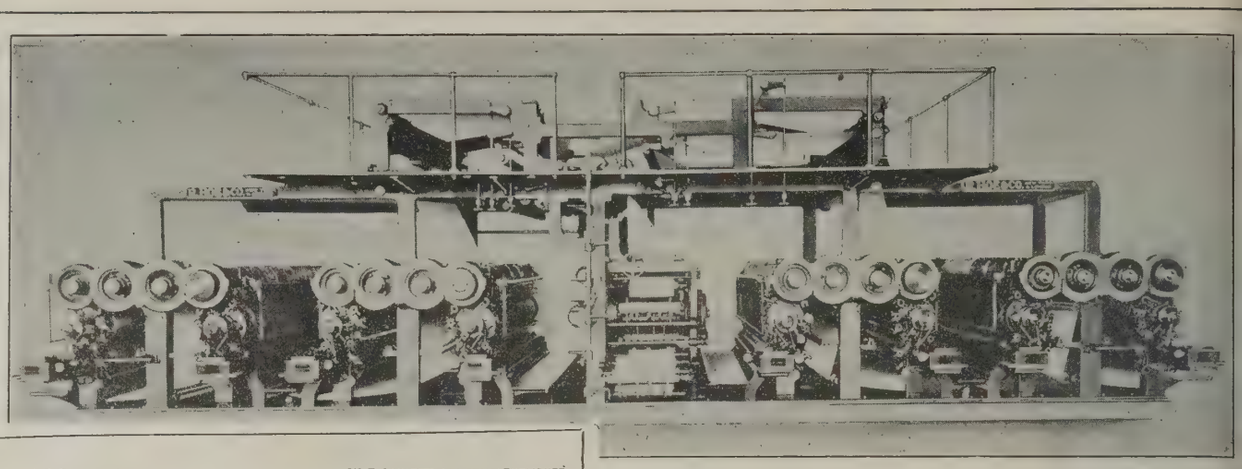
Of Which Washington, D. C. Is The Center

The map shows the extent and direction of The Star's direct delivery routes, reaching more than 25 miles into Maryland and Virginia, which together with the District of Columbia, constitute the Washington market.

More than three-quarters of a million prosperous people are included within this territory which has no other metropolitan city for its source of supply—and is reached to its most remote point every evening and Sunday by The Star.

This is a wonderfully fertile market—and is completely and regularly covered by ONE newspaper—THE STAR.

The Evening Star



WITH SUNDAY MORNING EDITION

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Member of The Associated Press

Eastern Representative
Dan A. Carroll
110 East 42nd Street
New York, N. Y.

Western Representative
J. E. Lutz
1110 Tower Building
Chicago, Ill.

One of the Hoe Superspeed Octuples in the new plant of The Scranton Times, which has eight of these 16-page units and two double Superspeed folders in line arrangement.

E. J. LYNETT, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER J. E. BRADLEY, GENERAL MANAGER W. R. LYNETT, ASSISTANT PUBLISHER

The Scranton Times

PENN AVENUE AT SPRUCE STREET
SCRANTON, PA.

April 22, 1927.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLISHER

R. Hoe & Company, Inc.,
504-520 Grand Street,
New York City, N.Y.

Attention: Mr. C. D. Peterson

Gentlemen:

The two Hoe Superspeed Octuple Presses placed in service by The Scranton Times as press room units of its recently completed plant have proved abundantly satisfactory in every way.

At one stage of its building construction, The Times, which had been using two sextuple machines in its old plant, was forced to place entire dependence on one reel-fed Octuple Superspeed for the reason that the building was not sufficiently advanced for the installation of remaining units. During this period it was able to operate that machine at the highest cylinder speeds claimed by you with remarkable success. Editions had never been so prompt in the old plant.

Both these machines were erected most expeditiously, going together with wrenches. The second was put on regular editions in one day less than three weeks after it was unloaded at Scranton. White waste in running these machines at the beginning was virtually nothing.

For day in and day out operation The Times gets production sufficient to meet its needs by running these machines at from 24,000 to 30,000 an hour. The machines have run as fast as 41,000 and The Times finds the reserve speed immensely valuable in emergencies and under special conditions. On straight runs the average production of The Times is 25,500 copies, collect runs 12,750 copies, per Octuple machine. Decuple operation is proportionately satisfactory.

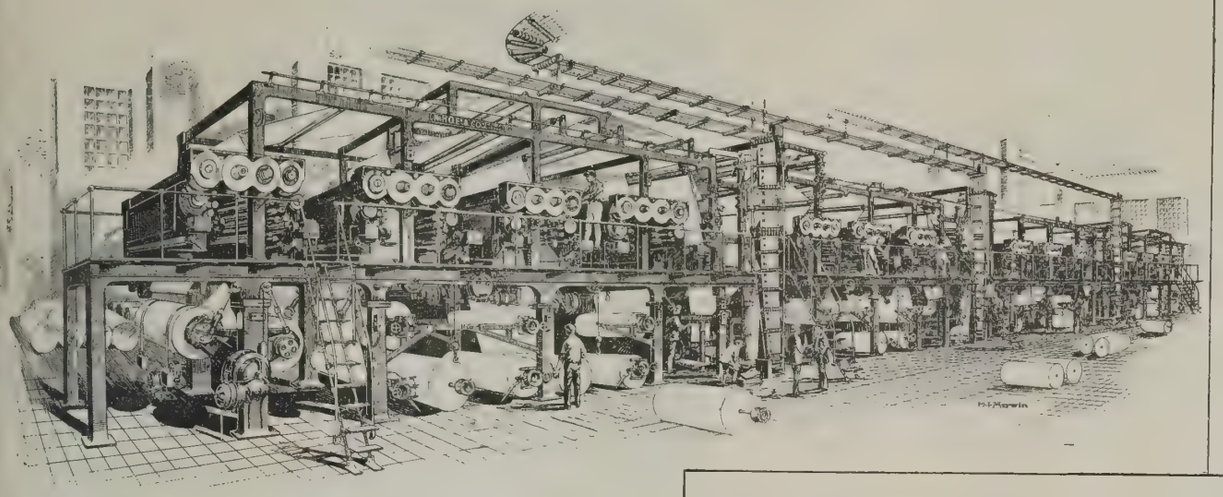
The Times is entirely willing that persons interested in the performance of Hoe machinery be referred to it.

Very truly yours,

W R Lynett

Assistant Publisher.

"Abundantly Satisfactory"



Mr. Lynett's letter tells an interesting story of speedy and untroubled installation, dependability in an emergency, exceptional speed, greater productivity and greatly decreased waste.

One of these Hoe Superspeed Octuples proved sufficient during installation not only to meet circulation needs that had been taxing the capacity of two Sextuple presses, but to actually improve edition time. These Octuples have been run as fast as 41,000 copies an hour and while The Times' ordinary needs are met by slower running speeds, the average net production is 25,500 copies an hour.

The Scranton Times, however, finds the reserve speed immensely valuable for emergencies or special conditions.

HOE PRESSES EXCEL IN SPEED, DEPENDABILITY, EASE AND ACCURACY OF OPERATION

R. HOE & CO., INC.

The Times new Hoe 14-Unit Press the largest machine of its type in the world.

"Complete Satisfaction"

This new Hoe 14-Unit Balcony Press was used to full capacity for the first time on December 17 last and The Times stated in its issue of December 20 that "the press operated perfectly and the edition was printed as easily and as quickly as smaller ones are handled, demonstrating its ability to deliver in a direct run 56-page papers in two sections at a maximum speed of 64,000 an hour."

The Times has ever been a leader in the installation of the best in printing machinery, installing the first Rotary Press in Connecticut in 1882, the first Stereotype Press in 1889, and the first Sextuple Press in 1899. Of course, all these were Hoe Presses.

Through the courtesy of the Hartford Times publishers are invited to call and inspect this remarkable new plant.

ESTABLISHED 1817.

The Hartford Times

PUBLISHED BY THE BURR PRINTING CO.

HARTFORD, CONN.

April 22, 1927.

R. Hoe & Co., Inc.,
504 Grand St.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:-

It is a pleasure to be able to express to you our complete satisfaction with our new fourteen unit balcony design press. We had anticipated some difficulty in the printing of seven roll runs but we are agreeably surprised by the simplicity with which the machine handles these runs. We can say that the seven roll runs are accomplished with the same convenience and dispatch as is the case with the five and six roll runs.

The improved paper roll racks which we purchased from you are likewise fully satisfactory, giving a complete automatic tension without any attention from the press crew. It is surprising to us to note how few web breaks we have on the units equipped with this device.

Our editions this week have been as follows:

Monday	36 pages
Tuesday	40 "
Wednesday	40 "
Thursday	42 "
today (Friday)	54 "

The investment we have made in this remarkable fourteen unit machine is well warranted.

Very truly yours,

THE HARTFORD TIMES.

By Lorrett C. Willson

President.

EGW/R

HOE PRESSES ARE UNEQUALLED IN QUANTITY AND QUALITY OF OUTPUT

504 GRAND STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y.

LONDON DUNELLEN BOSTON CHICAGO
NEW ORLEANS SAN FRANSICCO

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

Campaign in Rochester Ends with 6,000 Added to Home Delivery—Changing Make-Up Daily as Circulation Stunt—Vacation Trip Offers in Phoenix, Ariz.

A CIRCULATION campaign, conducted through its carrier organization, has just been completed by the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union, F. E. Tripp, general manager of the Gannett Newspapers told EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week in an interview in New York. Nearly 6,000 readers were added to the home delivered circulation, he said.

Termination of the campaign was celebrated at a banquet at the Hotel Seneca, attended by more than 320 news boys and at which prizes were distributed amounting to more than $7,800. The big winner among the boys took home a check for $250.

"With this campaign concluded we are now starting a second one in Rochester," Mr. Tripp said. "We have set 82,000 circulation as our goal."

The campaign was under the direction of H. Fenton, general circulation director of the Gannett Newspapers, and Frank Roberts, local circulation manager of the Times-Union.

A plan involving a daily change of make-up is being followed by James B. Clendenin, managing editor of the Huntington (W. Va.) Evening Herald, as a circulation stunt. The Evening Herald was started Feb. 28, by Dave Gideon, publisher of the Huntington Herald-Dispatch, morning paper, of which Mr. Clendenin is also managing editor.

The Evening Herald appears each day with a different style of front-page make-up. New head styles are discovered and used, principally for feature and lead stories. At least two ordinary standard "top" heads are always used, however.

Mr. Clendenin's idea is to have some surprise for his readers in the way of typography or display each day.

H. H. Fris, general manager of the Phoenix (Ariz.) Gazette is winning success with a free ten-day vacation trip proposition as a circulation builder.

He is offering his readers the choice of a trip from Phoenix to Long Beach, Cal. or to Los Angeles in exchange for 20 new yearly subscriptions.

When he announced his offer Mr. Fris declared in a signed statement:

"This circulation campaign is not a contest, game of chance, popularity voting, nor is it in any sense connected with any of the so-called circulation 'contests.'

"On the other hand, I believe it to be the most attractive summer vacation circulation offer ever made by any newspaper at any time."

No game of chance is connected with the offer. No closing date is mentioned.

Mr. Fris was for nine years a director of the International Circulation Managers Association and was connected with the El Paso (Tex.) Herald for 18 years, most of the time as circulation manager. He became associated with the Phoenix Gazette about two years ago.

The National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution which is being conducted by a group of newspapers is nearing the district eliminations. The national championships are scheduled to be held in Washington, D. C., on May 27.

The New York Daily Mirror cooperated with Sir Charles Higham, India Tea representative, in the latter's search for the oldest tea drinker in the United States. The Mirror has promised to pay the oldest tea tippler $500. The winner was to be announced Friday of this week.

Circulation manager E. D. Dolhenty of the Worcester Telegram-Gazette believes there is nothing so valuable for instilling loyalty into the carriers and street salesmen as occasional parties and he is constantly arranging for entertainment for his newsboys at theaters. Mr. Dolhenty's activities have the approval of parents for before he arranges any such gatherings the attractions are carefully scanned to insure that they are wholesome. Recently 80 boys and girls who sell the papers in Webster were given a party in Racicot Hall by Louis Blanchard, manager of the Webster agency. There was entertainment and boxing bouts and addresses by officials of the Telegram-Gazette circulation department. A feature of the program was music by an orchestra organized of Telegram-Gazette newsboys.

Harry A. Fitch, for the past five years assistant circulation manager of the Springfield (Ill.) State Journal, has resigned, to conduct a circulation building campaign business of his own, on the "Kid Built" plan.

The Chicago Evening American is offering its readers $10 a day for the best list of ten questions and answers for a "What Do You Know?" feature.

WARNS AGAINST READING CENSUS

Albany Telegram Declares City Officials Are Listing Readers

A canvass of Albany, N. Y., homes to determine what newspapers are being read is planned by leaders in the city administration as a political move, the Albany (N. Y.) Sunday Telegram warned its readers in a page one story. The Telegram opposes the present local government.

"No one is obliged to tell what newspaper comes into his home," says the Telegram warning. "This canvass is designed to punish those who read newspapers carrying on opposition to the city administration."

The paper then goes on to explain that the "punishment" will take the form of increased assessments. It was pointed out that the canvass is to be made by a member of the city board of assessment.

ILLINOIS PAPER SOLD

The Forreston (Ill.) Journal, operated the last eight years by Mrs. Susan Buckley, has been purchased by John J. Wagner and G. E. Terry, owners of the Polo (Ill.) Tri-County News. It will be continued by the new owners as a weekly with Miss Alice Steinhagen news editor. Mrs. Buckley had been connected with the Journal 16 years, succeeding her husband as a partner in the business and finally acquiring the plant.

THE PRESS AGENT GAME

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Knowing your interest in the game of the free publicity agencies, I am sure you will be interested in this:

A well known publicity organization—the name is of no importance—sent me a lot of recommendations of its service from patrons. Here is an excerpt from one concern to another, the first being a patron of the publicity agency and the other being a prospect:

"I am glad to hear that you are contemplating general publicity. It seems to me that the opportunity for investment in this manner is much greater than the usual expenditures for display advertising."

The italics are mine.

But doesn't it show what boobs we are to give away so much of the only commodity we have to sell that publicity agencies have convinced some advertisers that they can get more free than they can get by purchase?

WILLIAM C. EDWARDS,
Editor, Denton (Tex.) Record-Chronicle.

CRASH. Lieut. Commander Noel Davis, U. S. N. and Lieut. Stanton H. Wooster, plunged to death when the plane they were grooming for a New York-Paris flight fell in a swampy field near Messick, Va.

Lifts from Life —delivered warm

PICTURES convey and convince, instruct and inspire, dispel doubt and establish certainty, satisfy because of their truth and certainty. Inch for inch your newspaper cannot carry more worthwhile news matter than pictures.

Check the big stories your paper carried and see if P & A news pictures couldn't have helped you on these stories.

Full information about P & A photo and mat services will interest you. Write, wire or phone the nearest office.

PACIFIC & ATLANTIC PHOTOS, Inc.

Home Office: 25 Park Place, New York

CHICAGO · BOSTON · SEATTLE · PHILADELPHIA
WASHINGTON · LOS ANGELES · SAN FRANCISCO · ST. LOUIS
ATLANTA · CLEVELAND · LONDON · PARIS · BERLIN

"Curses on Our Fatal Beauty!"

So raved the much pursued blond heroine in the old-fashioned dramas. And, in a way, we are forced to blush, and with a smile say the same thing on reading such a letter as this:

> "There's only one trouble about the Courant. It's too darned interesting. It keeps me from my housework until I read it all—and my husband complains that he just couldn't think of starting his morning's work without running through the Courant from first page to last."

Translating this very human letter from one of our readers simply means that the Courant has an excess of reader interest . . . and reader interest means, of course, reader confidence.

The Hartford Courant strikes that happy medium between the cold heartless daily of our great polyglot metropolis and the simple chronicle of daily lives as lived in a typical New England city.

It is the friend of its readers; its readers are its friends.

And so it brings friendship for those who, through its advertising columns, use it as a mouth piece. It lends to products thus presented, the intense favorable light of its own standing, its prestige with its readers. If they see it in the Courant it must be good.

Remember one thing: All the circulation in the world won't gain sales volume if you can't get your story over. And the thing that will aid most in getting it over is the innate reader confidence of the paper you use.

—The Courant has IT!

THE COURANT

—at Hartford, Conn.

NEW CLUB TO SUPERVISE ST. LOUIS ADVERTISING

Industrial Club to Promote Business Welfare of City with $1,000,000 Fund to Be Spread Over Four Years

The Industrial Club of St. Louis has been organized to promote the industrial welfare of that City and its industrial district, through a fund of $1,000,000 to be used over a period of four years. The activities of the Club include the taking over, by a special committee, of the Municipal Advertising Campaign, which has been operated for seven years by a joint appropriation from the City of St. Louis and business interests.

The other activities of the Industrial Club follow:

Sponsoring of the Industrial Bureau with an adequate budget.

Selection of a director and an operating staff for the Industrial Bureau to be under the supervision of an advisory committee of six from the membership of the Industrial Club.

Raising of a fund of $1,000,000, to be spent in a four-year program of organized development of St. Louis.

The supervision, by a finance committee of the Industrial Club, of expenditure of this fund.

Appointment of a committee by the Industrial Club to determine and supervise its relation with the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations interested in furthering the industrial and social development of the city's industrial district, in order that useless duplication of effort may be avoided and the work of such organizations concentrated on the accomplishment of specific results.

Thomas N. Dysart, of Knight, Dysart & Gamble, investment brokers, is president of the Industrial Club of St. Louis. The first contribution, $50,000, came from Charles Rebstock, who gave $1,000,000 to Washington University last year.

The annual report of the Municipal Advertising Committee, as issued by F. W. A. Vesper, chairman for next year, shows that of 41 new industries which have located in St. Louis the last year, 11 are directly traceable to the Municipal advertising campaign.

The steady growth of St. Louis as an industrial center since inception of the campaign seven years ago is set forth in the report.

"During the last seven years 222 new industries in 12 lines have come to St. Louis," the report says. "Of these, 74 came as a direct or indirect result of the advertising. Results of the advertising program have caused more than 50 other large cities to follow the example.

"Almost every line of manufacture is now represented in St. Louis. The city has nearly 4,000 industries in 211 kinds of business. Because of the diversity of its industries, no depression in any one line can affect the prosperity of the city. United States Government statistics show that during the period of advertising, St. Louis has advanced steadily in the number of workmen employed, amount of wages paid and value of products manufactured, while almost all other industrial cities showed losses."

W. R. HARTPENCE

Editor Who Hired James Whitcomb Riley Dies at 88

William R. Hartpence, 88, a Civil war veteran and former newspaper editor who employed James Whitcomb Riley as "printers' devil" in the plant of the Greenfield (Ind.) News, died April 14, in Long Beach, Cal., where he had resided for the past nine years.

Mr. Hartpence began his newspaper career as office boy for an Indianapolis paper, and later became editor of the Harrison (O.) News, and the Greenfield (Ind.) News.

He was author of a book, "Recollections of James Whitcomb Riley."

PREPARING FOR MANEUVERS

Elaborate plans have been made by General Preston Brown of Boston, Mass., commanding officer of the First Corps Army Area, to take care of the newspaper correspondents at the big Army-Navy maneuvers in Narragansett Bay, May 16-21. The combined Atlantic and Pacific fleets will storm the New England coast. War-time regulations will be in force with brassards and credentials and special facilities for writing and filing stories by telephone and telegraph.

Obituary

MISS MARGARET R. O'NEILL, sister of John J. O'Neill, editor of the Brooklyn Eagle's Sunday Magazine, died on April 15, at her home in Queens Village, after a very brief illness.

A. B. HANCOCK, 74, for many years editor of the Newman (Ill.) News, died April 20 following a long illness after an attack of paralysis. The wife and two daughters survive. Funeral services were held April 22.

IRVING J. FRENCH, New England representative of the McCall Company and a member of the New England Advertising Club, died at his home in Newton, Mass., April 18 of heart disease.

MRS. CAROLINE HALL WASHBURN, 84, society editor at various periods for the Boston (Mass.) Globe, Herald and American, died at Forest Park, Ill., April 17. She was long identified with Boston newspapers.

FREDERICK W. ACKERMAN, 26, New York newspaper man, died recently at Fredericksburg, Va., after an illness of two months. Prior to going to Fredericksburg, Ackerman was employed by the New York Times.

EDGAR OSBORNE, chairman and managing director of Osborne-Peacock, Ltd., advertising agents and contractors of Manchester, England, died recently. He founded the agency, which handles campaigns for several national products, 20 years ago.

MRS. ELLA F. WILEY, widow of Ingram Wiley, and mother of W. F. Wiley, general manager of the Cincinnati Enquirer, died in East Walnut Hills, that city, April 18.

MOSES F. HOPKINS, 61, former staff writer on the Detroit Tribune, Detroit News and Detroit Free Press, died at his home in Dearborn, Mich., last week. His newspaper career began in Grand Haven, Mich., and he was later Washington correspondent for the Grand Rapids Herald. In 1897 he came to Detroit and joined the staff of the old Tribune. When that paper went out of existence he joined the News staff, and still later joined the Free Press, where he served as a political writer for several years.

WILL A. MAYHEW, JR., 44, editor of the Clinton (Wis.) Times-Observer, member of a pioneer Clinton family, died April 20 after several months' illness. His widow will continue publication of the paper.

BEN H. DIETRICH, circulation manager, Los Angeles (Cal.) Times in the harbor district since 1916, died recently at his home in San Pedro, following an attack of bronchial pneumonia.

JOSHUA S. SMITH, 82, newspaper publisher, died at his home in Rockland, Mass., last week. Mr. Smith learned the printer's trade as an apprentice on the old Vinyard (Mass.) Gazette. Later he located with the Abington (Mass.) Standard now known as the Rockland Standard. A few years later he purchased the paper and became its publisher. He is survived by a wife, a son and two daughters.

GERRIT SMITH STANTON, 81, retired newspaperman, died last Sunday morning in New York from pneumonia. He was the only surviving son of Henry Brewster Stanton, direct descendant of Henry Brewster, of the Mayflower, and of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, pioneer suffragist. He was at one time on the editorial staff of the old New York Sun.

NEWSPAPERS WHICH DOMINATE THE FIELD

in

SOUTHWESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

(OUTSIDE OF PITTSBURGH)

The center of the largest industrial, coal and agricultural communities of the country.

THE OBSERVER morning

THE REPORTER evening

Washington, Penna.

Combined circulation exceeds 18,500 daily

Howard L. Christman, Business Manager

THE TRIBUNE evening

Beaver Falls, Pa.

Circulation 7,200

James H. March, Manager

THE DAILY TIMES evening

Beaver, Pa.

Circulation 5,800

E. L. Freeland, Manager

With a combined circulation of 32,000 the national advertiser cannot afford to miss the opportunities offered by these four newspapers which thoroughly cover Washington, Greene and Beaver counties in Southwestern Pennsylvania.

JOHN L. STEWART, President and Publisher

WASHINGTON, PENNA.

BRYANT, GRIFFITH & BRUNSON, Publishers' Representatives

New York Boston Atlanta Chicago

While in New York

see the

Metropolitan Dry Mat

being used on the editions of

THE AMERICAN
THE JOURNAL
THE SUN
THE TELEGRAM

Compare results with those of other dry mats.

Note specially that METROPOLITAN dry mats require less than half the amount of packing necessary with dry mats of other make.

The labor and time saved in this single operation makes the METROPOLITAN not only the cheapest dry mat but the only one wholly satisfactory for the big plant.

Compare the quality of the printing of the four dailies mentioned with that of metropolitan newspapers using dry mats of other make.

Be your own judge.

WOOD FLONG CORPORATION

501 Fifth Avenue, New York City
Stillwater, New York

N. B. Information regarding WOOD DRY MATS and equipment may be obtained at our exhibit Mezzanine Floor, Waldorf-Astoria, during the Convention.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Mrs. Garrison Publishes Paper from Basement of Her Home — Miss Ruth Dietz Is Managing Editor for a Day—Newspaper Romance Ends in Bed-Side Wedding

INTRODUCING the owner, editor, reporter, business manager, circulation manager, advertising manager, printer and delivery department of the Washington Township (Mo.) Independent and the Marlborough (Mo.) News, Mrs. Nellie E. Garrison is that and more.

MRS. NELLIE GARRISON

When she is not busy getting out her newspapers, Mrs. Garrison does housekeeping and job printing. The print shop and newspaper plant is in the basement of her home. From that source 3,000 subscribers get news of interest to the community.

Mrs. Garrison delivers the papers each week in her motor car. Besides being an editor and publisher, Mrs. Garrison is a poet and at one time was a regular contributor to Collier's Weekly.

Miss Ruth Dietz, who is secretary to Irving K. Stone, president of the Duplex Printing Press Company, was given a a chance the other day to find out what it was like to edit the copy her boss's presses print.

The Business and Professional Woman's Club of Battle Creek, Mich., took charge of the publication of the Battle Creek, Enquirer and News on April 16, and Miss Dietz was appointed managing editor.

RUTH DIETZ

Miss Dietz herself described the event as "an expression of feminism."

"There is a feeling among thinking women that there is something more to feminism than the privilege of smoking cigarettes and bobbing hair," she said.

The managing editor for the day played up local news, saying that there are many facts about the home city to be learned.

"We wanted to give an impression of neighborliness," she explained. "There are so many interesting and refreshing happenings that we unconsciously relegated crime news to second place."

A wedding which recently took place in the South Baltimore General Hospital, Baltimore, was the culmination of a real newspaper office romance. It began in the office of the Baltimore Evening Sun.

The principals were: Bride, Miss Jean Taylor Dawson, reporter on the local staff of the Evening Sun and bridegroom: A. Paul Menton, sports editor of the Evening Sun.

The scene of the ceremony was a private room of the hospital. The bridegroom made his responses from a sick bed.

Mr. Menton's illness was not dangerous and he had left the hospital and started on his honeymoon with his bride a few days after the ceremony.

The bedside ceremony was performed because both parties preferred having the ceremony performed on the day they had fixed for it weeks before to postponing it. They had planned a church wedding in Williamsport, Pa., the home of the bride for April 18, Easter Monday.

Elizabeth Forman, author of "Cook Book Carols," a series of rhymed recipes now running in the New York Telegram, left New York on April 26 on a four months' business trip to the Canadian Northwest and California, where she will gather information for newspaper and magazine features. Miss Forman was formerly for seven years with the St. Paul Pioneer-Press as motion picture and dramatic critic and society editor. For the past few years she has been a free lance writer in New York.

Miss Florence Greiser has been appointed rotogravure advertising manager of the Miami Daily News.

CHICAGO TYPO RECALLS EARLY SPEED CONTEST

Green of Boston Standard Defeated Taylor of Denver by Setting 70,700 Ems in Seven Hours

Thomas Griffin of the Chicago Herald and Examiner composing room staff, who can refer to "away back when," is still in active service, and meeting the demands of present day composing room conditions, states The Linotype News.

Mr. Griffin has a photograph of a group of operators who contested in the composing room of the old Chicago Dispatch on Nov. 24, 1895.

The contest was between George W. Green of the Boston Standard and Eugene W. Taylor of the Rocky Mountain News, Denver. Many operators from other cities crowded the composing room of the Dispatch, and at no time were there less than 150 around both operators while they worked at the keyboards.

Mr. Green had a record of 13,100 ems of solid agate in an hour on a thirteen and a half em slug. Mr. Taylor had also done well, having turned out 76,300 ems of solid minion in eight hours on a thirteen em slug.

Mr. Taylor was accompanied by Burns Mantle and Ralph B. Tyler, both of them of Denver. Fred J. Naylor, then machinist on the Boston Globe, accompanied Mr. Green.

The articles of agreement for the contest stipulated that the Linotypes to be used were those known as "Brooklyn machines"; the type face to be 6 Point No. 2 on a thirteen and a half em slug, and the latter to measure .084 of an inch in thickness. The speed of the machines was to be eighty-eight revolutions per minute.

The outcome was that George W. Green set 70,700 ems in seven hours, corrected matter, of solid nonpareil. Eugene W. Taylor's string measured 64.027 ems.

From a copy of the Chicago Dispatch, dated Nov. 25, 1895, on file in the Chicago Public Library, the following is quoted:

"From the start Green began to lead. While his handling of the keyboard would induce an outsider to believe he is not so rapid as Taylor, still the result shows the reverse . . . The gross amount composed by Green was 78,700 ems. The proofs were read by Frank Skinner, who also made a record for rapid work in keeping up with the operators.

"To more readily understand the remarkable work of the winner, it may be said that his net total of 70,700 ems is the equivalent of nearly ten and a half columns of the Dispatch, or about a page and a half. Green's net average was 10,100 ems an hour, and Taylor's 9,146."

Fred Hildmann, the Dispatch machinist, tuned up the Linotypes used, and gave his personal attention to the machines used by Mr. Taylor during the contest.

Home Delivered !

Booth Newspaper Circulation is Home Delivered

The Booth newspapers offer concentrated circulation coverage of the eight principal Michigan Markets outside of Detroit. The net paid city delivery alone, is greater in each market than the total number of families.

The Booth newspapers have a total net paid circulation of over 260,000 daily and are read every evening in nearly every home in each of these cities and adjacent towns.

Write any Booth newspaper for a copy of "The Michigan Market"

Grand Rapids Press — Saginaw News Courier

Flint Daily Journal — Kalamazoo Gazette

Jackson Citizen Patriot — Muskegon Chronicle

Bay City Times Tribune — Ann Arbor Times News

I. A. KLEIN, Eastern Representative 50 East 42nd St. NEW YORK | J. E. LUTZ, Western Representative 6 North Michigan Ave. CHICAGO

THE BOOTH PUBLISHING CO.

"IMPRESSION ON ROTARY PRESS RUNNING AT SPEED"

The technical queries and replies in the issues of The Newspaper World for August 7 and 14, relating to the loss of impression on a rotary press when running at speed, have brought some interesting comments from Mr. Theodore T. Ellis, president of the New England Newspaper Supply Co., who are the manufacturers of automatic felt, oil-proof face rubber, and monocork blankets. To illustrate more clearly the points that he makes, Mr. Ellis has sent photographs showing the variation in the thickness of blankets under compression.

Mr. Ellis writes:

"The answer given to query No. 158 of August 7 attributes it in part to faulty engineering or building of the machine, faulty blanketing or high plates, and recommends the adding of impression while the machine is running. Query No. 163, of August 14, is answered by stating that the loss of impression is due to the acceleration itself and not due to blanketing, etc. Further, that it is due to the reduction of the period contact between plate and paper. This theory is wrong.

No. 1

"The answer to No. 158 is nearer correct, except that it is not faulty engineering or machine building, and the recommendation of increasing impression while the machine is in operation is dangerous and unnecessary.

"There are two reasons for loss of impression as the speed increases. One is worn cylinder bearings, the other is the whip of the cylinders or centrifugal throw. I have seen hundreds of cylinder bearings worn from .010in. to .045in., and the natural result is, as the speed increases, the cylinder will revolve in the orbit of least resistance or away from pressure contact point between the plate and the impression cylinder, and the wear in the cylinder bearings is always away from the point of contact.

"Centrifugal throw is not apparent up to 10,000 revolutions (or 20,000 papers) per hour. Beyond that speed or from 10,000 to 20,000 revolutions per 20,000 to 40,000 papers) per hour, the centrifugal throw does not exceed at the maximum speed of 40,000 papers per hour .005in. at the greatest point of the throw, which is in the middle of the cylinder, and this only applies to four-plate wide machines.

No. 2

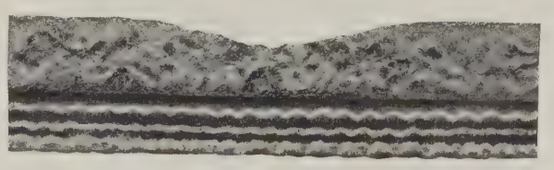
"Faulty Blanketing.—Blankets may be faulty because they are unsuitable for the work they are called upon to produce, or unsuitable in their texture or material for the use to which they are put. The woolen blanket: may be a beautiful piece of goods, primarily designed to be used in cotton mills to cover spinning rolls, where no pressure is applied to it. This is entirely unsuitable for a printing press, as it is too compressible under printing pressure. The compressibility of this style of blanketing varies according to thickness from .015in. to .035in., and this variation is far beyond the impression required on rotaries.

"A blanket of this character compresses gradually while the machine is in operation, and this is one of the main reasons for loss of impression, and not increase in speed. Nor will a firm rubber underneath blanket overcome this trouble. It makes it worse, and if a soft rubber blanket be used it then obtain poor and indistinct printing.



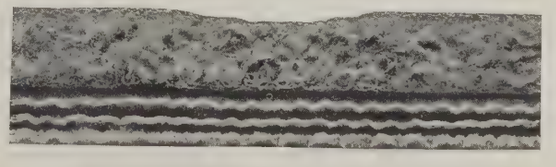
"A hard rubber blanket of quick resiliency, covered with a soft woolen blanket, is, perhaps, the most unsuitable blanketing that can be used on a rotary newspaper printing machine, because when the soft woolen blanket is compressed to its printing point the hard, quick, resilient bottom blanket then accepts the full blow of the printing plates at each revolution of the cylinders and causes a streak or stripe to appear in the printing. It also causes a continuous vibration in the machine that produces a wear on the surface of the printing plates after a comparatively few thousand impressions, and this continuous blow and vibration is one of the principal reasons for broken gears and other accidents to the machine itself.

"The above are causes and effects, and now for the remedy for centrifugal throw, worn bearings—within reason—say, up to .015in., and uneven plates. These three factors are all related in that they have a direct effect in the efficient operation of the machine, and the good appearance of the product, and they are generally associated together to some extent in all high-speed machines.

"The remedy is so to blanket the machine that it will neutralize any or all the three factors and create an operating condition that will follow the cylinders as they back away, due to worn cylinder bearings, to compensate for the centrifugal throw and absorb the pressure of uneven, high, or out-of-true plates.

"To do this it is necessary to have a blanket (or a combination of blankets) that will force itself out as the cylinders back away from each other and compress itself to meet the condition of high, uneven plates or excessive impression.

"This resistance to, and absorption of, impression must be inherent in the bottom blanket, and the bottom blanket, to function in this manner, must be semi-plastic and of slow resiliency. By slow resiliency is meant that the blanket will not recover during the time it takes for the cylinder to make a revolution at a speed of 30 turns per minute. The bottom blanket must also have great compressibility—a compressibility of 50 to 60 per cent that will make for complete recovery within 15 to 30 seconds. Then, if you use for a top woolen blanket 'a blanket that is harder than the bottom blanket' with a compression or printing point only .008in. to .010in. below the surface, and your impression is adjusted to meet the maximum throw and backing-up of the cylinders, you create a fixed condition that overcomes the queries Nos. 158 and 163.



No. 3

"The blankets that will create this fixed condition are the monocork bottom blanket and the automatic re-pressed felt (or woolen) blanket. The reference to a semi-plastic, semi-resilient bottom blanket with great compressibility and a semi-hard top or woolen blanket with a high compression or printing point near the surface that is smooth and self-cleansing, is not a new theory, but an adopted practice by practically all the large newspapers of the world and accepted by printing machine engineers and builders as fundamentally correct.

"A better way to explain this principle is to refer to the illustrations Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. No. 1 represents the method of blanketing a cylinder with the monocork bottom blanket and the automatic top blanket. No. 2 shows how excessive impression is transmitted through the semi-hard top blanket and absorbed by the semi-plastic bottom blanket. No. 1 again shows, after this strain, the complete recovery and the return to the original condition. By this method fixed conditions are maintained under practically all unusual conditions encountered in the operation of rotary printing machines.

"No. 3 shows the effect produced when the top blanket is softer than the bottom blanket, and No. 4 shows the uneven surface even after the blanket has been sponged up.

No. 4

"The question will be asked: How does monocork meet the conditions complained of, and what are the qualities it possesses that are seemingly so contradictory?

"The answer is, monocork has one distinctive feature that is invaluable as an aid to good printing, and this feature is the pressure-resisting nature of the composition. It is like a powerful spring of low temper (semi-plastic). It accepts pressure instead of resisting or crawling away from it, and, like a spring, as soon as the pressure is released it returns to its original position or thickness."

Automatic Felt Blankets

SOMETH

THIS ARTICLE, for the first time, furnishes information to the general public concerning factors that were ever present in a rotary newspaper printing press and how conditions were improved to make high speed, and the printing of any number of pages at one time possible.

To understand these factors, it is necessary to know of the severe grind that is going on between the plate and impression cylinder. The surface of the previously used blanket was rough—the weave of the tympan cloth was coarse and uneven, and the newsprint paper used was and is of varying density and surface structure—the impression cylinder had a speed different from the plate cylinder.

When you consider that an inelastic paper was impressed between two cylinders traveling at different speeds, one cylinder covered with a rough, uneven woolen blanket or cotton tympan cloth and the other cylinder carrying metal plates with sharp type faces, also uneven, you can realize how restricted was the margin which made it possible to run newspaper printing presses at a reasonable speed.

Illustration A represents a magnified surface view of a fine quality woolen printers' blanket.

Illustration B represents a magnified view of tympan cloth of a grade commonly used.

Illustration C represents a magnified view of the surface of newsprint paper in general use.

In adition to these factors are the strains imposed on the paper in printing and transmitted through the paper to the blanket surface.

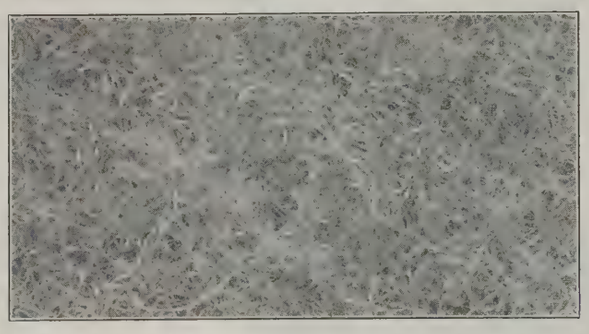
There are four plates that come in contact with the blanket on every revolution of the cylinders. On the surface of the plate there are eight columns with aproximately 300 lines to the column of solid set type, each line of type has about 30 letters in it and each letter has more than 4 angles to it. Multiply 4x30x300x8x4, and it gives you 1,152,000 different angles that are impressed on the blanket surface with every revolution of the cylinder, beside the sharp column and head rules. This is about the average number of angles, and they may be reduced by large type and open space.

Due to these numerous angles, there are always four movements simultaneously taking place, but constantly shifting, on the paper being printed and on the blanket.

The movements are compression or the imbedding of the plate into the blanket cylinder, also known as impression, and this movement is the regulating force that causes the ink to transfer from the plate to the paper in printing.

The second movement is a rotary or calender motion. The calender motion is caused by the blanket cylinder being larger than the plate cylinder, and while this calender motion places a heavy strain on the paper and blanket, it is necessary because the blanket cylinder must be the larger to assure sufficient paper being drawn from the roll to meet the requirements of the plate cylinder.

The difference between the plate and impression cylinders, when the latter is only ⅛" larger than the former in circumference, causes the impression cylinder to travel almost six miles more than the plate cylinder, while six million papers are being printed, or an average of one mile of drag per million papers printed.



This is the equivalent of dragging six miles of plates with their sharp type faces, and under heavy pressure, across every part of the face of the blanket, and the more papers you print and the larger the impression cylinder is, as compared with the plate cylinder, the greater the strain and further is the drag.

The smooth, slippery nature of the coating prevents the type faces from getting hold and tearing or chafing the blanket surface as they formerly did.

This is one of the fundamentals discovered by the writer over twenty years ago, and it was the reason back of the invention of the re-pressed felt blanket, and it was likewise the reason for attaching the Automatic facing to the blanket in such a way that it could move to meet this drag and other strains imposed on the blanket.

The third and fourth motions are across the surface of the blanket, and they are caused by the diverging and converging lines of the angles of the type faces. They exert a side swaying and at the same time a pushing together and pulling apart strain on the surface of the blanket. The strain created by the multiplicity of these movements is shown in the center illustration. The black dotted lines radiating from the words High Speed Automatic Efficiency Blanket show the angles of the strains.

ILLUSTRATION A

Surface view of fine quality Felt Blanket magnified ten times.

Surface view of N newspa

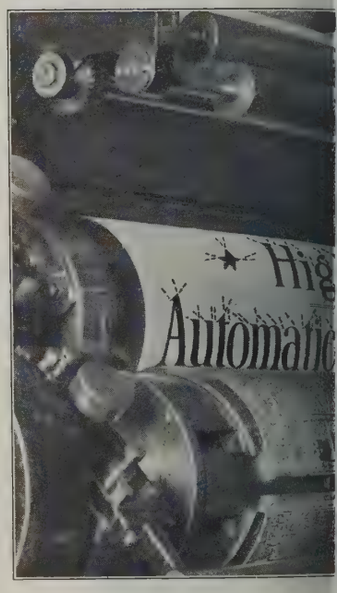
Newspaper Printing Problems

New angles of strain are imposed on the blanket's surface as the plates are changed, as no two type pages are ever alike. Newsprint paper is inelastic and the angle of a strain was and is transmitted through the paper to the blanket. Newsprint paper is comaratively rough (see illustration C). Its rough surface and slight movement was the cause of frictional wear on the surface of the woolen blanket.

Due to the inelasticity of the paper, the slightest excess strain would cause the paper to break.

Combine all these strains together—consider that these strains are applied to the paper only once, but that they are applied to the blanket 200 to 300 times per minute and for millions of times—add to them blanket cylinders of different diameters, travelling at different periphial speeds and with a different periphial speed from the plate cylinders, also add an unevenly worn blanket surface caused by frictional wear and a constant change in the thickness and density of the blanket as it packed down in use, or swelled up by the absorption of moisture and you have the reasons for the uncertain operating conditions that previously were so prevalent in all newspaper pressrooms before the invention of the Automatic Blanket.

The problem was a serious one from the point of expense, delay and indifferent work produced.



There was an average of 3 per cent for pressroom printed waste.

The average press production was 12,000 to 14,000 per hour on papers of 12 to 20 pages. On larger size papers, the average production was less and the waste percentage more.

It required thirty minutes each shift to get the press ready to start, break out the sheets, change tympan cloths, thread up the sheets, etc.

Tympan cloths were changed every shift to produce clean printing, requiring sixteen yards per shift, or 4,800 yards for each octuple press per year.

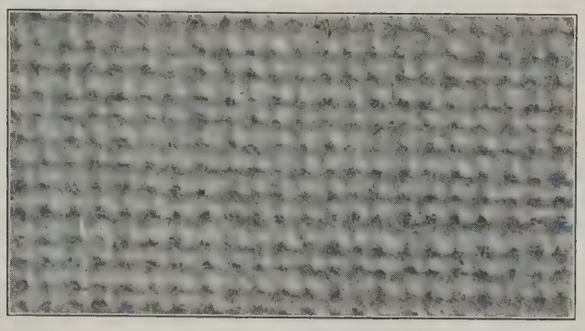
Every day, and in some instances two, three or more times a day, impression had to be changed to meet the ever changing conditions. This shifting of the relative position of the cylinders caused the bearings to soon wear out and it was the direct cause of many broken presses.

The tearing strain on the surfa from the letters "HIGH

Side view looking into surface is attached

The New Englan
Worceste
Cable Address—NI

Cutting Rubbers and PressTapes



Repressed Felt Blankets

G NEW!

sed by the largest times.

ILLUSTRATION B

Surface view of good grade Tympan Cloth, previously in general use, magnified ten times.

ted by the black lines radiating EFFICIENCY BLANKET"

ving how the automatic magnified five times.

How the Problems Were Solved

PROBLEMS understood only after twenty-five years of study. Simplified they present these facts:

First, all plate and impression cylinders, no matter how many units are coupled together, should travel at the same speed.

Second, the impression cylinder surface (blankets) should remain constant in thickness and density to eliminate frequent change of impression.

Third, the blankets should have a surface that will stand the tearing strain imposed on them.

Fourth, the coating should be of such a nature that it will not wear the face of the plates and itself be resistant to frictional wear, allowing the paper to slip, thereby preventing paper breaks between the cylinders.

Fifth, better printing was desired and should be produced.

The first step was the invention of the repressed Felt blanket. The characteristics of this blanket are its density and closely felted body. These features brought the compression point so close to the surface of the blanket that 11-1000", or about the thickness of four sheets of newsprint paper, was the greatest depth it was ever necessary to go into the blanket to get sharp printing. The great density of the blanket prevented it from packing down or losing much of its original thickness, and its close felting prevented unusual stretch.

The blanket in use prior to the repressed felt had a soft density and a compression or printing point 35-1000" below the surface of the blanket. This made it necessary to drive the face of the plate into the blanket one-third of the blanket's thickness to get fair printing. It also caused the blanket to lose one-third of its original thickness in a very short time, and this change in the thickness of the blanket constantly varied and caused a continual change in the circumference of the impression cylinder and a variation in the periphial speed of the paper.

The repressed felt blanket was an important invention because it gave the pressman a means to control the speed of the paper through the press that heretofore had been lacking, but it was subject to the same strains and wear. It required the use of a tympan cloth and its surface was not adapted to produce fine printing. The surface structure, magnified ten times, is shown by the Illustration marked A.

THE FINAL SOLUTION

The final solution was the Automatic Blanket. The genesis of the Automatic Blanket was found in a celluloid automobile wind-shield. This celluloid wind-shield was first used as a top packing on a newspaper magazine press to pull chalk overlay proofs from for pictorial newspaper work. Two years of experimenting followed to find the proper way to attach this celluloid to a repressed felt blanket and to so modify the hard, brittle celluloid so it would stand the cutting effect of the sharp type face of the plates plus impression and angle strains.

Castor oil was used as the emollient to soften and keep plastic the nitro-cellulose that was substituted for the celluloid and a way was found to give the nitro-cellulose the same elasticity as the felt body portion of the blanket.

The only problem left was the method of attachment, and it was found that by floating the nitro-cellulose compound on the surface of the blanket in such a way as to cause it to surround and adhere to the surface fibres of the felt blanket (see Illustration A) it could be so firmly attached that the face would not peel off or separate for millions of impressions and at the same time, the face could shift and swing to meet the ever changing angle of impact it was subject to.

The illustration marked D shows the method and how firmly the Automatic face is anchored to the surface fibres of the repressed felt blanket to produce, as it does, an article that has revolutionized newspaper printing all over the world.

It has saved millions of dollars in waste paper and millions of yards of cotton cloth, reduced the labor of getting the presses ready to start on the edition and prevented many accidents to the men by the elimination of paper breaks between the cylinders. It has increased average press production of 10,000 to 12,000 per hour to 15,000 to 22,000 and more, and finally it has improved printing fully 50 per cent.

For the past two years experiments have been made to improve the Automatic Blanket.

Chemical engineers of the highest standing have been consulted to improve the coating on the blanket. A new formula has been worked out and a new process of applying the coating devised. The result is an improvement of 50 per cent in the general efficiency of the automatic surface. The woolen body portion of the blanket has been improved by increasing the density, to prevent compression. The tensile strength has been increased on heavy gauged blankets, from an average of 125 lbs. to 250 lbs. on a Scott tester with a one-inch grab test.

In order to obtain these results, new methods of weaving, fulling and finishing were developed and special machinery installed. The total process from beginning to end is slow and exacting, and it cannot be otherwise when it is realized that blankets are made with a tolerance of only .002" and for a certain specific purpose.

This is the new High Speed Efficiency Blanket now offered to the trade.

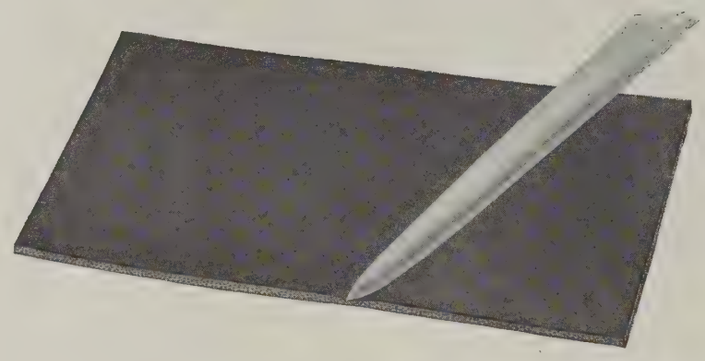
Efficiency—What does it mean on a high speed octuple press? Figure the operating cost of blankets on a per diem basis as follows:—The press prints, 50,000 per day for 150 days, or 7,500,000 papers. The cost of the new High Speed Blanket is on an average of $3.25 per day per octuple set of 16 blankets, or about one-half the daily wage of one of the employes, and for this cost of $3.25 per day you obtain 25 per cent increase in the efficiency of a $60,000 machine. You save many times the cost in waste paper. Power consumption is reduced and labor is lightened. But this is not all, because, while $3.25 per day represents the blanket cost of the Efficiency Blanket, the cost of the old style blanket plus tympan cloth would be greater by far as the tympan cost alone would be almost as much as the Efficiency Blanket cost.

The increased cost of the Efficiency Blanket as compared with the present Automatic Blanket is 25c per day per octuple press, requiring 16 blankets as the present blanket is good for 50,000 per day for 120 days. There is no other comparison to be made because the new blanket will produce better printing, increase production and save waste paper.

We are not in full production, and orders can only be accepted subject to the goods being in stock.

paper Supply Co.
J. S. A.
er, Mass., U. S. A.

Oil Proof Face Rubber Blankets



Automatic Felt Blankets

"QUALITY GOODS ONLY"

Repressed Felt Blankets

The Monocork Blanket

(PATENTED)

NOTE THE GREAT RESILIENCY!

New Features!

MONOCORK will compensate for unusual pressure caused by uneven plates, heavy impression or worn bearings.

MONOCORK is designed to absorb vibration. Eliminate vibration and you prevent plates from working loose on the cylinders, broken gears and stagger stripes.

MONOCORK will compress under excess strain to one-half of its original thickness and completely recover to its original thickness as soon as the strain is released. This feature is a valuable aid in preventing injury to the top blanket, caused by paper winds.

Used as a bottom blanket under the Automatic Felt Blanket, it provides the proper density to produce fine printing and it does not wear the plates.

MONOCORK will not harden up under any condition. It always remains soft and pliable. Oil has no effect on it whatever. The interstices of the fabric facings are filled with a resilient compound that adds to the strength of the blanket and prevents slipping between the top and bottom blankets as well as creeping on the cylinders.

MONOCORK will meet every requirement for newspaper printing with no loss of impression or throw off at the highest speed.

The invention of, and patented by a practical web-pressman, who understands press-room conditions and how to meet them.

Patented May 22, 1917—1,227,557; March 11, 1919—1,296,782.

Manufactured by

New England Newspaper Supply Co.

CONSOLIDATED

New England Fibre Blanket Co.

25 Foster Street - - Worcester, Mass., U. S. A.

Cutting Rubbers and Press Tapes

Cable Address—NENSCO, Worcester, Mass., U. S. A.

Oil Proof Face Rubber Blankets

U. P. FIELD REPRESENTATIVES REPORT BIG EXPANSION DURING PAST YEAR

FIELD representatives of the United Press Associations from every section of the country came to New York

Hugh Baillie

s week to attend the 20th anniversary nquet. All presented optimistic reports, cording to Hugh Baillie, general busiss manager.

"Reports made this week by our busiss representatives here in New York our 20th anniversary show that the ited Press is in a stronger position n ever before," he said.

"In the middle west, for instance, acding to Gilbert M. Clayton, assistant siness manager who makes his headarters in Chicago, we now serve more n 50 per cent of the afternoon newspers. "Not only have we made rapid wth in number of clients served but expansion of leased wires has been ticularly rapid. Probably the most portant step we have taken in the idle west in recent months has been development of the middle western ble trunk connecting with Chicago h important news centers as Indianlis, Detroit, St. Paul, Milwaukee, St. is, Kansas City and Denver. State uits have expanded throughout the itory. For instance in Iowa, the heart the agricultural region where newser consolidations have been particularly numerous of late we have added e the first of 1926 such papers as Sioux City Tribune, the Cedar Rapids ette, the Dubuque Telegraph-Herald, Washington Journal, the Centerville egian, the Ames Tribune to our Iowa ed wire system, with other contracts ed to start at a later date. In Illinois recent months we have started leased service to the Murphysboro Independent, DeKalb Chronicle, Decatur rald, Harrisburg Register, Hoopes- Chronicle-Herald, Lawrenceville ord, Marion Post, Mt. Carmel Republican-Register, Mt. Vernon Herald, is Beacon, Robinson News and West nkfort American. In Galesburg, the ted Press is the only news service rating, our leased wire going to the ly consolidated Republican-Register Mail Woman.

Second only to the expansion of our double trunk system has been the lopment of our double trunk Saturnight service which operates from t to coast including the important s of the middle west.

In Chicago, United Press central sion headquarters, we this week ed into new modern quarters.

Both the day and night news reports he United Press have set a record expansion on the Pacific coast during past year, Frank H. Bartholomew, ness representative in charge of this sion, reported.

"Six full time bureaus are now operated in California alone.

"Seven wires now terminate at San Francisco, the division headquarters, and are supplemented by additional wires on Saturday night. This is double the number of new channels operated on the coast a year ago.

"Three state wires are operated in California alone, none of them crossing the state's boundaries. Four interstate wires bring the U. P.'s world news to California.

"A cable department has been added to the news staff at San Francisco, in charge of Ray G. Marshall, and Hawaii, the Philippines, Japan and China have news channels direct to this office.

New papers starting in the west have taken advantage of the various types of United Press reports. These include the Yuma (Ariz.) Herald, Medford (Ore.) Daily News, Klamath Falls (Ore.) News, San Diego (Cal.) Independent, Burbank (Cal.) Review, Oxnard (Cal.) Courier, Ventura (Cal.) Star, Redding (Cal.) Independent, Tucson (Ariz.) Independent and Las Vegas (Nev.) Review.

"Under the direction of Henry Minott, New England manager with headquarters in Boston, and Otis Peabody Swift, field representative, particular emphasis has been placed on the development of state and sectional news. A new bureau has been instituted in Hartford, Conn., in charge of Cedric Foster, Hartford newspaper man.

"Through the co-operation of the foreign department of United Press, special files of foreign news are being placed on the New England circuits for the benefit of newspapers in the manufacturing cities having large foreign born population groups.

"The Portland (Me.) Express added the full day leased wire service during the year. The Boston Traveler introduced the high speed service to the Massachusetts capital. In Southeastern Massachusetts the New Bedford Times is now receiving the full leased wire daily, while Saturday night service was taken by the Salem Sunday Tribune. The Pawtucket Times is a new point in Rhode Island, while the Providence Journal-Bulletin will later institute United Press.

"New full leased wire points in Connecticut include the South Norwalk Sentinel, the New Britain Herald and the Danbury Times.

"M. F. Bourjaily and K. D. Gilmore report that expansion in the Old South in the past year was in several definite directions:

"1. A main double trunk wire was established out of St. Louis for the south, with the Memphis Press-Scimitar, the Nashville Evening Tennessean and the Birmingham Post as the initial clients.

"2. The Saturday night double trunk wire was embraced by Dixie Sunday papers, with the Birmingham News, the Nashville Banner and the Knoxville News-Sentinel leading.

"3. Day leased wire clients of the United Press taxed the southern circuit so heavily, that a new service will be launched May 1 to South Atlantic Coast clients, this wire to be filed with special attention to the news wants of Virginia and North Carolina. This circuit will be started to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, the Roanoke World-News, the Twin City Sentinel of Winston-Salem, N. C., and the Asheville Times.

"4. Separation of the Virginia and North Carolina clients from the western leg of the southern circuit will make it possible for the filing editors to pay particular attention to news needs of a Tennessee clientele, Alabama, Georgia and Louisiana and the middle southern states.

"The Chattanooga (Tenn.) News is under contract to receive the full leased wire day service of United Press later

(Continued on page 94)

More than 60,000

That is the circulation of the Akron Beacon Journal in a market of more than 300,000 people. If the regular figures of five people to the family are taken, there is an Akron Beacon Journal sold for every family in the Akron market.

In the Akron Market

Akron ranked second in amount of wages and 2nd in the value of manufactured products in Ohio, altho it was 5th in population. Corresponding cities were as much as $100,000,000 behind in the value of manufactured products and similarly lower in wages.

With such high per capita wealth

These high wages per man make a tremendous buying power and a market that will stand intensive cultivation. That is the reason why the Akron Beacon Journal carried enough advertising in 1926 to rank 1st in Ohio and 6th in the U. S. in advertising linage among six-day newspapers.

AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

Member of the 100,000 Group of American Cities

STORY, BROOKS & FINLEY

Representatives

New York Philadelphia

Chicago Los Angeles San Francisco

(Continued from page 93)

this year, which will give the United Press an evening newspaper client in each of the first five cities of Tennessee—with Memphis, Knoxville, Nashville, Johnson City.

"With this leased wire expansion in Tennessee also followed pony service to the Cleveland Banner and the Murfreesboro News-Banner, both new clients. The Kinston (N. C.) Free Press, the Anniston (Ala.) Star, the Florence (Ala.) News-Times, the Hendersonville (N. C.) Times-News, the Crowley (La.) Acadian, the Athens (Ga.) Banner-Herald, the Alexandria (Va.) Gazette and the Covington (Va.) Virginian are some of the older clients of the United Press in the south.

"In New York State United Press printer-telegraph circuits were extended within the past year. Extension of these circuits was accompanied by the addition of the Syracuse Herald, the Utica Observer-Dispatch, the Watertown Times, the Herkimer Times, the Rome Sentinel, the Oneida Dispatch and others.

"In Pennsylvania the United Press is delivering service to 65 afternoon newspapers out of 115 in the state receiving wire news service, maintaining bureaus at Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, Philadelphia and Pottsville. T. W. Gerber is in charge of the Pennsylvania expansion.

"Charter members on the Denver-El Paso circuit were the Albuquerque (N. M.) State Tribune and the El Paso Post. The circuit grew and before many weeks had passed, the Colorado Springs Gazette and Telegraph and the Pueblo Star-Journal became members.

Not long thereafter the Amarillo (Tex.) Globe and the Trinidad (Col.) Picketwire, the latter receiving a small telephone report, joined the circuit. This was followed by the addition of the Sterling (Col.) Advocate.

"The circuit now operates from Sterling, which is situated in the extreme northwestern corner of Colorado, to El Paso.

"In addition to creation of this circuit, the United Press began the operation of seven leased wires, day and night, into the Denver News and the Rocky Mountain News.

"While the leased wire expansion was continuing, the United Press also brought into its membership the Montrose (Col.) Press, the Longmont (Col.) Times, the Casper (Wyo.) Independent, El Diario de El Paso, a Spanish language newspaper; the Lamar (Col.) News and the Arizona Republican, published at Phoenix, Ariz. The Republican became a member of the United Press trans-continental night circuit, operating from New York to San Francisco.

"While these developments were under way, the United Press was expanding further in the southwest by adding the Wichita Evening Eagle, published by Marcellus and Victor Murdock, to the regular southwest circuit operated from Kansas City to Houston.

"Other additions included the Wewoka (Okla.) Democrat and the Abilene (Tex.) Times.

"Among papers which took United Press in the Great Lakes division were the Athens (O.) Messenger, Marysville (O.) Tribune, Lima (O.) Star, Elyria (O.) Chronicle-Telegram, Toronto (O.) Tribune, Wellsville (O.) News, East Palestine (O.) Leader, Louisville (Ky.) Herald Post, Indiana (Pa.) Gazette Punxutawney (Pa.) Spirit, Clearfield (Pa.) Progress, Erie (Pa.) Times, Peru (Ind.) Tribune, C. B. McCabe, business representative, reported.

Full leased news and financial wires were opened into Huntington, West Virginia, to the Herald and the Advertiser.

"This development, which has kept pace with the improvement of the newspapers we serve, will be continued during 1927. During the next year we expect to add another 20,000 miles of leased wire, particularly in the South, Southwest and on the Pacific coast."

HASSAN AND THE QUEENS—A MODERN FABLE

(Reprinted by special arrangement from Advertising World, London.)

THE merchants of Chorlogbad, which is the capital of Jhutapore, lived by selling finery to the queens of the nawab's house and the ladies of the greater and lesser nobility. Thus the bazaar was greatly resorted to and the traders multiplied in number, so that they must cast the net for buyers, and some waxed poor because there were not queens enough to go round. Moreover, the ladies of Jhutapore became over-critical, and would go from shop to shop throughout the length of the bazaar, to find the lowest price and the most attractive fabrics.

So it came about that when the caravans were made up and the sons of the merchants went out upon the Golden Road, they sought diligently in far countries for unscrupulous fabricators, that the hand of deceit might deceive the eye of vanity, and the bazaar was crowded with false wares.

But the merchants said, "It is well: for by the beard of the Prophet (upon whom be peace) if our linens live not long and our silks go quickly into holes, peradventure we shall sell others to replace them." Yet did the ladies murmur under their veils and the voice of complaint was heard in the ear of sympathy.

But Hassan, the son of Ali, was more subtle than all the merchants of Jhutapore, and he bade his son ride quickly, and alone, letting the teeth of discretion curb the tongue of loquacity, and return with great store of worthy merchandise. Which being done, he made haste to offer it in his shop and moreover sent messengers to whisper at the doors of the zenanas, "If you buy it at Hassan's, it's good."

This caused great wonder, and was told to the queens and the ladies of the nobility, so that they came in haste to see what there might be in it, and the roadway was blocked with their litters. Thus the son of Hassan must hasten for more wares and the other merchants murmured among themselves—they feeling the draught of unsuccess, as saith the infidel William, the son of Rogers. And when they had heard how this had come about they said among themselves, "Bismillah! By the seven gates of Tophet, it pays to advertise."

MILLER IN NEW YORK

U. P. Vice-President and South American Manager Home for a Month

James I. Miller, vice-president and South American manager of the United Press, arrived in New York on Wednesday on his quadrennial visit to general headquarters.

JAMES I. MILLER

During his stay of a month in New York, Miller will confer with general executives about plans for further improvement of United Press service to South America.

Miller has been in charge of the South American service since 1918. He entered the service in February of that year as Buenos Aires manager and played a prominent part in all the early struggles of the organization in the South American field. In 1922 Miller was elected vice-president and South American manager.

After a stay of a month in New York, he will go to California to visit relatives, sailing from there for Lima, Peru.

With apologies to the ultra-modern space buyer who, according to the trade papers, is no longer interested in circulation or lineage claims:—

"AN AGGRESSIVE NEWSPAPER NEVER STANDS STILL"

There is one paper in Paterson, N. J. that has come from last place to first as the following figures representing the sworn statements of circulation made to the U. S. Postoffice Department as of April 1st for each year from 1921 to 1927 will indicate:

	Press-Guardian	Morning Paper	Other Evening Paper
April 1st, 1921	10,634	——*	11,459
1922	12,084	15,387	11,423
1923	12,449	14,634	11,706
1924	13,593	16,606	11,611
1925	14,481	16,776	11,820
1926	14,766	16,704	13,651
1927	18,519	16,668	12,253

*Figures not available.

THE GROWTH OF THE PRESS-GUARDIAN during this period has been over SIX times as fast as the morning paper and nearly 10 times that of the other evening paper.

Here is the Record:	Gains
The Press-Guardian - - - - -	7,885
The Morning Paper - - - - -	1,281
The Other Evening Paper - - -	794

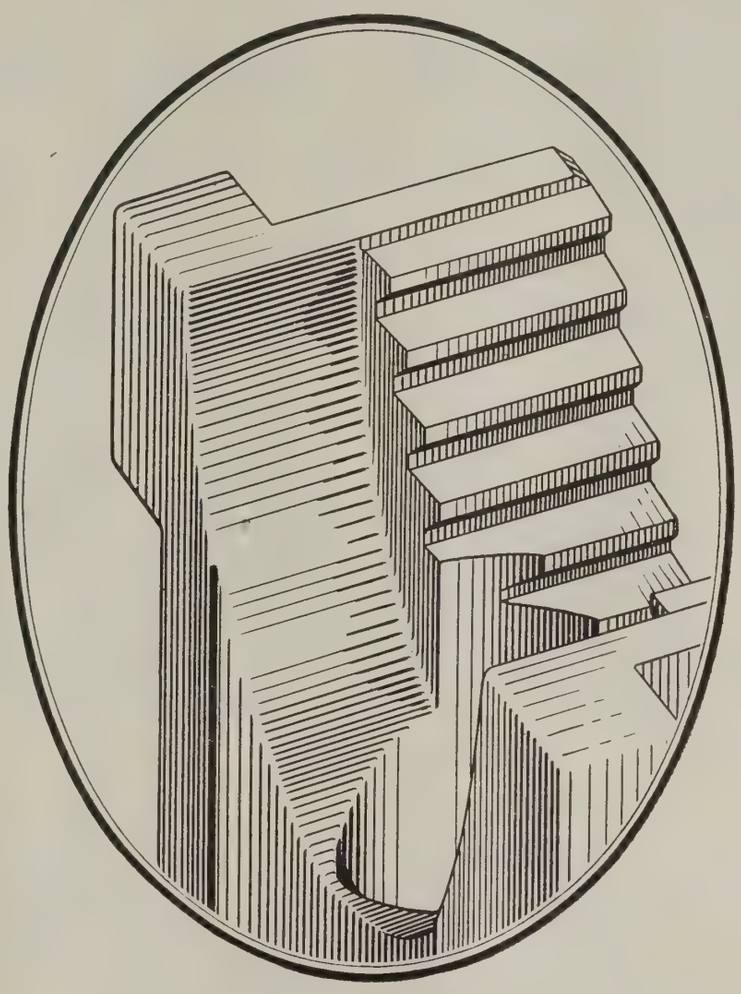
The average net paid circulation of The Press-Guardian for the past 4 months was

Over 19,000 Per Day



"Affidavits, after all, are more convincing than irresponsible claims or false slogans."

W. B. Bryant, Publisher.

P. S.—Mr. Space Buyer, if you are desirous of securing statistical data regarding the market, turn to the Paterson section of "A Study of All American Markets," published by The 100,000 Group of American Cities, Inc., where you will find a wealth of material. Additional information will be given gladly by our Merchandising Department.

Intertype Extra-Wide-Tooth Matrices

Wear longer and distribute with fewer stops

The practical economies of the Intertype Wide-Tooth Matrices are apparent. The combination teeth extend beyond the center of the matrix and this greater bearing area obviously makes the matrices wear much longer. They hang perfectly vertical in the transfers and in the distributor, do not cramp or swing on the tooth bars, and drop straight from the distributor bar. A special bevel, made possible by the wide teeth, prevents any matrix from being caught by the next following matrix while dropping from the distributor bar. In short . . . Intertype Wide-Tooth Matrices mean smoother distribution, less wear, more production, less expense. Ask for more details.

Intertype matrices will run in other slug-casting machines

Standardized INTERTYPE TRADE MARK

INTERTYPE CORPORATION: New York 1440 Broadway; Chicago 130 North Franklin Street; Memphis McCall Bldg.; San Francisco 560 Howard Street; Los Angeles 1240 South Main Street; Boston 80 Federal Street. . . . London; Berlin

Set on the Intertype in Kenntonian Series

CAPPER TELLS STUDENTS HIS RISE FROM "PRINTER'S DEVIL" TO PUBLISHER

Greatest Opportunities Now at Hand, He Declares — First Paper Was North Topeka Mail—Now Owns Ten Publications

FROM the position of printer's devil on the Garnett (Kan.) Weekly Journal to the ownership of an organization which employs 2,000 people, pays $400,000 in postage annually, and uses 26 huge presses and 40 carloads of paper annually, is the record of United States Senator Arthur Capper, head of the Capper publications of Topeka, Kan. It has taken Senator Capper 40 years to make the jump from the low ebb to the crest of his career.

The story of his life and business success was outlined modestly by the Senator himself in an informal address to journalism students at the Kansas State Agricultural College recently.

Forty years ago Senator Capper was setting type and doing odd jobs around the town printing office while he attended high school in Garnett. After finishing high school he went to Topeka, then the largest city in Kansas. He was given a job as typesetter on the Topeka Daily Capital. He was later promoted to become cub reporter and was given the North Topeka assignment.

In rapid succession he became city editor and then managing editor of the Capital. A year's training as reporter on the New York Tribune and Washington correspondent for the Capital rounded out his reportorial training. He returned to the Capital and was shortly promoted to the position of business manager.

But the young newspaperman felt that the time had come when he should obtain a publication of his own, so he purchased a small newspaper in North Topeka, the North Topeka Mail.

"The greatest thrill I ever had," the Senator proudly admitted to the embryo Kansas journalists, "was when the first edition came from the press bearing my name as editor and publisher."

A later purchase added a South Topeka paper, the Breeze, to Capper's ownership, and the two eventually became the Farmer's Mail and Breeze, for years a household necessity in thousands of Middle West homes.

From its small beginning the Capper organization has expanded to 10 publications, including two daily newspapers, and agricultural journals and magazines. The Capper publications are the Topeka Daily Capital, the Kansas City (Kan.) Kansan, Capper's Farmer, Capper's Weekly, the Household, Kansas Farmer and Mail and Breeze, Michigan Farmer, Pennsylvania Farmer, Missouri Ruralist, and Ohio Farmer.

It was the story of the growth of these papers that Senator Capper told.

"The fact that I began as a printer was of very great value to me," he declared. "An all-around knowledge of newspaper fundamentals are things to be acquired in your preparation for this work. I believe that journalism is the most attractive and offers more possibilities than any other occupation one might select.

"If you have nothing more in mind than the making of money, newspaper work is hardly worthwhile, for we are in this work not for what we can get out of it but for what we can give to it and to the community."

The key to the success of Capper's organization, the Senator declared, is its splendid organization and co-operation. It is chiefly a Kansas organization, he explained. Nowhere is there an organization more thoroughly Kansan than the Capper organization.

"I would gladly give up my seat in the United States Senate and my interests in the Capper publications in Topeka, if I could again be young and be as you—beginners in the field of journalism," Senator Capper said in speaking of the opportunities in journalism today. "The most wonderful opportunities await you in the next 25 years."

CURTIS NET IS $15,166,000

Saturday Evening Post Costs 16¢ to Produce Annual Report Shows

It costs from 12 to 16 cents to produce a copy of the Saturday Evening Post, which retails for five cents, stockholders of the Curtis Publishing Company were told at their recent annual meeting.

Circulation of the Saturday Evening Post increased 10 per cent during 1926 and that of the Ladies' Home Journal 7 per cent. The Country Gentleman was changed from a weekly to a monthly during 1926, so that equitable comparison cannot be made with the previous year. "Substantial gain has taken place," it was announced, "since monthly publication began."

The Curtis Publishing Company's annual report showed net income from operation, after deduction of all reserve and other charges, of $15,166,337. Profit of $69,243 on securities sold was shown, making total income of $15,235,581. Dividends on the preferred and common stocks totalled $13,498,165.

A credit balance to profit and loss at the end of 1926 was shown, amounting to $1,389,133, after reserves for future preferred dividends, amounting to $1,575,000 and a transfer to contingent reserve fund of $500,000 against a profit and loss balance at the beginning of the year of $1,801,647.

The company carried additional expense during 1926, it announced, due to increased circulation of its three publications without corresponding increase in advertising rates until the early part of the current year.

Directors were reelected without change

JOINING OREGON DAILY

William Tugman, formerly city hall reporter and special writer for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, but more recently covering the financial advertising field for the paper, will go to Eugene, Ore., May 9, to become editor of the Guard, of that city. The Guard was recently purchased by Alton F. Baker, son of E. H. Baker, president of the Cleveland Plain Dealer Publishing Company.

TO EDIT CLUB PAPER

George L. Edmunds, for many years a Washington correspondent of the New York Sun, and for the past six years an editorial writer for The Sun, has assumed the editorship of Dotac, the new magazine of the Downtown Athletic Club of New York City, Inc.

MASS
+CLASS

Some people attribute the unusual productiveness of Oregonian advertising to the kind of people who read The Oregonian.

Others think this advertising productiveness is due to The Oregonian's circulation leadership, with the largest home delivered circulation in Portland of any newspaper, the largest circulation in Portland's suburbs, and the largest total circulation in the Pacific Northwest.

Both are right. It is not often that you can buy both quality and quantity in the same medium. But you can in The Oregonian. That is why The Oregonian runs more advertising, daily and Sunday, than any other Portland newspaper. That is what makes Oregonian advertising so very economical for advertisers to buy and so profitable for them to use.

Morning Oregonian.

Nationally represented by Verree & Conklin, Inc.

285 Madison Ave. New York City | 321 Lafayette Blvd. Detroit | 681 Market St. San Francisco | 28 E. Jackson Blvd. Chicago

For successful advertising: "Do a good job in the best medium FIRST"

Automatic Stereotype Plate Handling Equipment, Automatic Roll Paper Lifts, Roll Paper Trucks, Track, Turntables, Switches, Bundle Lifts.

Sold by

The Cline Electric Mfg. Co.
Conway Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

The Capital Lift & Mfg. Co.
Manufacturers Columbus, Ohio

St. Paul Dispatch
St. Paul Pioneer Press

more than five sixths

of Saint Paul's purchasing power looks for news of your goods, wares and merchandise regularly every morning, every evening, every Sunday in these newspapers.

Circulation
More Than 166,000
Daily
Of which More Than 100,000
Is Delivered in St. Paul by Carrier
Sunday Pioneer Press Total Net Paid More Than 150,000

General Representatives
O'Mara & Ormsbee, Inc.
NEW YORK
CHICAGO
DETROIT
SAN FRANCISCO

EDITOR WINS RULING IN LOCAL FIGHT

Judge Holds Magilligan of Eureka (Cal.) Humboldt News Cannot Be Held for Libel After Case Was Dismissed

Arrest of two editors, the ousting of an entire administration and the dismissal of a grand jury are the high-lights of a conflict which began more than two years ago between a weekly newspaper of Eureka, Cal., and the Law Enforcement League of Humboldt county. The most recent development in the local "free press war" was the decision of Superior Judge Thomas H. Selvage that T. P. Magilligan, editor of the weekly Eureka Humboldt News, could not be re-indicted on a libel charge that already had been dismissed at the motion of the district attorney.

The libel charge against Magilligan, made by W. A. Markham as the result of an article in the Humboldt News inquiring the reason of the Law Enforcement League member visiting a certain rooming house, was dismissed by Superior Judge Harry W. Falk at the motion of District Attorney S. E. Metzler shortly after he took office in January. At this time a new grand jury was impanelled, but after it had been in session a short time it was discharged by Judge Falk on "account of lack of harmony among the members and failure to cooperate with the authorities."

The discharge of the jury did not seem to have any connection with Humboldt newspapermen until the ousted members of the jury announced in a signed statement that they had been discharged "because of our attitude in the Magilligan case." When questioned by newspaper representatives concerning this statement several of the jurors stated that the evidence warranted a re-indictment of Magilligan, but they had been discharged before they could take any action.

Shortly after the new grand jury started its first session, numerous resolutions were drawn up by W. C. T. U. organizations and other women's clubs asking that the Magilligan case be reconsidered. Superior Judge Selvage announced an open-court session to be attended by the district attorney and representatives of the organizations drawing up the resolutions. Representing the W. C. T. U. units was Denver Sevier, who was a superior judge last year when he sentenced Alfred Lindsley to a jail term for contempt of court.

After hearing arguments on the case, Judge Selvage ruled that criminal libel was a misdemeanor, and under the law could not be brought up again by the grand jury after the charge had been dismissed by order of the court.

T. P. Magilligan had to be carried to the courthouse from a hospital bed, where he has been confined since an auto accident in January.

Those active in the attempt to have the former News editor re-indicted include many of the county officers who were ousted in the recent county election. Whether new criminal libel charges will be brought against Magilligan on account of other controversial articles published has not been announced, as the faction opposing the newspapermen are being kept busy since the arrest of J. L. Vandusen, president of the Law Enforcement League, on charges of illegal registration and voting. Those who brought the charges stated in conversations with press representatives that the charges against Vandusen never would have been pressed if the League members had not been insistent on keeping Magilligan "in hot water."

MISSISSIPPI PRESS MEET

Plans are being made for the annual convention of the Mississippi Press Association which is to be held at Clarksdale, June 8-10. James H. Skewes, publisher of the Meridian Star, is association president; and R. L. Brown of Jackson, secretary.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

MR. MILES' STATEMENT

To Editor & Publisher: I have just read with amazement on page 21, your issue of April 16th, an advertisement, caption "The Truth in Memphis" in which you circulate a declaration that The Commercial-Appeal lied. It lied viciously. And, as you will see from further developments, it lied stupidly. Its lie will find it out."

The issue between the Press-Scimitar and the Commercial-Appeal will in due time be judiciously determined and while the matter is pending in the courts it will be improper for us to make any statement further than we have already made editorially, to wit: that we are confident the result of the litigation will be our vindication.

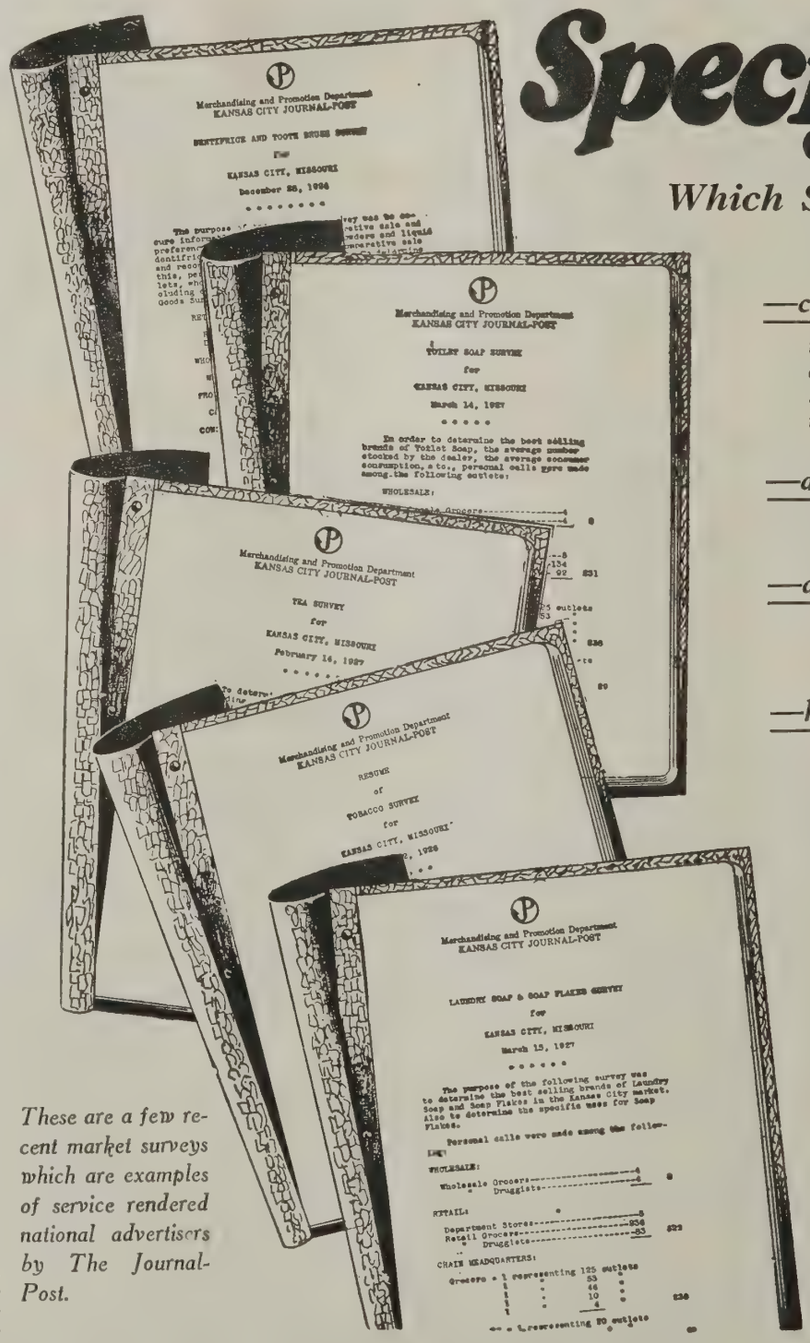
What puzzles me is your permitting the Press-Scimitar to use your columns to denounce this institution as a liar, a vicious liar and a stupid liar. Furthermore, your news story on page 4 is essentially untrue and does not state correctly the issue involved in the present controversy. The E. & P. reaches advertisers who may be influenced by the publication of which we complain.

Lovick P. Miles,
President, The Commercial-Appeal,
Memphis, Tenn., April 20, 1927.

SAFETY AWARD

To Editor & Publisher: As you doubtless know, the National Safety Council is a non-profit making, co-operative institution with 4,320 members and more than 65 branches which is endeavoring to conserve lives and limbs and property on the streets and highways, in other public places, on the sea, in the air, at home and throughout industry. We are not trying to boost any particular industry, product or corporation, and our supporters represent all industries. We haven't anything to sell, except Safety, and our income is derived from membership dues and contributions made by public spirited citizens and companies.

While every newspaper in the nation prints news about accidents comparatively few conduct constructive campaigns to show their readers how to prevent accidents. We know that practically all accidents can be prevented!



The Executive Committee of this institution is considering the advisability of offering some kind of award or trophy to the newspaper or papers that perform the greatest public service in the field of accident prevention during a certain period. Of course, if we should proceed with this thought, it would not develop into an attempt to obtain publicity for the National Safety Council as our main objective is to sell Safety to the nation rather than to procure recognition for ourselves.

It is our hope that you will write us how you feel about this proposed contest. Please present your views frankly and fully. Also state if we have your permission to use your name in this connection, if you are in favor of the idea and after you have approved the details of this recognition award if we carry it through. We will welcome your suggestions and regard them as a real contribution to the national safety movement.

A. A. Mowbray, Director,
Public Information
National Safety Council

CONDUCTS COOKING SCHOOL

The Richmond (Va.) News-Leader conducted an electric cooking school in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium April 25 to 29, inclusive.

These are a few recent market surveys which are examples of service rendered national advertisers by The Journal-Post.

Specifics--

Which Survey Covers Your Business?

—can you visualize

the number of brands of your and your competitors' products stocked by the average dealer in Kansas City?

—do you know the best sellers?

—do you know

the average consumption per family per month?

—have you compared the Kansas City market with other markets of a similar size?

Advertising placed with knowledge of the market is always the most profitable. Journal-Post advertisers have the advantage of this specific service.

If actual facts interest you, communicate with us—we will welcome an opportunity to show you your possibilities.

The Journal-Post has approximately 70% city coverage.

Kansas City Journal-Post

Lorenzen & Thompson, Inc.

National Representatives

NEW YORK
SAN FRANCISCO
CHICAGO
SEATTLE

Newspaper publishers and advertisers are invited to inspect the new home of the Pittsburgh Press, considered the finest newspaper plant in the world. The Press now has 198,126 daily circulation and 259,163 Sunday circulation. More daily circulation in Pittsburgh than other two evening papers combined—more Sunday circulation in Pittsburgh than other two Sunday papers combined.

SCRIPPS-HOWARD

Represented by Allied Newspapers, Inc., 250 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Chicago Detroit San Francisco Los Angeles Seattle

NEW DEFINITION OF NEWS WINS PRIZE FOR N. Y. SOCIAL RESEARCH STUDENT

It Is "A Perishable Commodity for Literate Mind" in Which Quality Determines Value—"Manufacture" of News Is Abuse of Public Trust

By SILAS BENT

THREE judges of distinction have agreed unanimously on a definition of that much-debated, elusive and sometimes Rabelaisian thing called news. They are Walter Williams, dean of the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri; Marlen E. Pew, editor of EDITOR & PUBLISHER; and Gerald W. Johnson, associate editor of the Baltimore Evening Sun and author of a recent book, "What Is News?" Their unanimous choice out of seventeen definitions submitted was announced last Thursday evening at the New School for Social Research, and is as follows:

"News is a perishable commodity, distributed by the newspapers, marketed fresh daily for consumption by the literate mind. It constitutes a written presentation of the events of the world, the nation, the State, and the city in all fields of intellectual and emotional interest, such events being of sufficient importance socially, economically, politically, scientifically or individually, to engage the attention of vast numbers of people. Like any other commodity, its careful preparation, the quality of its ingredients, the integrity of its purpose, reflect credit or discredit upon the honor of its purveyors. Substitutes for truth, or adulteration of facts, cheapening of method in the 'manufacture' of news, constitute abuse of public trust and threats against the health of the public mind."

The winner of the prize is Mike Wallach, an advertising man of 156 East 37th street, New York City.

Dean Williams conferred with the news advisers in the faculty of the School of Journalism at Missouri, so that the choice in his case represents a composite opinion. He sends me this comment from the advisers: "This definition is the best, not because it is one of the longest, but because it brings in, as the others do not, the ideal of public service and the integrity of those who gather the news. It is difficult to frame a definition of news that does not include something that might [not] be news under some circumstances.

"The other definitions are all rather general, but they have the merit of not lowering news to the standard of merely the sensational or thrilling and of not regarding news as merely anything that will increase the newspaper's circulation and advertising."

Of the winning definition (three prizes were given in a contest among members of a class at the New School, with only about half the members competing), Mr. Pew wrote:

"It might have been said in fewer words, but he has said it as I see things." And Mr. Johnson said that his vote rested on the phrase, "written presentation of the events of the world . . . of sufficient importance, etc." He added: "Since the definition is to be made from the standpoint of a newspaper, it is important to keep in mind the presentation as well as the fact.

"I am interested particularly in the fact that you got only two thoroughly cynical definitions. I had expected half a dozen, at least."

Whether Mr. Johnson expects cynicism from persons merely because they read the daily newspapers, or expects it of this class because it had been exposed to infection from my lectures, is not apparent.

The second prize was won by Louise H. Fox, a librarian of Brooklyn, and is as follows: "News is an accurate and impartial account of anything that happens, which, because of its timeliness, universal appeal, peculiarity, or significance, will interest people."

The third prize went to E. W. Shimmons, advertising manager of the Columbia University Press, whose definition is as follows: "News, as defined by current usage in the metropolitan press, is correct published information concerning new, important, strange or dramatic events, happenings or phenomena, or forecasts of such, in which newspaper readers are interested."

Mr. Shimmons was the only winning contestant to take account of the fact that tidings of a possibility, or a probability, as well as of an accomplished fact, may be news. But in my judgment (this is quite unrelated to the opinion of the judges, although they may have thought the same thing), his definition is weakened by the use of the word "interested." What do we mean by interested? If any theatrical producer or book publisher or school teacher or news editor could say with certitude of anything, "This is, or is not, interesting," he would get rich more quickly than Henry Ford.

Honorable mention should be given to a fourth definition, which ran but a nose behind the third. It was written by Mrs. Helen B. Leavens, a publicity agent in social work, and ran as follows: "News is the presentation of any event (or development) which serves to inform, entertain, instruct, shock or thrill a large proportion of the public."

The first prize was a course of lectures at the New School of Social Research—any course to be chosen by the winner; the second was $10, the third $5. That only about half of the class competed indicates either that the prizes were too small or that the difficulty of attempting a definition was a barrier.

So far as I know there are no active newspaper men in the class. The course does not pretend to tell how to write for newspapers; it is a series of lectures describing the modern metropolitan daily press. (It is now about concluded, lest you suppose that this is a piece of press-agentry.) The members are grown-ups, as the New School is devoted to adult education. The contest was based on the practice of modern big city newspapers, in order to relieve the contestants of any need to account for motion pictures and the radio as media of news-communication.

That three men hundreds of miles apart, with no communication between them as to the seventeen definitions submitted to their attention, with no chance to argue or convince one another, should have agreed unanimously on one of those definitions seems to me an extraordinary thing. It seems the more so to me because in my own mind there was much confusion as to which of the definitions had the best chance.

PRINTING CLUB FORMED

New York Group to Occupy Top Floor of Master Printers Building

Formation of the Printing Crafts Club of New York was officially endorsed and plans for its immediate organization were outlined at a meeting held in the Hotel Astor the evening of April 21. The meeting was presided over by Jacob Monsky, president of the Herald Square Press, who has been the leader in sponsoring the plan. The affair was attended by representatives from the printing, publishing and allied industries and the consensus of opinion was enthusiastically in favor of the project.

The club will occupy the entire top floor of the Master Printers Building at Thirty-fourth street and Tenth avenue. Membership will be limited in number and restricted to those actively engaged in the printing and allied crafts.

BUYS PLANT SITE

E. S. Kellogg, general manager of the Alhambra (Cal.) Post-Advocate, has purchased a plot 150 by 150 feet as a site for a new newspaper plant, to be erected later this year.

New England's Second Largest Market

Providence Has Telephone for Every 4.8 Persons

A recent national survey shows Providence to be high up on the list of cities having large numbers of telephones in proportion to their populations.

There are 21.3 telephones for each 100 persons—a pretty high average when you find New York City with 21.7.

The Providence Journal
and
The Evening Bulletin

give you excellent coverage in this prosperous market.

Circulation 110,042 Net Paid

Providence Journal Company
Providence, R. I.
REPRESENTATIVES
Chas. H. Eddy Co. — Boston New York Chicago
R. J. Bidwell Company — San Francisco Los Angeles Seattle

CLAYBOURN PRECISION MACHINERY

for Better Newspaper Printing

WE MANUFACTURE a complete line of PRECISION MACHINERY for newspaper publishers for producing accurate materials in making up the composing room forms.

Mats are no more accurate than the forms from which they are moulded—neither are the plates more accurate than the mats from which they are cast. To improve the quality of the printed sheet, provide the necessary means to accurately prepare the materials making up the forms before moulding. The net result of uniform height in the form is better plates and better printing.

Our machinery will precision curved stereos for color and magazine printing—greatly reducing make-ready, and produce a superior quality of printed product. Ask the users of our machinery—Pittsburgh Press, Milwaukee Journal, Philadelphia Inquirer, Detroit News, and other units now in process.

Never before has PRECISION played so important a part in newspaper publication, and is fast supplanting the old haphazard methods.

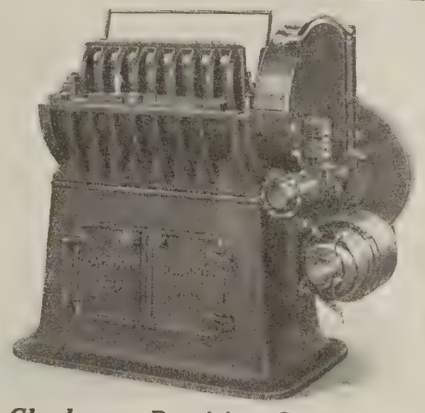
Follow that impulse and write for full information NOW!

The Claybourn Precision Double Head Flat Plate Shaving Machine

For shaving shell stereos, electrotypes, and stereo base for mounting zincs and shell stereos to accuracy, thus insuring level printing line in face of form before moulding.

Claybourn Precision Flat Plate Power Proof Press

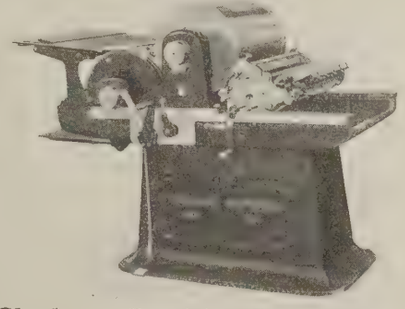
For proofing zinc etchings, shell stereos and electros, etc., for checking printing qualities before assembling in composing room form.



Claybourn Precision Gauging Machine

For checking stereo base mounting material, zinc etchings, shell stereos and electrotypes, in order to establish a standard height of all materials making up the printing form.

Curved saddles are provided for checking curved stereos for uniform thickness. Also used for checking product of type casting machines.



Adopt standards and maintain them by a definite method.

This applies to all materials in composing room, stereotype department and press-room.

Claybourn Precision Curved Plate Shaving Machine

For accurate shaving of curved stereos for newspaper, color comic and magazine printing. Has no equal for producing perfect plates.

Claybourn Precision Curved Plate Proof Press

For proofing curved stereos, after shaving, without make-ready, to check printing qualities before delivery to press room. Provides an accurate check on product of stereotype department.

CLAYBOURN PROCESS CORPORATION

Milwaukee, Wisconsin New York Office, 461-8th Ave.

Telephone Chickering 5656

HOW NEWSPAPER ELIMINATED FREE PUBLICITY

Advertising Staff Trembled When Strict Policy Was Inaugurated on Clarksburg, W. Va., Daily, But Linage Increased—Advertising "Club" Proved a Feather When Showdown Came

By GUY T. VISKNISKKI

DOES a newspaper publisher dare to cut out of his paper all free reading notices and propaganda of every sort, both local and national?

And if he has the nerve to do this, will the paper suffer a decrease in revenue and good will?

Well, as managing owner of the Clarksburg (W. Va.) Telegram, I cut out publicity stuff of every kind, and—

But let me tell the story in detail, and from it the reader can draw whatever conclusion he likes best.

When I took active charge of the Telegram back in December, 1925, I found that it was quite liberal in the matter of giving away its news space, to say the least.

Any local merchant who asked for it could get a free write-up any time he wanted it and at almost any length.

The theatres not only had extensive blurbs printed as theatrical news, but pictures galore.

As for the automobile industry, it was given column after column of free publicity, especially on Sundays, and the society news was frequently sprinkled with free notices of this woman's dancing classes, that woman's courses in piano forte, and somebody else's professional instruction in singing or elocution. Of course, none of these good local ladies ever gave the Telegram a line of paid advertising; why should they when they could call up the society editor and get it all in for nothing, and have their bread and butter business treated as important social doings?

I took the situation up with the advertising department, and at once there was great perturbation in its midst. It would never do to cut out the publicity—good Gawd, no! Why, the advertisers had been used to it for years—they would immediately take their advertising out of the paper if they couldn't get free reading notices. And as for the good local ladies who taught singing and so forth, it was true that they never had advertised, but they were friends of the paper and they could do it a lot of harm by talking against it among their friends if the "courtesy"—that's what the advertising department called it—of giving them access to the social columns were taken away.

I took the situation up with the editorial department, and got much the same answer. Of course, the fact that several members of the staff made money on the side by engaging in publicity work for Tom, Dick, Harry and their second cousins had nothing to do with their position in the matter.

Now, I did not want to cut down the advertising revenue of the Telegram, neither did I want to reduce the number of its readers. On the contrary, I had bought into the paper with the determination to increase both the volume of its advertising and the number of its readers. I listened earnestly to what advertising and editorial departments had to say, but somehow I was not convinced, and so after pondering over the problem for several days, I came down to the office one frosty morning and issued an order that, starting at once, all stuff in the way of free advertising in the news columns of the paper would be cut out, and that all requests, pleas, prayers, demands, and threats for its publication would be referred to me for action and disposal.

And then the fun began, both inside and outside the office. The advertising department took up hours pleading with me to revoke the order. Its trump argument ran to this effect:

"Why, Colonel, the advertisers here think more of the free reading notices they have been getting than they do of their own paid advertising; the other paper will keep on giving the notices to them, and then where will we be?"

I admitted that the advertisers undoubtedly thought more of the free publicity given them, in the form of news, than they did of their own paid advertising, but I refused to agree that they would "pull" the advertising if they were no longer given the customary salve.

"Do you honestly believe that this paper is a good advertising medium?" I asked.

"Yes," was the answer.

"Then," I said, "go out and talk and sell space in it on the paper's merit as an advertising medium, and don't try to bribe any man into it by offering him free reading notices. And by the way," I added, "don't forget to let me know about any obstreperous customer, and send him to me, if necessary."

"Do you mean," asked the society editor, "that Miss Blank can no longer call up and get notices of her singing school in the society news? Why, Colonel, she'll demand it, and she'll be angry at us forever, and then what will I do?"

"Tell her about the new rule, and send her to me if she raises the devil," I answered.

"But, Colonel," protested the city editor, "some of the people who bring in publicity notices have been lifelong friends of the paper. Others are on our side of the fence politically. There's So-and-So, now—he's always helping us out in the way of news, and he's a good friend of yours."

"Yes," I said, "there's So-and-So, now. Undoubtedly, he is a good fellow and all that, but is that any reason why he should be allowed to grab free publicity for his life insurance company in the Telegram, as he has done twice in the last few weeks to my own knowledge, and never a line of paid advertising from him for as long as I have gone back through the files?"

So the procession of free space grabbers started forming on the right, at the entrance to my office, with their offerings in their hands.

"But," they would say, when told of the new rule, "we have always been granted this favor and we don't see why it should be taken away now."

To the business men I would reply:

"If I walk into your store, will you give me a suit or a pair of shoes, a tie or garters to hold up my socks? You will, for a price, and not otherwise, because these things you have for sale at a profit, and on the profitable selling of them you depend for a living, both you and your family.

"My delivery truck will need new tires shortly; can I get them for nothing at your garage? It has to have a fresh supply of gas every so often—do you give me that free?

"Yesterday, Mr. Druggist, I needed toothpaste and shaving cream. I walked up to your counter, got what I wanted and paid for it, because I recognize that you are not in business for your health and that unless some one buys your stock, you are going to starve.

"Now, this newspaper is just as much a business venture as your clothing store, your automobile supply shop, your garage, your drug store. You have certain definite things for sale, at a fair profit, and so have we. But, whereas, you may have many things for sale, this newspaper has just two. One is advertising space, the other is the printed paper itself. Here are our only sources of revenue, and out of them we must meet the weekly payroll of $2,500 and all other expenses incurred in getting out the paper. I wonder if you know that just the white paper we print the Telegram on costs upwards of $4,000.00 a month?

"Now, in order to meet these expenses and leave us a livable profit, we have put what we believe is a fair price on our advertising space. It will cost you so much to have this notice printed in today's paper as an advertisement. Speaking frankly, you are asking me to put this stuff in free for you so that it will help your business; otherwise you wouldn't spend any time trying to get it published in the guise of news. But do you give me your wares free, gratis, for nothing when I am in need of them? Why, then, should I give you our wares free—printed copies of the Telegram and advertising space in it being just as much commodities of trade as anything you have on your shelves or your floors?"

"Yes, I know that," was often the reply, "but your paper is not all made up of advertising, you have a good many columns to fill besides, and I can't see why this little item can't go in there."

"Why do you buy the Telegram?" I would ask, when this reply was made.

Of course, there was only one answer—to get the news.

"Now," I would say, "suppose, instead of getting the news in the Telegram, you found the columns where the news should be filled with just such free reading notices as this little one you want me to print—how would you like that?"

"Well, of course, that wouldn't be right. But I am asking you to print just this notice, and it will not take up much space."

"Ah, just one notice, and it will not take up much space—I grant you all of that. But what about your competitor down the street? If I give you this notice, he will expect similar treatment, and rightly so. And how about all the other business men of the town—am I to discriminate in your favor, or let them all in? Just one notice, and it doesn't take up much space, I'll admit. But one notice would mean many more like it, they all would mean a newspaper whose reading columns were given over to free advertising, and you have just told me that you buy the Telegram every evening in order to get the news. The only fair treatment for all concerned—advertisers, readers of the paper and its owners—is thus rule of no free advertising, with the news columns of the paper kept wholly for news and all reading notices cast over in the form of advertisements and frankly published as such at the regular rates."

In such fashion I would put the matter before the space grabbers. My idea was to appeal to their own business judgment in the matter, to make them see the problem as a fellow business man. And I found that it worked. There was no general scurrying to the front counter to cancel advertising contracts. On the other hand, not a few men, coming in to demand that we print their publicity statements free, ordered them to be inserted as paid advertisements before they left.

Of course, here and there a man would prove the exception to the rule, and refuse to let his gray matter work. Invariably, this sort of customer would end up by threatening to withdraw such advertising as he was already running and concentrate it all in the other paper.

"Why, that is your privilege," I would tell him, even while I had an attack of that "gone" feeling in the region of the pocketbook. "It's your money, the other fellow has a good paper, you have a perfect right to choose between us, I hope you get as fine results there as you have through the Telegram, and as the movie star said to her sixth husband when she set forth at the end of their first week of married life to divorce him, 'Good-bye, good luck and God bless you.'"

I have always figured out that the way to "get" a hard boiled citizen is to give him a mouthful of his own meat, with a dash of politeness sprinkled over it. Anyway, when I gave these certain hard boiled West Virginians to understand that they could take their advertising away or leave it with us as they chose, without let or hindrance on our part, they almost invariably weakened and, instead of becoming enemies of the paper, turned into its most ardent supporters both as readers and advertisers. The psychological reason for this is so obvious that I shall not waste space outlining it here.

Two or three advertisers did drop out of the paper because they were denied their dear, old beloved "graft." I was importuned almost daily by fellow workers to appear before them, hat in hand, at their respective places of business and petition them to give us back their advertising. My stock answer to all such entreaties was, "Old Man Time will sure do a lot of things for you if you'll let him." Sure enough, after a while, these fellows, one after another, came back into the paper of their own accord and on our terms of no free reading notices for them or anybody else.

One of them said to me when he came in to renew his advertising:

"Colonel, I didn't think you meant it when you said all free publicity was going to be kept out of the Telegram. But I have noticed the last few weeks that it has been, and I want to say right here that I have more respect for the old sheet for doing this than I ever had before. I am ready to come back, because I know now that the Telegram will give all of us, as advertisers and readers, an even break."

More respect for the old sheet than he ever had before! That is just what

(Continued on page 106)

The Morning Telegraph,
the leading newspaper in Theatricals, Turf, Finance and Motion Pictures, prints all of the day's worth while general news, with exclusive features covered by a great staff of special writers.

It has the largest professional circulation of any newspaper in the United States.

The Worcester, Mass. Telegram - Gazette Now Has More Than 100,000

NET PAID DAILY CIRCULATION

¶ The Telegram-Gazette's record of increasing usefulness over a period of years has been approved by both readers and advertisers in no uncertain manner. A half million people reside in the prosperous Worcester territory—105,384 families. The Telegram-Gazette net paid circulation now averages over 100,000 daily.

¶ Such manifest unanimity in public approval makes possible one-cost coverage of this great market that is thorough, economical and effective.

¶ In 1926 the Telegram-Gazette published 19,459,335 lines of advertising. This overwhelming endorsement carried with it leadership in every advertising classification.

The Telegram-Gazette is served by the Associated Press, Consolidated Press Association, International News and Universal Service—owns and operates Radio Station WTAG and is one of the few newspapers in the world to print and use DAILY Colored Comic Sections.

Worcester Massachusetts
Member of the 100,000 Group of American Cities
TELEGRAM-GAZETTE

Net Paid Daily Circulation for 1927

January - -	101,864
February -	101,705
March - -	101,838

TELEGRAM-GAZETTE

MORNING — EVENING — SUNDAY

GEORGE F. BOOTH
PUBLISHER

WORCESTER
MASSACHUSETTS

Paul Block, Inc.
NATIONAL ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE

BANK CLEARINGS FORM AN ADVANCE BAROMETER OF NEWSPAPER LINAGE

Writer Compares Figures Outside of New York City with Linage Totals to Back His Theory—Charts Show Business Trend

By PHILIP FRANCIS NOWLAN

SOME time ago there appeared in EDITOR & PUBLISHER an article explaining the use of newspaper linage figures, in the form of a chart, as a barometer of business. The which was very interesting.

Publishers, however, would be likely to find a little more practical value in the use of business conditions as an advance indicator of linage to be expected.

Hence, a few little experiments in the private statistical laboratory, with results that may be evaluated by each reader for himself.

As a starting point the old conflict of opinion about the best time to advertise was chosen. A large part of the advertising fraternity contends that the proper time to apply advertising pressure is when business is bad, for the purpose of equalizing sales and restoring confidence. The merits of the argument are obvious, but need not be discussed here. On the other hand, it seems that the majority of those who go into the advertising market with their money hold that they should buy when they can get the most for that money—that is to say, the best response in sales volume. This is when business is good.

If it is true that the majority follow this policy, it is logical to assume that a quickening or slackening of advertising linage should follow a quickening or slackening of business, and that the state of business constitutes an advance barometer of linage.

It will not, of course, be a dependable indicator for an individual paper which recently has made any radical change in policy, method, or personnel, or which faces unusual local developments or conditions. It should merely reflect average advertising volume throughout the country, and somewhat in advance.

It will not tell the individual publisher why he is running only a certain linage this month; but it should give him in advance what he ought to be running this month, "other things being equal"; and give him quicker warning (or quicker satisfaction) if he finds substantial difference between his figures and the common experience. He can make his examination, more roughly and with less accuracy, but, nevertheless, in advance of the usual post-mortem following the passing away of the month and the passing of the accomplished figures through the clearing house.

Now, since advertising has to do with more than merchandise and the actual movement of goods, the most logical indicator would appear to be that of general business activity, which is best reflected, perhaps, in the figures for bank clearings or debits to individual accounts outside of New York City. New York is better excluded for the reason that stock market transactions, not always a good reflection of general business conditions, form a large percentage of the New York clearings.

For the sake of comparison the figures are charted in percentages of the average of 1924-5-6. This also has the advantage of permitting anyone who cares to use a chart of this sort to project the line to its indicated position and make a straight application of the percentage rate so located to the figures of his own paper.

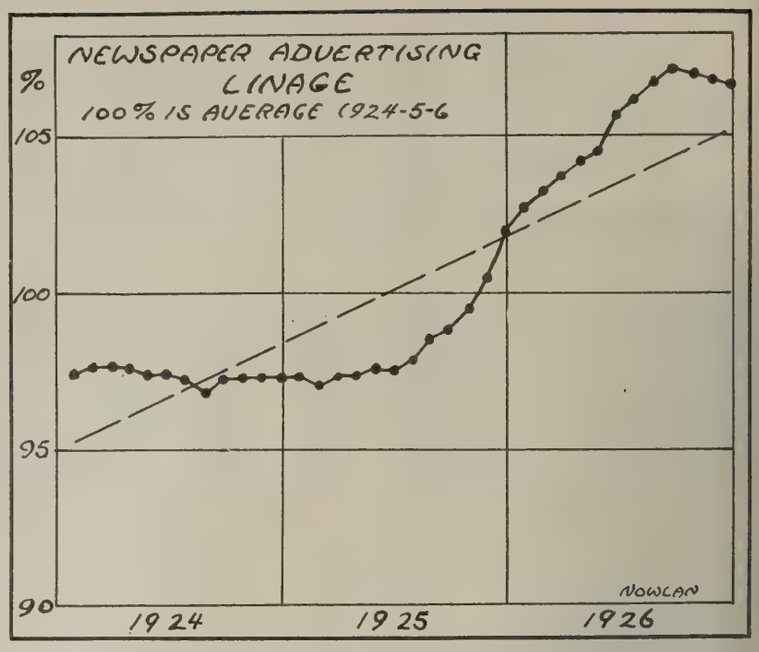
For the purpose also of clearing away short-period, whimsical movements (nearly always present in any business) and revealing only the true or average trend, each figure is the average of the twelve-month period ending with the month in which it is plotted. This also has the advantage of "swallowing up" seasonal variations, and giving the balanced trend.

When so plotted, the figures for bank clearings and advertising linage appear as a couple of skinny snakes full of olives (one for each month) traveling in an Eastwardly direction, with their necks raised and their heads slightly lowered to scan the ground in front of them.

The bank snake, however, is much more of an upstanding individual than the advertising snake, which makes an accurate comparison of their curves a bit difficult.

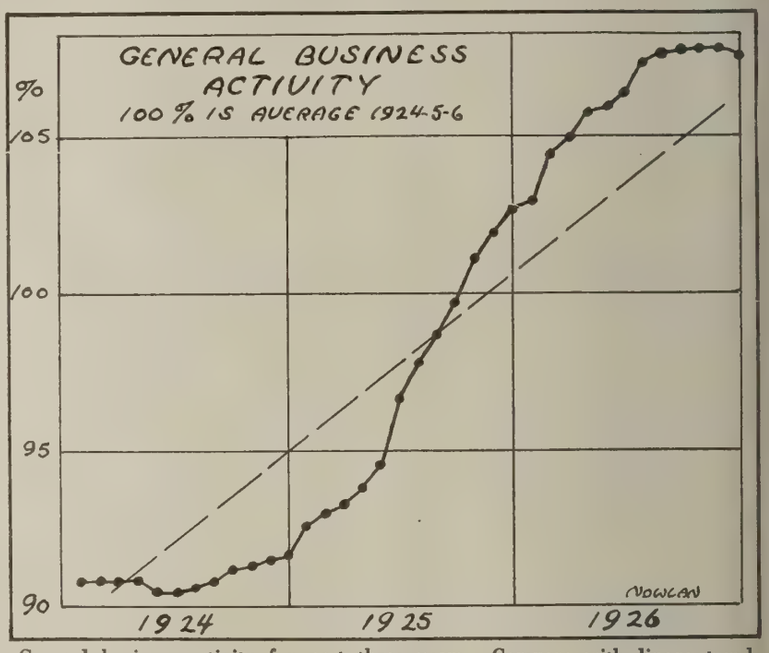
The reason for this is that both of them have swallowed axes (sing. axis, not axe) as well as olives. Said axes being the graphic representation of the normal or average growth rate of general business activity and advertising linage, due to the normal average expansion of the country and its volume of business, and irrespective of the widely known business cycle.

Since this rate of growth factor is one that has a negligible variation unless you are considering periods of a quarter or half a century, there is no particular purpose in predicting or charting it, and since its removal from both snakes will violate no statute and will permit easier comparison of the cycle factors, why, they may be considered as eliminated.



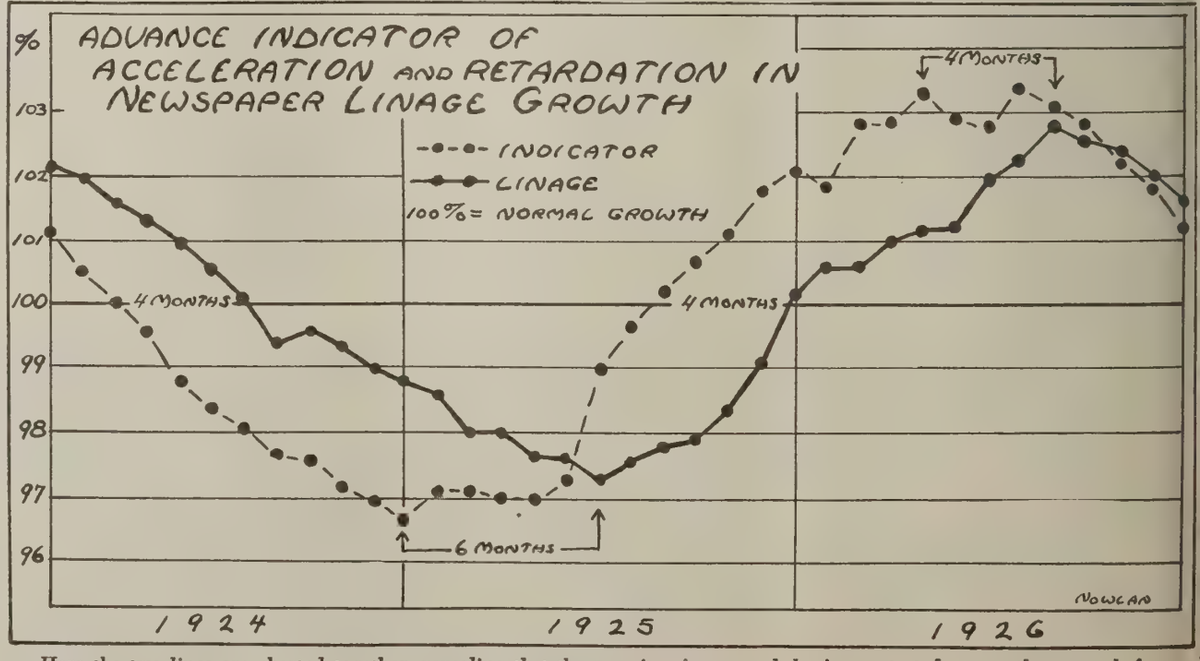
Assuming the axes as a 100 per cent base line, and locating the olives of each snake as far above and below this base line as they are above and below his individual axis, the snakes are brought down to brass tacks, and a very interesting comparison results.

It will be noted that the upturns and downturns of the general business activity snake occurs several months in advance of those of the newspaper advertising linage snake.



The G. B. A. snake began to turn up at the beginning of 1925 (remember each figure means "the twelve-month period ending here") and the N. A. L. snake followed suit in July.

The reader may be allowed some freedom of opinion as to where the G. B. A. snake may be considered as starting his downturn. If he doesn't believe that charts mean anything, he will insist that the downturn didn't start until August and that it's all a lot of silly nonsense. If he's more open-minded, he'll admit that the snake got away with two months of downtrend from April, even if he was checked for a single month before gathering real momentum, whereas the N. A. L. snake didn't begin his toboggan until September.



And there it is—for what it's worth.

The three-year line of newspaper advertising showing ups and downs. Each black dot indicates one month's totals. One hundred per cent is average for the period.

General business activity for past three years. Compare with linage trend above.

Here the two lines are charted together, revealing that the upswing in general business started a month or so before linage was affected and vice versa.

A DOMINATING INFLUENCE in Over 300,000 New York Homes

—and a necessary factor in any advertising campaign to cover the New York market

THIS is the achievement we announce two and a half years after starting from scratch.

Are we proud of it? Well, try to think, if you can, of any similar accomplishment in the history of American journalism.

According to government statements, the Graphic's gain of 92,287 readers during the six months' period ended March 31, 1927 represents the largest gain in average daily circulation of any New York newspaper, both in the morning and evening fields.

The gain made by the Graphic is greater than the combined gains of all standard-size newspapers in New York during the same period. It is 29,782 copies in excess of the circulation made by the second newspaper—the News—in the daily field.

There is no longer any question about the position of the Graphic among the New York newspapers. As a dominating influence in over 300,000 New York homes, it is now a necessary factor in any advertising campaign to cover the New York Market.

We should like to have our representative discuss with you the reasons for the Graphic's phenomenal growth—and why page by page, feature by feature, the Graphic is today one of the most distinctive newspapers published in the United States.

The Graphic published 3,699,155 lines of advertising during 1926, a gain of 1,512,479 lines over 1925.

NEW YORK
EVENING GRAPHIC

HARRY A. AHERN
Advertising Manager
25 City Hall Place, New York

"A Human Interest Newspaper"

CHARLES H. SHATTUCK
Western Manager
168 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago

Government Statement March 31, 1927 334,759

HOW NEWSPAPER ELIMINATED FREE PUBLICITY

(Continued from page 102)

every advertiser had, I am sure, deep down in his heart. And that is one reason why, I am equally sure, that all through this trying period the volume of local advertising in the Telegram showed a nice increase instead of falling off alarmingly, as the office pessimists prophesied it would. Some of this added linage, incidentally, came from the dear good ladies who hitherto had managed to get their advertising run as news items in the most widely read part of the paper—the society columns. Contrary to expectations, they were far less vociferous against the no free publicity rule than the representatives of the supposedly less vocal sex. They took their medicine like men, if I may be allowed to mix up the sexes in this more or less informal metaphorical fashion.

I could sit down and talk with the local advertisers face to face; the national advertisers who were also active participants in the same old game of grab I had to handle by letter, and that made the task somewhat more difficult. You can say things to a fellow that he will take in good part which, if put before him on paper, will make him howl like a Comanche for your blood. And so, whenever there came a request, or even a thinly veiled demand, from a national advertiser that the "news" story enclosed be published in the Telegram (and many, many such requests were made), I would sit me down and pour out my heart to said national advertiser, or, rather, his man Friday, the advertising agency.

I'd tell Mr. Friday that I had received his request, and I was glad that he felt free to make it. But here was my embarrassment—indeed, my very great embarrassment. Many such requests, not only from national, but local advertisers, confronted me daily. What was I to do? Print all of these reading notices? If I did, there would be little or no room left for news—and then I would proceed to tell him approximately how many columns of reading notices had been offered to us that day and how many columns we had in the paper for reading matter that same day. Now, I'd continue, he could see, I was sure, my very great embarrassment. It was a choice of no reading notices at all being printed, or little or no news, because I could not in fairness give him a free reading notice and refuse this courtesy to the "other fellow." I was sure he would agree with me that a paper sacrificing news for reading notices was not a good medium for any advertiser, national or local. Our aim was to produce a paper with the greatest possible reader interest for the people of our section. Above everything else, they wanted the news; therefore, in the best interests of his client, we felt that we should not print any reading notices, and believed he would heartily agree with us, now that the situation had been placed before him as it actually was. And so on and so forth.

Well, we never had a national advertiser so handled to withdraw an account; indeed, almost from the inauguration of this policy the volume of national advertising showed a decided increase.

Nor, to the best of my knowledge and belief, did it scare away any prospective national advertisers. In this connection, I recall one rather large automobile account. Publicity regarding a new departure in motor cars came in almost daily from the agency handling it, and daily it went into the waste basket.

Finally, the agency sent a peremptory letter demanding to know why none of the "excellent news stories" it had mailed to us had not been printed; and it proceeded to say that the names of all newspapers "co-operating" with the agency in the publishing of these stories was being compiled against the day when the list of papers that would carry the advertising of the new car would be made up.

I let the letter lie on my desk until I could answer the threat without burning up the typewriter ribbon. Meantime, another letter came from the agency, a curt two or three lines asking an immediate answer to the previous letter. Then I wrote as follows:

"In answer to your two letters of recent dates.

"I gather that you are going to spend thousands of dollars for your client in advertising a new departure in motor cars.

"I also note your demand for columns of free publicity in the Telegram about this departure.

"If I give you free publicity, I will also have to give the 'other fellow' free publicity.

"You, of course, know the great amount of free publicity that is offered the newspapers these days.

"Which would you and your client prefer—the advertisements of your new car surrounded by free publicity blurbs, which do not fool even the dumbest newspaper reader, or printed on a page whose reading columns is chock full of live local and national news of interest to every reader?

"Assuring you of our desire to co-operate with you in every practical way possible—"

I showed the letter to the advertising department. "Mail that, and we might as well kiss the account good-bye," was its verdict.

Nevertheless, I mailed it—and about a month later along came the account, with the Telegram in on the advertising campaign right from the start.

It was this incident that led me to print the following statement on all Telegram promotion literature sent out to national advertisers and advertising agencies:

"The Greater Clarksburg Telegram does not publish free reading notices or propaganda of any kind, all space being given to the publication of NEWS and paid advertising."

My experience in eliminating all kinds of free publicity from the columns of the Telegram during the sixteen months I was its general manager led me to these fixed conclusions:

1. Banning publicity does not decrease a newspaper's volume of advertising—it increases it.

2. It not only increases reader interest in the paper—it gets and holds new readers. (All the time the Telegram was giving all of its reading space to news it was gaining new readers and holding them. The circulation was doubled in the space of sixteen months, and that without the use of contests or premiums.)

3. An advertising staff that has a good medium to sell and the gray matter and energy to sell it never has to fall back upon the bribe of a free reading notice to get any worthwhile advertiser in the paper.

4. And, finally, until the newspaper publishers as a class have the "guts"—as we said in them good A. E. F. days—to refuse the free space grabbers access to their columns for even so much as one agate line, the newspapers of America are not going to have the respect of advertisers and readers they are inherently entitled to.

COAST PAPER INCORPORATES

The Sun Printing Company, publishers of the San Fernando (Cal.) Sun, has been incorporated with an authorized capital of $50,000, of which $40,000 is paid up. Stockholders and officials of the company are: R. H. Glenn, president and manager; L. A. Glenn, vice-president and assistant manager, and K. K. Hooper, secretary and treasurer. The Sun was purchased five years ago by R. H. Glenn from Arthur G. Munn.

WANT BROOKLYN AD CLUB

Plans for the formation of an advertising club in Brooklyn were discussed recently at a meeting of several newspaper and advertising men who stressed the need of such an organization in Brooklyn. At the next meeting, which will be held on May 10, a committee will report the ways and means for formal organization.

CLUB PROGRESS SHOWN IN BEAZELL'S REPORT

Deficit in New York Newspaper Men's Organization Reduced and Membership Increased in Past Year

A net deficit for the 12 months ended April 1 of $894.34 was reported last week for the Newspaper Club of New York by William P. Beazell, president. Although a loss, the report showed an improvement for the period of $984.98 over the year before.

WM. P. BEAZELL

Mr. Beazell's report follows:

"The fifth year of the Newspaper Club of New York is drawing to its close and it seems to your president an appropriate time for a brief report to the membership of its affairs.

"During the year there has been a thorough purging of the rolls. All those in arrears beyond the statutory limit and who have, upon due notice, failed to re-establish themselves in good standing have been suspended, so that the membership now represents those, and those only, whose interest in the Club is evidenced by prompt and regular payment of their dues. It might be called a certified membership, and at no previous time in our history has the Club as an organization been so substantial and coherent.

"This has not meant retrogression in numbers. On the contrary, the membership on April 1, 1927, was larger than it was on April 1, 1926. The figures are as follows:

	1926	1927
Active	330	326
Associate	204	218
Non-resident	150	150
Total	684	694

"The income for the twelve months ended April 1, 1927, was $52,126.45, while expenditures for the same period were $54,786.19.

"These figures show an operating deficit of $2,659.74. Iucluded in this item, however, is the sum of $1,765.40 set aside for depreciation, making the net $894.34. For the twelve months ended April 1, 1926, the operating deficit was $1,879.32, an improvement for the present period of $984.98.

"In the item of operating expenses, there was a reduction of $526.48.

"The loss from the restaurant (which continues, and will continue, to be our largest single burden), was $3,311.48 which was less by $632.67 than it was during the preceding period, a very satisfactory condition.

"In its financial affairs the Club h shown an improvement that your dire tors believe to be promising of still be ter things in the future. The board h instituted a number of changes duri the year that are already demonstrati their value, and will make it still mo evident as time goes on. One of the may be cited by way of illustration: W are now setting aside each quarter reserve for depreciation, a provision n made before. In considering the figur that follow this reserve should be bor in mind.

"The Club, then, enters upon its six year in materially improved financial co dition. Its membership is larger and active in the true sense of the wor The prospect is one upon which we m look with pride and with satisfaction."

BRITISH BILL FORBID GENERAL STRIKES

Many Stringent Provisions in Pr posed Measure to Prevent Recurrence of National Tie-up

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, April 15.—If a strike has a object in addition to the furtherance a trade dispute within the trade co cerned, or if it is calculated to coer or intimidate the Government or the co munity or any substantial part of t community, it will be illegal, if the Go ernment's new Trade Union Laws B becomes law.

Besides giving protection to tra unionists refusing to take part in an legal strike, the bill also forbids t picketing of private residences, and t attempted coercion of men refusing strike by ridicule and so-called "peac ful" picketing.

The existing system of collecting levy for the political funds of a tra union is reversed, by allowing the work to express his willingness to contribu and the bill declares that a return to be made of the political funds of trade unions.

The Attorney-General is given powe to apply for an injunction to restra the application of trade union funds f any purpose contrary to the provisions the bill.

BRITISH PAPER IMPORTS

During February there was import into Great Britain from ten countries consignment 293,036 hundredweights newsprint paper, valued at £243,9 From 15 countries, including the Unit States, England received 79,499 hundre weights of other kinds of uncoated pri ing paper, valued at £79,727.

MILL STRIKE THREATENED

If the demands of the workers for wage increase are not granted a str in all the paper mills in Finland w commence on May 1, it is reported.

"The Largest Business of Its Kind in America"

HOTALING'S NEWS AGENCY

NEW YORK

Distributors of Out-of-Town Newspapers

RETAIL BRANCHES

NEWS-STANDS—43rd & Broadway
North End of The Times Bldg.

WOOLWORTH BUILDING
Barclay St. Entrance

FOREIGN NEWS DEPOT
The TIMES BUILDING

FROM "NEWSPAPER HEADQUARTERS," 308 West 40th STREET.
We make five deliveries daily to the principal hotel news-stands.
(Call Longacre 4649)

Any daily, Sunday or weekly newspaper in the world secured. Low prices quoted on quantity and standing orders.
Back numbers of New York and out-of-town newspapers carried in stock.

AN EXAMINATION OF MATERIALS, WORKMANSHIP, OVERSIZE PARTS, STIFFNESS OF CONSTRUCTION, AND SIMPLICITY OF DESIGN
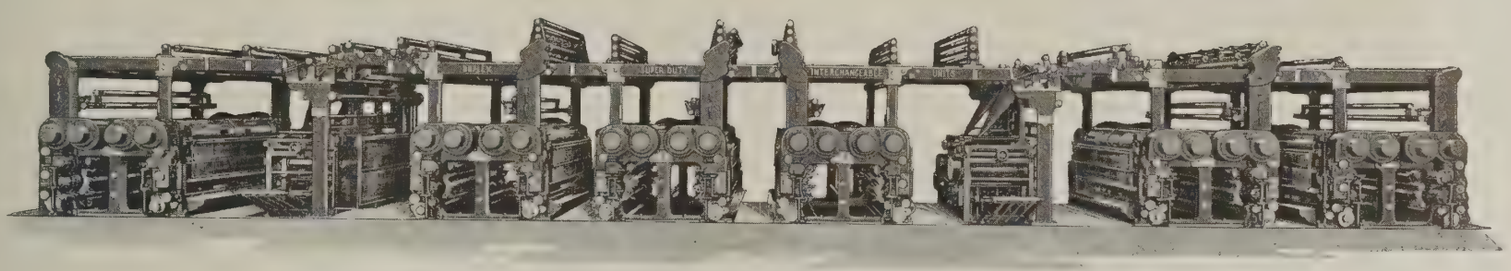
OF



Duplex Super Duty Interchangeable Units

LED

THE WINNIPEG TRIBUNE

OF THE SOUTHAM STRING TO PLACE THEIR ORDER
FOR

A Duplex Double Sextuple Press

DUPLEX SUPER DUTY INTERCHANGEABLE UNIT DOUBLE SEXTUPLE PRESS

A NEW STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

IN

METROPOLITAN PRESS CONSTRUCTION

HAS BEEN ESTABLISHED, AND DISCRIMINATING
PUBLISHERS RECOGNIZE THE SUPERIOR MERIT OF DUPLEX MACHINES

Our Customers Write Our Ads

The New York World
Akron Beacon-Journal
Madison Wisconsin State Journal
The Tampa Times
The Michigan Book Syndicate
Rock Island Argus
Williamsport Sun
Paterson Press-Guardian
Staten Island Advance
Huntington Herald-Dispatch
Cedar Rapids Gazette
Boston Post
Durham Herald
Windsor Border Cities Star
Green Bay Press Gazette
Waterloo Evening Courier
Hackensack Bergen Evening Record

THE DUPLEX PRINTING PRESS COMPANY

OF BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN

JOURNALISTS AND STATESMEN CONGRATULATE UNITED PRESS ON 20th ANNIVERSARY

CONGRATULATIONS from editors in many quarters of the globe poured in upon the United Press Associations on the occasion of that organization's 20th anniversary, Monday April 25.

Extracts of the texts follow:

"Warm congratulations on twentieth anniversary of the foundation of the United Press and lively wishes for the prosperity of the institution and personal well-being of its president."—Carlos Guzman Vera, director El Tiempo, Lima, Peru.

"I felicitate very sincerely the worthy president of the United Press on the anniversary today commemorating the world wide accomplishments of the organization. Best wishes for the continused prosperity of the institution."—Clemente Palma, director of La Cronica, Lima, Peru.

"Regretting very much not to be there personally to accompany you in today's happy anniversary, I express to you my friendly sentiments and the best wishes of El Comercio for the prosperity of the United Press."—Antonio Miro Quesada, director of El Comercio, Lima.

"On this auspicious date for you and for worldwide journalism, where the United Press has gained one of the foremost positions, I beg you to accept expressions of my esteem and our warmest felicitations and auguries that the great progress made by your organization will continue on an ever ascending curve due to the faithful compliance with your slogan—Independence, rapidity, impartiality."—Herman Tjarks, director of Deutsche La Plata Zeitung, Buenos Aires.

"Congratulations on the twentieth anniversary of the United Press which we consider a very wise and efficient youth for its age."—G. Forero, director La Prensa, Lima, Peru.

"Wish every journalistic success to United Press and personal happiness of president."—Barrios, director of Mercurio, Antofogasta, Chile.

"I send United Press, which is a daily collaborator in the history of the world through speedy chronicling of its events, the most cordial greetings of the Giornale D'Italia, together with an expression of the hope that the United Press will cooperate in spreading in foreign countries a better knowledge of Italy."—Virginio Gayada, editor, Giornale D'Italia, Rome.

"Sincerest congratulations anniversary; hope your dinner is forerunner of long procession of anniversaries, each signalizing future growth influence."—R. D. Blumenfeld, editor London Daily Express.

"O Jornal congratulates United Press 20th anniversary, wishing continued success."—Chateaubriand, director O Jornal, Rio de Janeiro.

"Heartiest congratulations 20th anniversary. Our readers in Hamburg and throughout the world, like ourselves, highly appreciate your important services."—Hamburger Fremdenblatt, Hamburg, Germany.

"Directors and editors of Gazzetta del Popolo, old paper of Italian risorgimento and Mergan, Mazzini, Cavour, Garibaldi, salute with fraternal greetings young powerful American agency, United Press, hoping its co-operation serve to greater success both institutions which symbol of Italian-American Fraternity."—Dr. Maffio Maffi, editor Gazzetta del Popolo, Turin, Italy.

"Heartiest congratulations on your 20th anniversary. In our years of cooperation we have realized how extraordinarily rapidly your news service operates and how it is everywhere constantly alert. Supplementing the reports of our own corespondents, your reports have rendered to our readers throughout the world a great service. We wish you further successes"—Frankfurter Zeitung.

"With regret that I am unable personally to attend the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the United Press, I send you felicitations and my wish for a brilliant career for that agency and for its prosperity, and send friendly regards."—Gabion, president director of Agence Radio Telegraphique, Paris, France.

"Heartiest congratulations 20th anniversary United Press with which Nippon Dempo has been associated practically from its inauguration. United Press has proved steadfast to liberal idealism and sane methods which have resulted in a prosperity contributing to the recent rapid growth of the Far Eastern Press. Fervently hope continuation successful co-operation and higher achievements in future.—Hoshio Mitsunaga, president Nippon Dempo Tsushin Sha, Tokio, Japan."

"Please accept my heartfelt thanks for your kind invitation. Unfortunately circumstances beyond my control prevent my attendance at the fraternal gathering but you may be assured that I shall be present in spirit. Meanwhile I beg you to convey my most affectionate greetings to my colleagues who are more fortunate than I am and will be present with the United Press. May the United Press celebrate many anniversaries and be, as heretofore, a bond linking together the countries of our beloved America."—Ezequiel P. Paz, director of La Prensa, Buenos Aires.

"Many thanks for your courtesy. Nothing could possibly give me more pleasure than to be with you at dinner and convey to you orally my hearty congratulations on this glad occasion and wish you many happy returns."—Motoyama, president, Osaka Mainichi Osaka, Japan.

"Convey sincere congratulations on United Press attainment of its twentieth birthday. Your service has contributed much to the development of journalism in Japan, particularly to the mutual understanding among newspapermen of the two nationalities."—Murayama, president Osaka and Tokio Asahi.

"Many thanks kind invitation; best wishes and congratulations."—Silva Vildosola, director El Mercurio, Santiago, Chile.

"I congratulate you and your associates upon the wonderful institution you have created."—LeRoy Sanders, Portland, Ore.

"The growth of the United Press has been one of the amazing developments of the first two decades of the 20th century."—Alfred O. Andersson, Dallas (Tex.) Dispatch.

"I have been with you for over 11 years and as I told one of your men the other day, I shall never forget the courtesies extended."—Fred Massengill, Terrell (Tex.) Daily Tribune.

"We congratulate United Press on moving to forefront great international news agencies through objectivity, speed, accuracy, broadminded reporting. May further growth and new successes in service world-uniting reporting await United Press."—Hans Walter Schuettpelz, editor in chief, Industrie und Handelszeitung, Berlin.

"Behalf Correio da Manha extend sincerest congratulations United Press on occasion of twentieth anniversary."—Pinheiro, Cunha, Rio de Janeiro.

"Many years' association with United Press has afforded me an opportunity to know the United Press as an exemplary news agency. I am happy to say the news service meets all desires of publishers and editors—is world embracing, rapid, absolutely conscientious. United Press correspondents are exact, well-informed men with excellent connections assuring readers best information. Authors United Press special articles comprise outstanding names international journalism and diplomacy. Therefore delighted opportunity extend heartiest congratulations United Press twentieth anniversary."—Victor Hahn, publisher Achtuhr Abendblatt, Berlin.

"Warmest felicitations to United Press which for French newspapermen is a model of loyalty, independence and technical perfection."—Maurice de Waleffe, editor Paris Midi and general secretary Latin Press Bureau."

"I wish to offer sincere congratulations to the great American news agency on the occasion of its anniversary."—Rene Lara, director Gaulois, Paris.

"Mighty United Press has my congratulations sincerest wishes for continued prosperity"—Raymond Lange, general secretary, L'Intransigreant, Paris.

"Sincerest congratulations for the United Press, its leaders and their colleagues."—Prof. Julius Ferdinand Wolff, editor in chief, Dresdner Neueste Nachrichten, Dresden, Germany, and vice-president of the League of German Newspaper Publishers.

"Entire personnel La Razon and I personally cordially congratulate United Press which has efficaciously collaborated in successes of our newspaper."—Angel L. Sojo, director La Razon, Buenos Aires.

David Lloyd George sent the following cablegram from London: "Congratulations on the attainment of the twentieth anniversary of your world famous organization whose news comes from and spreads to every quarter of the globe. I hope it will long prosper and continue the service it is rendering to so many nations in its dissemination of reliable news about the happenings of the world."—Lloyd George.

"The Cambridge Jeffersonian extends sincere greetings on this your twentieth anniversary. The fairness and efficiency of United Press reports gain new friends daily and your whole hearted co-operation with editors and publishers makes for their success. May your splendid efforts continue to meet with abundant prosperity."—The Jeffersonian Company, Inc., T. E. Amos, president, Cambridge, O.

"I send United Press and all its collaborators my remembrances and my best wishes."—Raymond Poincare, Premier of France.

"Greetings to your worldwide international press association on occasion 20th anniversary. The shipping services, cables, radio, press associations and one hopes television are breaking down race barriers and misunderstandings. We are one human family with far too many divisions. Keep on extending your services."—Robert Williams, general manager, the London Daily Herald.

"Temps, one of the Doyens of French newspapers which counts 67 years' existence is happy to address fraternal congratulations to United Press on occasion 20th anniversary. Famous verse of Corneille Value doesn't depend on the number of years' applies perfectly this great news agency which succeeded in a few years creating powerful news organization and extending its action to farthest corners of the world.—Adrien Hebrard, director Le Temps, Paris.

"At the moment when in the presence of the President of the United States, the United Press of America celebrates its 20th anniversary, I am happy to be able to address my warmest felicitations. I express most cordial wishes for the great institution, the United Press which contributes so powerfully to the exchange of news and ideas between two friendly nations, the United States and France."—Aristide Briand, Foreign Minister of France.

"In common independence, The Telegraphen Union greets its American sister on its 20th jubilee."—Telegraphen Union, Berlin.

"Warmest congratulations to United Press celebrating its 20th anniversary. All responsible people here welcome the free and full exchange of news and opinion as prime factor in Anglo-American accord and world peace."—Sir William Berry, proprietor, London Sunday Times, London Daily Sketch, Financial Times.

"Director of La Capital at Rosario, dean of Argentine newspapers is pleased to felicitate the United Press on its 20th anniversary which it is celebrating today auguring a greater guarantee of universal prestige which the United Press has gained."—Leopold Lagos, Rosario, Argentina.

"I do not think that any news agency has ever labored more consistently or more effectively for the public welfare and for the interests of the newspapers it serves than has the United Press. We have had United Press service for many years and have always found it to represent the highest standard of news service and to reflect an attitude most consistent with the best interest of the public. My congratulations to you on your 20th anniversary.—George Carter, Wilmington (Del.) Evening Journal.

"The United Press is to be congratulated on the remarkable growth it has attained in the past year. This development is emphasized in our minds when we realize that this is only the 20th anniversary of establishment of this great newsgathering and new disseminating organization. Please accept my most sincere wishes for continued success."—Dwight Young, editor in chief, Dayton Herald.

"Congratulations upon your 20th anniversary the independence, impartiality and liberal tendencies of the United Press are well known and appreciated in England and Australia."—Tom Clarke, managing editor the Daily News, London.

ADDS FOODS SECTION

A two-column woman's page food department conducted by Miss Helen M. L. Nolan is now being developed by the Albany (N. Y.) Evening News into a four-page weekly Pure Foods section. Recipe contests with cash prizes are featured.

SPANS 50 YEARS

John G. Zook, editor and manager of the Lititz (Pa.) Express, issued a 50th anniversary number on April 14 of 16 large illustrated pages. The Express was known prior to 1881 as the Sunbeam. Since 1895 Mr. Zook has been the sole owner.

FOR PROMPT SERVICE

TYPE

BORDERS ~ ORNAMENTS ~ BRASS RULE

Printers' Supplies

KELLY PRESSES ~ KLYMAX FEEDERS ~ PAPER CUTTERS
HAMILTON WOOD AND STEEL EQUIPMENT, INCLUDING OUR AMERICAN CUT-COST EQUIPMENT

Carried in stock for prompt shipment at the following Selling Houses of the American Type Founders Company

BOSTON, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE, RICHMOND, ATLANTA, BUFFALO, PITTSBURGH, CLEVELAND, DETROIT, CHICAGO, CINCINNATI, ST. LOUIS, MILWAUKEE, MINNEAPOLIS, KANSAS CITY, DES MOINES, DENVER, LOS ANGELES, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, SPOKANE, WINNIPEG

Starting June 1st

Reg'lar Fellers

the daily comic strip by GENE BYRNES will be distributed by the

NEW YORK Herald Tribune Syndicate

The "Reg'lar Fellers" Sunday page will be sold, as usual, by the Herald Tribune Syndicate

The story in Clippings

CHICAGO I

TRIBUNE SETS A WORLD MARK FOR ELECTION EXTRAS

Record Circulation of 909,448 Papers.

(Picture on back page.)

THE TRIBUNE established a new record in its own circulation and set a mark of mechanical and human efficiency unequaled by any newspaper in the world, in getting out its election editions yesterday for Chicagoland.

A 50 or 52 page paper, in three sections, was turned out by THE TRIBUNE presses for nearly every ballot cast in the war of a million votes between Thompson and Dever. There were 921,530 papers run off the presses, and the actual paid circulation was 909,448

Analysis of these figures in the circulation department shows that the public regarded the Thompson-Dever fight with greater interest than the Dempsey-Tunney battle. The previous circulation record was set by the championship battle, when 905,000 papers were sold 133,000 Extras Go on Street.

In the mayoralty election four years ago 624,663 papers were sold, with about 60,000 extras as a result of the election interest. There were 133,000 extras yesterday for street sales.

Back of this achievement is not only the story of THE TRIBUNE plant, on its mechanical side, but the enthusiastic coöperation of 650 men in all news, advertising and mechanical departments, working with speed, precision, and a wholehearted, eager interest. They were out to make a family record and they did it.

Something of the magnitude of this one day's editions may be appreciated when it is stated in different terms. It meant 388 tons, or 775,084 pounds, of white paper used. This is 586 rolls, or about fourteen carloads. It is represented in other terms by 580 cords of pulpwood, and traced still further back might have been found a short time ago in all the sizable spruce and balsam trees that were growing on an 85 acre tract in the virgin woods of THE TRIBUNE paper mills.

Deadline Pushed Ahead.

The regular closing time, or deadline, for the composing room is 8:45 o'clock in the evening. This was pushed up three-quarters of an hour on election night. The whole machine was thrown into high speed to make the most of these precious 45 minutes. It meant an earlier closing time for advertising copy and necessitated reporters coming in from the street, or telephoning stories, so that everything would be three-quarters of an hour ahead.

Fifty page forms on the composing room tables were all closed in thirty minutes. As the last minute was in sight one form was left with an unfilled hole. Some advertiser had not put his copy through in time. Six men jumped at the form, threw in a "space reserved" plate, piled the "furniture" around it in less time than it takes to tell it, and sent the page away with a whoop of delight.

The next test was in the stereotyping room, where 800 plates had to be made for the eight presses that were waiting for the touch of an electric switch to set them thundering. The stereotypers cleared in twenty-four minutes. The presses started at 8:24 and at 8:30 the first of the delivery trucks was in the loop with the finished product, THE TRIBUNE election edition.

From then on it was a smooth engine that never faltered. The pages were increased to 52 for the home and final editions. Sixty wagons and 48 trucks were at work speeding across town, to trains and newsstands, and at 5:59 in the morning the last of the 909,448 papers was out of the way. The pressmen, stereotypers, photo-engravers, mailers, and drivers were happy.

The presses turned out these papers in 8½ hours, a feat impossible in any other newspaper plant with this size and three section division of a paper.

Press Capacity Increased.

The superiority of THE TRIBUNE presses lies in the fact that they can hook up seven units instead of the usual six. In this way the capacity has increased from a 48 page limit to 56 pages. The whole battery of presses is built in tandem, and the extra capacity has been attained by placing at intervals and at right angles, an extra press unit. Every revolution turns out two papers.

Nine presses were used in printing the home and final editions of 52 pages, arranged in sections of 28, 10, and 14 pages, news, sports, and features. The new press unit and an assembling works on top of the presses makes such a natural separation possible.

STA
COU
HO

Ha T attentio cil.

At an the inc old and the pow a body the ch council'
There
mayor e committ
He pas conferri council have to

PEACHES, HERE
DANCE; TRAN
OVE

Looking many m recent a tion suit
Mrs. Edwa
Heenan, re fill a danci
She was partner mothe ried with

Composed, at present of 72 Goss High Speed Low Construction Press Units and 15 pairs of Goss Imperial Folders, this vast battery of press equipment is not large enough to keep pace with the tremendous strides in circulation which The Tribune is making. There will shortly be added 16 additional Goss Press Units and two pairs of folders, to be installed in a new building adjacent to The Tribune Tower.

Goss Presses—Choice of Successful Publishers Everywhere

CATALOG ON REQUEST

THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS CO.

Main Office and Factories, CHICAGO, ILL.

NEW YORK OFFICE 220 West Forty-Second St.

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE 646 Call Building

The Goss Printing Press Company of England, Ltd., London

Messrs. Edwards Dunlop Company, Ltd., Sydney, Sole Agent for Australasia

GOSS STRAIGHT LINE GOSS HIGH SPEED

For Newspapers

High Grade Materials
Scientifically Compounded
Clean, Snappy, Jet Black

When, How and Where You Want It

Distinctive Contrast in Halftones—Uniformity in Consistency

More Coverage Per Pound
No Filling or Smearing
Wash-Ups Eliminated

H. D. ROOSEN COMPANY

Main Office
16 EAST 43rd STREET, NEW YORK CITY

ARTHUR S. THOMPSON
MANAGER NEWS INK DEPARTMENT

Branches:
Chicago Boston Los Angeles Havana Mexico City

AWARD JURIES NAMED TO DETERMINE 1926 PULITZER PRIZE WINNERS

Eight Newspaper Men to Pass on Journalistic Offerings—Names of Winners to Be Announced Following Board Meeting in May

THE juries to select winners of the annual Pulitzer prizes in journalism and letters, totaling $9,500, were announced at Columbia University last week. Following the meeting of the Advisory Board of the School of Journalism early in May, the winners will be named, together with the three graduates of the Journalism School who have been awarded the annual traveling scholarships of $1,500 each.

Prizes in journalism and juries:

"For the most disinterested and meritorious public service rendered by any American newspaper during the year, a gold medal costing $500." Judges: Jerome B. Landfield, New York, journalistic research expert; Dr. John W. Cunliffe, director of the Pulitzer School of Journalism, and George M. Armstead, managing editor, the Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

This same jury will also decide "the best history of the services rendered to the public by the American press during the preceding year or for the publication and distribution through the Columbia University Press of publications of service to American Journalism ($1,000)."

"For the best editorial written during the year, the test of excellence being clearness of style, moral purpose, sound reasoning and power to influence public opinion in the right direction, due account being taken of the whole volume of the writer's editorial work during the year ($1.000)"—Dr. R. C. E. Brown and Dr. A. S. Will, instructors in the Pulitzer School of Journalism, and George Nox McCain, political writer on the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"For the best example of a reporter's work during the year, the test being strict accuracy, terseness, the accomplishment of some public good commanding public attention and respect ($1,000)"—W. P. Beazell, assistant managing editor, the New York World; Albert W. Cummins, managing editor, the Wilmington (Del.) News, and Merryle S. Rukeyser, instructor in financial writing, Pulitzer School of Journalism.

"For the best cartoon published in any American newspaper during the year, the determining qualities being that the cartoon shall embody an idea made clearly apparent, shall show good drawing and striking pictorial effect, and shall be helpful to some commendable cause of public importance, due account being taken of the whole volume of the artist's newspaper work during the year ($500)"—Dr. Walter B. Pitkin and F. Fraser Bond, instructors Pulitzer School of Journalism, the latter also of the New York Times staff, and Newbold Noyes, Washington (D. C.) Star.

Prizes in letters and juries:

"For the American novel published during the year which shall best present the whole atmosphere of American life, and the highest standard of American manners and manhood ($1,000)"—Richard Burton, Englewood, N. J., author and critic; Robert M. Lovett, Chicago, editor, college professor and novelist, and Jefferson B. Fletcher, author and Professor of Literature, Columbia University.

"For the original play, performed in New York, which shall best represent the educational value and power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste and good manners ($1,000)" — Augustus Thomas, New York, playwright; Walter Prichard Eaton, Sheffield, Mass., author and novelist; Clayton Hamilton, New York, playwright.

"For the best book of the year upon the history of the United States ($2,000)"—Worthington C. Ford, Boston, Mass., professor; James Truslow Adams, Bridgehampton, N. Y., writer and winner of the Pulitzer history prize in 1922; Charles Downer Hazen, Professor of History at Columbia University.

"For the best American biography teaching patriotic and unselfish services to the people, illustrated by an eminent example ($1,000)"—Royal Cortissoz, art editor, the New York Herald Tribune; Ray Stannard Baker, known also under his nom de plume, "David Grayson," Amherst, Mass., author; M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Boston, author, vice-president of the Atlantic Monthly Company.

"For the best volume of verse published during the year by an American author ($1,000)"—Wilbur L. Cross, Dean of the Graduate School, Yale University, author; Ferris Greenslet of Houghton Mifflin & Co., publishers, Boston, author, and John Erskine, Professor of English at Columbia University, poet and novetlist.

NINE SPEAKERS NAMED FOR I. A. A. CONVENTION

Work, Hoover, Aylesworth, "Roxie" Among Those Named by Denver Program Committee—Annual Business Session Wednesday

Nine speakers have accepted invitations to address the annual convention of the International Advertising Association to be held at Denver June 26-29, E. D. Gibbs, program chairman, announced on April 19.

They are Hon. Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior; Hon. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce; M. W. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company, New York; Harold F. Ritchie, president of the Harold F. Ritchie Company, Ltd., Toronto; Col. Paul Henderson, general manager of the National Air Transport, Chicago; Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, chairman of the Women's National Democratic Committee; F. L. Rothafel, "Roxy," managing director of the Roxy Theatre; Joe Mitchell Chapple, Boston; and Harold Stonier, president of the Advertising Club of Los Angeles.

Arrangements have been made to hold the annual business meeting Wednesday, immediately after adjournment of the departmental sessions, closing the convention of this day to give more time for sight seeing.

WILLAMETTE EARNS $607,274

Net earnings of $607,274 for the first quarter are shown in the report of the Crown Willamette Paper Company and subsidiaries, excluding the Pacific Mills Limited. This is after all charges and taxes. The net earnings of Pacific Mills Limited were $205,768.

WEEKLY EDITOR SEEKS NEWS—GETS IT!

WHILE E. J. Leibel, editor of the Payne (O.) Reflector, weekly newspaper was in the Farmers' and Citizens' Bank seeking news April 12 the village's biggest news event of the year occurred.

Two armed bandits entered the bank, commanded Leibel and L. C. Poland, president of the bank, to lie on the floor while they scooped up $2,000 in cash and escaped in an auto driven by a third man.

Residents pursued the bandits but were halted by a freight that blocked a crossing over which the bandit car had escaped.

The HARRISBURG TELEGRAPH, representing the principal retail market in Central Pennsylvania, is one of those progressive newspapers that has made a survey of the market it serves, has available facts and figures pertaining to the potential market, the buying habits and characteristics of the families in the market, and stands ready to help every advertiser merchandise his product. It is represented in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles by Story, Brooks and Finley, Inc.

AMAZING ADVENTURE OF "STARS AND STRIPES"

Founding and Publishing "The Doughboy's Newspaper" a Remarkable Achievement by American Newspaper Men in Wartime France, Now Told for First Time

By MAJOR DONALD L. STONE

(Continued from last week)

THE paper was not long in obtaining suitable quarters. With the sixth issue the growing editorial and business forces found themselves in a comfortable and commodious suite at 1 Rue des Italiens, a modern office building just off the "Grands Boulevards." In time two floors of this building were occupied, but even that space was insufficient. Issue number 44 was prepared in the final home of the paper, the Credit Mobilier building at 32 Rue Taitbout, also occupied by the American Chamber of Commerce. This editorial and business office was on a scale fitting a big city newspaper, and it was very hard for persons coming then in contact with the Stars and Stripes to realize that in a few short months it had grown from nothing at all.

The Daily Mail continued to print the paper until August 1918. At that time the circulation became too great for the resources of its plant. The composition and make-up continued to be done at the Daily Mail, but printing was from that time on done at the building of Le Journal, a Paris daily with particularly fine and modern equipment. Thus the Stars and Stripes was, on the mechanical side, a very cosmopolitan paper. The composition was done by American enlisted men. The engraving was done by Frenchmen. Printing was done first by British and then by French workmen. And French and American agents worked together on circulation.

The editorial force grew steadily with the expansion of the paper. The first managing editor was Private John T. Winterich of the 96th Aero Squadron and formerly of the Springfield Republican. He continued his able work of direction and editorial writing until after the Armistice, when he was succeeded by Private Harold W. Ross of the 18th Engineers and the San Francisco Call. Winterich continued however to serve as a member of the editorial board. Other members of the council were Sergeant-Major Philip Von Blon of Base Hospital 4 and the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Jack S. Connolly of the 101st Field Artillery and the Boston Herald, Robert I. Snadjr of the 308th Ammunition Train and the Cleveland Plain Dealer and John Black of Base Hospital 15 and the Brooklyn Eagle.

The real "war correspondent" of the paper was Sergeant Alexander Woollcott, of the Medical Corps. In civil life Sergeant Woollcott was the dramatic critic of the New York Times. Discovered at Base Hospital Number 8 and "drafted for the emergency," Woollcott did some of the best work of his career as the man who from week to week covered the stories of Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel and the Argonne for the soldiers' own paper.

Nor was he the only nationally known writer on the staff. Lt. Grantland Rice contributed an article to the sport page for many issues until orders recalled him to the fighting zone. For a couple of months Captain Franklin P. Adams was detailed from the Intelligence Section and militarized the "W. K. Conning Tower" of "F. P. A."

In C. Le Roy Baldrige the Stars and Stripes uncovered another first-class cartoonist. Serious cartoons with a message and a punch were his forte. Baldrige's cartoons were reprinted frequently in both Europe and America, with enthusiastic comment. If Wallgren was the Bairnsfather of the A. E. F., Baldrige may fairly be called its Raemakers. A series of humorous letters from Donald L. Stone, the writer of this article, is a Major in the Military Intelligence Reserve, and was formerly Acting Chief of Press and Censorship, American Expeditionary Forces. He is at the present time a professor at Dartmouth College. This is the second and last installment of Mr. Stone's narrative.

Putting to bed the last "Victory Edition," of the Stars and Stripes.

"Henry's Pal to Henry," written by Sergeant Seth T. Bailey, were so much appreciated that they were reprinted in book form, and Sergeant T. H. Bliss made many a muddy and war-weary doughboy forget his troubles with the delicious foolery of his "Dizzy Sector."

The following statistics will show the rapid growth of the paper. February 8, 1918, 30,000 copies (largely unsold); March 8, 40,420 (sold out); April 5, 52,500; May 24, 70,000; July 5, 102,988; August 23, 203,600; October 18, 311,350; Nov. 22, 400,000; Feb. 7, 1919, 522,000 (the peak). From then on, the paper slowly decreased in circulation with the departure of the A. E. F. until it closed with the issue of June 13, 1919.

The reasons for the remarkable success of the paper have their root in the fact that it filled a real need. It filled that need because it was interesting, it was full of real news, it was funny, and above all because it was honest and played fair. Printing the names of the editorial board with their army rank as privates, corporals and sergeants was a gesture that inspired deserved confidence. Privates Ross, Winterich, Baldrige and Wallgren refused promotion even to non-commissioned rank because they felt that the logic of their position demanded that they remain the commonest of common soldiers. That meant real sacrifice, for it was far from the "life of Reilly" to be a "buck private" in Paris, with only a private's pay.

From the beginning it was a rule that all news matter must be of general interest, and it had to be written so as to bind it, in some way, to the interest of the American soldier. If news was not of concern to him, it was not used. French, British and other propaganda was offered to the paper in enormous volume, but it was culled over and only that which contained genuine news of interest to the A. E. F. was printed. Everything else—which meant most of it—was rejected. So incidentally, was American propaganda unless it was news. Viskniskki personally assumed the task of keeping propaganda out of the paper.

The paper did not suppress disagreeable things. Rather, it admitted them when prepared in humorous form. The constant effort was to make a joke of the mud, of the "cootie," of the other infinite woes, with the knowledge that if the American soldier could ever be started laughing at his troubles the troubles would either disappear or become negligible. General Nolan supported this policy even when an occasional letter was printed that looked as if it meant trouble, convinced that the soldier's reaction to that letter would be what was desired. The result again was that the soldiers felt it was their paper and not controlled by that intangible but always suspect phantom known vaguely as G. H. Q.

To cite specific examples, the Stars and Stripes never pretended that our losses were lighter than they really were; it never pretended that transportation and supplies were better than they really were; it never pretended that the men were paid on time. On the contrary it stated flatly that they were not, but it did it as humorously as such a mournful subject would permit. In brief, the paper actually assailed various aspects of an army which it was most anxious to defend. It assailed them in cases where it was common knowledge that the army was weak, thus gaining full confidence that the weekly was both independent and fair. The confidence thereby inspired was invaluable in bringing respect and credence without bounds to the vitally important defense of our army's policies and progress which the paper from time to time took up.

Thus the Stars and Stripes fulfilled the hopes of its founders. The soldiers had faith in the paper, and the paper had unbounded faith in the fact that the army was essentially all right and certain of ultimate success. The editors never lost sight of the great principle of army unity which was their creed. At first emphasis was on the point that called the paper into being—direct and indirect stress on the fact that scattered troops serving all along the Western Front and other fronts were all Americans, bound together in a common purpose despite the diversity of their commands.

Later there appeared the need of emphasizing another kind of unity, that of the combat troops and of the supply troops, many among the latter feeling an unreasonable and yet a natural chagrin that they, too, could not be assigned to front line duty. The situation was made more acute by a tendency on the part of combat troops to tease the men in support. It takes five men behind the lines to support one man in the trenches. But that fact had to be made thoroughly understood, and a non-combatant esprit de corps developed, to remove the sting from such songs as "Mother take in your service flag, your son's in the S. O. S." The Stars and Stripes was the prime factor in demonstrating, by its publicity concerning construction and maintenance men, quartermasters and stevedores, the complicated and stupendous program of the Commanding General of the S. O. S. A pride in their work and duties, which accomplished gratifying results, was stimulated in the men of the service supply corps.

Still later, after the hostilities, there came the need of building up the morale of men longing for home and unable to go. This was done in various ways Baldrige, in one of his finest cartoons showed the relative triviality of the impatient longing by a picture of two dead doughboys, muffled up on stretchers behind the lines, with the caption "The First to Go Home." News articles recorded the actual progress made toward evacuation. It was demonstrated mathematically that if it took the army and navy with their best efforts one month

(Continued on page 116)

OF INTEREST TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS

We own and offer:

20-page Duplex Press, 8 columns, 22¾" cut off
Model 8 and Model 22 Linotypes, almost new Split Magazines and Display Mats
2—Wesel Electric Galley Proof Presses
1—Heavy Duty Wesel Saw
2—Hoe 8-column Flat Casting Boxes
2—Monotypes and Keyboards
Large Quantity All-Steel Form Tables
7- and 8-column Chases.

Call and see our display of rebuilt equipment, which will save you money, or send for latest issue of the "Hall Broadcaster."

THOMAS W. HALL CO., INC.
575 Washington St., New York
Phone: Walker 7522

Philadelphia Offers
An Exceptional Market!

The Philadelphia Metropolitan Area

IS BY FAR THE RICHEST AREA CONTAINED IN THE Third Federal Reserve District

It Contains:

59%
WAGE EARNERS MANUFACTURING

71%
WHOLESALE TRADE

58%
RETAIL TRADE

49% POPULATION
and 61%

INCOME TAX RETURNS

Its Prosperity Is Solidly Based On the Magnitude and Variety Of Its Industries.

The trend of business in Philadelphia, the economic centre of the Philadelphia metropolitan area, is steady, and the sales curve shows a continuous rise. There are a number of contributing reasons for this unusual prosperity. First, the population is continually growing—causing an increasing demand for manufactured products, materials, foodstuffs, etc. Second, the fact that concerns manufacturing seasonable products are so well balanced means that Philadelphia has no serious unemployment problem. Third, since not one of its great industries employs more than a small fraction of the available labor, a slump in any one industry can have little effect on business conditions as a whole.

What does all this mean to the national advertiser? The answer is obvious. Philadelphia offers a steady market for any product of merit. The buying power of this area is unlimited and the new article is welcomed by a potential market of over 3,500,000 people—the great majority of whom are able to satisfy their every need.

The question, then, is not one concerning the value of the market, but how to cover it effectively.

The Philadelphia Inquirer covers the Philadelphia trading territory like a blanket. Its percentage of the total circulation in this district of the three morning newspapers is over 54% Daily and over 44% Sunday—and The Inquirer's circulation is constantly growing.

In total volume of advertising no Philadelphia newspaper—morning or evening—equals The Inquirer. During the year 1926 The Inquirer published 21,893,400 lines, while the next paper (evening) carried but 20,479,800 lines.

Thus, in planning your Philadelphia sales programme, the necessity of using The Philadelphia Inquirer must be apparent.

Guarantee: The Philadelphia Inquirer absolutely guarantees that every morning in the year, before breakfast is served, over 75% of Philadelphia's worthwhile homes have received their copies of The Inquirer from the hands of responsible carriers.

The Philadelphia Inquirer

Pennsylvania's One Big Morning Newspaper

CHICAGO
Woodward & Kelly
360 N. Michigan Ave.

THE ELVERSON BUILDING, Philadelphia

NEW YORK
285 Madison Ave.

"STARS AND STRIPES"

(Continued from page 114)

to send home 300,000 troops, it would take seven months to send home two million, and that in the nature of things some would have to wait longer than others.

During this period there was naturally a heavy increase in humorous and sports material. Morale was also fostered by printing an elaborate series of accounts of what had been done during the war by divisions, by services and the like. This was under the charge of Captain Joseph M. Hanson of the General Staff historical section, who was detailed for the purpose. There were few features of the paper that were more successful. These so-called "Divisional Histories" were the first reasonably accurate and consecutive account to be printed of the A. E. F. combat activities. It is believed to have accomplished a great deal for divisional spirit, and to have educated the men generally as to what was accomplished by the American effort.

A feature of the paper that was much appreciated during the post-Armistice period was the amusement page. The Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus sent over to France vaudeville and legitimate actors, vocalists and musicians, and even elocutionists and acrobats, to entertain the troops. Anyone who was in France at the time will remember the excellent musical revues and burlesques, put on by soldier troupes representing their organizations, which toured the several camps. The Stars and Stripes ran a careful calendar of such entertainments, and the announcements were eagerly scanned by the amusement-hungry and chronically "broke" soldiers, who profited by any opportunity of the sort anywhere near their camps, unless actually in hospital wards or the guard house.

Mention should also be made of the "Soldier's Service Department." The paper early undertook to answer the queries of soldiers on matters that were puzzling them. The questions asked ranged from serious to trivial and from grave to gay. They might run in a single mail from requests for a copy of President Wilson's "Fourteen Points," down through the right of a captain to dock a soldier's pay without a court-martial, to the age of Mary Pickford. Questions that were of general interest and not confidential were often printed, with their answers, in the paper's columns. The men in charge of this work were George W. B. Britt, A. F. C., and Sergeant William F. Germain of the 320th Machine Gun Battalion and the New York World. A force of eight field clerks were eventually required to assist these men. In all, more than 100,000 letters of inquiry were received and answered. Field Clerk Britt was also the editor in charge of the sporting page, which, of course, became highly important when military hostilities ended and peaceful army athletics increased.

News stories were supplemented by campaigns of a news nature. There is no better test of a newspaper's hold upon its readers than for it to sponsor an idea which it believes to be worth while and to seek concrete response from its subscribers. An instance of the influence which the Stars and Stripes really had on its readers was the Mothers' Day Letter Campaign conducted by Sergeant Woollcott. The paper urged eloquently, by article and editorial, that every man in the A. E. F. should write a letter back home to his mother on Mother's Day, May 12, 1918. The postal authorities in the States agreed to give such letters the right of way, and that fact was played up. On May 31, 1918 there arrived in America a transport containing 1,425,000 letters written by officers and men of the army and navy, overseas. Two hundred and five thousand other letters had been received earlier in the same week. Not all of these letters were written to mothers of course, and it would be unfair to attribute them all to the Stars and Stripes campaign. But the number of letters written by the soldiers and sailors in Europe in that week was four times the normal total, and the paper was no doubt very largely responsible for the increase. An appeal to write home to "Dad" a Fathers' Day letter for Christmas brought almost as satisfactory a response.

Col. G. T. Viskniskki

The hold of the paper on the soldier is further illustrated by such a fact as this. In the spring of 1919 absences without leave became a serious disciplinary problem. The Stars and Stripes ran a news article setting out the increased penalties contemplated. Within a week 80 per cent of the absentees reported for duty.

The campaign that endeared the Stars and Stripes to the French people was that for the adoption of war-orphans. The paper worked out a plan, with cooperation of the Red Cross, by which American units were urged to contribute 500 francs each to adopt, for one year, a little French boy or girl whose father had been killed or hopelessly disabled in war service. Homeless waifs from the invaded regions were also eligible for adoption. The units were allowed to designate the sex, classification and age of the child; the Red Cross found the orphan, expended the money, and bore the expenses of administration. Started with the hope of having 500 children adopted, it ended with 3,567 adoptions. It was intentionally brought to a close when the number of adoptions grew beyond the facilities of the small Red Cross bureau to find the needed children and to oversee their care. Additional funds were then turned over for carrying on the education of the one-year "adoptees" for several years. One million francs was paid for this purpose in April 1919, supplementing previous payments totalling a million and a quarter francs. At the rate of exchange of the time that was over $250,000, but the buying power of the francs was of course much greater than the equivalent dollars.

Nor did the episode end there. In a number of instances a unit, before demobilization, raised sufficient funds to see that its own particular boy or girl was fed, clothed, housed and educated for several years to come. These contacts were a living force in our army's relations with the French people. Those who benefited—mothers and children—will always remember the A. E. F. and the Stars and Stripes with gratitude—a pleasant thought in these days of regrettable misunderstandings arising from war debts and the current rate of exchange. The very unusual character of the Stars and Stripes from the army standpoint is illustrated by the fact that it was a private, Harold W. Ross of the editorial staff, who conceived and executed this big project of caring for French orphans.

To what extent, as a matter of fact, was the policy of the Stars and Stripes controlled by General Pershing's headquarters? The answer is briefly that G. H. Q. reserved the right to step in, but in practice did not exercise it. There was officially a supervising board composed of Col. Walter C. Sweeney, Chief of Censorship; Lt. Col. Bruce Magruder, executive secretary of the Intelligence Section; Lieut. Viskniskki and Lieut. Watson. The board never held formal sessions. The fact was that Viskniskki, when informed of the creation of the board, protested vigorously to Col. Sweeney that it would be impossible to run a newspaper with a committee at its head, and the board was permitted to remain a legal fiction. The officer-in-charge was, however, in frequent consultation and communication with Colonel Sweeney and with General Nolan; indeed he visited Chaumont almost weekly to keep in touch with his superiors and to inform them of the paper's plans and progress. There were informal conferences in plenty, but almost an utter lack of formal orders and instructions. Viskniskki once told the writer that the only orders he ever received were a few lines directing him to organize and proceed to publish a paper to be known as the Stars and Stripes, and repeating in summary as its guiding principles certain recommendations as to policy that he had made by memorandum a few weeks before.

Of course, organizations under the army do not absolutely run themselves, especially in war time. General Nolan and Colonel Sweeney were seriously responsible for what might have become a dangerous machine. The heads of the Intelligence Section were in constant touch with the officer-in-charge, and they would have intervened instantly if the editors had been guilty of serious errors of judgment. But there was real agreement at both Paris and Chaumont as to general policies, and as time went on the weekly was so evidently in safe hands that there was a minimum of suggestions as to its conduct. Such problems of policy as arose were for the most part easily and quickly settled by personal conference. The relations between the Stars and Stripes and its chiefs at G. H. Q. were uniformly cordial. General Nolan, Colonel Sweeney, and his successors in the office of Chief of Censorship, Colonel E. Warner McCabe and Major Alexander L. James, frequently visited the Stars and Stripes office in Paris, but more as honored guests than as bosses. They were as proud of the paper as any man that worked on it.

In Paris, Viskniskki had, of course, an ultimate veto over the decisions of the enlisted board, but one which he used very cautiously and very sparingly. The officer-in-charge called and presided over meetings of the board of enlisted editors as an ordinary editor, despite the fact that he had final say in case of serious disagreement. The officers at G. H. Q. and Viskniskki himself thus gave the enlisted soldier-editors all possible latitude.

At the start of the paper there was a feeling at Headquarters that the Intelligence Section should exercise a mild or latent censorship by having the proof sheets sent to Chaumont for inspection and approval. It became at once evident that so cumbersome a proceeding was a physical impossibility, and the plan was never put in effect. Circumstances thus forced the army to rely largely on the discretion of the editors. The only censorship that the paper received, from the American standpoint, was a rapid reading by the American press censor who was in liaison with the French press censorship. But the American press censors never found anything wrong in the Stars and Stripes. They had the privilege of reading it a day in advance of the rest of the A. E. F., that was all.

In the spring of 1918 G. H. Q. showed

(Continued on page 118)

Supreme Metal Furnace
For remelting and refining metal

Simplex Metal Feeder
For composing Machines

Will be on exhibition during the A. P. & A. N. P. A. Conventions at the Waldorf-Astoria, in the alcove on the main floor.

Alfred W. Channing, Inc.
Manufacturers and Distributors of Equipment for Printers
27 THAMES ST. NEW YORK

Eliminates Requests

One of the results accomplished by our Complete Checking Proof Service is the solution to this question of "requests" and "complaints" about checking proofs not being received by agencies and advertisers. Not only will our service produce such satisfactory results as to reduce these requests to a minimum, but the few that may be received by our subscribers are simply turned over to us for handling. We maintain a complete copy file of every newspaper we represent which is used for that very purpose.

NOW—400 newspapers

The Advertising CHECKING BUREAU Inc.
79 Madison Ave. New York — 538 So. Clark St. Chicago

STABILIZING DEMOCRACY

Religion is the Mainstay of Democracy.

Essential Religion—popularly phrased; free from sectarianism and controversy reverent and expert, and ever related to the life of today—belongs in the Daily Newspaper, the one agency that reaches all the people.

To supply just this is the distinctive mission of the weekly Ellis Sunday School Lesson.

—More than a hundred newspapers use it;

(Some have done so for twenty-five years)

—Thousands of Bible Class and Sunday School teachers quote it weekly;

—Preachers use it in their sermons;

—Readers of all faiths write to their Editors and to us in praise of it.

These Are Wobbly Times:
Help Stabilize Them
By a Vital, Popular
Religious Feature.

THE ELLIS SERVICE
Swarthmore, Pa.

"Visualize Your Audience,"

Says O. C. Harn, Managing Director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, in Address to Advertisers

O. C. HARN

managing director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations and winner of the Bok gold medal for distinguished service in advertising awarded by the Harvard Business School.

"Know what you are shooting at. Visualize your audience. Don't snatch merely at the largest circulation.

"It makes a great difference to an advertiser how a paper acquires a circulation. The class of people among whom a paper circulates also makes a big difference to the advertiser. The largest circulation, unless it is the best circulation, is not the most desirable.

"Advertising often costs thousands of dollars a shot. It is useless, unless you know what you are shooting at. It is not so many inches of space that you are buying, but a message to people. Try and think of advertising in terms of the audience you are addressing. Visualize your audience."

—Extracts from Mr. Harn's address before the Sixth District of the International Advertising Association in Milwaukee, March 23-24, as reported in "EDITOR & PUBLISHER."

¶ The Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph (evening) and Gazette Times (morning and Sunday) offer just the kind of "audience" that Mr. Harn describes—the circulation that brings the greatest results to advertisers in Pittsburgh.

¶ They are the established home papers—reaching those who earn and spend money in this fourth largest market in America.

¶ The purchasing power of their readers, either total or per capita, is greater than that of any other Pittsburgh newspapers.

PITTSBURGH CHRONICLE TELEGRAPH

"The Paper That Goes Home." (Evening)

Pittsburgh Gazette Times

(Morning and Sunday)

— Sold Singly or in Combination —

Circulation daily over 220,000
Gain over 10,000 in evening during year

Evening & Sunday circulation over 280,000
Gain over 10,000 in Sunday during year

E. M. BURKE, Inc.
Graybar Building,
420 Lexington Avenue,
New York, N. Y.
122 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago
Constitution Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

URBAN E. DICE, National Advertising Manager
Gazette Square, Pittsburgh, Pa.

R. J. BIDWELL COMPANY
742 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Times Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.
White-Henry-Stuart Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

"STARS AND STRIPES"

(Continued from page 116)

its appreciation of the good work of the officer-in-charge by promoting him to Captain.

The paper was technically a French newspaper in that it was printed and circulated on French soil. It was therefore always sent to the French press censorship in page proof, as were all other newspapers printed in Paris. The American army was too tactful to claim special exemption for its own paper. But the Stars and Stripes obeyed so well the letter and spirit of the local censorship regulations that in all its history the French censors never asked for a single deletion.

In December 1918, the paper was called upon to bear the greatest test to which it could have been subjected. Captain Viskniskki's health became gradually impaired by the long months of work and worry which his serious and manifold responsibilities involved. The captain was a fighter and not a quitter. He continued at his work, though it was becoming increasingly evident to his associates that his health was near the breaking point. General Nolan decided not to risk a nervous breakdown. The editor was relieved from duty, promoted to major as a slight evidence of the army's appreciation, and sent home to rest.

Later, Viskniskki was awarded a United States Army citation by General John J. Pershing "for exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous services in charge of 'Stars and Stripes,' official publication, American Expeditionary Forces," and Lt. General Robert Lee Bullard, commanding the Second American Army, recommended that he be given the Distinguished Service Medal with the following citation:

"For exceptionally meritorious service by his teaching and publication, creating in all ranks a great moral force which contributed in a most extraordinary degree to the final victory of the American Army."

For Viskniskki's successor, and with his full approval, General Nolan designated Mark S. Watson of the press section of G. H. Q., now captain by virtue of good work there. Watson had had long experience on the Chicago Tribune, and he had been in more active touch with the paper than any man at Chaumont. He went to Paris with no other thought than to carry out the ideas and ideals of the founder, and he did so for six months. The change of direction was not generally known at the time, but those on the inside were literally astonished. For the paper appeared from week to week, and month to month, without the slightest evidence, in form or content, of any change in management or policy. Captain (later Major) Watson was ably assisted in his new work by Captain Stephen T. Early, in civil life a Washington correspondent of the Associated Press.

Watson's greatest achievement in a constructive way was the successful conclusion of a long effort for the creation of a special military company for the Stars and Stripes personnel. The problems of circulation, subscription and paper stock had been settled. Two very vexing difficulties that remained were those of friction with the U. S. military authorities in Paris and the question of promotion in rank and pay for the enlisted staff. General Nolan always saw clearly that the Stars and Stripes was essentially a civilian auxiliary to the army. Accordingly the soldiers on the paper had been relieved from the start of all formal military duties and put on commutation of rations and quarters. In other words, they had their hours of labor, and were free in their spare time to do as they pleased, and to board and room where they liked, quite as if they were working on an ordinary newspaper. But the paper was published in Paris, not Chaumont.—It was very difficult for the commanding officer of U. S. troops in Paris to have more than a hundred newspaper men in uniform wandering about the city freely, because they were under G. H. Q. orders, when practically all other soldiers stationed in Paris were under rigid discipline.

Editorial executives of the Stars and Stripes at work in headquarters office.

The U. S. commanding general, district of Paris, made vigorous representations to headquarters that, in the interests of discipline, he must be allowed to control the movements of all U. S. soldiers in his jurisdiction. And so early in 1919 the Stars and Stripes boys were made to realize that they were in the army. They were forced to give up their comfortable furnished rooms and favorite restaurants. Now they must live in the suburbs, in Clignancourt Barracks, under discipline and eat there, too, except when on duty.

The incident would have been of no great importance—for after all it is too much to expect peace-time conditions to obtain in war days—except for the fact that the officers of these barracks were not newspaper men or interested in newspapers, and hence were without sympathy for the peculiar needs of the paper. For instance, one Thursday morning, when the circulation department men were supposed to be at the Journal printing plant to bundle and ship the papers as they came off the press, an officer at the barracks detained them for personal inspection. Twenty-five thousand copies of the paper had been printed and were lying in heaps, unbundled and unlabeled, when the crew reached their posts. It became increasingly evident that the best way to handle a bad situation would be to group all the men into a special company, and to have it officered by men who would realize the needs of the organization and its special relation to the army.

Joined to this idea was that of killing two birds with one stone by having a peculiar sort of a company that would take care of the promotion problem. It was easy enough to get a soldier detailed for duty with the Stars and Stripes. Getting him an increase in rank or pay was another matter. He was now a "casual," and could be promoted only by his former commander who had, quite naturally, lost all interest in him when he left the "outfit." Watson continued conferences begun in Viskniskki's time with the central mail censor officer, who had the same problem on his hands, and they worked out a concrete proposition for headquarters' consideration.

General Nolan saw the point, and after many weary weeks of waiting, the War Department in Washington authorized the creation of two companies, the like of which had never been seen on sea or land. They were called "Censor and Press Companies 1 and 2." Their tables of organization called for half a dozen regimental sergeants major (the highest non-commissioned rank in the army), over a score of sergeants first class, with most of the rest of the two companies composed of sergeants and corporals. Among the comparatively few privates were the leading members of the editorial staff. The commissioned officers were, of course, "hand-picked" by Major Watson.

Advertising for the paper was handled by the business staff in Paris, and in Great Britain and the United States by the Dorland Agency and A. W. Erickson respectively, the latter giving his services and those of his agency without any pay whatsoever. Business firms realized that it was not only a patriotic proposition but an opportunity to reach a field of huge buying power, actual and potential, at reasonable rates. The advertising eventually reached 40 per cent of the space. The standards were those of the best American papers. That is, there were no special positions or free reading notices, no "keyed" advertisements, and no liquor, patent medicine or "fake" ads permitted.

The income of the paper was not limited to advertising and circulation receipts alone. Four volumes of reprints of material that had appeared in the paper were published by the management at various times. These were: "Wally, His Cartoons of the A. E. F.," "The Letters of Henry's Paul to Henry," "Yanks," a collection of the army poetry that had appeared in the Stars and Stripes, and "I was There," a reprint of the finest of the Baldridge cartoons. The verse of the paper was always one of its features, most of it being contributed not by the staff but by soldiers in camp and field. These books were bought freely by the soldiers for their intrinsic interest and as war souvenirs. The poetry book was, curiously enough, the best seller. About 75,000 copies of "Yanks" were sold, and the total sale of the books was around 200,000.

When Captain Waldo was assigned to other duty, his place as business manager was taken by Lieut. Milton J. Ayers, whose assistant was Sergeant-Major Melvin Ryder. The complicated responsibility of treasurer was first assumed by Lt. Adolph S. Ochs, Jr. of the Chattanooga Times. He served for several months and was succeeded by Lieut. William F. Miltenberger. Miltenberger was a gentleman of great personal charm and an able treasurer. After only a few weeks of service he became ill of double pneumonia and died in January, 1919. He was given a military funeral which was attended by the entire staff, and laid to rest in the U. S. Military Cemetery at Suresnes, near Paris, where so many of the heroes of the Marne fighting are buried. Lt. William C. Waltman was the final treasurer. Though army regulations required that financial responsibility be placed in officers of commissioned rank, the several treasurers were greatly helped by the good work of Sergeant Major David R. Sterrett. Major P. G. Mumford, Q.M.C., acted as financial adviser in the closing weeks of the paper's history, giving advice on the technical points involved in the settlement.

The first birthday of the paper was fittingly celebrated by a special anniversary number and a banquet of the staff on Feb. 7, 1919. It was in this issue

(Continued on page 120)

SCIENCE NEWS IS NEWS

Our Daily Science News Bulletin gives you front page copy, inside copy and editorial page copy. Nine other features include: Nature's Notebook, Science Shorts, Star Story Map, Illustrated Feature, Current Radio, Why The Weather, Isn't It Odd, Telegraphic Wire Service, Earthquake Wires. Kindly write or wire us for samples.

New services include: Ask Yourself, Test Yourself, Ventures, How Bright Is Your Baby, The Big World of Little Things, and Golf.

We shall be glad to submit any or all of our services to you and quote you prices.

Read them over—test them in your columns. You will be convinced of their distinctive value.

See the Science Service exhibits during the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. Hallie Jenkins will be in charge of the booth which is space number two, second floor corridor, Hotel Waldorf.

SCIENCE SERVICE

21st and B Sts. Washington, D. C.

THE UNITED PRESS extends hearty thanks to the hundreds of friends all over the world who have sent messages of congratulation and good will on the occasion of its twentieth anniversary.

THE UNITED PRESS enters this, its twenty-first year, determined to justify the confidence of the newspaper publishers who have given it leadership.

"STARS AND STRIPES"

(Continued from page 118)

that the peak circulation of 522,000 was reached. On that occasion, and at other times, letters and messages of congratulation were received from President Wilson, General Pershing, Lloyd George, Clemenceau, Secretary of War Baker and other notable leaders of war days.

The great final problem that faced the management during the closing months was that of the disposition of the surplus. The original 25,000 francs that had been borrowed from Secret Service funds had long since been repaid. Money from subscriptions, advertising, the sale of the special books poured in at an ever increasing rate. It became evident that when the paper closed there would be money on hand in terms of millions of francs and hundreds of thousands of dollars. Viskniskki had pledged the soldiers that there would be no personal profit by any editor, and as we have seen, the original scheme of using the surplus for the company funds of subscribers broke down with the return to the States and discharge of so many units.

It seemed to the editors that the ideal means of disposing of the profits would be to found an endowment for the education of the war orphans that had been adopted by the A. E. F. under Stars and Stripes auspices. In that way there would be erected a permanent memorial both to the paper and to the army it had served, bearing fruit in the helping of thousands of unfortunate boys and girls to useful manhood and womanhood, and in keeping alive the historic traditions of Franco-American friendship. The paper pledged itself editorially to do this. But it was not to be.

The Judge-Advocate General's department was consulted and the colonel, wise in army law, sympathetically smiled but gravely shook their heads. " This is an army paper," they said, "and its profits belong to the United States." If the paper had lost money the United States Treasury would have lost. Since it has made money the Treasury must gain. It is true that a very large part of your expenses have been paid from current receipts. But the army has paid the salaries of the officers and men who worked for the paper. It has paid their commutation of quarters and of rations. It has furnished the automobiles by which you made delivery. For the past few months you have been receiving print paper in considerable quantity from the States, which they evidently regard in Washington as a war expenditure, for they have not billed you for it. Your proper course is to turn in your surplus to the U. S. Treasury, and then to introduce a bill in Congress to appropriate an equivalent amount for your war orphans fund."

And so when the paper closed the treasurer began to buy dollars for the credit of Uncle Sam. There were so many francs to be turned over that it was advisable to buy them in installments so as not to break the rate of exchange. In all over $700,000 in cash and property were turned in. A bill was introduced in Congress to authorize the war orphans project, but, after the manner of bills, it slumbered for a while in committee and then passed painlessly away. But the blame, if any, is not to be charged to the editors. They kept faith with their readers as best they could.

A question of hardly less importance was that of the future of the paper when the A. E. F. became a memory. It was one of Viskniskki's ideals that the paper should end sharply with the army it served, and not linger on to baser uses. Before the armistice he sent a recommendation to that effect to G. H. Q. Its noble thought and language richly deserve quotation. "For anyone to think of the Stars and Stripes as an after-the-war vehicle is to arouse self-interest, self-ambition, in connection with it, and that would be fatal to a paper whose fixed and unflinching purpose has ever been from the start to work for morale, not money; for patriotism, not profit; to serve the heart and soul of the American Expeditionary Forces. I wish to go on record with this firm and fixed conviction concerning the Stars and Stripes. The A. E. F. gave it birth. When the A. E. F. is mustered out, when we American soldiers in France have become simply a memory through our return home, the Stars and Stripes should suspend publication forever, no matter if at that time its circulation is a million or more, and its influence as wide as the spread of the American people and of the American flag. Any other ending of the Stars and Stripes would be the grossest prostitution, the grossest commercialization of the spirit of service which gave it birth and keeps its being."

Stars and Stripes composing room. The typesetters, most of them serving throughout the paper's career, had newspaper experience while in civilian life.

Inspired by and in thorough harmony with the ideals of its founder, the editorial staff made a solemn agreement before they disbanded not to yield to the attractive offers, with which they had been besieged, to continue the paper as a commercial proposition. Here again there was partial defeat. One member of the staff did not sign the pledge, and for several years there lingered on in Washington, D. C., a paper calling itself the Stars and Stripes, the pale ghost of its great model hysterically championing the soldiers' bonus and other legislation for veterans in just the way that Viskniskki had feared.

The decision was wisely made to cut the paper short before the A. E. F. had dwindled to insignificance, for its purposes had been fulfilled. The valedictory number appeared on June 13, 1919, reviewing in modest fashion its work and achievements. It came into being, without advance publicity, to do a great job and, the job done, it was quietly "mustered out." The final editorial was fittingly captioned "Bugler Walsh Sounds Taps." On July 1, "Censor and Press Company No. 1," Captain Harry L. Parker commanding, sailed from Brest on the U. S. Transport "Pretoria." A fortnight later it arrived at Camp Mills, where it was broken up and the members assigned to casual companies, for transportation to points near home and discharge.

The Stars and Stripes was in a sense a propaganda paper. But it was genuinely patriotic propaganda and, above all, truth telling propaganda. What would have been its fate if the American army had not fulfilled its hopes and predictions, and had met with checkmate or defeat? It is a matter of interesting speculation. The paper itself, in its Anniversary Number said really about all there is to say on this subject:

"As Yanks are all skeptics who can smell bunk a mile off, it was decided that the truth must and should serve. What we should have done if the A. E. F. had failed, just how we should have extricated ourselves from our policy if the American troops had gone in for strategic retreating, we don't know.

"But, thanks to the combat divisions, the problem never arose. From that electric day in May, when the breathless squads from the 7th Machine Gun Battalion jumped into the fighting in the streets of Chateau Thierry, the task of the Stars and Stripes became easy. The editorial staff just hung on to the coattails of the irresistible doughboys and was carried to glory."

It may interest the readers of Donald Stone's article on the Stars and Stripes to know that Major Viskniskki received the following citations from General John J. Pershing, Commander-in-Chief of the A. E. F. and Lt. Gen. R. L. Bullard, Commanding General of the second American army in France:

May 2, 1919.

FROM: Lieut. General R. L. Bullard, U. S. A.

TO: Adjutant General, A. E. F.

SUBJECT: Recommendation of Major Guy T. Viskniskki, Inf., for D. S. M.

1. I recommend that Major Guy T. Viskniskki, Inf., to be given the Distinguished Service Medal.

CITATION

For exceptionally meritorious service by his teaching and publication, creating in all ranks a great moral force which contributed in a most extraordinary degree to the final victory of the American Army.

BASIS OF THE CITATION

As is well known, this officer presented the idea for the paper known as "The Stars and Stripes," and he conducted its foundation and publication in accordance with the spirit of the Commander-in-Chief. The tone of this paper and its utterances were always contributory to the highest morale among officers and enlisted men of the American Expeditionary Forces. It is needless to attempt to prove it. It is fact known to every member of the A. E. F. The result could not be otherwise than as stated in the citation, and it was so. I consider it useless to attempt further argumentation.

2. As one not at the General Headquarters of the American Expeditionary Forces, as having no personal acquaintance with Major Viskniskki, and as seeing the effect of his articles and publication, I believe that I am able to form a just judgment as to their value.

R. L. Bullard,
Lieutenant General, U. S. A.

UNITED STATES ARMY
CITATION
MAJOR GUY T. VISKNISKKI, INFANTRY

For exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous services in charge of "Stars and Stripes," official publication

AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES

In testimony thereof, and as an expression of appreciation of these services, I award him this

CITATION

John J. Pershing,
Commander-in-Chief.

Awarded on 20th June, 1919.

PICKENS GOING TO CHINA

R. S. Pickens, former editor of the Hickory (N. C.) Daily Record and later of the Statesville Ledger, sailed on April 26 for China as special correspondent for the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution. He expects to remain in the Orient three years.

CELEBRATES 80TH YEAR

Col. Franklin P. Sellers, for 35 years religious editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, recently celebrated his 80th birthday. Col. Sellers, who is a veteran of the Civil War, is one of the oldest active newspapermen in the city. He is at his desk in the Eagle office daily, and continues to edit the Monday sermon pages and the Saturday religious news pages.

N. Y. GRAPHIC EDITOR IS HELD FOR TRIAL

E. H. Gauvreau Must Face Charge of Publishing "Paper Made Up of Crime News," Judge Holds—Paper Also Liable

A New York court will be called upon to decide whether or not Emile H. Gauvreau, editor and publisher of the New York Evening Graphic, is guilty under a state law which forbids the publication of a newspaper "principally made up of criminal news, police reports or pictures or stories of bloodshed, lust and crime."

E. H. Gauvreau

Mr. Gauvreau was held for trial by the decision of Magistrate Corrigan in West Side Court, who has had the case under advisement since March 6, when he heard evidence presented by attorneys for John S. Sumner, executive secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice.

Mr. Sumner at the time asserted he had served a summons on Mr. Gauvreau and the latter had talked it over with him, asking if the matters which had offended Mr. Sumner were not connected with the Browning separation suit. It is understood the society's action was brought about chiefly because of publication of what the Graphic calls "composite pictures."

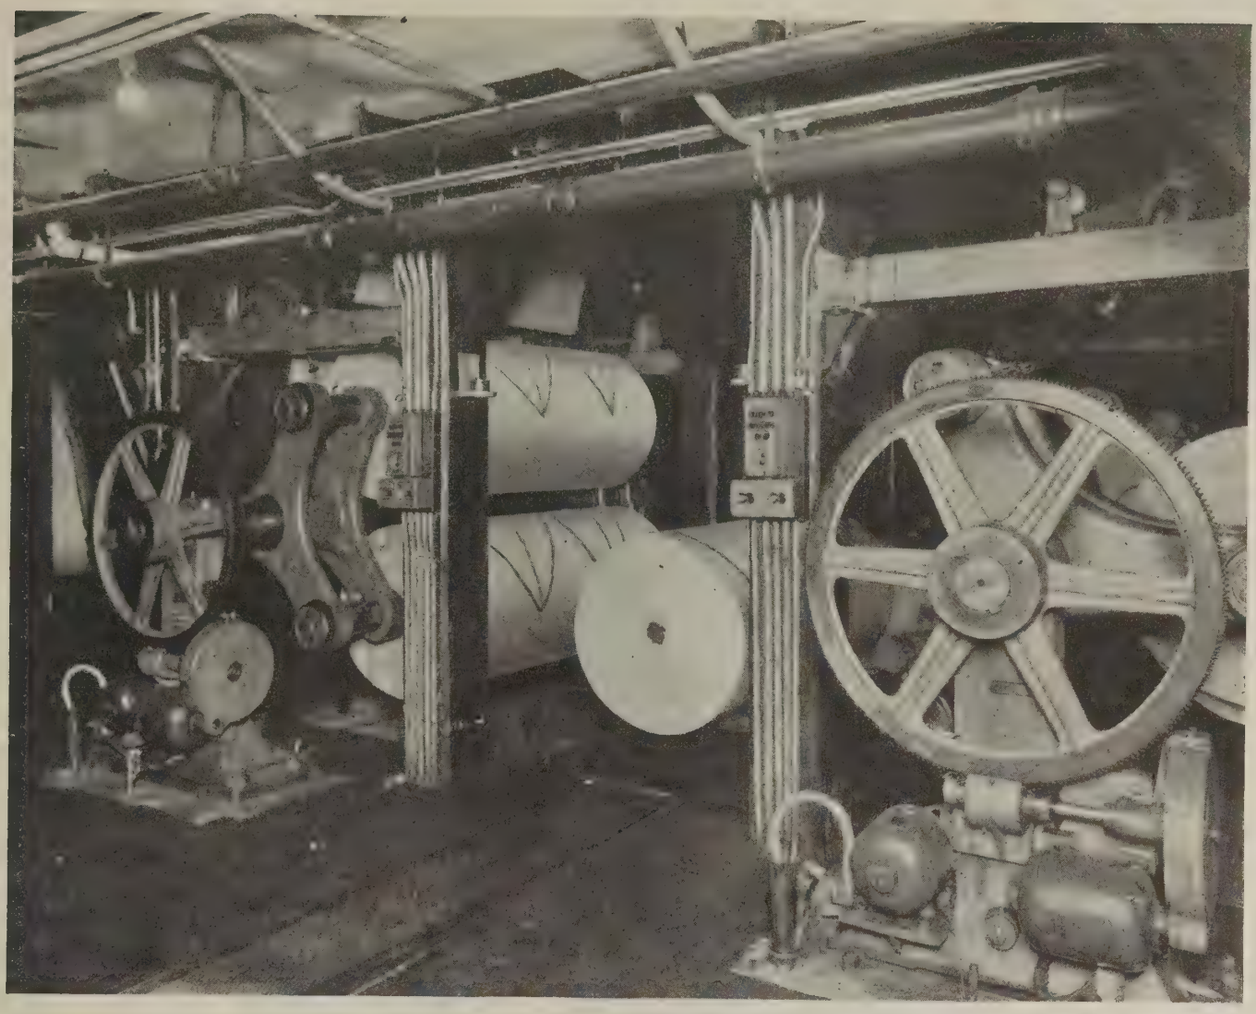
The Macfadden Publications, Inc., which publishes the Graphic, was found liable for trial on a similar charge.

The charges against Bernarr Macfadden, head of the corporation bearing his name, and Otis Scattergood, circulation manager of the tabloid, were dismissed.

Immediately after the decision of Magistrate Corrigan, Mr. Gauvreau was arrested. He posted his own $100 bail. Similar bail was set for the corporation, but Franklyn Ellenbogen, attorney for the defendants, pointed out that a corporation could not be held in bail and that the District Attorney's office would have to file a complaint against it in Special Sessions.

Mr. Ellenbogen said that in all probability the defense would move to have the cases transferred from Special Sessions, where the three justices render decisions, to General Sessions, where a jury trial may be had. Similar action was taken recently in the case against the cast and producers of "The Virgin Man," one of the Broadway dramas which fell afoul the police for alleged violation of the law against obscenity on the stage.

In his decision, Magistrate Corrigan said that he felt the prosecution had established its case against Mr. Gauvreau and the Macfadden Publications, but that Macfadden and Scatergood were in a "different position."



"The only evidence offered against Scattergood is that he was an officer of the corporation and the circulation manager of the Graphic," the decision said. "There was no evidence as to what his duties were, nor was it shown that he had any authority over the publications of the corporation in general, or the Graphic in particular.

"So far as Macfadden is concerned, the prosecution relies upon the fact that he was president of the Macfadden Publications, and upon an editorial appearing in the Graphic February 4, 1927.

"I do not think this evidence is sufficient to bring Macfadden under the law."

The law which the defendants were accused of violating is Section 1,141 of the Penal Code, Subdivision 2. Violation is a misdemeanor and the penalty is not less than ten days nor more than one year's imprisonment, or a fine of not less than $50 or more than $1,000, or both.

"THE KOHLER SYSTEM"

KOHLER
MAGAZINE REELS
IN A PRESS ROOM MEAN

Reduced white waste
Fewer web breaks
Automatic tension control
Cleaner press rooms
No stops for roll changes

KOHLER BROTHERS
ENGINEERS AND MANUFACTURERS

CHICAGO
Wrigley Building North

NEW YORK
Evening Post Building

Powers Engraving Companies

Operating Three complete Commercial Plants and one complete Newspaper Plant, Day and Night, and our own research laboratory, all of which are constantly working to develop new ideas in the Art of Reproduction and improving old ones.

"For Your Covenience"

POWERS PHOTO-ENGRAVING COMPANY
Telephone Beekman 4200
154 Nassau Street

POWERS REPRODUCTION CORPORATION
Telephone Pennsylvania 0600
205 West 39th Street

POWERS FOURTH ENGRAVING COMPANY
Telephone Circle 1300
208 West 50th Street

25 years' experience in supplying the requirements of the world's largest buyers of engravings

We Have

IMPROVED

Our

Well-Known Inventions

Publishers, and Others Interested,
May Visit Our Offices At

205 West 39th Street, New York City

MORNING, NOON, OR NIGHT

And See Our Machinery and Methods in Operation

We Can Save Money and Time, Also IMPROVE the QUALITY and SERVICE of Any Publishers in the United States Operating Their Own Photo Engraving Plants

POWERS ENGRAVING COMPANIES

POWERS PHOTO ENGRAVING CO.
154 Nassau St.~Tel. BEEkman 4200

POWERS REPRODUCTION CORP.
205 West 39th St.~Tel. PENnsylvania 0600

POWERS FOURTH ENGRAVING CO.
208 West 50th St. ~ Tel. CIRcle 1300

TIPS ON HOW TO SELL NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Harry A. Casey Issues Handbook for Salesmen—Says Every Man Can Use Advertising Profitably, But Is Waiting for Someone to Show Him How—"Study Your Newspaper"

A "VEST pocket encyclopedia" of arguments and tips to aid local newspaper space salesmen to land prospects has been prepared by Harry A. Casey, of the Scripps-Howard newspapers. The purpose of the book, as explained by the author in a brief foreword, is to "set down as many suggestions as possible without any attempt at pretty writing," with the hope that the suggestions may be amplified by advertising managers at staff meetings. The book, which is paper bound and runs to 119 pages, is entitled "How to Sell Newspaper Advertising."

Mr. Casey's book is a collection of extremely valuable editorials on salesmanship, which should be on every newspaper advertising manager's desk, and quotations from which should be on the tip of every salesman's tongue.

Following are just a few of his aphorisms and tips picked at random from the book:

Every man can advertise profitably. He is waiting for someone to show him how.

When you go to sell a man something, go with the idea of helping him. Remember that, and good salesmanship is simple.

Some solicitors are timid, bashful, nervous—dreading contact with a stranger. But no one feels timid about HELPING somebody. What are the other fellow's problems? Take an interest in those problems. Help him solve those problems.

"Costs too much?" What form of advertising is cheaper than newspaper advertising? To send form letters costs, in all, about 5 cents per person reached. Figure the cost of reaching one subscriber through newspaper space, using for the calculation the advertiser's usual space size. The difference is amazing—and convincing.

It is well to try to sell space through suggestion rather than too urgent direct attack. It is better to ask questions than than to make statements. Unless you ask questions first, you are likely to make a solicitation on the wrong selling appeal.

Even regular advertisers often find it difficult to visualize the circulation figures you quote. You can make your circulation figures vivid if you translate them into the merchant's merchandise.

It is more difficult to sell an abstraction—advertising, insurance and intangible things—than it is to sell visible commodities such as potatoes, coal, cement. Therefore, if you carry with you something definite and tangible for the merchant to look at, you will find it easy to sell him. Offer him copy—show him clippings of advertisements taken from out-of-town newspapers—have something concrete to lay before him.

Study your newspaper so that you can better adapt your solicitation to the requirement of each situation. Each editorial feature in your newspaper attracts the type of reader who would enjoy that kind of a feature.

Plan your day's work the evening before. Allow a portion of your time to find new places at which to sell advertising. Don't be a rubber-stamper. Don't rubber-stamp one merchant as a "dead one" or another as a "Christmas-only" advertiser. Your rubber stamp is probably wrong. For instance, you may think that the bicycle business is "dead." Yet it is a fact that more bicycles are sold today than was the case when the bicycle was "all the rage."

Suppose you get proofs of all the kinds of type available in your composing room, especially of any new fonts of type recently purchased. Simply through a little clever talk, on a certain font of type you can offer to an advertiser for regular use, you may be able to get exclusive copy.

The "position" buga-boo will always bother you unless you slay it as quickly as possible. Some advertisers did not think of complaining about poor position until newspaper men taught them that there was such a thing as poor position. Don't point out to the merchant that he got "poor position" in the competing paper. This will only act as a boomerang for you.

Actually there are no poor positions. Newspaper readers examine every page of a newspaper. To a hotel man who had complained of poor position for his advertising and said that newspaper advertising did not pay, the solicitor replied: "Well, I'll run an advertisement for you free if you'll let me write the copy. I'll buy a space one inch, single column, and bury it on the most crowded page of the paper. In that space I'll print: 'Hotel Blank, Famous for Bed Bugs.' I'll show you whether advertising, even so-called 'buried' advertising, pulls results."

It is the newspaper representative's job to know EVERY important executive in each place of business on his territory. Do not be afraid of going over the store advertising manager's head. He will not resent it if it is done in the right way, the tactful way. Find some logical excuse for contacting, frequently, the owners of the business. Know the buyers—be well acquainted in every store you call on.

And don't forget that your job is two-sided. You must keep old advertisers sold. You must sell new advertisers. Do both jobs equally well.

Another thing I have observed about some salesmen is their difficulty in reaching the point. I do not enjoy hearing a man talk for half an hour without learning what he is after. The same fault is often prevalent in sales letters and in advertising copy—too much introduction.

One of the most baffling problems to the advertising representative is the successful business which does not advertise. The owner of that business tells you that he is doing very well, thank you—and smiles when you invite his advertising investment.

One salesman handles such a merchant this way: "Have you ever had a fire? Has your salfe ever been robbed? No? Yet you carry insurance. Sure. In a way, advertising is business insurance. You might have a slump in sales, just as you might have a fire or a theft. Then you'd want to get a lot of new customers in a hurry and it couldn't be done—in a hurry. Advertising will widen your circle of customers and almost-customers. Then when you need sales stimulation you can get it quickly. What firm is better known in its line than Tiffany's? Yet Tiffany's advertises. Business insurance. And remember this, if you'll let me speak frankly. You can always do better. No man has ever set a mark which cannot be beaten. It is better for him to break his own records than to watch others grow and get the glory. A business cannot stand still. Sometimes a live competitor may actually win a portion of your trade. It would be humiliating, in the evening of life, to find one's business on the downgrade."

An advertiser does not want to buy space—he wants to sell merchandise.

Keep in his mind that what you are trying to do is to help him sell more merchandise and to get a more rapid turn-over. Do this and his mind will work along with yours. Quotation of circulation and rate is incidental.

A New York store is attracting attention through a series of advertisements addressed directly to certain groups of people: "To the commuters on the 5:06 train to Scarsdale," etc. Of course, ALL newspaper readers are attracted to such advertisements by their novelty, even though the advertisements are seemingly intended only for those who take a certain commutation train.

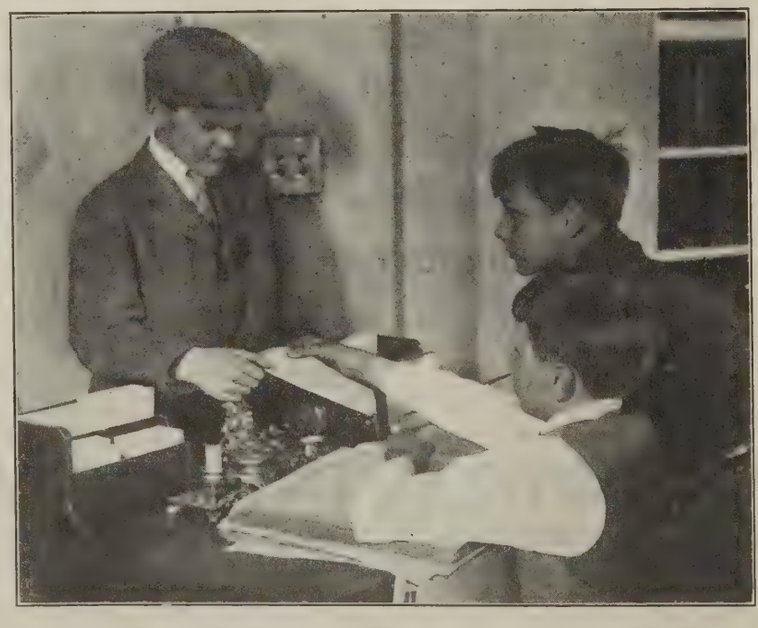
In the same way, a store might address an advertisement to the Smiths, or the Johnsons, or the Browns, or the Joneses. That would be a novelty which would attract the attention of everybody. There are 1,340,300 Smiths, 1,024,200 Johnsons, 730,500 Browns, 658,300 Joneses in the United States. Your city directory will show the number in this city. This point is brought up as an example of new advertising ideas which are always welcomed by smart advertisers.

The man who buys a phonograph actually buys the music the phonograph will produce. The merchant who buys advertising space actually buys the increased sales he expects to obtain. It is difficult to sell a man advertising—he does not want it. But it is easy to make him want more sales and more profit. Selling is merely another name for creating desires. Can any advertiser tell you "Not interested" or say "Call back later" if you have really made him desire more customers, more success?

Sell the merchant thoroughly on the advertising program you recommend—sell him on what that program may accomplish in increased sales—and mention rates only at the very end after you have prepared his mind.

It may strike you as funny, but advertising did not originate with the publisher. It was forced upon him by the merchants who grasped the possibilities of bringing their announcements to the people in this simple way. The early publisher did not want advertising — merchants brought such pressure to bear that they finally got permission to buy a small amount of space. This may interest the merchant of the present day who does not believe in advertising.

An idea which may stimulate an advertiser to use space does not need to be a grand, world-shaking idea. Here is a very simple idea which appealed to three different advertisers and started them on weekly schedules:



A fur dealer advertised every Thursday and in all of his advertising he referred to the day as "Fursday." A shoe shop advertised every Tuesday and referred to the day as "Shoesday." On optician chose Wednesday for his insertions and referred to it as "Lensday."

Some stores complaining of poor advertising results, have undermined the confidence of the public through their insistence on featuring cut prices and "sales" of various kinds. Advertising must be believed. Don't let your advertisers forget that.

Speaking of service, there is nothing which chills an advertiser's interest quicker than poor proofs. If the proof is poor, it is the composing room's fault, you say; if the proof is late, it is the office boy's fault. All right. That is an alibi. Yet it is quite correct, of course. But it is also true that you are responsible for service to the advertiser, and it will pay you to "follow through" on all your business and to make sure that your office is properly serving your customers.

Use EDITOR & PUBLISHER classified advertisements for quick results from the newspaper field.

TEN-YEAR-OLD SOCIETY YOUNGSTERS PUBLISH THE TUXEDO NEWS, TABLOID NEWSPAPER

In conference at the editorial rooms of the Tuxedo News, the young executives are left to right: Henry Tilford Mortimer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Grafton Mortimer, secretary; Malcolm McVickar, business manager, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lansing McVickar, and Jay Rutherfurd, son of Mrs. Charles F. Frothingham. The youngsters who are all ten years old, do all the work themselves, in getting out the 4-page tabloid.

THE

San Francisco Chronicle

in 1926

gained in total advertising 580,160 lines and led all other San Francisco newspapers except one in total, national and classified advertising.

The Chronicle led all other San Francisco newspapers in the following classes of quality advertising: financial, automobile (excluding accessories), resorts, books and publications, and building material.

The Chronicle ranked sixth in total rotogravure advertising among all the rotogravures of the country. The Chronicle publishes the only rotogravure section in San Francisco and one of the finest produced in the United States.

The Chronicle's average net paid circulation for the six months ended March 31st, 1927, was

94,151 Daily
160,680 Sunday
a GAIN of
7,353 Daily
11,558 Sunday

over the corresponding six months a year ago.

The Chronicle has a complete Merchandising Service founded on personal contact and is equipped to give its advertisers the most effective co-operation.

WILLIAMS, LAWRENCE & CRESMER CO.

National Representatives

285 Madison Avenue
New York

360 North Michigan Avenue
Chicago

TURNS LOSING DAILY INTO PROSPEROUS WEEKLY

E. K. Whiting of Owatonna, Minn., Plugs Leaks with Cost System and Business Men in Town Learn Cost Methods from Him

By NORMAN J. RADDER
Associate Professor of Journalism, Indiana University

WHEN the cost of producing newspapers was going upward at an alarming rate in 1920, the National Editorial Association asked ten or twelve prominent country publishers to meet in Chicago to consider means of cutting costs and raising advertising rates.

Print paper, most of the publishers thought, was the biggest factor in sending their production costs up.

The cost of print paper was a definite, tangible thing. Every quotation they got from paper manufacturers was higher than the one before. It must be paper costs, they thought, that are forcing us near or over the red line.

This was the general opinion of publishers throughout the country and also the opinion of most country publishers who met in Chicago in 1920.

There was one in the group, however, who knew that print paper had relatively little to do with the predicament of the country publisher. This man had a cost system. From his cost data he knew positively that print paper constituted only one-sixth of the total cost of publishing a country weekly.

The real difficulty in 1920, as this man knew, lay in the unprecedented pyramiding of mechanical costs due in a large measure to increased wage scales and to improved and enlarged newspapers resulting from the war period.

The man who knew his costs in 1920 was E. K. Whiting, publisher of the Owatonna (Minn.) Journal-Chronicle.

Mr. Whiting has had a cost system in his office for 16 years. I visited him and from him got this story of how a losing daily was turned into a profitable country weekly.

As just indicated, Mr. Whiting was publishing a daily in 1910. He installed a cost system because he suspected a leak somewhere in his plant. He was also printing a weekly and running a job plant.

In a short time the cost system showed that it was the daily that caused the loss. The paper was promptly suspended and has not been revived although Owatonna today has a population of 8,000 and is the county seat of Steele County, one of the richest agricultural counties in the United States. The annual revenue of the 23 co-operative creameries in Steele County is $2,800,000.

As a result of his 16 years experience with cost records—an experience perhaps longer than that of any other country publisher—Mr. Whiting can talk about the value of accurate cost records as an expert with first-hand knowledge and also as an impartial observer since it is no longer necessary for him to do routine tasks of accounting.

Mr. Whiting finds an analogy between cost records and the mariner's compass. Both gives a feeling of security, he says, that can be obtained in no other way.

"Cost records," he told me, "tell you where you are going and in what direction your ship of business is pointed. I should no more think of running my business without a cost system than a sailor would think of venturing from port without a compass.

"When you know your costs you know absolutely how much you must charge for an inch of advertising. You can go to the merchant with courage and confidence. You can lay your cards on the table. You can look him squarely in the eye and tell him that is the rate you must have. You can tell him it is an honest and fair rate based on the actual cost of running the business with only a fair margin of profit added.

"If you don't know your costs you are fooling yourself. You may wish to fool somebody else some time, but you don't want to fool yourself."

As an illustration of how hopelessly at sea a publisher is who doesn't know his costs, Mr. Whiting cited an incident which occurred some years ago when he was delivering a series of talks on costs before the annual Journalism Week of the University of Missouri. After Mr. Whiting had talked costs for several days, a lanky publisher from the Ozarks got up and allowed it was all nonsense to bother with a cost-finding system. He didn't have any, he said, he charged about half the rate Mr. Whiting said was a proper rate, and yet he owned several pieces of property which he mentioned.

Mr. Whiting asked him how many hours he worked. He got the man's time and then asked for his overtime. After some hesitancy, the man gave an estimate of the overtime he had put in since he owned the newspaper. Then Mr. Whiting got the wife's time, her overtime, the publisher's son's time and overtime. He made a calculation on a blackboard in full view of his audience and demonstrated that the publisher, who thought he had done very well, was not nearly repaid for the time he had put in.

"Dun and Bradstreet's report that 85 to 90 per cent of the firms engaged in manufacturing or selling are not making money," says Mr. Whiting. "Many quit. Some continue despite deficits or low profits. It is something more than a coincidence that the United States Department of Commerce finds that a corresponding per cent of manufacturers including newspaper publishers do not know their costs."

On the basis of his experience with cost finding, Mr. Whiting is of the opmion that there are many other publishers of country dailies and weeklies who are losing money and wholly unaware of that unfortunate fact.

Knowing what the cost system has done for Mr. Whiting, other manufacturers in Owatonna have adopted it with modifications suited to their individual needs. Mr. Whiting is a director of the King Ventilating Company. This company several years ago installed a cost system modeled on the system used by Mr. Whiting.

Mr. Whiting uses the Standard Cost Finding System of the United Typothetæ the basis of which, of course, is the sold hour in the various departments.

"Do you think that a newspaper which does not have a job department needs a cost finding system?" I asked Mr. Whiting.

"Certainly," he replied. "You may be making money without a cost system, but one or two productive departments may be carrying the load of some unproductive departments. Machine and hand composition may be efficient, while stereotyping or press departments may lag. How can you tell if you don't have a cost system? Your books won't give you segregated accounts for individual departments.

"Some publishers think they know their costs. In reality they have only time sheets," Mr. Whiting pointed out. "They don't figure overhead, that is, an adequate salary, or interest on investment, depreciation, and such other elements as should go into the true hour cost."

When the Minnesota Editorial Association appointed a committee on cost finding some 16 years ago, Mr. Whiting was made a member. Another member was Herman Roe, now president of the National Editorial Association, who publishes the Northfield (Minn.) News, only 30 miles from Owatonna.

Every year the cost data of these two men are included in a report to the National Editorial Association. This report gives the cost of producing a country paper and its object is to bring advertising rates up to a standard level recommended by the committee. In its report the committee gives page costs for typical weeklies with cost finding systems. Mr. Roe's costs and Mr. Whiting's costs sometimes vary as little as 5 cents a page for the year. In its latest report made at the Los Angeles convention of the N. E. A., the page costs were $24.09 at Owatonna and $26.10 at Northfield. The Owatonna plant with an exceptionally large volume of job printing, obtains very low hour cost, which accounts for the difference in page costs for that year.

Mr. Whiting's interests are primarily in the business side of his newspaper and in job printing. He has delegated to Hugh H. Soper the task of editing the Journal-Chronicle. Twenty-four country correspondents are paid $1 a column. The circulation of the Journal-Chronicle is 2,245, all of which is paid in advance. About 65 per cent of the circulation is in the county.

A farm page in charge of Glenn Degner is a strong feature of the newspaper. Mr. Degner, with the office car at his disposal, spends several days each week out in the country getting practical success stories from farmers.

"Once on the Journal-Chronicle, always on the Journal-Chronicle," seems to be the slogan in Owatonna. Mr. Whiting's superintendent has been with him 23 years, and 11 people now on the payroll have been in his employ a total of 125 years. Mr. Whiting believes in hiring good people and then letting them alone. His relations with all employes are most friendly.

At Christmas time there is a Christmas tree in the Journal-Chronicle office. The plant is shut down and the doors locked so the Journal-Chronicle people, both present and former employes, may have their own party in their own way free from intrusion. Last Christmas dinner was served at noon. Each one draws the name of some other employe to whom he or she gives a Christmas present costing not over 25 cents and for days the boys and girls work and plan surprises for each other. At this time Mr. Whiting presented all employes with a cash bonus and gave personal gifts to the employes attending the party.

Every summer there is an office picnic —and all day party at a lake where all staff members, their wives, children and sweethearts join in a good time.

Once a year Mr. and Mrs. Whiting are hosts to all employes at a dinner party given in their home. Then there is music, games, and sometimes a picture show thrown in for good measure.

Over-time and night work are avoided unless absolutely necessary. "Experience has proved to me," says Mr. Whiting, "that no matter how loyal and faithful a man may be, constant night work and over-time does not increase shop production."

Instead of asking night work, Mr. Whiting keeps a night man on the job from 8:00 p. m. to 4:00 a. m. The night man is an operator whose major job is setting up the paper. Job work is the main source of revenue and the newspaper is kept out of the way during the daytime except on Thursday. All day Thursday is given to the production of the newspaper.

"It is an axiom in manufacturing that efficiency is highest when one job is under way and that one job is cleaned up and gotten out of the way in the quickest possible time," says Mr. Whiting in explaining his ideas.

"We get the newspaper out of the way on Thursday and then on Friday morning we are all ready to go ahead with job work. If we left an hour or two hours of work on the newspaper for Friday morning, it would be just about enough to spoil the best of a half day. Cost records show the loss involved in changing from one job to another."

CONDUCTS SAFETY CAMPAIGN

The Roanoke (Va.) Times and World-News recently put on a "safety campaign," consisting of an entire page weekly in each paper. The page was captioned, "The A B C of Safety," and carried messages from the superintendent of police to motorists on the principles of safety. The page was illustrated with cuts of the universal safety signals used by drivers. A number of individual advertisements which made up the rest of the page each carried safety slogans, such as "Stop, Look and Listen," "Cross Crossings Carefully," etc.

Use EDITOR & PUBLISHER classified advertisements for quick results from the newspaper field.

Make Your Title A Mark of Pride with Hardened Steel Newspaper Heads
—they last forever
A. J. SOSSNER
361 West Broadway
New York

now
195,000 Daily
425,000 Sunday
And The largest home-delivered circulation of any paper in its territory
Los Angeles Examiner

LOCAL DISPLAY
Are you getting your Share?
Every publisher has to contend with the problem of lining up local firms who do no newspaper advertising at all.
Our plan has met with universal success all over the country in turning these dead prospects into active weekly or semi-weekly accounts.
The Briggs' plan will get you your share of this local display business without any cost.
WRITE for full particulars.
THOS. W. BRIGGS CO.
Columbian Tower Building
MEMPHIS, TENN.

Taking a Firm Hold on First Place—

Tulsa 1st Tribune

The Oil Capital of the World modestly lays claim to being the "First" city in Oklahoma and in many respects the "First" city in the southwest. Below we list only a few of the major claims for first position. All these factors influence sales and this is of prime importance when planning sales campaigns.

FIRST

Tulsa leads the State in volume of business as shown in Bank Debit figures.

FIRST

Tulsa leads the State in savings deposits and is third in the tenth federal reserve district.

FIRST

Tulsa leads the entire Southwest in per capita income—One in Seven Pays an Income Tax.

FIRST

Tulsa leads the State in automobile registration, particularly of higher-priced cars.

FIRST

Tulsa leads the Southwest in number of firms and individuals engaged in the business of producing oil.

The Tulsa Tribune has taken a firm hold on FIRST place among Tulsa Newspapers. Since the first of the year this hold has been strengthened in several respects. Advertisers who are planning on developing sales in this major southwest market will find the figures given below of interest in selecting the FIRST newspaper in Tulsa.

FIRST

The Tribune leads in local display advertising. The 1926 lead amounted to 294,164 lines (legals deducted).

FIRST

The Tribune stepped into FIRST place in TOTAL advertising for the first three months of 1927 compared to the morning paper of Tulsa.

FIRST

The Tribune leads in advertising gains. 1926 local display gained 602,948 lines over 1925. National advertising gained more than half a million lines or 48.7%.

FIRST

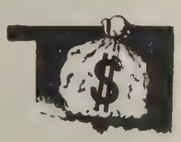
The Tribune leads in daily city circulation by the audited figures for 1926. It offers the best coverage of Oklahoma's FIRST market.

FIRST

The Tulsa Tribune is FIRST in News Services and Features; FIRST in reader interest and influence, and FIRST in home merchants advertising.

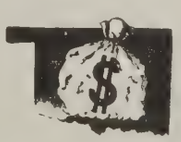
Gains vs. Losses

After registering a gain of over half a million lines of national advertising in 1926 The Tribune continues to record gains in 1927. During the first quarter of this year The Tribune has gone ahead of its record of 1926 by a nice margin while the competitive combination newspaper has suffered severe losses. More and more national advertisers are finding The Tribune their best buy in Tulsa.



The figures below serve to show just what the trend is among national advertisers.

TRIBUNE



First three months of 1927 GAINED.....41,426 Lines

MORNING PAPER

First three months of 1927 LOSS.....95,427 Lines

THE TULSA TRIBUNE offers a thorough coverage of the wealthy Tulsa market at evening time, at a rate 60 per cent lower than that asked for a competitive "forced combination" newspaper.

The Tulsa Tribune.

Evening and Sunday Morning

East

Story, Brooks and Finley
New York City
Philadelphia, Pa.

West

G. Logan Payne Co.
Chicago, Ill.
St. Louis, Mo.

FIRM'S EMERGENCY SELLING PROBLEM SOLVED BY NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Over-Supply of Frozen Fish Marketed in Carload Lots Through Large Local Dealer Copy—Attractive Prices Featured Sale to Public

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

OVERPRODUCTION in many lines is causing many an executive to lie awake at nights to think up new, quick-action ways to market goods at reasonable cost.

Full page fish copy in Fort Wayne News-Sentinel

When supply outruns demand, prices are apt to drop below the point where there is any profit and the manufacturer, caught with a large overstock on his hands, is liable to have to enter red figures on his books. In the best ordered of businesses, a glut is likely to arrive unexpectedly, due to weather, accidents or other business contingencies.

When a situation like this arises, a man has to think in a hurry, and act positively and at once. Naturally, his thoughts turn to advertising and what it might accomplish in his dilemma. Magazines usually have to be discarded first because most of the closing dates are too far away. Then the thinking turns to what sales can be made through business papers, direct mail, personal special salesmanship or the newspapers.

Such an emergency is a time when sales count, and the company cannot wait to build merely "good will," valuable though that may be under ordinary circumstances.

Following is a story of a firm faced with the above situation and how it used newspaper advertising to solve its problem.

During the summer months when fish are cheap, it is customary for the leading large fish wholesalers to send much of it while fresh to the freezer, where it is frozen and kept in perfect condition. If winter comes, with its blizards and cold weather, certain weeks the fishing vessels may have to stay in port or at best bring in a small supply. During Lent especially, this means that many orders would have to go unfilled and that prices would be sky high for any fresh fish.

At such a time the frozen fish proves very acceptable and may be moved at a good margin. By simply thawing carefully, the housewife has a piece of fish as good as when just out of the water, although there is a wide prejudice (without sound foundation) against fish in this form.

This winter, however, proved very mild and so the fish wholesalers faced spring with heavy stocks of frozen fish on hand and no way to market through usual channels. Whitman, Ward & Lee Company, the largest wholesaler at Boston, found it had on hand the largest stock of frozen fish in its history.

Dana F. Ward, treasurer and general manager of the company, and also president of the United States Fisheries Association, decided he would move the overstock rapidly and without delay.

He took a train to various points in the Middle West, where fish from the ocean is a rarity, sold various dealers the idea of buying in carload lots and selling direct from the car, showed them how to use sensational "sale" advertising in the local newspapers, shipped the fish and very soon had moved thousands of pounds which otherwise would have been almost a dead loss.

Here is how it worked out in Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Mr. Ward interested George H. Buck, a local fish dealer, to purchase a carload of frozen fish at an attractive price. Mr. Buck agreed to do what for him was big advertising, as he had never used the newspapers much, and to pay for space used.

The car of fish arrived. On Monday, South Bend, through the News-Sentinel, was greeted with a full page advertisement which announced "The treat Fort Wayne and vicinity has been waiting for, sale starts Tuesday at 9 a. m., solid car just arrived direct from Boston."

A whopper of a fish formed the center for the advertisement, which had an incidental sketch of people buying direct from the car. The varieties included haddock, mackerel, cod, bluefish, flounders, sole, fillets of haddock, fillets of codfish, fillets of hake, smoked fillets of cod, etc., all at 10 and 15c. a pound retail. These were listed. The health value of fish, especially as a preventive of goitre, was emphasized.

On Tuesday, a quarter page headed "Last two days," carried the following buying urge:

"Only two days remain for the greatest fish sale ever put on in Fort Wayne. Your neighbors and friends were here yesterday and were pleased with their purchases, the variety is still large, most any size and kind you want. The carload is direct from Boston."

Varieties, prices and health arguments were included.

On Wednesday, another quarter page entitled, "Your last chance tomorrow," explained that "while the supply is now limited, the variety is abundant," and again outlined prices, kinds, value of sea food in diet and the fact it could be bought from the car.

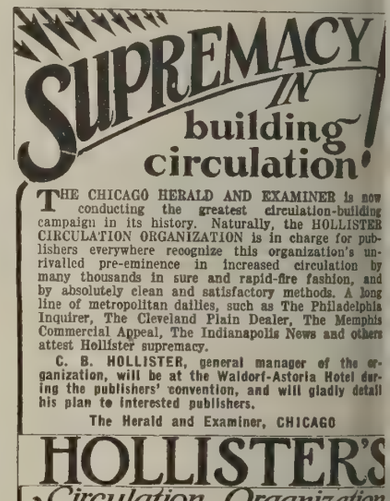
The result was that practically the entire carload of frozen fish was sold in three days, the consumer benefited in price and quality, the dealer made some money and obtained more local publicity than he had had in years and the producer turned over, at a worthwhile price, stock which otherwise would have depreciated to nothing on his balance sheet.

NO ROSES FOR GENIUS ON NEWSPAPER ROW

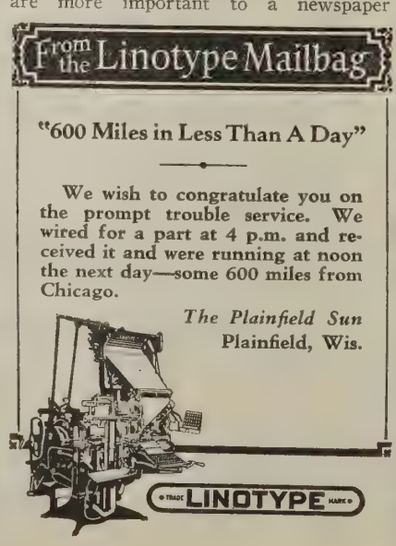
High Talents Unsuited to Daily Grind Says Henry Justin Smith, But Advent of Genius Lifts Dailies from Drabness

Genius enters newspaper offices quickly and gets out quickly; it is an ethereal quality which raises journalism out of the drab and places it for a space on a level with art, but it is not suited for the daily grind of fact-gathering life.

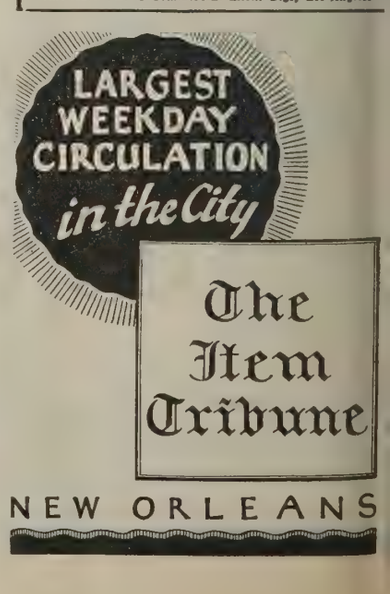
So declared Henry Justin Smith, managing editor of the Chicago Daily News, in a talk last week before students of the University of Chicago on "Genius on Newspaper Row." Mr. Smith's subject was near to home, for a number of the Chicago Daily Neews.



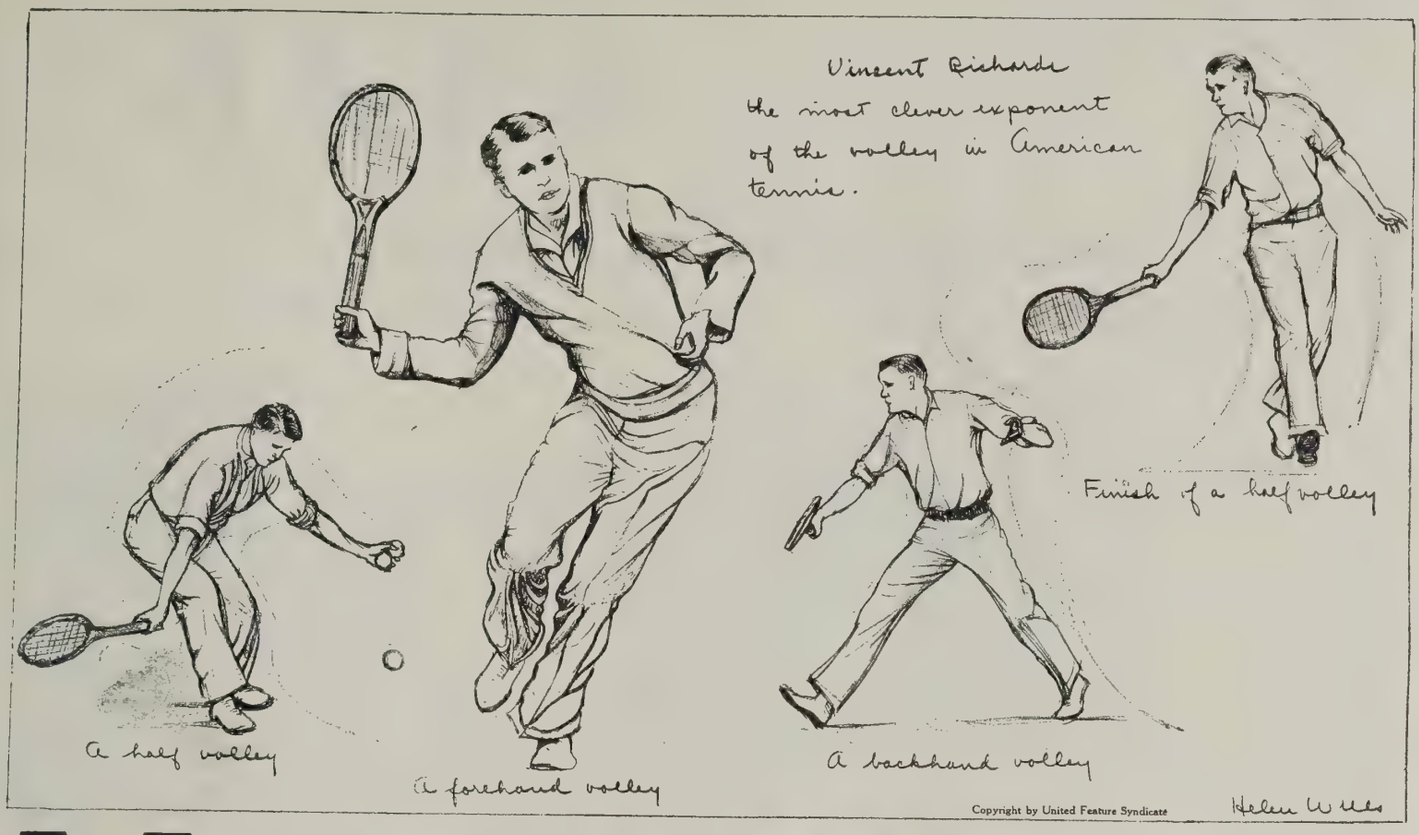
"Geniuses do not make good reporters," Mr. Smith said. "They are artists, and art selects while journalism completes. The men who thus portray beauty in the abstract are perishable. But that they have great value no one can dispute. If the day should come when statisticians are more important to a newspaper than good writers then I will give up.



"Rather than see honest and brilliant writers forced off a newspaper, I would say to chuck all newspapers into the middle of the ocean. They are a stimulus to their fellows. Think how many young cubs swell with pride because they can say, 'Yes, I work on the same paper as so and so.' There is no Hall of Fame for newspaper genius; there is only a morgue downstairs where, filed away in musty envelopes, are gathered the results of their long labor. The applause of the public is scarce; all they ask is the approval of their fellow workers."



In a running survey of newspaper geniuses since the days of Walt Whitman, who used to arrive at work at noon and who was unable to collect routine facts at all, Mr. Smith revealed that many of our outstanding poets have been reporters. For instance, Edgar Allen Poe, who in 1844 was occupying a corner in the New York Evening Mirror, conducting a column, was "the R. H. L. or Keith Preston" of his day.



Then he cited Bret Harte and Mark Twain, the former without the right newspaper temperament but the latter a back-breaking worker in the '60s in San Francisco. He told how fires were started to make news and how the town was raked for "items." Then on to Lafcadio Hearn, who wrote "amazing copy" for the Cincinnati Enquirer, and who had himself hauled to a steeple top to describe the view.

In quick succession the speaker mentioned Rudyard Kipling, Stephen Crane and Eugene Field, the latter an eccentric genius who worked under Victor F. Lawson and Charles H. Dennis, present editor of the Daily News, the latter Field's biographer. Then Peter Finley Dunns, George Ade, also graduates of the Daily News, and on to the present generation, Ben Hecht and Carl Sandburg, who still has his desk where countless poems are scribbled and tossed into the waste-basket between the writing of moving picture reviews.

HELEN WILLS

THE WORLD'S ONLY Woman Sports Artist
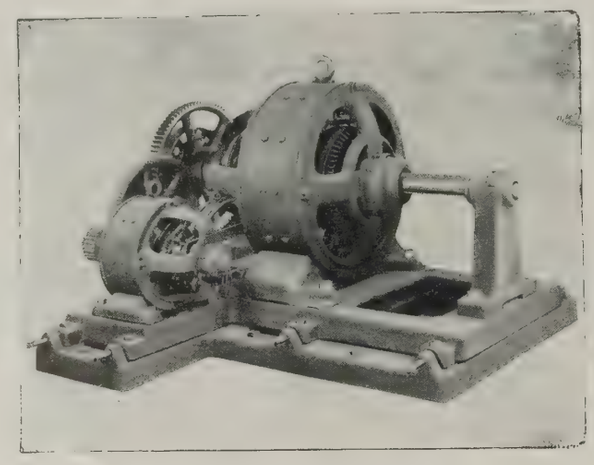
WILL PLAY AT WIMBLEDON

Observers predict that, stronger and faster than ever, "Little Poker Face" is entering her biggest year, and is on her way back to the championship.

Secure her weekly sketches and articles for your territory now

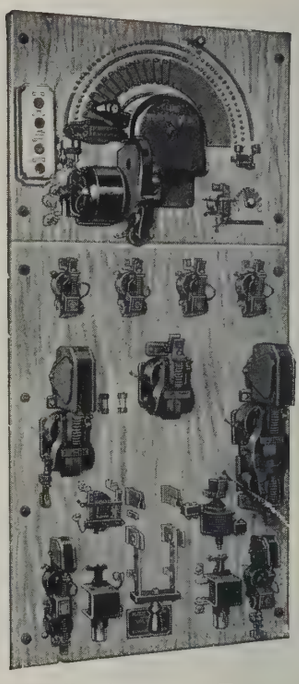
UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE
WORLD BLDG., NEW YORK

CLINE



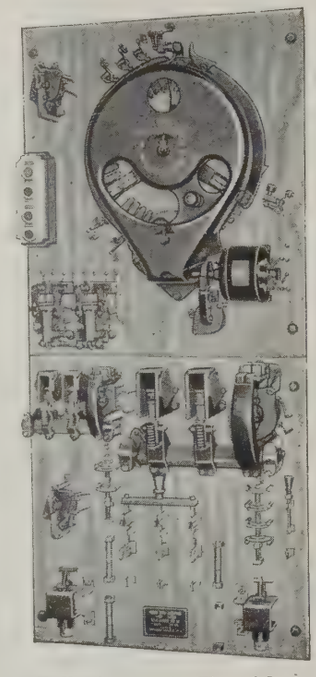
Controls the Press

CLINE

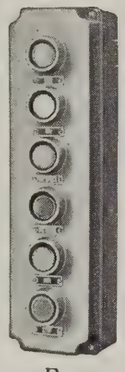


CLINE SYSTEM FULL AUTOMATIC PUSH BUTTON CONTROL

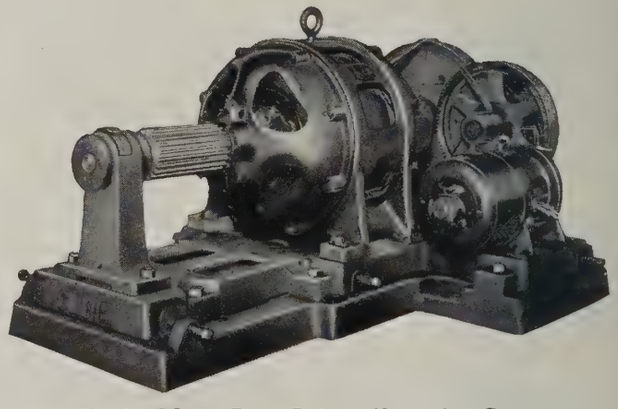
Some Users



Chicago Tribune
New York Times
Pittsburgh Press
New York News
Cleveland News
Columbus Dispatch
San Francisco Chronicle
Detroit Free-Press
Cincinnati Enquirer
Rochester Times-Union
Louisville Courier-Journal
Kansas City Star
Toledo Blade
Dayton Daily News
Canton Repository
Buffalo Evening News
Los Angeles Times
Omaha World-Herald
Des Moines Register-Tribune
Sydney (Australia) Sun
Long Beach Press-Telegram
Worcester Telegram
Pasadena Star-News
Ottawa Journal
Vancouver Province
Altoona Mirror
San Francisco Bulletin
Hartford Courant
Minneapolis Journal
Providence News
Los Angeles Herald
U. S. Daily Publishing Co.
Reading Times
Indianapolis Star
Knickerbocker Press
Memphis Commercial-Appeal
Erie Daily Times
St. Louis Globe-Democrat
Harrisburg Patriot
Seattle Times
Harrisburg Telegraph
Ironwood Daily Globe
Montreal LaPresse
Seattle Post-Intelligencer
Highpoint Enterprise
Cincinnati Times-Star
Wilmington Every Evening
Denver Post
Norristown Herald
Border Cities Star
Hazelton Standard
Jackson Patriot
Rochester Democrat
Nashville Banner
Winston-Salem Sentinel
Miami Herald
Newcastle News
Waltham Publishing Co., Waltham, Mass.
Flint Journal
Olean Times
Manitoba Free-Press
Fayetteville Observer
Fresno Republican
La Van Guardia, P. I.
Chicago Daily News
Labor, Washington
Aberdeen World
Latrobe Bulletin
St. Paul Dispatch
Roanoke Times-World
Ft. Wayne Journal-Gazette
Greensboro News
Houston Chronicle
Washington Observer
Omaha Bee
New Britain Record
St. Louis Star
Rome Sentinel
Seattle Star
Lajornado
Grand Rapids Press
Raleigh Times
Warren Tribune
Pittsburgh Observer
Port Arthur News
Raleigh News & Observer
Waterloo Courier
Fairmont Times
—and others.



Double-Motor Press Drive, Direct Current



Full Automatic Two-Motor Direct Current Controller

Full Automatic Two-Motor Alternating Current Controller

Press Control Station

Double-Motor Press Drive, Alternating Current

The Cline Electric Mfg. Co. fur
Printing Presses and Auxiliary

CLINE ELEC

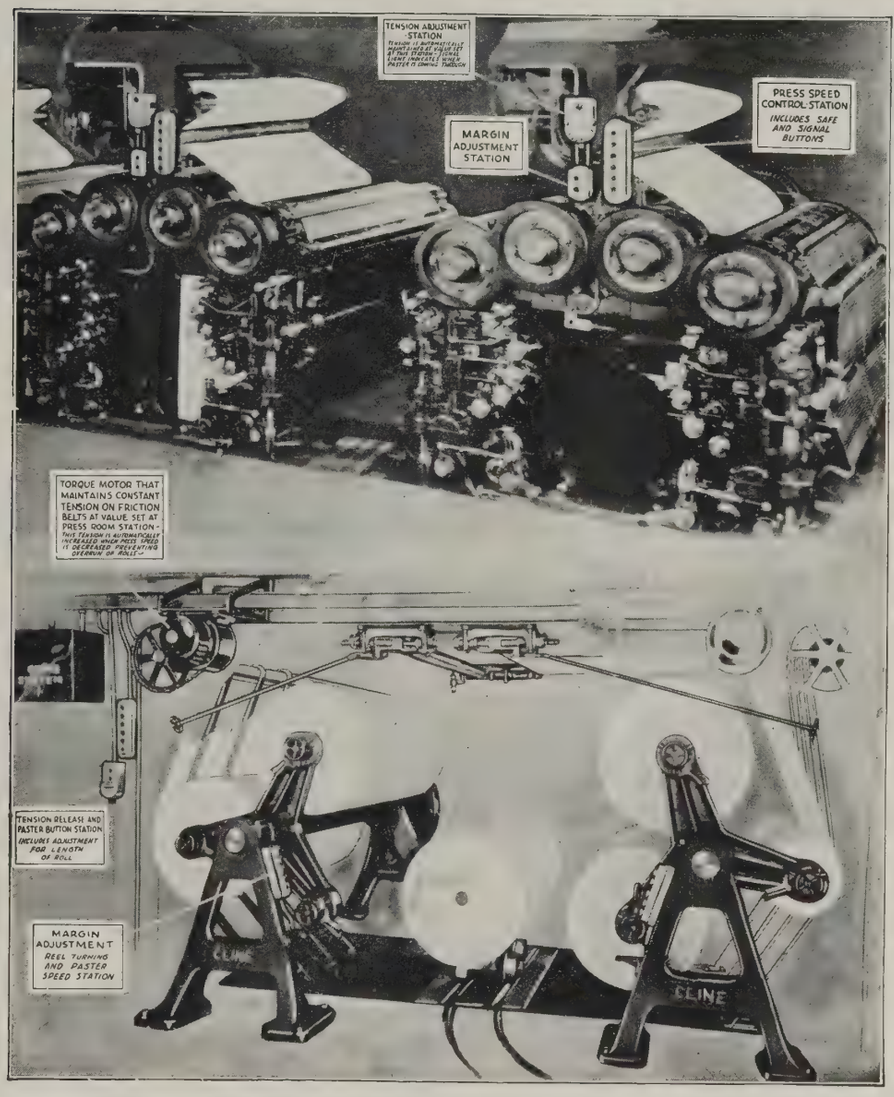
MAIN OFFICE, CONWAY BU

WESTERN OFFICE
FIRST NAT'L BANK BLDG.
SAN FRANCISCO
CALIFORNIA

CLINE

YSTEM

TEM



Controls the Web Tension

CLINE SYSTEM AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC TENSION

See Tension Adjustment Station on Press

See Margin Adjustment Station on Press

Note Flying Paster Control Station

Roll-Stands and Automatic Electric Tension

List of CLINE Equipment

Cline System of Full Automatic Press Control

Cline Selective Full Automatic Control for Multiple Unit-type Presses

Cline System Paper Roll-Stands

Cline System Automatic Electric Tensions

Cline-Westinghouse Stereotype Motor Equipment

Cline-Westinghouse Linotype Drives

Cline-Westinghouse Motor Equipments for fans, pumps, etc.

Cline-Westinghouse Electrically Heated Stereotype Metal Pots

Cline-Capital Roll Lift and Lorator

Cline-Capital Plate-Dropper

Cline-Capital Plate Conveyor

Cline-Capital Paper Trucks, Tracks, Transfer Tables, etc.

and Control Equipments for r Newspaper and Job Presses

MFG. CO.

ASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

EASTERN OFFICE
MARBRIDGE BLDG.
47 WEST 34TH ST.
NEW YORK CITY

TEM

106 White Trucks Deliver Hearst Newspapers in New York and Chicago

NEW LOW PRICES ON White Light Delivery Trucks

THE recent price reduction on the two White Truck light delivery models, used extensively by newspapers, sets a new standard for high quality and low price in this field.

Dependable and speedy, White Trucks have the stamina to withstand the severe demands of newspaper service. At the new low prices White Truck transportation is now within the reach of every newspaper publisher.

The name and reputation of White is insurance of continued high quality. These are the same high-grade White Trucks—at lower prices—the same standard specifications. Throughout the chassis construction of the White Model 15 and Model 20 you will find inbuilt quality, ruggedness and exclusive White mechanical features that are not duplicated in any other light delivery truck at any price. They are circulation builders.

	Old Price	New Price	Saving
Model 15 (¾-1-Ton)	$2150	$1545	$605
Model 20 (1½-Ton)	2950	2125	825

(Prices F. O. B. Factory)

Write The White Company, Cleveland, or the nearest White branch or dealer for complete specifications covering White Light Delivery Trucks at reduced prices. TERMS—Operators wishing to buy trucks on terms can do so.

THE WHITE COMPANY, Cleveland

WHITE TRUCKS and WHITE BUSSES

Steady—

Reliable—

Powerful—

THE HALIFAX HERALD

and

THE EVENING MAIL

(Total Net Paid A. B. C. Circulation 33,587)

Advertising in the Maritime Provinces—one of the best markets in Canada—is bound to bring you increased sales, and The Halifax Herald and The Evening Mail can give you a better coverage in Nova Scotia than any other newspaper.

Full particulars furnished by any advertising agency, or by writing direct to

The Halifax Herald and The Evening Mail

E. M. BURKE

1203 Graybar Building, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York

PAPERS IN 37 FOREIGN COUNTRIES NOW RECEIVE NEWS FROM UNITED PRESS

Rapid Expanison of American News Service Abroad Told by Vice-President—South American Field Opened in 1916 —Pioneer Work Done in China

By J. H. FURAY
Vice-President of the United Press in Charge of Foreign Services
(Written for Editor & Publisher)

WHEN E. W. Scripps conceived the plan of organizing the United Press twenty years ago, he visualized a press association which should eventually spread to the uttermost parts of the earth and guarantee to the press of the world that it should have the truth of the news of the world each day presented without nationalistic bias or passion, without propaganda and without a selfish interest to serve. He conceived an organization which in a future day should contribute in no small measure to bringing about a closer understanding between the peoples of the world and thus promote international accord.

The United Press, this year celebrating the twentieth anniversay of its foundation in 1907, is the living result of the attempt of men who believe firmly in the principles of its founder to realize his vision.

This article refers to the foreign service of the United Press. The men who have been privileged in the international field to participate in the task of attempting to transform the vision of Mr. Scripps into a living thing realize that much of their task is still undone. But they point with some pride to the fact that today, only twenty years away from the birth of the organization, and little more than ten years since the development of the United Press foreign service dispatches really began, those dispatches are going to the peoples of 37 countries outside of the United States and its possessions and are being printed in 17 different languages.

From a service whose volume seems infinitesimal compared to the huge wordages cabled to foreign countries today, the growth of that foreign service has been steady and strong from 1907 to 1927.

One of the first foreign press organizations to receive United Press dispatches was Nippon Dempo Tsushin Sha (Japanese Telegraph News Agency), of Tokio, founded by Hoshio Mitsunaga. It was the first attempt on the part of the Japanese press to break away from the domination of governmentally subsidized or controlled news agencies. Today every important Japanese newspaper receives daily United Press dispatches distributed through Nippon Dempo Tsushin Sha.

In those early days of the United Press, too, its dispatches reached Europe through an arrangement with the Exchange Telegraph Company of London which distributed them to newspapers throughout Great Britain.

The great impulse to the publication by newspapers in other countries of United Press news dispatches came, however, with the convlusion of the World War and its aftermath. It was during this period that the most significant step in the history of U. P. foreign service was taken. This was the inauguration of service to the newspapers of South America. This service began in 1916 with a single client in Buenos Aires; today it serves more than 80 newspapers in South America proper and more than 100 in all of Latin America.

To understand the change in the South American press association situation since the United Press service began, it is necessary to visualize the press agency situation which existed there before that year. Incidentally, South America was typical of the situation which existed for many years throughout the world.

Fifteen or twenty years ago, by reason of an understanding or "gentlemen's agreement" between the so-called official European agencies whereby each official agency agreed not to invade with its service the territories of the others.

J. H. Furay

South America had been assigned to Agence Havas, of France, as part of its special field. For many years Havas was the only news agency whose dispatches reached that continent. The news of the world as then published by South American newspapers was thus furnished exclusively by a single source and that source the official or semi-official agency of the French government.

In large part of the news of the world from countries other than France or the French sphere of influence reached Havas from its allied news agencies, nearly all of which were themselves official or semi-official governmentally supported agencies.

Editors of great South American journals whose standards of news independence and objectivity are as high as any in the world, sensed the situation and began to express the fear that, under such a system of a single news source, propaganda might be presented to them in the guise of unbiased news. When the World War broke out in 1914, these editors clearly saw that it was necessary to publish world news dispatches from a neutral source if they were to keep faith with their readers and present a daily chronicle of world events viewed objectively and not colored by national or racial passions. It was to meet this situation that the United Press was called in 1916.

It was three years after the inauguration of its service in South America that this structure began to take definite form. The preceding three years had been devoted to the painful growth by the "trial and error" method. In June, 1919, La Prensa of Buenos Aires, one of the most influential newspapers in South America, began to receive United Press dispatches.

Early in 1920, LaRazon of Buenos Aires, began United Press service and this was quickly followed by the inauguration of service to other large Buenos Aires journals—El Diario, La Epoca, La Argentina, The Standard, El Diario Espanol, La Patria degli Italiani —and the newspapers of Rosario, Mendoza and other large cities of Argentina.

Meanwhile, early in the U. P. history in South America, its dispatches had been started to Brazil. O Imparcial, of Rio de Janeiro, was the first Brazilian journal to receive these dispatches. Six months later the service was begun to O Paiz of Rio de Janeiro and shortly thereafter to O Estado de Sao Paulo. Out of this beginning has grown a distribution of news dispatches to many sections of Brazil, not only in the larger cities of Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, but also in sections of southern Brazil, such as Porto Alegre. The U. P. today serves more than 20 newspapers in Brazil.

After this development came the opening of service to the countries on the West Coast of South America, principally Chile and Peru. Service to Peru was begun in 1921 when La Presna, of Lima, contracted for these dispatches. A year later publication of United Press news reports was started by Diario Ilustrado of Santiago and La Nacion of the same city. Now every newspaper in Chile which takes any press association report at all relies exclusively on the United Press for its news. In Peru six newspapers receive any press report and United Press serves five of them.

Following this development, another step was taken in the program of expansion when, at the request of newspapers in South America, U. P. undertook to cover for the South American press the news of South America itself, in addition to the service from other parts of the world.

The first test of the efficiency of this coverage came with the opening of the Tacna-Arica plebiscite conference in Arica during 1925 and 1926, which met in the hope of terminating the 40-year old bitter dispute between Chile and Peru as to the sovereignty over the provinces of Tacna and Arica. Dispite the fact that both Chile and Peru were vitally involved in the deliberations, the United Press clients of both countries relied almost entirely upon the United Press dispatches to bring to their readers the news of Arica events. With national feeling running high on both sides, here, was an acid test of impartiality.

But the development of the U. P. service in South America was not confined to the larger and more accessible countries of that continent. In rapid succession newspapers of Bolivia, Ecuador and Colombia, on the West Coast, began the U. P. service. The United Press serves 14 newspapers and 5 in Bolivia.

The rapid expansion of United Press service on the continent of South America was largely due to the efforts of James I. Miller, vice-president and general South American manager, who has just arrived in the United States on his first visit in four years. Miller entered the service in February, 1918, as Buenos Aires bureau manager and has advanced to his present position with the growth of the geographical division under his direction.

The United Press entered the Chinese field in 1922. Ray G. Marshall opened the service by establishing a bureau in Peking. Within a few months United Press dispatches were being published in 16 vernacular or foreign language newspapers in Peking, Shanghai, Hankow, Tientsin and other cities of China and this service was quickly extended to Harbin in the north and Hong Kong in the South. A bureau was also established in Shanghai and a part time bureau in Hong Kong.

Miles W. Vaughn, former New York manager, was sent to the Far East two years ago to become Far Eastern manager and to complete the work begun.

In Hawaii the Honolulu Advertiser discontinued its former press association affiliations on Feb. 1 of the present year and began to rely exclusively upon U. P. for its world news coverage. The Hawaii Hochi, a Japanese language daily of Honolulu, is also served with United Press dispatches through a full time bureau which has been in operation in Honolulu for the past four months.

In England, through the Exchange Telegraph Company, and in France, through Agence Radio Telegraphique, United Press dispatches had for years been reaching the press of Great Britain and the Continent of Europe. But it was not until 1922 that service direct to newspapers was started.

Profiting by its own early errors during the trying years of its beginnings in South America, the United Press felt that it must make haste slowly and study the problems presented before embarking on an enterprise never before undertaken by an American press association. In the fall of 1921, Dr. Edward J. Bing, master of eight languages and long experienced in general European newspaper work, was brought to this country. He remained for eight months studying conditions and methods and preparing for the inauguration of service. In May of the following year he returned to Europe and a few months later service began.

The first newspaper in continental Europe served directly was La Vanguardia of Barcelona. It was quickly followed by Neue Freie Presse, Austrian newspaper.

The United Press has never stooped to propaganda, nationalistic or otherwise, in the sense in which that word is generally understood and used. Propaganda in this sense is a vicious thing. It consists of poisoning the wells of truth at their sources, in so mixing fact and half-truths as to convey a false impression and for an ulterior purpose. In its worst form it amounts to deliberate deception. No press association in any field, particularly in the international field, could long survive which circulated only one side of a political or national controversy in its daily news report. It would be damned by intelligent men as unfair and untrue to the principles upon which honest journalism is founded.

The United Press has striven always to be fair and honest with all countries and all races in dispatches which it distributed throughout the world.

U. P. CABLE CHIEF TELLS OF EARLY DAYS

150 Words from Abroad Was "Red Letter Event" Twenty Years Ago —Has Handled Biggest Stories of Two Decades

When the United Press started operations 20 years ago, it was "a red letter day" when 150 cable words arrived from Europe; today thousand of words from all parts of the globe for distribution in this country and other lands arrive daily, according to Francis A. Gribbon, Western Union chief for cables in the United Press offices in the World Building. When Gribbon first started 20 years ago with the United Press, he was copying cables and telegrams, but today he is head of a force which handles chiefly cables.

He has worked under five Western Union presidents and under five United Press presidents.

"When we started in the old Park Row Building 20 years ago, the entire force, from president to office boy, consisted of 12 men," he told Editor & Publisher.

"One of the big flashes of the early days was the story that Wright Brothers had succeeded in getting their airplane off the ground and flying a bit. Since then airplanes and a dirigible have spanned the ocean and crossed the North Pole.

"Some of the stories I have taken in from the wires have been the death of King Edward, England, deaths of two Popes; "Discovery" of North Pole by Dr. Cook, followed by the actual discovery by Admiral Peary; the sinking of the Titanic; the Harry K. Thaw murder trial; death of Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria; declaration of war and signing of peace.

"The cable service has kept pace with other developments of transmission, and today we can get a news flash from London in less than a minute."

EDITOR FLEES RUMANIA

Titus Enachovic, editor of the Bucharest Coventul, fled Rumania when he learned he was to be arrested and sentenced to six months in prison for adversely criticizing the work of the Secretary of the Ministry of Railroads. It was the first case to come before the court martial since the new press law was established by decree of Premier Averescu.

The New Building of the Toledo Blade which will be opened May 2nd

A new $1,500,000 plant has been built and completely equipped for exclusive use in the production of the Toledo Blade.

The equipment includes 16 Unit type Goss presses in line, equipped with Cline Reels, with capacity of 210,000 twenty-four page papers per hour; 20 New Lin-O-Type machines; new Monotype Equipment; new double junior auto plate machines.

The BLADE now has over 126,000 daily circulation, which is nearly 30% more than the second paper. In advertising volume during 1926 the BLADE carried 5,700,000 lines more total advertising than the second paper.

347

Exclusive National Accounts!

The Toledo BLADE during the year 1926 carried 347 national accounts exclusively. The other evening paper carried only 24 national accounts exclusively.

These were classified as follows:

	BLADE	Second Paper
Automobiles	13	1
Auto Accessories	9	0
Beverages & Confections	16	0
Building Materials	8	1
Coffee, Teas & Spices	4	0
Dyes & Polishes	6	0
Electrical Appliances	7	0
Exterminators	4	1
Financial	16	0
Food Products	35	0
Fuel & Oil	4	0
Hardware & Household Goods	11	0
Hotels & Resorts	9	3
Cleaners & Soaps	7	0
Men's Wear	10	1
Musical Instruments	2	0
Office Appliances	6	1
Plumbing & Heating	6	0
Proprietary Medicines	63	11
Publishers Adv. (Magazines & Newspapers)	12	0
Radio	20	1
Railroad & Steamships	23	0
Schools & Colleges	1	0
Shoes	1	0
Tobacco	16	0
Toilet Articles & Preparations	21	4
Wall Paper & Paints	1	0
Women's Wear	8	0
Miscellaneous Products	8	0
	347	24

The BLADE is the FIRST in TOLEDO from every standpoint

The Reason: Quantity Circulation plus Quality Circulation is Unbeatable

TOLEDO BLADE

Paul Block

New York Chicago Detroit Boston Philadelphia

HOW SMALL DAILY MAKES CASH REGISTER RING

Franklin (Ind.) Star Stresses Local News, Letting Big Papers Cover Foreign—Bars Special Editio Salesmen—Circulation Contests and Premiums Taboo

By DAVIS O. VANDIVIER

OUT in Indiana, just 20 miles south of Indianapolis, there's a small daily newspaper that has no competition to spur it on, only its own honest effort to give its customers a finer paper and help every citizen to have a better, cleaner city in which to live. That in itself is not unusual. It is a Main Street country town newspaper in every sense of the phrase. But it is not unusual for that paper to break linage and circulation records every month in spite of "close" money and efforts of state newspapers which are published only 20 miles distant.

W. W. Aikens ...

That paper is the Franklin (Ind.) Evening Star, published in a city which the 1920 census gave a population of 4,909. To make a financial gain of 31 per cent in 1926 over 1925; to increase its advertising revenue 33.8 per cent in March, 1927, over the same period of 1926; and to make March, 1927 a bigger month than its record December business, is an achievement that will probably interest many readers of Editor & Publisher.

W. W. Aikens and Raymond H. Sellers are the publishers of the Star. Mr. Aikens, who founded the paper in 1885, has been actively connected with it with the exception of three years. In October of 1923, with Mr. Sellers as his partner, the Star was re-purchased. Since that time it has been built from a four page daily to eight and ten page size with numerous special editions totaling as many as 24 pages. Mr. Aikens is also treasurer of the National Editorial Association, a position that he has held for the past seven years.

Many Star policies and methods used in building a greater newspaper are unusual. None are sensational, just the means for building in a fairly speedy manner, a growth without "growing pains" from the advertisers or the readers.

The remainder of this article is divided into three sections telling of the plan pursued by the management of the Star. The first pertains to news, the second to advertising and the third to circulation.

The editorial department, headed by Mr. Sellers, "hunts" only local news. Indianapolis papers, carrying complete state, national and foreign news stories, would smother and dwarf any attempt of the Star capably to cover this field. Therefore the Star leaves everything to the state papers with the exception of local news which it gives from the smallest item to the story about Friend Wife chasing her spouse with an axe or an egg beater.

Franklin is in the center of Johnson County (agricultural) and the Star makes this area its "news world." As a result hundreds of Johnson County folk take but two papers, the Star and the state paper. In event economy dictates that one must go, there is never a debate as to which it shall be. In this kind of an argument the Star never loses.

Correspondents are maintained in every city and hamlet in the county. A member of the staff visits each of the five towns in this area one afternoon of each week in search of special stories.

The Star has the reputation of printing more strictly local news than is carried by any paper published in a city of less than 15,000 population in all Indiana.

When stories are clipped from neighboring papers that pertain to county news, they are rewritten with the real local angle.

One of the "stiffest" policies of Mr. Sellers is that every page must have real local news on it with the exception of page advertisements.

Many small town papers are published at noon on Saturday, believing that sufficient advertising cannot be printed to justify longer hours. The Star makes the greatest effort of the week on Saturday to give its readers better news and the paper "goes to bed" at the regular time (3.30 p.m). Advertisers are now using the Saturday edition with regularity and a well balanced eight page paper is printed each Saturday.

The Star has an unusually complete local morgue that is kept abreast with the times in every possible manner. The staff follows closely the successes of former residents in other states and never misses an opportunity to tell the home folks how "John Smith is now president of the tea sippers club in Borneo." Every success story creates greater city pride and staunch friends for the paper.

News stories, which some papers would classify as advertising, are given freely to aid any movement of charitable organizations. Community enterprises are backed to the last ditch.

The policy of giving every item of local news possible for a wide-awake organization to gather has resulted in unusual support from the public. Scores of letters, similar to the medical testimony type, are received every month from readers in other states. Instead of curing everything from short "eye winkers" to pneumonia, the readers say the Star is "a letter from home and they couldn't get along without it."

The advertising department, which has broken previous linage records with regularity, incorporates several plans and methods not to be found on the average daily, and especially in a town of only 4,900 population. As stated previously, local display and classified linage was boosted over 31 per cent in 1926 and the record figures of that year are being smashed during 1927. March business showed a gain of 33.8 per cent, being bigger in volume than the Christmas month.

Selling advertising is not the task of the Star advertising department. It is helping the merchant. When the merchant is "assisted" in taking a page advertisement the staff feels that it is doing him a real service.

A special study of each individual business in the city is made. To the best of its ability the advertising department strives to discover how to make greater profits for the advertising buyer. New ideas, business builders are eagerly sought for the benefit of the advertiser. If his advertising is not paying, the matter is a subject for real discussion and new methods are proposed.

The staff has a "horror" of overselling a customer. It means an end to advertising for a period and a possible total loss, and the sure slipping of the business firm's profits. Many times advertisements are received by the staff that require more space than is really necessary to sell the merchandise. In that event the merchant is advised that smaller space would be cheaper with results just as great. This policy has created confidence among the advertisers in the integrity of the Star.

No outside advertising salesmen are permitted to co-operate with the department. The pressure sellers are taboo. To the many propositions of linage boosters that mean immediate profits (but not future gains) a "deaf ear" is turned. The department feels that it knows the needs of local advertisers and does not want to run the risk of overselling. No transient advertising solicitors are ever permitted to represent the Star.

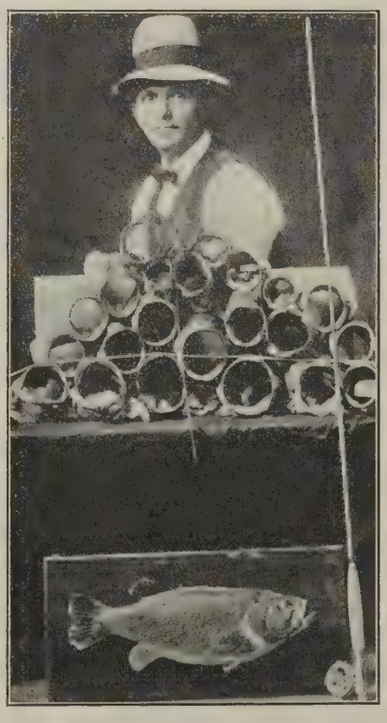
In the small cities in the county, the area covered by the Star, big linage gains are run up. A special 14-page edition for the town of Greenwood was recently published. It contained only Greenwood news and advertising. The small towns are covered at regular intervals for new business. In event a change is made, a new building erected or any form of a civic improvement made in the small towns, the advertising department immediately starts to work in order to cover the "event." Every edition of this nature is backed up with all local news from that particular town.

The Star does not sell any community booster pages or series but devotes its effort to helping the business man.

About 12 special editions are issued each year with the stress on increased circulation. Over a period of time this method has been found to yield much better for the paper, as well as the business houses, than special co-operative pages.

Advertisers are shown proofs of every new issue of the advertising service and proofs given when requested. In event two or three men in the same line of business select the same illustrations it is then a matter of first come first served.

Advertising bills of the Star come due the first of each month and that means the first, too. When a man is unable to pay for advertising used in the past, the office believes there is either something wrong with his business management his advertising. In case the departme has helped plan his advertising and giv every possible suggestion then the firm advised to "let up" on using newsprint.



Raymond H. Seller

The Star has as few circulation problems as any daily newspaper. During the past three and a half years 1,000 people have added their names to the reading roster. "Have added" is right as no solicitors have been employed, no free prizes given and serial features used.

By giving all the available news in fair and impartial manner, the paper h reached the stage of development whe people really want it. Rates are not c to hasten advance collections. Whe say 50 subscribers get delinquent in th payments, they are advised of the fact letter. If this does not suffice, off com the names from the subscription galley Mr. Subscriber misses one issue of t paper, calls up the office and as "what's the trouble." When told, hops in the flivver and rattles in and la down the subscription price.

NEW CONVENTION LURE USED BY EDITOR

No members of the Oklahoma Press Association who can possibly get away are expected to miss the May meeting of the association, following receipt of invitations from Robert I. Kidd, bearing the above picture. Mr. Kidd, editor of the Poteau (Okla.) News, is president of the association and has selected a lake as the meeting place. The evidence on the table is an array of fish scalps collected by Mr. Kidd. He won't tell where the lake is for fear of it being depleted prior to the time of the meeting.

MAY MOVE TYPOTHETA PRINTING SCHOOL

Proposal Made to Locate Pione Indianapolis Institution at Carnegie Institute of Technology

The printing school of the United T pothetæ of America will be moved fro Indianapolis to Carnegie Institute Technology, Pittsburgh, if the directo of the Institute accept the formal tend of an endowment of $225,000 to establi two chairs in printing. This announc ment was made at a dinner held at t William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, on Ap 23, when the offer was made to the Ins tute by Ernest F. Eilert, president of t Typothetæ.

The school at Indianapolis has be operating for more than 21 years and considered not only a pioneer school printing instruction, but in the entire fie of industrial education in North Americ according to George K. Hebb, chairma of the Typothetæ committee on educatio It has functioned as a higher trade scho teaching craftsmanship, rather than trai ing apprentices for the trade. Studen have been mostly sons and employes the master printers, and more than 2,0 have completed the resident courses.

Carnegie Institute of Technology is t only school in North America, accordi to Mr. Hebb's report, that has the faci ties to give complete courses in printin

The proposal of the Typothetæ provid that $125,000 be set aside for the esta lishment of a United Typothetæ America professorship in printing, the i cumbent to be head of the department printing in the college of industries. T remaining $100,000 would be set aside f the United Typothetæ head instructorsh in craftsmanship training. Necessary a ditional equipment to initiate the ne training program would be provided the Typothetæ.

Chairman Hebb of Detroit, Fred Hartman of Chicago, director of educ tion, and President Eilert of New Yo were appointed by the executive coun to work out details of the program wi officials of Carnegie Institute of Tec nology.

—Let's Analyze the Keystone Market—

In population it ranks second with nearly 10 million inhabitants. Its annual productive wealth from its industries is valued at over 7 billion dollars. It employs more than 1 million workers whose annual pay roll runs over one billion dollars. Its annual crop value averages over 500 million dollars. It is the great manufacturing center for the iron and steel industry, cotton, wool, leather, machinery, food stuffs, and all other kindred products that give steady employment to hundreds of thousands of people.

It maintains its leadership in the quantity production of important and necessary commodities such as shoes, building brick, cigars, cigarettes, confections, gasoline, handkerchiefs, hats, hosiery, ice cream, matches, etc.

The Keystone State is the country's work shop. Its people are steadily engaged in these great industries, producing wealth and earning excellent incomes.

No advertiser who has ever concentrated his energies on this market has found cause for complaint. The response he received has exceeded his highest expectations.

If you are not yet familiar with this great market its time you took the trouble to investigate it. Let these newspapers listed below help you.

	Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
Allentown Call .....(M)	34,660	1.1	.11
Allentown Call .....(S)	23,813	.11	.11
††Beaver Falls Tribune .....(E)	7,141	.03	.03
††Bethlehem Globe Times .....(E)	14,147	.06	.06
††Brownsville Telegraph .....(E)	7,818	.04	.04
*Chester Times .....(E)	19,742	.09	.07
†Coatesville Record .....(E)	6,834	.035	.03
*Connellsville Courier .....(E)	5,652	.02	.02
Easton Express .....(E)	34,476	.10	.10
Erie Times .....(E)	30,594	.08	.08
††Grensburg Tribune Review ..(EM)	14,800	.05	.05
††Hazleton Plain Speaker.....(E) / ††Hazleton Standard-Sentinel....(M)	20,582	.08	.07
*Mount Carmel Item .....(E)	4,340	0.285	.0285
Oil City Derrick .....(M)	6,903	.04	.04
Pottsville Republican and Morning Paper .....(EM)	15,887	.08	.07
Scranton Times .....(E)	43,000	.13	.12
*Sharon Herald .....(E)	7,456	.0357	.0357
Sunbury Daily Item .....(E)	5,922	.035	.035
*Warren Mirror-Times .....(ME)	9,291	.043	.043
*Washington Observer and Reporter .....(M&E)	17,384	.06	.06
††West Chester Local News.....(E)	11,941	.04	.04
Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader.....(E)	26,442	.08	.06
††Williamsport Sun and Gazette & Bulletin .....(ME)	29,931	.09	.09
†York Dispatch .....(E)	19,955	.05	.05

*A. B. C. Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
†Government Statement, Oct 1, 1926.
††Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

ARE TABLOID NEWSPAPERS A FIFTH ESTATE?

Conflict Between Tabs and Standard Size Papers One of Taste and Style Writer Declares—Tabloid Have Carried Picture Formula Into News Writing—Overdone Politics, Crusades, Bore Readers

By S. PARTRIDGE

LAUGHTER rocked newspaper offices seven years ago when an Assemblyman introduced in the New York State Legislature a bill to prohibit on newspaper reports of murders, types larger than a half inch high. The bill was predicated upon the theory that conspicuous statements of murder induced readers of those statements to commit murder. Since the bill was defeated—its advocates say because it was defeated—a number of murders have been committed.(a)

Stirred by the sweet ingenuousness of this 36-point effort, I prepared a bill aimed at another kind of slaughter, the killing of persons by motorists driving at illegal speeds. My measure was entitled, "A Bill, To limit the diameter of speedometers on automobiles driven over or upon the public highways." It was predicated upon the theory that, to reduce the mortalities of pedestrians struck down by automobiles, it was necessary to reduce and limit the speed of those automobiles.

The bill provided that the diameter of a speedometer should not exceed 36 millimeters for each Rated Horse Power, or 72 millimeters for each Brake Horse Power, of the engine of the automobile on which said viz-and-to-wit speedometer was used.

Like the 36-point type bill, my 36 millimeter speedometer bill has not been enacted into law and—perhaps in consequence thereof—highway mortalities have increased.(b) I am emboldened again to bring forward this bill because of a new effort along quantitative lines to curb crime through limitation of crime news.

This new effort—is or was—a proposal that the newspapers of New York voluntarily bind themselves to publish not more than 500 words a day on the Snyder murder trial. The proposal was made by a tabloid newspaper, the Evening Graphic, whose earnestness was evinced in stories and editorials aggregating many thousands of words. The proposal has a certain professional or trade interest additional to its public interest. It therefore opens very fairly the door to discussion, by the rank and file, of the treatment of news by tabloids and other newspapers. I am, myself, of the rank and file: I am a copy-reader.

Let us apply to this problem plain thoughts of the rank and file, as distinguished from the ratiocinative processes of the editorial and administrative mind. Let us seek facts; let us try to put in common words some rules by which we can shun such dilemmas as urge a newspaper, for whatever purpose, to propose not only for itself but for its rivals what is in effect a public censorship. The rank and file have at least a bread-and-butter interest in such proposals.

Let us see if the solution of the problems of the tabloid and of the "big papers," as of all written matter, is not to be found in style, which involves artistic taste. Let us see if the answer to this problem cannot be put in a rule, or a formula, not rigidly and arbitrarily fixed by the size of an article, or of the types it is printed with, or of the newspaper it is printed in, yet having a wise relation to those factors.

This thing is of importance to the "big papers," too, because the tabloids are profoundly effecting the newspaper business. Some persons regard them as a new and distinct genus of publication. The relations between the press and the public, between the press and the Government, particularly its courts; pulpit, business, stage, sports, dress, manners, morals, are affected. It is not too much to say that at least the unwritten laws of libel are undergoing very significant changes.

Remember that the tabloid is primarily a picture paper. If it were merely a reduction, like a map on a scale of one inch to the mile, of a standard-size newspaper, a tabloid could be staffed by a few such crafty fellows as contrive to write the Lord's Prayer on the head of a pin. But that is not true. A tabloid story, to be good, must be written in tabloid style. Permit one of the rank and file humbly to offer this rule or formula:

Tabloid style is picture style.

There happens to be, right now, an exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art of early American miniatures. Study them—you will seldom see so many together—and you will find different treatments. Some are of quite photographic accuracy; a few have slight traces of a kind of impressionism, but most of them appear, to the lay critic, essentially portraits of the formal school; delicate, dainty, spirituelle, but not basically different from, say, that indescribably exquisite portrait of Madame Favart, by Drouais, also in the Metropolitan.

You will find beautiful stories in tabloids, delicate, dainty, exquisite. But they are neither miniatures nor Madame Favart. Not so far from Madame Favart, in the Metropolitan, is a portrait of Salome. On her lower lip is a line of moisture—an almost brilliant white—characteristic of women of a certain type. That suggests the tabloid stories.

It is a flash that lightens, blazes, flames. It is a flare of impressionism against a background of facts.

Let us turn to literature for analogies. For the art of compression we go, as if by instinct, to the Bible. But let us do it wisely. If merely knowing the vocabulary of the Bible were enough, Aimee McPherson and The Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton would be as good newspaper men as some persons would have us think. When we closely examine the style of the Bible from a tabloid point of view, we find it is essentially, like all great styles, full of imagery, that is to say, of pictures.

Let us take up, first, Daniel's pronouncement of absolute power vested in and exercised by a monarch over his people, the power of life and death, of chains and torture, of well-being or ill-being—you see how many words one can say of it. Daniel (V, 19) thus described the power of Nebuchadnezzar:

" . . . Whom he would he slew; and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would be put down."

That chapter—not long by tabloid measurement—tells the fall of one of the greatest dynasties the world has ever known. It begins with a majestic overture, "Belshazzar the king made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand." In its onward rush, the story yet has time and space to explain, "In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaister of the wall" (where all could see); and in concluding, "In that night was Belshazzer the king of the Chaldeans slain. And Darius the Median took the kingdom," to add, "being about three score and two years old."

A picture, that hand, over against the plaister! And the man of 62!

When Joshua sent out spies to Jericho, they ran true to form and made friends with the underworld. They made a harlot's house their headquarters. But the story of their adventures and of the later taking of that great city is strung on the scarlet thread that this woman Rahab was to hang from her window. A picture! that scarlet thread in the harlot's window!

When David's soldiers went forth to take his son, Absolom, we have the picture of the aged king waiting:

"And David sat between the two gates; and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and beheld a man running alone.

"And the watchman cried and told the king. And the king said, if he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth."

A picture, of these two old men, talking down their terror while the dusty messenger far off on the plain "came apace, and drew near."

Take a world-old plaint as voiced in Chaucer's Knight's Tale:

What is this world? What asken man to have?
Now is hir love, now in hir lonely grave,
Alone, withouten any compagnie.

A picture, the isolation of the dead!

Imagery! Do not think it is fantastic to talk of drawing tabloid styles from great literature. Some tabloid writers already have styles of a very fine quality and perfectly adapted to tabloid writing. But you will find in them the picture element.

A story in the Evening Graphic says "A shabby boy picked up by the police in Union Square today told them he was the last of the dapper Red Moran's gang."

The picture: shabby. This boy was hungry and penniless too, but shabby was the picture.

We may call this word the picture word, the tone-word, the key-word, the pivot-word; perhaps, borrowing from music, we should do best to call it the theme-word. But in every good essentially tabloid story it is there. The story is built around that word and its connotations.

Tabloid headlines are tending more and more in the same direction—more to pictures, less to news.

When Harry Thaw, like another Cincinnatus, left the country gentleman's plough, to come back to Broadway for a lark, this line covered the story.

HARRY THAW 'STEPS OUT'

Commander R. E. Byrd and two other aeronauts inflate a rubber collapsible boat for a tryout in New York harbor:

3 Leather-Lunged
Flyers Go to Sea
On Their Breaths

Parents of five children die of hootch:

Rum Orphans.

First maple syrup of season is taken from the Coolidge farm:

COOLIDGE SAP UP

Here is a picture in a news head—double value:

ELEPHANTS KILL SHOPPER

the word shopper connoting a crowded retail street.

It would seem that these elements of style ought to be developed in tabloid staffs by concerted efforts from above. It is not enough for editors to give the order, "Cut to the bone." The old rhetoric books used to give as the elements of style, Purity, Propriety, Precision, Clearness, Strength and Harmony. In a newspaper those elements should be extended not only through individual stories but through the whole publication.

Cutting stories to the bone is a vain thing if an editorial writer is taking a thousand words to say that bigotry is evil, or 500 to say that if President Coolidge is reelected, he will be the first man in the United States to be president in three terms.

To one of the rank and file, it would seem that better balance is obtained by papers which do not give large amounts of space to crusades. Some of the big papers can manage to get away with this thing of running around telling Governors, and Supreme Court and High Sheriffs of other States "Don't hang that man! Why, he's a Brooklyn boy! Raised right up here in Dannemora!" The taste involved in such advice becomes all the more doubtful when a State says: "All right, Buddy. Keep 'em home or we'll hang 'em as fast as you raise 'em."

When the amount of space devoted to crusades is large, they not only crowd out news; they create unfavorable impressions. There's probably not a daily newspaper in New York that hasn't two or three hundred readers who think when they read. Such people say—and go others to say:

"The editors are always fussing because somebody wants to run their papers—why not? Who put it up to the papers to put anybody in jail, or get out?"

The effect of these masses of space given over to crusades and to editorial platitudes and commonplaces is far more shocking to the prospective advertiser. When he sees a page or half a page thrown away (as he deems it) and an advertiser calculates that space at 50 cents or 75 cents an agate line, and mutters,

"They must not set a very high value on their space: I could move $50,000 worth of goods off my shelves with that much space—in a good paper."

For that very reason—and again it seems to one of the rank and file that the men at the top must formulate more specifically the standards for tabloid writing and space-allotments—for that very reason, it seems inevitable that the advertising rate structures of the tabloids should be reconstructed to force a reduction of the bulk of some advertisements.

This is an article about tabloids and other newspapers which does not say that big papers are dull or tabloids immodest. Let's not say it. We all of us are prone to say: "I'm against censorship but there are two or three little things I'd like to regulate." It is a matter of style, that is, of taste. The big papers don't have to be any duller than they want; the tabloids don't have to be any more immodest than they want.

You will find tabloid stuff in the big papers; the New York Times headlines are often complete summaries of the stories under them. You will find big paper stuff in the tabloids; when real news breaks, like the China story, there is room for it in the tabloids.

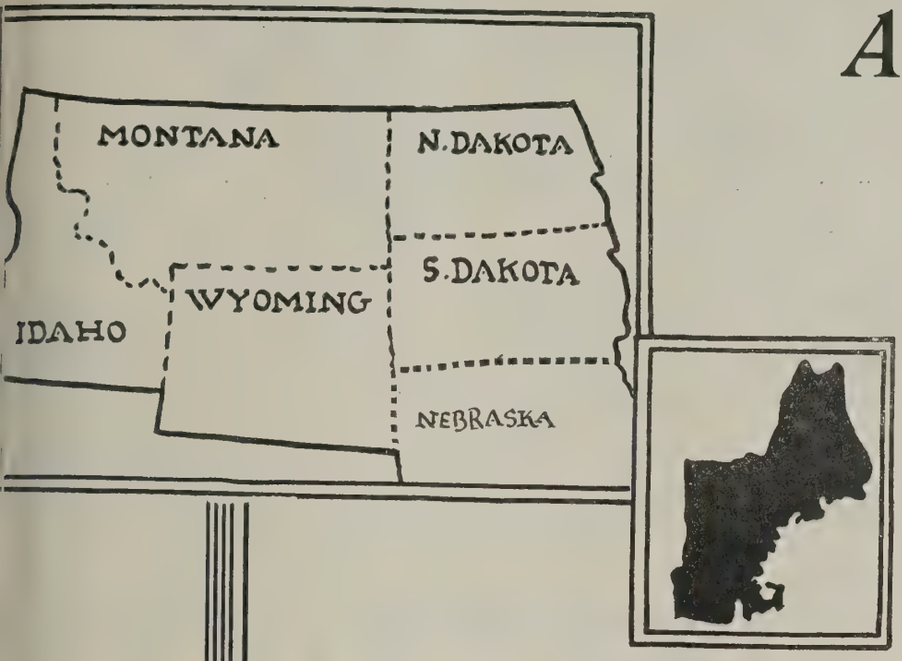
As for crime and sensational news, whether in tabloid or in big paper, it is going to have all the space it needs. The Hall case, the Snyder case, the Browning case were not stinted by big papers or tabloids.

Attached to the Third Alabama Regiment of the Confederate States Army during the Civil War was a chaplain who used to rebuke the soldiers when they stole chickens or a hog. But when he got hungry, he would say solemnly,

"No, boys, I won't eat any of the stolen pig—but I'll take a little of the gravy."

Notably in the Browning story the gravy was almost as thick as the stolen pig—or gander. One of the big papers went the gravy route so strong as to call Peaches Mrs. Browning in the headlines; but, generally speaking, gravy was —GRAVY.

Style, taste; you can depend upon them to determine the issue. Not 500 words. Not 36-point type. Style, taste, will keep out bad stuff.



Big papers that are dull find it out in their circulation books, their advertising books.

Tabloids that lack style, in its true sense, find it out in their circulation books, their advertising books. They learn that the cry of "Woof! Woof!" loses its force.

(a) A fact: See Homicide Bureau records.
(b) A fact: See Highway Commission statistics.

COMPARATIVE NEW ENGLAND

As Your Market —

1—AREA

Look at these two maps, the six New England States and the six Northwestern States. Compare their areas. Suppose you desire to send a salesman to cover the Northwestern market. How long would it take him and how much would it cost you? One salesman can cover the New England States and see more people in one week than 2 salesmen can in the six Northwestern States in a month. Furthermore, in the New England States there are more cities of 100,000 population from New York to Boston than you will find in the whole Northwestern territory.

Which then is your logical market —this compact territory that can be covered quickly and economically, or the great Northwestern area that takes time and money to cover and where the results would only be limited.

If you have a consumable or usable product your first market is the New England States. Here you will find an ideal territory for quick and economical distribution.

If you want to know more about this territory ask these newspapers listed below. They will help you.

CONNECTICUT—Population, 1,380,631

	Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
dgeport Post-Telegram (E&M)	44,370	.15	.15
dgeport Post .....(S)	23,171	.10	.10
rtford Courant .....(M)	36,683	.09	.09
rtford Courant .....(S)	57,795	.13	.13
rtford Times .....(E)	56,077	.13	.13
ddletown Press .....(E)	8,560	.05	.03
w Haven Register..(E&S)	48,507	.145	.135
w London Day.....(E)	12,293	.06	.045
rwich Bulletin .....(M)	12,842	.07	.05
walk Hour .....(E)	6,429	.04	.04
th Norwalk Sentinel..(E)	5,320	.04	.03
nford Advocate .....(E)	10,619	.05	.04
terbury Republican-American (M&E)	25,234	.08	.08
erbury Republican ...(S)	28,180	.08	.08

MAINE—Population, 768,014

land Press-Herald Express, in & Telegram....(M&E)	59,356	.20	.16

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Population, 443,683

ord Monitor-Patriot..(E)	5,773	.0375	.025
ne Sentinel .....(E)	3,980	.036	.023
chester Union Leader (M&E)	32,585	.15	.12

MASSACHUSETTS—Population, 3,852,356

	Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
*Attleboro Sun .....(E)	5,497	.03	.03
††Boston Globe .....(M&E)	286,361	.50	.50
††Boston Globe .....(S)	333,452	.55	.55
††Boston Transcript .....(E)	38,245	.20	.20
Boston Post .....(M)	394,851	.60	.60
Boston Post .....(S)	350,627	.55	.55
Fitchburg Sentinel .....(E)	12,069	.06	.045
*Haverhill Gazette .....(E)	16,061	.065	.05
Lynn Item .....(E)	17,004	.065	.05
††Lowell Courier-Citizen and Evening Leader.....(M&E)	20,621	.07	.07
*New Bedford Standard Mercury .....(M&E)	32,787	.10	.10
*New Bedford Sunday Standard (S)	28,056	.10	.10
North Adams Transcript.(E)	10,427	.05	.04
Pittsfield Eagle .....(E)	18,264	.05	.05
Salem News .....(E)	21,495	.09	.07
Taunton Gazette .....(E)	9,414	.045	.035
Worcester Telegram-Gazette (M&E)	99,207	.28	.25
Worcester Sunday Telegram (S)	52,740	.21	.18

RHODE ISLAND—Population, 604,397

	Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
††Newport Daily News....(E)	6,249	.0336	.0293
Pawtucket Times .....(E)	28,188	.08	.08
Providence Bulletin .....(E)	71,443	.20	(B).27
Providence Journal .....(M)	38,599	.12	(B).27
Providence Journal .....(S)	74,009	.20	.20
*Providence News .....(E)	28,189	.08	.08
*Providence Tribune .... (E)	21,808	.10	.09
Westerly Sun .....(E&S)	5,273	.03	.03
Woonsocket Call .....(E)	14,880	.05	.05

VERMONT—Population, 352,428

Barre Times .....(E)	7,282	.03	.025
††Brattleboro Reformer ...(E)	3,520	.035	.02
Burlington Free Press...(M)	14,265	.05	.05
Rutland Herald .....(M)	11,816	.05	.05
††St. Johnsbury Caledonian-Record .....(E)	4,061	.03	.02

* A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
 A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, March 31, 1927.
† Government Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
†† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.
(B) Combination rate Daily Journal and Eve. Bulletin.

PROMINENT SPEAKERS ON MISSOURI PROGRAM

Bell, Capper, Rose, Becker, Bickel, Wallace, Among Those Who Will Discuss Present Day Journalism Problems

Distinguished leaders in many phases of journalism, authors, statesmen, diplomats, and business men are on the program of the eighteenth annual Journalism Week at the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri.

The program, as announced by Dean Walter Williams, includes Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13.

A partial list of the speakers indicates the character of the program.

The Honorable Vincent Massey, first Minister from the Dominion of Canada to the United States, will speak on "The Press in International Affairs." It will be his first visit to the Middle West.

Among other speakers are: Arthur Capper, United States Senator from Kansas, and noted publisher; Theodore Christianson, Governor of Minnesota; Sam A. Baker, Governor of Missouri; Fannie Hurst (Mrs. Jacques S. Danielson), author, New York City.

D. R. Fitzpatrick, cartoonist, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; John H. Millar, president, Associated Editors, Inc., Chicago; J. C. Penney, chairman of the board of directors of the Penney stores, New York; Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, reporter, Chicago Tribune; Marc A. Rose, general manager, International News Service, New York; Robert W. Jones, associate professor of Journalism, University of Washington, Seattle.

N. D. Becker, president, Intertype Corporation, New York; Tom Wallace, chief of the editorial staff, Louisville (Ky.) Times; Ralph H. Turner, news manager, United News, New York; O. C. Harn, managing director, Audit Bureau of Circulations, Chicago; Karl A. Bickel, president, United Press Associations, New York; John E. Allen, editor, The Linotype News, New York; Elmo Scott Watson, editor, Publishers' Auxiliary, Chicago; Lawrence W. Murphy, assistant professor of Journalism, University of Illinois, Urbana.

C. E. Watkins, editor, Chillicothe (Mo.) Constitution; J. L. Ritzenthaler, editor, Salisbury (Mo.) Press-Spectator; P. T. Grimes, editor, Boonville (Mo.) Central Missourian; Don D. Patterson, advertising department, Curtis Publishing Company, Chicago; Marvin H. Crawford, editor, California (Mo.) Democrat; Mrs. Sidney Robert Stanard, feature writer, St. Louis.

Frank W. Taylor, Jr., managing editor, St. Louis Star; Casper S. Yost, editor, editorial page, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; Gus M. Oehm, agricultural editor, University of Arkansas; Guy Forshey, feature writer, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Col. John H. Carroll, lawyer, Washington, D. C.; John F. D. Aué, president, Iowa Associated Dailies, Burlington, Ia.; James Todd, president, Missouri Associated Dailies, Maryville, Mo.; Mrs. Carrie Rogers Clark, Trenton (Mo.) Republican-Tribune; J. Breckenridge Ellis, president, Missouri Writers' Guild, Plattsburg, Mo.

C. L. Hobart, president, Missouri Press Association, Holden, Mo.; J. S. Hubbard, executive secretary, Missouri Press Association, Columbia, Mo.; Herbert W. Walker, editor, NEA Service, Inc., Cleveland; Col. Charles L. Woods, editor, Rolla (Mo.) Herald; B. E. Woolsey, editor, Ash Grove (Mo.) Commonwealth; Mrs. Alice Moss Ferris, Laddonia (Mo.) Herald.

Which Department of Your Newspaper Needs Strengthening?

☐—Financial ☐—Management ☐—Production
☐—Editorial
☐—Advertising
☐—Circulation

Consult us in confidence.

PUBLISHERS' COUNSELLORS

55 W. 42d Street
New York

FUND FOR MORNING PAPERS

Twenty-three States Represented at Meeting on Ad Campaign

An appropriation will be raised shortly to continue the advertising campaign which has been conducted for some time by the Morning Newspaper Publishers Association, it was announced this week following the annual meeting held at the Waldorf.

Twenty-three states were represented among the delegates attending. A. Schaefer, Fort Wayne (Ind.) Journal-Gazette, was re-elected president. Other officers re-elected were E. J. Treffinger, Richmond (Ind.) Item, secretary-treasurer and W. J. McConnell, Springfield (Ill.) State Journal, vice-president.

ADVERTISERS DINED BY "100,000 GROUP"

President Strong and L. M. Barton Describe for Space-Buyers Their Methods in Big City Market Survey

How the "100,000 Group of Newspapers" was organized and what it is doing to serve advertisers was told this week Thursday at a luncheon given to prominent advertising agency executives and national advertisers in the roof garden restaurant of the Waldorf-Astoria.

Walter A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and president of the group was the opening speaker. He reviewed the book published by the group which furnishes advertisers with a wealth of statistical information on the markets of 93 cities with populations of 100,000 or over, and the circulations of the leading newspapers in those cities. Mr. Strong was introduced by Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times.

Mr. Strong read imposing figures from the book, showing the aggregate circulations of the 93 newspapers, and the rate for agate line. He also spoke briefly of the other information included in th book.

L. M. Barton, also of the Chicag Daily News, who is secretary and treas urer of the group, went into more de tail. Photostatic enlargements of speci men pages from the book were range along one wall of the room, and th speaker explained how the informatio collected could be used by advertisers.

Mr. Barton told those attending tha it had cost the group more than $150, 000 to obtain the material publishe therein.

"We do not consider ourselves a authorities," Mr. Barton declared. "Non of the material in the book was gathere by the newspapers co-operating in it publication. Outside authorities wer consulted in every case."

Government census figures are used and the director of the census performe special work for the group, collecting new population statistics that were not avail able before. A special business censu was obtained from other sources, and according to Mr. Barton, no expense wa spared in connection with the book.

Mr. Strong in his address said the ide of the group originated three years ago when the leaders realized that news papers were failing to recognize it wa to their mutual interest to sell adver tising as a group.

Just Published

THE SWORD-ARM OF BUSINESS

By

THEODORE F. MacMANUS

(of Detroit)

"Give me a pencil and a writing pad, and I can make a business . . . . "

DURING the past twenty years the art of advertising has grown to a stature of dominance in American and world commerce.

Various schools of advertising have arisen—some have succeeded—some have failed.

But there is one method—subtle, persistent, which, amid the tumult of trade, has been noiselessly and insistently effective, carving out success with clear sword-blade strokes for the products to which it has been applied.

The master of that method is Theodore F. MacManus, of Detroit. His record as an advertising counsel is unsurpassed. His triumphs are household words, although up to this time the public may not have been aware of the man or the method that put those words in their households. In this book Mr. MacManus for the first time gives general publication to the story of his outstanding advertising achievements and to the unfailing method that is the secret of his success.

The Sword-Arm of Business ready today, Thursday, (too late for general distribution). Publication date advanced in deference to The Associated Press and American Newspaper Publishers Convention. Your Bookstore will have it, will get it, or the Publishers will deliver to any address in the world. Phone CALedonia 5115.

Price, $2.50 net and Postpaid. At Bookstores or

The Devin-Adair Company, Publishers, 23 and 25 East 26th Street, N. Y.

The Charles Partlowe Company and Partlowe Plan Campaigns hold every known record for CIRCULATION-BUILDING

population of fields considered + + + +

Year after year, Partlowe results are almost unbelievable to publishers not familiar with Partlowe service +

And yet—as soon as every Partlowe Plan Campaign is completed, the actual, accurate results are sworn to in an affidavit by the publisher himself + + +

No misrepresentations, no claims, no fictitious statements of business secured—affidavits.

These affidavits prove conclusively that Partlowe Plan Campaigns are literally and genuinely breaking all records in the securing of quick, permanent, paid-in-advance, new circulation + + + + + + + + + +

Contracts for Partlowe Plan Campaigns are being filled as rapidly as possible in the order in which they are booked. To insure Partlowe service soon, it will be advisable to book your field NOW.

WRITE OR WIRE FOR TERMS, OPEN DATES, ETC.

The Charles Partlowe Co.

Sixth Floor, Occidental Bldg.

"Clean Circulation Campaigns"

Indianapolis, Indiana,

Note:—The Charles Partlowe Company is the only circulation-building organization in Newspaperdom to be honored by a membership in the Better Business Bureau!!

SPACE BUYERS "WRITE ME A LETTER" REQUEST IS OFTEN JUSTIFIED

Salesmen Should Be Prepared When Asked to Submit Written Data—Practice Eliminates Useless Conversation, Says Writer

By A. J. SLOMANSON

IS the average space-buyer sincere when he asks the space salesman to "write me a letter about it," or is it merely an excuse to cut the conversation short? In most cases it is the latter. However, an analysis will show that there are many reasons why the space-buyer should have all the facts about a newspaper in writing, and also reasons why newspaper salesmen feel that they should not be burdened with such copious correspondence.

The reasons why space-buyers should have written data are many. First, they cannot remember all facts about a newspaper since two or three salesmen in the same city may be competing for the business. The space-buyer could never remember linage comparisons, therefore this information would have to be in writing. An analysis of editorial content could never be remembered by the space-buyer, especially when he has so many papers of other cities to study, and this information would have to be in writing in order to have the paper in question given every consideration.

The most important reason why typewritten presentations are in demand is because the space-buyers are not always the deciding factors in buying space. In most cases the advertiser, account executive, or agency head must be sold on the merits of the newspaper, and the space-buyer, who could not memorize all the facts so as to verbally explain them to the beforementioned persons, gives his reasons for the selection in writing. He must show them accurate figures and comparisons, therefore must have the information in writing in order to do so.

Another reason written data is wanted concerns the space-buyer's time. At least a dozen salesmen have to be interviewed each day, and since there are schedules to compile, correspondence to answer, and a raft of other routine work to handle, his time is naturally limited.

Too many salesmen approach the space-buyer with the idea in mind that they are the only ones to be interviewed that day and do not know how to limit their solicitation to a reasonable time. This is when the space-buyer usually becomes impatient and asks for the facts in writing. The salesmen think that the space-buyer and they are a homogeneous pair, and no one else counts. They are like "We and They" in Kipling's poem:

All good people agree,
And all good people say,
All nice people, like us, are we,
And every one else is they.

They like their friends for tea,
We like our friends to stay,
And, after all that, They look upon us
As an utterly ignorant they.

There are many reasons, too, why salesmen are reluctant to write the facts instead of telling them verbally. They think that it is an easy way of getting rid of them, and not wanting to lose the business, hesitate to jeopardize their personal relations with the space-buyer by persisting in wanting to talk with him. They feel that it robs them of an opportunity to use their best judgment in presenting their solicitation in a way that may provoke objections on the part of the space-buyer during a brief conversation, and which objections might be presented in the true light when the salesmen know what prejudice the space-buyer has in mind.

It is a difficult matter for the space-buyer to tell a salesman that his paper cannot be considered on a certain campaign, yet in lieu of making this salesman write a copious letter that would not be read is a gross unfairness. The space-buyer should in cases like this have the courage of his convictions by insisting that he is not interested in the publication and give his reasons.

This is a problem that should be weighed in every space salesman's mind as it represents an important part in his constant solicitations. One panacea would be to carry duplicate copies of facts about his paper in his sales manual, and whenever the space buyer mentioned the inevitable "write me a letter about it," he could reply, "What do you want to know, I have it with me now," and this could lead into the midst of the conversation and prevent loss of time on the salesman's part by waiting until he made his other calls and returned to the office too exhausted to do any constructive letter writing to the space buyer, thus putting it off, as is frequently done.

These duplicate copies could contain the following information:

Detailed advertising linage comparisons.

Figurative comparisons of editorial content according to columns of his and competitive papers in the same city, in order that the space-buyer could judge the character of circulations without having to look through all the newspapers.

Facts about the market, showing number of retailers, industrial analysis of population, and dealer surveys, etc.

With such information on hand the space-salesman could readily put a stop to the most vexing statement made by the space-buyers, and instead of being told to write a letter, they are fortified with such ammunition that compels the space-buyer to listen to the salesman's story, or if too busy, makes a definite appointment to hear it at another set time. Such data on hand lends inspiration and force to a salesman, and if he represents the better paper, or feels confident that his paper should be given serious consideration by the space-buyer, then he is armored to fight for the business. Every space-buyer admires a fighter, providing the salesman is courteous, patient and tactful in his attempt to get the business.

PARK NAMED FOR REPORTER

William T. DeWolfe of Toledo Blade Honored for Civic Improvement Work

Welfare Director Sylvanus P. Jermain of Toledo, known as "the father of free municipal golf in America," has named a city triangle which adjoins the new Toledo Blade building and the Toledo Times building, "DeWolfe Place," in honor of a newspaper reporter, William T. DeWolfe, a member of the Toledo Blade staff.

Twenty-six years ago DeWolfe was assigned to the city hall beat by the editor of the Toledo Bee. Jermain was a member of the park board, and the development of Toledo's park and boulevard system had just begun. DeWolfe's interest in the city welfare, begun in 1901, has been continuous since. He is now city hall reporter for the Blade.

Both Jermain and DeWolfe have worked for the upbuilding of the park system through the years and the welfare director, now in his first paying city job, has named the triangle in the reporter's honor, as a token of appreciation.

"I wish it were a hundred acres," Jermain says. "I believe in the sentiment expressed in 'flowers for the living.' There are other newspaper men in Toledo who are deserving of similar recognition. It is my intention that they shall have it, if I live."

The plot, which runs for a block alongside the new Blade structure, has been planted with trees and shrubbery in keeping with its location.

The People's Paper
NAL EDITION
FORTY-FOUR PAGES

Youngstown Vindicator

The Vindicator is the Only Paper in Youngstown Receiving the Dispatches of the Associated Press

THE WEATHER
Ohio weather forecast: In cloudiness and warmer tonight day, showers and warmer; colde day night.

XXVIII. NO. 203. YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, FRIDAY, MARCH 25, 1927 PRICE THREE

ELA
ON STATE
NCE PLAN e in Gas Tax, H
t Levy Are Ap-
In Caucuses
CRAP OF PAPER
ing Measures, S t Bound to Sup-rt Them KIN
IG GUN
ING RE
Already Co
dmiral Repo ESCAPE TO Previously Had ld Boom Today

LINOTYPE IONIC No. 5

GREATER LEGIBILITY—GREATER WORD COUNT
USED BY OVER 150 NEWSPAPERS STEREOTYPES PERFECTLY

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Mergenthaler Linotype Company
BROOKLYN, NEW YORK
SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS
CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO
Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

Linotyped in Cloister and Narciss except hand set title line

Clashes with European soldiers, rioting, looting, and slaughter marked the fall of Shanghai, principal port of China, into the hands of Cantonese troops. While the Cantonese troops were for the most part poorly clad and equipped, there were many of the type shown in the upper photograph. Men of all ages were in the ranks, including such boys as the young color bearer shown at the left. The lower photograph shows a barricade thrown up before

Among them was a Miss Moffatt, who had [illegible] through the body, (Anna E. Moffat, of Fort Sheri among the workers at the Nanking station of the missionary workers).

The decision to postpone the drastic action dec

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

RATE CARD IN EFFECT MAY 1, 1927

1. GENERAL ADVERTISING

a. b. c.

Transient rate 75c per agate line (minimum 14 lines—1 in.).	Agate Lines	Single Insertion	6 insertions within year per insertion	12 insertions within year per insertion	26 insertions within year per insertion	52 insertions within year per insertion
Full page	672	$250.00	$225.00	$200.00	$190.00	$168.00
Half page	336	140.00	120.00	110.00	100.00	95.00
Quarter page	168	75.00	70.00*	65.00*	60.00*	55.00
Eighth page	84	50.00	45.00*	40.00*	33.00*	30.00
Sixteenth page	42	30.00	25.00*	20.00*	17.00*	16.00

All 52 consecutive-insertion contracts (see last column above) are based on consecutive insertions within the year. Extra space is charged at the 52-insertion rate but contract is credited for one insertion only.

Half pages and full pages on 6, 12 and 26-time contracts may be used at the option of the advertiser within the twelve-month period. *Quarter, eighth and sixteenth pages must be on definite copy schedule.

Contract advertisers are accorded the privilege of same insertion rate for larger space. For example: an advertiser under contract for twenty-six (26) quarter-pages at $60 per insertion is accorded the privilege of half page at $100 and full page at $190, but such advertisement is to be credited on contract as but one insertion of contract space.

d. PREFERRED POSITIONS—On application.

e. Minimum size of advertisements, 14 agate lines on one column. All advertisements must be at least as many inches deep as they are columns wide.

f. All rebates earned by advertisers using more than contracted space within life of contract, are paid in advertising space to be used within one month after expiration of contract.
No contracts are accepted for a period of more than 12 months.
No contract will be pre-dated and no rebate will be allowed on transient advertising used prior to singing of contract.

g. Advertisers may discontinue contracts upon written notice of fifteen days and payment shall be made for space used at rate earned by number of insertions covering said space.

h. The rates on this card are subject to change without notice. THE EDITOR & PUBLISHER COMPANY reserves the right to refuse any advertisements and to cancel advertising contracts for reasons satisfactory to the management.

i. All rates quoted on this card apply to advertising in main section of regular editions only. Rates for advertising in any supplements or special editions will be at publishers' option. Whenever regular card rates are allowed for advertising in a supplement contract advertisers can transfer their space from main section to supplement section only through special arrangement with EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

2. CLASSIFICATIONS

a. All rates and terms on first page of this card apply to all classes of display advertising.

b. Classified Advertising: Situations Wanted, 1 time—.40 per line; 2 times—.35 per line; 3 times—.30 per line. All other classifications, 1 time—.60 per line; 4 times—.55 per line.

c. All advertisements inserted on a strictly cash basis, except on orders from contract advertisers.

d. Special rates quoted for 13, 26 and 52 insertions.

e. White space charged at same rate per line per insertion as earned by frequency of insertion.

3. READING NOTICES—(None)

4. COMMISSIONS AND CASH DISCOUNT

a. Agency Commission—15%.

b. Two (2) per cent. cash discount allowed on current advertising bills paid on or before the tenth (10th), provided all previous bills are paid.

c. All accounts payable net 30 days and subject to sight draft immediately thereafter.

5. MECHANICAL REQUIREMENTS

a. Column width, 13 ems. b. Column depth, 168 lines. c. Columns to page, 4. d. Size of type page 9 x 12 in.

e. Center spread 12 inches deep x 19 inches wide. Half pages either 12 in. x 2 col., 6 in. x 4 col. or 8 in. x 3 col. Quarter pages 12 in. x 1 col. or 6 in. x 2 col.

f. Forms close Thursday, week of issue. Advertisements must be in office by Wednesday P. M. for current week's issue. Corrections on advertisements may be made up to Thursday noon.

g. All cuts should accompany copy. h. Half-tones should be 120 screen. Can use originals, electros or mats.

i. Engravings, electrotypes, etc., are made at the expense of the advertiser and are not subject to cash discount. Advertising copy will be prepared by the service department of EDITOR & PUBLISHER at an additional charge of 10%. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will not be responsible for errors in advertisements, due to failure to return proof in time to make corrections.
Failure to furnish new copy on definite insertion contracts will compel use of previous advertisement.

6. CIRCULATION

a. Member of A. B. C.

b. Publishing date—Saturday of each week.

c. Subscription Rates—Domestic, $4,00; Canada, $4.50; Foreign, $5.00.

d. Devoted to Journalism and Advertising—"The Newspaper Advocate."—Specializing in the "Spot News" of the publishing and advertising business.

e. Circulates among Newspaper Executives, National Advertisers and Executives controlling accounts in the Advertising Agencies, throughout the country.

f. A. B. C. Publisher's Statement: Period Ending Dec. 31, 1926—8015.

J. W. BROWN, Publisher. Branch Offices: C. B. GROOMES, Advertising Director.
St. Louis: Roy M. Edmonds, 1332 Syndicate Trust Bldg. Paris: G. Langelaan, 34, rue Thiers, Boulogne-sur-Seine (Seine).
Chicago: L. B. Gilmore, 30 North Dearborn Street.
London, England: The Advertising World, 14 King Street, Covent Garden W. C. 2. Tokyo: Ralph Nicholson, Japan Advertiser.
Toronto: W. A. Craick, 60 Lympstone Ave., Lawrence Park.

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

By ROBERT S. WAITE

Seymour Ransom

SEYMOUR RANSOM, associate editor of the Beaumont (Tex.) Journal, on April 7 joined the Birmingham News as associate editor, succeeding the late Garrard Harris.

Mr. Ransom has had a long and varied experience in newspaper work, dating back to the late nineties, when he served his apprenticeship on the old New York Herald.

He was educated at Amherst College, where he received his bachelor's degree in 1892 and his master's degree three years later. He was a senior at Amherst when President Coolidge and Dwight W. Morrow, of the firm of Morgan, were freshmen. Mr. Ransom entered newspaper work at the suggestion of Dr. Talcott Williams of the old Philadelphia Press and the late Herbert L. Bridgeman of the Brooklyn Standard-Union.

After working in New York on the Herald and on the Times, Ransom went to Philadelphia to the Record when "Ted" Wright was editor and William M. Singerly was publisher.

In 1900 he became a member of the old New Orleans Times-Democrat staff where he soon advanced to leading editorial writer. In 1904 he returned to Philadelphia as literary editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger with L. Clarke Davis as his chief. One year later he became associated with Ed Barrett, publisher of the Birmingham Age-Herald. When his health failed in 1906, he went west with incipient tuberculosis.

As R. M. Johnston's political "eyes-and-ears" on the old Houston Post, now the Post-Dispatch, he came to know public men in Texas intimately. In 1907, when things began to look squally for President Diaz in Mexico, Mr. Ransom went into Mexico, first under "Joe" Robertson of the Monterey News and later —his objective—as "eyes-and-ears" man for Paul Hudson and Frederick Guernsey of the Mexican Herald. In 1907, he wrote a confidential report predicting the certainty of the Mexican revolution that broke out under Francisco Madero in 1911. For three years, he "loafed in the sun" in New Mexico and Arizona, until the doctors told him he had only six weeks to live. "Packing up his troubles in an old kit bag," he made for Denver where the air above timber-line brought him back to health. Then he went back to Mexico—in the revolution as war correspondent for the Los Angeles Times and the New York World. Of all newspaper publishers, he says, the late Harrison Gray Otis of the Los Angeles Times was excelled by none in knowing exactly what he wanted and in going after it in forthright fashion.

On the border, Mr. Ransom was the confidential agent of General Hugh L. Scott, chief of staff, and the trusted friend of General Funston, Pershing and George Bell, Junior. When the war broke out, he was recommended by General Scott for work in Mexico, but as his alignment with the Villa faction in the revolution made him "persona non grata" to Carranza, he was despatched to South America under a commission from the Department of State. Once more he engaged in his old "eyes-and-ears" work, this time being delegated to watch the enemy, and particularly the plan to form a Latin-American alliance in favor of Germany.

His work acquainted him with Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Peru and Panama. Returning home, he went to Texas in the hope of "looking once more over the fence into his life-time El Dorado, Mexico." His uncle, the late General Matt W. Ransom of North Carolina, had been Minister to Mexico in the second Cleveland administration. Archie Butt, one of Mr. Ransom's friends, began his career as secretary to the American legation when General Ransom was minister.

In May, 1921, Mr. Ransom became associate editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal under Judge Robert W. Bingham as publisher and Harrison Robertson as chief of editorial staff. For five years there his work on national and international politics attracted attention, particularly his articles respecting Mexico and Latin America. Late in 1926, he returned to Birmingham as associate editor of the Age-Herald under the Thompson management, but retired three months later. Returning to Texas, he renewed his association with Governor Hobby, now owner of the Beaumont Enterprise and Beaumont Journal and president of the Houston Post-Dispatch, who had been his managing editor on the old Houston Post under the R. M. Johnson regime.

EIGHT REASONS FOR UTILITY ADVERTISING

Blanchard Presents List in Speech Before League of Advertising Women—Should Keep Public Informed

Eight reasons why a public utility company should advertise were enumerated last week by Frank Leroy Blanchard, president of the Public Utilities Advertising Association, and director of the advertising and news bureau of the Henry L. Doherty Company. He was addressing the dinner of the League of Advertising Women, New York, on April 19.

The list follows:

1. To sell the securities and the service the company is prepared to furnish.
2. To keep the stockholders or customers informed regarding its affairs and thus promote their interest in it.
3. To tell the general public about the company itself—its policies, its methods of doing business, its personnel and its plans for future development.
4. To defend itself when unjustly attacked, and especially by politicians who hope to promote their own interests.
5. To oppose state or municipal legislation that would hamper the physical operations of the company or impose financial obligations that would cripple its business.
6. To promote public good will by encouraging thrift, advocating measures to increase public safety, participating in movements to make the city a better place in which to live.
7. To present its reasons for applying to the state utility commission for permission to increase its rates or to issue bonds or other securities.
8. To set forth arguments for the renewal of its franchise.

COAST PAPERS MERGED

The Bellflower (Cal.) Enterprise, owned by James Hammond, has been sold to the owners of the Bellflower Herald, of which Joe Williams is editor. The two papers will be merged.

JASON ROGERS NEW GENERAL MANAGER OF KANSAS CITY JOURNAL-POST

Former New York Publisher Will Take New Post May 2—Has Written Several Books on Newspaper Publishing

EFFECTIVE May 2, Jason Rogers, of New York City, will become general manager of the Kansas City Post and the Kansas City Journal, owned by Walter S. Dickey. Announcement of Mr. Rogers' connection with the Journal-Post was made in last Sunday's issue of the paper.

JASON ROGERS

The announcement included this statement from Mr. Rogers:

"It is with great pleasure that I have decided to change my place of residence from New York to Kansas City and undertake the general management of Mr. Dickey's newspapers.

"During frequent visits to Kansas City, extending over 40 years, I have watched its growth and progress and from now on will do my utmost to help fulfill Mr. Dickey's ambition to serve the community.

"Kansas City is big enough and rich enough to be well served by two newspapers. Wholesome competition between them will be healthful and guarantee best service on the fairest basis.

"From Monday, May 2, 1927, my headquarters will be in the Journal-Post building. I shall always be willing and glad to aid every sound movement for the best interest of Kansas City and its territory.

"We shall endeavor to make the Journal, the Post and the Sunday Journal-Post take top rank among the great newspapers of the United States and in doing so we hope to merit the support of decent, law-abiding citizens."

Mr. Rogers has spent more than 40 years in all departments of newspaper making and his work has taken him into every nook and corner of the nation. For many years he was an intimate friend of the late Col. William R. Nelson, of the Kansas City Star, and in his books and other writings has paid frequent tribute to the genius, courage and work of the Colonel.

Born Aug. 5, 1868, in a Westchester county village, now a part of New York City, Jason Rogers at the age of 11 entered the employ of his grandfather, who owned and published the New York Sunday Mercury. He remained with this publication until 1894.

From 1895 to 1899, he traveled in all parts of the country, studying newspaper methods and occupying positions with the Providence (R. I.) News, the New York Sun, the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the Chicago Journal and other publications. In 1899 he joined the New York Commercial Advertiser as assistant publisher, later becoming publisher. This paper was renamed the Globe and Commercial Advertiser in 1904 and won recognition for its independence and dependability. In 1923 the Globe was purchased by Frank Munsey for consolidation with the New York Sun.

In 1921 Mr. Rogers organized the United Newspapers, composed of more than 800 dailies to stimulate interest in advertising. This organization later became an important element in the creation of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

From 1911 to 1913 he worked out a plan of verifying newspaper circulations and helped to organize the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

In addition to his routine duties, Mr. Rogers has found time to write four books which are recognized as authoritative throughout the newspaper world. They are: Newspaper Building, Building Newspaper Advertising, Fundamentals of Newspaper Building and Newspaper Making.

In 1924 Mr. Rogers started the Advertisers' Weekly, a trade paper dedicated to the service of advertisers and publishers. He also has been acting as counselor for publishers of large dailies and writing additional books on newspaper and advertising business.

FILM FIRM TO DEBUNK ITS PUBLICITY

Nothing but Straight News to Emanate from Offices of United Artists Corporation, Nolan Declares

United Artists Corporation, according to Warren Nolan of its press department, has decided to stop sending out "publicity slop."

Announcement of the change was made recently in a notice sent out to newspapers, which reads as follows:

"A year's investigation among editors has just been concluded. United Artists Corporation now announces crystallization of its policy on all news stories. Twelve rules, inspired by answers to inquiries and by a recent editorial in EDITOR & PUBLISHER in which the functions of a press department were listed, center on the basic thought that each story stands on its own feet as a piece of news interesting to film audiences who comprise sections of readerships.

"United Artists' news stories, then, will be characterized by the following innovations in motion picture publicity:

"1. No superlative adjectives.

"2. No editorializing in news stories.

"3. No news occurring, no stories will be issued.

"4. No exclusives. Only Sunday feature stories will be exclusive. If an editor gets a story and telephones for verification, his confidence will not be violated.

"5. No personal publicity. Each star has a representative.

"6. No statement made without authority cited.

"7. No story released until official, with contracts actually signed.

"8. No editor is asked to run any story as a personal favor.

"9. No advertising will be withdrawn because of sincere viewpoints in criticisms.

"10. No expense account for entertainment.

"11. No editor who violates a release date will receive any news thereafter.

"12. No previews in projection rooms, without music, will be given any reviewers on United Artists Pictures."

Mr. Nolan, who informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER of the change is in charge of the publicity division of United Artists' Advertising & Publicity Division, of which Victor M. Shapiro is director. Mr. Nolan was formerly associated with the New York Times and the New York Telegram. Mr. Shapiro was on the staff of the Detroit Journal before he entered the motion picture industry in 1914 with the old Vitagraph Company.

ROXY HOST TO A. P. CHIEFS

Members of the board of directors and executives of the Associated Press were guests of S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) at a dinner in his apartment in the Roxy Theatre building on April 21. The guests inspected the theatre and saw the performance.

By MARLEN PEW

SOME weeks ago Hans disappeared as if the dog devil had scooped him up and tossed his hulking frame into oblivion. To lose him would be a severe blow, for he had been a faithful pal at the Buttonwoods since puppyhood, honest, humorous, well mannered and loving. It was incredible that he would not be speedily found, we thought. He was of the Harlequin variety of the Great Dane family, with a white design, almost as crazy as war-time ship camouflage, on a background of greenish brown. He was a very unusual looking animal. Probably there are not a dozen like Hans in the United States. His muzzle was huge, eyes ferociously streaked with fiery red, he wore a conspicuous collar and license tag and always kindly answered to the Dutch name he had acquired from honorable forebears. We advertised in all newspapers that circulate in our community and during the day, often far into the night, scoured the countryside for clews, inquiring of all we met on the roads. A fact that began to be interesting to the searching party was how amazingly Hans must have jumped from place to place if the eye-witness testimony of farmers, tenders of roadside gas-stations, inn-keepers and others could be believed. Perhaps one out of three persons interviewed, after carefully scanning Hans' photograph, would scratch pate and then exclaim, "Yes sir, I did see that dog around here early this morning, or late last night. Big fellow, wasn't he? Weighed 150 pounds or more? White streaks on his sides? Wore a collar and a heavy leather muzzle, just like in the picture?" With variations this was the hopeful testimony. We began to notice that the descriptions of Hans were perfect after we had exhibited his picture, but very imperfect when no picture was shown. When two or even three persons got to telling us that they had seen the dog at widely separated places at exactly the same hour we began to entertain doubts. However, it seemed mean to question people who could have no motive to deceive us, but showed only a kindly disposition to aid us to recover the pet. It was exasperating, the children thought, always to be just one leap behind.

* * *

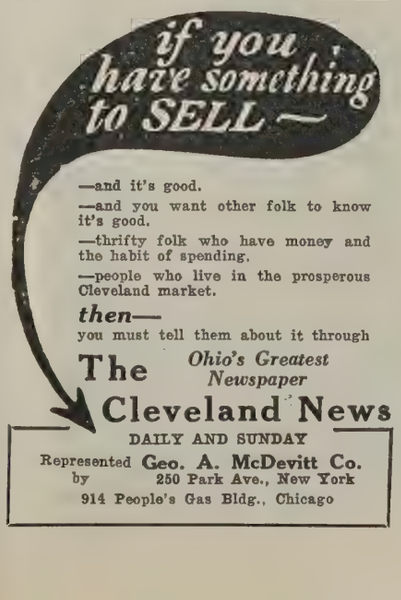
HANS was well known and liked in our town. During the great snow storm two years ago, when the flivvers could not get through to the station, Hans and the boys had hauled the mail sacks on a sled to the post-office and that service made many friends for the Dane among the railroad men. So as the word of his loss spread the searching party grew in size and influence and all day long the telephone buzzed with valuable tips. At almost any hour of the day or night some one would report having seen the animal at some place at some specified time. Away we would dash to find another man or woman with a perfect description, if the photograph were shown. The search went on for two weeks, over sections of two counties. Then, one morning, a hunter came out of the brush on the hill, five minutes walk from the Buttonwoods, with the sad information that Hans was dead on the frozen earth up there. The remains were in such condition that the cause of the big brute's demise could not be ascertained. He had been killed, perhaps by some hunter thirsting for the blood of a defenseless animal, only a few hours after he had been missed from home. The dozens of supposedly responsible men and women who had been so sure they had seen the dog in the flesh had been mistaken. No one but his slaughterer had seen him.

YEARS ago a news tipster came to our office on Park Row and related a story about an old German doctor, living in Brooklyn, whom he had reason to suspect had played a part in a ghastly, unsolved murder. The victim was a woman, living in West Philadelphia. Her husband had come home at night and had found their little daughter's dress covered with blood, yet unhurt. The man searched the house for his wife. A red stream came from under a closet door. There the woman's body was found, the brain pierced from the ear by a long sharp instrument. The child had sat on the floor near the door all the afternoon. She was too immature to tell the story of what had happened. For several months the Philadelphia police had investigated the crime without finding a clew. Our tipster said he lived in the doctor's neighborhood and believed him to be an illegal practitioner. He had disappeared from home around the time the Philadelphia woman was killed and was still missing. He had once lived in Philadelphia and was said to have had patients there. The circumstances seemed remote, but we looked into them.

* * *

THE doctor's wife, whom he had married only a few weeks before, of middle age and wide girth, was glad to discuss him and his affairs. She was bitter, not at his loss, but at the loss of several thousand dollars in savings trusted to his custody. She knew little of the man who had seized her heart and bank account. She was looking for information. Presently she volunteered that he had a trunk upstairs which was locked. She wondered what was in it. With her kind permission the reporter applied an ice-pick where it would do the most good. There were bundles of letters, many from women scattered around the east, telling of their illness and confirming the tipster's suspicions as to the character of the doctor's trade. The correspondence indicated that the doctor had once practiced in Pittsburgh. There were several photographs of women, common types and all young. There were several vile pornographic pictures. A variety of surgical instruments, most of them broken, and many bottles of medicine completed the interesting contents of the trunk. We borrowed a snap-shot of the doctor and set out for further adventures.

* * *



THE only persons the reporter could find in the neighborhood who could boast acquaintance with the doctor were a man and woman who ran a cigar store on the corner. When had they last seen him? Why, just as they were opening shop on a morning some months ago he had come in and bought cigars; he didn't pay and the woman had noted the purchase in an account book. Written there was the date the Philadelphia woman had been killed, plus "three Owl cigars." The woman also remembered that he had said he was going away on a short trip. The train time between New York and Philadelphia is two hours.

* * *

HASTENING to West Philadelphia the reporter went directly to the house where the woman's murdered body had been found. Across the street there was a tobacco store, where three men were engaged rolling cigars. The reporter asked them if they knew a Doctor Blank. No! Flashing the photograph the reporter asked if they had ever seen that person. All looked intently at the picture. One said, "Yes, he has been in here." The others were equally sure. How long ago? Oh, they had not seen him in months. Could they fix the time? Suddenly one of the group, in positive terms, said: "Why, he came in here the very day Mrs. Soandso was killed. It was about noon. He bought a couple of Owl cigars and was very fussy about them, wanting me to put them in paper containers so they wouldn't get broken. He showed me a cigar that had broken in his pocket. He was an ugly old man. I remember him well." The others remembered the incident, they said.

* * *

NO member of the murdered woman's family, interviewed at the house, could identify the picture or knew the doctor by name. Yes, the deceased had lived in Pittsburgh before her marriage. So far as known she had never been treated by an old German doctor there. They knew of no trouble in her life. Prior to her death she had been in good health, so far as was known. A woman in a neighboring house was interviewed. She believed she had seen the man imaged by the photograph walking on the street, but her identification was faint. The reporter then began a systematic canvass of the Philadelphia surgical instrument houses, showing the photograph to at least a dozen people. Most of these "believed" they had seen the

The Baltimore News

has the largest circulation of any evening newspaper in the entire South 137,022

Baltimore looks to THE NEWS for the news.

A paper in the suburban area of a big city:—

And yet—in all the cities in the United States of the same population, there were only six newspapers which carried more national advertising last year.

A strong newspaper and the constant selling of it, have made this record possible.

Howland and Howland

Newspaper Representatives
New York Chicago Phila.

"Fair dealing begets good feeling"

CLIP HERE

Howland and Howland
New York Office,
393 Seventh Avenue
(Equitable Life Building.
Opposite Penn. Station)

Gentlemen:

It is understood that neither of us commit ourselves in any way. We realize that you are interested in representing only a limited number of papers.

But please tell us what you think our possibilities are for more revenue from national advertising.

Name .....

Address .....

man, but none could name him. Finally, an aged and responsible manager of such a store declared he had known the person in the picture, under another name, and that he was a criminal practitioner, once in league with a Philadelphia woman who had been arrested for scandalous crimes associated with a "baby farm." The woman was then in prison. The scent seemed hot.

* * *

THE reporter learned, during his investigation, that the Philadelphia Superintendent of Police and the County Coroner were engaged in a quarrel based upon envy of official prerogatives. The Coroner had rather outshone the police in detecting criminals. This situation seemed made to order, and it was no trick to engage the interest of the Coroner in our investigation. He readily agreed to put professional detectives on the clews and give the reporter the "beat," should an arrest be made. With two very able county sleuths the reporter then worked for days on end. Two trips were made to Brooklyn. No actual trace of the doctor was found and all the evidence was hazy, but many people were located who could identify the picture as someone they had known or seen and the detectives became convinced that the doctor was a criminal practitioner who had operated in Philadelphia, was there on the day of the crime, and probably had visited the murdered woman's home. Nothing came of the "baby farm" tip. At that point the investigation stuck. Three weeks later a man walked into Philadelphia police headquarters and asked to be locked up. He confessed the murder and was seeking that mysterious surcease from sleepless worry that follows confession of awful guilt. He was not the old doctor, of course, and all who had so positively identified the doctor from the picture were mistaken. He had nothing to do with the crime. He returned to Brooklyn in due time and had only been visiting friends in Germany.

* * *

SOME 15 witnesses in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, now attracting the attention of the civilized world because of the widespread and reasonable belief that these men are innocent of the crime for which they have been doomed, testified to positive identifications of them as the murderers in the now notorious South Braintree hold-up. But the evidence is that the desperadoes who shot the shoe-factory paymaster and his assistant were so skilled at their trade that they did the shooting and got away with $15,000 in automobiles in less than a minute and a half. People who were long distances away, such as half a block, swore that these two men on trial for their lives were the men who did that shooting. How could they be so positive?

* * *

WHAT presumably responsible people, men equal to women, will daringly say when questioned for eye-witness experience, particularly when the circumstances are interesting or intrigue curiosity, is one of the strangest phases of psychology known to experienced lawyers and newspaper men. The people who identified Hans were not mere glib liars. Those who identified the German doctor had no motive to do so other than to help the person seeking information, presumably for a good cause. Witnesses who appear in courts all over the land every day and testify in positive terms to conditions which are later entirely controverted, cannot be explained away as mere irresponsible perjurers. The witnesses in the Massachusetts case may have told the truth, but conditions described by some of them seem unreasonable. One of the commonest news stories in this day concerns tragic results directly traceable to falsehoods uttered by disinterested people who seem wholly sincere, positive and public spirited. What is this mental freak?

* * *

PERHAPS it can be explained by psychological elements which we must in candor recognize lie in every one of us. First, there is a certain delight in positive assertion. We prefer to say "yes," rather than "no." This suggests knowledge, insight, percipience, qualities which flatter intelligence. To say "no" is to appear dull and inactive. A second factor is stubborn resistance to admission that we might have been mistaken when we first hastily said "yes." Thus, when a type of individual has set out upon a positive course it is well-nigh impossible to reverse the order. The third element in this phenomenon is, we think, the common human desire to gain importance in a situation which attracts the attention of others. We are actors all and love to strut. There are business men who live parts as if on the stage and do almost everything for dramatic effect. They even talk like actors. The opportunity to act does not often come to the majority of people who lead dull routine lives. The yearning for heroism is as strong as any single human desire and when nothing of value appears to be endangered by doing so, imagination is permitted to play its tricks. We hear a person saying, "Yes, I did see that man last Tuesday," though the testimony is a grave matter. The statement is sensational. It electrifies the group to which it is addressed. It is a thrill for the witness. He is jerked out of obscurity and onto a plane of influence and power. He thinks he did see that man last Tuesday. He sticks to his story and may add a few details. The die is cast.

* * *

HOW many of the world's affairs are muddled and how much torture is suffered by the innocent through this reckless human perversity we may only surmise from experiences. That the average person is an irresponsible witness, in such circumstances as are here related, most newspaper men will attest. That popular disposition to liven up dull existence with melodramatics is on the increase is no novel observation. Go anywhere, street car to court-room, and you find people putting their best talents into their acts. Children and their elders are in the play. Naturalness and candor are becoming actual rarities. The worst poseur we know is our neighbor's iceman, who trods the sidewalk with more tragedy in his step than Booth or Sothern could have summoned at their peak of power. If that iceman could be a witness in some great criminal case, like the present Snyder-Gray affair, he'd shown 'em something.

* * *

PERHAPS it is the movie spirit. Much of the acting may be reflected from newspaper stories. The radio may play a part. Certainly the very air is surcharged with substitutes for independent thought and the stuff that we have been taught makes for character. Life is a silly game to millions and out of this irresponsibility positiveness increases in equal ratio with ignorance. In the law, we assert, circumstantial evidence should be classed as no evidence. In newspaper practice news interpretations may well be salted by common sense and the spirit of investigation intensified.

JAPANESE DAILY'S NEW PLANT

The Tokio Asahi opened its new plant on April 9. The total value of it, including real estate is estimated at about $2,000,000. It is of reinforced concrete and steel. The Asahi is owned by the Asahi Company which also published the Osaka Asahi, which claims a circulation of 1,000,000 daily. Dr. H. Shimomura is editor and Dr. M. Nayeda is foreign editor.

OWNERS AND BROKERS

The owner of a newspaper should not offer it for sale. He immediately depreciates its sale value. Should he desire to sell his newspaper, he would do well to engage a qualified reliable broker, furnish him full particulars, then leave the matter with the broker.

A qualified broker should not only know values, but be a good judge of men and keep well informed relative to both. An honest broker will not recommend a publication that is without merit and not worth the price asked.

To qualify as a broker, requires years of study and experience. When a broker has qualified, he is capable of rendering very valuable service to those who desire to sell or buy a newspaper.

After successful experience of more than a quarter of a century, as owner, editor, publisher and general manager, I feel justified in offering my services, as a broker, to anyone who may desire to sell or to buy a newspaper. I have some very desirable properties to offer and have a splendid list of customers. J. B. Shale, Times Building, New York.

PLANNING ILLINOIS DAILY

The Granite City (Ill.) Press-Record, published by L. L. Lindley the last 10 years, has been purchased by Edward E. Campbell, formerly owner and editor of the Alton (Ill.) Times, and recently purchaser of the Granite City Post, for $100,000. He will consolidate the papers and in about a month launch them as a daily. The sale culminated litigation brought by Campbell to force the Press-Record owners to sell their paper to him under an option.

ARREST FOLLOWS EDITORIAL

The Cuba (N. Y.) Patriot and Free Press, E. E. Conrath editor, recently printed a page one editorial stating that an employe of the Wellsville bank was known to have taken large sums from the institution and that he was not being prosecuted by officials. After the editorial appeared a bookkeeper was arrested and pleaded guilty.

MR. EDITOR:
You can increase circulation with Motion Pictures!
Bass has shown dozens of newspapers how to use motion pictures in conjunction with local events. Pulls big!
Write today for information about the marvelous new B. & H. Eyemo. Automatic hand-held camera for professional motion pictures. Also detailed data, cost of producing and free catalogues.
Bass Camera Co.
109 North Dearborn Street
EYEMO DIVISION CHICAGO, ILL.

FORTY MILLION DOLLARS
The building of new homes, office buildings and the enlargement of crude oil refineries in and around twenty miles of Beaumont will amount to $40,000,000.00 or even more, during 1927.
The Beaumont Trade Territory is in a prosperous condition. It is covered by THE BEAUMONT ENTERPRISE and BEAUMONT JOURNAL
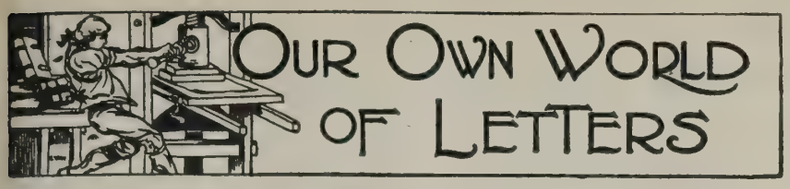
Ask Beckwith, he knows.



Where better Classified mediums are being built — the best publicity is helping build them
THE BASIL L. SMITH SYSTEM, Inc.
International Classified Advertising Counsellors
Packard Building, Philadelphia

Largest Circulation and Largest Volume of Advertising of any Daily west of the Missouri river
LOS ANGELES EVENING HERALD
REPRESENTATIVES
Chicago, JOHN H. LEDERER, 910 Hearst Bldg.
San Francisco, A. J. NORRIS HILL, 610 Hearst Bldg.
New York, HERBERT W. MOLONEY, 604 Times Bldg.

in Detroit—
Free Press circulation reaches 31,000 more than the total number of families owning their own homes.
The "Free Press"
"Starts the day in Detroit"
With a stable, uninflated, liberal pursed circulation productive of greater advertising returns at lower cost.

GRAVURE SECTIONS PRINTED
SPECIAL AND REGULAR EDITIONS, MAGAZINE INSERTS AND COMMERCIAL WORK
Standard Gravure Corporation
LOUISVILLE KY

IT WILL PAY YOU TO HIRE TRAINED MEN
Ambitious young men, schooled in every branch of the newspaper or magazine field, may be secured to fill that opening on your publication by simply making your wants known to the Personnel Bureau of Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity.
No Charge To Employers
Avail yourself of this free service to replenish your staff whenever the occasion requires. Write or wire John G. Earhart, 836 Exchange Ave., Chicago, Ill., and he will put you in touch with the right man.

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

JOHN R. WOLF conducts in the Milwaukee Journal a column, "We'll Say So." Between editions he has found time to compile "Wolf's New History of Milwaukee and Year Book for 1927" (The Journal Company). It is a book of facts about Milwaukee and is published in such convenient form that it can be slipped into the vest pocket.

A section headed "Newspapers" contains valuable material about Milwaukee papers. Serious and statistical as the book is the author can't completely get away from humor, for he puts on the title page this comment about the product of his pen, "The Book That Will Make Milwaukee Famous."

* * *

THE John Day Company of New York announces for immediate publication "Five Weeks" by Jonathan French Scott. It takes up a discussion of public opinion during the five weeks between the assassination of Sarajevo and the outbreak of the World War. It will be mentioned in detail in a later issue.

* * *

EVERYONE who has studied journalism at Marquette University will read with interest "A Literary Chameleon"—"A New Estimate of Mr. H. L. Mencken"—by John D. Logan of that institution. Professor Logan in a "Dedicatory Epistle" to William Arthur Deacon, literary editor of Saturday Night of Toronto, Canada, has produced something that will bring a smile to the most cynical of newspaper men. The dedicatory part is expressed in these words:

> The following essay in "great writing" and "cataclytic criticism" I dedicate to you and couple your name with Mencken's, because I sincerely admire your valiant broadcasting of your "cathartic criticism" in and from the entrenched centre of indurated philistinism, sabbatrian idiocy, and diabolonian criticism in Canada—namely, Toronto.

In newspaper slang Professor Logan has Mencken's measure—as have most newspaper men. A foreword is contributed by J. L. O'Sullivan, professor of journalism at Marquette University.

* * *

A FAVORITE periodical for many members of the working press is E. W. Howe's Monthly—a periodical devoted to indignation and information. The current issue, dated February, has several items which should be marked. One of these is headed "Newspapers Too Interesting." In it Mr. Howe discusses the slogan of a certain newspaper—"Keep Something Going On." In his opinion too much is going on now and the more intelligent editors should realize that they are making their papers too interesting.

Another item asserts that the newspapers are so busy with alimony trials that they are overlooking important foreign news, such as the dreadful scourge of typhus in Africa.

Another story gives Howe's views about the Browning case.

The story that hits the bull's-eye is the one that carries the head of "Bold Editor." This is a story of a scrap between two editors in an Iowa town—editors who carried personal matters into their press columns.

One of the stories on the last page of the monthly tells how Cyrus H. K. Curtis of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and the New York Evening Post could not get a little help from a hospital in Maine to which a few weeks before he had given $100,000.

Mr. Howe shows no partiality in expressing his indignation. He is as critical of the magazines as he is of the newspapers.

* * *

H. I. PHILLIPS, the newspaper columnist, is representing in The American Magazine for May with a contribution headed "On Which Side of the Windshield Do You Do Your Cussing?"

* * *

CAN the newspaper be purified? That is the question that Theodore F. MacManus attempts to answer in America—a Catholic review of the week—for April 16. In this article he says, and repeats by way of emphasis, that "there is no business so sensitive and so cowardly and in some of its manifestations, so corrupt and corrupting, as the publishing business and in particular the newspaper business." He believes that all newspapers are equally guilty for "all have interpreted public taste in the lowest terms." He suggests that all the "Catholic-minded public has to do is to abstain from buying and reading the offensive publication," and gives as his reason that "loss of circulation produces immediate, almost instantaneous panic in any newspaper office." His concluding paragraph is the assertion that the newspaper's sensitive nerve is located in the circulation cash drawer.

* * *

ANOTHER favorite periodical of newspaper men is McNaught's Monthly. The issue for May draws heavily for its contributors upon the American press. Its leading article is from the pen of John C. Moffitt, a member of the editorial staff of the Kansas City Star. It was Moffitt who covered Sinclair Lewis' visit to Kansas City when that author was gathering material for his novel, "Elmer Gantry." Somewhat amusing are the comments of English periodicals about this book reprinted on the page headed "Notes on This Issue." Moffitt's article itself carries the head, "A Lion in the Daniels' Den." It tells how Sinclair Lewis moved into a Kansas City hotel suite and announced his intention of setting up a laboratory for an analysis of the ministry. Of this laboratory Moffitt speaks as follows:

> The laboratory ran full blast. There was bubbling and the issuance of steam. Eventually the investigator put on his hat and sought quiet in the Minnesota wildwood, while the conviction that they were about to become heroes glowed warm within the breasts of the guinea pigs. The clinical report was awaited with anxiety. Later the guinea pigs found it within the green jacket of "Elmer Gantry" and since then the air has been filled with squealings.

David Karsner, who writes for the New York Herald Tribune, contributes "The Rise and Fall of the I. W. W." Allan Nevins, an editorial writer for the New York World, discusses "Freemont and the Scandal of 1856." Benjamin De Casseres, who used to be a newspaper man and who still sits at the long table at the Newspaper Club in New York City has a satirical skit headed "Seeing America Worst." The department that should not be overlooked is "The Crow's Nest."

* * *

ALLEN SINCLAIR WILL, who is connected not only with the Pulitzer School of Journalism but also with the School of Journalism at Rutgers University, contributes to The Alumni Monthly of the latter institution an article in which he outlines the plan of instruction in the journalistic field.

Training for newspaper work, according to Professor Will, ought to produce an educated man who will perform well as a member of the social community. It ought to give instruction in those subjects which are of the greatest direct use to a newspaper man. The instruction should be so practical that the cub will not be a wide-eyed stranger in a strange land. These are the things he has sought to provide at Rutgers.

* * *

DR. EMIL DOVIFAT prints in Deutsche Presse an account of his visit to American newspapers and American Schools of Journalism under the head, "Von Amerikanischen Journalistenschulen."

Most of the article, however, is devoted to comments about American Schools of journalism in general and the Pulitzer School of Journalism in particular. I understand that Dr. Dovifat has in preparation a volume which will describe somewhat in detail his impressions of American newspapers.

OREGON DAILY SOLD

Dennis of Klamath Falls Herald Buys News and Controls Field

Bruce Dennis, publisher of the Evening Herald of Klamath Falls, Ore., has bought the Klamath News, morning daily, and now controls the daily newspaper field in that city.

In making the purchase Dennis formed the Inland Publishing Company which took over the stock of the Herald Publishing Company and the Klamath News Publishing Company.

The News was established in 1923. Dennis, former publisher of the Lagrande Observer, bought the Herald last fall from E. J. Murray.

BUILDINGS
PLANT LAYOUTS
PRODUCTION
OPERATION

An organization specializing solely in newspaper building design, manufacturing and production problems.

S. P. WESTON
Newspaper Buildings
Plant Layouts
Production, Operation
120 West 42nd Street New York

HOWELL & THOMAS
3868 CARNEGIE AVE.,
CLEVELAND, OHIO,
ARCHITECTS AND
ENGINEERS OF NEWS
PAPER PRODUCTION
PLANTS - - - - - -

CLEVELAND PRESS
PITTSBURGH PRESS
HOUSTON PRESS
ROCHESTER TIMES
UNION

An organization combining newspaper production engineering with experienced architectural training.

South America's Greatest Newspaper

"Buenos Aires IS the Argentine Republic"—

"If you introduce an article in Buenos Aires it is introduced in the whole of the Argentine."

"We know that LA PRENSA has a larger circulation than all the local papers put together, and that this circulation is amongst the very best class."

(Extract from letter written by the distributor in Argentina of important American products, urging his principals to place their advertising in LA PRENSA—)

National sales and distribution in Argentina can quickly be attained by advertising in LA PRENSA.

JOSHUA B. POWERS
Exclusive Advertising Representative
250 Park Avenue New York

Largest
Newspaper
West of Chicago

500,000
Copies
DAILY

The KANSAS CITY STAR

The World

These two newspapers offer the most powerful all-day service in New York available as a unit under a single contact. The 600,000 DAILY WORLD — EVENING WORLD readers constitute a highly concentrated force to be reckoned with in any campaign designed to effect distribution in Greater New York.

The Evening World
Pulitzer Building, New York
Tribune Tower, Chicago

Buffalo, The Wonder City of America
Buffalo—a profitable Market for Advertisers

Sales in Buffalo are splendid for advertised goods. Employment conditions excellent, retail and other business thriving. One newspaper will put your story over to 83% of the people—that paper is the

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Read in 4 out of 5 Buffalo Homes

EDWARD H. BUTLER
Editor and Publisher
KELLY-SMITH COMPANY
Representatives
Marbridge Bldg. Tribune Tower
New York, N. Y. Chicago, Ill.
Atlantic Bldg. Waterman Bldg.
Philadelphia Boston

Peoria
The
Try-Out City
THE PEORIA
JOURNAL
Transcript
Puts Tryouts Over!
CHAS. H. EDDY CO.
New York - Chicago - Boston

FOREMAN'S SIGNAL SYSTEM SAVES PRECIOUS MINUTES IN UTAH DAILY'S PLANT

By GLEN PERRINS

"MECHANIC! Mechanic!"

It was the linotype who was calling. His machine was in trouble.

But there was so much noise about the composing room that the mechanic could not hear him.

"Mechanic! Mechanic!"

At last word passed down the line that an operator was having difficulty with his machine and the mechanic rushed to the other end of the room to find out who it was.

Many valuable minutes were lost, however, before the mechanic reached the disabled linotype machine. Sometimes, in such cases, an edition is made late, trains are missed and considerable difficulty caused.

At other times the foreman yells; "Machine number ten! Machine number ten!" (or whatever number he may wish to get the copy that has just been rushed in from the news room).

But the operator does not hear him. "Machine number ten! Machine number ten!"

Again the cry is repeated, but the noise of the other machines drown out the foreman's voice.

A few minutes later, perhaps, word passes down the line that machine number ten is wanted. Again, precious time lost! And time means everything in a newspaper office!

A boon, then, is the idea which is installed in the Salt Lake City (Utah) Deseret News plant. A system of lights has been devised and executed by June Harrow, head of the linotype department.

The lights are red and have proved most efficient. No longer do the linotype operators or the foreman yell themselves hoarse!

If a machine is out of working condition, the operator presses an electric button at the bottom of his linotype machine. Immediately a red light flashes on at the end of the composing room—with the number of the machine showing plainly in red. In addition to this, a bell rings repeatedly until the mechanic comes to fix the machine, or the operator turns off the switch on his machine.

How simple, yet how handy, and what a time saver!

Again, with the other case, when the foreman wants to let a linotype operator know that he wishes to see him.

Beside the latter's desk is a number of switches, numbered from one up to as many linotype machines as there are in the composing room. If he wants to see the operator of machine number ten, instead of shouting: "Machine number ten" he merely presses the number ten switch and a red light flashes on in front of the linotype operator and he knows he is wanted.

These two devices—the red light and bell combination idea—are the work of June Harrow.

The Deseret News has found the system very worth while, and is, indeed, proud of the light system—a boon to linotype operators.

$500,000,000 INVESTED IN RADIO

So Says Aylesworth, Who Sees Industry as Big Newspaper Space User

Belief that radio manufacturers would soon vie with automobile concerns in the purchase of paid newspaper space was expressed by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company, New York, addressing the advertising club of the New York Times. He said that $500,000,000 is invested in the radio industry today.

M. H. AYLESWORTH

"There has been a fear on the part of some newspaper men that radio broadcasting might take the place of the newspaper or destroy it," Aylesworth declared. "There need be no fear of either the radio broadcaster or the newspaper as to conflict or competition.

"The National Broadcasting Company has a policy that when a client comes to us and presents the proposition of going on the air, we first discuss with him or his advertising agency whether or not that client is advertising in the newspapers or magazines. Our first question is 'Does he expect to reduce it or extend it?' Our advice always is that he should not reduce it, but, on the other hand, extend it in order that he may tie up his newspaper and magazine campaign with his sponsored radio program. We do not believe that we take the place of newspapers and magazines in advertising, but we do believe that broadcasting is an important supplement."

Classified

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Classified Advertising Information

TRANSIENT RATES

SITUATIONS (Cash with Order)

1 Time — .40 per line
3 Times — .30 per line

ALL OTHER CLASSIFICATIONS (Cash with Order)

1 Time — .60 per line
4 Times — .55 per line
13 Times — .50 per line
26 Times — .45 per line

White space charge at same rate per line per insertion as earned by frequency of insertion. Minimum Contract space, three lines. Special rates quoted for 52 insertions. The Editor & Publisher reserves the right to classify, edit or reject any advertisement.

ADVERTISING

General Promotion

If You Want More Local Advertising put us to work for you selling our "Worthwhile" Features. Write F. G. Hogan Syndicate, Lemcke Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind., or Kane, Pa.

Increase Your Local Linage with a weekly special page. No cost to publisher. Personal supervision. Let's show you. Interview anytime New York or within 200 miles. C-534, Editor & Publisher.

Supplies

Shading Sheets for Art work and Benday effects. Bourges Service, Inc., 144 West 32nd St., New York.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

Brokers

Any Dissatisfaction in the newspaper situation in your community should be reported to this Agency for satisfactory sclution. Confidential service to buyers and sellers. The H. F. Henrichs Agency, Litchfield, Ill.; New York Los Angeles.

Evening Papers, exclusive fields, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin. Morning Papers, exclusive fields, Arizona, California, Oregon, Pennsylvania, West Virginia; also some desirable weeklies. J. B. Shale, Times Building, New York.

Omar D. Gray, Sturgeon, Mo., writes: "I have $3,500,000 in newspaper property for sale in 41 states. Send for printed list. I need few more dailies and weeklies in Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Oregon, Washington, California.

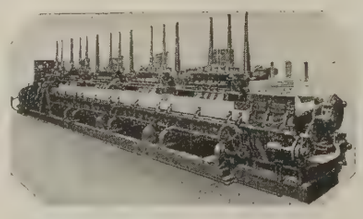
Trade Journal, established, in good condition, capable of expansion. Gross about $20,000. Asking price, $17,500 cash. Harris-Dibble Co., 345 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Representative Wanted

New Sunday Paper in one of the most fertile territories in New England desires a foreign representative. There are unusual prospects for growth and a circulation campaign now in progress has added in excess of one thousand the first week. The representative selected should be willing to work for the future as every indication points to a successful paper in every way. Full co-operation is assured from the local field. Address C-554, Editor & Publisher.

Service

To Out of Town Concerns. You can secure all the advantages of a New York address, including the services of established, fully furnished and equipped offices, where your interests, enquiries, callers, literature, mail, or samples will be intelligently and properly handled, for a nominal annual charge. Address (by letter only) Suite 1004, at 1841 Broadway (Columbus Circle), New York City.



Supplies and Equipment

Rebuilt
GOSS & HOE
PRESS
BARGAINS
ALL TYPES
SEND for LIST
THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS CO.
CHICAGO – NEW YORK – LONDON

THE MARGACH FEEDER
for Linotype, Intertype, Monotype, Ludlow, and Elrod machines
$75.00 each
Further inquiries may be directed to the N. Y. Times — Phila. Bulletin
Chicago Tribune — Boston Herald or several hundred other publishers upon request.
Margach Mfg. Co., Inc.
211-215 Centre St., New York

Drive and Control for Newspaper Presses
A representative installation on a Scott Press is a 75-h.p., a-c. equipment driving a sextuple for the Lake County Times, Hammond, Ind.
GENERAL ELECTRIC

Equipment
Supplies
Services
Market them through the Classified Page
Editor & Publisher

Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines are now being used by many of the leading newspapers from coast to coast and border border. In one plant the machine has saved one-fifth of its cost in six months. Papers can be delivered in better condition to distributors and to the readers.
After a thorough investigation you will want to invest
Write for full particulars
NONPAREIL MACHINE COMPANY
36 S. Throop Street, Chicago

FOR BETTER PRINTING use
Herrick Inks
Cost more. Worth it.
No substitutes. Made from the best materials.
Specializing to requirements of each pressroom.
Ask the Publishers who use them.
WM. C. HERRICK INK CO., INC.
401 West 33rd Street
New York City
Factory: Rutherford, N. J.

Employment—Equipment—Services

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

Newspapers for Sale

Controlling Interest in afternoon daily; now grossing about $40,000. Town of about 10,000 in border Southern state. All equipment new. C-516, Editor & Publisher.

Newspapers Wanted

Want to Buy weekly or small daily. Nothing west of Ohio. Box C-555, Editor & Publisher.

CIRCULATION

Promotion

Circulation—When quick, additional circulation coverage becomes necessary, remember that our twenty years in this one line of endeavor is your proof against experimenting. Write or wire Pacific Coast Circulation Service, Bell Block, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Circulation Builders—Blair & Austin, 1504 Centre ave., Reading, Penn. Originators of Salesmanship Club Campaigns.

Mr. Publisher—Large, small, Daily or Weekly—let us build your circulation by experienced Circulation Builders. Carolina Contest Co., Durham, N. C.

Superior Circulation Builders—The W. S. Kendall Company, 104 North Bailey Ave., Louisville, Kentucky. The circulation-building organization that has set the standard for aggressive, successful circulation campaigns for nearly twenty years.

The World's Largest Circulation Building Organization—The only circulation-building service in Newspaperdom furnishing publishers' affidavits of the exact results of its every campaign. The Charles Partlowe Company, Occidental Building, Indianapolis.

Wire Our Pottery Direct for supplies to start dish offer. Results—Low cost. The Albright China Co., Carrollton, Ohio.

5,000 New Subscribers on New York newspaper in 7 weeks. New plan of campaign designed and operated by former publisher with publishers' interests in view. Hudson DePriest Co., 1420 Bryant Park Bldg., New York.

EDITORIAL

Syndicate Features

"Are Girls Growing Bolder is just one of the articles by Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson in her series of daily discussions on problems confronting American Home Life today. Over fifty papers have already ordered. Immediate release. Daily releases, about 1500 words. Illustrated. Matrices or photos furnished with copy. Rush your order. Graphic Syndicate, Inc., 25 City Hall Place, New York.

Syndicate Features Wanted

Syndicated Editorial Service wanted, suitable for small daily newspaper; preferably by New York state or eastern syndicate. B-996, Editor & Publisher.

EMPLOYMENT

Help Wanted

Advertising Manager for a well established Metropolitan paper. Population 1,000,000. Must be well recommended. Good prospects for a first class man with organizing ability. Reply in strict confidence, giving full particulars. Box 362, Room 200, Times Building, New York.

Circulation Man wanted to take charge of circulation. One who is able to promote and maintain circulation. Must be familiar with carrier, mail and street promotion. Able to handle his department and get results. Thoroughly understand A. B. C. Audit. Should have such ability in his own department that the position of circulation manager will be given to him. Opportunity for a young, ambitious, adroit man who desires a future and who will have full responsibility in his department. Morning paper situated in mid-west town that offers exceptional advantage for education. Full information as to salary, references, etc., in first letter, or no consideration given application. C-528, Editor & Publisher.

Editor and Manager wanted to take charge of new weekly in large and principally Jewish community in borough of Brooklyn. Salary and interest in enterprise for right man. Describe experience and qualifications in letter. C-552, Editor & Publisher.

Editor of experience and maturity wanted in city field who can invest at least $5,000 and become part owner and editorial head of paper in good-sized Northern city. Address B-979, Editor & Publisher.

EMPLOYMENT

Help Wanted

Journeyman Pressman Wanted: On Hoe sextuple and to make plates. Day job, good surroundings, nice city. Permanent to one qualifying. Address The Evening Day, New London, Conn.

Situations Wanted

Advertising Salesman for small daily or progressive weekly. Selling against strong competition has demonstrated ability. Desires position that offers opportunity to grow with paper. Married. References. B-993, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Man, special page and special edition experience. Have copyrighted pages that will add prestige to your paper. Interview in New York or at your paper. C-533, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Manager, because of recent sale of paper where now employed, invites negotiations leading toward interview. Two responsible jobs in seven years. Production nearly doubled on both. A hard working executive with poise, personality and ability to produce. Age 35, family, college graduate. References from present and former employers, including men of national prominence. B-550, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Manager, young, progressive, experienced daily or weekly, now in charge advertising two papers, desires change near future. C-556, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Manager or Solicitor on small daily. East preferred. Can produce copy for local advertisers that results in increased linage. Young, alert, energetic. Married. Looking for permanency. B-994, Editor & Publisher.

Advertising Idea Man—Successful creating sales plans, visualizations and layouts; writes copy for trade papers, magazines and general advertising literature; open for negotiations. C-547, Editor & Publisher.

Business Manager or Assistant to Publisher—Where is the busy publisher who wishes to turn over the details of newspaper management? The writer has the necessary education and experience on the major newspaper functions to be of exceptional value. Salary moderate. A hard worker with excellent references. Go anywhere but prefer small paper. C-530, Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager—Have been assistant and Promotion Manager on live daily. College education. Experienced accountant. Developer of carrier, home delivery system, dealers, and streets with remarkably low cost. Desire position of Circulation Manager on Paper 8,000-20,000 anywhere. Salary moderate with opportunity for increase with results. C-529 Editor & Publisher.

Circulation Manager, now assistant, desires new connection. Age thirty-six, married, no floater. Twenty years actual experience on all branches of circulation work. Best references. C-557, Editor & Publisher.

Copy-reader, 31, experienced, desires position west or middle west daily. Will accept reporting. C-549, Editor & Publisher.

Editor with experience covering all desks, reportorial and feature work on metropolitan and small city dailies, desires change to newspaper or publicity field with future; college training; age 30, single. C-543, Editor & Publisher.

Editorship of Weekly, New England or Middle Atlantic States. Twenty years' reporting, proof-reading, editing country weekly and city dailies. State salary. C-553, Editor & Publisher.

Editorial man, splendidly qualified for desk or street; eight years' experience; aged 29, married, college man; evening paper; now a Washington correspondent. C-548, Editor & Publisher.

Editorial Writer, college graduate, ten years' experience. Specializes modern literature, politics, drama, human interest. Young, with personality and ability. Wishes permanent location. C-510, Editor & Publisher.

Former Sunday Editor wants work as special feature writer newspaper or magazine; handles camera. Samples, references. C-544, Editor & Publisher.

In Any Capacity—I am a cub. I want a job. I don't know it all and am willing to learn. 25 years old. Will go anywhere and do anything that will produce a living while I am getting a chance at a practical newspaper education. C-532, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor, thoroughly capable and experienced, who can give the kind of paper you want. Can handle men to get the most from them. Present time engaged as manager big paper but resigning June 1st. Married, college graduate, 32 years old, will go anywhere. Real opportunity is offered for advancement. Address C-521, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor—35 years old, seeks change because of impending consolidation. Willing to come for interview at my own expense. Sterling executive with record that will bear closest investigation. Would like to take burden from some ageing publisher. C-524, Editor & Publisher.

EMPLOYMENT

Situations Wanted

Manager seeks situation. Able take direct charge all departments, increase advertising to maximum, develop circulation to limit, operate plant economically, handle business details systematically, furnish owner with daily and monthly reports, write editorials, handle newsroom and produce Metropolitan paper. Prefer paper not on satisfactory paying basis. Can build business without adding expense and reduce costs without injury to paper. Can always make satisfactory net for owner. In former situation reduced payroll from $4,000 weekly to $2,300 and from 167 persons to 73; changed paper which was losing $60,000 annually to a profitable investment in less than a year. High grade man, hard worker, able to successfully cope with keen competition and put paper on profitable basis regardless of difficulties. References cover many years' successful work and will stand close investigation. Have been employed on large and small papers. Address B-881, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor small city, wants desk or street work in bigger city. B-998, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor, thoroughly trained executive, 42, now on one of largest newspapers in New York City, for family reasons offers services to evening daily in smaller city. B-995, Editor & Publisher.

Managing Editor for morning, Democratic or politically independent paper; organization builder; competent executive. Requires free hand for impartial crusading in the public interest. C-558, Editor & Publisher.

Mechanical Superintendent—Press Room Superintendent—Several years' experience in all forms of newspaper press work; knowledge of stereotyping, a working knowledge of other departments. Am 30 years old, a Mechanical Engineer by training and a university graduate. Member of Web Pressman Union. Have the experience, training and ability to render and can guarantee any publisher efficient and satisfactory service in either position. C-500, Editor & Publisher.

Newspaper Man, thoroughly trained, wants chance to travel. United States preferred. Press agent, promotion or special feature stories. Experienced in camera work. Married, references. B-978, Editor & Publisher.

Real Reporter—Not a novice, but seasoned man, experienced on politics, sports and general assignment. Wouldn't have desk job. Know news and can write it. Married, college graduate, nine years' experience, will go anywhere. Free May 20. Write C-520, Editor & Publisher.

Research Man, experienced, 34, college trained, plus ten years' practical experience, desires new connection. Business forecasting, making economic and industrial surveys a specialty. Also financial writing, industrial booklets, articles for magazines and newspaper and preparing merchandising surveys for national advertisers, establishing sales standing and percentage of distribution of their competitive products. C-551, Editor & Publisher.

Reporter, 24, three years' varied experience, wants job. C-514, Editor & Publisher.

MECHANICAL

Equipment for Sale

Complete Printing Plant, suitable for daily paper, available at once on account of suspension of publication of New York Commercial. Address Journal of Commerce, 32 Broadway, New York City, for full particulars.

Duplex 24-page Tubular Press, with full stereotype equipment, for sale. Will be available in late summer. Now in use by publication moving into new building with new plant. For full information, address Journal of Commerce, 32 Broadway, New York.

Get That Job!

A small amount of cash, intelligent statement of ability and a little persistency will put you in touch with the opportunity your experience has fitted you to accept.

Classified Department

Editor & Publisher

MECHANICAL

Equipment for Sale

Miehle No. 1, Duplex 10-page, Goss Comet, Duplex Angle-bar, and Stereotype Presses from 16 pages to Octuple capacity. A complete line of general equipment for weekly and daily newspapers. Griffiths Publishers' Exchange, Inc., 154 Nassau St., New York.

For Sale—4 or 5 Cutler-Hammer linotype pots complete; 200-250 volt A.C. 60 cycle, 1500 watts. The Daily Pantagraph, Bloomington, Ill.

Job Presses, Paper Cutters, Wire Stitchers, etc.—A complete line. Overhauled and guaranteed machines at bargain prices. Easy terms. Hoffman Type & Engraving Co., 114 E. 13th St., N. Y. City.

Linotypes: (save $1,400 each) Model 21, No. 32549; also Model 14, No. 27313, with motors; in perfect condition; can be seen running and you can thoroughly test them. Practically new machines; sell $3,000 each. Call, see them. Scientific Review, 206 E. 19th St., New York. Telephone, Gramercy 5733.

Printers and Bookbinders equipment, machinery, type, supplies, Kelly presses, cut cost material, send for revised pre-used machine sheet. Conner Fendler Branch A.T.F. Co., 96 Beekman St., New York City.

Used Goss Matt Roller for wet mats only, for sale cheap. The Goss Printing Press Co., 1535 So. Paulina St., Chicago, Ill.

LEGAL

INTERNATIONAL PAPER COMPANY

New York, March 30, 1927.

The Board of Directors have declared a quarterly dividend of Fifty Cents (50c) a share on the Common Stock of this Company, payable May 16th, 1927, to Common stockholders of record at the close of business May 2nd, 1927.

Checks will be mailed. Transfer books will not close.

OWEN SHEPHERD, Vice-President & Treasurer.

WE CONNECT THE WIRES

NOWHERE ELSE is there as much information, carefully compiled and indexed, concerning available newspaper workers. It cost in 1926 over $15,000 to maintain this service. Our commissions range from 2 to 3½ per cent. of one year's salary. Registration is free. No charge to employers.

FERNALD'S EXCHANGE, INC.
SECURITY BLDG. SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Newspaper Properties
Bought, Sold and Appraised
All negotiations confidential
PALMER, DEWITT & PALMER
Business Established in 1899
350 Madison Ave., New York
Pacific Coast Representative:
M. O. Moore, 515 N. Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif.

CONSOLIDATION

The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.

We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.

HARWELL & CANNON
Times Bldg. New York

DOLLAR $ $ $ $ PULLERS

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

WITH spring bringing a revival of the building industry arrange a directory of ads of electrical contractors as an aid to your readers who may be planning to build or wire their homes this spring. Don't confine yourself to your own community but secure these ads from other towns and cities in your vicinity and run them together with the name of the community at the top of each ad as a guide.—Cole, Fall River.

The Monday morning financial pages can be made more than a mass of tables and weekly reviews by running a series of articles on local industries and their products each week. The series might include all the larger manufacturing plants of the city with a description of the products and their place in national distribution. An advertising tie-up might be arranged.—Wes W. Dunlap, State College, Pa.

Chart out the best bridle paths in your city that have charm of spring scenery and a few hazards, to occupy a quarter or half page of text, getting the help of riding schools for this purpose. Then have the schools, as well as veterinarians, and leather and hardware companies tie-into this stunt with the balance of the page of display advertisements anent riding courses, horses for rent, and saddlery equipment for sale.—C. M. L., Washington, D. C.

Mother's Day will be observed throughout the nation on May 8, this year. Here's a good chance to arrange an attractive page with reading material and special ads for that day.—Cole, Fall River.

Automobile dealers in scores of cities feel the absolute need of moving used cars. Get the dealers in your city to stage a special Used Car week and secure city permission for display of the cars in some downtown street.—Davis O. Vandivier.

There are many dollars for your newspaper hidden in the general cut library of the advertising service or services. Get 'em out and turn the pages. You'll see many cuts that certain advertisers will be glad to use. It's a good plan to look over the library pages every month to keep the unusual illustrations in mind.—Davis O. Vandivier.

"Chic Chats," a new column recently launched on the society page of the Columbus (O.) State Journal is attracting favorable attention. It is conducted by a young woman reporter-artist who visits shops, restaurants and other favorable rendezvous of women and then devotes a paragraph, sometimes long and sometimes brief, to the novel things she sees. The "where" is always included. Several pen drawings, ranging from thumb-nail to column width illustrate the column.—Clyde D. Moore.

"How Much Do You Know" the Danville (Ill.) Commercial News challenged its readers on a page, backed by 20 advertisers, who bought squares on the page, across the top of which appeared such questions as "Where is the best place to have glasses fitted?" "Who has exclusive agency for the Blank shoes?" "What is Danville's 'Oldest Established Roofing Company'?" etc. A huge question mark, with space for the answers to be written in followed. The best correct list or nearest correct list won a $5 prize. The page was republished a few nights later containing the correct answers.—S. L. J.

PROMOTING BETTER BUSINESS

Newspapers Praised for Their Interest in This Work by U. S. Attorney

Those anxious to "clean up trade" were advised to appeal to the daily newspapers by United States Attorney Charles H. Tuttle, addressing the New York Credit Men's Association at its annual dinner in the Hotel Astor, New York, on April 21.

"I commend to your consideration the help which you can readily obtain from the public press. Fraudulent practices cannot survive the searchlight of publicity.

"American journalism not only deals in news, but is ardently devoted to the protection of the public and the eradication of public evils. It is promoting better business by making advertising a more reliable means of public buying."

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

A "COLUMN" of local news items, such as lodge meetings, etc., none over five or six lines, run daily on the first page of the second section of the Akron Beacon Journal, gives the paper a chance to carry many small items which would probably be crowded out. The items are not headed, but the first line of each is in bold face. The head varies from 1 to 4 columns. This was adopted after a brief experiment with a daily front page calendar of meetings, etc., which was well received.—U. S. V.

The New York City police department cost almost twice as much in operation in maintenance per capita in 1925 as it did ten years before, according to the figures of the U. S. Census Bureau. In 1915, the cost was $2.98 per capita, and in 1925, the cost was $5.67. There's a good story for your paper from the statistics gathered from your local police records.—G. Harris Danzberger.

Almost every small city newspaper publishes the pictures of the high school graduating class each year, the pictur being individual photos made up in pa layouts. The Miami Daily News a Daytona Beach Journal went a step fu ther and sent out mimeographed que tionnaires to the senior class several wee before graduation day. Through the questionnaires, the papers obtained tl ages and addresses of the graduates, a also learned what college they plann to enter, what plans they had for a c reer as told in their own words, and tl reasons why they would, or would n pursue that career in their home citie Then after the page layouts of graduat were published, the layouts were sep rated into individual cuts and a seri of the graduates' pictures, with interestir copy gleaned from the questionnaires, w carried. The series ran for sever weeks, with about two pictures and "c lines" appearing each day.—Sam Ballar

To learn all about iceless refriger tion: Invite France to a disarmame parley.—Detroit News.

Detroit

Fourth Largest City

Complete coverage with one paper.

The Detroit News

Offers advertisers unusual opportunities

NEW YORK STATE

Westchester County's

Fastest Growing Cities

Mount Vernon and New Rochelle and The Vicinity Towns

Are Covered Completely by

THE DAILY ARGUS of Mount Vernon

THE STANDARD STAR of New Rochelle

Both Members of A. B. C.

Westchester Newspapers, Inc.

Franklin A. Merriam, Pres.

Mount Vernon—New Rochelle

We Supply

Weekly Illustrated Fiction

Daily One-Column Mat Features

Daily Women's Articles

The Margaret Sangster Daily Poem

Weekly Special Articles

Daily Serials

A Tri-Weekly Paris Letter

Ask Us for Samples

NS

The O'Dell Newspaper Service

55 Fifth Ave., New York City

What Do You KNOW ?

A Great Questions and Answers Feature

New Questions Daily

King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New York City

GIVE YOUR READERS DAILY HEALTH TALKS by Dr Frank McCoy "The Mayo of Health Writers"

A health service that is different—home treatments without medicine or costly apparatus, based on a knowledge of food chemistry and the mechanics of the body

WIRE OR WRITE

McCoy Health Service

Brack Shops Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

THE WELFARE COMMITTEE of the INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION MANAGERS ASSOCIATION

Can supply you with competent circulation men of capacity and ability capable to take entire charge of your department or to fill important posts in the department.

Address the Secretary-Treasurer please, Mr. Clarence Eyster, care Star Building, Peoria, Ill.

The S. C. Beckwith Special Agency

Covers

The United States Best

with its

Complement of 70 People, 8 Offices and 28
Trained Newspaper Advertising Salesmen

47

Years' Experience in Securing
National Advertising
Exclusively for Daily Newspapers
Beckwith Has a Record
Unexcelled
Unblemished
Unbroken
for Satisfactory and Substantial Service

THE S. C. BECKWITH SPECIAL AGENCY

NEW YORK	CHICAGO	ST. LOUIS	KANSAS CITY
DETROIT	ATLANTA	LOS ANGELES	SAN FRANCISCO

BACKGROUND

Back of THE SUN'S leadership in advertising, continuous every month for nearly two years; back of its steady and substantial increases in circulation, a gain of 8,169 copies is shown by its government statement of April 1, is THE SUN itself, a newspaper of distinction in its news, its advertising and its readers.

The Sun

PUBLICATION OFFICE, 280 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Munsey Building

BOSTON
Old South Building

CHICAGO
208 So. La Salle St.

LOS ANGELES
Van Nuys Building

SAN FRANCISCO
First National Bank Building

THIS ISSUE: HENRY A. WISEWOOD FORESEES 100-PAGE NEWSPAPERS

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

1884 The Oldest Publishers' and Advertisers' Journal in America 1927

SUITE 1700 TIMES BUILDING, NEW YORK
42 ND STREET AND BROADWAY.

MEMBER A.B.C.

MEMBER A.B.P.

Original second class entry The Journalist, March 24, 1884; Newspaperdom, March, 1892; The Editor & Publisher, December 7, 1901; The Editor & Publisher and Journalist, October 30, 1909; Advertising, February 7, 1925; Revised entry, Editor & Publisher, May 11, 1916, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879.

Vol. 59. No. 50 | NEW YORK, MAY 7, 1927 | By Mail in Advance $4, U. S. A. $4.50, Canada; $5, Foreign | 10c Per Copy

JOURNALISM LIBRARY
Not to be taken from this room

The Chicago Tribune carried more National Advertising in 1926 than any other newspaper in America

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE in 1926 carried eight million agate lines of national advertising. No other newspaper in America came within a million lines of this figure.

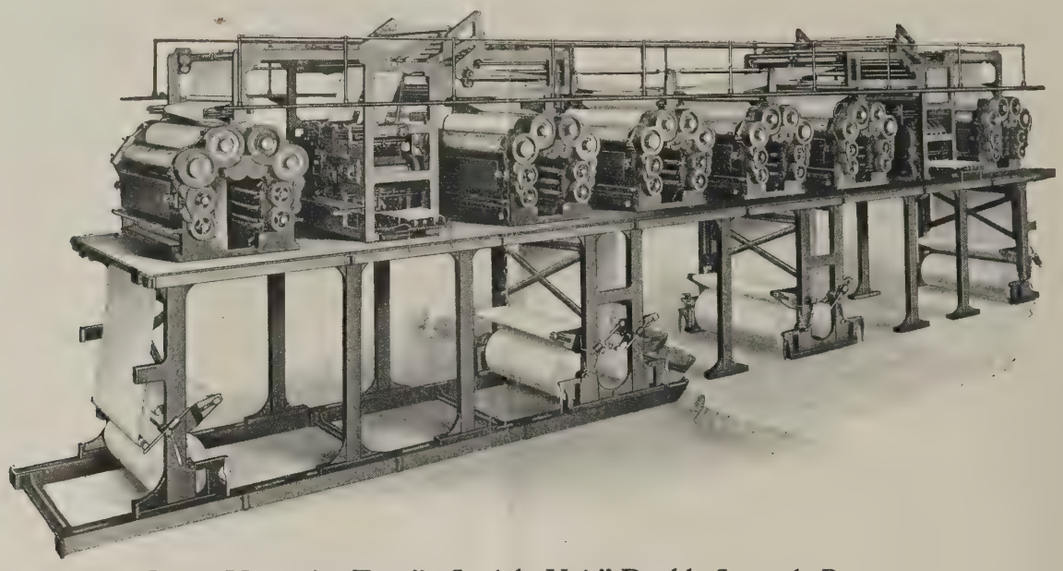
The ten newspapers leading in national advertising are as follows:

	Agate Lines
CHICAGO TRIBUNE	8,077,725
New York Times	6,953,367
New York Herald-Tribune	5,652,444
Boston Herald	5,519,066
Detroit News	5,198,004
Newark News	5,041,145
Milwaukee Journal	4,897,542
Philadelphia Bulletin	4,872,339
Philadelphia Public Ledger	4,826,097
Cleveland Plain Dealer	4,815,247

(Figures from Editor and Publisher)

The Chicago Tribune printed during 1926 the largest volume of national advertising ever carried by any American newspaper.

The Tribune, with more than 765,000 daily circulation and 1,200,000 on Sundays, is the most powerful advertising force in the five states of The Chicago Territory.



The Tribune is read by 62% of all the families in 1,312 prosperous cities and towns in Zone 7.

The city and suburban circulation of The Daily Tribune is greater than the TOTAL circulation of any other Chicago daily newspaper.

For 80 years The Tribune has been building prestige, good will, and confidence

Chicago Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

Scott "Mezzanine-Type" "Straight-Unit" Double Sextuple Press
Class W. W. S. D. M.

THE SCOTT "STRAIGHT UNIT" MEZZANINE TYPE

THE mezzanine type of Scott "Straight-Unit" Presses has several advantages that are not ordinarily found in the floor fed machine. It may be more easily plated, rolls may be changed with a greater freedom and ease, and it also saves valuable space on the press floor.

The mezzanine type or any other type of Scott "Straight-Unit" or "Multi-Unit" Press can be expanded to any desired extent simply by adding new units and folders as required, and they can be continuously operated while this expansion is taking place. All of these presses, moreover, are equipped with solid forged, steel printing cylinders in large diameter, high-grade roller bearings, and are driven by steel and fabroil gears. These features, combined with a unique system of ink distribution, assure solid, uniform impressions at all times.

Scott

"Multi-Unit" or "Straight-Unit" Presses

WALTER SCOTT & COMPANY

Main Office and Factory - - - - - - Plainfield, New Jersey, U. S. A.
New York Office - - - - - - - - - - - 1457 Broadway
Chicago Office - - - - - - - - - - - 1330 Monadnock Block

Cable Address: WALTSCOTT NEW YORK

To reach National Advertising Accounts and Agencies

IN New York there are more National Accounts and more Advertising Agencies than in any other four cities in the country.

This is the premier market for publishers. A publisher must tell his story in New York first if his story is to be well known. More than 20% of all the National Advertisers in America are located in New York—and nearly 30% of all the Advertising Agencies.

And the place to tell your story is the New York Herald Tribune. It reaches the National Advertiser. It reaches the Advertising Agency.

During the first four months of 1927 the Herald Tribune carried more newspaper advertising than any other newspaper in New York.

If you want your story to be known tell it to the Key City in the key newspaper.

Publishers' Markets in America

	National Accounts	Advertising Agencies
New York (Incl. Brooklyn, Jersey City, and L. I. City)	1,659	435
Chicago	894	207
Philadelphia (Including Camden)	250	75
Boston (Including Cambridge and Brockton)	210	78
St. Louis	171	29
Cleveland	161	43
Detroit	154	40
Cincinnati	127	29
Minneapolis and St. Paul	103	26
Milwaukee	103	19

[Compiled from the Standard Advertising Register, 1926 edition]

The Key newspaper to reach New York—

NEW YORK

Herald  Tribune

"Over the Top" Again!

The Evening Bulletin is sold on its merits as a newspaper, no prize or guessing contests; coupons, premiums or other artificial methods of stimulating circulation are used.

The Evening Bulletin

continues to break all Philadelphia Circulation Records

560,832 Copies sold each day in March

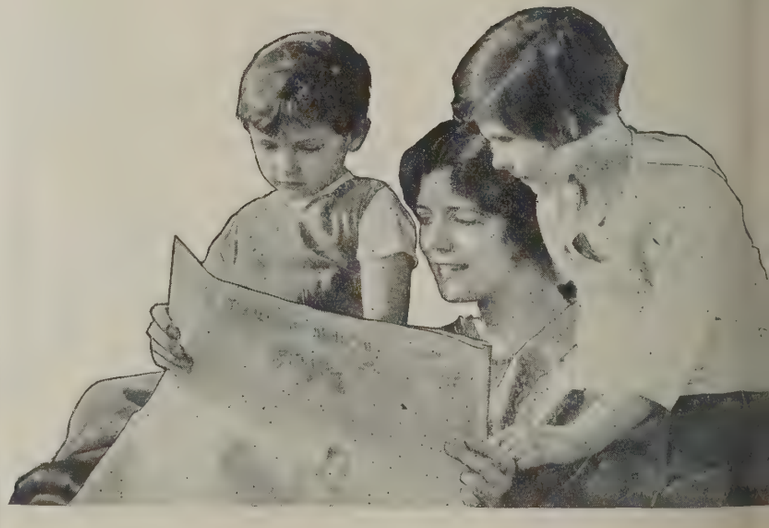
1926 Average Sales were 537,974 Copies Daily

"That the people of Philadelphia and vicinity appreciate the efforts of The Bulletin to give them all the news of the day, as fairly, as exactly and impartially as it can be laid before them, is attested by the fact that not only has the name of The Bulletin become a household word among them but that its circulation reaches far beyond the highest point ever attained by a Philadelphia newspaper."

To the American Manufacturer and Advertising Agent:

Through this one newspaper you can reach nearly every home in and around Philadelphia at one cost.

Telling Bulletin readers what you have to sell, where it can be bought, how much it will cost—and telling it simply and truthfully and constantly, brings success.



Your advertisements are carried to the greatest number of possible purchasers in the Philadelphia market if printed in The Evening Bulletin.

Back of each purchaser of The Evening Bulletin is his or her family—a vast army of consumers.

Advertising in The Evening Bulletin is the most effective and economical form of publicity for reaching Philadelphia buyers.

The Bulletin's advertising rate (per line per thousand readers) is one of the lowest in the United States.

A page advertisement in The Bulletin costs less than one-third of a cent per copy.

"One of the family" in nearly every home.

The mass of buying in Philadelphia is done by the families of the readers of The Bulletin and the bulk of this business will come to those national advertisers who concentrate their advertising in The Bulletin

"In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin"

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Issued every Saturday, forms closing ten P. M. Thursday preceding Publication by The Editor & Publisher Co., J. W. Brown, Publisher; Marlen E. Pew, Editor; Suite 1700 Times Building, 42nd St., at Broadway, New York. Telephones, Bryant 3052-3053-3054-3055-3056. Charter Member Audit Bureau of Circulations. Member Associated Business Papers, Inc.

. 59 NEW YORK, MAY 7, 1927 No. 50

)on Mellett's Crusade Against Vice Wins Pulitzer Award For Canton News

ırtyred Editor's Fight Termed "Brave, Patriotic and Effective" by Judges—Bullard, Rogers and Harding Win Editorial, Reporting and Cartoon Prizes Respectively

E highest honors in journalism, the nnual Pulitzer awards, were an-ced on Monday of this week at Col-a University by President Nicholas ay Butler on behalf of the Advisory d of the university's School of ıalism.

Don R. Mellett

e most coveted prize, the gold medal the most disinterested and meritori-ublic service rendered by any Amer-newspaper," was awarded the Can- O.) Daily News, whose editor, Don Iellett, was slain by hired gunmen ı attempt by the vice interests to the crusade he was waging against through his newspaper. It is the time in the history of the Pulitzer the prize has gone to a newspaper e editor was martyred in the crusade ıored.

ree newspaper men, F. Lauriston rd, editorial writer for the Boston ld; John T. Rogers, St. Louis Post-atch reporter and Nelson Harding, klyn Eagle cartoonist, were winners st editorial, best reporting, and best on awards respectively.

e awards in journalism follow:

or the most disinterested and merito-public service rendered by any rican newspaper during the year a medal costing $500:

warded to the Canton Daily News, n, O., for its brave, patriotic and ive fight for the purification of cipal politics and for the ending of ious state of affairs brought about llusion between city authorities and riminal element, a fight which had a result in the assassination of the of the paper, Don R. Mellett.

or the best editorial article written g the year, the test of excellence clearness of style, moral purpose, reasoning and power to influence opinion in the right direction, due account being taken of the whole volume of the writer's editorial work during the year—$500:

"Awarded to the Boston Herald, for the editorial entitled 'We Submit,' by F. Lauriston Bullard, published October 26, 1926."

The editorial calls for a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti, radicals awaiting execution of a death sentence for murder in Massachusetts.

"For the best example of a reporter's work during the year, the test being strict accuracy, terseness, the accomplishment of some public good commanding public attention and respect—$1,000:

"Awarded to John T. Rogers of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, St. Louis, Mo., for the inquiry leading to the impeachment of Judge George W. English of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Illinois.

Nelson Harding

John T. Rogers

"For the best cartoon published in any American newspaper during the year, the determining qualities being that the cartoon shall embody an idea made clearly apparent, shall show good drawing and striking pictorial effect, and shall be helpful to some commendable cause of public importance, due account being taken of the whole volume of the artist's newspaper work during the year—$500:

"Awarded to Nelson Harding of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, for the cartoon entitled 'Toppling the Idol,' published September 19, 1926."

Because of lack of competition, no award was made this year for "the best history of the services rendered to the public by the American press during the preceding year."

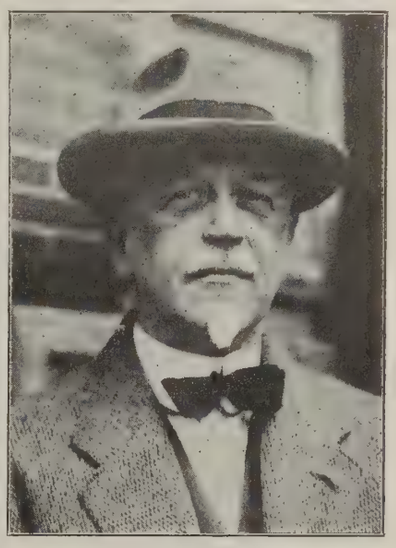
The awards in letters are printed on page 21.

Although it has received the highest honor bestowed in journalism because of its fight for the purification of municipal politics, the Canton Daily News has not yet ended that fight, Charles E. Morris, its editor, said at Canton when informed of the award to his newspaper.

The fight against corruption, begun a year and a half ago by Don R. Mellett, then publisher of the Daily News, cost the young former Indiana man his life. He was murdered last July 18.

Since that date four men have been indicted for first degree murder in connection with the assassination. Two of them, Patrick Eugene McDermott, Cleveland gunman, and Ben Rudner, Massillon, O., hardware dealer and son of a millionaire Canton junk dealer, are in the Ohio Penitentiary, serving life sentences. McDermott was charged with being one of the "trigger men" and Rudner the "pay-off man," who hired the assassins.

Another, Floyd Streitenberger, ousted city detective, will go on trial for first degree murder next Monday, charged with being one of the prime instigators of the plot against Mellett.



The fourth, Louis Mazer, is in Stark County Jail awaiting the outcome of the Streitenberger trial, with immunity promised if the State finds he has told the complete and truthful story of the assassination in an alleged confession he made in March.

Mr. Morris has attacked county officials for having promised immunity to Mazer, who is charged with being one of the gunmen.

Commenting editorially on the Pulitzer award, the Canton News said in part:

"In mingled feelings of humility and pride the Canton Daily News accepts gratefully the award of the Pulitzer gold medal. . . .

"There is humility because only in humility can there be real service such as that for which the life of Don Mellett was sacrificed; there is pride because a civic fight has been won against great odds, successful only because of awakening of a public consciousness without which society cannot last; and there is gratitude because of the recognition that the work for Canton is a work for the best traditions of journalism which include above all else honesty, independence, fearlessness and persistency, unselfishly or at personal loss, to render public service.

F. Lauriston Bullard

"The Pulitzer award is possible because of the vision for public service, the principles of operation, the foresight for stimulated effort and the generosity of the late Joseph Pulitzer, who founded the World in New York and later established foundations to promote what he was inspired to know should be the guiding spirit of journalism. . . .

"In acknowledgment of the Pulitzer award the Canton Daily News reaffirms for itself the Pulitzer avowal of service, grateful for the recognition that it has shown worthiness thereunder.

"The News is worthy only, however, because it has tried not to be false to the aims fixed by Don R. Mellett. It was his work and his sacrifice which made it possible to save a city from the strangling grasp of corruption.

"Canton now stands proudly before the world as a city which will not tolerate the evils which are eating at the heart of popular government everywhere; and because of what has been accomplished by and for Canton, in the face af smug and sometimes active opposition, the Canton Daily News has been singled out for the 'most disinterested and meritorious public service rendered by any American newspaper in the year 1926.'

"That service were impossible had not the aroused aid of unselfish, righteous people been granted.

"The award then is to the city of Canton, where it is written in letters of blood that crime cannot rule, either through collusion, corruption or coercion."

The News is owned by James M. Cox, Dayton and Miami publisher.

The prize-winning editorial written by Mr. Bullard is reprinted on page 21.

Mr. Bullard, who for the past seven years has been chief editorial writer for the Boston Herald, is a newspaper man of wide experience and has served in practically all the editorial departments of the Herald. As a reporter and later as feature writer, Sunday editor and chief editorial writer, he has contributed frequently to quality magazines, and for the past few years has been editorial adviser and contributor to many well known periodicals.

He was born in Wauseon, O. He obtained his primary and high school education in the nearby town of Clyde, and entered the College of Wooster at Wooster, O., where he received the A. B. degree with the class of 1891 and the M. A. degree the following year.

After completing his studies at Wooster, Mr. Bullard studied theology in Chicago and Allegheny and entered the ministry. For a few years he did ministerial work and then entered the post-graduate department of Yale University, receiving the B. D. degree, magna cum laude, in 1903.

Twenty years ago he became a member of the staff of the Herald, and has remained with the paper continuously except for one year, when, during the Progressive Party movement, he served as editorial writer for the Boston Journal.

Mr. Bullard is the author of "Historic Summer Haunts," "Famous War Correspondents," and a work on Lincoln entitled "Tad and His Father." The last-named book was the outgrowth of an intensive study of Lincoln, one of the passions of the author's life, which he still pursues. In fact, his chief study to-day, and also his recreation, is the life of the Great Emancipator.

John T. Rogers, reporter for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, whose painstaking investigation turned up the material which led to the impeachment of Judge George W. English of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Illinois, has been a reporter 19 of his 46 years.

Judge English was impeached for "misdemeanors in office" by an overwhelming vote of the House of Representatives. The impeachment proceedings were halted when the Judge resigned, November 4, 1926. Information Rogers obtained for his paper charged the Judge with wrongful manipulation of bankruptcy funds, usurpation of authority over State officials, use of profane language on the bench and brow-beating of juries and counsel.

Rogers is a large-featured, slow-spoken man, with a reputation as a "plugger." He was educated in the Louisville grade and night schools and after a variety of boyhood jobs became a telegrapher. This trade took him into the office of Col. Henry Watterson's Louisville Courier-Journal as an operator in 1899, but it was not until 1908 that he got a chance as a reporter on the Louisville Times, afternoon edition of the Courier-Journal.

Later Rogers worked for the Kansas City Post and the Kansas City Star, after which, in 1916, he joined the staff of the Post-Dispatch. His service for this paper was interrupted by service in the Tank Corps during the war and a subsequent brief venture in the automobile business. Much of his reporting has consisted, and still consists, of what many would call "drudgery." He doesn't regard it so. But the English case was his hardest assignment.

One of Rogers' achievements was his investigation of the Ku Klux Klan murders in Mer Rouge, La., in 1922. He obtained facts showing the responsibility of the local Klan for the deaths of two men whose headless bodies were found in Bayou La Fourche. His most recent important news story, appearing in last Saturday's Post-Dispatch, was the confession of Harry Thomasson, 19-year-old gangster, that he and his brother, now dead, killed Mayor Joe Adams of West City, Ill.

TOPPLING THE IDOL

Nelson Harding's prize-winning cartoon

Commenting editorially on the award to its reporter, John T. Rogers, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch said:

"John T. Rogers, of the Post-Dispatch staff, who received the Pulitzer prize for the best example of a reporter's work during the past year, in a brief interview describes himself as a reporter and nothing else. 'I do everything,' he said, 'from chasing pictures to covering gang wars.'

"All of these are within the scope of a reporter's job. But if he covers his assignments with fidelity, industry, accuracy and thoroughness he is a valuable contributor to the work of a newspaper. He does his part in the prime function of a newspaper in getting all the news and presenting it accurately, intelligently and clearly. This is public service. But sometimes there come to a reporter opportunities to do special public service. He is called upon to gather the facts about corruption in public life, or the abuse of official power. He undertakes a task which requires exceptional energy and persistence, courage and intelligence. It was that sort of task which Mr. Rogers undertook when the Post-Dispatch exposed the misconduct and the abuses of official power on the part of Judge English of the Eastern Illinois Judicial District, which resulted in the impeachment and resignation of Judge English. Mr. Rogers did his work thoroughly and effectively. He deserved the award."

Nelson Harding, cartoon prize winner, was born in Brooklyn in 1878. He was educated at the Greenwich (Conn.) Academy, Art Students' League and Chase School, New York City. He was apprenticed to an architect at eighteen and was a lithographer from 1899 to 1907.

In the latter year Mr. Harding began drawing cartoons as a free lance, his work winning him recognition and a staff position on the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, where he has remained. Since 1912 he has also written much verse as well as humorous paragraphs for his paper.

Mr. Harding served with the 71st Infantry, United States Volunteers, in the Spanish-American War, participating in the Battle of San Juan Hill and the siege of Santiago. He re-enlisted in the 71st Regiment, New York National Guard, in 1917, and in the same year was commissioned a Lieutenant.

Awards of traveling scholarships to students of the Columbia journalism school were:

"On the nomination of the teaching staff of the School of Journalism, three traveling scholarships, having a valu $1,500 each, to graduates of the Sc of Journalism who shall have pa their examinations with the hig honor, are otherwise most deserving enable each of them to spend a yea Europe, to study the social, political moral conditions of the people, and character and principles of the Euro press."

PULITZER TRAVELING SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS

Left to right: Gordon N. Havens, Brooklyn; Orrin T. Pierson, Denver; Miss Frances Bernice Schiff (alternate), New York; Jacob S. Hohenberg, Jamaica, N. Y.; Paul D. Gessner (alternate), Marshall, Mich.

Students appointed were Gordon N der Havens of Brooklyn, Orrin Tis Pierson, Denver, Col., and Jacob Hohenberg, Jamaica, Queens. Altern appointed were Paul Douglas Gesne Marshall, Mich., and Frances Ber Schiff, New York.

"An annual scholarship of $1,500 the student of music in America may be deemed the most talented deserving, in order that he may conti his studies with the advantage of E pean instruction, on the nomination jury composed of members of the te ing staff of the Department of Musi Columbia University and of the teac staff of the Institute of Musical Art."

This was awarded to Quinto E. Ma nini, twenty-nine, of 400 West Street, composer, and for the last e years a flute player in the New Y Symphony Orchestra.

"An annual scholarship of $1,500 an art student in America, who shall certified as the most promising and serving by the National Academy Design, with which the Society American Artists has been merged."

The winner of this was Olindo Ricci, 3661 Bronxwood Avenue, Bronx.

The three journalism school gradu winning traveling scholarships are working on New York newspap Orrin T. Pierson is on the city staff the New York Times; Gordon N. vens, of Flushing, is on the sports c desk, New York Times, and Jacob Hohenberg is assistant night editor, York Evening Graphic. This is belie to be the first time since the scholarsh were first awarded in 1913 that all th winners have been in active newspa work.

Mr. Pierson, graduate of the Color Agricultural College in 1924, has wor on the Middletown (N. Y.) Times-Pr now merged with the Middletown E ald, and on the Boston Post. During senior year at Columbia, he was Uni sity correspondent for the Times bes taking Sunday church and night assi ments.

Mr. Havens has won other schola awards besides the Pulitzer prize. graduation from the New York Pu Schools, he received one of the Puli prizes, entitling him to free tuition Columbia University, with an additio annual cash award. During his se year in the Journalism School, he sports correspondent for the New Y Times, New York Telegram, Phila phia Evening Bulletin, and Colun University Alumni News.

Mr. Hohenberg, originally of Sea Wash., worked on several papers th and attended the University of Washi ton in Seattle for two years. Since c ing to New York, he has been emplo by the New York Evening Graphic, for more than a year has been its as tant night editor.

The members of the Advisory Bo of the Pulitzer School of Journalism participated in the making of the awa are Ralph Pulitzer of the World; J Langdon Heaton, the World; Jos Pulitzer, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Nicholas Murray Butler; Julian Har publisher, Enquirer - Sun, Colum (Ga.); Alfred Holman, San Francis Arthur M. Howe, Brooklyn Daily Eag Robert Lincoln O'Brien, Boston Hera Rollo Ogden, New York Times; Stu H. Perry, Adrian (Mich.) Telegra Melville E. Stone, Associated Pre Casper S. Yost, St. Louis Globe-De crat, and Jerome Landfield, Execu Secretary of the Advisory Board.

The Board acted on recommendat of special juries chosen in the vari fields covered. The juries in journal follow, representatives of newspapers ing nominated by the President of

(Continued on page 21)

OOD SEES ADVENT OF 100-PAGE NEWSPAPERS

rspaper Machinery Inventor Says Era of Daily News-Magazine Will Arrive by 1937—Giant Papers Now Mechanically Possible at Low Cost of Production, He Says

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

1937, the daily newspaper of today ll have definitely given way to the "news-magazine" of tomorrow. ry A. Wise Wood, newspaper ma- genius and the author of this pre-, does not base it upon fanciful s. It rests rather on new practical pments in printing press manufac- which the Wood Newspaper Ma- Corporation announced recently ich are on display now at the com- plant in Plainfield, N. J. It rests n the background of proved fore- xhibited by Mr. Wood, who as in- of the autoplate machine or auto- stereotyping in 1900 foresaw the per of today at a time when four- nd sixteen page papers were con- large in size.

ee the day coming of the 100-page newspaper-magazine," Mr. Wood his week in an interview. "In- he 100-page newspaper is possible All the mechanical problems con- with issuing such a daily giant are But I don't want to frighten I want to think ahead, I want to ut I don't want to seem to be too ead. So I will say that I expect to e line crossed by the 100-page daily than 10 years.

will come at the demand of the and will not be forced upon them. the battle between the newspaper e weekly or monthly magazine, the ine has already suffered defeat. nagazine of today is merely an ble survivor of the past. It has its but it is not that of the newspaper. other advertising medium can ompete on equal terms with the newspaper, the daily news-maga- f tomorrow. The newspaper is resh, new born each day, inexpen- convenient, easily obtained. The nagazine of 1937 will have these s plus more compact writing, bet- istrations, better printing, more in- ion, general and specific, and an us increase of attractive ads."

as the first time in the many years close association with the news- business that Mr. Wood had an interview. He is opposed to e terms free puffery, and does not merely to hear the sound of his He is a precise, clear thinking His words are weighed carefully being uttered. Distinguished ap- , with neatly groomed white mus- he looks like the popular concep- f a British army Colonel. You f him as the master mind behind nilitary strategy. He has bridged rushing torrent, perhaps, to move masses forward. In reality he has he master mind behind a great y of peace time. He has bridged ind by his inventions moved for- that vast power called the daily he predicts its next step, from ily newspaper to the daily maga- acked with up-to-the-minute news, illustration, general and specific ation, and irresistible ads.

isive production in newspaper press is among the factors that will his transition possible, Mr. Wood s. He claims that improvements developed for the newspaper press h that the capacity of present press can be doubled in the space they cupy.

e," he declared, "a complete re- n in the newspaper press room. I rk made easier for the pressmen, for the publisher, with the cost per greatly reduced. It will be in- production per cubic foot of space d, per minute of time used, and lar of operating costs involved.

se are the three tests I have al- applied in working out my ma- They are the tests I have always kept before my engineers, and no new device passes that does not meet them.

Henry A. Wise Wood

"We have solved the problem of how to print more swiftly a first class newspaper in less space and with less effort on the part of the men operating it and with less waste. Among the devices contributing to this solution is one which recharges the press with paper as needed without slowing down or stopping the press itself. This converts the full running time of the press into producing time and it eliminates great waste of newsprint. Another development is the device we have prepared to increase pages by two instead of by four on collected products, a device also that will prevent enormous waste through saving pages now unnecessarily printed."

To watch the machine equipped thus modernly in operation at the Wood plant in Plainfield is sufficient to prove to the layman that Mr. Wood's claim to "intensive production" is reality. But will intensive production be accepted, Will the demand be great enough? Doubts creep into mind.

Mr. Wood has answers to all objections to his predicted 100-page daily, which, mechanically speaking, he now says is possible. There are the suggestions of clumsiness, bulk, voluminous content, the impossibility of reading it all. He disposes of such contentions with convincing logic.

"Before the war," he recalled, "I foresaw the 64-page daily newspaper. I told the publishers repeatedly then that they ought to begin to prepare for this increase.

"Did the people revolt against the 56-page paper when it came? If they did it has not been expressed certainly in decreased newspaper circulations. The public knows what it wants. As bigger papers are produced, more people are buying them. People like them, and feel disappointed, deprived of their rights as it were, on the days their favorite newspapers are slim.

"Just think, before the World War, the New York Times, if I remember correctly, was printing about 18 pages a day with an occasional 24-page paper. This morning it carried 56 pages with more readers than it ever had in its history.

"The public has come to consider advertising as part of the news. Women consider it the best part. The advertising pages are as interesting to almost everybody as the news pages. As a matter of fact, advertising is news, it is the news of purchasable things, and who amongst us lets a day go by without thought of something he intends or hopes to buy.

"The World War proved to be the business public's post graduate course in advertising. It taught advertisers that newspaper space was pay dirt. Merchants were given visible proof of the manner in which the public could be moved by the daily press.

"I happened to play a part in the preparedness movement and I know for a certainty that the United States could not have been induced even to begin to prepare for the war without the aid of the American press. The newspapers have become recognized as an arm of government. The American people believe in the newspaper, and while they frequently criticize it, they trust it.

"Besides, more and more advertisable things are ever being created for the daily newspaper, metamorphosing it into a sort of magic bazaar filled with purchasable wonders.

"Since the century began what has not been added to the variety of our daily thought! Think of the almost uncountable things that but a few years ago had not been born!

"There is the motor car, the aeroplane, the motor boat, the phonograph, the moving picture, the radio, the cross word puzzle, and a medley of other clamoring objects. Two decades ago not one of these life filling wonders played a part in the news nor contributed a dollar to the newspaper in advertising.

"And more marvels lie ahead. Television is on the horizon. We have now wireless pictures. The age of scientific surprises has only just lifted its curtain. What may not be expected to appear upon its stage! One thing is sure—every newcomer on that stage must pay its toll to the newspaper.

"Nothing worth while happens in the world that does not contribute to the newspaper. And nothing supplants it. Each needs the newspaper that itself may survive. And each must contribute financially to the support of the newspaper.

"Another factor which will make the daily 100-page newspaper-magazine demanded is increased education and travel. The more our people know the more subjects they will be interested in seeing pictured or discussed or advertised in their daily paper.

"In the old days of the ten hour and twelve hour day men had no time to read their newspapers. Now we have the eight hour day and the five and one-half day week. The man has many other distractions but still the paper comes first. Before he turns on his radio he looks to his daily paper to find what interesting programs are on the air. If he has radio troubles he promptly turns to the next Sunday advertising pages for helpful suggestions or apparatus. Before he goes to the moving picture show, he looks through his papers to see if the picture 'sounds good.' Before he goes riding in his motor car, he finds out in his paper what roads are good, what roads are torn up and impassable; and being a motorist he is forever interested in the advertisements of cars and their equipments. Then the football game has arrived to create a new and powerful publicity interest. The world moves and grows, and the thrilling daily story of it all is to be found in one place only, in that cheapest of all possessions, the newspaper."

Mr. Wood was asked how general he thought these large-size papers would be, if the smaller communities would take them, and he replied:

"There is one thing you must never do and that is prophesy limitations for any community in the United States. Never say what can't be done. That is unknowable. There is little an American motivated mind can't do if it wants to, or has to."

It was with this sort of spirit undoubtedly that Mr. Wood entered the newspaper machinery business. At that time he found that the composing room and the press rooms of a newspaper were on a machine basis but the foundry was on a hand-work basis.

"I saw at once," he has recalled, "that it was the foundry which was holding back the publishing business."

When Mr. Wood first became connected with newspaper printing, type was set by hand, flongs were made by hand and beaten into mats by means of brushes. In every office were steam tables on which home made mats were dried. Then the mats were laid into hand casting molds into which the metal was poured by hand ladles.

"The first casting boxes or molds I saw used were without any water for cooling," Mr. Wood continued. "After the plates were cast in a mold which was always operated by hand, they were pulled out by hand and set on a tail cutting machine. Here the matrix was stripped

(Continued on page 46)

BROOKLYN STANDARD UNION SOLD TO EARLY AND ASSOCIATES FOR $901,000

Paper's Managing Editor Becomes President of Company—Huntsman Continues as Publisher—Daily Sold at Public Auction

JOSEPH J. EARLY in association with a number of prominent Brooklyn citizens has purchased at public auction the Brooklyn Standard Union, of which he has been managing editor for many years.

The deal was concluded on Wednesday afternoon, when Surrogate Judge George A. Wingate approved Mr. Early's syndicate's bid of $901,000, which was $1,000 higher than an offer made by Paul Block, owner of the Toledo Blade and other newspapers.

The price paid is for good will, stock of the publishing company, plant and machinery, and lease of the present building with option to renew at expiration.

Mr. Early will be president of the new publishing company which will take control in about 10 days. R. F. R. Huntsman will continue as publisher of the paper. Other officers have not yet been elected.

Mr. Early issued the following statement on the transaction:

"In association with leading business factors and community leaders of Brooklyn, I have purchased the Brooklyn Standard Union from the trustees of the estate of William Berri, including R. F. R. Huntsman, Herbert Berri and Frederick H. Webster. The sale received the approval of Surrogate George Albert Wingate.

"Among the associates in the purchase are Ralph Jonas, president of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, William H. English, president of the Montauk Club; William M. Grove, president of the Prudence Bonds Corporation; Jackson A. Dykman, of the law firm of Cullen & Dykman; Frederick D. Mackay, of the E. W. Bliss Company, and vice-president of the Brooklyn Riding and Driving Club, County Judge Alonzo G. McLaughlin, Albert Conway and Joseph J. Sartori.

"I will assume the management of the newspaper in about ten days. It is a matter of keen satisfaction that I have assurance of the support of the leading factors in Brooklyn community, religious social and business life in my new work following a service of about 28 years with the Standard Union.

Mr. Early is a native of Brooklyn. His first newspaper work was for the Standard-Union when he was 16 years old, when he was given the Navy Yard assignment, one of the toughest "beats" in the office.

During his long newspaper career he has always been particularly interested in politics. He belongs to what is known in Brooklyn as the "Rocking Chair Brigade," a group of men who meet and talk about inside politics. For 15 years he wrote state politics from Albany. While holding down this post he was elected president of the New York State Legislative Correspondents Association.

As managing editor it has been Mr. Early's consistent policy to keep the Standard Union intensely local to Brooklyn. It is his theory that Brooklyn, although an integral part of New York, is an enormous metropolis in itself, so constituted that its newspapers must, in a sense, be "small town" to succeed.

"The success of Brooklyn newspapers lies solely in their intimate contact with their readers," Mr. Early once declared in an EDITOR & PUBLISHER interview, "They must be always working to help the community."

The Standard-Union has been conducted by the trustees of the Berri estate for 10 years. Mr. Berri died in April, 1917. The editorial page of the May 5 issue showed an average net paid circulation for the week ending April 24 of 77,707. Recently the paper reduced its price from two cents to one cent daily.

Mr. Early, questioned regarding the penny price this week, declined to discuss the subject.

Founded in 1863 by 60 Brooklyn Republicans in Civil War days, the Standard-Union was first known as the Union. In 1877, the Union absorbed the Argus which had been founded in 1869 as an independent organ. A few years afterward the name of the Argus was dropped from the consolidated title and the publication again was called the Union.

Joseph J. Early

The Standard was founded in 1884 by a group of Brooklyn Republicans who charged that the Union had gone over to the Democrats in the Cleveland-Blaine campaign. John Ford was its editor at that time. In 1887 the Standard bought the Union and has since been known as the Standard-Union.

Among those who have been editors of the Standard Union were Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, American Ambassador to Spain at the outbreak of the Spanish War, and Theodore Tilton, plaintiff in the celebrated suit against Henry Ward Beecher.

DAILY IN RECEIVERSHIP

M. F. Hetherington Now in Charge of Lakeland (Fla.) Star-Telegram

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LAKELAND, Fla., May 3.—M. F. Hetherington, former owner of the Lakeland Evening Telegram, was appointed receiver today for the Star Telegram Publishing Company, publishers of the Morning Star-Telegram, at a hearing before Judge H. C. Petteway. L. W. Bloom is president of the company.

The petition for receivership was filed by the publishing company and Mr. Hetherington was appointed over his protest. Mr. Hetherington sold the Evening Telegram in 1920 and the paper was later consolidated with the Morning Star.

He announced tonight publication of the Star Telegram would continue.

PLANNING TEXAS DAILY

Following announcement that the concern would give Amarillo, Tex., a new daily, permit to do business in Texas has been granted by the secretary of state to the Amarillo Sun Publishing Co., a Colorado corporation, Denver, Col., with $100,000 capital stock. F. O. Schroeder, Amarillo, was named in the permit as Texas agent.

RESUMES BROADCASTING

The Boston (Mass.) Evening Transcript resumed radio broadcasting Monday night on a wave length of 394.5 meters.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER CALENDAR

May 8-13—University of Missouri, Journalism Week, Columbia, Mo.
May 9-11—Association of National Advertisers, semi-annual meeting, Detroit.
May 12—Georgia Press Association sails from Savannah for Boston.
May 16—Tennessee Press Assn., annual meeting, Nashville, Tenn.
May 16-21—Secretary of Navy Wilbur entertains newspaper men aboard ships for Annual Fleet Maneuvers.
May 16-18—Associated Business Papers, Inc., meeting, French Lick, Ind.
May 17—New England Daily Newspaper Assn., annual meeting, Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston.
May 19-21—Arkansas Press Assn., annual meeting, Hot Springs, Ark.
May 20-21—Advertising Affiliation, annual convention, Erie, Pa.

H. B. SWOPE INJURED

N. Y. World Executive Editor and Wife in Automobile Crash

Herbert Bayard Swope, executive editor of the New York World, and Mrs. Swope were painfully injured the night of May 4 when the automobile in which they were driving was struck by another car in Yonkers, N. Y. Heywood Broun, who conducts the column "It Seems to Me" on the World, was riding in the Swope car, but escaped without injury.

Mr. Swope suffered a broken nose, a deep scalp wound, and lacerations about the face. Mrs. Swope was even more painfully injured. Doctors took twenty stitches to sew up a gash in her face.

When Mr. Swope's car was struck, it was forced from the roadway, and a wheel was knocked off. The editor and his wife were thrown from their seats. Henry Holm, Mr. Swope's chauffeur, was unhurt.

LITTLE ROCK NEWS SOLD

Control Stock Purchased by L. B Myers and John R. Frazer

Sale of the control stock of the Little Rock (Ark.) Daily News by Stanley Andrews and associates of El Dorado to L. B. Myers, present publisher, and John R. Frazer, Little Rock business man and head of the A. O. U. W. of Arkansas, has been announced.

In the El Dorado group are Lewis C. Callow, Floyd Miller, Alex H. Washburn and James A. Plotner and Mr. Andrews, who also publishes the Arkansas Farmer, located in the same building with the Little Rock Daily News.

Floyd Miller, formerly of El Dorado, and business manager of the Little Rock Daily News, will become business manager of the Arkansas Farmer, and Mr. Andrews, who has been editor of the Little Rock Daily News and publisher of the Arkansas Farmer, will return to El Dorado.

DAILIES AID FLOOD VICTIMS

Chicago Herald Examiner and Daily News Raising $60,000

The benefit show sponsored by the Chicago Herald & Examiner to help its fund for the relief of victims in the flood area netted about $10,000. The show, talent for which was contributed by the leading plays in Chicago at the time, was staged before a capacity house of 4,000 people.

The relief fund of WMAQ, the Chicago Daily News station, having exceeded the $25,000 quota set by the management, the quota was increased to $50,000, and the fund is now rapidly nearing that mark.

G. LOGAN PAYNE BU SAN JOSE NEWS

Former Washington Times-Herald lisher Pays $200,000 for Goo will and Real Estate of Evening Daily

(By telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER

SAN JOSE, Cal., May 4.—G. L Payne has purchased the San Jose ning News from H. L. Baggerly took posse May 2. The sideration volved is rep to be about $ 000 and to clude the building in center of the ness section fair equip The News ries the As ated Press United Pres ports. Mr. gerly, who been in ill h for two years, will retire from a work and rest for at least a yea is stated. Mr. Payne will assume tive charge of the business, assiste Jack Wright, who has been pron from city editor to managing editor

G. LOGAN PAYNE

Mr. Payne was formerly general ager and publisher of the Washi (D. C.) Times and Washington He and is chairman of the board of G. Logan Payne Company, special r sentatives.

No radical changes will be made i policy of the paper, which will be erally independent on local and stat fairs. The building will be remo and the plant modernized, accordin Mr. Payne, "to give San Jose an eve paper equal to any on the Pacific Co San Jose, which in 1920 was record having 39,000 population, now cl 65,000. It is in the Santa Clara V in the heart of the prune, pear, ap and walnut-growing district.

SPECIAL TRAIN FOR I. A. A

Chicago Clubs Invite Midwestern Gr to Join in Denver Jaunt

A special de luxe train has been tered by the Advertising Council of cago and the Women's Advertising of Chicago, to carry the midwestern gation to the International Advert Association convention in Denver, June 26 to 29. The train will also a post-convention tour to Yellow National Park via the Chicago N western railway and the Union P system.

The Chicago advertising folk hav vited delegates from other clubs in nois and surrounding states to ac pany them.

The Advertising Council and Wor Advertising Club have sent a bullet advertising people throughout the mi west asking them to make their res tions for space on the special train. committee consists of Homer J. Buc William E. Donahue, Julius Holl, Perkins, C. A. Tupper, Mrs. Hilm Benson, C. C. Younggreen, chairma the sixth district, and Robert J. Vi chairman of the On-to-Denver comm

PHONES NEWS TO LONDON

The transatlantic telephone was by International News Service Apri to rush a new Mississippi flood stor the London Evening Standard in tim make an early edition. The story dictated in New York headquarters N. S. as it was picked from the graph wires and was copied dow London by relays of reporters. The lasted 21 minutes and cost $525.

MOVING PARIS OFFICES

Beginning June 1 the Paris office the Christian Science Monitor wil located at 3, Avenue de l'Opera, Co Rue de l'Echelle.

MULTI-MILLIONAIRE ADVERTISERS BEG SPACE

l Burner Manufacturers Plan Free Publicity for Dailies and Paid Space in Magazines—Obtained $30,000 Gift from Press in Two Weeks, Says Agency Man

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

ADING manufacturers of oil-heating equipment who claim to have a bined invested capital of more than 000,000 are seemingly content to be spaper space mendicants, as far as co-operative advertising plans are erned.

hese plans were obtained in advance week by EDITOR & PUBLISHER. They e on the organization, already ted, of the Oil Heating Institute, ced by membership fees from oil-er manufacturers and associate oil panies, with a potential advertising opriation of $500,000 annually to be t, as far as can be learned, for paid e in the magazines and press agent icity in the daily press.

he plan was pressed to conclusion last month at the annual convention Buffalo of the American Oil Burner ociation, after nearly four years of t on the part of Leod D. Becker, ciation secretary, and a short period igh-power salesmanship on the part ord & Thomas and Logan, an ad-ising agency.

D. Barnhill, an executive in the York office of Lord & Thomas and an, attended the convention and at time supervised the release of the free publicity to newspapers. It on the advice of the agency, Mr. hill told EDITOR & PUBLISHER this , that the oil-burner manufacturers ted the advertising program which ides for a page an issue for three ths in 15 magazines. First copy is duled to appear in the Saturday Eve-Post on June 4.

e EDITOR & PUBLISHER reporter d Mr. Barnhill if the advertising ram of the Oil Heating Institute ided the possible purchase of paid e in the newspapers.

No," he answered. "This is purely adership campaign to establish the e of membership in the institute. t of the manufacturers taking part ide newspapers in their own indi-al campaigns."

r. Barnhill added that it was part the Institute's advertising plans to are mats of newspaper copy to be ributed among oil-burner dealers for possible use in local dailies.

he identity of the leading $40,000,000 ufacturers is being kept a closely ded secret. Mr. Barnhill declined to e their names public and officials at American Oil Burner Association likewise reticent.

rom a reliable source, however, OR & PUBLISHER obtained the fol-ng names as members of the com-ee of advertising councillors of the erican Oil Burner Association, de-ed as the leaders of the co-operative rtising movement:

ionel T. Jacobs, president of the Fess Burners of Canada Limited, Toronto, is also association president; Leod Becker, 350 Madison avenue, New k, association secretary; C. U. liams, president of the Williams Oil-latic Company, Bloomington, Ill.; gan J. Hammers, American No-Kol npany, Chicago; E. M. Fleischmann, ident, Quiet May Company, Balti-e, Md.; J. C. Johnson, president, S. ohnson Company, Oakland, Cal.; and S. Bohm, of the Preferred Utilities npany, New York.

r. Barnhill discussed with amazing kness the publicity plans of the Oil ting Institute, which he said would directed partially by his agency and ially by Mr. Becker from association lquarters.

e himself started the publicity ball ly rolling when he said the American Burner Association met in Buffalo ng the first week of April.

called up the Associated Press espondent in Buffalo," Mr. Barnhill ained, "and made arrangements for releases a day during the conven-tion. The arrangement worked splendidly."

Mr. Barnhill was asked if he kept a check on the free space obtained from the newspapers.

"Yes," he replied, "we keep clippings. We have figured that in the first two weeks of our free publicity efforts we have obtained space in the newspapers amounting to approximately $30,000, at space rates."

Mr. Barnhill explained that the first press agent release went out on a Friday.

"On Sunday, Arthur Brisbane commented on the story in his column, advising people who own oil stocks to hang on to them," Mr. Barnhill said. "This delighted the oil burner manufacturers."

Mr. Barnhill furnished EDITOR & PUBLISHER with what he said was the first publicity release. It was dated April 1 and read in part as follows:

"With an increase of more than 4,000 per cent in the output of oil-heating devices in the last five years, and with more than 1,000,000 oil burners now in use, the American Oil Burner Association will hold its annual meeting in Buffalo on April 5th.

"The rapid increase in both the demand for oil as a fuel for home and other building heating, and for oil burners, has introduced a new American industry whose rise is comparable only to that of the radio and automatic refrigerator industries. In the last year alone more than 150,000 homes were equipped with oil heaters, according to Mr. Leod D. Becker, Secretary of the Association. The capital represented today in the oil burner industry is in excess of $40,000,000, and the value of last year's output was over $100,000,000. The fact that there are fifteen million homes in America which it may be expected will be equipped with oil-burners in the next few years gives some idea of the present demands upon the industry. And the prospect of the improved appearance, ease and comfort of the American home of the future along these lines has been the subject of much comment and discussion. So have the effects of the growing use of oil for heating purposes upon the oil-refining industry.

"The rapid rise of the oil-burner industry has been attended by many problems requiring the co-ordination of the manufacturers among themselves in the standardization of equipment and fuels, and with distributors and dealers on installation practices and service to the home owner."

A second publicity release dated Buffalo, April 3, reads in part:

"At a special meeting of the executives of the American Oil Burner Association, which holds its annual meeting here next week, the Oil Heating Institute has been formed.

"This Institute will be a subsidiary organization of the American Oil Burners Association, and its activities will be devoted to research and the dissemination of reliable facts about oil-heating, looking to the constant improvement in the service of oil-heating for home purposes.

"Thus the Oil Heating Institute becomes the first organization created for the express purpose of educating the public in the uses of mechanical devices making for the greater ease and comfort of living.

"It is probable that more than $250,000 will be used by the institute in the first year of its work.

"The research activities of the institute will be carried on by its engineers who study standardization of fuels and the establishment of uniform grades. Also, it will compile and prepare accurate data on the economic and other advantages of oil as a fuel heat from the record of its rapidly growing use not only in homes but also in its almost universal use in the largest ships and in many industries today.

"In the dissemination of facts about oil as a fuel heat, emphasis will be laid on the education of home owners. One of the members of the executive committee has pointed out that, although the average American is well informed on how to take care of his automobile, only a few know how to really take care of a heating apparatus for the home.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is responsible for the italics in the press agent handouts reproduced above. The statements are italicized for the purpose of comparison with some quotations taken from the full page advertisement which will appear in the Saturday Evening Post on June 4, and subsequently in 14 other magazines.

When Mr. Barnhill "sold" the leaders of the American Oil Burner Association on the magazine campaign he told them that since it would cost about $15,000 a month for copy containing 1,500 words they could figure the detailed cost of the magazine advertisements at $15 a word.

Following, therefore, are statements worth $15 a word to the magazines, which the Oil Heating Institute thought newspapers should print for nothing. (Taken from proof of an advertisement copyright 1927 by the Oil Heating Institute and scheduled for publication in the Saturday Evening Post, June 4. Permission for publication was obtained by EDITOR & PUBLISHER from Mr. Barnhill.)

"To give the public a full and accurate understanding of the many benefits of oil heating, the Oil Heating Institute was founded. It is composed of leading manufacturers of oil heating equipment who have a combined invested capital of over $40,000,000. They are well organized, soundly financed, and thoroughly qualified in experience, technical skill and manufacturing ability to render permanently satisfactory service to the public.

"These manufacturers realize that domestic oil heating is of nationwide interest and importance * * *. It is the agreed policy of the members of the Oil Heating Institute to serve the public not only in providing equipment, but in assuring permanent heating satisfaction."

And still quoting from the advertisement:

"During 1926 alone, approximately 100,000 homes were equipped with oil heating systems."

It is curious to note that in the free hand-out the number of homes equipped was estimated at 150,000.

Mr. Barnhill quite some time ago, he said, worked for the New York Evening Post.

(Continued on page 44)

WORK STARTED ON NEW FOUR-STORY PLANT OF ROCHESTER TIMES-UNION

Architects drawing of new Times-Union plant

WORK started last week on the excavation for the sub-basement of the new four-story plant for the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union, published by Frank E. Gannett. It will be located at Broad and Exchange streets, and will be ready for occupancy early in 1928.

A feature of the building will be a series of six windows, each fourteen feet in width, along the Broad street side of the first floor. Through these windows the presses will be visible from the street.

The press room on the first floor, will be thirty feet in height. It will occupy the entire floor save for the business offices which will extend along Exchange street.

The extra height of the press room will give a mezzanine floor which will be occupied by the circulation department. As the papers come from the presses they will be carried by a belt to the mailing rooms in the mezzanine and thence, through two shutes, direct to the shipping platform on the Pine street side of the building. On the mezzanine floor, also, will be separate waiting rooms for the carriers and the newsboys.

On the second floor will be the business and advertising offices. Also on this floor will be the office of Roy C. Kates, general manager of the Times-Union. Beyond this will be the advertising department. The editorial department and the office of Norman Nairn, managing editor, will lie west of the business office. Beyond will be the studio and dark room for the staff photographer and the engraving department. At one side of the editorial room will be the rooms of the wire operators.

The composing room and stereotyping department will occupy the third floor.

On the fourth floor will be the offices of Frank E. Gannett and his assistants.

ED HOWE OF KANSAS IS HONORED ON 60TH YEAR IN JOURNALISM

Cyrus H. K. Curtis Presents Clock to Veteran Editor at Biltmore Banquet—Irvin S. Cobb Toastmaster—Howe Celebrates 73rd Year

A CLOCK was presented to Edgar Watson Howe, the "Sage of Potato Hill," at a dinner given in his honor last Friday at the Biltmore Hotel in New York by a group of writers, editors and publishers. The presentation speech was made by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, who spoke about "the blessings of old age."

Mr. Howe was 73 years old on May 3. All but 13 of these years he has spent in newspaper work, starting as a printer back in the days just after the Civil War.

Speakers at the dinner referred to him variously as a "Kansas Diogenes," a teacher, a "lean-minded exponent of philosophy."

When it came his turn to speak, Mr. Howe said he had reached the time of life when ladies kissed him good-bye and he did not much care for it.

He told how, as editor and publisher of the Atchison (Kan.) Globe he tried to make Atchison rival Kansas City, but confessed there were now 2,000 fewer people in his home city than when he started the campaign.

Irvin S. Cobb was toastmaster at the dinner. He introduced Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, publisher of the Topeka (Kan.) Capital as the first speaker. Other speakers were Robert H. Davis, editor of Munsey's magazine, and Rupert Hughes.

Mr. Howe's big claim to fame is his authorship of "The Story of a Country Town" which dates back to 1883. He has since written many other books, including a number made up of clippings from Ed Howe's Monthly. Some of the titles are "Ventures in Common Sense," "The Anthology of Another Town"; and "Travel Letters from New Zealand, Australia and Africa."

Writing in the New York World last week, Harry Hansen who conducts the "First Reader" column commented in part as follows on "The Story of a Country Town:"

"'The Story of a Country Town' is naturalism—plain, straightforward narrative without any romance or illusion in it, and also without any inward glow. It fits into our time because, after forty years, our dominant writers are those who look life unflinchingly between the eyes. But despite Howe's pioneering it would be folly to say that he founded a school, or was the father of Dreiser or Lewis. He was merely himself, and for a long time remained a voice crying in the wilderness.

"You will get a better idea of what a strange child 'The Story of a Country Town' was when you remember that it appeared when Henry James was writing 'The Bostonians;' George W. Cable was fashioning 'Creole Days;' Mark Twain was writing 'Life on the Mississippi;' Joel Chandler Harris was listening to Br'er Rabbit; Frank R. Stockton, Edward Everett Hale, Celia Thaxter and Bliss Carman were among the elect. Fashionable audiences went to the theatre to see Salvini, Booth, Irving, Barrett, Modjeska and Bernhardt. And Joe Pennell and Elizabeth Robins Pennell were pedaling up and down Italy and writing fascinating travel sketches, and Andre Castaigne was drawing for the Century.

"Howe has the typical attitude of the American provincial towards foreigners. He hates the sea because he is of the prairie. He cannot understand those strange persons who pretend to like ship voyages.' He hates foreign cooking. This is typical.

"'Australians have a little of the swagger and strut you detect in Chicago people, whereas New Zealanders are as modest as people living in St. Louis or any less prosperous and enterprising city.'

"He gets his effects by putting a universal human trait into a specific homely mold. When he tells about the man who used to smoke five-cent cigars until a traveling salesman gave him a twenty-cent cigar—'and it made him sick'—he has written a whole essay. When he advises you to be better than average because average wages are pretty low he has preached a whole sermon. His humor it not what you call infectious, but it comes out of a corner of his mouth."

PUBLISHER BUYS HUGE PULP TIMBER STAND

George T. Cameron of San Francisco Chronicle and Associates Get 835,000,000 Cubic Feet in Alaska

The bid of George T. Cameron, president of the San Francisco Chronicle, and associates for the purchase of 835,000,000 cubic feet of pulp timber in the vicinity of Juneau, Alaska, was accepted in Washington, April 30, by the Forest Service.

Mr. Cameron and his associates submitted the only offer, agreeing to pay the minimum prices set forth in advertisements for bids of 60 cents per hundred cubic feet for spruce pulpwood and thirty cents per 100 cubic feet for hemlock pulpwood.

The contract awarded was the second made recently by the government, the two being the largest timber sales ever made by the Forest Service.

The contract requires the construction of a paper mill of at least 200 tons daily capacity and its enlargement within 15 years to a minimum capacity of 400 tons.

The Cameron group has filed with the Federal Power Commission an application for a power permit covering Long and Crater Lakes, in Port Snettisham.

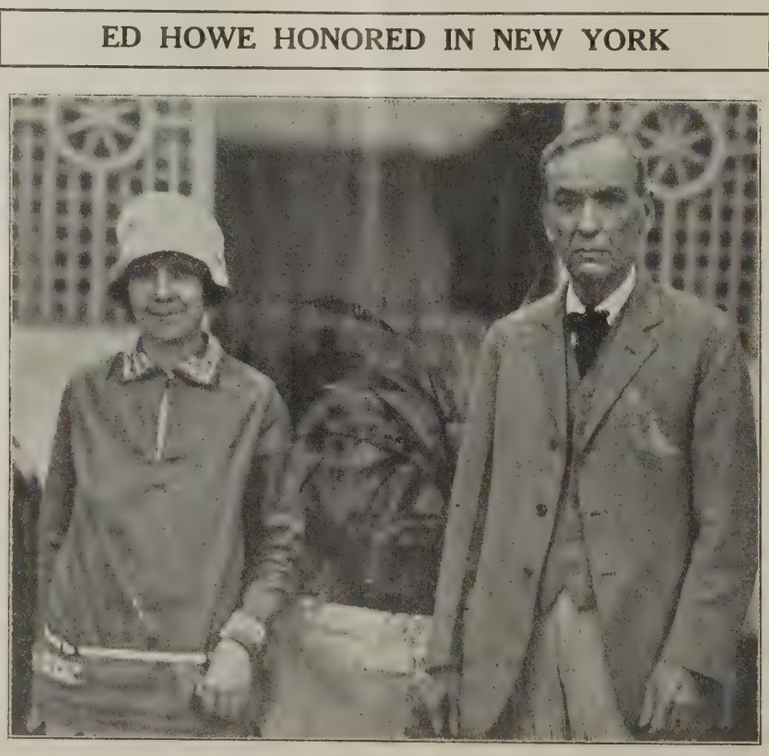
NEW I. P. STOCK ISSUE

To Raise $15,000,000 in $30 Shares to Cover Wood Purchase

New financing through the issuance of 500,000 shares of common stock will be undertaken shortly by the International Paper Company. The new issue, underwritten by the International Securities Company, will be offered to stockholders of record May 16 in the ratio of one new share for each share held on that date.

The subscription price has been set at $30 a share, compared with a closing market quotation May 3, the date of the announcement.

The sale of this additional stock at 30 will raise $15,000,000 for the company, which will be used to reimburse the treasury for recent large purchases of timber land and the expansion of its plants.



The last financing carried out by International Paper was last October, when an issue of $25,000,000 in 6 per cent convertible debentures was publicly sold at 98 by a syndicate of bankers.

The company's total funded debt totals $71,615,100, while its outstanding capital stock consists of $28,952,700 in 7 per cent cumulative preferred, $2,867,300 in 6 per cent cumulative preferred and 500,000 shares of no par value common. There is an authorized issue of 1,000,000 shares of common.

TWO CONFERENCES LED TO A. P. SETTLEMENT

IN its account of the Associated Press bond and protest action last week EDITOR & PUBLISHER made it appear that the negotiations were between President Frank B. Noyes and John Francis Neylan and that there was but one conference. This statement was incomplete. The negotiations resulted from correspondence between A. H. Vandenberg and President Noyes and the first conference was attended by Mr. Noyes, John W. Davis, counsel for the Associated Press; Mr. Vandenberg, Col. Robert Ewing and Mr. Neylan. Satisfactory progress was made at this conference and a second conference was called, attended by all those present at the first meeting and also A. P. Directors Maj. Robert McLean and J. R. Knowland. After several hours' discussion this conference recommended that the entire bond and protest right matter be referred to the commitee of six. This was done.

ED HOWE HONORED IN NEW YORK

Edgar W. Howe photographed in Florida, with his niece Adelaide Howe, where they spent a part of the winter.

STRONG TO TELL I. A. ADVERTISING PLANS

Chicago Publisher to Speak at Advertising Commission Meeting in Baltimore May 10-11—Program Completed

Walter A. Strong, publisher of Chicago Daily News will outline p of the Advertising Commission of International Advertising Associa to "advertise advertising" at the c mission's meeting to be held in B more May 10-11.

The program, announced by Frank McClure, Chicago, chairman the commission, will also include ports of special committees on uni educational courses in advertising on the functions of the commiss Specific functions of two media—s cialties and directories—will be cussed respectively by Mrs. Ber Blackwood, Chicago, and Colonel H. Burdick, Detroit.

Other speakers will be C. K. Wo bridge, president, and Earle Pears general manager of the I. A. A.; H T. Cherington of J. Walter Thomp Company; Frank M. Surface, ch Domestic Commerce Division Bur of Foreign and Domestic Commer Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Ma land; Howard C. Jackson, Mayor Baltimore; Dr. Charles Stelzle, N York, who will discuss a recent tional Go-to-Church campaign, George J. Cadwell, American Writ Paper Company, "Standardization Papers."

Retail, agency, direct mail, s managers and Better Business Bur departmental sessions are also sch uled.

A tour of Chesapeake Bay will be entertainment feature.

WINS FREIGHT REDUCTION

Chicago Tribune Gets 50c a Ton From Canadian Roads

The traffic department of the Chic Tribune has succeeded in obtaining a reduction of 50 cents a ton from Canadian National and Grand Trunk r roads on newsprint shipped from Thor to Chicago, thereby saving the Trib approximately $47,000 a year.

The Tribune took the stand that it being charged too much proportiona for the transportation of its paper fr Thorold and Tonawanda to Chica The reasons were placed before the Int state Commerce commission last Dec ber, with 30 pages of drawings and gra to show that the Thorold rate was high. Another booklet with 21 pages graphic exhibits was submitted on situation from Tonawanda.

The Canadian National and Gra Trunk railroads offered the Trib a flat reduction of 50 cents ton on newsprint shipped from Thor and the offer was accepted. The Trib withdrew its complaint insofar as affected Thorold.

The paper is continuing its fight agai the New York Central, however, to h the freight rate from Tonawanda to C cago reduced.

TAX REFUND DENIED

Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Gazette-Republica $14,497 Claim Is Disallowed

The board of tax appeal has ru against the Cedar Rapids, Ia., Gaz Company, publishers of the Gazette-publican in its $14,497 tax refund c The company sought to include $15, annually for the years 1919-21 in inves capital account. In former years amount had been spent in building cir lation. The board also refused to all $35,700 spent in building up a refere library of information, news matters pictures to be included as capital inve ment and a deduction of $4,135 for am tization of library expenses was allowed.

TOLEDO BLADE OCCUPIES $1,500,000 PLANT resident Coolidge Pushes Key Setting Huge New Presses in Motion May 2—100,000 Square Feet of Floor Space in Two Story Building—Notables Felicitate Paul Block, Publisher

HE Toledo Blade took possession of its new $1,500,000 home on Monday ay 2.

Promptly at 9:30 o'clock in the morning esident Coolidge, seated in the East om of the White House, opened the mous golden key which released the ctrical energy that set in motion the ttery of new presses, publishing the st edition of the day in the new build-g.

Gathered in the Blade's huge new press-om were the executives of that news-

Completed plant of Toledo Blade

aper and invited guests. These included aul Block, president and publisher of the lade; Mayor Mery of Toledo, and mem-ers of his official family; Adam Kuhl-an, president of the Toledo Chamber of ommerce and other prominent citizens.

Scores of congratulatory letters were eceived by Mr. Block and the Blade, in-uding expressions from President oolidge, Governor Alfred E. Smith of ew York, Senators Frank B. Willis and . D. Fess of Ohio, Nicholas Longworth, peaker of the House of Representatives; enator Couzens of Michigan and Mayor ames J. Walker of New York City.

The President's letter of congratulation ollows:

"My dear Mr. Block: It is a pleasure to xtend my congratulations to you and the itizens of Toledo upon the opening of the ew building of the Toledo Blade. I am lad to hear of the progress made by this nfluential journal since you have taken old of it.

"Best wishes for continued success.

"Very truly yours,
(Signed) "Calvin Coolidge."

Governor Smith wrote Mr. Block as ollows:

"Dear Mr. Block: I want to congratu-ate the Toledo Blade, as well as yourself, n this, the first day in the fine new plant o which your paper has just moved.

"I know the excellent, as well as in-luential, standing of the Blade in its erritory and knowing you as I do I am ure it will continue to have the kind of irection which a newspaper should have nd which the people of the community eserve.

"I congratulate you and wish the oledo Blade continued success.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "Alfred E. Smith
"Governor of New York."

The speaker of the House sent the fol-owing felicitations:

"My dear Mr. Block: I want to extend ny best wishes to the Blade in its new nd beautiful home.

"The Blade has been one of the out-standing newspapers of the country for many years, and today its influence is greater than ever.

"I congratulate you and wish you well.

"Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) "Nicholas Longworth
"Speaker House of Representatives."

The task of moving the Blade from the building it had occupied for the past 30 years to the new home was accomplished without a single edition being missed or being delayed one minute. Every one of the more than 350 employes was assigned a part in the moving. A change from the old to the new was made with a conspicuous absence of confusion and disorder. Not one of the 50,000 advertising cuts and mats was mislaid or lost.

The moving was started on the morning of April 30 and when the presses had finished the last edition of that day, the new presses in the new home were ready to take on the task of printing the next edition of the Blade.

The new Blade building has a total frontage of 312 feet and a depth of 110 feet. Bedford stone, Italian marble and brick were the materials used in its construction. It is steel reinforced throughout and is absolutely fireproof. There are two floors with a mezzanine between, a basement and a sub-basement, providing more than 100,000 square feet of floor space.

All the departments have the advantage of an abundance of natural light, the building containing 23,300 square feet of glass, representing more than 3,000 separate panes. In the construction of the building, 685 tons of structural steel and 100 tons of reinforcing steel were used. It required five miles of steel pipes for plumbing and heating purposes, 105,000 feet of wire and nearly 6,000 electrical connections.

The entire building is scientifically ventilated in a manner that provides a complete change of air throughout every 19 minutes. The air is washed and kept free from the dust and dirt that ordinarily permeates the atmosphere. It is not necessary to open a window to ventilate or keep the building cool.

The new Blade building is of Spanish Renaissance architecture carrying out the early traditions of Toledo, O., which was named after Toledo, Spain. Thus also was inspired the name of the Toledo Blade, suggested by the famous blades of Toledo, Spain. Fifty-one years ago at the Philadelphia Centennial exposition the city of Toledo, Spain presented to the Toledo Blade a beautiful coat of arms. The presentation was made through the American Ambassador to Spain. The coat of arms consists of a full sized Toledo Blade crossed over its own scabbard, with the shield of Toledo, Spain above and the bright colors of Spain for a background. This tribute adorns the walls of the business office.

The Blade's business office occupies one-half of the entire ground floor and has three subdivisions—one for the accounting department, one for the classified advertising and the third for the local display advertising. A spacious lobby connects all three departments. The floors of the business office are laid in Tennessee marble and the counters are covered with black terrara glass. The business office is finished in black walnut and furnished with new metal furniture to match.

The pressroom which occupies one-half of the ground floor and basement is equipped with new 16 unit low construction super-speed Goss presses in a straight line, all in view from the outside through large windows making a line 160 feet long. The presses are equipped with Cline reels and have a maximum capacity of 210,000 twenty-four page papers an hour or 84,000 fifty-two to sixty-four page papers per hour.

View of Toledo Blade business office

Steel tables with a total length of 150 feet parallel the row of presses and from these the papers are carried by conveyors to the loading platforms to a fleet of 20 trucks. All loading and unloading is done under cover, in a driveway that has three exits to the streets. In this way, the delivery of papers is expedited without lost motion or delay.

The front half of the second floor is occupied by the executive offices, the editorial department and by the circulation department. Saw tooth skylights and spacious windows make artificial light unnecessary during the daylight hours.

In the composing room which occupies the rear half of the second floor there are installed 20 new linotype machines, augmented by monotypes, giant type casters and other type making units.

The stereotyping department is equipped with new machinery throughout, including a double junior autoplate capable of producing 360 plates an hour. The Blade adopted the dry mat system with the first edition in its new home and also changed its columns from 12½ ems to 12 ems.

In the basement there is storage room for 60 carloads of paper. To handle this the Blade has installed a miniature railway system, electric loaders and tiering machines, making it possible for one man to handle unassisted three carloads of paper a day.

The Toledo Blade was first established as a weekly in 1836, a year or two after Toledo was incorporated as a city and when the total population was about 1,000. In 1848, the Blade began its career as a daily newspaper. It is now the oldest business institution in Toledo, entering upon its 91st year.

Invited guests and executives of the Blade were grouped around the press when the first papers to be issued from the new building were printed. Others stood on the balcony overlooking the pressroom.

Paul Block, president and publisher, was accompanied to Toledo by his young son, Billy. Associates who were in his party included: Charles J. Boyle, vice-president of Paul Block, Inc.; Arthur Thurnau, vice-president of Paul Block, Inc.; Harry J. Auth, general manager of the Newark Star-Eagle; Daniel Nicoll, assistant to the president; Gilbert Falk, business manager of the Newark Star-Eagle, and Herbert Haskell, Frank K. Curtis, Fred Salsman and Paul Frank.

A. B. C. DIRECTORS MEET

Newspaper Bulk Sales Discussed—Conybeare Named a Director

A general discussion of bulk sales of newspapers was held before the April meeting of the board of directors of the Audit Bureau of Circulations at the Astor Hotel, New York, last Friday. No changes in the present rules were effected. The next meeting of the board will be held in Chicago, May 24.

S. E. Conybeare, of the Armstrong Cork Company, Lancaster, Pa., and president of the Association of National Advertisers was elected a director to succeed B. H. Bramble, formerly of the American Chicle Company, who has joined the Baker Advertising Agency, Toronto.

NEW COAST SERVICE

Pacific Coast News Service, a new service having for its purpose a more intensive coverage and dissemination of California news, began operation on April 25. Its headquarters will be in Los Angeles. Its president is Dr. Frank F. Barham, publisher of the Los Angeles Evening Herald.

FORUM ON NEWSPAPERS A FEATURE OF ADVERTISERS DETROIT MEET MAY 9

National Group to Celebrate 17th Anniversary—Copy Research, Market Analysis and Dealer Co-operation Program Topics

A group of leaders of the Association of National Advertisers snapped last week at the Waldorf-Astoria, where they attended the luncheon of the 100,000 Group of American Cities. Reading left to right (seated) Philip L. Thomson, publicity director, Western Electric Company; Ida Clarke, advertising contractor, Scott & Baume; Samuel E. Conybeare, advertising manager, Armstrong Cork Company, and A. N. A. president; Edward T. Hall, vice-president, Ralston-Purina Company. (Standing) E. D. Hess, president, Keystone Pecan Company; Merle B. Bates, advertising manager, Life Savers, Inc.; George Dock, Jr., advertising manager, William R. Compton Company; C. F. Beatty, formerly of the New Jersey Zinc Company, now with an advertising agency; Gilbert H. Durston; William A. Hart, director of advertising, E. I. duPont de Nemours Company; and Arthur H. Ogle, secretary and treasurer of A. N. A.

A COMPLETE program for the semi-annual convention of the Association of National Advertisers to be held in Detroit, May 9-11, was announced this week in New York. The association will celebrate its 17th anniversary at the meeting. Fifteen of the founders are still actively engaged in some phase of advertising or marketing and a number of them, including E. St. Elmo Lewis, the association's first president, and O. C. Harn, who succeeded him, will attend the banquet May 10.

The subject of the Detroit convention is "Laying the Foundation of an Advertising Campaign," under which will be discussed market analysis, copy research, mediums including radio, dealer co-operation, the place of advertised products in the department store. The complete program of addresses follows:

MONDAY, May 9: Principles of Industrial Advertising, Malcolm Muir, vice-president, McGraw-Hill Publishing Company.

Educational Advertising and Industrial Marketing, W. L. Towne, General Electric Company.

An Inquiry Into Business Paper Rates, W. S. Lockwood, advertising manager, Johns-Manville, Inc.

The Nationally Advertised Product in the Department Store, Ralph Yonkers, advertising manager, the J. L. Hudson Company.

The A.N.A. Newspaper Program—A Members' Forum, discussion led by Verne Burnett, secretary, advertising committee, General Motors Corporation and chairman, A.N.A. Newspaper Committee.

TUESDAY, May 10: Can Engineering Principles Be Applied to Advertising? C. F. Kettering, President, General Motors Research Corporation, vice-president, General Motors Corporation.

Trading Areas as a Basis for Market Analysis, T. O. Grissell, George Batten Company.

Stalking the Prospect, Professor John L. Brumm, University of Michigan.

Testing the Copy Appeal, Claude C. Hopkins, advertising counselor.

Luncheon: 12:30 p.m. with Detroit Adcraft Club.

Known Facts About Circulation and How to Use Them, O. C. Harn, managing director, Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Magazines as a Primary Medium, Lee H. Bristol, secretary, Bristol-Myers Company.

Formal dinner at 7 p.m. to be addressed by Theodore F. MacManus, MacManus, Inc. and James Schermerhorn, both of Detroit.

WEDNESDAY, May 11: Newspapers as a Primary Medium, J. C. McQuiston, advertising manager, Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co.

Radio as an Advertising Medium, Merlin H. Aylesworth, president, National Broadcasting Company.

Members' Experiences With Radio Advertising, W. Russell Green, advertising manager, The Charles E. Hires Company; J. A. Taylor, general sales manager, W. S. Quinby Company.

Selling Advertising Material to the Dealer, Marshall B. Cutler, advertising manager, J. P. Smith Shoe Company.

TO PAY 35 PER CENT

Court Allows Bankrupt Rochester Paper to Pay Creditors That Amount

Permission to pay 35 per cent on the creditors' claims against the defunct Rochester (N. Y.) Herald Company, was granted John W. Remington and John W. Baker, receivers, in a report filed in Federal court at Buffalo. Judge Hazel signed the order.

The report showed receipts of $787,623 since August 3, 1925, and disbursements of $505,008.

The receivers asked that the $282,623 surplus remaining in the bank be used to permit a 35 per cent payment to creditors. The $100,461 remaining after the payment would be held until final settlement, when an additional 15 per cent will be made.

The receivers asked payment of $7,500 back for their work, and $20.000 payment to Harris, Beach, Harris & Matson, attorneys who collected $12,511 from subscribers and $75,478 from advertisers as a result of judgments returned on 100 cases brought in Rochester.

The newspaper equipment and property was sold in February to the Rochester Printing company and publication was suspended in February, 1926.

N. Y. NEWSPAPER CLUB ELECTS LYNCH

Herald Tribune Man Beats Lee by 2 Votes for Presidency—Administration Candidates All Win at May 2 Election

By the close vote of 75 to 73, Denis Tilden Lynch, of the New York Herald Tribune, defeated James Melvin Lee, of the School of Journalism, New York University, for the presidency of the New York Newspaper Club at the annual elections held May 2.

DENNIS T. LYNCH

The chief plank in Lynch's program was "a bigger and better club house." He was the administration candidate. Mr. Lee, choice of the progressive party in the club, made no mention of this ambition of the club in his campaign literature in which he promised more social entertainments, with speakers on journalism, better food in the restaurant, and better books in the library.

Louis W. Fehr defeated Charles W. Sutherland for first vice-president, 77 to 72; Joseph L. Cohn was ahead of Louis D. Edwards for second vice-president 78 to 71.

Other officers were candidates on both parties and were elected as follows: Frank E. Perley, treasurer; James C. Dalton, recording secretary; and Leslie H. Allen, corresponding secretary.

Administration directors were all elected. They are: William P. Beazell, Harry D. Kingsbury, Sylvester S. May, Michael V. Casey, and Oscar St. T. Armes. Associate directors are L. J. DeBekker and Robert E. Livingston.

Mr. Lynch has been actively engaged in newspaper work since 1902. Sixteen years of that time he has been with the New York Herald Tribune and the old Tribune.

Mr. Lynch's first job was with the New York American as a cub reporter. He also worked with the Brooklyn Standard-Union and the old Daily News, doing general work and politics, and with the Leslie Syndicate, in charge of fiction and special articles.

For a short time he was on the Boston Post, and then returned to New York with the City News Association as rewrite man, police court reporter and general assignment man.

From the City News he came to the Tribune under George Burdick and Arthur Draper and has been with the organization ever since. He started doing general assignments, but shortly went into political reporting.

Mr. Lynch covered the Legislature at Albany for the Tribune for the first time during the 1914 session, and every year after that until 1924. In 1915 he covered the Constitutional convention.

Throughout his service in Albany Mr. Lynch was a member and officer of the Albany Legislature Correspondents' Association, and for two years was Chairman of the Board of Directors.

MIAMI EDITOR HELD FOR CRIMINAL LIBEL

Tom Arnold of Tribune Out on $1,500 Bond in Action Brought By Political Candidate Based on Editorial

Tom Arnold, managing editor of the Miami (Fla.) Tribune, which recently discontinued as a daily and now appears as a weekly, is at liberty on a $1,500 bond to answer a charge of criminal libel preferred against him, as the climax of a municipal election campaign, by E. G. Sewell, a candidate for city commissioner. Mr. Arnold was arrested by a deputy sheriff and was held at the County Jail for a few hours until bail bond had been executed.

The charge of criminal libel against Mr. Arnold followed publication in the Tribune of a front page editorial under date of April 22, in which it was asserted that "forgery and duplication" had been used in obtaining signatures to the petition required to bring Mr. Sewell before the voters as a candidate for nomination to the city commission. The Tribune article intimated that there had been a large number of duplication of names and addresses and that in addition to this the name of one George Moses had been forged to the document.

Mr. Sewell also took exception to another editorial in the same issue referring to him as a "brass collared spaniel whose chain is held by Frank B. Shutts." Mr. Shutts is publisher of the Miami Herald. Mr. Sewell's complaint recites that publication of the Tribune editorials were such as "to incite to a violation of the criminal law."

Following his release Mr. Arnold produced a letter signed "George Moses" which represents Moses as having said: "I did not sign that petition for Mr. Sewell, the name and address is a forgery." Preliminary hearing in the case has been set for next week. Conviction on a criminal libel charge in Florida provides a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year.

DINNER FOR PERSHING

Six Paris Correspondents Who Covered War Honor U. S. General

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

PARIS, April 22.—Celebrating the tenth anniversary of the entry of the United States into the World War and their first official meeting, six former war correspondents, all of them still stationed in Paris, last night fought again the battles of the Western front with General John J. Pershing, who was their guest at a private dinner in his honor at a Paris restaurant.

For several hours between courses and over the liqueurs, the Commander-in-Chief of the A. E. F. and the men who "covered" the American fighting, recalled war-time incidents and discussed conditions in post-war Europe. They also exchanged views on the forthcoming American Legion Convention in Paris and the meaning of Franco-American understanding.

The war correspondents honoring General Pershing were Percy Noel, war correspondent for the Chicago Daily News; Henry Wales, Chicago Tribune; Guy Hicock, Brooklyn Daily Eagle; Edwin James, New York Times; Wilbur Forrest, New York Herald Tribune, and Floyd Gibbons, Chicago Tribune.

RACING DAILY RAIDED

Police, on April 30, visited the office of The Sportsman, a Montreal daily racing publication, known as "the green sheet," arrested the proprietor, his brother, and seven employes, and seized telegraph and telephone equipment, printing plates and copies of the paper. Sergeant Detective Gilbert Laverdiere, in charge of the party, charged the owner Ivan Kuranoff, and his brother, Irving, with furnishing bookmakers with information.

READERS VOTE THEIR PAPER "A LIVING WAGE"

Majority of Duluth News Tribune Subscribers Agree to 50 Per Cent Boost in Price, Following Appeal Made by Reed Taft Bayne, Publisher—Circulation Increases

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

OW subscribers of the Duluth News Tribune voted to raise the subscrip- price 50 per cent was told last week Reed Taft Bayne, president of the lishing company.

Ir. Bayne had purchased the paper ear ago last June. Two years ago previous owners had reduced the e of the home-delivered News bune from 18 cents a week to 10 s. Mr. Bayne thought this was un- nomic and said so.

Don't boost the price now," he was ised. "You'll lose too much circula- . Better wait a while."

ut Mr. Bayne was not disposed to t.

I'll tell you what we'll do," he said. e'll have our readers vote whether not they are willing to pay more ney for a better paper."

here was fear and trembling in the e of the News Tribune when Mr. ne insisted on carrying out his azy" plan. The attitude was changed month, however, when the April ernment statement was published. e statement showed a sworn circula- of 33,429. One year ago at the 10- t rate, the average circulation was 57.

he story of a 50 per cent increase price that increased circulation repre- ts a well organized direct-by-mail paign engineered by Mr. Bayne. It an on Dec. 16, when in a long letter all subscribers Mr. Bayne sought to nd them out on whether or not they ld be willing to pay more money for improved newspaper.

In this initial letter the publisher told readers frankly about increased cost newspaper production. He told how had added more Associated Press es and new syndicate features.

As a matter of fact," he wrote, "we spending $18,000 a year more on ss service, news features and pictures n we did when the price of the paper 18 cents a week.

And this is only an example of the y in which the cost of producing the er has increased in other ways. Our nters have just been given the second rease in pay granted since the 10- t-a-week rate went into effect. Our nters are members of the typographical on and I am glad of it. Union nters are high-class workmen who can depended on, but the two increases in demanded and obtained have not n easy to meet under present condi- ns.

If we are to continue our policy of ing you a bigger and better paper add, as I want to add, the big league tures of a metropolitan newspaper we st have more revenue.

With the kind of a newspaper we trying to run there are only two rces of obtaining more revenue and t is from the advertiser or the sub- iber.

I am not in this letter asking you an increase in subscription rates. But ould like to publish a paper of which might really be proud, and sometime rtly, I may ask for a partial, not en- , restoration of the old rate."

The next letter Mr. Bayne wrote was ask the readers to vote on whether not the price should be increased. e letters were delivered by the carriers enclosed with them was a ballot, viding for a negative or affirmative e.

The ballot itself was not without chological significance. It was a card asuring about eight by two inches and ided in half with a dotted line for y tearing. One half was white and s the affirmative vote; the other was low and asked for the reader's signa- e to the following declaration:

'If the price of the News Tribune is ced at 15 cents a week for seven issues, daily and Sunday, I feel that I will have to stop the paper."

"Of course we chose the yellow color on purpose," Mr. Bayne said. "Many of the letters that resulted from our campaign contained comments denying the writers had 'yellow streaks' in them."

The other half of the coupon asked readers' signatures to the following:

"In order that the News Tribune may keep improving and give the people in this territory a real metropolitan daily and Sunday newspaper, independent in news and editorial policy, I am willing to give the paper a fair trial at the 15-cent-a-week rate, with the understanding that I can stop the paper any time I am dissatisfied."

In the letter accompanying the voting coupons, Mr. Bayne declared he would not be satisfied if only a bare majority were willing "to grant us a better rate."

"I want this thing to go over by an overwhelming majority or not at all," he wrote.

"I am not asking for a full restoration of the old rate of 18 cents a week, although that doubtless would be justified.

"If the News Tribune is to maintain its independence and editorial honesty, refusing dictation from any political party or special interest, then it can have only two sources of revenue, from its advertisers and from its subscribers.

"That is why I am asking a living wage for the News Tribune, because I want to keep it unbossed and independent, devoted solely to the best interests of this great community."

The carrier boys of the News Tribune took this second letter to the 22,000 subscribers represented on the "home delivered" list in the circulation books. Of this total about 19,000 are in Duluth and 3,000 in Superior.

Mr. Bayne said this week that a total of approximately 19,000 voted on the question and that 80 per cent agreed to the increase. The price was raised consequently, the first of this year.

"These votes proved very valuable to our circulation department," Mr. Bayne said. "We were able to call on all those who said they would be unwilling to pay the increased rate before we boosted the price. We did call on them, and were able to sell most of them before the increase went into effect.

"You can't imagine how valuable it is to know before hand who your kickers are going to be. Our carriers went right to work on the 'yellow' crowd and out of every 30 who said they would drop, only three carried out the threat.

"During the worst period, the biggest drop we had was 1,600.

"So confident were we that there would be no permanent drop that we promised rebates to our advertisers if our circulation dropped and we are continuing these rebate promises.

Mr. Bayne was asked what he is doing with the extra nickels he is receiving from his subscribers each week.

"We give one cent more to our carrier boy," he said, "Another half-cent goes into a bonus fund to be distributed among carriers for excellence in service; and the remaining three and a half cents out of every nickel goes to the News-Tribune, thank you very much."

The full text of the two letters which formed the basis of the News Tribune's campaign are printed herewith in the order of their delivery to the readers.

The first letter read:

December 16, 1926.

"Dear Subscriber: Speaking before a group of editors in Ohio the other day a well known newspaper man said there are four kinds of newspapers in the United States.

"First, there are the political organs, controlled by some political boss or party organization and obtaining a large part of their revenue from this source.

"The News Tribune refuses to wear a party muzzle or accept political dictation in the hope of gain or support.

"Second, said the speaker, are the newspapers that are taken care of by some special interest whose game they play in return for generous financial assistance.

"The News Tribune refuses to be that kind of a newspaper.

"Third are a few newspapers whose owners are sufficiently wealthy so that they can afford to lose a large amount of money for the personal satisfaction of publishing a newspaper which conforms to their ideals.

"But unfortunately, neither I nor my associates have the money to lose on that kind of venture.

"And fourth, according to the authority quoted, are the newspapers that are trying to represent and boost the community in which they are published, who are responsible only to their readers and whose news and editorial policy is honest and unbiased, because their entire financial support is derived solely from their subscribers and advertisers. This last is the kind of a newspaper the News Tribune is determined to be.

"I believe it is the kind of a newspaper that you and a great majority of its subscribers want it to be.

"Anyway, it is the only kind of a newspaper I will publish.

"This means that the News Tribune must obtain every cent of its support from legitimate advertising and subscription revenue.

"A year and one-half ago the price of the News Tribune was reduced from 18 cents to 10 cents a week. That is the lowest price charged for a seven day a week paper in any city in the United States, large or small, where the Sunday issue is without local competition.

"When we cut the price we increased the size and improved the quality of the paper. Do you realize that we are giving you almost twice as many pages a week for 10 cents as we once gave you for 18 cents?

"And not content with cutting the price and doubling the number of pages, we improved the quality. We added the metropolitan Associated Press wire to our regular state wire, so that Duluth is now the smallest city of the Middle West, and the News Tribune the only newspaper in Duluth that subscribes to it. This metropolitan wire enables us to give you the most complete and last minute dispatches on state, national and world events obtainable anywhere, as well as box scores and detailed news on sporting events. Six months ago we added a third wire to, being the complete New York stock market and other financial news.

"We are giving you the highest priced and most popular comics and features that money can buy.

"As a matter of fact, we are spending approximately $18,000 a year more on press service, news features and pictures than we did when the price of the paper was 18 cents a week.

"And this is only an example of the way in which the cost of producing the paper has increased in other ways. Our printers have just been given the second increase in pay

(Continued on page 42)

NEW YORK NEWSPAPER MEN VISIT FLEET IN HUDSON

A group of newspaper men and sport celebrities visited the fleet on May 3, in the Hudson River, as the guests of Frank Cheek, owner of the cabin cruiser "The Last Drop." They are, Left to right: (Standing on boat) Fred Fletcher, rod and gun editor, New York Herald Tribune; Frank Cheek; Young Kaufman; Orson Munn, of the Scientific American; Edward Egan, Tunney's sparring partner; John Stafford (behind Egan); Gene Tunney, heavyweight champion; "Big Bill" Edwards; Cornelius Vanderbilt, New York Daily Mirror; James Thompson, of the advertising department, Herald Tribune; Bernard Gimbel, E. G. Rich, city editor, Herald Tribune, and F. O. Thissell, Jr., of Boston.

JUDGE WARNS EDITORS OF CONTEMPT, BUT REFUSES TO HOLD THEM

Attorney for Accused Demands Commitment for Contempt but Court Merely Asks Close Supervision of Future Reports

THE handling by the press of reports of criminal trials figures in a situation which developed in Toronto on May 3. In opening the case on May 2 of the Crown vs. B. J. Brooks and Dr. O. C. J. Withrow charged with manslaughter and attempting to procure an illegal operation, the presiding judge, Mr. Justice Logie, said, "In the exercise of my discretion, I have decided to exclude the public from this case. The press will be allowed in. Of course, the press will use the discretion which the Toronto press always uses and will not send certain details of this case into every home in Toronto."

When the court opened on the morning of May 3, R. H. Greer, K. C. called the attention of the Judge to the reports carried by the Toronto Globe and the Toronto Mail and Empire. The jury was taken to an ante-room while the matter was under consideration. In the case of the Globe complaint was made of a heading, "Brooks flippant after Ruth's Death." In that of the Mail and Empire of a surmise as to a certain course to be taken and certain evidence that might or might not be brought out. The Judge declared that the references were quite improper but he did not think that there was sufficient reason to warrant calling for a new trial.

"So long as the courts in Canada maintain their independence the press must respect the rules devised for a fair trial," he remarked. "This sort of thing strikes at the root of a fair trial. Of course in such a case the contempt is not of the judge but of the court itself and of the court system."

Mr. Greer thereupon moved for the appearance of the persons responsible and the Judge made the order directing the Sheriff to see that the proper persons were summoned to appear at two o'clock.

Harry W. Anderson, managing editor of the Globe, and Murdock Macdonald, city editor of the Mail and Empire, appeared in court promptly at the hour. Once again the jury was removed. Mr. Greer moved for a committal of the two for contempt of court, alleging that the publication of such headlines and surmises might seriously interfere with the fair and impartial trial of the case. The Judge thereupon addressed the editors as follows:

"Counsel for the prisoner has moved to commit you for contempt of court in publishing first of all, in the Globe the glaring headlines complained of, and in the Mail and Empire the statement which you have heard read.

"It is only in very extreme cases that the extraordinary jurisdiction of the court to fine or commit a newspaper editor for contempt is resorted to. Here, in the Globe case, I think the heading, 'Brooks Flippant After Ruth's Death,' is perhaps a statement as it is in the headlines one that should not be made. It is true that the witness said that; but you make a headline of it—probably a mistake.

"As to the Mail and Empire publication referring to the statement of Ruth Dembner and the fact that it is to be contested is quite improper because it might interfere with a fair trial.

"I don't think they are extreme cases which should be dealt with harshly by this court; and perhaps, gentlemen, knowing the high standard on which both of you conduct your papers, that perhaps some additional supervision will be had over reporters so that complaint may not arise that fair trial has not been had by these men.

"That is just contempt of court—not contempt of the judge or anything of that kind; but interference with the administration of justice.

"Of course, after the trial, after everything is over, the jury and the court may be subject to the fairest criticism; and that is part of our system. If after a trial a newspaper thinks there has been a miscarriage of justice it is perfectly free to say so, but only because it does not prejudice a man at his trial.

"That is all I require of you. I hope you will see to your subordinates that for the rest of this trial statements are not published which are prejudicial to these men.

"You are now dismissed."

Commenting on the action of the Judge the Globe said editorially:

"The editor of the Globe was summoned to appear before Mr. Justice Logie yesterday, on motion of Mr. R. H. Greer, K. C., counsel for Mr. Bartlett J. Brooks, because of the wording of a heading on the report of the Brooks-Withrow trial. His Lordship took exception to the headline display of a point presented in evidence, which, although accurate in substance, might, he stated, prejudice subsequent witnesses. With the report itself no fault was found, the offense being wholly in the emphasizing through prominent type of an ex parte statement from the recorded testimony of a witness.

"The incident is a noteworthy illustration of the consistent even-handedness with which the Canadian courts administer justice. The Globe's report of the court proceedings conformed with its general policy of insisting upon accuracy, of omitting details which might be objectionable to a sensitive reader or might appeal to the morbidly inclined, and, accordingly, its record of the hearing, while comprehensive, was brief as compared with the lengthy reports in some other papers, but it made an error in judgment, Mr. Justice Logie thought, in selecting the point for its headline, and of this the Court promptly and properly took cognizance. 'Here in the Globe's case,' commented his Lordship, "I think the heading, 'Brooks Flippant After Ruth's Death,' is perhaps a statement, as it is in the headlines, which should not have been made. It is true a witness said that, but to make a headline of it is probably a mistake." It is this zeal in safeguarding the interests of all parties concerned and in seeing to it that there is no outside intrusion upon the precincts of justice, no matter how slight, which has gained for the law courts of this country the respect and confidence they enjoy and has made their pronouncements so effective."

STERRY APPEAL DENIED

Editor Sentenced for Blasphemous Libel Must Serve 60 Days

The appeal of E. V. Sterry, editor of the Christian Enquirer, against 60 days' imprisonment for blasphemous libel, was dismissed Wednesday by the second divisional court, Toronto.

Sterry was convicted March 15 by a jury of writings in his paper which tended to ridicule and blaspheme the Deity. One of the phrases he was accused of having written was a reference to God as "an irate old party."

PHOTOS PLEASE KERENSKY

Shows High Interest in Collection Filed in N. Y. Evening Post Morgue

Alexander Kerensky, former provisional president of Russia, had an odd experience last week while going through the new building, New York Evening Post at 75 West street, New York. Mr. Kerensky is the editor of a Russian liberal journal published in Paris and wished to see how an American newspaper office is organized. He told Ralph E. Renaud, managing editor of the Post, that he had an especial desire to see the "morgue" or reference library.

Mr. Renaud showed him the collection of envelopes containing the clippings on his career. Kerensky seemed indifferent. But when the stack of photographs of himself was shown him, Kerensky evinced great excitement and interest. There were pictures of him as a boy, as Minister of Justice under the Czar, and as president during his brief period of supreme power. Kerensky said that he had absolutely no copies of pictures such as these, because he had had to abandon everything when he fled from Russia to escape the Bolshevists.

He accepted Mr. Renaud's offer to send him copies of the pictures, and will take a complete collection of them back to France.

SLOCOMB SUCCEEDS WALTER

London Herald Man New Anglo-American Press Group Chief

At a special meeting following the regular weekly luncheon at the Hotel Petrograd, Paris, April 17, the members of the Anglo-American Press Association unanimously elected George Slocomb to succeed Hubert Walter, who resigned as president of the association several weeks ago because of ill health.

Mr. Slocomb is the Paris correspondent of the London Daily Herald. He recently returned from a visit to the United States and is a special contributor to the New York Herald Tribune and the New York Herald of Paris.

Mr. Walter was Paris correspondent for the London Times. He was elected president of the Anglo-American Press Association last December, but was forced to resign when his health broke.

David H. Loch, chief correspondent for the London Daily Telegraph, was elected British vice-president of the association to fill the place made vacant by Mr. Slocomb's election to the presidency.

TWO SOUTHERN GROUPS TAKING BOAT TRIPS

Alabama Editors Sailed Saturday for New York on Spring Outing—Georgia Press Members Sailing May 11 for Boston

Two groups of Southern editors, members of the Alabama Press Association and the Georgia Press Association, and their wives, are making steamship trips up the Atlantic coast for their spring outings.

The Alabama group gathered in Savannah this Saturday and after spending the day in the city as guests of the Savannah dailies, the Press and the Morning News, boarded the steamship City of Birmingham for a trip to New York.

The Alabama contingent was led by F. W. Stanley, editor of the Greenville Advocate, president of the association. R. B. Vail, of Bay Minette, is vice-president, and Horace Hall of the Dothan Eagle, is secretary-treasurer. J. C. Williams of the Talladega Times is the historian of the group.

A series of entertainments has been arranged for the visitors while in New York. They are to be there two or three days and will return on the same ship. Savannah will be reached May 15 and the members will go from there to their homes.

The Georgia Press Association will leave Savannah on the steamship City of Columbus the afternoon of May 11 for Boston. Their entertainment consists of several banquets in Boston given by the American Mutual Alliance, the Southern Club and local newspaper publishers. They will also visit New Hampshire where the Governor of the state will entertain them at Portsmouth on May 16. The return trip will place the editors back in Savannah May 21.

Enroute to Boston the visitors are to be entertained in Savannah before boarding ship. Mills B. Lane, president of a string of banks in Georgia and South Carolina, is to be host at a breakfast at his country estate near Savannah.

CASSEL RESIGNS FRO N. Y. EVENING WORL

Cartoonist Refused to Use His in Support of Smith for Presi- dent—Succeeded by Weed

Rather than draw a cartoon boos Gov. Alfred E. Smith as the Democr Presidential candidate, John H. Ca has resigned from the staff of the York Evening World, for which ne paper he has been political cartoonist the past 11 years. Clive Weed is successor.

Mr. Cassel is now in Silver M Conn., where he intends to spend summer vacation. EDITOR & PUBLIS reached him there by telephone. He that for more than a year the Eve World had known he was opposed Mr. Smith and that "if it came t show down," he would resign.

"I want to have it understood my opposition to Mr. Smith has noth to do with his religious views," Mr. C sel said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. just don't see him for President, is all. Perhaps it is more the Tamm touch than anything else."

Mr. Cassel also said that he war it made plain that his resignation fr the Evening World did not necessa mean that that newspaper had come definitely for Gov. Smith for Presid There were other personal reasons his resignation, he said, than the Sn cartoon incident.

For some time Mr. Cassel has b drawing cartoons regularly for American Legion Weekly in addition his work for the Evening World, he will continue this contract. He also considering several offers wh have been made to him by syndica since his resignation became known.

During the 11 years on the Even World, Mr. Cassel has drawn m than 4,000 cartoons, maintaining alw what many critics have agreed was high standard in pencil and charc These critics have praised him for "rugged strength" of line and the cle ness of conception. His war carto won particular praise.

Cassel was born in Nebraska C Neb. He obtained his art education the Chicago Art Institute. Before coming associated with the Even World he did magazine work, chiefly Life, Judge and Puck.

Herbert Pulitzer, who is now in cha of the Evening World, referred questi regarding Mr. Cassel's resignation John H. Tennant, managing edit Mr. Tennant refused to comment.

Harold S. Pollard, editor of the E ning World, was quoted by a Brookl newspaper as saying:

"Mr. Cassel left here because he fou himself unable to carry out and cc form to the policy of the Eveni World."

Mr. Weed's last newspaper connecti before succeeding Mr. Cassel on t Evening World was with the Phi delphia Public Ledger, where he serv from 1915 to 1918. Prior to that he w with the New York Tribune. He h also been cartoonist for the Philadelph Record, Philadelphia Press, and N York Evening Sun.

WESTERN N. Y. PUBLISHERS ELEC

Merritt M. Landon Named President Rochester Meeting

Merritt M. Landon, of Bath, N. Y editor of the Steuben County Advocat on April 26 was re-elected president the Western New York Newspaper Pu lishers' Association, at the closing sessi of the spring business meeting in Roche ter. Mr. Landon became president la year upon the death of F. C. Bickers, Fredonia.

Jesse Barber, editor of the Waylan Register, was re-elected vice-presider and E. M. Blosson, editor of the Broc port Republic and Democrat, was re elected secretary-treasurer.

Here Is Proof of Detroit News Advertising Effectiveness

Crowds Storm Furniture Store for Hours After Advertisement in Detroit News

A double-truck advertisement in The Detroit News of March 30th brought to the doors of Owen & Company, one of the oldest furniture establishments in Detroit, the crowd pictured above.

Doors had to be locked and purchasers admitted a few at a time. Such response to News advertising, while not ordinary, is nevertheless not unique. Other advertisers have experienced similar results when they have combined effective merchandising with the power of Detroit News' thorough and concentrated circulation.

The fact that this particular advertiser was a furniture seller is all the more remarkable, for furniture represents big money unit sales and shows a surplus in the pockets of the buyers. Furniture buyers are people who have savings, people who are able to gratify their desires for a better home and the little luxuries that make life more pleasant.

The ability of The Detroit News to sell this class of buyers is reflected in its leadership in furniture advertising. During 1926 The News published 3,501,526 lines of furniture advertising, thrice the volume of the next newspaper.

The Detroit News

360,000 Sunday Circulation The HOME Newspaper 335,000 Week Day Circulation

CANADIAN PRESS APPROVES SERVICE EXTENSIONS AT ANNUAL MEET

J. H. Woods Re-elected President—Scott and Gagnon Vice-Presidents—Livesay Re-named General Manager—Canadian Dailies Meet

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

TORONTO, ONT., May 4.—The Canadian Press at its annual meeting today approved proposals for extension of service, including a resident correspondent at Washington, D. C. Fifty-two members were present, a record attendance in the 17-year history of the Association.

J. H. Woods

Directors for the ensuing years as follows:

Maritime—W. H. Dennis, Halifax Mail; Howard P. Robinson, Saint John Times-Globe.

Ontario and Quebec—Henri Gagnon, Quebec Soleil; John Scott, Montreal Gazette; E. J. Archibald, Montreal Star; E. Norman Smith, Ottawa Evening Journal; H. W. Anderson, Toronto Globe; W. J. Wilkinson, Toronto Mail and Empire; W. B. Preston, Brantford Expositor; A. R. Ford, London Morning Free Press.

Manitoba.—E. H. Macklin, Manitoba Free Press; M. E. Nichols, Winnipeg Tribune.

Saskatchewan.—Burford Hooke, Regina Leader.

Alberta.—J. H. Woods, Calgary Herald.

British Columbia.—F. J. Burd, Vancouver Province.

At a subsequent meeting of the newly-elected board of directors, officers for the year were re-elected as follows:

Honorary president, E. H. Macklin; president, J. H. Woods; first vice-president, John Scott; second vice-president, Henri Gagnon; general manager and secretary, J. F. B. Livesay.

Proposals of the management for extension of service, including a resident correspondent at Washington and a much enlarged service of Associated Press news by automatic printer from New York, were approved.

Addressing the members, President J. H. Woods of the Calgary Herald dwelt on the "inestimable value to the people of Canada" of the impartial and unbiased news reports of the Canadian Press, covering the political, economic and social life of the country.

"From every province," he said, "come reports of increasing trade and prosperity. The daily newspapers of Canada will do their share to confirm the confidence and encourage the energies of our people, believing as they do that our Dominion has turned the corner and is now steadily on its way toward great events and a great history.

"It is well that we should remind ourselves frequently of the dignity and importance of our mutual news-gathering enterprise. We realize, as we examine the operation of our offices, its increasing value to us both as an insurance of coverage and as an economy in service. Year by year the Canadian Press is extending its scope, increasing its facilities, and taking on duties of reporting which previously had to be covered individually, and this additional work is being done without any increase in the cost of our operations at all commensurate with the increase in usefulness and service.

"The news report of the management tells of the chief news events of the past year. I may, however, be permitted to refer to and commend the report the Imperial Conference made by Mr. George Hambleton, superintendent of our Ottawa bureau. This report reflected great credit on the Canadian Press. Also, may I refer to the work done by Mr. Champion, our London manager, in connection with the Labrador award. Mr. Champion was honored with the thanks of the Lord Chancellor and the Board of the Privy Council for the accuracy and completeness with which he reported this controversy. I would call your attention also to the establishment of a resident Washington Correspondent in the person of Mr. F. G. Aldham.

"In this connection, and indeed in others, your management would like to express its pleasure at the continuance of our mutual relations with our great ally, the Associated Press. Your general manager was the guest of its Board of Directors a few days ago and received from its president, Mr. Frank B. Noyes, and the general manager, Mr. Kent Cooper, as well as from the Board generally, every assurance of their desire for still closer co-operation. The Canadian Press looks back with gratitude to the personal kindness of Melville E. Stone in its early days, and cherishes its close relationship with that great news gathering organization.

"I would like very much to express my thanks to Mr. John Scott, our first vice-president, for his unremitting co-operation during the past year. I would also like to speak of our honored friend, and honorary president, Mr. E. H. Macklin, who has as usual given much attention to the affairs of our Association, especially in Western Canada. You join with me, I am sure, in deep regret at the death of our second vice-president, Mr. F. B. Ellis, which occurred last winter, and you are aware that, on his resignation at our October meeting, in his place the Board elected Mr. Henri Gagnon of Quebec.

"It is my duty as well as my pleasure to express my deep appreciation of the work of your General Manager, Mr. J. F. B. Livesay, of his district superintendents, traffic officials and staff."

The annual meeting of the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association was held in connection with the annual convention of the Canadian Press.

The board of directors of the association met on Tuesday afternoon. The general sessions opened Thursday morning and continued through the day.

On Thursday evening the annual banquet was held at which the speakers were:

Right Hon. Senator George P. Graham, proprietor of the Brockville (Ont.) Recorder and Times; Hon. Frank Oliver, pioneer publisher of Edmonton Alta, where he established the Bulletin 50 years ago, and R. S. White, M.P., former editor of the Montreal Gazette.

Frank Carrel, Quebec Chronicle Telegraph, is president of the group.

The following were present at the annual meeting of the Canadian Press:

Andrew W. Robb, Halifax (N. S.) Herald; T. F. Drummie, Saint John (N. B.) Telegraph-Journal; O. L. Barbour, Moncton (N. B.) Transcript; H. P. Robinson, Saint John (N. B.) Times-Globe; Victor E. Morrill, Sherbrooke (Que.) Record; J. R. Burnett, Charlottetown (P. E. I.) Guardian; Arthur R. Ford, London (Ont.) Morning Free Press.

John Scott, Montreal (Que.) Gazette; Harry W. Anderson and A. D. Clarke, Toronto (Ont.) Globe; W. J. Wilkinson, Toronto (Ont.) Mail and Empire; W. B. Preston, Brantford (Ont.) Expositor; W. J. McNair, Hamilton (Ont.) Herald; W. J. Metz, Kitchener (Ont.) News Record; M. W. Rossie, London (Ont.) Evening Advertiser.

Georges Pelletier, Montreal (Qu Devoir; C. L. Sibley, Montreal (Qu Herald; J. N. A. Perrault, Mont (Que.) Patrie; Oswald Mayrand, M treal (Que.) La Presse; E. J. Archib Montreal (Que.) Star; G. A. Disl Ottawa (Ont.) Evening Citizen.

E. Norman Smith, Ottawa (Or Evening Journal; Henri Gagnon, Que (Que.) Soleil; Hon. Frank Carrel E. G. Smith, Quebec (Que.) Chroni Telegraph; Major H. B. Burgoyne, Catharines (Ont.) Standard; John Bone, Toronto (Ont.) Star; Irving Robertson, Toronto (Ont.) Telegra H. A. Graybiel, Windsor (Ont.) Bor Cities Star.

W. A. Moore, Brockville (Ont.) corder and Times; George H. Wils Lindsay (Ont.) Evening Post; Frank Leslie, Niagara Falls (Ont.) Revie A. R. Alloway, Oshawa (Ont.) Da Reformer; R. M. Glover, Peterb (Ont.) Examiner; J. W. Curran, Sa Ste. Marie (Ont.) Star; A. R. Kenne Stratford (Ont.) Beacon-Herald.

G. M. Bell, Calgary (Alta.) Alberta Burford Hooke, Regina (Sask.) Leade J. H. Woods, Calgary (Alta.) Hera Senator W. A. Buchanan, Lethbrid (Alta.) Herald; Edward J. Meilic Saskatoon (Sask.) Star; E. H. Mackl Winnipeg (Man.) Free Press and Fr Press Bulletin; M. E. Nichols, Winnip (Man.) Tribune; D. Smith, Fort W liam (Ont.) Times-Journal; F. J. Bu Vancouver (B. C.) Province, and R. Cromie, Vancouver (B. C.) Eveni Sun.

H. E. Lemieux, Ottawa Le Dro Frank Adams, London (Ont.) Morni Advertiser; and H. B. Muir, Kingst (Ont.) Whig Standard.

252,760

was the average net paid daily circulation of The Baltimore Sun (morning and evening issues) for the month of

April, 1927

The average net paid circulation of THE SUNDAY SUN per Sunday for the month of April, 1927, was 198,302.

Everything in Baltimore Revolves Around

THE SUN

Morning Evening Sunday

CORN HUSKS —such as are used for wrapping tamales

FOOD

For Thought

People who locate in Southern California soon acquire a taste for local dishes. Instead of bluefish, they yearn for sandabs; chile con carne takes the place of beans and brown bread; they begin to forget quince preserves and ask for guava jelly or fresh figs.

For most women, cooking in Southern California becomes a fascinating new art. In order to gain proficiency they read the cooking department in the Los Angeles Times, the most popular domestic science feature in the city which specializes on local recipes.

It is the fixed policy of the Los Angeles Times to deal with local interests and occupations. From pies to polo, it tells the people what they want to know, sparing no expense in the production of brilliant local features.

As a result of this policy, more homes subscribe to the Los Angeles Times than to any other local newspaper, and leadership in advertising follows as a matter of course. During the first quarter of 1927, the Los Angeles Times led the nearest local paper by 1,093,148 agate lines of advertising.

Los Angeles Times

Eastern Representative

WILLIAMS, LAWRENCE & CRESMER CO.

360 N. Michigan Blvd. CHICAGO

285 Madison Ave. NEW YORK

Highest Quality in news circulation advertising

Quality in News

The New York Times daily gives its readers all the news that's fit to print. The Times news report is complete, collected by the use of every agency to speed its transmission from all parts of the world. But The Times places special emphasis upon the quality of its news —the accuracy, reliability, impartiality and breadth. The scope of The Times news embraces all information of interest to the intelligent, thoughtful reader for whom this newspaper is designed. To read The Times is a liberal education.

The news in The Times is of such enduring value that the demand for its permanent preservation justifies the printing of a limited number of copies on imperishable rag paper, which will last for centuries in bound files. The price of the bound volumes is $170 a year. Since this rag paper edition was begun on January 1, 1927, ninety-five libraries and institutions have subscribed for this service, offered by no other general daily newspaper.

Quality in Circulation

The New York Times has steadily increased its circulation until it has reached a volume of highest quality of readers never before attracted by any newspaper at any time anywhere. The net paid sale of The Times, average daily and Sunday, for the six months ended March 31, 1927, was 414,990 copies. The gain over the average for the corresponding six months ended March 31, 1926, was 22,295 copies. No other newspaper of standard size in New York, morning or evening, equaled this gain.

The rise of The New York Times to a new high record total, in an age when the public attention has been unduly attracted to sensational journalism, is a vindication of newspaper readers.

Quality in Advertising

The Times is the newspaper advertising leader in New York, publishing a greater volume than any other newspaper. By reason of its careful censorship, which excludes the false and misleading, the advertising in The Times is of the highest character. By reason of The Times' typographical standards, this unequaled volume is also of the most attractive appearance. Quantity—character—beauty—these attributes sum up The Times advertising columns. The advertising accepted by The Times, conforming to its censorship and typographical standards, comes to the attention of the largest number of intelligent, substantial readers ever assembled by any newspaper; and thus The Times is unrivaled as an advertising medium.

In 1926, The New York Times published 29,788,828 agate lines of advertising, 11,002,975 lines more than any other New York newspaper.

The New York Times.

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

FLOOD PICTURES, NOT FLOODS, MENACE NEW ORLEANS, SAYS THOMSON

Photos Taken During Recent Rainstorm Had No Relation to River's Rising, Which Has Never Damaged City

By JAMES M. THOMSON

Publisher, New Orleans Item-Tribune

(By telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

NEW ORLEANS, May 4.—A Citizens' Committee representing all of the business interests of New Orleans has asked me to attempt to get before the news and picture editors throughout the United States a correction of several unfortunate and damaging impressions that have been created by pictures and publicity which have gone out regarding New Orleans during the past two weeks.

On Good Friday, two weeks ago, an unprecedented rainfall occurred in the city of New Orleans. Fourteen inches of rain fell in one day. Lightning struck the wires of some of our city pumping plants and put them out of commission for several hours. Enterprising photographers took pictures of flooded streets and sent them to the newspapers of the country.

Two weeks ago the floods in the Mississippi River tributaries commenced to attract the attention of the nation. These floods were a thousand miles away from New Orleans, though now advancing down the river, doing great damage. The country received the appeal from the Red Cross for flood sufferers. But these pictures of some New Orleans streets flooded by rain were taken by newspaper news and picture editors and printed in conjunction with text relating to Mississippi River floods and the Red Cross appeal for flood sufferers.

The result is a widespread impression throughout the United States that water from the Mississippi River has overflowed into the city of New Orleans.

Now the fact is that in more than 200 years, since New Orleans has been established on the banks of the Mississippi River, it has never been damaged by flood waters from the Mississippi River. The fact is that during the present high water no water from the Mississippi River has come into New Orleans, and none of the Federal or State Engineers in New Orleans, who are experts on this subject, has expressed for publication any apprehension regarding a break in the Mississippi River levees of the city of New Orleans itself.

If the city has been damaged by this picture publicity, it is the victim of an unfortunate coincidence. Rainfall in Southern Louisiana affects the flood heights of the Mississippi River only very slightly, because none of the rain which falls in Southern Louisiana drains into the Mississippi River. This is a fact little known and understood.

Reliable correspondents and conscientious press services have unfortunately carried repeatedly in the last few days and spread widely statements that experts feared for the safety of the city of New Orleans itself from the flood waters of the Mississippi River.

Acting on the request of an informed committee representing all the business interests of New Orleans, I have today wired the responsible management of each of the press services requesting that they check all reports which may damage the city, create a false impression in the minds of newspaper readers and create unnecessary apprehension among our friends away from New Orleans.

We are fortunate at present in having General Jadwin, chief of United States Army Engineers, who is informed on the New Orleans situation, and accessible to every press association and newspaper correspondent.

What we earnestly desire is a correct, and only a correct, statement and impression to be given out regarding the actual safety of the city of New Orleans.

If Editor & Publisher will print this statement it will be read, I trust, and understood by publishers and editors of newspapers throughout the United States, none of whom, I know, has the slightest interest in printing either incorrect information or conveying incorrect impressions regarding the situation at New Orleans.

NEVINS TAKES PROFESSORSHIP

New York World Editorial Writer to Teach History at Cornell

Allan Nevins, a member of the New York World's staff of editorial writers, has been elected to a professorship of American History in Cornell University.

Mr. Nevins was graduated from the University of Illinois in 1913. For the next 10 years he was on the New York Evening Post's editorial staff. In 1922 he wrote the commemorative book, "The Evening Post, a Century of Journalism," which appeared in 1922. After he left the Post he was literary editor of the New York Sun for a while, becoming associated with the World in 1925.

TO HOLD WATER MEET

The seventh annual Richmond (Va.) News Leader water meet, will be held at Shield's Lake, Richmond, on Friday and Saturday, June 24 and 25. Prizes will be awarded by the News Leader.

BRYAN TO APPOINT A. N. P. A. COMMITTEES

Remains as Only Unfinished Work of Last Week's Convention — Ad Bureau Committee Named

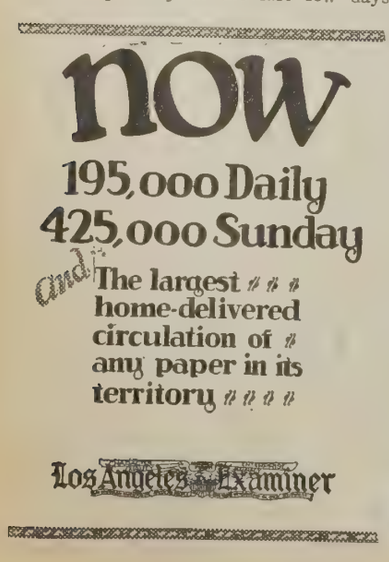
Appointment of new committees to carry forward the work of the American Newspaper Publishers Association will be made shortly by John Stewart Bryan, president.

That remained this week as the only unfinished business of the 41st annual convention which ended last Friday with the re-election of Mr. Bryan, editor of the Richmond News-Leader, as president, E. H. Butler, Buffalo Evening News, vice-president; George M. Rogers, Cleveland Plain Dealer, secretary; and Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune treasurer.

As predicted in last week's Editor & Publisher which went to press before the results of the voting was announced, Charles A. Webb, Asheville (N. C.) Citizen, was elected to fill the vacancy in the board of directors caused by the death of F. G. Bell, Savannah Morning News.

Mr. Bryan, the re-elected president, appointed the following committee in charge of the Bureau of Advertising: Chas. D. Atkinson, Atlanta Journal; Frank H. Burgess, La Crosse Tribune; Harry Chandler, Los Angeles Times; Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune; William J. Hofmann, Portland Oregonian; F. I. Ker, Hamilton Spectator; W. E. Macfarlane, Chicago Tribune; John S. McCarrens, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Fleming Newbold, Washington Star; David B. Plum, Troy Record; William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript; Walter A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; S. E. Thomason, Tampa Tribune; D. E. Town, Hearst Newspapers; Louis Wiley, New York Times.

The Committee met April 28 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, and organized by electing Fleming Newbold, chairman; Harry Chandler, vice-chairman; Howard Davis, treasurer. The chairman named David B. Plum, chairman of the finance committee, with Louis Wiley, associate member.



B.B.B. DIRECTORS NAMED AT ANNUAL MEET

Fourteen Elected at New York Headquarters Session May 3—Will Appoint Officers Soon

Directors of the National Better Business Bureau, Inc., were elected at the annual meeting held May 3, at the bureau offices in New York. The board, which will meet shortly and elect officers, was appointed as follows:

Bolton S. Armstrong, of Mabley & Carew Company, Cincinnati; James C. Auchincloss, governing committee, New York Stock Exchange; John H. Brooks, John H. Brooks Company, Scranton; E. T. Cunningham, president, E. T. Cunningham, Inc.; Alfred C. Fuller, president, Fuller Brush Company, Hartford; John F. Gilchrist, vice-president, Commonwealth Edison Company, Chicago; Lewis G. Harriman, president, Manufacturers & Traders Trust Company, Buffalo; Louis E. Kirstein, William Filene's Sons Company, Boston; William McC. Martin, chairman of the board, Federal Reserve Agents, St. Louis; H. C. Osborn, president, American Multigraph Company; Merle Sidener of Sidener, Van Riper & Keeling, Indianapolis; Francis H. Sisson, vice-president, Guaranty Trust Company; Robert Stevenson, president, Stevenson, Perry Stacy & Co., Governing Board and Chairman Publicity Committee, Investment Bankers' Association; and C. K. Woodbridge, president, International Advertising Association.

NUMBER SIX OF A SERIES

THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

A Uniform to Attract Many Eyes

A uniform is the type dress most suited to department store advertising. Day in and day out, then, it identifies each ad of the organization employing it, until, through repetition, it becomes a trade mark as effective as the company's name plate—and as valuable.

However, it must be a uniform to attract many eyes. At times it must appeal to women, at others to men: on many occasions its appeal must reach both sexes.

The ordinary newspaper attempts to overcome this diversity with a wide variety of faces. The Distinguished Newspaper achieves a greater effectiveness through the intelligent use of a few versatile faces, carefully selected.

A practical demonstration of this latter principle, based upon the advertising of a leading department store, is presented on the next two pages. Each of the specimens shown has its own appeal, each is in the "uniform" which immediately identifies its sponsors, yet only two faces—Narciss and Caslon Old Face—are employed in the composition of the entire showing.

The method offers many advantages. It is productive of advertising that makes the Distinguished Newspaper a desirable medium and enables it to serve its department store advertisers effectively, efficiently, and with an economy that permits them to divert production expenses into the purchase of additional space.

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE CO., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

319.31

LINOTYPED IN NARCISS AND CASLON OLD FACE

New York Dailies Adopt Ionic

The World and Evening World Are Added to Growing List of Users

January 3 the World and the Evening World of New York City came out in new type dresses of Linotype 6½ Point Ionic No. 5.

On the front page of the Evening World of January 3 appeared this boxed statement:

"The Evening World today appears in a new type dress. The face is Ionic, developed after several years of research and experiment in which eye specialists as well as type designers had a part.

"It is held by these experts that it invites reading; that its even tone is restful without being monotonous. The letters themselves are full, round, clear and well proportioned, and, as a whole, the pages of the Evening World will be found to be more attractive in appearance and greater in capacity than in the old dress with which readers were familiar."

In the World of January 4 two nationally known columnists ran paragraphs about the new dress.

Declared F. P. A. in "The Conning Tower":

"It will be good news to the Tower's contribs that the Ionic type the World now is set in is not only more legible than the Century that used to be employed but also smaller. Most of this department, in the old days, was set in seven point; it now is printed in six and a half. Whether we shall be selfish and write proportionally more stuff, or unselfish and permit more beautiful, enchanting, delightful, witty and whimsical contributions to be published we have not, at the instant of skipping to press, decided."

Heywood Broun, in "It Seems to Me," stated:

"The announcement has been spread upon the front pages of the paper that hereafter the price will be two cents. But that isn't the limit of 1927 concessions. At hand there lies a note from one in authority informing me that new type will make this column longer. That is, I shall have to write about ten or twelve per cent more than formerly to fill up the space. Or if not I, then kind friends must prove even more kind than in the days gone by.

"This new burden may be difficult, but if we all get together manfully and not one of us shirks I'm sure that we can fill even a bigger column. Also, I trust that each one of you has made the New Year's resolution to make it a better column and to furnish longer contributions, neatly written on one side of the paper."

Linotype 6½ Point Ionic No. 5 is easier to read. It looks as large as some seven and eight point faces, yet gives the word count of six point. Which, stated more specifically, means that papers adopting it can publish ten to twelve per cent more reading matter that will be decidedly more legible than formerly.

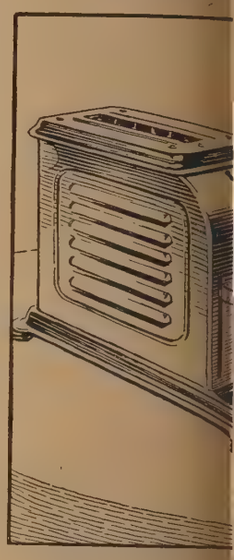
These Heads in Cloister Bold

The headings for the text in this showing are composed in Cloister Bold. Of the two heads at the top of the page, the one to the left is in 24 point, the other in 18 point. In both cases the banks are composed in 10 point. The single line head on this short item is set in 12 point Cloister Bold Italic. Cloister Bold is gracefully rounded, a feature that makes for legibility, but at the same time it is sufficiently compact to find favor with the head-writer. It is available on the Linotype in both Roman and italic up to and including the 30 point size.

New Linotype Face Is More Legible

Permits Reducing Type Size Without Any Impairment of Reading Quality

The selection of a newspaper type dress, whether for news columns or classified ads, calls for the careful weighing of two factors: legibility and word count. It is ordinarily assumed that one must be sacrificed for the other, but this is not necessarily true as may be seen by a study of the new face, Ionic No. 5, in which these two desirable qualities are combined to a remarkable degree.



The growing demand for space, with which publishers constantly find themselves confronted, presents a problem that can now be met in a satisfactory way.

A smaller size of Ionic is as easy to read as a larger size in some other face, hence a reduction in type size does not mean lessened legibility, but instead means easier reading than the type face originally used.

The comparatively short ascenders and descenders give the lines an open, leaded appearance even when they are set solid. The 5½ point size may be set 14 lines to the inch, with special short descenders; the 6½ point may be set on a 6½ point slug and the seven on seven, or they may be leaded to any desired extent.

An important advantage from a mechanical standpoint that is notable in Ionic is its ability to st the severe strain impose the making of stereotype
There are no fine lines
The characters are all of

A
Elec

B. ALTMAN & CO.

THE BLUE SHIRT

A he-man ad, this . . . square-jawed and assertive . . . Square-jawed enough to stand apart from its companions . . . sufficiently assertive to get a hearing from busy men.

ALTMAN SQUARE

FIFTH AVENUE—MADISON AVENUE—THIRTY-FOURTH STREET—THIRTY-FIFTH STREET

B. Altman

TELEPHONE: MURRAY H

Hand-Pai

Linen Damas
and Nap

Something "Different" for the

The ordinary department store a weakness or over-boldness, avoids set in two faces such as Narciss a

Narciss from 10 to

Embroidered and La

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

ates are the inevitable re-tor is important in itself
e elimination of one cause tes and the better reading lting.

IC

aster

ays the toaster—man, g housekeeper? Any he three might, so this ven a straightforward
o the prospective pur-
of toasters, an appeal fferent from the other ut it. Nevertheless, no question but what red by the same mer-
-an advantage of the n type dress.

$12.00

CTRICAL DEPARTMENT
FIFTH FLOOR

Altman & Co.

H AVENUE, NEW YORK

B. Altman & Co.

TELEPHONE: MURRAY HILL 7000

The New Blouses

Fit Nicely into an Advertisement Set in Caslon Old Face

The two leading notes establishing the femininity of this ad are the copious use of white space as a setting for Caslon Old Face and the smartness of the face itself. The ensemble is in distinct contrast with the bold, masculine ad opposite, still it is set in the same two faces.

The difference between this advertisement and the men's shirt ad is one of treatment only . . . . . .

Both ads were set in the same two faces on the same machines—an obvious economy . . . . . .

The Distinguished Newspaper adapts such typographic possibilities to its advertisers' needs . . . .

Thus it increases the effectiveness of its space and, in turn, increases its business as well . . . . . .

Other smart ads may be set in these two faces

BLOUSES—SECOND FLOOR

FIFTH AVENUE
THIRTY-FOURTH STREET

New York

MADISON AVENUE
THIRTY-FIFTH STREET

The Narciss Series

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

36 Point Narciss (36△89)

Linen Dam

30 Point Narciss (30△159)

Linen Damas

24 Point Narciss (24△211)

Linen Damask 1

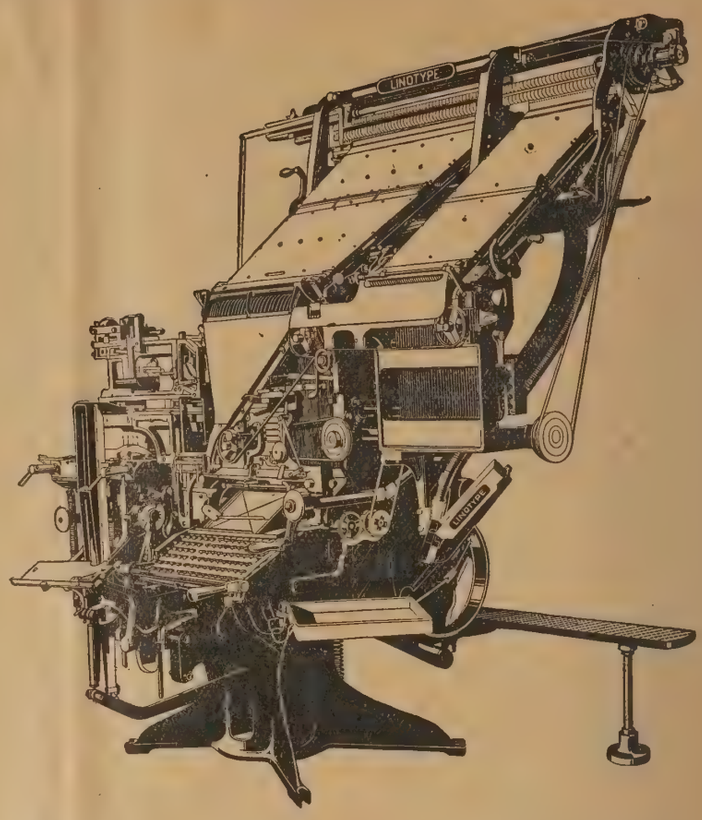
21 Point Narciss (21△7)

Linen Damask Cl

18 Point Narciss (18△249)

Linen Damask Cloths

14 Point Narciss (14△85)



Linen Damask Cloths and

12 Point Narciss (12△127)

Linen Damask Cloths and N

10 Point Narciss (10△123)

Linen Damask Cloths and Napki

Linotypes are available in single or multiple distribution types, with or without auxiliary magazines, and for either text or display composition to cast on slugs of 30 or 42 picas maximum measurement.

Economy in Versatile Typography

Ad after ad, each set in the same types, yet each possessing a distinction of its own —that is versatile typography.

When these same ads can be produced on the same machines, can go into the composing room and out again in a steady, uninterrupted string, versatile typography becomes a worthwhile economy.

These advantages combine in Linotype Typography. They provide the reason why the Distinguished Newspaper is Linotype equipped. The ordinary newspaper seeking entry into the class of the Distinguished Newspaper will find the "Linotype way" the easiest, quickest way. It will find versatile type faces on Linotype matrices, and definite economies in line-at-a-time composition. It will learn that the Linotype-equipped newspaper can dress its customer's advertising in "a uniform to attract many eyes," serving its advertisers both profitably and well.

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

LINOTYPED IN NARCISS AND CASLON OLD FACE

MELLET'S CRUSADE WINS PULITZER PRIZE

(Continued from page 4)

nerican Society of Newspaper Editors:
BLIC SERVICE—Jerome Landfield, Executive Secretary of the Advisory Board of the Columbia School of Journalism, Chairman; John W. Cunliffe, Director of the Columbia School of Journalism; George M. Armstead, Hartford Courant.
ITORIAL—Roscoe C. E. Brown, Professor of Journalism, Columbia, Chairman; Allen Sinclair Will, Associate Professor of Journalism, Columbia; George Nox McCain, Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger.
EPORTERS—William P. Beazell, Associate in Journalism, Columbia, Chairman; Merryle S. Rukeyser, Associate in Journalism, Columbia; Albert W. Cummins, Wilmington News.

CARTOON—Walter B. Pitkin, Associate Professor in Journalism, Columbia, Chairman; F. Fraser Bond, Assistant Professor in Journalism, Columbia; Newbold Noyes, Washington Star.

The juries which made the awards in Letters were:

NOVEL—Richard Burton, Chairman; Robert M. Lovett, Jefferson B. Fletcher.

DRAMA—Augustus E. Thomas, Chairman; Walter Prichard Eaton, Clayton Hamilton.

HISTORY—Worthington C. Ford, Chairman; James Truslow Adams, Charles Downer Hazen.

BIOGRAPHY—Royal Cortissoz, Chairman; Ray Stannard Baker, M. A. DeWolfe Howe.

POETRY—Wilbur L. Cross, Chairman; Ferris Greenslet, John Erskine.

It was announced that Frank R. Kent of the Baltimore Sun has been elected to the Advisory Board, succeeding the late Edward Page Mitchell of the Sun. Other members of the Board were re-elected.

SACCO-VANZETTI EDITORIAL WHICH WON PULITZER PRIZE FOR BULLARD

(Following is the Pulitzer Prize editorial written by F. Lauriston Bullard, of the Boston Herald, and printed Oct. 6, 1926.)

WE SUBMIT—

IN our opinion Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti ought not to be executed on the warrant of the verdict returned by a jury on July 14, 1921. We do not now whether these men are guilty or ot. We have no sympathy with the alf-baked views which they profess. But as months have merged into years nd the great debate over this case has ontinued, our doubts have solidified lowly into convictions, and reluctantly ve have found ourselves compelled to reerse our original judgment. We hope he Supreme Judicial Court will grant a ew trial on the basis of the new evience not yet examined in open court. Ve hope the Governor will grant anther reprieve to Celestino Madeiros so hat his confession may be canvassed in pen court. We hope, in case our sureme bench finds itself unable legally to uthorize a new trial, that our Governor vill call to his aid a commission of disnterested men of the highest intelligence nd character to make an independent inestigation in his behalf, and that the Governor himself at first-hand will participate in that examination if, as a last esort, it shall be undertaken.

We have read the full decision in vhich Judge Webster Thayer, who preided at the original trial, renders his decision against the application for a new rial, and we submit that it carries the one of the advocate rather than the arbirator. At the outset he refers to "the erdict of a jury approved by the Sureme Court of this Commonwealth," and ater he repeats that sentence. We respectfully submit that the Supreme Court never approved that verdict. What the ourt did it stated in its own words thus: 'We have examined carefully all the exceptions in so far as argued, and finding no error the verdicts are to stand." The Supreme Court did not vindicate the erdict. The court certified that, whether he verdict was right or wrong, the trial udge performed his duty under the law n a legal manner. The Supreme Court overruled a bill of exceptions, but expressed no judgment whatever as to the validity of the verdict or the guilt of the lefendants. Judge Thayer knows this, yet allows himself to refer to the verdict as "approved by the Supreme Court."

We submit, also, that Judge Thayer's anguage contains many innuendos which surely are unfortunate in such a document. The petition for a new trial is based in part on the affidavits of two men Letherman and Weyand, connected respectively with the United States Government for thirty-six years and eight years, and both now holding responsible positions out of the Federal service. Judge Thayer says that one of these men "seems for some reason to be willing to go the limit in his affidavits against the Government of the United States," and he refers to "prejudiced affidavits, which appear to be quite easily obtained nowadays." The changes are rung on certain phrases also, as "fraudulent conspiracy between these two great governments," meaning the Governments of the United States and Massachusetts. The judge asserts a conspiracy charge which was not made by counsel for the defense; he asks "who pumped this curiosity into Madeiros"; he compliments the prosecution and refers slightingly to counsel for the defense.

We submit that evidence, if any, in the files of the Department of Justice having any bearing on this case ought to be examined in open court, or examined in private by the United States Attorney General and reported upon by him before this case shall finally be decided. We have no idea what the files may contain. Mr. Weyand said in his affidavit: "The conviction was the result of co-operation between the Boston agents of the Department of Justice and the District Attorney." We do not know that this is true, but we know there was co-operation; the department and the attorney joined in placing a spy in the cell next to Sacco's, and the prosecution admitted the fact in court.

Now as to Madeiros: A criminal with a bad record, true, and under sentence of death. But the Government relied in part on one of his confessions to convict him of a murder. His evidence was accepted against himself when his own life was at stake. His evidence now is offered in behalf of two other men whose lives also are at stake. We submit that Madeiros should be placed on the stand in open court, facing a jury and a judge, and subjected to examination and cross-examination. He may be lying, but the criterion here is not what a judge may think about it, but what a jury might think about it. The question is, Would the new evidence be a real factor with a jury in reaching a decision?

We submit that doubt is cast on the verdict of the jury by the important affidavit made after the trial by Capt. C. H. Proctor of the State Police. On the stand, testifying as an expert, his evidence was understood by the jury and the judge to be that the fatal bullet issued from Sacco's pistol. Careful examination of the record discloses curious facts. Capt. Proctor did not here reply to direct questions. His affidavit states what the record implies, that a device was fixed up in advance for dodging direct answer to a direct question. His replies were understood to mean that he believed the bullet came from that weapon. He allowed that impression to go abroad. But his affidavit contradicts that testimony. Now, when the Supreme Court dealt with that point it expressed no opinion as to whether or not an "ambiguous answer" had been arranged to "obtain a conviction." The court ruled only that the trial judge had decided that no such prearrangement had been made, and that the Supreme Court could not "as a matter of law" set aside the ruling of the trial judge.

For these and other reasons we hope that the resources of our laws will prove adequate to obtain a new trial. Let it be remembered that the new trial is asked for on the basis of evidence never before the Supreme Court previously. The court has ruled on exceptions to the old trial, never on all evidence for a new one. If on a new trial the defendants shall again be found guilty we shall be infinitely better off than if we proceed to execution on the basis of the trial already held; the shadow of doubt which abides in the minds of large numbers of patient investigators of this whole case will have been removed. And if on second trial Sacco and Vanzetti should be declared guiltless everybody would rejoice that no monstrous injustice shall have been done. We submit these views with no reference whatever to the personality of the defendants, and without allusion now to that atmosphere of radicalism of which we heard so much in 1921.

KENT NEW MEMBER OF PULITZER BOARD

Frank R. Kent

1926 PULITZER AWARDS IN LETTERS

THE Pulitzer awards in letters are:

"For the American novel published during the year which shall best present the whole atmosphere of American life and the highest standards of American manners and manhood—$1,000:

"Awarded to 'Early Autumn,' by Louis Bromfield, published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York, 1926.

"For the original American play, performed in New York, which shall best represent the educational value and power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste and good manners—$1,000:

"Awarded to 'In Abraham's Bosom,' by Paul Green, produced at the Provincetown and Garrick theatres in New York during the season 1926-27.

"For the best book of the year upon the history of the United States—$2,000:

"Awarded to 'Pinckney's Treaty: A Study of America's Advantage From Europe's Distress, 1783-1800,' by Samuel Flagg Bemis.

"For the best American biography teaching patriotic and unselfish services to the people, illustrated by an eminent example, excluding, as too obvious, the names of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln—$1,000:

"Awarded to 'Whitman: An Interpretation in Narrative,' by Emory Holloway.

"For the best volume of verse published during the year by an American author—$1,000:

"Awarded to 'Fiddler's Farewell,' by Leonora Speyer.

RECORDS DENIED REPORTERS

Information Concerning Civil Suits Withheld by Rhode Island Clerk

Acting on his own initiative, Charles M. Arnold, clerk of the Twelfth District Court at Woonsocket, R. I., recently barred the records of all civil cases from the press, ruling that they are not matters of public record until judgment is entered.

Clerk Arnold gave as an additional reasons that such matters were not of interest to the public and that other district court clerks did not give them out. In six other district courts in Rhode Island, the clerks make available to reporters such matters, knowing of no authority whereby they can bar them to the press.

It is understood that Woonsocket lawyers protested against the publishing of such cases despite that the practice has been followed for more than 30 years. The promulgation of the new ruling by Clerk Arnold was discovered by a reporter of the Providence (R. I.) Journal.

While it is customary in some courts not to publish such records, clerks of other district courts in Rhode Island know of no authority for barring the records to the press.

117 ENTRIES IN N. E A. CONTESTS

Six Papers Competing for Editor & Publisher Cup for Community Service

A total of 117 newspapers have entered the six better newspaper contests to be decided at the 42nd annual convention of the National Editorial Association at Omaha, June 12-15.

The largest number of entries to any one contest is that for the best front page, with 36 newspapers entered. Judges in this competition are H. Frank Smith, John E. Allen of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company; W. A. Parker, American Type Founders Company; and E. G. Gress, editor of the American Printer.

There are six contestants for the EDITOR & PUBLISHER cup for the greatest community service. This contest is being judged by Norman J. Radder, University of Indiana; Andrew W. Hopkins, University of Wisconsin, and J. M. Stoddard, president of the Washington Press Association.

ATTORNEY SUES DAILY

Sioux City Man Starts $50,000 Libel Action Against Tribune

Suit for $50,000 damages has been filed by Fred H. Free, Sioux City attorney, against the Sioux City (Ia.) Tribune on charges of libel. John H. Kelley, editor, and Eugene Kelly, manager, are named defendants in the action.

The suit is based on a statement in the Tribune a year ago in which the paper said that "Fred H. Free, as city atttorney, went into court, and in the mayor's opinion, lost the case on the validity of the forfeiture clause," relating to a telephone franchise fight. He set forth in his petition that the publication was not the result of a mistake but the culmination of the Tribune's long efforts to discredit him.

He claims that he was not a public official at the time the article was printed and in fact was only one of several attorneys representing the municipality in the litigation.

OKLAHOMANS IN SESSION

Members of the Oklahoma Press Association opened their 21st annual convention on May 6 at Poteau, Okla. Most of the program was given over to entertainment including a "Fish Fry," a fishing contest, and an old fiddler's contest. A cup for the best editorial page of a state newspaper was to be awarded at the May 7 session. H. G. Spaulding, editor of the Shawnee Morning News, is association president.

BUDGET WIZARDS JUGGLE PROBLEM OF MYTHICAL NEWSPAPER PROFITS

Three Clever Solutions of "Can You Figure?" Puzzle—Newsprint Is the Variable—Tell What's Wrong with Picture

THREE solutions among the many received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER in response to the newspaper budget problem which appeared in the issue of April 16 stand out for thoroughness and clarity of reasoning and for analysis to find the weak spot which was indicated in the operating set-up. They were submitted by J. A. Van Buren, classified advertising manager of the Cleveland Plain Dealer; J. W. Mann, auditor of the Lexington (Ky.) Leader, and Charles A. Mahoney of New York City.

From the data given, which was subject to several interpretations, the three solutions published below reached three different amounts for the paper's net profit—different, but not widely divergent.

The two fallacies in the assumed set-up were:

1. That the paper would average a division of space 60 per cent advertising and 40 per cent reading for 312 or 313 days a year.

2. That the advertising selling cost was far out of proportion to the other cost items stated and also much higher than that of the ordinary well-conducted newspaper.

The result of the first fallacy would be, of course, to provide an income out of proportion to the amount of circulation, and out of line with the experience of newspapers generally. No allowance was made in the arbitrary statement of facts for seasonal declines in the amount of advertising.

The result of the second would be to increase operating expenses, but not at all proportionately to the amount by which income would be increased by the first fallacy.

Mr. Van Buren, who estimated the year's net profit at $565,760.27, reached his conclusion by the following calculations:

INCOME
Advertising Revenue	$1,479,366.72
Circulation Revenue	195,000.00
Total Revenue	$1,674,366.72

EXPENSES
Editorial	$85,800.00
Mechanical	280,800.00
Circulation	52,000.00
Business Office	62,400.00
Advertising Selling Cost	236,698.66
All Other Expenses	78,000.00
	$795,698.66
White Paper	$289,729.44
Paper Waste, 8%	23,178.35
Total Paper Expense	$312,907.79
Total Expense	$1,108,606.45
Net Profit	$565,760.27

"Please keep in mind that I figured the problem out on the basis of 312 days and not on the basis of 313 days," Mr. Van Buren comments.

"In my opinion, 16 per cent is high for merely advertising selling cost, estimating that the special representative's cost is not over 10 per cent on national business and providing, of course, that the national advertising linage is in the usual ratio to the total.

"Besides, I am assuming that the discount allowed advertising agencies is not charged to selling expense, but is included in the rate.

"The percentage of profit figures 33.78 per cent, which, I believe, is correct for this example, but hardly holds true in everday practice. It is too much profit on this turnover."

Mr. Mann's figure for profit differs but slightly from that of Mr. Van Buren. He reaches his estimate of $555,309.56 by the following route:

INCOME
Circulation	$3,750.00
Advertising	28,449.68
Total income for one week	$32,199.68

EXPENSE
Newsprint	$6,218.68
Editorial	1,650.00
Mechanical	5,400.00
Advertising Sales Cost	4,551.97
Circulation	1,000.00
Business Office	1,200.00
All Others	1,500.00
Total Expense, One Week	$21,520.65
NET PROFIT for one week	$10,679.03
NET PROFIT for one year	$555,309.56

Mr. Mann's comments upon the set-up follow:

"The pencil used in listing the department expenses was a very conservative one, and must have been a different one from that used to list the percentage of advertising, which was very liberal.

"Editorial, mechanical, circulation, and 'all other' expense appear to have been underestimated.

"A daily which averages 60 per cent advertising the year round is too tight from the reader's point of view. Fifty per cent advertising and 50 per cent editorial will just about strike a happy medium (if such a thing is possible) for the publisher and his readers.

"A daily the size mentioned in this problem, with the adjustments referred to above and under normal conditions should show a net profit of approximately $300,000 per annum."

Mr. Mahoney approached the problem from a different avenue and reached a total profit of $590,924.91, which causes hi mto remark that the "hypothetical owner has a little gold-mine on his hands." His solution, in which he characterizes as "high" the advertising selling cost, follows:

"The average size newspaper sheet of four pages, I estimated as 22" x 35". Seven sheets of this size would make up the paper of 28 pages. Therefore to run the entire paper for one day, the number of sheets 22" x 35" would be 350,000, or in paper terms, 700 reams of 22" x 35" stock.

One ream of 24" x 36" standard news weighs 32 lbs., and there are 864 square inches to a sheet this size, against 770 square inches to a sheet 22" x 35". The weight of the stock is therefore found by this equation:

770 : 864 : : x : 32.

x equals 28.52 lbs, the weight of the stock used.

Seven hundred reams are used daily, or 19,964 lbs. The paper is published six days a week, or 312 days a year, giving a total yearly consumption of 228,768 lbs. Wastage is 8 per cent; therefore the above amount must be 92 per cent of the paper actually bought, the latter figure being 3,385.2 tons yearly. The cost of the paper is $85 per ton, or a total of $287,742.00 The balance sheet follows:

YEARLY INCOME
Advertising	$1,479,389.
Sales	195,000.
Total Income	$1,674,389.

YEARLY EXPENSE
Paper	287,742.
Editorial	85,800.
Mechanical	280,800.
Circulation	52,000.
Business	62,400.
Advertising Sales Cost	236,722.
All Other Expenses	78,000.
Total Expense	$1,083,464.
NET PROFIT	$590,924.

The EDITOR & PUBLISHER proble asked what was wrong with the pictu as presented, and also how much do this newspaper win or lose per yea In addition to the two fallacies mentione above, the departmental cost items ar too low to permit of efficient operatio and the paper data was insufficient t warrant any hard and fast cost estimat Weight of newsprint used by newspaper varies greatly and the formulæ for de termining cost vary accordingly. M Van Buren's calculation, in our opinion is the most nearly correct answer on th data.

CAN YOU FIGURE?

Here was a hypothetical problem in newspaper economics set before EDITOR & PUBLISHER readers April 16. It is a test of knowledge of the factors that enter into the publication of a daily paper. It is in no sense a trick question.

A newspaper prints and sells 50,000 28-page papers six days per week, realizing 1¼ cents per copy. The proportions are 60 per cent advertising and 40 per cent editorial. The average rate is 12 cents per agate line. The page size is 8 columns, 21 inches deep. Costs are as follows: Newsprint, delivered pressroom, 4¼ cents per pound, with .08 per cent wastage; Editorial, $1,650 per week; all mechanical departments, $5,400 per week; advertising sales cost, 16 per cent of the average advertising rate; circulation, $1,000 per week; business office and administration; $1,200, per week; all other expenses, including heat, light, power, rents, interest and depreciation, $1,500 per week.

How much does this newspaper win or lose per year?

Question: What is wrong with the above picture?

J. H. WOODS HONORED

J. H. Woods, managing director of th Calgary (Alta.) Herald and president o the Canadian Press, was honored by th Herald staff at a banquet held Friday April 22, in the Palliser Hotel, Calgary The occasion was in honor of his 20t year as head of the Herald organizatior

"SUBS" FOR OPERA TENOR

When Forest Lamont, Chicago operati tenor, was forced to cancel an engage ment to sing the solo part in Handel' "Messiah," in Pittsburg, Kan., Apri 29, Clyde Neibarger, city editor of th Pittsburgh Headlight, went on as substitute.

Agencies Heartily Approve

Ask any agency or any advertiser—and be prepared for a revelation of just what they do think of the successful checking proof service we are operating. There is no question of the value of our service to an agency or advertiser, as it cuts their work to about one-third of what they formerly had to contend with when handling complete copies for checking purposes. Now, they are receiving a service on which they can depend at all times, and if additional checking proofs are needed they can write or phone us direct at New York or Chicago and receive very prompt and satisfactory service.

NOW—377 newspapers

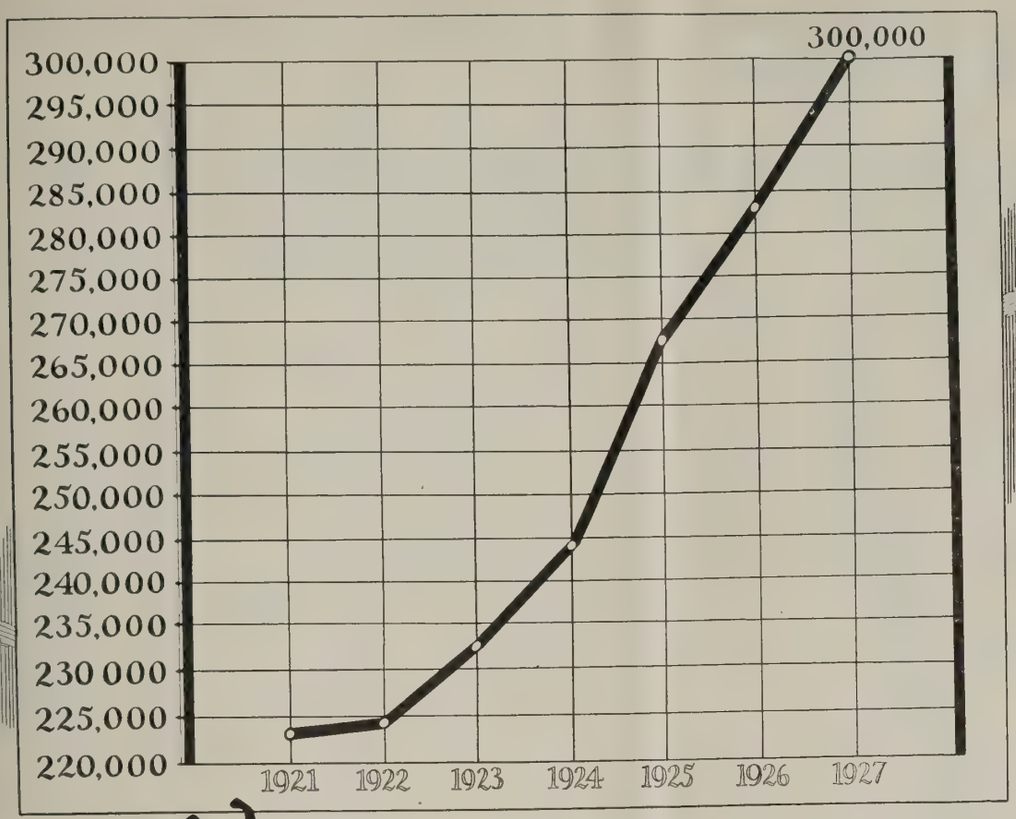
The Advertising CHECKING BUREAU Inc.

79 Madison Ave. New York — 538 So. Clark St. Chicago

The Fashion in Mats

For the big town newspapers

Metropolitans and Marathons



For the newspapers of smaller cities

Improved Standards

It is gratifying to know WOOD DRY MATS are essentially an American product, in conception and in manufacture. In their development no German formula or process has had a part. They are the only truly American dry mats—and they are the best. Output unlimited and unfailing service.

Wood Flong Corporation

Stillwater, New York

7 years' growth of The Sunday Star

now 300,000!

IT is an unheard-of thing for a city the size of Kansas City to have a paper with 300,000 circulation.

Yet that is the record of The Kansas City Star. It was attained Sunday, April 24.

Another unheard-of thing is that any paper should reach that figure without predating—or as the practice is commonly called, "bulldogging." The Sunday Kansas City Star is not printed Thursday, so as to be on sale at distant points by Saturday. It observes the regular closing hours of the week-day editions and contains late and complete news dispatches to and including Saturday night.

The 300,000 total represents only copies actually circulated and paid for. Pressroom waste, papers used for office purposes, exchanges and the like are always deducted from The Star's circulation statements.

The attainment of 300,000 circulation has another significance. Such circulations do not exist except in key markets. If Kansas City were not the center of a rich empire and if that empire did not look to Kansas City as its metropolis, then a circulation of 300,000 for The Sunday Kansas City Star would be an impossibility.

But the empire is here and the buying power is here and the merchandising opportunity is here—and The Sunday Star, with 300,000 paid circulation, stands ready to serve you.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR

Morning 250,000 Evening 250,000 Sunday 300,000 Weekly 500,000

New York Office, 15 E. 40th Vanderbilt 10172

Chicago Office, 1418 Century Bldg.
Wabash 9360

SHOP TALK AT THIRTY

By MARLEN PEW

SUCH are the vicissitudes of newspaper work in this interesting day and age that few members of this council will have escaped the emotional experience of having at some time been fired from his job. The thrill that goes with that little business transaction is so common in our worthy craft that it needs no description at my hands. Various temperaments accept the blue envelope variously. Some weep, some rage, some sneer, some laugh and all walk off to get a better job elsewhere. But each and every discharged newspaper man must feel himself an unfrocked priest. He loses more than an engagement which offers the means of livelihood—he loses power. Nothing so hopeless, no one so helpless as a writing man deprived of a place for his written words.

* * *

THIS ruthless firing of men from newspaper jobs has been a merciless business in this country for many years. Few offices have been spared the swaggering martinet whose arrival on the seat of might brooked no interference or even fair competition among other members of the staff. He himself might be only a hired hand but his power to "hire and fire" was a two-edged sword. No matter how corrupt, disloyal to his paper or incompetent his adminstration of office his dominion over his slaves was absolute and covered all of his needs. Did a better man threaten to divide the honors? Off with his head. Had another an accomplishment to his credit which might be swiped and layed at the feet of the Great Boss? Off with the varlet's bean! This kind of brutal arriving has made thousands in this craft of ours suffer temporary embarrassment and loss, but life under the domination of such petty tyrants is never worth while and to be fired from such company is surely a blessing only thinly disguised.

* * *

I HAVE long believed that a man who honestly and efficiently serves a job establishes in it something akin to an equity. At least, except for very good and established cause, summary discharge from a position which has been faithfully served should be impossible. Such have been the injustices in some sections of our press that I have heard many newspaper men say that the European system of "time notice" should be invoked here. It is not possible to fire any salaried man without several months notice or fair, financial adjustment in many countries, notably England and France. Most people in this country would not be in sympathy with the principle of this rule, since incompetent and designing employes may make a license of it, but perhaps it is better than is the cruelty of the martinets we are all familiar with.

* * *

WE know how it feels to be fired, but how many of us know how it feels to be merged? Once I was fired, and with pardonable pride I boast that the job took seven men, such is my docility when I feel I am the victim of injustice, but never have I experienced the sensation of having a newspaper suddenly slip out from under me through a sale or failure. But at this round table today sits a man who can tell how it feels to be merged. I have the pleasure of introducing Mr. J. S. Farquhar of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The following is his own story in his own delightful style.

* * *

Prelude.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 18—The Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Republican, established in 1870 as successor to the Observer, issued its last edition April 17 and on Monday appeared in consolidation with the Cedar Rapids Gazette as the Gazette and Republican—

EDITOR & PUBLISHER,
April 23, 1927

* * *

WITH increasing recurrence EDITOR & PUBLISHER chronicles the passing by merger or consolidation, of one historic American daily after another. It is indeed an age of consolidation. Clayton Gilbert, western manager for the United Press, stated the other day that there would be 100 dailies in America merged before the end of 1927. The prediction is significant. Of all the merger stories I have followed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER during the past year, I have yet to read an impression or interpretation of the sensation depicting the emotions of the party of the second part. After accumulating six or seven Iowa newspapers and doing a little merging myself, I would commend to any jaded newspaper publisher, whose adrenal glands need jolting, the experience of getting himself merged with the dastardly reptile down the street.

* * *

THERE is both an intimacy with the people of the town and a glamour which goes with the title of an editor and publisher in a small midland city, both of which are calculated to leave a merged newspaper man in about as lonesome a state as Robinson Crusoe found himself on a desert island. The boys who were going to sell you a new press seem to have lost some of their cordiality. The feature syndicate representatives don't offer to buy the lunch any more. There is a note of exultant happiness in the manner of greeting of the print paper supply man whose contract you cut short because you found you could buy cheaper somewhere else. Aspiring politicians, who thought you stood well with the governor and formerly haunted the office, now nod vaguely as though wondering where they had seen you before. The editor of the nearby weekly paper, noting that the dog is now tied up, shouts hosannas in honor of the editor of the merged combination and denounces you as a pussyfooter and an executive misfit. The death by the merger of the Seven Seers, which has been a bitter pill to the editorial business as a profession, he marks with unusual glee. This feature EDITOR & PUBLISHER in its issue of April 17, 1926, reviewed and editorially commented on as a "notable contribution to the journalism of the day." The Hell Boxers, whose contributions over the years have flowed in from every part of the country, were most unreasonable. They could not understand how I could have allowed their column to expire and held me personally responsible.

* * *

BUT of all the sad sights, perhaps none bore quite the reproach of the local merchants who failed to advertise with your paper which only had 19,000 circulation while your competitor had 20,000, and now hold you personally responsible for the substantial rate increase naturally effected by the merger. The president of our corporation died on the day our last issue appeared so he was saved from that portion of grief which would have fallen to him.

Personally I think I cared more about what my barber would think than any one else. He has always held a very exalted opinion of me and in my modest way I have done what I could to perpetuate the halo. I do not think he ever found out I was not as prominent a citizen as my contemporary and there have been moments when I dared to hope he thought my paper had the most circulation. I may have confused this impression, however, with the one of gratitude he evinced when I would purchase a bottle of hair tonic. I did worry about what he would think and what his attitude toward me would be when he heard the news.

I might have known I would be spared. There is indeed a divinity which shapes our ends. The night before the merger he got drunk. His wife sued him for divorce and up to date, although diligent search of turkish baths and similar habitats of restoration has been made, he has not been located. So the worst is over. It did not hurt nearly as much as I thought it would.

I think I hear California calling. It listens good to me.

FIRE IN WORLD BUILDING

The Pulitzer Building at 63 Park Row, New York, where the World and Evening World are published, was the scene of a small fire last Monday afternoon which started in the boiler room in the basement of the building. The blaze was quickly extinguished and the damage was negligible.

NEW LEAD-WAX FLO USED IN ENGLAND

Product Just Placed on Market Cla to Have Many Advantages Ov Other Methods of Electro- typing

LONDON, April 23—A new lead flong, just placed on the British ma claims to offer many advantages other methods of electrotyping. flong consists of several thin sheet pure and soft lead, joined together malleable, plastic composition, and face of the flong being of a sens plastic composition, so that the mo not made directly in the lead but thr the composition.

The form is cleaned in the usual care being taken that the spirit evaporated before the lead-wax is on the form. The sheet of lead- flong is cut about one eighth-inch la than the form. An ordinary hydr press is suited to the purpose of mo ing, provided the platens are par The flong is placed on the form, with packing material on top. Any de depth in the half-tones may be obta by substituting softer or thicker pac When the shell is obtained the old wax matrices may be melted and for backing up the shell. The new cess, it is claimed, eliminates the us wax and gutta percha, the work building up the wax and blacklead the use of steam-wax kettles, case-fil tables, etc., and also does away with unhealthy graphite dust.

GRAPHIC PLEADS NOT GUILT

A plea of not guilty was entered i New York court this week on behal the MacFadden Publications and E H. Gauvreau, managing editor of New York Evening Graphic, to the cha entertained against them last week Magistrate Corrigan that they publis objectionable pictures in violation of tion 1141 of the State Penal Code. T was set for Friday, May 6.

SUPREMACY IN building circulation!

THE CHICAGO HERALD AND EXAMINER is now conducting the greatest circulation-building campaign in its history. Naturally, the HOLLISTER CIRCULATION ORGANIZATION is in charge for publishers everywhere recognize this organization's unrivalled pre-eminence in increased circulation by many thousands in sure and rapid-fire fashion, and by absolutely clean and satisfactory methods. A long line of metropolitan dailies, such as The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, The Memphis Commercial Appeal, The Indianapolis News and others attest Hollister supremacy.

C. B. HOLLISTER, general manager of the organization, will be at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel during the publishers' convention, and will gladly detail his plan to interested publishers.

The Herald and Examiner, CHICAGO

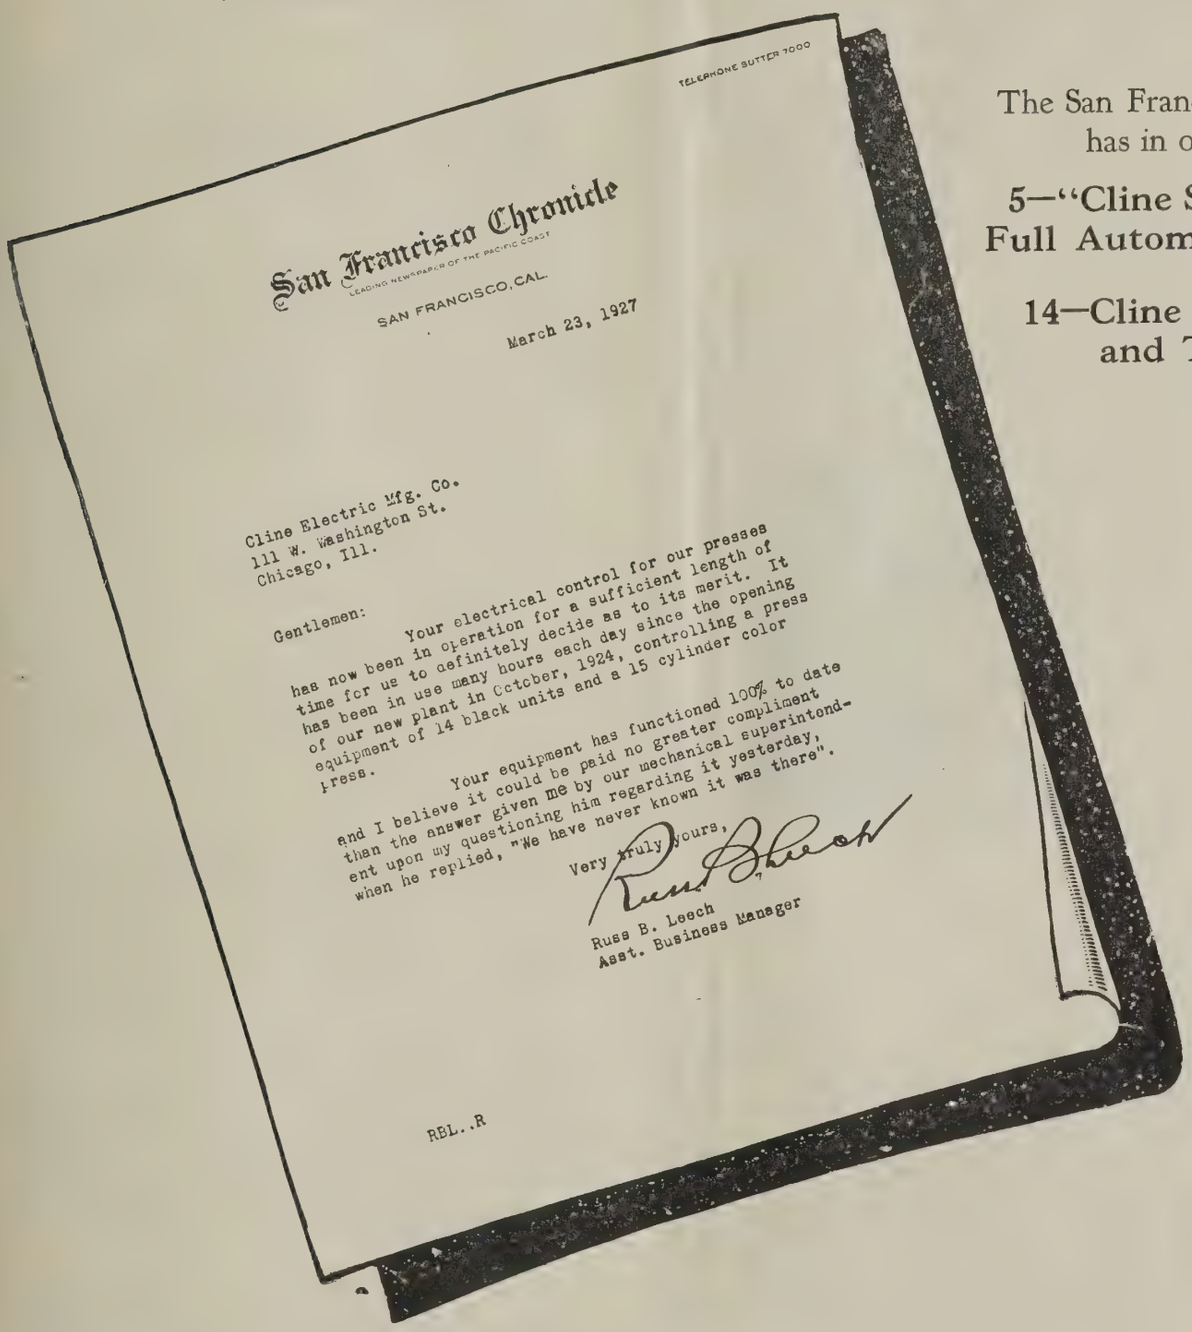
HOLLISTER'S
Circulation Organization
Home Ad.: 717-8 Commercial Exch. Bldg., Los Angeles

Distinctive Advertising

THE almost universal demand for more distinctive more attractive and more effective newspaper pages is being met with the Ludlow—the simplest and most practical system for setting ads and heads.

Besides saving time and money, the Ludlow assures bright, new type in slugs, delivered on the galley in unlimited quantities, as needed. With the Ludlow you can cast, without machine or mold changes, any size face up to full-width 72 point upper and lower-case, and even 84 point caps.

This explains why newspapers of every size the world over are setting their news headings, feature headings and advertising display with Ludlow faces.



Complete facts about the Ludlow of today and what you can accomplish with it in your plant will be gladly sent on request.

Ludlow Typograph Company
2032 Clybourn Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Boston: 470 Atlantic Avenue
New York: 63 Park Row
Atlanta: 41 Marietta Street
San Francisco: 5 Third Street

PRINCIPAL DISPLAY LINES SET IN LUDLOW CAMEO

THE SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE Says the "CLINE SYSTEM" Functions 100%

TELEPHONE SUTTER 7000

San Francisco Chronicle
LEADING NEWSPAPER OF THE PACIFIC COAST

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

March 23, 1927

Cline Electric Mfg. Co.
111 W. Washington St.
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

Your electrical control for our presses has now been in operation for a sufficient length of time for us to definitely decide as to its merit. It has been in use many hours each day since the opening of our new plant in October, 1924, controlling a press equipment of 14 black units and a 15 cylinder color press.

Your equipment has functioned 100% to date and I believe it could be paid no greater compliment than the answer given me by our mechanical superintendent upon my questioning him regarding it yesterday, when he replied, "We have never known it was there".

Very truly yours,

Russ B. Leach
Asst. Business Manager

RBL..R

The San Francisco Chronicle has in operation:

5—"Cline Systems" of Full Automatic Control

14—Cline Roll-Stands and Tensions

The Cline Electric Mfg. Co. furnish Motors and Control Equipments for Printing Presses and Auxiliary Machinery for Newspaper and Job Presses.

CLINE ELECTRIC MFG. CO.

MAIN OFFICE, CONWAY BUILDING, 111 W. WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

WESTERN OFFICE
FIRST NAT'L BANK BLDG.
SAN FRANCISCO
CALIFORNIA

CLINE SYSTEM

EASTERN OFFICE
MARBRIDGE BLDG.
47 WEST 34th ST.
NEW YORK CITY

OCHS AWARDED GOLD MEDAL FOR LEADERSHIP IN JOURNALISM

Presentation Made May 4 by Frank B. Noyes in Behalf of National Institute of Social Sciences

A GOLD medal for leadership in journalism was awarded on May 4 to Adolph S. Ochs, proprietor and publisher of the New York Times by the National Institute of Social Sciences. The presentation was made at a banquet of the Institute at the Waldorf by Frank B. Noyes, publisher of the Washington Evening Star, and president of the Associated Press, after a brief introduction by William C. Redfield, president of the Institute.

In making the presentation, Mr. Noyes said:

"I recognize, of course, that this privilege comes to me in a representative capacity but both as spokesman for the press of the United States and as an individual. I confess to a great pride that I have been selected to present the gold medal of the National Institute of Social Sciences to a colleague who typifies the best in American journalism and at the same time is a dear friend of many, many years.

"I first met Adolph S. Ochs about 40 years ago, when he was the owner, editor and publisher of the Chattanooga Times and attended meetings of the American Newspaper Publishers Association here in New York. With our first meeting he stood out above the ruck of casual acquaintances. With no knowledge of metropolitan journalism his eager, avid mind was on a ceaseless quest for information as to the methods—editorial, business, mechanical—of the larger newspapers of that day. The results of those questing years are now shown in the noble monument he has built for himself and for the self-respecting press of our country—the New York Times.

"No great institution, that I know of, and no one man can so completely be identified as creation and creator as is the case with the Times and Mr. Ochs, and this is so although since the day that he acquired control of the paper—then a fast sinking property—he has sought for and gained the association with it of very able and strong men to whom he has generously and justly given full credit for very notable work.

"The fact that this medal is being awarded to Mr. Ochs is proof that I can add nothing to what you already know of the Times and I realize that I am only lamely giving voice to the general recognition of a very great newspaper, the greatest, in my opinion, of a very great journalist and of a very great citizen.

"It is pleasant to remember that Mr. Ochs has met with extraordinary material success and at the same time printed a newspaper that has been a source of pride to the newspaper men of America. Most of his profits have been plowed back into the paper, for no expenditure has seemed prodigal to him that made the Times better and more complete.

"As examples of unexploited expenditures which it has seemed to him fitting for the Times to make, I may mention two which have come to my knowledge and which should appeal especially to this gathering. One was the underwriting of the American Year Book for five years. The guarantee for 1926 was to meet the expenses of that year up to $20,000. The second was the agreement of the Times to advance a total of $500,000 for the preparation of the manuscript of the Dictionary of American Biography, a monumental work sponsored by the American Council of Learned Societies Devoted to Humanistic Studies.

"I think, however, the benevolence from which Mr. Ochs gets the most pride and satisfaction is the fund that the readers of the Times subscribe to each year for the benefit of the 'Hundred Neediest' and which has increased year by year from $3,650 in 1912 to $280,000 in 1926.

"For more than a quarter of a century I have been most intimately associated with Mr. Ochs in our common work in The Associated Press and have come to really know his high ideals, his keen intelligence, his absolute justness.

"On the personal side, I love the man, his tolerance, his generosity, his kindly humor."

MORDEN RETIRES AS OREGONIAN MANAGER

Relinquishes Duties Near 75th Birthday—Succeeded by O. L. Price, Co-trustee with Morden of Pittock Estate

Almost coincident with his 75th birthday, C. A. Morden on May 1 retired as general manager of the Portland Oregonian. He is succeeded by O. L. Price, a fellow director and secretary of the

C. A. Morden

Oregonian Publishing Company and co-trustee with Mr. Morden of the estate of Henry L. Pittock, late publisher of the Oregonian.

Although it has been known for some time that Mr. Morden in his advancing years desired to be relieved of the cares and responsibilities of his position, the announcement of his resignation came as a surprise. He will remain as a trustee of the Pittock estate and will act as an advisor in some of the larger policies of the Oregonian.

Mr. Morden became associated with the mechanical department of the Oregonian in 1880. As a youth he had worked at the printers' trade in Cincinnati, Boston, Omaha, Denver and San Francisco. In Portland his promotion was rapid. He was first foreman of the Sunday Oregonian, foreman of the Evening Telegram, then owned by the Oregonian, and later foreman of the Oregonian mechanical department.

As the paper grew there came to be a close friendship between Mr. Morden and Mr. Pittock, who had begun his career as a printer. On Jan. 1, 1907, Mr. Morden was made assistant manager and increasing responsibility was placed on him in Mr. Pittock's later years.

Mr. Pittock died Jan. 28, 1919. His will created a 20 year trust of his varied properties, including the Oregonian. He named two trustees, Mr. Morden and Mr. Price, who had been his legal advisor and confidential secretary.

"I am turning over to Mr. Price an organization which I believe could not be excelled. From mailing room to editorial department," said Mr. Morden.

Mr. Price became confidential advisor to Mr. Pittock in 1906 and remained until Mr. Pittock's death. He was executor of Mr. Pittock's will and has since joined with Mr. Morden in the management of the large estate. Mr. Price said he contemplated no organization changes.

The truth ---from a competitor

We quote from a presentation to an Indianapolis advertiser by a competing medium (not a newspaper):

"We recommend that you confine your newspaper advertising to The Indianapolis News. Through concentration in one newspaper, you will be able to make a dominating impression consistently before the same readers. It is far better to take a given list and persistently and consistently drive home your message to them than to half-heartedly and partially reach a greater number.

"That it will be far more effective to concentrate in this one newspaper only is fully borne out by the fact that this newspaper handles 69% of the food and grocery advertising in Indianapolis. To further impress you, we call particular attention to the fact that this big proportion is maintained by The News with six issues a week against thirteen issues of the other papers."

This endorsement of The News on an exclusive basis by a competing medium indicates graphically the power, prestige and influence of The News in Indianapolis.

The Indianapolis NEWS

Frank T. Carroll, Advertising Director

New York Office
Dan A. Carroll
110 E. 42d Street

Chicago Office
J. E. Lutz
The Tower Bldg.

"SHERRY"

The Love Story of a Spoiled Society Girl

A FAMOUS FEATURES FICTION SERIAL

Adventure — Romance — Conflict — Suspense
Amidst the Glamour of Reckless Wealth
A Delightful Heroine—the Daring Daughter of Prancing Parents

"SHERRY" was written by

BARBARA WEBB

Author of "JOY"

("JOY" went over big. Managing editors praised it highly for its circulation building, its illustrations and promotion material. If you haven't run "JOY" send for promotion book and sample chapters.)

CIRCULATION

PROMOTION

"SHERRY" comes to you complete with a big 8-page Promotion Book, filled with ads, advance publicity stories and promotion ideas.

24 Chapters—Specially posed photograph with each chapter (mat or glossy)

READER INTEREST

Wire Now!

FAMOUS FEATURES SYNDICATE

INCORPORATED

1819 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

GIVEN, A PRESSROOM

and the following benefits of the machinery we ha

FIRST: Normal running speed may be set at a new high level and constantly maintained thereat.

SECOND: Time lost while making paper changes may be saved. Presses no longer need be run on slow motion or stopped for the changing of paper. Rolls may be changed at running speed.

THIRD: Spoils, now made by slowing down for paper changes, may be saved.

FOURTH: Running time between the start and finish of any edition may be shortened.

FIFTH: A distinct improvement in printing may be made.

SIXTH: Printing-machine breakdowns may be almost wholly eliminated, and printing machine repairs reduced far below the present minimum.

These benefits are made po below, which may be se

A new and ultra-modern steel newspaper printing and folding unit of great producing capacity. This is in a wholly new class, in speed of production, in certainty of operation, in unbreakableness, in freedom from the excessive wear and tear now incident to the production of heavy editions, and in ease and economy of operation. It will be found to excel not in a few points only but in all of the attributes which make for high speed, fine printing, accurate folding, and the owner's unalloyed satisfaction.

A single illustration will serve to show the thoroughness with which in this machine we have dealt with the practical problems of the pressroom, its anti-friaring indestructible c prevent friaring at all speeds,

An automatic full-speed p matically pastes a full paper rol or stopping the press, and thus chine into producing time. It printing through the maintenan saves the waste of printed pap change.

These inventions open to the publisher a new means of growth expenditure hitherto unknown, and may save him the need of

OSCAR C. ROE

WOOD NEWSPAPER MACHINERY COR

F ANY DIMENSIONS got by the installation ready for the market

'ENTH: On collect runs products may be increased by two pages instead of by four pages, thus saving the pages unnecessarily set, cast, and printed to fill out.

HTH: Overruns and underruns of production may be eliminated. The moment the actual number of copies required for any section or edition have been run all presses cease printing. This is done by an automatic device we have named The Production Controller.

'TH: Third, Seventh, and Eighth save newsprint.

NTH: Cost of production per copy, covering investment and operation, may be reduced.

VENTH: As long as our machinery is in the hands of its original purchaser, our guarantee covers it.

ELFTH: It is kept continuously under inspection without charge.

the machines mentioned peration at our shops

'hese cylinder bearings taken up or replaced.

device. This auto- without slowing down nning time of the ma- output and improves ed of operation, but it ults from every paper

A two-page inserting mechanism which enables the publisher to increase the number of his pages by twos instead of by fours, upon large as well as small products. This for example enables a sextuple press to produce 26, 30, 34, 38, 42, 46, 50 and 52 paged papers, and an octuple press to produce 34, 38, 42, 46, 50, 54, 58, 62, 66 and 68 paged papers, in addition to their usual products.

A production controller. This device automatically adds, announces, and controls the output of a group of presses. It shows continuously the number of copies still to be printed as well as the number already run. When the last copy is printed all presses stop.

y. They afford him an intensive use of space, time, and of the purchase and development of adjoining property

ger of Sales

TION, 501 Fifth Avenue, New York City

EDITORIAL

For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth.—Hebrews, XII; 6.

LIMITS OF RADIO

WE see the members of the new Federal Radio Commission casting about for light on the meaning and effect of the Radio Act of 1927 which was calculated to control this form of communication in the "interest, convenience and necessity" of the public. While the law says there shall be no censorship of radio broadcasting and that "freedom of the air" must be safeguarded, it is recognized that there are physical limitations that play an important part in the matter.

Speaking of this H. A. Bellows, commissioner from the fourth radio zone, embracing the Central states, said: "A broadcasting station is in many ways akin to a newspaper, but with this fundamental difference: there is no arbitrary limit to the number of newspaper publications, whereas there is a definite limit, and a very low one, to the number of broadcasting stations which can operate simultaneously in our country. This limit has not only been reached, it has been far surpassed. The demand from every section of the country is to cut down the number of stations in the interest of the listening public."

It is the policy of the government to permit broadcasters to take their own view of proper program material and deal with "free speech" issues as they see fit. But, of course, it is also recognized that the final arbiter is the listening public. As Mr. Bellows said it will be the people who shall finally decide whether radio shall be merely an entertainment, an educational force or an advertising device and how free, within its scope, it can be in the matter of clearing to the public truth concerning public affairs.

Increasingly the testimony of those best equipped to discuss the great questions involved in radio broadcasting is that it in no wise, as at present developed, threatens the newspaper industry. Only insofar as newspaper men themselves have gratuitiously offered to radio certain natural newspaper functions has it interfered. And, to date, that has been insignificant.

The question and answer feature that is now so popular in newspapers deserves commendation both as entertainment and as an educational stunt.

THE THIRD DEGREE

TO the layman there appears an easy way out of the interminable doubt and confusion that follow police "third degree" methods. Invariably the defendant, when before the jury, repudiates his police confession and alleges that it was made under duress and exhaustion. "I was so tortured, so sleepy, so hungry or thirsty, I would have signed anything," is the common court-room plea. The public has often seen newspaper exposures of brutal third-degree tactics to wring confessions from accused persons. This plea therefore in many cases appeals to intelligence and sympathy of jurors. Perhaps strong-arm police methods are necessary. Detectives deal with very desperate people. However, when the third degree goes wrong the supreme harm has been done. Better a hundred guilty escape than that one innocent person pay an unjust penalty.

A very simple and democratic expedient might be used to prevent the signing of confessions under duress and at the same time support the police when they have properly done their work. This would be a law which would empower specified high police officials to immediately summon three citizens to act as a jury of silent witnesses of their work before the accused has been allowed to advise with counsel. These citizen observers would be able to go on the witness stand and describe the third degree processes, both in the interest of the accused and of the state. They would be responsible to the court for their conduct. Their part would merely be to testify whether confessions were made voluntarily or under duress. We believe that this system would materially aid justice. It would scarcely be possible for a defendant to go on the witness stand and repudiate a confession which had been fairly obtained by detectives. Also it would dispose of the popular belief that the police, to score convictions, often cruelly frame-up suspects.

A BAD DREAM

"CAN the newspaper be purified?" is the title of an amazing article appearing in the current issue of America, an old and influential Catholic weekly review. The author is none other than Theodore F. MacManus, one of the best-known advertising agents of the country, with headquarters at Detroit. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has long held Mr. MacManus in high esteem. He started his career as a reporter and intelligence carried him to an editorship. Then he built up an advertising agency which will buy $15,000,000 space for its clients this year. Mr. MacManus is not only a successful business man, but one who stands for principle in business. He is usually a thoughtful worker.

But we find some strange lapses of thought in his article, which is a scathing denunciation of the modern newspaper, based on the opinion that journalism which intended good for the reader and the country died with the Greeleys, Wattersons, Danas and Locks and "other giants who shaped the political and almost the social and moral habits of our earlier national years." For the power they wielded, Mr. MacManus says, has been substituted shock, sensation and suggestion and "the newspaper has become merely a disseminator of dubious news—the periodical publisher, the entrepreneur." The newspaper business, he charges, is cowardly, there being no other business which is so "corrupt and corrupting." The writer adds that the "spigot of filth is turned on as deliberately and cold-bloodedly and mechanically for the stimulation of the circulation as the presses are started by the pressman for the printing of the paper."

This deep indignation in Mr. MacManus arises from a feeling that such cases as the Hall-Mills, Peaches-Browning, Leopold-Loeb, Ben King, Charlie Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, Earl Carroll cases in the news were played for sensation, and Mr. MacManus refers contemptuously to an effort by newspapers of standard size to shift responsibility to the tabloids. "All are equally guilty, for all have interpreted public taste in the lowest terms," he says.

These charges have been made before and they are not surprising. There are two schools of thought on this subject, one that would make the newspaper smother and cover all the unpleasant phases of our existence and permit the generation to see life through rose-colored glasses, and another school that believes in realism in the news and that a newspaper's reflections cannot be higher or lower than the objects reflected.

But at this point in his statement, Mr. MacManus makes a remarkable suggestion. It is that the members of churches effect a censorship of the press through organized boycotts. Mr. MacManus does not use the word "boycott," but that is what his plan means. And in the final analysis his scheme means censorship enforced by an advertising fudgeon. We quote his own words, which must have been written in anger rather than in a studious mood:

"To the skeptic and the scoffer I have just this to say—a quarter of a century of experience has given me some knowledge. And I say that any average newspaper can be disciplined, cleansed, and reformed by a massed program of signed pledge cards. What sort of pledge cards? Cards pledging the signer to refrain for a period of thirty, sixty, or ninety days from reading or permitting to be read in his or her home any newspaper or periodical prejudicial to private or public morals. How would these pledge cards be distributed and gathered? They would be announced from all the pulpits in a particular diocese on a particular day; distributed in the church and gatherede at the church door. Who would sponsor the movement? The pastors, I hope. Who would execute it? The congregation, but more especially, the women of the congregation. When would it begin to work and produce its effect? Not later than Monday morning. How? Through panic on the part of the publisher—almost immediately afterward by protest from the advertiser publisher alarmed at the withdrawal of so large a boo the newspaper circulation."

Even granting that Mr. MacManus's sweepin inclusive, positive charges were true, and we for an instant make the concession, his cure regarded by rational people as much more dan than the disease of which he complains. Takin at his word, what he wants is an indepe courageous free press, influencing our soci political well-being. He would proceed to ge intimidation, threat, fear and economic punis He would establish the most irresponsible ship that has ever been proposed to supplant e responsibility which, whatever may be said knows some checks and balances in its portra the world's news. He would put a club of into the hands of a "mass" of people, assumi wisdom, honor, good taste, judgment, morals, in the mass, which is another name for whether of church-going people or other peopl they are acting under impulse rather than disciplined, studious thought. If mass censors boycott and advertising threat can be invo make newspapers conform to preconceived standards, of course the same power will be control public expression in political matters. follows as day the night.

Sensible people in this and many other co have witnessed with withering humiliation, the post-war, jazz age, a public demand f literature. It has been only one phase of the degeneracy of the times. Some publishers catered to it, for circulation purposes, as Mr Manus charges. But the average newspaper has merely reflected it in his news columns in editorial columns and in features he has p the gospel of decent living as well as it ever h preached in our press. The filth that Mr. Mac inveighs against is not the filth of the press the filth of the mass. Some newspapers hav it their own filth, but the returns are not all the old economic check will yet, we believe, erted and those papers shall perish as have have sought to build upon the sands of mere sa appeal. That has been newspaper history, will repeat.

The mass has it in its power, without pledge cards, to make newspaper publication sonal scandal and ordinary criminal news und and unprofitable to any newspaper. It ca creating offensive news. It can stop deman There are editors, and plenty of them, who real sacrifices to maintain principle and giv readers that which they believe is social serv we submit those newspapers that do cater appetite exist by reason of the social mass MacManus, picking a church group, would tr mass. His second thought would be that if were to be established other groups would ap same principle to gain their preconceived no what is right and what wrong. Mr. MacMa had a bad dream. There are more devils cheese than in the journalism he condemns.

Here's your hat, Mr. Spokesman, take o' yourself!

STUTTERING TYPE

IN the bull-dog edition of a New York n newspaper this week we started to cou graphical errors and finally gave it up great a task. In the running story of the murder case, which the paper was featuring were slug lines, type upside down, sentences plete, pi-lines, names of compositors on "tak the main story jumped in the middle of a sen nowhere at all.

No one need tell us that this paper was rai but it was not more of a haste job than seve ning papers had done very neatly hours bef morning paper came on the street. We have but sympathy for newspapers that fall victim typographical error. It is a plague that hum best of them. But when stuttering type is pl evidence of recklessness and is habitual, as in of this bull-dog, we wonder why someone c call a halt.

PERSONAL

NNOUNCEMENT has been made of a gift of $1,000 from Cyrus H. K. tis of the Curtis Publishing Company the new yacht club being built at tland, Maine.

gden L. Reid, publisher of the New k Herald Tribune, has been re-elected irector for three years of the Inter- onal Paper Company.

lerbert F. Gunnison, president of the oklyn Eagle, who recently fractured collar bone in a fall on board ship e was returning from a West Indian age, has so far recovered as to be his desk in the executive offices of Eagle part of each day.

. W. Fairchild, president of the Fair- d Publications, Mrs. Fairchild, and iece, Louise Fairchild, sailed on the S. Leviathan on Saturday, April 30, Europe. Mr. Fairchild will be gone l July 15 and while abroad will visit the foreign offices of his publications.

esse H. Neal, former secretary of the ociated Business Papers, Inc., has ar- d in Paris at the end of a lengthy ation spent along the Mediterranean. will return to the U. S. May 10.

ormer Representative Frank A. rd, publisher of the Malden (Mass.) ws, and Mrs. Bayrd sailed last Satur- from New York on the liner Conte ncamano for a 10 weeks' trip to Mo- co, Spain, Italy and France.

loy Ronald, editor of the Mitchell D.) Republican and a former Sioux y, Iowa, newspaper man, presided at annual convention of the 19th district International Rotary at Sioux City week. He was at one time on the ortorial staff of the Sioux City Trib-

George F. Booth, publisher of the rcester (Mass.) Telegram Gazette, been appointed a member of the com- tee to plan the celebration of the ter- tenary of the state of Massachusetts, be observed in 1930.

Eugene P. Martin, former publisher and ner of the Miami (Okla.) Record- rald and later general manager of the mi News-Record, is seriously ill at Joplin, Mo., hospital. Martin was at time president of the Oklahoma Press sociation.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

OHN J. SULLIVAN, assistant adver- tising manager, and James T. Kelly, istant circulation manager, were ted president and secretary respec- ly of the Worcester (Mass.) Post ployes' Association, pro tempore, at neeting April 27. Reorganization of association is being planned.

ollowing the appointment of P. Mon- Smock, editor of the Vashon ash.) News-Record, to the position District State Horticulturist, P. T. rber, formerly foreman in the News- cord plant, has taken over business l editorial management of that paper.

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOMS

ACK MYERS, Australian correspon- dent of the Chicago Tribune, ar- ed in Chicago recently from Sydney, ere he has represented the Tribune several years. This is Myers' first to America in eight years.

Arthur Ruhl, a member of the editorial ff of the New York Herald Tribune, l who was Berlin correspondent for ut a year, has gone to Central Amer- n on a two months' leave of absence, collect material for a book on Central nerica, to be published by Scribner's.

H. B. Duval, formerly of the staff nsas City Journal-Post, has joined the itical staff of the St. Louis Globe- mocrat.

Vernon E. Fairbanks has been named editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, ceeding John H. Lienhard who has ned the Dispatch staff. Mr. Fair- nks returns to the paper after more n two years as news editor in the sociated Press office in St. Paul. Previous to that he did reportorial and rewrite work on the Dispatch.

Frank R. Wolfe, formerly of the copy and art department, Chicago Tribune, has joined the staff of Liberty Magazine, where he is doing merchandise and promotion art work.

Charles N. Wheeler, political writer on the Chicago Herald and Examiner, has been named assistant to the president of the Illinois Power & Light company.

H. V. Dismukes has succeeded Thos. W. Howorth as editor of the McAllen (Tex.) Monitor.

Theodore Wallen, a former assistant to George B. Armstead, managing editor of the Hartford Courant, is now political writer for the New York Herald Tribune.

Harold Bennison of the Boston Traveler spoke on "Loose Leaves from a Reporter's Notebook" before the Whitinsville, Mass., Congregational Church Men's Club, April 27.

Walter F. Forbes, financial editor of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Evening Tribune, who has been critically ill, has been removed from the Eitel hospital to his home where he is recuperating after an operation.

Jack D. Webb, of the editorial staff of the New York Morning World, has succeeded Earle Meyer in the publicity department of the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, New York office.

Lawrence J. Keefe, formerly political editor of the Newark Star-Eagle, recently-appointed director of public relations of the Port of New York Authority, was given a farewell dinner April 25 by his former associates in Newark.

Harold Goff, managing editor of the Salt Lake City Deseret News, was appointed a member of the board of regents of the University of Utah last week by Governor George H. Dern.

Philip Rose, until recently Sunday editor of the Hartford Courant, has been promoted to assistant managing editor of that paper. Joseph Deshon, formerly assistant Sunday editor of the Courant and for the past year free lance writer in Hartford, will be the new Sunday editor.

John McSweeney, city editor of the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) News, has been named a school director in Hanover township.

Frank R. Kent of the Baltimore Sun will speak in Kansas City, Mo., May 10 before the Missouri League of Women Voters.

Robert McCormick has resigned as city editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch.

Clifford Knight, cartoonist, formerly with a number of New York newspapers, has joined the Bridgeport Herald.

William Whittemore, reporter for the Albany (N. Y.) Sunday Telegram, and Matthew J. Sweeney, on the staff of The Times-Union, are figuring in a local murder trial. The former already has testified as a prosecution witness and Sweeney, has been subpoenaed by the defense. Both wrote stories in the case at the time of the murder.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of L. E. Richwagen of the Portland (Me.) Express to Miss Christine Petersen of Portland. Mr. Richwagen is a graduate of Dartmouth College and Miss Petersen of the University of Maine.

Joseph C. Lappeus, in charge of the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union files and church pages, has been assigned to a congregation in West Sand Lake, N. Y. by the New York Conference of the Evangelical Church meeting in annual session at Reading, Pa.

Edwin S. McIntosh, of the staff, New York Herald Tribune, is traveling in the flood area of the Mississippi for his paper.

Edward Fallon, formerly head of the copy desk of the Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle, is now news editor of that paper.

Harry A. Stroud, former telegraph editor of the Shawnee (Okla.) Morning News, is now publisher of the Tecumseh (Okla.) Democrat. He also is editor of the Central Oil News of Shawnee.

Edward L. Kennedy, formerly feature man on the Newark Star-Eagle, is making a tour of Europe.

Carter Field, head of the New York Herald Tribune Washington bureau, will sail on May 14 for Europe. He will spend a month travelling in Europe and will then go to Geneva to attend the Arms Limitation Conference.

Jean Sabate, city hall reporter for the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, has resigned to become editor of a Rhode Island weekly paper.

Edward Logan, head of the copy desk of the New York Herald Tribune, is on vacation.

Charles Willoughby, financial editor of the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press, has been accredited as conductor of the editorial page humor column, which is entitled "The Melting Pot." His initials "C. H. W." have just been added to the column, although he has been in charge of it for about two years.

Remo M. Lombardi, formerly city editor of the Mamaroneck (N. Y.) Daily Times, has been named assistant national publicity director for the Boy Scouts of America at their New York offices.

Ed Brown, Toledo News-Bee courthouse reporter, has resigned to go to St. Paul.

M. E. Hennessy, political writer for the Boston (Mass.) Globe is broadcasting a series of talks from station WEEI of Boston on the subject of: "Presidential Possibilities." He has already talked on the chances of Governor Al Smith of New York and Governor Albert Ritchie of Maryland.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

From cub to city editor in four and a half months is the achievement of George L. Brady, city editor of the Lawrence (Mass.) Telegram. And Brady is only 21 years old. R. W. Emerson, managing editor, tells the story of his employe's rise.

GEORGE L. BRADY

"During last September, Brady came to the Evening Telegram as a real cub," Emerson said. "His only experience had been as a correspondent for a Haverhill daily. I noticed, shortly after his coming, his willingness and a desire to learn. He worked not only days, but nights studying every feature of newspaper work. My interest in him only increased his study.

"The result was that when my city editor severed connections with the paper, I put Brady on the desk. That was late in January and he has stayed there since, making good."

MARRIED

JULIAN STREET, JR., a member of the staff of the New York Herald Tribune and the son of the author, to Miss Narcissa Vanderlip, daughter of Frank Vanderlip, April 25, in New York. After a trip to California, Mr. and Mrs. Street will go to Paris, where Mr. Street will join the Paris Herald.

Edward F. Darrell, Jr., of the staff of the New York Herald Tribune, to Miss Emily Edey Woods of New York, April 29.

C. William Trebosius, editor-owner, Somerville (Tex.) News-Tribune, to Miss Betty Mae Thomas.

Harrington Wimberly, editor of the Cordell (Okla.) Beacon, to Miss Myrth McCurley of Cordell, last week.

Whitfield D. Inness, formerly of the

(Continued on page 32)

The Writings of
STEPHEN LEACOCK
Ace of Humorists

have been translated into the languages of, and published as books in France

Germany
Sweden
Holland
Japan
Austria
India
(in Urdu)

Readers of English language publications know the real fun of "laughing with Leacock" not only in the United States and Canada

but also in

British Isles
Ceylon
Belgium
China
India
British East Africa
Australia
New Zealand

WHY?
STEPHEN LEACOCK
Writes the Universal Language of Humor

Metropolitan Newspaper Service
Maximilian Elser, Jr. General Manager
Earl J. Hadley, Associate
150 Nassau St., New York City

(Continued from page 31)

Galesburg (Ill.) Daily Mail and now in the Galesburg office of the Peoria (Ill.) Star, to Miss Ida Clarice Way of Galesburg, April 23.

Frances Gleason, formerly of the circulation department of the Chicago Tribune, to Ben O'Shea.

Miss Ruth Werbel, formerly of the auditing department of the Chicago Tribune, to Phillip Grodins.

Miss Antoinette A. Lynch of the advertising department of the Ithaca (N. Y.) Journal-News, to John DeVoe of that city, recently.

Leon Stolz, editorial writer for the Chicago Tribune, to Miss Marcia Preble, April 25.

Charles H. Maguire, Jr., chairman of the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union chapel, to Miss Agnes McDonough of Cohoes, Easter Monday.

Frank La Chat, of the auditing department of the Chicago Tribune, to Mrs. Mae Gurnea, March 12.

James J. Maloney of the composing room, Chicago Tribune, to Miss Josephine Darda.

PRESS ASSOCIATION NOTES

ROBERT W. BARROS of Worcester, Mass., veteran Associated Press telegrapher, and Mrs. Barros, celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary April 23. With them were Robert W. Barros, Jr., A. P. operator at the Worcester Telegram and Francis E. Barros also an A. P. telegrapher, sons of the couple.

William Magee, Jr., 22, formerly connected with the United Press office in Boston has succeeded Thomas F. Sweeney as manager of the Buffalo U. P. bureau.

Baron Gorge Wrangel, of the exiled Russian nobility, is doing society assignments for Universal Service in Rome. Other royal reporters for Universal Service include Gertrude Lady Decies, covering court and other society in London, and Baron Jacques Benois-Mechin, in Paris.

Robert T. Small, special staff writer of the Consolidated Press, is covering the flood crisis with headquarters in New Orleans.

John Lambert, of the Washington bureau of Universal Service, and Mrs. Lambert, have returned to Washington after a week at Atlantic City.

Thomas J. McBreen, chief of traffic department of the Consolidated Press Association, has returned to his desk after a short illness. L. C. Owen, Pacific Coast superintendent has returned to San Francisco after a visit in the East.

Corinne Rich, staff feature correspondent for Universal Service, has been transferred from the Washington bureau of Universal Service to the New York bureau.

CHANGES OF OWNERSHIP

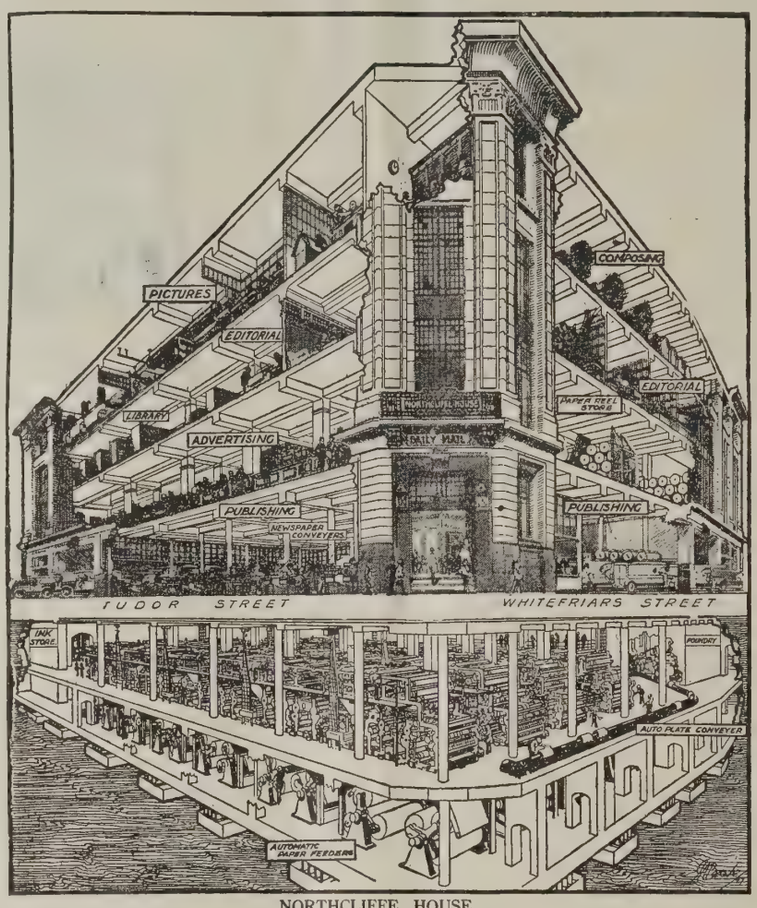
R. R. LANE, publisher of the Bement (Ill.) Register the last 11 years, has sold his paper to A. C. McDowell and Carl H. MacCoy. Mr. McDowell was former publisher of the Rantoul (Ill.) Press and has lately been state editor of the Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin and Mr. MacCoy is operating a job shop in Normal.

S. R. Hoover, veteran Missouri newspaper publisher, has purchased the Slater (Mo.) News and the Slater Rustler from M. L. Francis.

Boswell (Okla.) News, weekly, has been sold by Bonds & Bonds to M. B. Townsley of Sherman, Tex.

SCHOOLS

OTTO A. SWICKERT of Springfield, Mass., has been elected editor-in-chief of Maine Campus, weekly newspaper of the University of Maine.



Five South Dakota newspapermen were received into associate membership of Sigma Delta Chi, honorary journalistic fraternity, April 27, at a ceremonial in Vermilion, S. D. Those chosen for the honor were: Charles M. Day, Sioux Falls Argus-Leader; W. C. Lusk, editor and publisher, Yankton Press and Dakotan; Harold Safford, managing editor, Sioux Falls Argus-Leader; J. B. Townsley, editor, Vermilion Republican, and C. T. Bolstad, publisher, Vermilion Plain Talk.

Peter F. Gaynor, Jr., of Albany, has been elected president of the Press Club of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. J. F. Sullivan was named secretary.

Miss Virginia E. Higgins of Albany (N. Y.) has been elected editor-in-chief of the State College News, student newspaper at the New York State College for Teachers in Albany.

A special inter-session from Aug. 8 to Sept. 10 will be a feature of the University of Missouri school of journalism summer course. Courses will be offered in reporting, copy reading, advertising and the writing of editorials. Registrations will take place August 6.

NORTHCLIFFE HOUSE, NEW HOME OF LONDON DAILY MAIL, IS COMPLETED

NORTHCLIFFE HOUSE.

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

LONDON, April 23.—Replete with the most up-to-date appliances for furthering the speed of newspaper production, Northcliffe House, the new premises of the London Daily Mail, in Tudor street, just off Fleet street, have now been finally completed and are in possession of the paper's staff. Carmelite House, the old home of the Daily Mail is now reserved for the production of the Evening News.

Besides a complete telephonic system, all departments in the new building are in communication with one another by a system of pneumatic tubes for carrying messages, etc., the system also being connected through a central exchange with Carmelite House. For the Northern Edition of the Daily Mail there is a private wire connected with the Manchester works, and all news received at Northcliffe House is transmitted via the Manchester room to the Northern city.

Stereotype plates are carried from the foundry to the presses by automatic carriers with a speed of 20 plates a minute, and pass alongside the press units so that the page required can be taken off the carrier immediately opposite the cylinder it is to be locked onto.

The presses themselves, by Hoe and the Goss Printing Press Company, are of the one deck unit type, extending right across the building in lines of 12, and number 42. New reels are attached to the presses from the paper magazine under the press-room floor, the alignment of the gummed edge of the new reel with the old reel being mechanical. The two ink tanks hold ten tons each, these being filled and emptied by compressed air.

Both paper and passenger lifts in the building have a micro-levelling adjustment which ensures the lifts stopping at exactly the correct level with the floor.

Printed paper are taken from the press-room to the publishing department on the ground-floor by a large-scale conveyor equipment.

In the structural work alone of the building 2,400 tons of steel and 2,000 tons of cement were used. Seven hundred tons of stone were fixed on two facades of the four-story building, 2,290 tons of bricks and 5,000 tons of cement being used in the building. In the excavation of the site 31,500 cubic yards, or 42,480 tons of earth were dug out by shovel.

Air conditioning apparatus conveys five million cubic feet of fresh air per hour to the press room, and 3,500,000 cubic feet per hour to the foundry and composing room.

Every floor possesses a complete vacuum cleaning plant. Drinking water for the whole of the staff is obtained from an artesian well sunk 640 feet below street level—the first British newspaper office to possess its own well.

Electricity supply is derived from two different power stations, to avoid delay consequent on a breakdown, and there are four complete switchboard sets controlling the whole of the plant. The office portion of the building is warmed by the panel system installed in the ceilings and operated by oil-fired boilers. H. R. H. the Prince of Wales set the presses in motion on the official opening night on April 11.

Malcolm William Welty, son of t publisher of the Bartlesville (Okla.) E aminer, N. D. Welty, was named hon man of the class of 1926 at the U versity of Kansas. Young Welty w sports editor of the University Da Kansan, member of Sigma Delta C honorary journalism fraternity and pro inent in college affairs.

Journalism students of the Kan State Agricultural College, Manhatt published the El Dorado Daily Tim April 26, under the direction of Ma nard W. Brown, head of the departm of industrial journalism.

HOLDING NEW POSTS

RICHARD T. LaBRECQUE, fr staff, Southbridge (Mass.) New to staff, Woodbridge (N. J.) Leader.

James Burchard, from sports depa ment, New York Herald Tribune, same department, Evening Telegram.

Charles Urbach, from Dubuque (I Times-Journal, to court reporter, Sio City (Ia.) Tribune staff. He succe Archie Herzoff, who has been promo to the copy desk.

R. W. Green, from Meadville (P Tribune-Republican to Cambridge Spri (Pa.) News-Enterprise staff.

John Bierck, from assistant telegra editor, Hartford Courant, to telegra editor, Union City (N. J.) Hudson D patch.

SPECIAL EDITIONS

ALLENTOWN (Pa.) MORNI CALL, Better Homes Show editi May 1.

Sheboygan (Wis.) Press, Sheboy County Historical edition, April 29.

Waynesboro (Pa.) Record Her 80th anniversary edition, April 30.

Chatham (Ont.) Daily News, Au mobile edition, April 30.

Elizabeth (N. J.) Daily Journal, A nual Real Estate edition, April 23.

White Plains (N. Y.) Daily Report 96-page Real Estate and Home Build edition, April 20.

Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Pr published two special sections in tabl May 1, an Annual Farm edition, of ei pages, and a Child Health Week numb of 12 pages.

CORRECTION

An item in the personal column Editor & Publisher for April 16 roneously alluded to F. W. Kellogg owner of the Los Angeles Express. M Kellogg sold his interest in the Expr in 1925 to Edward A. Dickson and C C. Earl, Jr., who are now sole owners

FLASHES

The Chinese invented gunpowder a printing, and it is a question which th are suffering most from now.—Knoxv Journal.

Now they have got the "obey" out marriage ceremonies, the next thing delete is "love and honor."—James Montague, New York Herald Tribune

We can intervene in China and Ni ragua any time in the interests of derly government, and one of these da we may be able to do as much in large cities.—El Paso Times.

The old-time shot who put notch into his gun handle for his victims lef grandson who has several dents in off fender.—Detroit News.

It is a notable fact that most spe records are made by people who are going anywhere.—San Diego Union.

Co-ed's feet are a size and a h larger than those of her mother, says orthopedist. Is it substantiated then t the New Generation is going to dogs?—Detroit News.

To conservative mortals, the go-get is also a goat-getter.—Florence (Al Herald.

The Whole Story About South Texas is summed up in the statement that business and business conditions are good, as is shown on all business condition maps.

The whole story about Houston's newspapers is that for fifteen years The Houston Chronicle has held, and continues to hold—first place in advertising, circulation and in the minds and hearts of nearly all newspaper readers in South Texas. This leadership is especially marked at the present time.

These are the essential qualities which you must have in order to realize adequate profits from your newspaper advertising in Houston.

THE HOUSTON CHRONICLE

Jesse H. Jones, Pres.; C. B. Gillespie, V-P-Editor; G. J. Palmer, V-P-Bus. Mgr.;
Steve Kelton, Asst. Bus. Mgr.; R. W. McCarthy, Mgr. Nat'l Adv.

John M. Branham Company
National Representatives

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Hanle Newspaper Syndicate Sues Rabbi Wise for $60,000—Dare Frances to Return to Paris May 14—Science Service Holds Annual Meeting

SUIT was filed last Monday in the Supreme Court of Kings County, New York, against Rabbi Stephen S. Wise by the Hanle Newspaper Syndicate, Inc., for $60,000 damages for alleged breach of contract.

The complaint alleges that Rabbi Wise contracted on Jan. 21 to write editorials to be syndicated by the plaintiff and that he refused to fulfill his contract when he learned that the plaintiff had contracted for the service with the New York Daily Mirror, a tabloid, for $200 a a week.

Daré Frances, fashion writer of Associated Newspapers, Inc., will return to her Paris headquarters May 14. She came to New York to be at the Waldorf-Astoria during the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

The annual meeting of Science Service, Inc., was held April 28 and two new members of the board of trustees were elected. Dr. David White, home secretary of the National Academy of Sciences, was named by that body as one of its three representatives upon the board, and Marlen E. Pew, editor of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, was chosen as a representative of the journalistic profession.

Trustees who were reelected were: Dr. D. T. MacDougal, director of the Desert Laboratory, Tucson, Ariz., representing the American Association for the Advancement of Science; Dr. C. G. Abbot, acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, representing the National Research Council, and Thomas L. Sidlo, of Cleveland, representing the E. W. Scripps Estate; John H. Finley of the New York Times, representing the journalistic profession.

Dr. W. E. Ritter, director emeritus of the Scripps Institution for Oceanography and instrumental in the organization of Science Service, was again chosen president. Dr. Vernon Kellogg, permanent secretary of the National Research Council, was elected vice-president and chairman of the executive committee, and Dr. J. McKeen Cattell, editor of Science, was elected treasurer. These officers, with Dr. White and Mr. Pew, were chosen to constitute the executive committee.

Trustees whose terms of office have not yet expired and the organizations they represent are: American Association for the Advancement of Science, Dr. J. McKeen Cattell and Dr. M. I. Pupin; National Academy of Sciences, Dr. John C. Merriam and Dr. R. A. Millikan; National Research Council, Dr. Vernon Kellogg and Dr. Victor C. Vaughan; Journalistic profession, Mark Sullivan; E. W. Scripps Estate, Dr. William E. Ritter and Robert P. Scripps.

Reports from the director, Dr. Edwin E. Slosson, and the managing editor and secretary, Watson Davis, were received and discussed at the meeting.

C. Edgar Brown has resigned as secretary of the Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate, Inc. He has not yet announced his future plans.

N. C. Ferguson, formerly of Johnson Features, Inc., has joined the sales staff of the United Feature Syndicate, New York.

Title of "Dicky Dippy's Diary," distributed by Associated Newspapers, Inc., New York, has been changed to "Dippy Dicky's Uncensored War Diary."

New York Evening Post, for the first time in its history, is running a comic strip. It is called "In the Rough," is by Howard Freeman; and is syndicated by Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate.

Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate has a new strip called "The Deer Family," by Al Posen.

Philip D. Stong has resigned as editor of the North American Newspaper Alliance to join the editorial department of Liberty. For some time Mr. Stong has been writing "Skylines," a New York letter, which has been well received by N. A. N. A. members.

Frank Willard, cartoonist, who draws the comic strip "Moon Mullins" for the Chicago Tribune, is building a new $50,000 residence at Kenilworth, a suburb of Chicago. The home will include a big studio, 22 by 17 feet, over the garage.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

Harrisburg (Pa.) Evening News Conducts "Odds and Ends Sale" in Classified—Manager Gives Himself a By-Line in Promotion Copy—Burkle Manages Classified Section, N. B. B. B.

VAL LAWRENCE, classified manager of the Harisburg Evening News, and Patriot recently put on an "Odds and Ends Sale," which his solicitors are selling successfully to local customers.

A full page devoted to this classification carries an eight column streamer head in boldface "Odds and Ends Sale," with the sub-head, "A Thousand Bargains—at Cost—Below Cost—or Slightly Above Cost." The ads, separated by cut-off rules, are set in regulation classified style, although considerable white space is allowed.

Twenty-five advertisers bought space to fill a page under this heading in a recent isue of the Evening News.

Richard Burkle is now manager of the classified section of the National Better Business Bureau, succeeding Florence Metyard, resigned. About 784 newspapers are co-operating with the Bureau at present in investigating possible fraudulent users of newspaper classified sections.

A new type of office "reader" in which the head of a department gets a by-line appeared recently in the Binghamton (N. Y.) Press. It was an office publicity story on the value of small ads to rural readers. The story was signed by L. S. Mulford, classified advertising manager, and ran as regular copy.

A "Received Too Late for Classification" column has been started on the classified pages of the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press and Evening News. A special night service for classified advertisers was recently instituted by the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union. All three papers are building up their Saturday pages with special columns of small ads from real estate and used car firms.

About 25 members of the Houston Post-Dispatch classified department were guests of the paper at a sea food and chicken dinner, followed by dancing, at Morgan's Point. Maurice S. Schwartz, classified manager, presided.

Both the Minneapolis (Minn.) Sunday Tribune and the Minneapolis Sunday Journal have advanced the closing hour for Sunday want ads to six p. m., Saturday. The new rule became effective April 30.

an event of importance in the advertising world
The Detroit Times has pleasure in announcing the appointment of

Harold
A Stretch

as advertising director effective now—all of our mutual friends will surely be glad to hear of it

ASK YOUR OPTOMETRIST

about the vital importance of white space around letters for maximum legibility

Look at the three specimens below set solid, half-point leaded and one point leaded. At first glance the specimen of one-point leaded is easiest to read.

Obviously, proper spacing between lines is vital to easy reading. And just as important is proper spacing between letters.

Note that the Intertype IDEAL news face has normal spacing between letters. Its letters are not "packed" too closely.

Ideal News is not a different face. It is an old and familiar face which has demonstrated its legibility through years of use.

Corrections made by Intertype designers are only those necessary to overcome mechanical problems in the modern high-speed newspaper.

Ask your Optometrist to test the Intertype News face for readability in comparison with the face you are now using . . . or any other news face.

Like an old friend, Intertype Ideal News wears well on the eyes.

Intertype IDEAL News Series

7 POINT ON SOLID SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary light-face type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and the descenders were made a little longer. The sharp contrast between thin and thick lines has been modified. Characters like a e s g, which always have been pinched in deference to old standards, are here made of full breadth, and even in ordinary presswork are recognized with ease. The Intertype News Series derives its principal claim to legibility from its ability to carry a good body of ink. A generous relief of white

7 POINT ON 7½ POINT SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary light-face type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and the descenders were made a little longer. The sharp contrast between thin and thick lines has been modified. Characters like a e s g, which always have been pinched in deference to old standards, are here made of full breadth, and even in ordinary presswork are recognized with ease. The Intertype News Series

7 POINT ON 8 POINT SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary light-face type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and the descenders were made a little longer. The sharp contrast between thin and thick lines has been modified. Characters like a e s g, which always have been pinched in deference to old standards, are here made of full breadth, and even

Intertype matrices will run in other slug-casting machines

Write nearest branch for larger specimens

Standardized INTERTYPE TRADE MARK

Designed in 5½, 6½, 7 and 8 Point

INTERTYPE CORPORATION: New York 1440 Broadway; Chicago 130 N. Franklin St.; Memphis McCall Bldg.; San Francisco 560 Howard St.; Los Angeles 1240 S. Main St.; Boston 80 Federal St.; London; Berlin

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

Boy-Power Still Most Important Factor—Checking Up on Carriers to Avoid Misses—"Six-Hour Race" to Get New Readers—Men for Solicitors

LITTLE boys are still the big builders of newspaper circulations.

In some sections of the country recently the tendency has been to complain of the ineptitude of the youthful carrier and grown men have replaced boys on newspaper routes, notably on the Fort Worth (Tex.) Star Telegram; Birmingham (Ala.) News, Little Rock (Ark.) Democrat, and the Asheville (N. C.) Times. Those responsible for the change declared the boys were "irresponsible." But delegates to the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association in New York last week who were interviewed by EDITOR & PUBLISHER disagreed with this view, heaping praise upon the newsboy, and placing a good carrier organization second only to a good managing editor as a builder and holder of circulation.

There are, however, many different and necessary ways of galvanizing the youngsters into action, and some of these methods were detailed in the interviews obtained. Improved methods of distribution were also described, together with varied experiences with methods of solicitation.

Newspapers generally throughout the country are showing a steady, healthy increase in circulation, it was indicated. In some sections, notably in mill towns where there is unemployment at present, there is a tendency to sag, but the subscription lists in such places are being bolstered up by special campaigns.

In as large a city as Des Moines, Ia., boys do all the soliciting, except in the cases of rural mail subscribers, according to John Cowles, associate publisher of the Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital.

"Practically all our Des Moines circulation is carrier delivered," Mr. Cowles said. "We have about 375 carrier boys in Des Moines itself, and 2,300 scattered throughout Iowa."

Boys are likewise the builders of Gannett Newspaper circulations, F. E. Tripp, general manager, said.

"All our circulation campaigns are conducted through our carrier organizations," he explained. "We pay the boys a fee for each new subscriber brought in and give prizes to the best boys."

Admitting that boys naturally are apt to be irresponsible, John H. Harrison, president of the Inland Press Association, and publisher of the Danville (Ill.) Commercial News, declared, however, that with good adult supervision boys would outdistance men in loyal service to a newspaper. The circulation manager of his paper, whom he described as "a wizard with boys" is Ed Hewes.

"We take pains to look up the families of boys we engage as carriers," Mr. Harrison said. "We want to be sure that the parents will stand back of the boys, urging them to be on time to work, to make their collections promptly, and to realize generally that their sons are working at their first business and it is important for them to be serious about it.

"But a newspaper should help the parents and not just rely upon them. For instance, we have frequent meetings of the boys which amount to courses of instruction in salesmanship and good manners.

"While we try to be strict with the boys and train them, we do not forget to entertain them. Nothing can take the place of entertainment to keep a boy loyal to his newspaper. Frequent picnics, free movies at least once a week, and games and prizes for the boys keep them pepped up and working hard.

"We have found that a way to avoid misses on a route is to make the boy responsible pay for a special messenger service to supply the reader with the missing copy. We advertise our special messenger service extensively, informing readers that if their newspaper is not delivered on time to telephone our office and we will see that they receive a copy immediately.

"This system is impressive to both the reader and the carrier. To have a boy make a special trip in response to a telephone request is a graphic illustration to the subscriber of our sincere desire to serve him. We have our special messenger bring a receipt back with him, and these receipts are shown to the carrier who should have delivered the paper in the first place, and enough is deducted from his earnings to pay for the messenger service. When carriers know they are being checked up in this manner, they are careful not to miss any houses on their routes."

When the circulation department of the Danville Commercial-News wants to bolster up its subscription list, Ed Hewes, the circulation manager, announces a "Six Hour Race."

All the carriers, there are nearly 100 in the city of Danville proper, gather at the newspaper office and at a signal from Mr. Hewes they start off on their respective routes armed with subscription blanks. Instructions are to return to the office at the end of six hours. The boy bringing back the largest number of "starts" is awarded a prize, and the whole crowd is treated to ice cream or some entertainment.

Mr. Harrison is very proud of the territorial news service he has built up for the Commercial-News. A total of six counties are included in the territory served by this newspaper, and there are more than 120 correspondents sending in news regularly.

"In the old days when we wanted to increase our circulation we used to open up a new town," Mr. Harrison explained. "Eventually, however, we came to consider this as waste circulation, since much of it was too far away to be of service to our local advertisers. Now we specialize in the 120 towns which we now serve. At first we thought we would soon reach the saturation point in this territory, but last year we were able to increase our list by 1,500 readers without going outside the limits we have outlined.

"Some people say that I am foolish to spend so much for country correspondence.

"'You are running wild', they say to me, when I tell them about my list of 120 correspondents.

"My growing circulation, however, usually proves to be a sufficient answer."

The Commercial-News has another trick for keeping its newsboys on the job after "starts." Mr. Hewes has set up a regular show case in the delivery room and keeps it filled with tantalizing premiums, changed frequently to suit the season. Each premium instead of a price tag has on it the number of new subscriptions a boy must bring in before he can call himself its owner.

Norman D. Black, of the Fargo (N. D.) Forum was one of those interviewed who believes in using men for direct solicitation.

The Forum keeps five men on the road all the time. They are engaged both on a salary and commission basis.

"Our theory is that a solicitor must turn in twice as much money as he draws," Mr. Black explained. "We don't pay him more than 50 per cent of what he brings in.

"We are a state paper and our solicitors have to travel over a large territory. In some directions our territory extends as far as 300 miles from the office."

Mr. Black estimated that this method of solicitation costs the Forum about $300 a week, all year around.

Strict supervision of carriers is the policy followed by the Ashtabula (O.) Star-Beacon, according to C. A. Rowley, the publisher.

"We have a set of rules for our carriers which we enforce," he said. "We do not allow them to ride their bicycles on people's lawns, for instance, and require them to lay the papers neatly on the door steps.

"Every Saturday afternoon we hold a meeting to go over any complaints that may have been received during the week. We keep the meetings short. Usually they do not last more than a half hour. We want to let the boys know that we check up on all misses."

"Newsboys Then, In Business Now" is the title given to a series of circulation promotion stories being run by the Wichita (Kan.) Evening Eagle.

A recent subject in the series was Sydney D. Long, now the business manager of the Morning and Evening Eagle. Mr. Long went to Wichita from Fort Wayne, Ind., in 1888 and started selling the morning Eagle shortly afterwards.

The Duluth News-Tribune has a follow-up system to win back the good will of complaining subscribers. When a reader telephones that the boy forgot to leave the paper, a special messenger is sent with a copy, and the next day a member of the newspaper's staff makes a point of calling up and asking if the service is better again.

COAST CIRCULATORS ELECT

J. B. T. Martin of Spokane Chronicle Named President at Tacoma Meet

J. B. T. Martin, circulation manager of the Spokane (Wash.) Chronicle, was elected president of the Pacific Northwest Circulation Managers' Association at the close of the three day meeting of the Association at the Hotel Winthrop, in Tacoma, April 19 to 21. Other officers elected are: Ben R. Litfin, The Dalles, Oregon, vice-president; E. P. Hopwood, Portland Oregonian, secretary-treasurer; C. H. Breed, Spokane Spokesman-Review and Ed Powell, Seattle Times, directors.

In a discussion of "The Comparative Value of Stage and Private Hauls" E. P. Hopwood spoke of the need of uniform express rates for newspapers in the northwest. Present rates, he said, are higher in the northwest than in other parts of the United States.

David H. Smith of the Portland (Ore.) Journal spoke on how to handle the price of street sales and yet leave the carriers the same rate. "The Value of a Newspaper Rack for Street Use" was discussed by E. R. Powell. J. B. T. Martin, of Spokane related the effect of six serial stories on the circulation of the Chronicle.

Others who addressed the meeting included: P. P. Goelkner, Aberdeen Daily World and W. R. Woodward, Everett (Wash.) Herald.

Vancouver, B. C., was selected as the meeting place of the association in April, 1928.

BRITISH PUBLISH PROGRESS SHOW

Census of Production Reveals 2 Cent Increase in 1924 Over 1 —56,000 Persons Employe —39,000 at Work in 1912

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, April 23.—In the preli report of the Third Census of tion taken in Great Britain in 19 issued by the Board of Trade, is the net value of the work produ proprietors of newspapers and pe publications who carried out the or part of their printing work i own offices.

Even after taking into acco varying price levels, it is clearly that compared with 1912 the tota of the output of newspapers in Great Britain was increased by ab per cent and by 247 per cent as co with the figures for 1907. The figures are: 1924, £44,954,000; £13,603,000; 1907, £12,940,000. T output of the establishments refe amounted to £31,052,000, that su resenting the amount by which t value of the output exceeded t of the materials used (£13,493,00 the value of the work given out 000). The net output per head sons employed in newspaper w 1924 was £546, in 1912, £221, and £190. The average number of employed in newspaper factories their own printing was 56,837, of 39,468 consist of operatives, and of management, clerical and t staff. In 1907, 43,644 people we ployed, and in 1912, 39,450. Of 1924, 4,193 were males and 1, males under 18 years of age, and males and 6,024 females over 1 total capacity of engines at the was 8,256 h.p., and nearly 45 p of this total was in reserve or i

This large proportion of idle was probably due, the report st the increased use of electric m yessir, gentleme when a better service is produced,

NEA will pro duce it

Modern Composing Room
Furniture

as made by us will speed up production and reduce costs—a real saving in your Pay Roll. Are you interested? If so, consult your regular dealer in printers' supplies or write us direct.

Do it now!

HAMILTON MFG. CO.
TWO RIVERS, WIS.

ADVERTISERS w understand the Ic situation know from exp ence that the consum market there cannot properly sold without use of newspapers in th
twenty-one key cities.

IOWA DAILY PRESS AS

Ames Tribune
Boone News-Republican
Burlington Gazette
Burlington Hawkeye
Cedar Rapids Gazette
Centerville Iowegian & Citizen
Council Bluffs Nonpareil
Davenport Democrat & Leader
Davenport Times
Dubuque Telegraph-Herald
Fort Dodge Messenger & Chronicle
Fort Madison Democrat
Iowa City Press
Keokuk Gate Cit
Marshalltown Ti Republican
Mason City Glo Gazette & Ti
Muscatine Journ News-Tribune
Oelwein Register
Oskaloosa Herald
Ottumwa Courier
Sioux City Journ
Sioux City Tribu
Washington Jour
Waterloo Courier
Waterloo Tribune

PLAYING THE GAME

BY

MARY K. BROWNE

Will Be a Regular Feature of the UNITED PRESS Report Beginning May Sixteenth

Miss Browne was national woman tennis champion in 1912, 1913 and 1914. In 1924 she was finalist in both golf and tennis national championships. In 1925 she captained the Wightman Cup team which invaded England and France. Last winter she toured the U. S., playing against Suzanne Lenglen.

ary K. Browne, United Press Staff Correspondent, Returns a Hot Drive from the Base Line

Miss Browne will cover all the big tennis and golf events for United Press clients. She will work as a member of the sports staff, writing her own spot news copy, as well as analytical dispatches on fine points of the game.

Her stories will be featured on the sports pages of hundreds of United Press newspapers this summer.

Mary K. Browne, United Press Staff Correspondent, Makes a Brassie Shot

UNITED PRESS ASSOCIATIONS

General Offices World Building New York

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Jean Newton Has Kept Two Features Going for Seven Years—Mary K. Brown to Write for United Press—Virginia Cole Author of "The Newspaper and Crime"

FOR seven years now Jean Newton has kept two features running steadily in a list of American Newspapers. The features are titled "Through a Woman's Eyes" and "How it started." Both are now distributed by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.

JEAN NEWTON

Miss Newton, whose real name is Hermione Neustadtl, organized her own feature syndicate in 1920, originating these two features then. She called her syndicate the Quality Newspaper Syndicate.

Prior to that time she had been fiction editor of Harpers Bazar, manager of a department of S. W. Straus & Co.; and secretary to Cortland Smith, president of the American Press Association.

Her ambition at present is to become a playwright.

A veteran of the circulation department of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat & Chronicle is Minnie A. Crowe, who rounded out 26 years service as bookkeeper last month. During recent years Miss Crowe has kept the records for the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Virginia Lee Cole is author of "The Newspaper and Crime," published recently by the University of Missouri, Columbus, Mo.

Mary K. Browne, three times women's national tennis champion and internationally recognized as an expert golfer, has become a newspaper woman.

The United Press Association announced this week that Miss Browne had joined its staff of sports writers. She will be assigned to cover all of the important women's golf and tennis tournaments and a number of the men's events during the coming summer.

Miss Browne will write under a department caption of "Playing the Game."

Miss Harriet I. Frederick, society editor and feature writer of the New Haven Times-Leader for the past five years, became the bride of Dr. Frank T. O. Neil, of New Haven, at St. Brendan's Church on Easter Monday morning. Dr. and Mrs. O'Neil returned on Thursday of last week from a honeymoon in Bermuda.

Mrs. Alfred H. Langlois of Manchester, N. H., who writes a column for women each week in L'Avenir National, a French journal published in Manchester, spoke recently before Cercle Jeanne Mance in Worcester, Mass., on "The Women of Yesterday and of Tomorrow."

Miss Alice Bennett of the Watertown (N. Y.) Standard will speak on "The Press" at the conference of the Parent-Teacher association May 14 in Carthage.

Miss Florence Brobeck, editor of the New York Herald Tribune Institute, addressed a meeting of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, Department of Homemaking, at Sunnyside Gardens, Long Island City.

Miss Maxine Blake, a senior in the School of Journalism at the University of Washington, has assumed the editorship of the Snoqualmie Valley (Wash.) Record. George Astel is publisher.

The League of Advertising Women, New York, is planning to send a delegation to Denver I.A.A. convention in June.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Heyworth Campbell to Join Barton, Durstine & Osborn—George V. Rockey with Dauchy Company—C F. Beatty Resigns to Enter Agency Work

HEYWORTH CAMPBELL has resigned from the Conde Nast Publications to become an account executive on the staff of Barton, Durstine & Osborn, Inc., New York advertising agency, effective May 15. For the last 17 years Mr. Campbell has been with Conde Nast as art director of the old Philadelphia North American, the Butterick Publications, and Everybody's Magazine. J. Burton Stevens will continue as art director of Burton, Durstine & Osborn.

George V. Rockey has become associated with The Dauchy Company, New York Advertising Agency, as an account executive. Mr. Rockey has been advertising manager of the Daven Radio Corporation. He was for some years in the advertising agency business in San Diego, Cal., and Cincinnati, O., and was at one time connected with the Literary Digest.

C. F. Beatty has resigned as advertising manager of the New Jersey Zinc Company, to join I. J. Ross Company, New York advertising agency as account executive. Mr. Beatty has been connected with the New Jersey Zinc Company for the past nine years. For the first five years he was in the sales department and then was appointed advertising manager. Prior to that he was advertising manager of the Knox Hat Company, Inc. For the past four years Mr. Beatty was a director of the Association of National Advertisers.

Stockholders of C. C. Winningham, Inc., Detroit advertising counsel, met recently and re-elected officers as follows: C. C. Winningham, president and treasurer; Sidney Willis, vice-president; H. E. Middleton, secretary; and H. F. Murphy and Fred Barrett, directors.

Michaels & Heath, Inc., New York advertising agency, moved May 7 from 113 Lexington ave., to new offices in the Graybar building.

C. S. Beatty and George Powell have recently been appointed to the staff of Lord & Thomas and Logan, San Francisco office. Mr. Beatty was eight years in the sales department of Swift & Co., and Libby, McNeil & Libby; a year as manager of the New England district, Sun-Maid Raisin Association, and for the last five years general manager of the Sun-Maid Raisin Association in the Orient. Mr. Powell was employed for three years in the dealer service department of the California Fruit Growers Exchange.

The Elgin (Ill.) Advertising Agency has been organized with offices at 18 North Grove avenue in connection with the Newcomer Press. Alfred J. Seidenglanz and Marvin S. Newcomer are the owners.

McJunkin Advertising Company, moved on April 25 from its old quarters at 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, to new offices in the Builders Building, Drive and La Salle street.

The Feature Advertising Serv pany, of Cleveland, has been inc with 500 shares of no par value Chester G. Dixon, A. H. Fieb W. Nauser, J. F. Patterson an

REPRESENTING THE NEWSPAPERS

Important Six Point League Meeting Set for May 11—Lindenstein-Ki Inc., Named by Tarentum (Pa.) Daily News— Advertiser Sets Rules for Solicitors

A SET of rules for newspaper advertising representatives has been drawn up by Horace W. Foster, advertising manager of the New York Title and Mortgage Company and the American Trust Company. He made them public during a recent address before the Advertising Club of the New York Times.

His list of "don'ts" follow:

"Don't be untidy in personal appearance. Sloppiness is not in keeping with any advertising medium.

"Don't, however, go the limit in the way of being overdressed, because if you are all dressed up in checks and loud colors you distract the attention of your prospect from the object of your visit.

"Don't squirm. People come and sit at my desk. They wiggle their feet, drum on the table, and they fidget. You wonder if they are coming down with something, or what is the matter with them. A man who is tired likes to have a visitor sit quietly and composedly with an air of self-possession.

"It is a mistake to tell stories. Anyway, the advertising manager has probably heard them before. If he is pressed for time, your story-telling will irritate him. If he is not busy, your assumption that he has anything to do except listen to yarns is no less a reflection.

"Don't talk about yourself. There is nothing more boring than the man who talks so much about himself that he does not give you any chance to talk about yourself. Don't hang around. When you get an order, go.

"In general, don't visit a man smoking a cigar. In banks, officers do not smoke at their desks during business hours. If the advertising solicitor comes in smoking you may be tantalizing your friend with your tobacco smoke. And there are some who do not care for the smell of tobacco."

Notices were sent out this week for "an important luncheon meeting" of the Six Point League of Newspaper Representatives, New York, to be held at the Advertising Club on May 11. F. St. John Richards, League president, did not wish to give any publicity to the topic under consideration, but declared it was so important he hoped for a large attendance. The annual election of the League has been set for June 2.

Lindenstein-Kimball, Inc., has been appointed national advertising representatives of the Tarentum (Pa.) Daily News.

William Wolfe has been appo tional advertising representative Willow Grove Illustrated New delphia, a tabloid published week Park Amusements of America,

AD TIPS

Behel & Harvey Co., 326 West street, Chicago. Sending proposition of newspapers in scattered territory Gervaise Graham Company, Chicago.

Bisberne Advertising Company, Washington street, Chicago. Issuing covering 100 lines, 5 times, on a to newspapers for the advertising of Sisson.

Campbell Advertising Company, Franklin Bldg., Chicago. Will use cities for the advertising of Thon Coffee Co., Chicago.

Caples Company, 225 East Erie st cago. Has issued schedules cover May, June and July, to newspapers Pacific Railway, Omaha, Nebraska.

Nelson Chesman & Co., 500 North street, Chicago. Will place the a Arzen Laboratories, Clinton, Ia., in future.

Collins-Kirk, Inc., 752 North Mich nue, Chicago. Is adding some tow list on Reisch Food Products Co., S Ill.

Kling-Gibson Co., 310 S. Michigan Chicago. Is now handling the accou Beich Candy Company, Bloomington, Matteson-Fogarty & Jordan Com North Michigan avenue, is issuing sertions to a small list of newspapers Soap Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

J. X. Netter, Inc., 67 West 44th st York. Has secured the account o Draft Ventilator Company, Trento manufacturers of No-Draft ventilators mobiles; the Louden Knitting Corpora York, manufacturers of crepe and n and the David Underwear Company, manufacturers of undergarments for Pickus-Weiss, Inc., 307 North Mich nue, Chicago. Now handling account Hollenbach Company, Chicago, on th Hollenbach's 314 Roll."

Frank Presbrey Company, 247 Par New York. Has secured the accou Addison-Leslie Company, Canton, Mas manufacturers of "Plastic Wood"; Rauchbach-Goldsmith Company, Newa manufacturers of "Everwear" wardr products.

Procter & Collier, McMillan street ing Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. Now ha account of Fallis, Inc. (Peter Pan Cincinnati.

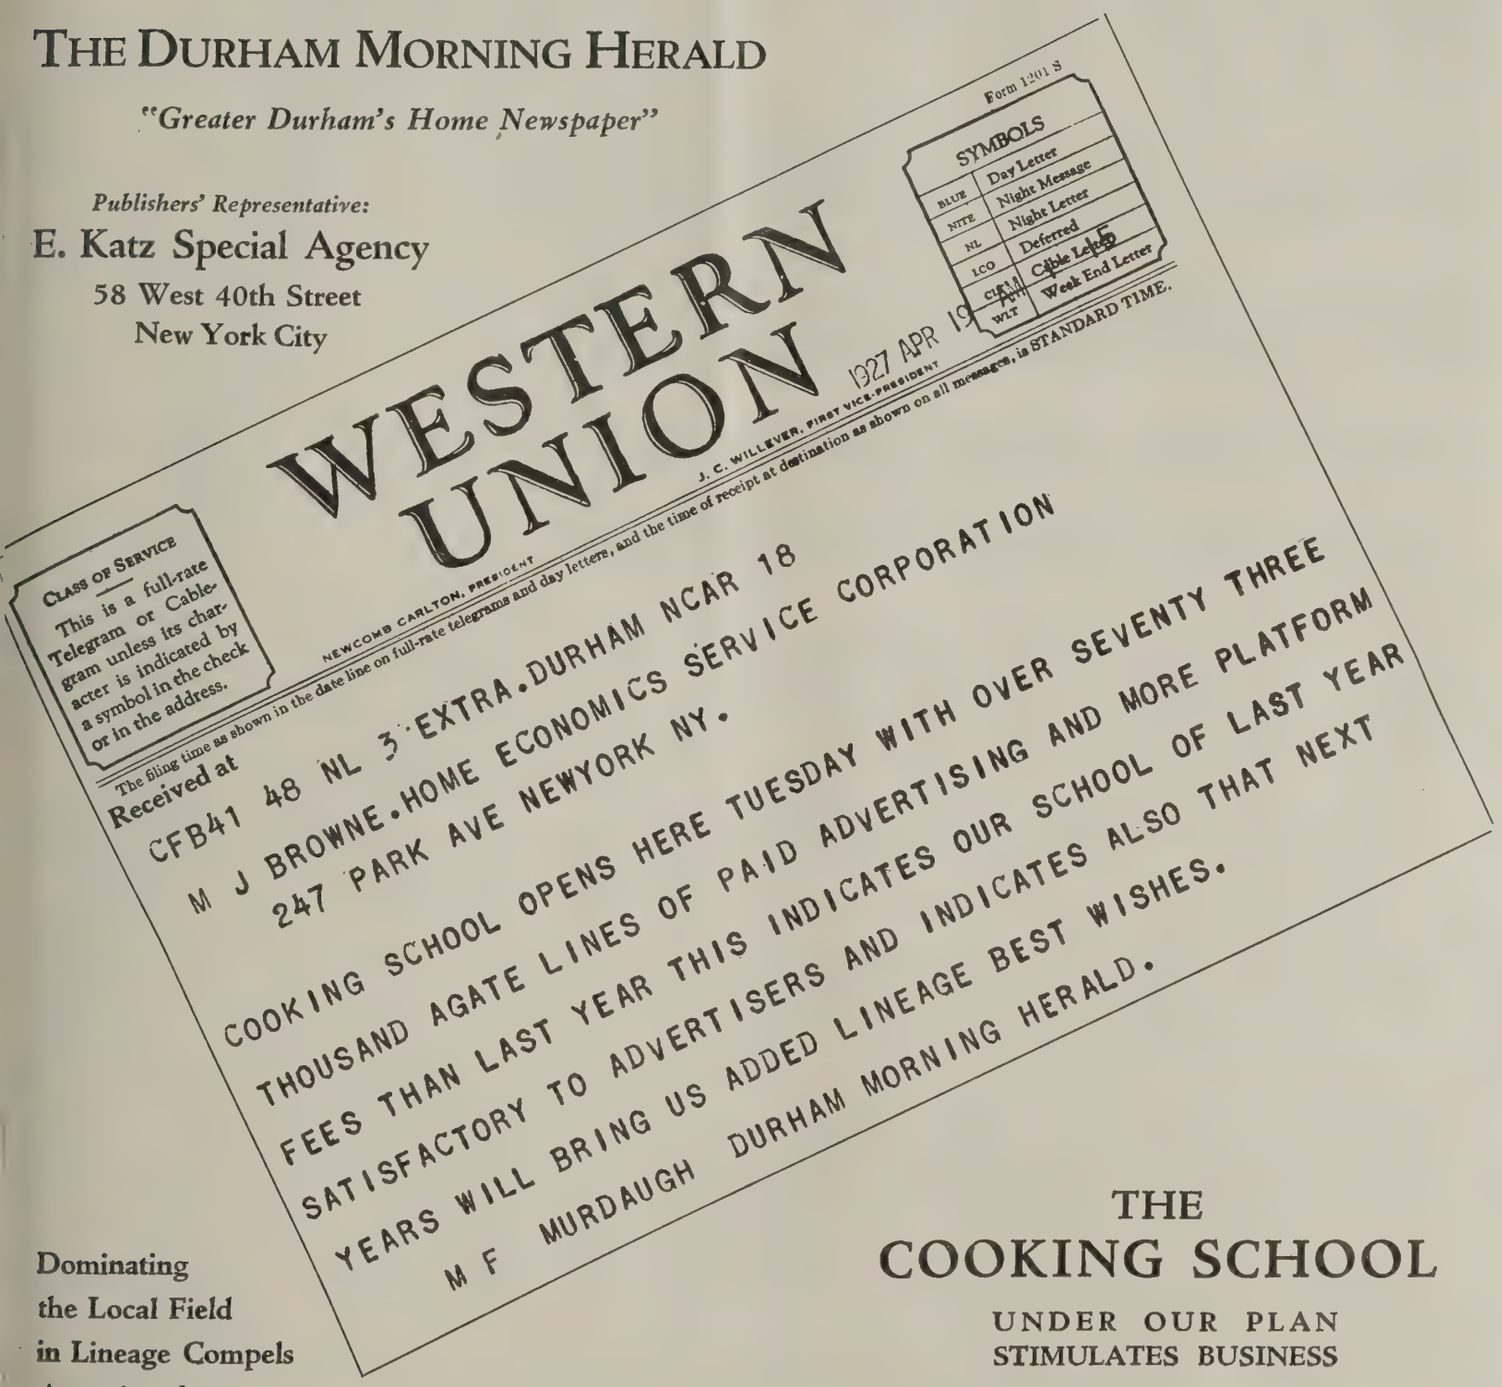
Strang & Prosser, L. C Smith Seattle, Wash. Will handle the campaign of the Blue Mountain Prun of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, planning to spend $150,000 in new vertising in the chief marketing cent eastern and middle-west states.

In this year of War Anniversaries
WHEN THE AMERICAN LEGION AGAIN INVADES FI
Give Your Readers the Timely History Strip
THE WAR TEN YEARS AGO TO

Daily in Six-Column Mats

LEDGER SYNDICA

INDEPENDENCE SQUARE PHILADELPH



RESULTS COUNT

AS DEMONSTRATED BY

THE DURHAM MORNING HERALD

"Greater Durham's Home Newspaper"

Publishers' Representative:
E. Katz Special Agency
58 West 40th Street
New York City

Form 1201-S

WESTERN UNION

1927 APR 19

NEWCOMB CARLTON, PRESIDENT J. C. WILLEVER, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS

BLUE	Day Letter
NITE	Night Message
NL	Night Letter
LCO	Deferred
CLT	Cable Letter
WLT	Week End Letter

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a full-rate Telegram or Cable-gram unless its char-acter is indicated by a symbol in the check or in the address.

The filing time as shown in the date line on full-rate telegrams and day letters, and the time of receipt at destination as shown on all messages, is STANDARD TIME.

Received at

CFB41 48 NL 3 EXTRA.DURHAM NCAR 18
M J BROWNE.HOME ECONOMICS SERVICE CORPORATION
247 PARK AVE NEWYORK NY.

COOKING SCHOOL OPENS HERE TUESDAY WITH OVER SEVENTY THREE THOUSAND AGATE LINES OF PAID ADVERTISING AND MORE PLATFORM FEES THAN LAST YEAR THIS INDICATES OUR SCHOOL OF LAST YEAR SATISFACTORY TO ADVERTISERS AND INDICATES ALSO THAT NEXT YEARS WILL BRING US ADDED LINEAGE BEST WISHES.

M F MURDAUGH DURHAM MORNING HERALD.

Dominating
the Local Field
in Lineage Compels
Attention from
All Advertisers

THE COOKING SCHOOL
UNDER OUR PLAN
STIMULATES BUSINESS

(Now Booking for Season 1927-28)

HOME ECONOMICS SERVICE CORP.

247 PARK AVENUE - - - - - - NEW YORK CITY

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

Congoleum-Nairn Swings to Newspapers to Boost Sales—Armstrong Cork Company Also Has List of 223 Dailies—V. Vivaudou Reports Net Profit of $1,324,730

A SWING to newspaper space to boost sales of Congoleum-Nairn, Inc., is reported.

This account, handled by the Erickson Company, New York advertising agency, has until recently been primarily a magzine user, shifting to dailies only periodically to put on "Congoleum Weeks" locally. On April 6 copy started appearing in a list of more than 200 dailies with contracts dated to end May 25.

Agency officials are silent about future plans, declining to state whether or not large scale use of the daily medium will be continued.

Armstrong Cork Company also used a list of 223 dailies in its spring campaign to promote sale of Armstrong's linoleum.

Newspapers and magazines will be used in a national advertising campaign on Columbia Pictures being placed by the Capehart-Carey Corporation for the Columbia Pictures Corporation.

L. B. Jones, vice-president in charge of advertising of the Eastman Company of Rochester, and Mrs. Jones, returned to this country this week from a European trip.

The Milwaukee Journal and Wisconsin News published special editions in connection with the annual salesmen's convention of the Carnation Milk Products Company of Oconomowoc, Wis., on April 29.

The Ten Thousand Lakes Association of Minnesota this week started a campaign to raise approximately $50,000 to advance a national advertising and publicity campaign for 1927 on a co-operative basis.

In a campaign last year $52,000 was raised and the return from tourists business alone, according to the figures of the state tourists commissioner, more than $70,000,000 was spent in the state. More than 1,300,000 citizens of other states visited Minnesota during the summer of 1926.

During the past year with the co-operation of the state game and fish department as well as the department of forestry, the Ten Thousand Lakes association conducted an intensive educational campaign along the lines of conservation of natural resources through nearly 200 papers.

The report of V. Vivaudou, Inc., for the year ended December 31, 1926, announced this week, shows a net profit of $1,324,730 after expenses and reserve for federal taxes. The company is a big user of newspaper space. The account is handled by the Charles C. Green Advertising Company.

Paul E. Kendall, advertising manager of the Long-Bell Lumber Company, with headquarters in Kansas City, has been delivering a series of lectures on advertising and merchandising. Mr. Kendall spoke last week before the Kansas City School of Advertising and before an organization of lumbermen in Minneapolis.

Robert Weidlaw, advertising manager of the Adirondack Power and Light Corporation and former announcer at station WGY, will leave the corporation May 9 to become advertising manager of the Connecticut Light and Power Company at Waterbury, Conn.

WILLIAM F. KIEST

Secretary of Dallas Times-Herald Company Dies at 63

William Frederick Kiest, secretary of the Times Herald Printing Company of Dallas, Tex. died at his home in Dallas on Wednesday, April 20.

Born in Indiana 63 years ago, Mr. Kiest spent his early years in Chicago and Elgin, Ill., going to Dallas 33 years ago and two years later associating himself with his brother, Edwin J. Kiest, in the publishing of the Daily Times Herald.

Ill health has prevented his taking an active part in the work of the newspaper for the past ten years although he has held the post of secretary of the Printing Company until the time of his death. His brother, Edwin J. Kiest, is president of the company.

GERRIT S. STANTON

Newspaper Man Who Guarded Horace Greeley Dies at 81

Gerrit Smith Stanton, 81, former New York newspaper man who guarded Horace Greeley during the Civil War draft riots, died April 24, at his home in Bellevue, N. J. He was a former Mayor of Woodbine, Iowa.

His wife and daughter, the latter, Hazel Stanton, of the New York Journal of Commerce editorial staff, survive. His father was Henry Brewster Stanton, long an editorial writer for the New York Sun and the Tribune. His mother was Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who for many years edited The Revolution, America's first feminist paper.

The late Daniel Cady Stanton, New Orleans man for the New York Sun during the Reconstruction period; the late Theodore Stanton, Berlin correspondent for the New York Tribune and one of the early Paris representatives of the Associated Press, and the late Robert Livingston Stanton of the Sun and Chicago Inter-Ocean, were his brothers. He was a nephew of Samuel Wilkenson, Civil War correspondent of the New York Tribune.

MRS. H. EFFA WEBSTER

Pioneer Chicago Newspaper Woman Dies at 88—Started on Old Dispatch

Mrs. H. Effa Webster, pioneer Chicago newspaper woman, died April 24 at the Chicago Home for Incurables, where she had lived for the last six years. Death was attributed largely to advanced age. Mrs. Webster was 88 years old.

Mrs. Webster came to Chicago the year of the World's Fair, and her first reportorial task in the city was that of covering the fair for the Dispatch. Then she became one of the late H. H. Kohlsaat's specialty writers on the old Chicago Herald. Later she was a member of the Times staff, the Journal, the News, and the Examiner, where she was art editor until 1914.

Despite her age, Mrs. Webster worked occasionally on the Chicago newspapers until five years ago. She was reporter, society editor, club editor and editor of a woman's page at different times and served on practically every Chicago paper. She was born in Vermont, came to Illinois at an early age with her parents, and was educated at Rockford college, Rockford, Ill. She was a past president of the Illinois Women's Press Association, which had cared for her lately, and a member of the Thirty Club.

IOWA PUBLISHER DIES

George A. Stivers, 51, publisher and editor of the Burlington (Ia.) Evening Gazette, died May 3. He was the son of the late Thomas Stivers, whom he succeeded on the Gazette, and a nephew of the late Henry Stivers, at one time editor of the Des Moines Leader. Mr. Stivers was born in Atchison, Kan.

Obituary

JOHN WEILER, 75, for years publisher of the Reading (Pa.) Post, a German newspaper, died recently. He was born in Germany but came to America in 1872.

Joshua S. Smith, 82, for more than 30 years owner and editor of the Rockland (Mass.) Standard and one of the veteran weekly newspaper men of New England, died at his home in Rockland April 21. He served his apprenticeship on the Vineyard Gazette as a boy, later working in Boston. In 1867 he went to the Abington Standard, purchasing it a year later and changing the name to the Rockland Standard.

Benjamin J. Terry, 73, who began a newspaper career on the old Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph under the late John S. Murphy, and later founded the Elgin (Ill.) News, moving to Arkansas where he became a prominent lumberman, was buried in Dubuque last week. His death occurred in Little Rock, Ark., where he had lived many years.

Mrs. Alice M. Fullerton, mother of Hugh S. Fullerton, magazine writer and former member of the sporting staff of the Chicago Tribune, and Edward B. Fullerton, telegraph editor of the Tribune, died May 1 in Williamsburg, Ky. Burial was at Hillsboro, O.

Joseph Franklin Farrally, 66, editor of the Bristol (R. I.) Phoenix for the past 33 years, died at his home in Bristol, April 26, following a long illness.

Joseph M. Casey, 61, veteran employe of the composing room of the Buffalo Courier-Express for 15 years, died recently in Saint Catharines, Ont.

Terence J. Walsh, one of the New York Herald Tribune telegraphers, who had transmitted to the Herald Tribune most of the important sports stories of the last ten years, died at his home at Riverdale, N. Y. on April 29. Mr. Walsh learned telegraphy at the Riverdale railroad station, and had been in the employ of the Western Union for more than 30 years at the time of his death. W. O. McGeehan and Grantland Rice always sought to have "Terry" Walsh assigned as telegrapher for events concerning which they were to write dispatches.

John Paul Dawson, 24, Associated Press operator at San Antonio for nearly six years, died last week following an operation. He was buried at Fort Worth, his old home. His wife, parents and three brothers survive.

Dave Runnion, 52, pioneer Texas printer, employed for 25 years on the McKinney Courier-Gazette, died last week at McKinney.

John T. Atkinson, advertising man associated with M. F. Mayo, Houston, was accidentally drowned recently at Galveston, where he had gone on a week-end outing. His body was recovered.

Mrs. Anna Knott, 83, mother of John Knott, Dallas News cartoonist, died recently at Sioux City, Ia. She was a native of Austria.

J. Augustin Jones, 47, editor of the Glens Falls (N. Y.) Times, die[d] 27 in the Glens Falls hospital. [H]e born at Whitehall N. Y., Jan. 9 He was editor of the Whitehall for five years and then came t[o] Falls on the Morning Star.

Frank L. Towle, 57, printer Portland (Me.) Press-Herald cor room nearly 40 years, died April

G. A. Beeman, retired newspa[per] founder of the Comanche (Tex.) died recently at Comanche. He w[as] at Springville, Ind., in 1845.

George Frederick Hilbert, 70 posing room foreman of Buffalo mercial for 53 years, died in hi[s] recently at Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. Clara Ward Watson, of E. M. Watson, publisher of t[he] lumbia (Mo.) Tribune, died at he[r] in Columbia April 22. A daughte[r] H. J. Waters, is the widow of the editor of the Weekly Kansas Cit[y] Henry Jackson Waters, who di[ed] years ago.

George P. Heaton, for 20 year[s] nected with the McPherson (Kan publican, died recently at his hom[e]

Mrs. Samuel S. Edwards, da[ughter] of W. B. Taylor, of the Kansas Cit[y] died at her home in Kansas Ci[ty] week. Mr. Taylor has been co[n]nected with the Star for the past 25 yea[rs]

Mrs. Gertrude M. Murphey, [wife] J. C. Murphey, editor of the (N. Y.) Journal, died from hea[rt] ease, recently.

Augustus G. McCormick, 54, [presi]dent of the McCormick-Armstrong of Wichita, Kan., and for many head of the mechanical department Wichita Eagle, died recently at his in Wichita after a brief illness.

John Halleran, for the past years a reporter on the Queens Star, died Monday at his home Academy street, Long Island City.

Thomas F. Donham, 70, fath[er] Ralph Donham, of the copy desk, I apolis Star, died at his home near Haute last Friday night after a illness.

Orla Woody, 24, night police re[porter] for the Indianapolis Star, died Apri[l] St. Vincent's hospital in Indianapoli[s] injuries received in an automobil[e] dent Friday night.

W. L. Turner, 65, veteran newspaper man and for years edi[tor] the Madisonville Meteor, was kil[led] cently when he was struck by an national-Great Northern train at sonville.

George M. Ambrose, 73, for years a proofreader on Chicago papers, and for the last nine yea[rs] ployed by the Chicago Daily New[s] suddenly April 24 at his home i[n] Park.

Otis D. Hall, proprietor of a ing plant in Centralia, Wash., an[d] merly employed on the staff o[f] Hoquiam (Wash.) Washingtonian in Centralia, April 21.

FOR PROMPT SERVICE

TYPE

BORDERS ~ ORNAMENTS ~ BRASS RULE

Printers' Supplies

KELLY PRESSES ~ KLYMAX FEEDERS ~ PAPER CUTTERS
HAMILTON WOOD AND STEEL EQUIPMENT, INCLUDING OUR AMERICAN CUT-COST EQUIPMENT

Carried in stock for prompt shipment at the following Selling Houses of the

American Type Founders Company

BOSTON, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE, RICHMOND, ATLANTA, BUFFALO, PITTSBURGH, CLEVELAND, DETROIT, CHICAGO, CINCINNATI, ST. LOUIS, MILWAUKEE, MINNEAPOLIS, KANSAS CITY, DES MOINES, DENVER, LOS ANGELES, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, SPOKANE, WINNIPEG

The American Gas Association

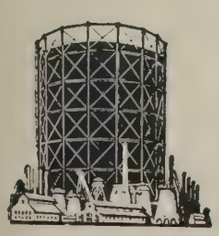
What it is—What it is doing for American Industry—

The object of the American Gas Association is to promote more and better ways of utilizing gas;

—to assist the industries of America (and the public as a whole) in deriving to the fullest the numerous advantages inherent in gas;

—to advance to the highest efficiency, methods of gas manufacture, distribution and utilization;

—to collect and disseminate information on these subjects.



The American Gas Association was organized in 1918—and consolidated with the American Gas Institute, and the National Commercial Gas Association.

The membership includes 551 Gas Companies, 21 Holding Companies, 428 Manufacturers of gas burning appliances, and 3,444 Individual memberships. Its activities and interests extend to every state in the Union.

The sales of gas for the year 1926, officially reported to the American Gas Association, amounted to 38 billion cubic feet more than the amount sold in 1925. This is twice the increase in 1925 over 1924—making a total increase of 40% in the last five years.

This phenomenal increase in the use of gas is largely due to the growing demands from industrial customers. The American Gas Association has recently appropriated half a million dollars for research work and development of the industrial gas heating business.

Write to the American Gas Association for information on what gas is doing for others in your line of business.

American Gas Association
420 Lexington Ave., New York City

YOU CAN DO IT BETTER WITH GAS

OLD PAPER TELLS OF JEFFERSON'S DEATH

It Took Two Weeks for News to Reach Ohio Publication in 1826 —Story Printed in Letter Form

Mrs. John Swander of Columbus, O., collector of rare old newspaper files, loaned an interesting newspaper to H. W. Horch, chairman of the Jefferson Day banquet committee, which gave a banquet last week at the Neil House, Columbus. The paper, The Liberty Hall and Cincinnati Gazette, was 101 years old, and contained a story of the death of Thomas Jefferson. The paper appeared twice a week, and the editorial leader of July 18, 1826, bears the heading, "Death of Mr. Jefferson." The editorial referred to a letter printed elsewhere in the paper. This letter was dated Charlottesville, Va., July 4, 1826, and addressed to "Dear Skinner," editor of the paper, and said the communication could be taken as an "official bulletin" announcing the death of the author of the Declaration of Independence. Said the letter:

"I give you a line to say that Mr. Jefferson expired today at ten minutes before one o'clock. It is an event which has been hourly expected for three or four days past."

Peter Minot was the writer of the letter.

Editors in those days did not "make over" their papers when additional news or a big story "broke." A paragraph added to the paper's story of Jefferson's death says:

"Since the above was in type we learn from a reputable citizen, who arrived yesterday afternoon by steamboat, that the venerable John Adams also departed this life on the fourth of July. Our informant left a town in the neighborhood of Quincy on the fifth for the West. The news, however, preceded him, and when he arrived in Baltimore he met the president of the United States on the way to the late residence of his father. This information comes from a source entitled to implicit credit."

Commenting upon the death of Jefferson, the paper says: "The time of Jefferson's death is a circumstance remarkable in itself, and will undoubtedly add much to the feeling which will prevail on the occasion. Well may it be said that he expired amid the hozannas and grateful benedictions of a whole nation."

His death marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

"PUG" ATTACKS SPORT WRITER

Memphis Boxer Objects to Press Scimitar Man's Criticism

Jimmie Cox, Memphis middleweight prize fighter, has been indicted by the grand jury on charges of assault and battery following an attack on Harry Cherry, sporting editor of the Press Scimitar.

Cox objected to Cherry's criticism of his ability as displayed in a boxing bout in Memphis.

The prize fighter called at the Press Scimitar office and called Cherry to the hall. Before Cherry was aware of Cox's intentions, the boxer slugged him on the side of the head and floored him. Cherry arose and grappled with Cox and they went to the floor, remaining in a clinch until members of the staff rushed up and separated them. Cox is large of stature and Cherry unusually small.

Cherry says he will press prosecution of the boxer.

McCAHILL HONORED

Employes of the Rochester (N. Y.) Journal and Post Express and Sunday American, were guests at a dinner in honor of Charles F. McCahill, publisher, who has been appointed regional director of Hearst Publications in Albany, Syracuse, and Rochester. One hundred persons attended. Edwin J. W. Huber was toastmaster.

READERS VOTE THEIR PAPER A LIVING WAGE

(Continued from page 11)

granted since the 10 cent a week rate went into effect. Our printers are members of the Typographical Union and I am glad of it. Union printers are high class workmen who can be depended on but the two increases in pay demanded and obtained have not been easy to meet under present conditions.

"If we are to continue our policy of giving you a bigger and better paper and add, as I want to add, the big league features of a metropolitan newspaper, we must have more revenue.

"With the kind of a newspaper we are trying to run there are only two sources of obtaining more revenue and that is from the advertiser or the subscriber.

"I am not in this letter asking you for an increase in subscription rates. But I would like to publish a paper of which you might really be proud, and sometime shortly, I may ask for a partial, not entire, restoration of the old rate.

"I have written this letter now because I believe you will be interested in what we are trying to do with the News Tribune and because I want to wish you and yours a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

The second letter was as follows:

"Dear Subscriber: I have been surprised and delighted at the response to my letter outlining the necessity of a partial restoration of the old subscription rate for the News Tribune.

"Although my letter called for no answer, I have been literally showered by the most wonderful and encouraging Christmas mail that any man in my position ever received. I cannot begin to answer all of these letters personally, but I want you to know how much I appreciate them.

"'Go ahead and put the price back to 18 cents,' writes one West Duluth man. 'I'll gladly pay 20 cents for an unbossed newspaper in Duluth,' says a Lakeside subscriber. 'Certainly no charge of being hog-tied to special interests or political faction can be made against the present management of the News Tribune,' writes a well-known labor leader, 'and an increase of subscription rates seems only fair to expect.'

"These are samples of the letters I have been receiving and such backing and co-operation encourages me to put this question of a partial restoration of the old rate up to a vote of the subscribers without further delay. I am not going to be satisfied if only a bare majority are willing to grant us a better rate. I want this thing to go over by an overwhelming majority or not at all.

"I am not asking for a full restoration of the old rate of 18 cents a week, although that doubtless would be justified. We are spending over $18,000 a year more for news service, pictures and features than we did when the rate was 18 cents and our average number of pages and productions cost generally have been greatly increased. We want to keep on improving the paper and add other big league features of a metropolitan newspaper and to do that we are asking not for the old price of 18 cents but for 15 cents a week. This will enable us to go ahead with the paper and give the carrier boy who delivers your paper a better margin of profit.

"If the News Tribune is to maintain its independence and editorial honesty, refusing dictation from any political party or special interest, then it can have only two sources of revenue, from its advertisers and its subscribers.

"That is the reason I am asking you for a living wage for the News Tribune, because I want to keep it unbossed and independent, devoted solely to the best interests of this great community.

"Commenting on newspaper rates in this territory the Hibbing Tribune said the other day, "The six evening newspapers in this area with one exception are getting fifteen cents whereas the News Tribune delivers seven papers, including Sunday, for ten cents."

"And a number of months ago the Duluth Labor World in a complimentary editorial put it this way: 'What puzzles us is how The News Tribune can afford to give subscriptions for ten cents a week. That is practically giving the paper away. The Sunday paper alone is worth that much. Let's hope that the morning paper will develop its new independent policy and we will be willing to pay any price for a subscription to keep it independent.'

"With this letter I am enclosing two cards and I am asking you to fill out the one which expresses your vote and have it ready for your carrier boy when he returns to get it.

"And remember that a vote in favor of the 15-cent rate does not bind you to take the paper for any particular period. It merely means that you are willing to give the new rate a trial and if you don't think the paper is worth it that you can quit at any time.

"Please don't fail to vote."

Welcome!
at the front door~

Nearly 70,000 families welcome Long Island Newspapers in their homes each week. If you were to read the news columns and knew the people of Long Island you would understand why they eagerly await their favorite weekly. To them it means an intimate friend arriving for his weekly chat with the family —to discuss friends, neighbors, and people who are closely associated with their community life.

Remember, these people represent every walk of life. Some are nationally and internationally prominent— whose names are before the public constantly. They are a part of Long Island's buying power. They patronize home trade and encourage local enterprises.

Advertising in Long Island's Newspapers brings your message before the entire family, at a time when they are most receptive and most responsive.

Town	Paper	Publication Days	Circulation	Rate per Inch
Babylon	Leader Suffolk	Friday	3,400	.35
Bay Shore	Consolidated Press (South Shore Sentinel, Islip Press)	Thursday	2,750	.45
Elmhurst	Newtown Register	Saturday	2,500	.75
Farmingdale	Post	Friday	1,100	.30
Floral Park	The Sunrise Trailer	Friday	5,200	.60
Freeport	Recorder	Friday	3,100	.42
Great Neck	North Hempstead Record	Wed.	2,400	.50
Jamaica	Queens County News	Friday	14,675*	1.00
Lynbrook	New Era	Tue. & Fri.	2,800*	.60
Mineola	Central Island Weeklies (Hicksville, Westbury, New Hyde Park)	Friday	4,000	1.00†
Oyster Bay	Enterprise & Pilot	Friday	2,000	.45
Patchogue	Advance	Tue. & Fri.	3,226*	.55
Queens Village	Queens-Hollis Times	Thursday	8,000	1.00
Richmond Hill	Long Island Weekly News	Friday	12,000	1.40
Woodhaven	Leader-Observer	Thursday	8,600*	.84

*Sworn Net Paid Circulation.
†This rate includes the Farmingdale Post.
Figures not marked with a star indicate total run of paper.

Ionic No. 5

The blackface type is Ionic No. 5, the outline is Roman No. 2

Linotype Ionic No. 5 Is More Readable Because It Is Larger

MANY factors contribute to the legibility of Ionic No. 5; the increased weight, the even color, the stronger serifs, the roundness of the letters, the better distribution of the white space around the letters, the fact that it will not break down in stereotyping, but more important than any of these is the fact that it is actually larger, point size for point size, than any other newspaper face.

Just how much larger is graphically shown in the illustration at the top in which 7 point Ionic is superimposed on 7 point No. 2

And this great gain in size and legibility is achieved without loss in word count. If Ionic were a type of ordinary design, this increase in size would not be of any particular value because the space that is saved would have to be put between the lines. But Ionic is different. It doesn't need much white either between letters or between lines. The letters are closely fitted together and still hold their contour. The lines can be half a point to a full point closer together and still be easily followed as is shown in the illustration in the center. Ionic No. 5 is made in three sizes, 5½, 6½ and 7 point, in combination with Bold Face No. 2 or Italic and Small Caps. Write the nearest Linotype agency for a complete showing.

Why Ionic No. 5 Requires Less Leading Than Ordinary Types

In ordinary types the vertical strokes are emphasized. These pronounced vertical strokes have a tendency to interrupt the normal horizontal motion of the eye. It is therefore necessary to put more white space between the lines so that the eye can follow them back and forth across the column.

Ionic is more rounded, the strokes are of even weight, and the letters are more closely tied together so that each line is a continuous band of color across the page. It is easier for the eye to follow the lines and consequently they can be put a little closer together without loss of legibility.

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

532.27.4-F

LINOTYPED IN THE GARAMOND FAMILY AND NARCISS

MULTI-MILLIONAIRE ADVERTISERS BEG SPACE

(Continued from page 7)

"I know what news is," he boasted confidently. And he also said that he knew which newspapers published the material sent out by Lord & Thomas and Logan as "news."

In the files of Lord & Thomas and Logan, according to Mr. Barnhill, is a list of 250 newspapers that "use publicity." Mr. Barnhill said that this list included "many metropolitan dailies."

"Of the total there are 111 newspapers practical for publicity," Mr. Barnhill explained. "The entire 250 is stretching the blanket a little."

In addition to "news," the publicity plans of the Oil Heating Institute as divulged by Mr. Barnhill include the issuance eventually of "features" which will be sent out to the "home economics editors" of the daily newspapers. Some of these features will carry the by-line of James Breese, navigator of the NC-4 which went around the world. Mr. Breese has been retained by the Oil Heating Institute as chairman of its technical committee.

Lord & Thomas and Logan also will get out frequent broadsides containing all the latest information on oil burners which will be sent to "legislators, publishers and the home economics departments of the newspapers," Mr. Barnhill said.

Two points which the "public relations experts" are planning to attack vigorously is the sometimes published assertion in newspapers that the oil supply is low and the stories which appear frequently telling about "oil burners blowing up."

Mr. Barnhill said he has a feeling that the anthracite coal industry may be behind the appearance of the oil burner explosion stories in the news.

Dan Pierce, who handles the anthracite publicity, told EDITOR & PUBLISHER over the telephone that he clipped out all oil burner explosion stories, but couldn't claim responsibility for getting them into the newspapers.

When Mr. Barnhill was recalling for EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week some of the things he told the oil-burner manufacturers who attended the Buffalo convention, he said he told them:

"Don't be discouraged if you are not in the newspapers all the time. The Chinese situation is taking up space and the Snyder trial is going to be big news. If a burglar commits a burglary that is not always big news, but if a clergyman turns burglar, that is news. The fact that you are doing a good job and supplying the public with efficient oil heating systems may not always be considered as news, but there is news in your industry which the newspapers will print."

While the co-operative advertising campaign on the part of the oil burner manufacturers has just started, big things are planned for it. Mr. Barnhill described it as a $500,000 account at present. Others believe something like $250,000 will be spent this coming summer in the magazines.

It has been estimated that there are now 600 different oil burner manufacturers in the United States. Of this number between 65 and 75 are really in a position to advertise, a member of the staff of Fuel Oil, a monthly magazine informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

The larger manufacturers, who claim the combined invested capital of $40,000,000, have agreed to give one per cent of their net factory earnings to finance the co-operative advertising and press agentry.

A confidential bulletin recently issued to members of the American Oil Burners Association, contained the following statement:

"There is much left to be accomplished through collective advertising and publicity. The greatest need is information and education—the fundamentals of combustion, burner design, and heating on the part of the manufacturers; the principles of heating, merchandising and good business management on the part of the dealers; overcoming prejudice on the part of consulting engineers, architects, fire authorities, and means of picturing the story of oil to the public."

ADVERTISING INSTITUTE FORMED

British Group Will Promote Advertising as a Profession

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, April 23.—Formed with the avowed purpose of encouraging persons of good education and ability to adopt the profession of practitioners in advertising the Institute of Incorporated Practitioners in Advertising was registered as a company in England on April 12.

It is a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital, with an unlimited number of members, each liable to the extent of two pounds in the event of a winding-up of the institute.

P. de G. Benson, B. Sc., C. B. E., is the first president, and other members of the governing council include the following well-known London advertising agents: E. I. Buxton, W. H. Carr, G. A. Castle, J. Coote, Lieut.-Colonel E. A. Field, M. B. E., E. H. Godbold, A. J. Greenly, L. Harwood, L. G. Jackson, H. G. Saward, J. Strong, R. J. Sykes, E. W. Thomas, C. H. Vernon, with R. J. Sykes, H. L. Mather, and L. O. Johnson as vice-presidents.

PLANNING 50TH ANNIVERSARY

R. E. Lent, publisher of the Passaic (N. J.) News, is hoping to be able to celebrate the 50th anniversary of his newspaper in the new plant now being constructed on the property adjoining the present building.

NEW M. E. IN BIRMINGHAM

Jack Young, former city editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, and more recently a member of the staff of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Public Ledger, has been selected as managing editor of the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald, and will take up his duties on that newspaper soon. Mr. Young before coming to the Observer, served on papers in Charleston, S. C., Augusta and Atlanta, Ga., and elsewhere.

From the Linotype Mailbag

"Prompt Attention"

We wish to express our sincere appreciation of your prompt attention to an emergency order for parts on the 1st.
Please accept our hearty thanks.

The Evening Gazette
Cedar Rapids, Iowa

BUILDINGS
PLANT LAYOUTS
PRODUCTION
OPERATION

An organization specializing solely in newspaper building design, manufacturing and production problems.

S. P. WESTON

Newspaper Buildings
Plant Layouts
Production, Operation

120 West 42nd Street New York

ILLINOIS
THE GREAT CENTRAL MARKET

Buying Headquarters—

Buyers from the North, South, East and West come to Illinois' Market. It is the country's trading center. Gigantic wholesale and retail organizations are located here. The largest mail order houses in the world do their buying here.

Every product that is consumed or used can be sold in this market if properly introduced, and advertised in the local papers, for not only will you reach the 7 million Illinois consumers, but you will interest the large organizations who act as distributing agencies for merchandise throughout the world.

Advertise in the Newspapers Listed Below and Reach the Country's Buying Headquarters

	Circulation	Rates for 2,500 Lines	Rates for 10,000 Lines
*Alton Telegraph .....(E)	9,814	.05	.05
†Aurora Beacon-News .....(E)	19,440	.07	.07
*Belleville Advocate .....(E)	6,554	.03	.03
†Chicago Daily Journal .....(E)	125,007	.26	.24
*Freeport Journal-Standard ....(E)	9,545	.05	.05
†Joliet Herald News .....(E)	20,107	.07	.07
†Mattoon Journal Gazette .....(E)	5,857	.04	.04
Moline Dispatch .....(E)	12,292	.05	.05
Monmouth Daily Review Atlas.(E)	5,574	.035	.035
Peoria Star .....(S) 23,872 (E)	31,103	.085	.07
Waukegan Daily Sun .....(E)	5,666	.035	.035

*A. B. C. Statement, Oct. 1, 1926
A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927
†Government Statement, March 31, 1927

International Illustrated News FIRST with the important pictures of the day!

THE Mississippi flood and the Snyder-Gray murder trial are the biggest news stories of the day, as editors and circulators well know. Are you getting beaten, or are you getting BEATS, on the pictures of these extraordinary happenings? Here are some voluntary, unsolicited telegrams, typical of many, that show how International Illustrated News is protecting its clients on the biggest stories of the day:

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a full-rate Telegram or Cablegram unless its character is indicated by a symbol in the check or in the address.

WESTERN UNION

NEWCOMB CARLTON, PRESIDENT J. C. WILLEVER, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS
BLUE	Day Letter
NITE	Night Message
NL	Night Letter
LCO	Deferred
CLT	Cable Letter
WLT	Week End Letter

The filing time as shown in the date line on full-rate telegrams and day letters, and the time of receipt at destination as shown on all messages, is STANDARD TIME.

SHREVEPORT LA MAY 4
INTERNATIONAL ILLUSTRATED NEWS NY
YOUR FLOOD ART IS GIVING US SPLENDID BEATS ON OPPOSITION
HAL RUSH
MANAGING EDITOR DAILY CAUCASIAN

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a full-rate Telegram or Cablegram unless its character is indicated by a symbol in the check or in the address.

WESTERN UNION

NEWCOMB CARLTON, PRESIDENT J. C. WILLEVER, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS
BLUE	Day Letter
NITE	Night Message
NL	Night Letter
LCO	Deferred
CLT	Cable Letter
WLT	Week End Letter

The filing time as shown in the date line on full-rate telegrams and day letters, and the time of receipt at destination as shown on all messages, is STANDARD TIME

HUNTINGTON W VA MAY 3
INTERNATIONAL ILLUSTRATED NEWS NY
SNYDER ART SMASHES ARE KNOCKOUTS OTHER ART EQUALLY ATTRACTIVE WE RATE IT HIGH
JAMES B. CLENDENIN HERALD DISPATCH

You can DEPEND on International Illustrated News.

Complete, enterprising, exclusive coverage on news and sports pictures. Preparedness art that keeps you protected. Live, Exclusive, illustrated news feature stories every day. Illustrations for the women's page, radio page, Sunday editions. Distinctive, unduplicated news features. All these, in International Illustrated News' superior daily news-mat service.

This is the only news-mat service with INTERNATIONAL NEWSREEL PHOTOS—the world's greatest photo organization.

LET US SEND YOU THE COMPLETE SERVICE FOR THREE DAYS WITHOUT CHARGE. WRITE OR WIRE TODAY.

Sole selling agents for International Illustrated News:

King Feature Syndicate, Inc.,

M. KOENIGSBERG, President 241 W. 58th Street, New York, N. Y.

SENSATIONAL CRY OF PROFESSOR-CRITIC ATTACKED BY TEXAS EDITOR

"Newspaper Should Not Be Any More Sensational Than the Bible" R. C. Bush of Waco Times-Herald Tells Dean Allen of Baylor U.

CHARGES that the press is too sensational were flung back at critics of the newspapers during the first Journalism Week in the Southwest, held last week at Baylor University. The clash over sensationalism, which started when Dean W. S. Allen of the university in his welcoming address declared that the finer things in life, as a rule, could not be found in newspapers, and ended in a defense of the press by Richard C. Bush, managing editor of the Waco Times-Herald—a defense that drew the commendation of even Dean Allen—was a feature of Journalism Week.

"While a managing editor should not allow his paper to become too sensational," said Mr. Bush, who spoke on the problems of managing editorship, "there is a greater danger, and that is, he may not let it be sensational enough.

"One should seek, I believe, not to be any more sensational than the Bible. As long as we don't print anything more sensational than the story of Jonah and the whale, as long as we don't publish anything more horrible than the beheading of John, as long as we don't handle anything more salacious than the Biblical details of certain well known Old Testament characters and their many, many wives, I feel that we will not be going too far."

Mr. Bush offered a solution to the problem of so-called sensationalism, elaborating on the old injunction to Hearst editors and designating it as "the most sensational news in the world can be told if it is written and edited properly."

Dean Allen had spoken on the preceding day. He had denounced the press for "playing up the sordid and leaving out the finer things in life, such as news of an educational and informational nature."

Declaring that newspapers courted constructive, authoritative criticism, Mr. Bush scored super-critical judges of the press, comparing them to the legendary blind men who went to "see" an elephant, one feeling of the leg and deciding the animal was a tree, another touching the side of the massive beast and proclaiming it to be like a wall, another grabbing the tail and believing it a rope, another grasping the trunk and finding it to be like a snake, and another the tusk, which felt like a spear.

"So it is with many of the critics of the press," Bush pointed out. "They pick up a newspaper and, glancing at one type of story, they decide, then and there, that there are no other kinds of news in the paper."

Turning to Dean Allen of the university, the Times-Herald managing editor referred to having noted, from day to day in the press, "news of grand old Baylor university and her glorious activities, and I know of no news that could be more representative of the finer things in life.

"Surely our critics have not been reading the newspapers, or they would have seen, as I have seen, column after column of news about churches and religious activities; surely this type of news comes within the classification of the finer things in life.

"To the educator who places the press in the category of naughty schoolboys and demands that more news of an educational nature be printed, let it be said to him that the newspapers of today are publishing more news of an educational nature, more news along the lines of information, scientific and otherwise, than papers have ever printed in any period in the history of American journalism.

"I am glad that I can say that my reference to 'the educator' is not to be construed as having general application, for I am sure that the great majority of educators are broad-minded, not only in their own avocation, but in their consideration of other professions.

"But the super-critical educator is not the only uninformed judge of the way newspapers are being run by managing editors of the day. We have a few preachers, too, who object to those 'big, black head-lines' on stories of more or less lively nature; and so, to the minister who goes into his pulpit on Sunday morning, let it be said to him, that he has no more right to warn his congregation of the consequences of sin than the newspaper has to inform the people of crime and its terrible results.

"We will make a trade with the clergy. We will stop printing the news of crime and sin, if the preachers will stop talking about the devil and his deeds.

"Sin and crime, my friends, want to hide. I hope the managing editors of the country will never permit themselves to be converted into a society to protect criminals from the merciless light of publicity. You know some people felt ashamed of the press, because it played up such cases as the Arbuckle case. Oh, yes, they cried, the newspapers shouldn't print such things. Then the preachers began pounding the press for printing such stuff.

"And very soon, bless your soul, if the preachers didn't begin to demand that Hollywood clean up. And clean up it did. And today, while movieland isn't the purest place in the world, and its inhabitants make no special claim to being angelic, Hollywood has improved wonderfully. Of course, our friends, the ministers, with their sermons of denunciation, produced the clean-up. But I want to tell you that some of those big, black headlines awakened the preachers and the people as to the situation; and those same big, black headlines will continue to awaken the preachers, whenever the occasion demands."

A virtual love-feast between editors and educators followed the talk. Dean Allen was the most congratulatory. Baylor students of journalism voted that a newspaper run along the lines suggested by critics who want only the "finer things in life" printed would have to be endowed.

The first Journalism Week in the Southwest was arranged by Dr. C. D. Johnson, chairman of the Baylor School of Journalism and Commerce.

WOOD SEES 100-PAGE NEWSPAPER IN TEN YEARS

(Continued from page 5)

by hand and one man reinserted it in the casting mold while the other worked the tail cutting machine to remove the tail or riser from the plate. After this was completed, the plate was put into a shaving machine which smoothed out the inner surface, then lifted out and put up on a dressing block where two men went over it with chisels and planes to cut out its blanks and trim up its edges. Next it was put into a tub of water to be cooled and after being taken out and dried by hand it was ready for the press."

By the autoplate machine created by Mr. Wood plates are cast and completely finished and made ready for press four or five times as fast as by this clumsy hand process. The first autoplate machine went into operation in 1900 on the New York Herald.

"I got the idea which lead to this invention," Mr. Wood declared, "when I used to drift into the newspaper offices in down town New York. I u visit the old Herald office on Ann and often visited, the old New Yor ning Post plant when it was usin revolver presses fed by hand, the of which were hand folded.

"When I began studying other throughout the country to get them stall my autoplate, I came to reali the future limitation of newspape thereafter to be found in the press I began therefore an analytical st the newspaper printing machines and am just now prepared to an the completed results of that study

"One of my new presses is insta the office of the Philadelphia Inqui the next and latest is on exhibi our Plainfield plant with a number teresting auxiliary devices. You freely say that with these mechani novations the revolution of the new press room has begun.

[Coming—Adventures In New Publishing—New Series on New Management.]

Special Services for the use of publishers who desire speedy Advertising or Circulation increases are listed on the Classified pages.

South America's Greatest Newspaper

"Buenos Aires IS the Argentine Republic"—

"If you introduce an article in Buenos Aires it is introduced in the whole of the Argentine."

"We know that LA PRENSA has a larger circulation than all the local papers put together, and that this circulation is amongst the very best class."

(Extract from letter written by the distributor in Argentina of important American products, urging his principals to place their advertising in LA PRENSA—)

National sales and distribution in Argentina can quickly be attained by advertising in LA PRENSA.

JOSHUA B. POWERS
Exclusive Advertising Representative
250 Park Avenue New York

THE CHRONICL
Marion, Indiana
1st in A. B. C. City Circu tion in Local Advertising in National Advertisin
in Total Paid Advertis
9,129
Is the Daily Circulation 6 months' a age, ending September 30, 1926.
Marion and the adjacent Trade Terri can only be adequately covered with Marion Evening Chronic
Represented by
The S. C. Beckwith Special Age
New York—Chicago—St. Louis—Det Kansas City—Atlanta—Los Angele San Francisco

Sparkling
Accurate Reporting
and Complete
World Coverage of Telegraph News
INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE
63 Park Row, New York City

THE SUN is a clean, vigorous, intelligently edited newspaper—free from sensationalism, prejudice and partisanship. It, therefore, attracts men and women of intelligence, discrimination and good taste—who have a high degree of confidence in THE SUN and in the advertisements it publishes.
The Sun
280 Broadway New York

Thorough Coverage in One of the World's Richest Buying Centers—Coupled with the Ability to Produce Results
Pittsburgh Gazette Times
(Morning and Sunday)
AND
PITTSBURGH CHRONICLE TELEGRAPH
(Evening except Sunday)
These newspapers in News and Advertising have the confidence of their readers.
Their readers have the power to purchase.
Sold Singly or Combined
URBAN E. DICE, Nat'l Advg. Mgr.
Gazette Square, Pittsburgh, Pa.
E. M. BURKE, Inc.,
1457 Broadway, New York.
123 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago.
Constitution Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
B. J. BIDWELL COMPANY,
742 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Times Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.
White-Henry-Stuart Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

IT WILL PAY YOU T
HIRE TRAINED MEN
Ambitious young men, schoo in every branch of the newspa or magazine field, may be secu to fill that opening on your p lication by simply making y wants known to the Person Bureau of Sigma Delta Chi, p fessional journalistic fraternit
No Charge To Employe
Avail yourself of this free se ice to replenish your staff wh ever the occasion requires. Wr or wire John G. Earhart, Exchange Ave., Chicago, Ill., a he will put you in touch with right man.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

RATE CARD IN EFFECT MAY 1, 1927

1. GENERAL ADVERTISING

a. b. c.

Transient rate 75c per agate line (minimum 14 lines—1 in.).	Agate Lines	Single Insertion	6 insertions within year per insertion	12 insertions within year per insertion	26 insertions within year per insertion	52 insertions within year per insertion
Full page	672	$250.00	$225.00	$200.00	$190.00	$168.00
Half page	336	140.00	120.00	110.00	100.00	95.00
Quarter page	168	75.00	70.00*	65.00*	60.00*	55.00
Eighth page	84	50.00	45.00*	40.00*	33.00*	30.00
Sixteenth page	42	30.00	25.00*	20.00*	17.00*	16.00

All 52 consecutive-insertion contracts (see last column above) are based on consecutive insertions within the year. Extra space is charged at the 52-insertion rate but contract is credited for one insertion only.

Half pages and full pages on 6, 12 and 26-time contracts may be used at the option of the advertiser within the twelve-month period. *Quarter, eighth and sixteenth pages must be on definite copy schedule.

Contract advertisers are accorded the privilege of same insertion rate for larger space. For example: an advertiser under contract for twenty-six (26) quarter-pages at $60 per insertion is accorded the privilege of half page at $100 and full page at $190, but such advertisement is to be credited on contract as but one insertion of contract space.

d. PREFERRED POSITIONS—On application.

e. Minimum size of advertisements, 14 agate lines on one column. All advertisements must be at least as many inches deep as they are columns wide.

f. All rebates earned by advertisers using more than contracted space within life of contract, are paid in advertising space to be used within one month after expiration of contract.
No contracts are accepted for a period of more than 12 months.
No contract will be pre-dated and no rebate will be allowed on transient advertising used prior to signing of contract.

g. Advertisers may discontinue contracts upon written notice of fifteen days and payment shall be made for space used at rate earned by number of insertions covering said space.

h. The rates on this card are subject to change without notice. THE EDITOR & PUBLISHER COMPANY reserves the right to refuse any advertisements and to cancel advertising contracts for reasons satisfactory to the management.

i. All rates quoted on this card apply to advertising in main section of regular editions only. Rates for advertising in any supplements or special editions will be at publishers' option. Whenever regular card rates are allowed for advertising in a supplement contract advertisers can transfer their space from main section to supplement section only through special arrangement with EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

2. CLASSIFICATIONS

a. All rates and terms on first page of this card apply to all classes of display advertising.

b. Classified Advertising: Situations Wanted, 1 time—.40 per line; 2 times—.35 per line; 3 times—.30 per line. All other classifications, 1 time—.60 per line; 4 times—.55 per line.

c. All advertisements inserted on a strictly cash basis, except on orders from contract advertisers.

d. Special rates quoted for 13, 26 and 52 insertions.

e. White space charged at same rate per line per insertion as earned by frequency of insertion.

3. READING NOTICES—(None)

4. COMMISSIONS AND CASH DISCOUNT

a. Agency Commission—15%.

b. Two (2) per cent. cash discount allowed on current advertising bills paid on or before the tenth (10th), provided all previous bills are paid.

c. All accounts payable net 30 days and subject to sight draft immediately thereafter.

5. MECHANICAL REQUIREMENTS

a. Column width, 13 ems. b. Column depth, 168 lines. c. Columns to page, 4. d. Size of type page 9 x 12 in.

e. Center spread 12 inches deep x 19 inches wide. Half pages either 12 in. x 2 col., 6 in. x 4 col. or 8 in. x 3 col. Quarter pages 12 in. x 1 col. or 6 in. x 2 col.

f. Forms close Thursday, week of issue. Advertisements must be in office by Wednesday P. M. for current week's issue. Corrections on advertisements may be made up to Thursday noon.

g. All cuts should accompany copy. h. Half-tones should be 120 screen. Can use originals, electros or mats.

i. Engravings, electrotypes, etc., are made at the expense of the advertiser and are not subject to cash discount. Advertising copy will be prepared by the service department of EDITOR & PUBLISHER at an additional charge of 10%. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will not be responsible for errors in advertisements, due to failure to return proof in time to make corrections.
Failure to furnish new copy on definite insertion contracts will compel use of previous advertisement.

6. CIRCULATION

a. Member of A. B. C.

b. Publishing date—Saturday of each week.

c. Subscription Rates—Domestic, $4.00; Canada, $4.50; Foreign, $5.00.

d. Devoted to Journalism and Advertising—"The Newspaper Advocate."—Specializing in the "Spot News" of the publishing and advertising business.

e. Circulates among Newspaper Executives, National Advertisers and Executives controlling accounts in the Advertising Agencies, throughout the country.

f. A. B. C. Publisher's Statement: Period Ending Dec. 31, 1926—8015.

J. W. BROWN, Publisher.

Branch Offices:

C. B. GROOMES, Advertising Director.

St. Louis: Roy M. Edmonds, 1332 Syndicate Trust Bldg.
Chicago: L. B. Gilmore, 30 North Dearborn Street.
London, England: Thomas McDougall, Kingsway Chambers, 44-46 Kingsway, London, W. C. 2, Eng.
Paris: G. Langelaan, 34, rue Thiers, Boulogne-sur-Seine (Seine).
Tokyo: Ralph Nicholson, Japan Advertiser.
Toronto: W. A. Craick, 60 Lympstone Ave., Lawrence Park.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

WHO invented the streamer headline? Who popularized the synthetic photograph? Who was the real father of the comic supplement, no matter who printed the first one? Who introduced the American flag into journalistic typography? An editorial in the American Mercury for May answers all these questions with "William Randolph Hearst."

Most magazine articles about Hearst have been extremely critical The editorial in the American Mercury, however, does not condemn Hearst so much for the type of journalism he originated as it does for not continuing what he started—"a great disaster to journalism in America." The editorial insists that the good in the journalism that came from Hearst was considerable "for it shook up old bones, and gave the blush of life to pale cheeks."

One of the finest tributes paid to Mr. Hearst in this editorial is that "he not only vastly augmented the enterprise of the whole American press, but he also forced it into some understanding of the rights and aspirations of the common man." His papers in publishing exposure after exposure and following them up with denunciations "completely broke down the old American respect for mere money, and paved the way for many reforms that are still in being."

Here is what the American Mercury thinks of American newspapers:

> Reporters of enterprise and courage grow fewer and fewer, the old eager scrutiny of the public business is abandoned, and any sort of fraud, provided only he have money enough, is treated with profound respect. Where are the old devasting columns of purloined letters? Where are the slashing cartoons by Davenport? Where are the editorial philippics in black, black type? They are gone—and they are missed. The American daily press, with Hearst leading it in a devil's dance, was loud, vulgar, inordinate and preposterous—but it was not slimy and it was not dull. Today it is both.

According to Mr. Mencken, who wrote the editorial, Hearst papers are still noisy in tone, but they have killed their old honest frenzy. He asserts that there is nothing in them by way of actual news that is not in the Springfield Republican or in the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Part III of the editorial discusses American newspapers in general without reference to Mr. Hearst. It declares that there are not a dozen American newspapers today with any more personality than so many sardines out of a can. It believes that there should be room in every large American town for a paper with as much enterprise and individuality as the New York World. To St. Louis it gives credit for such a paper and to Baltimore for another. It then adds, "The tale of them is soon told." Of Philadelphia newspapers it makes the passing remark that "the last journalistic Bolshevik of Philadelphia is no more" and that the gazettes of that city are now "merely daily editions of the Saturday Evening Post." The editorial is very positive that Washington is without newspapers and has "only vaseline machines." There is, to quote again, little more difference between one newspaper and another than there is between two Uneeda biscuits.

Mr. Mencken is convinced "that this ironing out is an evil even though it makes for economical operation for newspapers—which now clump into miserable chains, like filling stations and grocery stores."

Mr. Mencken in conclusion asks, "What has become of the Julian Ralphs and Richard Harding Davises?" He then boldly asserts that they are bred no more. To the old Herald he gives credit for breeding them, but insists they could no more come out of "the dull, standardized, unimaginative, groveling dividend-machines that now cover the country than a Luther or a St. Francis could come out of a Baptist theological seminary."

The last sentence in the editorial is, "If, by some miracle, one of them popped up, he would be fired at on sight."

I have space only for one passing comment. Neither Julian Ralph nor Richard Harding Davis, in my opinion, ever reported a story better than the New York Times in its issue for Monday, April 25, covered the account of how Chamberlin saved the lives of two girls in a plane by a daring landing.

This story in the Times is recommended to Mr. Mencken for careful perusal and for comment in the American Mercury. The reporter who covered the story for the Times was "fired at." I know whereof I speak when I say that letters of congratulation fairly poured into the Times.

On several occasions I have asserted that the reporter was hanging his hat too far down the line in the editorial rooms of American newspapers. The time is coming when the reporter will come into his own. With all due respect to the feature writer whose work is syndicated, the web and the woof of the American newspaper is always found in the reporter.

* * *

THE series of three articles which James E. Amos contributed to Collier's Weekly about Theodore Roosevelt whom he served as an attendant for many years have been expanded into a book, "Hero to his Valet" (The John Day Company). The chapter that deserves special mention in "Our Own World of Letters" is the one which describes how Roosevelt got along with newspaper men.

Mr. Amos points out how easy Roosevelt was to caricature and how cartoonists made fun of his teeth and his glasses. Roosevelt on the other hand, was never nettled by the cartoons and was always glad to see a collection of recent ones which it was the habit of a friend to bring to the White House. As a matter of fact, Roosevelt made a collection of originals some of which found their way to the walls of the library in the White House while others were sent to his study at Oyster Bay. According to Mr. Amos, the cartoon of which Roosevelt was most fond was the one from the pen of Davenport which showed Uncle Sam saying of Roosevelt, "He's good enough for me."

Roosevelt always talked freely to reporters, though often much that he said was spoken in confidence and not for publication. The volume mentions one instance where this confidence was not respected by a reporter. At the next interview with newspaper men Roosevelt went along as though nothing had happened, but at the close asked the offending reporter to remain. He then talked to this reporter very quietly, "but in that way he had of making a quiet dressing-down more terrible than any amount of bawling out."

The subject of Roosevelt's remarks on this occasion is thus given in the volume:

> "You are the kind of man who brings your own comrades into trouble. I talk to all these boys with perfect freedom. But one man like you in the group makes it impossible for me to talk to the others. You are a very young man and you have begun your career by disgracing your fellows. I am sorry for you, but I would never trust you again. And so now I must tell you never to come here any more."

The chapter concludes with a discussion of William Jennings Bryan as a reporter at political conventions.

The volume as a whole is interesting as a close-up in the life story of one of America's foremost citizens.

* * *

PROPAGANDA is the theme that runs through most of the pages in the April number of The World Tomorrow. Of course newspapers come in for a liberal amount of criticism. One of the articles that most deserves serious attention is "Education, Not Propaganda" by Rhoda E. McCulloch. The most effective part of the number may be found in the cartoons, some of which are reproductions of those that have already appeared in the press. Special mention might be made of the one from the New York World which carries the caption, "The Propagandist's Equipment."

A BOOK of immediate interest national advertisers is "The urement of Advertising Effects" per & Brothers) by George B Hotchkiss, head of the Departme Marketing at New York University Richard B. Franken, formerly con with the research department of the York Times. In it the authors sum ize the results of an intensive inve tion to determine how familiar the is with nationally advertised produ

The volume opens with a chapt the importance of prestige—a ch which frankly admits that practical commercial advertising is done fo sake of the profit measured in lars and cents. The reader is rem that the public is forgetful and that those things for which it has good tend to slip from its memory. K edge, usually secured from advert is the first step in the sale.

The second chapter outlines the ods used to measure advertising and the institutions where the experi

Largest Circulation and Largest Volume of Advertising of any Daily west of the Missouri river

LOS ANGELES

EVENING HERALD

REPRESENTATIVES
Chicago, JOHN M. LEDERER, 910 Hearst Bldg.
San Francisco, A. J. NORRIS HILL, 610 Hearst Bldg
New York, HERBERT W. MOLONEY, 604 Times Bldg.

Over 260,000 Homes in Michigan served by Booth Newspapers

The Grand Rapids Press
The Flint Daily Journal
The Saginaw News Courier
The Kalamazoo Gazette
The Jackson Citizen Patriot
The Bay City Times Tribune
The Muskegon Chronicle
The Ann Arbor Times News

National Advertising Representatives

I. A. KLEIN
50 East 42nd Street
New York City

J. E. LUTZ
6 N. Michigan Ave.
Chicago, Ill.

in Detroit—

Free Press circulation reaches 31,000 more than the total number of families owning their own homes.

The "Free Press"

"Starts the day in Detroit"

With a stable, inflated, liberal pursed circulation productive of greater advertising returns at lower cost.

NEW YORK STATE

Westchester County's

Fastest Growing Cities

Mount Vernon and New Rochelle and The Vicinity Towns

Are Covered Completely by

THE DAILY ARGUS
of
Mount Vernon

THE STANDARD STAR
of
New Rochelle

Both Members of A. B. C.

Westchester Newspapers, Inc.
Franklin A. Merriam, Pres.
Mount Vernon—New Rochelle

IN some cities, the "leading newspaper may have merely a few hundred more circulation than its competitor. The Press has 40,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two evening newspapers combined—and 35,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two Sunday newspapers combined.

THE PITTSBURGH PRESS

A Scripps-Howard Newspaper
Member of the A. B. C.

Away Ahead

2,196,676 - 1925
3,699,155 - 1926

1,502,479 - Gain

The New York Evening Graphic shows greater gain in line age (41%) than any other New York paper.

Our Customers Write Our Ad

EUGENE, OREGON, MORNING STAR Says—

"We are running a color comic as well as using color on cuts and ads, and the flexibility of our DUPLEX TUBULAR press in this feature is a strong point for it."

DUPLEX PRESSES

FOR ALL NEWSPAPERS

Duplex Printing Press Co.
BATTLE CREEK, MICH

e made. In chapter three the is begin their discussion of public irity with manufacturers' brands.
res in leadership are mentioned and tions are given as to causes.
p of the most valuable chapters are in which the influence of advertisoutlined and the buying habits of ners are discussed in detail. The seem to show that women more nen recognize products by name.
hapter each is devoted to analysis
e following products: toothpaste, nosiery, typewriter, breakfast food, cigarette, fountain pen, hat and Obviously the book has the st value to an advertiser market-e of the products listed in the pre-paragraph. For national adverand for advertising agencies the ought to help to answer the per-g question, "Are we spending our ising money to good effect?"

* * *

ONG the three friends of Grover eveland who contribute sketches him to the April number of ler's Magazine is John H. Finley, te editor of the New York Times.
rly editor of Harper's Weekly, he d that connection to become proof politics at Princeton where he Mr. Cleveland. The details are in the magazine.

* * *

HE Easy Chair" of Harper's Mag- azine is occupied by Edward S.
n. For his monthly chat in May s taken as his subject "News-
." In it he attempts to answer the ical question, "What is the item e most universal interest in the apers?"
r seriously his answer is to be taken n to question. The easy chair may its occupant to decide what in his te paper interests him. The chat certain element of charm in its the chap who sits on the soap box the news stand has some informa-hich it would be worthwhile to get s subject. What college presidents of newspapers may be a good aca-question but what subscribers actu-ink about the same paper is a more al one. Mr. Martin concludes his vith this comment about how to newspaper:

> secret of success in newspaper reading > tion—to seize what belongs to you from > day and skip the rest. Really, our good > are very good; indeed, they are quite > ful. If one gets them in proper variety > o get the different points of view, and > how to read them and how not to read > o much, they are worth all they cost > time; and time and mental energy are > portant price that we pay for them.

* * *

ACE GREELEY, the founder of e New York Tribune, has the un-distinction of having two statues hself erected within the city limits nhattan, according to J. Sanford and Walter E. Tisné in their "Statues of New York" (G. P. n's Sons). One, located in City Park, shows Greeley seated in a armchair holding a copy of the ne outspread on his knee. It is the work of J. Q. A. Ward and was presented to New York City by the Tribune. The other Greeley statue, set up in the square that bears his name, shows him again in an armchair, but holding a copy of the Tribune in his right hand. The book, however, is in error when it says that this statue is also a gift of the Tribune. As a matter of fact the second statue honors Greeley, not the publisher but the printer. It is the gift of the union printers of New York City.

* * *

ONE of the finest tributes I have ever seen about the small city daily may be found in the little pamphlet written by Stephen Bolles, Editor of the Janesville Gazette, and entitled "Advertising in the Small City." Here is what editor Bolles says about the small city daily:

> If anything the small city daily has an advantage over the metropolitan daily. It is read more carefully in the small city. It is taken more seriously than the larger newspaper. It is read more eagerly. It has less of waste circulation. Its single wrapper list is negligible, confined mostly to people who have moved away and want the home town paper. It is not sold heavily on the streets to a visiting population, transient and in a hurry. The small city daily has a greater responsibility because it is so close to its people that they feel an interest in its making. It has features once confined to the metropolitan paper, its press report is over a leased wire—almost an unheard of thing twenty years ago. It is alert, editorially zestful and quicksteps in advance of local and general progress. There are exceptions; there are a few rags out of the many pieces of perfect cloth in the 1,800 small city dailies in the United States, but only a few. Most of them are far ahead of their cities in comparison to the population and would have been marveled at as miracles a score of years ago.

Passing from its newspaper to the city itself, editor Bolles makes this comment:

> Confidence is a golden asset of the small city daily. The places so often referred to by the renegade villager, glamoured by the great city and its unfriendly canyons but garish lights, as a "hick town," is a different place from what it used to be when the old grey mare was hitched to the railing outside the store that smelled of codfish and kerosene, blue denim and brown sugar. The Reuben Glues are not in the small city but indigenous to the larger places where the first view of grass comes from a sign telling one to keep off.

The pamphlet is published by the Wisconsin Daily Newspaper League and it may be obtained upon request from the secretary, H. H. Bliss, Janesville, Wis. The last page of the pamphlet contains the names of the thirty-one members of the Wisconsin Daily Newspaper League.

* * *

THE editorial page of the Christian Endeavor World for May 5 opens with a comment on American newspapers. Headed "What Are People Interested In?" it remarks that the answer to the question is a sad commentary either on readers or on editors. The editorial, however, overlooks the fact that while the biggest story in any issue of a newspaper may be the account of a murder trial, the bulk of the rest of the issue may be stories that have permanent value for the welfare of society.

* * *

HOW reliable is the dietetic advice and how accurate is the information of food advertisements? These questions are answered in the April issue of The Western Dietitian by Barbara Reid Robson, home economics director of the Honig-Cooper Advertising Agency of San Francisco.

In this article Miss Robson tells it the tests which are made of foods before agency copywriters turn in their advertisements. She gives several instances in which manufacturers were urged, after analysis had been made of their products, to change the appeal of their food advertising in order to bring the copy in agreement with the dietetic value of the food marketed.

* * *

A GOVERNMENT bulletin that ought to have some interest for many readers of "Our Own World of Letters" is Bulletin No. 427 of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics—"Health Survey of the Printing Trades from 1922 to 1925." Compiled by Frederick L. Hoffman, consulting statistician of the Prudential Insurance Company, Newark, N. J., it presents an impartial up-to-date scientific appraisal of the status of health conditions in the printing industry. Its publication of course is to correct bad conditions in order to promote better health of the workers. The preface is contributed by F. A. Silcox, Secretary, Printers' League of America. A sanitary inspection of the composing rooms found in the large cities of this country is described in detail. Passing mention should be made of the sections which record the vital statistics of printers.

Copies of this bulletin may be obtained upon application to Ethelbert Stewart, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Washington, D. C.

BRITISH SOCIETY NOMINATES

John S. King, of the West Middlesex Gazette, is to be the president of the British Newspaper Society this year. The Newspaper Society is the organization of provincial newspaper publishers, and it was to hold its annual meeting on May 4 in London. N. B. Graham, of the Wolverhampton Express and Star, and J. D. Jeremiah, of the Manchester Daily Dispatch, are to be vice-presidents. The Society is arranging a visit of its members to Canada, at the invitation of Canadian Newspaper Proprietors and as a result of the visit of Canadian editors to England in 1924. The party will sail from England for Canada on August 5, spending 23 days in Canada.

If Quality

of circulation is your first consideration

The Evening Star

With Sunday Morning Editions

Washington, D. C.

will have your preference—same as it has the preference of practically everyone in the National Capital.

The Star's circulation is home circulation—both quality and quantity—the kind that counts most with advertisers.

N. Y. Office—110 E. 42nd St.
Dan A. Carroll

Chicago Office—Tower Building
J. E. Lutz

Buffalo, The Wonder City of America

Buffalo—a profitable Market for Advertisers

Sales in Buffalo are splendid for advertised goods. Employment conditions excellent, retail and other business thriving. One newspaper will put your story over to 83% of the people—that paper is the

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

Read in 4 out of 5 Buffalo Homes

EDWARD H. BUTLER
Editor and Publisher

KELLY-SMITH COMPANY
Representatives

Marbridge Bldg. New York, N. Y.
Atlantic Bldg. Philadelphia
Tribune Tower Chicago, Ill.
Waterman Bldg. Boston

Where better Classified mediums are being built — the best publicity is helping build them

THE BASIL L. SMITH SYSTEM, Inc.
International Classified Advertising Counsellors
Packard Building, Philadelphia

The World

These two newspapers offer the most powerful all-day service in New York available as a unit under a single contact. The 600,000 DAILY WORLD — EVENING WORLD readers constitute a highly concentrated force to be reckoned with in any campaign designed to effect distribution in Greater New York.

The Evening World

Pulitzer Building, New York
Tribune Tower, Chicago

The Baltimore News

has the largest circulation of any evening newspaper in the entire South 137,022

Baltimore looks to THE NEWS for the news.

THE WELFARE COMMITTEE
of the
INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION MANAGERS ASSOCIATION

Can supply you with competent circulation men of capacity and ability capable to take entire charge of your department or to fill important posts in the department.

Address the Secretary-Treasurer please, Mr. Clarence Eyster, care Star Building, Peoria, Ill.

NEW PROCESS REMOVES INK FROM NEWSPRINT

German Method Involves Use of Special Ink Allowing Used Paper to Be Reclaimed

A process of reclaiming newsprint to make it usable a second time by removing the ink from the original printed paper is claimed to have been perfected in Germany, the American Trade Commissioner at Berlin, William T. Daugherty, has reported to the Department of Commerce.

The National Committee on Wood Utilization, a co-operative agency of the Department of Commerce, announced April 28 that this process and its possible effect on the wood and paper industry of the United States would be studied by the Paper Group of the National Committee at its meeting in the Department of Commerce May 3 and 4.

A statement by the Department describing the process, as reported by Mr. Daugherty, follows in full text:

Heretofore the difficulty in de-inking newsprint has been in the removal of the lamp black which is an important ingredient of the printer's ink as now produced. The German patent concerns the making of printer's ink under a different process whereby pyrolusite is used, which is fast to light and air. This pyrolusite is introduced into oil or color varnish.

Without further treatment pyrolusite produces a brownish print, unwelcome to the trade, but this can be deepened to a black tone if mixed with certain fat-soluble light reducible organic colors. The preparation is then treated with sulfite or a 1 per cent hydrous sulphurous acid which, it is claimed, removes the black color completely within the space of one-half of an hour. A light blue print which remains is said to disappear in the pulping process accompanying final regeneration to white stock.

Although pyrolusite ink costs more than ink now used, the saving by newsprint regeneration effects a considerable cheapening of printing costs to publishers, according to the inventor, who also emphasizes the economic value attaching to timber utilization. The inventor claims that successful operation on his process has occurred on a large scale. The process producing this new printer's ink is already patented in Germany, and American patents are pending.

AIDS HOSPITAL FUND

The Kansas City Star last week gave $10,000 to a fund being raised to erect a Jewish Memorial hospital in Kansas City.

Business Offers

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Classified Advertising Information

TRANSIENT RATES

SITUATIONS (Cash with Order)
1 Time — .40 per line
3 Times — .30 per line

ALL OTHER CLASSIFICATIONS (Cash with Order)
1 Time — .60 per line
4 Times — .55 per line
13 Times — .50 per line
26 Times — .45 per line

ADVERTISING

General Promotion

If You Want More Local Advertising put us to work for you selling our "Worthwhile" Features. Write F. G. Hogan Syndicate, Lemcke Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind., or Kane, Pa.

Increase Your Local Linage with a weekly special page. No cost to publisher. Personal supervision. Let's show you. Interview anytime New York or within 200 miles. C-534, Editor & Publisher.

Classified Advertising successfully built up. Large or small newspapers; 20 years' experience. Frank McCabe, 285 Madison avenue, New York.

ADVERTISING

Supplies

Shading Sheets for Art work and Bend fects. Bourges Service, Inc., 144 Wes St., New York.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNIT

Brokers

Not May Apples But May Bargains. E paper, exclusive growing field North Ca Long established. Adequate plant, good lation, earning dividends. Price and ter sonable. Controlling interest evening exclusive field Ohio. Fine plant, good tion, earning dividends. J. B. Shale, Bldg., New York.

Trade Journal, established, in good con capable of expansion. Gross about Asking price, $17,500 cash. Harris-Dibb 345 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Controlling Interest in afternoon daily grossing about $40,000. Town of about in border Southern state. All equipment C-516, Editor & Publisher.

Representative Wanted

Publishers' Representative Wanted—Daily paper in city of 8,000 population, app recently by Palmer, DeWitt & Palmer of York City at over $150,000, will sell on interest in business to live publishers' sentative for $15,000 cash. Would also sider selling interest to man connected good advertising agency, but do not care to person seeking position as editor or ad ing manager.

Present profits on business will pay o indebtedness on business in short time, in tion to paying reasonable interest on inves Proposition will stand closest investig Paper now carrying more local advertising any other newspaper in state in any ci to 12,000 population. Nearest daily forty away. No real competition within one dred miles. National advertising now $12,000 per year. Should be increased to 000 to $25,000 within next year or eig months.

We believe this is unusual opportunity good publishers' representative, and you too, if you investigate. Deal must be pleted by June 15th at very latest. C-560, care Editor & Publisher.

Service

To Out of Town Concerns. You can secu the advantages of a New York address, in ing the services of established, fully furn and equipped offices, where your interests quiries, callers, literature, mail, or sa will be intelligently and properly handled a nominal annual charge. Address (by only) Suite 1004, at 1841 Broadway (Colu Circle), New York City.

CIRCULATION

Promotion

Circulation—When quick, additional circu coverage becomes necessary, remember tha twenty years in this one line of endeav your proof against experimenting. Writ wire Pacific Coast Circulation Service, Block, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Circulation Builders—Blair & Austin, 1504 tre ave., Reading, Penn. Originators of S manship Club Campaigns.

Mr. Publisher—Large, small, Daily or Wee let us build your circulation by experi Circulation Builders. Carolina Contest Durham, N. C.

Superior Circulation Builders—The W. S. dall Company, 104 North Bailey Ave., I ville, Kentucky. The circulation-buildin ganization that has set the standard for ag sive, successful circulation campaigns for n twenty years.

The World's Largest Circulation Building ganization—The only circulation-building ice in Newspaperdom furnishing publi affidavits of the exact results of its campaign. The Charles Partlowe Com Occidental Building, Indianapolis.

Wire Our Pottery Direct for supplies to a dish offer. Results—Low cost. The Alb China Co., Carrollton, Ohio.

15,000 New Subscribers on New York news in 7 weeks. New plan of campaign des and operated by former publisher with lishers' interests in view. Hudson Del Co., 1420 Bryant Park Bldg., New York.

EDITORIAL

Syndicate Features

The Ephrata (Pa.) Reporter is the new this week. For samples of a live, up-to service, write the Graphic Syndicate, 25 Hall Place, New York.

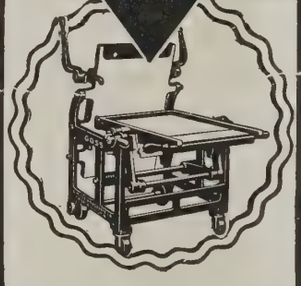
Supplies and Equipment

Stereotype Room Efficiency

Means quick production of good plates and the elimination of recasts as far as possible.

Moulding Blankets

Hard and Soft Cork Blankets
Heavy Wool Moulders
Light Wool Moulders
Thin Wool Moulders
(All Sizes)



Space Packing Felt
4 Thicknesses—No. 25, No. 35, No. 40, No. 50

Easy to tear, quick to place

New England Newspaper Supply Company
Worcester, Mass., U. S. A.
Cable Address NENSCO
Worcester, Mass.

GOSS STEREOTYPING MACHINERY

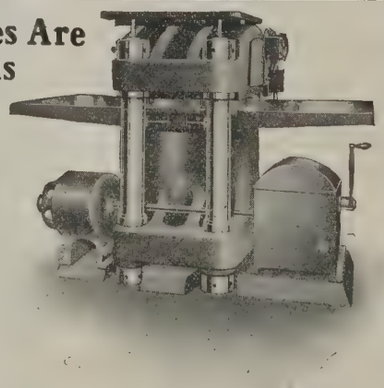
Carried in Stock

Fastest, most easily operated, most accurate and durable flat casting box you can buy. Perfectly balanced. New design lock-up bar allows for quick change when regulating thickness of casts. Positive quick lock-up at four points on box with one lever movement. Write for complete catalog of Goss Stereotyping Machinery.

THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS CO., CHICAGO

Rebuilt GOSS & HOE PRESS BARGAINS

ALL TYPES
SEND for LIST



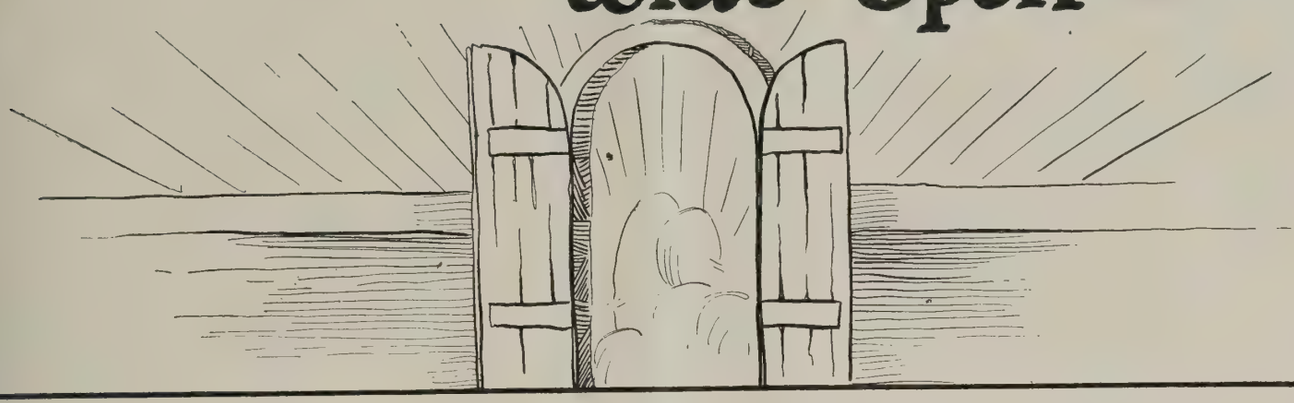
THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS CO.
CHICAGO – NEW YORK – LONDON

Drive and Control for Newspaper Presses

A representative installation on a Hoe Press is that of a 60-h.p., a-c. drive for the Great Falls, Mont., Tribune.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

When New Machines Are Designed Hoe Builds The Best



DIRECT-Pressure Matrix Moulding has been perfected in The New Hoe Hydraulic Matrix Moulding Press. To appreciate its superiority, you should see it in operation at the first opportunity.

Write for full information of this latest and greatest development in stereotyping to

R. HOE & CO., INC., 504-520 Grand Street, New York City

7 South Dearborn Street, CHICAGO, ILL. — Pere Marquette Bldg., NEW ORLEANS, LA. — 7 Water Street, BOSTON, MASS.

The South's Doors are wide Open—

The South is still the land of opportunity for the national advertiser. Its doors are wide open for national advertisers to come in and conquer its new buying power. Industries continue to prosper and agriculture is making scientific strides. With greater diversification of crops which eliminates speculative possibilities on the outcome of cotton — with the development of live stock industry which is increasing the revenues of the farmers, the South is fast becoming one of the richest markets in the country.

A campaign in the daily newspapers listed below means reaching this new buying power—the New South that has awakened and is showing the way to greater prosperity not only for its own section but for the entire United States.

		Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
ALABAMA
†Birmingham Age-Herald	(M)	40,205	.09	.09
†Birmingham Age-Herald	(S)	51,178	.11	.11
Mobile News-Item	(E)	12,479	.05	.05
Mobile Register	(M)	21,713	.08	.08
Mobile Register	(S)	32,951	.10	.10
FLORIDA
†Daytona Beach News	(ES)	9,083	.065	.065
*Florida Times-Union (M) 50,640	(S)	63,430	.12(S.15)	.12(S.15)
Lakeland Ledger	(E)	5,531	.03	.03
†Miami Herald	(M)	44,668	.11	.11
†Miami Herald	(S)	48,751	.12	.12
Orlando Reporter-Star	(E)	9,072	.06	.06
*Orlando Sentinel	(M&S)	10,105	.06	.06
*Pensacola News and Journal	(E&M)	9,389	.07	.07
†††St. Augustine Record	(E&S)	3,382	.04	.04
*St. Petersburg Independent	(E)	12,874	.065	.065
*Tampa Times	(E)	27,813	.08	.08
*Tampa Tribune (M) 41,400	(S)	53,248	.10(.14S)	.10(.14S)
*West Palm Beach Post	(M)	12,081	.07	.07
GEORGIA
*Augusta Herald	(E)	14,190	.05	.05
*Augusta Herald	(S)	14,797	.05	.05
†Macon Telegraph	(M)	25,011	.08	.08
†Macon Telegraph	(S)	25,011	.08	.08
Savannah Morning News (M), 21,405.	(S)	22,040	.06(.07S)	.06(.07S)
KENTUCKY
*The Lexington Leader	(E)	19,739	.07	.07
*The Lexington Leader	(S)	19,772	.07	.07
†Paducah Sun	(E)	9,695	.04	.04

		Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
NORTH CAROLINA
*Greensboro Daily News	(M)	30,066	.08	.07
*Greensboro Daily News	(S)	33,311	.09	.08
*Salisbury Post	(E)	7,718	.04	.04
SOUTH CAROLINA
Columbia State	(M)	22,627	.07	.07
Columbia State	(S)	24,281	.07	.07
*Greenville News	(M)	24,124	.08	.08
*Spartanburg Journal	(E)	4,471	.05	.05
*Spartanburg Herald (M) 6,943	(S)	9,048
TENNESSEE
Chattanooga Times	(M)	31,107	.10	.10
Chattanooga Times	(S)	30,573	.10	.10
†Memphis Commercial Appeal	(M)	103,168	.18	.18
†Memphis Commercial Appeal	(S)	136,115	.25	.25
*Nashville Banner	(E)	59,574	.11	.11
*Nashville Banner	(S)	59,843	.12	.12
VIRGINIA
*Danville Register and Bee	(M&E)	15,660	.06	.06
*Danville Bee and Register	(E&S)	20,919	.07	.07
Newport News Times-Herald	(E)	7,853	.05	.05
Newport News Daily Press	(S&M)	5,332
*Roanoke Times & World News	(M&E)	27,321	.08	.08
*Roanoke Times	(S)	16,912	.07	.07
*Staunton News-Leader (M), Leader	(E)	7,064	.035	.035

* A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
 A. B. C. Statement, October 1, 1926.
† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.
†† Government Statement, October 1, 1926.
††† Government Statement, March 31, 1926.

BACK in the days when Radio was still a squealing infant, certain editors saw its news possibilities. They set out to capture the interest of the alert group of readers which was one day to support one of America's greatest industries.

Naturally they turned to the Consolidated Press for "something different"..... and Robert Mack began his daily telegraphic dispatch on Radio.

NOW the infant has grown to a lusty giant. His followers in every walk of life are the concern of financier, factory-owner and merchant.

Robert Mack is still supreme in his field, and the papers which publish his daily telegraphic dispatch count Radio's new friends as their own.

The Robert Mack dispatch is merchandisable. It represents not only readers but buyers:—responsive "mass" of Radio fans and the discriminating "class" with purchasing power. They read the best and buy the best.

C. P. A. dispatches can be merchandised because they "go where money is."

The Consolidated Presss Association

THIS ISSUE: FRIGIDAIRE DOMINANCE BUILT BY DAILIES

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

1884 The Oldest Publishers' and Advertisers' Journal in America 1927

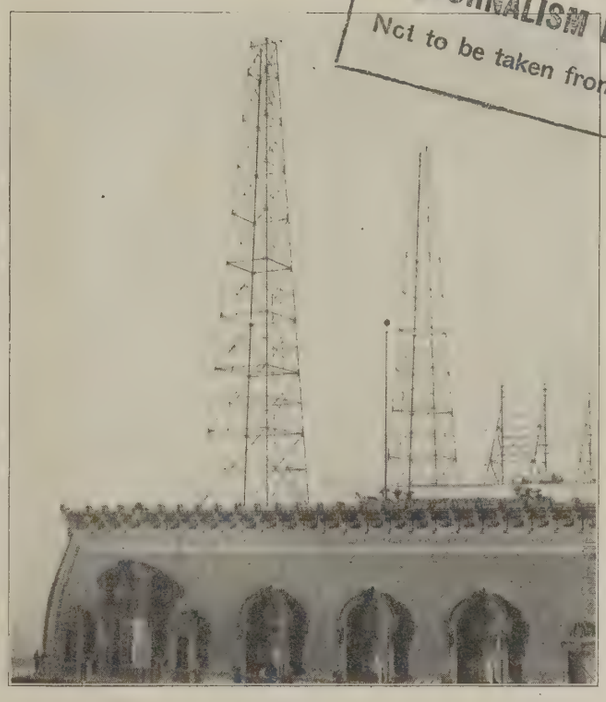
SUITE 1700 TIMES BUILDING, NEW YORK
42ND STREET AND BROADWAY.

MEMBER A.B.C. MEMBER A.B.P.

Original second class entry The Journalist, March 24, 1884; Newspaperdom, March, 1892; The Editor & Publisher, December 7, 1901; The Editor & Publisher and Journalist, October 30, 1909; Advertising, February 7, 1925; Revised entry, Editor & Publisher, May 11, 1916, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879.

Vol. 59. No. 51 NEW YORK, MAY 14, 1927 By Mail in Advance $4, U. S. A. $4.50, Canada; $5, Foreign 10c Per Copy

JOURNALISM LIBRARY
Not to be taken from this room



All-Day Broadcasting—Finer Programs
Leadership in National Radio Advertising

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has taken over the complete management of station WQJ, owned by the Calumet Baking Powder Company, and now operates this station in conjunction with The Daily News station WMAQ, with exclusive 24-hour rights to the wave length 447.5 meters.

The operation of two of America's foremost stations with a unified all-day program is welcomed by Chicago people and the radio public generally as another great advance typical of the five-year record of The Daily News in promoting the interests of radio.

WMAQ, the first newspaper-owned radio station in Chicago, equipped now with its third sending apparatus, has earned a reputation for fine programs that will be richly enhanced by the added facilities of station WQJ. The two stations are members of the chain of the National Broadcasting Company. The program schedule throughout will be one of highest quality and interest.

By advancing every interest of radio, on the air and in its columns, The Daily News has attained a popularity with Chicago fans reflected in its leadership six days a week in national radio advertising—it is the most effective daily medium for radio manufacturers and dealers in reaching the Chicago public.

Arrangements to participate in the broadcasting schedule of The Chicago Daily News may be made by addressing Director, WMAQ, The Chicago Daily News, 15 North Wells St., Chicago, Ill.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

Member of The 100,000 Group of American Cities

Advertising Representatives:	NEW YORK J. B. Woodward 110 E. 42d St.	CHICAGO Woodward & Kelly 360 N. Michigan Ave.	DETROIT Woodward & Kelly Fine Arts Building	SAN FRANCISCO C. Geo. Krogness 253 First National Bank Bldg.

*Average Daily Net Paid Circulation for April, 1927—442,577

Within 50 Miles of City Hall, New York

—The New York Times has a greater number of high quality readers than any newspaper, morning or evening.

—The New York Times made a greater gain in high quality readers in the past year than any newspaper, morning or evening.

In April, 1927, the average net paid sale (daily edition only) of The New York Times was 377,899 copies, a gain of 21,476 copies over April, 1926.

Of this gain 93 per cent. was in city and suburbs.

In April, 1927, the average net paid sale of the Sunday edition was 651,354 copies, a gain over April, 1926, of 46,670 copies.

Of this gain 82 per cent. was in city and suburbs.

The key to the market for advertised goods in New York is

The New York Times.

For April—the

Sunpapers Baltimore

(Morning--Evening--Sunday)

Carried

65% of the total advertising lineage published in Baltimore

The Circulation of The Sunpapers

Daily (M. & E.) 252,760

Sunday 198,302

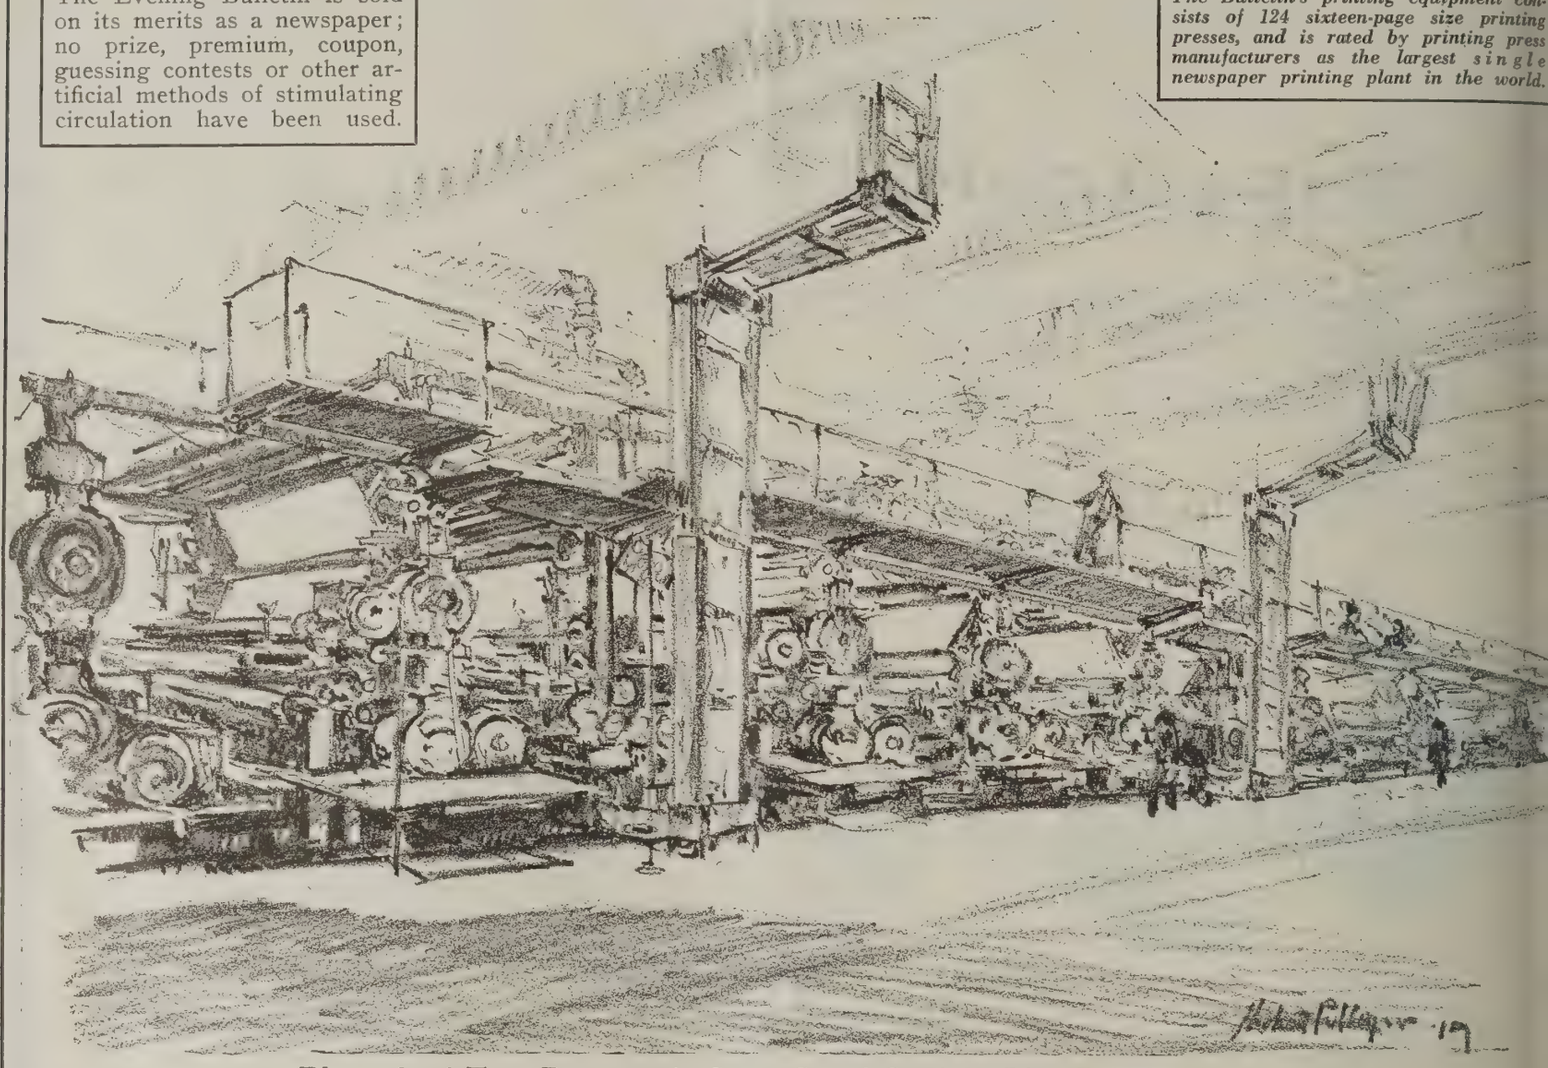
JOHN B. WOODWARD
Bowery Bank Bldg.,
110 E. 42d St., New York

GUY S. OSBORN
360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago

C. GEORGE KROGNESS
First National Bank Bldg.,
San Francisco

Everything in Baltimore Revolves Around

THE SUN



MORNING EVENING SUNDAY

Baltimoreans Don't Say "Newspaper"—They Say "SUNpaper"

Again, Another Giant Printing Press Installed in The Philadelphia Bulletin Press-Rooms to Keep Pace with Circulation Growth

The Evening Bulletin is sold on its merits as a newspaper; no prize, premium, coupon, guessing contests or other artificial methods of stimulating circulation have been used.

The Bulletin's printing equipment consists of 124 sixteen-page size printing presses, and is rated by printing press manufacturers as the largest single newspaper printing plant in the world.

Eleventh of THE BULLETIN'S Super-Speed Straight Line Printing Presses

The above illustration shows the latest printing press installed by The Bulletin. Like its mate, which was put into operation on March 10th, it embodies all the latest principles in mechanical design and efficiency. The new idea in printing presses is to align all the separate printing units in a row, instead of the old practice of superimposing them in upper deck form. The paper, in the new machines, runs through in a straight line, receiving the printed impression from revolving printing cylinders and hastening to the folders, is cut, folded and ejected in separate copies of The Bulletin.

Dominate Philadelphia

3,005,090 people live in Philadelphia's Retail Trading Area. U. S. Census figures average 4.5 persons to a family. Dividing the population in this area (America's Third Largest Markets) by the size of the average family, the result shows that The Bulletin goes daily into "nearly every home."

Create maximum impression at one cost by concentrating in the newspaper "nearly everybody" reads—

The Evening Bulletin.

PHILADELPHIA'S NEWSPAPER

"In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin"

Average paid circulation for the month of April

557,090 copies a day

Circulation for January, 1927, was 543,973; February, 559,450; March, 560,832; and April, 557,090

New York.....247 Park Avenue (Park Lexington Building)
Chicago.....Verree & Conklin, Inc., 28 East Jackson Blvd.
Detroit.....C. L. Weaver, Verree & Conklin, Inc., 321 Lafayette Blvd.
San Francisco...Thomas L. Emory, Verree & Conklin, Inc., 681 Market St.

The circulation of The Bulletin is the largest in Philadelphia and one of the largest in the United States.

MEMBER OF ASSOCIATED PRESS

(Copyright 1927, Bulletin Company)

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Issued every Saturday, forms closing ten P. M. Thursday preceding Publication by The Editor & Publisher Co., J. W. Brown, Publisher; Marlen E. Pew, Editor; Suite 1700 Times Building, 42nd St., at Broadway, New York. Telephones, Bryant 3052-3053-3054-3055-3056. Charter Member Audit Bureau of Circulations. Member Associated Business Papers, Inc.

Vol. 59 | NEW YORK, MAY 14, 1927 | No. 51

Frigidaire President Tells How Newspapers Built Sales Dominant For His Product

Biechler Accredits Tremendous Growth of General Motors Subsidiary to Advertising in Dailies—More Than 2,000 on 1927 List—$1,000,000 1926 Budget

By C. T. MUTCHNER, of Geyer Advertising Agency, Dayton

HOW newspaper advertising, coupled with a good product, has enabled a ity young organization to dominate a ional industry within a comparatively v months, has been revealed by E. G. chler, president and general manager Frigidaire Corporation, subsidiary of neral Motors.

'Four out of every five electric refrig- tors now being installed are Frigid- es, it has been estimated by General tors," said Mr. Biechler. "We attrib- our present supremacy in this vast, idly developing field to the fact that have not only made a good product, have also told the public about it.

'Today, Frigidaire, one of the young- members of the General Motors up, ranks second in unit sales and d in annual sales volume. Before started systematic newspaper adver- ng, less than two years ago, it had en us six years to sell 90,000 Frigid- es. That number now represents less n three months' business for us.

'We began extensive use of newspaper ce late in 1925, using approximately 00 daily papers to carry our gospel better refrigeration and freedom from oyance of outside ice supply to the sewives of America. The next year, ile this advertising was appearing, our iness doubled.

The following year we inaugurated second newspaper advertising cam- gn, adding additional papers to our . Results of this second newspaper paign, which blankets the entire ntry, now appearing, backed by the rts of a splendid sales organization, e been simply overwhelming.

'How rapidly the American housewife grown to prefer Frigidaire is shown comparison of our total unit sales of 84 for the entire year of 1924, with 556 for the month of March alone, this r. It is certain that such a phenom- l growth could not have been possible hout the direct help of newspaper ad- tising."

Nearly $1,000,000 was invested in igidaire newspaper advertising in 1926 l a much larger sum is being expended this field in 1927. Space being used s from 112 lines to full pages.

'Contrary to the belief of some peo- , Frigidaire has not been established sheer force of advertising, through at sums of money expended without ard to anticipated sales," said Mr. chler. "The advertising has grown volume in very direct proportion to increase in business.

'Three years ago, this electric refrig- tor was being manufactured at the e of 2,000 a month, and the annual ad- tising appropriation ran about $200,- 0. Our peak production is now in the ghborhood of 50,000 a month and our al advertising expenditures for 1927 l be somewhat less than $5,000,000.

'Our advertising appropriation is based n a certain percentage of total antici- ed sales. We hold well under this ure early in the year to be absolutely certain that we will not exceed this percentage at the end of the period."

A brief review of what has been accomplished by newspaper advertising for Frigidaire gives a good idea as to how potent this advertising has actually been. Frigidaire made its debut in the newspapers of the United States in October, 1925, when the business was first placed upon a mass production basis. In a few months "Frigidaire" became a nationally known trade name. Soon it was apparent that it was fast becoming a generic term. The name "Frigidaire" was being applied to any and all kinds of electric refrigerators. Newspaper space was used widely to counteract this idea. Copy appeared, saying: "No Other Electric Refrigerator Is a Frigidaire," "Frigidaire Is Made Only by General Motors," and "The Name Means Everything."

At this time the two factories were operating in double shifts, producing 25,000 units a month and were far behind with deliveries. Business was being lost through inability to make deliveries. Nevertheless, the newspaper campaign was continued without any diminution of space.

Then, later in the year, as the delivery situation was easing up, there came a price cut affecting the entire line. It was unexpected and drastic. No one in the field organization knew of it, or even expected it, until the day before the newspaper advertising announcing it appeared.

"Only daily papers could be used for such a surprise maneuver in a national sales campaign," said Mr. Biechler.

Closely following the 1926 price reduction, copy of a more descriptive nature was placed in the daily papers. It took up, point by point, various sales arguments, including price, quality, capacity, etc., culminating in the "Seven Points of Superiority" advertisement.

At the same time Frigidaire first gave utterance to its statement: "There Are More Frigidaires in Use Than All Other Makes of Electric Refrigerators Combined."

With double shifts of workmen in both plants, working as closely together as they could be placed, it was plain, early in 1926, that more factory space must be supplied, if the business was to progress with the speed it gave evidence of possessing.

General Motors promptly made available $20,000,000 for this expansion program. In 140 days, many of which were inclement, an army of workmen representing many crafts, completed one plant, nearly a mile long, including what is said to be the largest one-story factory building in the world. In addition, much new machinery was placed in another plant which the organization operates.

Five miles of conveyor belts, the largest porcelain enameling plant in the world, and numerous other engineering achievements were embodied in this stupendous expansion program, which was finished and ready on Jan. 1, 1927, without interrupting production!

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors, after a trip through the two plants and attending a convention of 2,500 picked dealers and salesmen at Dayton, said:

"At the rate business is growing I should not be surprised if General Motors in another two or three years had $100,000,000 invested in the electric refrigeration industry.

"I attribute this growth to the fact that the management has practiced the same policies of aggressive engineering and research work that we have followed in our motor car divisions. Some idea of what has been accomplished in this direction may be visualized by comparing our present lowest priced unit, which sells for $195 and the price of $750, which represented the cheapest unit manufactured five years ago."

In October, 1926, just a year from the time newspaper advertising and mass production was started, General Motors announced formation of Frigidaire Corporation. Previously its electric refrigerator had been made and marketed by the Delco-Light Company, a General Motors subsidiary, which also manufactured individual electric light plants and pumps. But the name Frigidaire had become so well known that it was deemed desirable to take advantage of the good will built up for it, by creation of a new subsidiary of that name to market it. And a few months later, Frigidaire, Ltd., was created to handle the business overseas.

On May 1, 1927, both Frigidaire plants, covering 53 acres of floor space, were at capacity production, turning out 2,000 units a day—four a minute!

Electric water coolers have been added to the line. A new model, selling at a new low price, has been placed on the market. More land has been purchased near one of the plants, and everything placed in readiness for another factory expansion program.

Meanwhile Frigidaire newspaper advertising appears weekly in more than 2,000 daily papers, and Frigidaire sales comprise four-fifths the total volume for the industry.

And that is what has been accomplished in less than two years since Frigidaire began using newspaper space.

This plan makes it possible to keep Frigidaire advertising always fresh and in step with the fast moving organization that is selling it and at the same time renders it readily adaptable to all sorts of local conditions, one of the strong points in favor of newspaper advertising.

Until 1927 Frigidaire newspaper advertising dealt principally with household refrigeration. This year, on account of the excellent results obtained for the household division, a considerable amount of newspaper space is being used in advancing Frigidaire in the commercial field. It has been found that newspapers offer a very satisfactory way of reaching grocers, butchers, florists and other dealers handling perishable goods with the story of the economy, convenience and satisfaction afforded by Frigidaire in commercial applications.

"We attribute our present supremacy in this vast, rapidly developing field to the fact that we have not only made a good product, but have also told the public about it."

* * *

"We began extensive use of newspaper space late in 1925, using approximately 2,000 daily papers. The next year, while this advertising was appearing, our business doubled."

E. G. Biechler

EDITORS ANALYZE SELLING ELEMENTS OF SNYDER-GRAY MURDER STORY

Sex, the "Bourgeoise Influence," Tragic Pity, and Confrontation in Court Cited as Among Causes Making Case a Circulation Booster—How Extras Were Issued on Verdict

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

A LONG list of reasons were at the tongue tips of New York editors this week why the Snyder-Gray story sold newspapers at a record rate during the past few weeks, ending with top figures particularly for the dailies which issued extras on the verdict the evening of May 9.

Topping the list of a tabloid city editor, who is hardboiled but modest when it comes to personal publicity, was sex. He characterized the story as "a tragedy of married life," and pointed out that it sold papers because most "newspaper readers are married or hope to be; are committing adultery, or hope to."

Other editors who analyzed the story for EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week were Arthur Draper, assistant editor of the New York Herald Tribune; James W. Barrett, city editor of the New York World; and Ralph Renaud, managing editor of the New York Evening Post. A dissenting note came from a cynical writer who had covered the case from the beginning. Arthur Mefford, noted tabloid reporter, now with the New York Daily News, declared in his opinion the story was vastly over-played by all New York papers. It was kept alive in the beginning, he said, by fake statements by defense attorneys, and throughout was "a tangled mass of repetition."

Most editors agreed that the public benefited by the story, as it was played in the press.

Mr. Barrett pointed out that while the Snyder-Gray case was a great newspaper story for the metropolitan press it was not especially a big story in other cities.

"In Newburgh, for example," he said, "the trial of Lucy Baxter Early ran simultaneously with the Snyder-Gray story. The Newburgh papers gave about two pages to Mrs. Early's troubles and less than a column to Snyder-Gray.

"Snyder-Gray was a great story because it was a great tragic drama, not without its ludicrous touches, typifying and projecting as it were onto a screen the modern metropolitan psychology. It captivated the metropolitan reader with practically unparalleled strength, principally because every man saw a picture of himself in Henry Judd Gray and every woman saw a picture of herself in Ruth Brown Snyder.

"Of course some of us deny it, but nevertheless it is a fact that we are all potentially, if not actually, Grays and Snyders. The difference is one of degree. Gray and Mrs. Snyder carried an ordinary situation to the extreme degree and translated it into tragedy and this tragedy becomes a truly great drama, ending in the purgation and possible purification not of the actor, but of the spectator."

Mr. Renaud, of the Evening Post, put the story in a class with the Hall-Mills case as a paper-seller, admitting that it lacked the aristocratic background, usually considered so necessary, and the all-important element of mystery.

"The fact that the chief characters in the story were of the bourgeoisie was one of the important reasons why the case sold papers," he said. It was understandable to more people.

"It was one of the ancient Greek masters, I believe, who said that pity and terror were the chief elements of drama. Certainly the Snyder-Gray case had these.

"The woman in this story was of particular interest. In all my experience as a newspaper man I have never known a woman who had as complete a criminal development as Mrs. Snyder. She was intensely fascinating as a criminological study. The fact that the public generally did not appear to be in sympathy with her made the story even better.

"What made the case particularly dramatic was that it contained the supreme element of confrontation in court. This is common enough in Continental countries, but is missing in most of our trials."

It was Mr. Draper's opinion that part of the reason for the great public interest in the Snyder-Gray trial was the fact that the defendants were average, normal suburbanites, and that nothing in the history of either the man or the woman could lead one to expect either of them to commit such a cruel and ghastly murder. He agreed with Mr. Renaud that the fact that the sentiment of the public seemed to be definitely against the woman was in itself a matter of much news interest.

"There can be small criticism of the publication of crime news," said Mr. Draper. "If there is to be any attack on the press, it should be based not on the number of columns or words devoted to the reporting of crime news, but on the way this crime news is handled. The Herald Tribune treated the story on what it regarded as its relative news value. It is quite possible that under different circumstances it might have given it more, or even much less space."

In several offices it was remarked that while the Herald Tribune and Times usually gave the story a one-column head on page one, both papers gave it eight column streamers with full testimony on the inside pages.

While editors and writers thus advanced their theories as to why the story sold papers, the circulation men were content to view with satisfaction the ascending curves on their day-by-day sales charts.

The evening papers got a fairly good break for extras, catching the theatre crowds on Broadway with their "boot-jacks." Most of the evening papers had dummy set-ups ready with "Guilty!" in the headlines. The New York Evening Telegram was so certain of the verdict that it had three presses dressed with stories written telling that the defendants were found guilty of murder in the first degree.

Tom Dowling, the circulation director, said the flash came into the Telegram office at 6:59 and that they were on the street with papers at 7:01. At 7:30 a new edition was coming off the press with a make-over telling details of Mrs. Snyder's collapse in the courtroom. The Telegram, according to Dowling, sent all its "boot-jackers" to Queens with the first bundles of the extra and, being first outside the court room and nearby, sold more than 3,000 over there alone.

The race with the other evening papers appeared to be to the Times Square district, to sell to the show-going crowds. It would require a brave man to stand up and judge what paper was in the district first. Extras were issued by the Graphic, Journal, Evening World, Evening Post, and Sun. The circulation men of the morning papers, helped by the Nungesser story, couldn't kick. In both cases it was hard to disentangle the Paris-New York attempt and the Snyder story in the bid for reader interest and the concomitant big sales.

Arthur Lister, co-author of the play "Spread Eagle", now running on Broadway, and city editor of the Brooklyn Daily Times, believes his paper set some records in handling the verdict. He said that one minute after the verdict was returned the Times was on the street with an extra, and a minute later a staff man announced it over radio station WBBC. The Times, according to Lister, caused considerable comment in Brooklyn by printing practically the full question and answer testimony up to press time during the trial, running as much as 20 columns a day.

This complete testimony was carried by several of the New York morning papers, but none of the other evening papers attempted to carry it on such a scale.

(Continued on page 49)

DINNER FOR ELLIS

Theodore T. Ellis, president of the New England Newspaper Supply Company, Worcester, Mass., and previously owner of the Worcester Telegram, was guest of honor at a dinner given by R. Hoe & Co., Ltd., at the Holborn Restaurant, London, England, on Friday evening, April 29, and attended by chiefs of machine rooms of leading English and Irish newspapers.

AD COMMISSION VOTES RESEARCH PROGRAM

Would Raise $50,000 to Finance "Educational Foundation," According to Proposals Passed at Baltimore Meet

A program of advertising research and education was adopted by the Advertising Commission of the International Advertising Association meeting in Baltimore this week. The action was characterized by C. K. Woodbridge, I. A. A. president, as "the greatest forward step taken by organized advertising in 23 years."

As proposed by Ezra W. Clark, of Buchanan, Mich., who represents the National Industrial Advertisers Association on the Commission, and enlarged upon by Walter A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, the immediate program provides for the raising of $50,000 for advertising education and research during the year following the Denver convention, approximately half of which is to be used for research fellowships in leading universities.

In its larger aspects, the Clark-Strong proposals recommend the co-ordination of educational activities of all association members of the I. A. A., and the establishment as soon as possible of a National Advertising Foundation, with the united support of all advertising interests and with funds to carry on extensive research work and educational work.

In addition to the suggested $50,000 fund two other "preliminary steps" are set down as "leading to the ultimate accomplishments of this larger purpose." They are the appointment at Denver of a joint "committee representing advertising organizations and teachers of advertising which will function as a correlating body and will also recommend plans for future educational work and research," and the "selection of an educational director in the I. A. A. who will have such training and attainments as will make him a successful leader in advertising education and research."

Mr. Strong in his report recommended that the Educational Research Foundation of the I. A. A., if and when it is created, disseminate official findings on the value of advertising to the individual, the business enterprise, the community, the city, the state, the nation and international relations.

The two reports will be presented to the executive committee of the I. A. A., as the recommended program of activity for the association beginning with the new fiscal year following the Denver convention next month.

The committee headed by Mr. Clark was appointed in January this year at a meeting of the commission held at Columbus. The program as presented and adopted at Baltimore was decided upon at a meeting held in Chicago March 14.

LANSTON REPORTS PROSPERITY

Harvey D. Best was re-elected president of the Lanston Monotype Machine Company at the annual meeting, May 5. J. Thilman Hendrick was re-elected chairman of the board of directors and T. Frank Morgan was elected vice-president. The annual report of Mr. Best showed that for the third successive year net earnings, volume of sales and new customers for both the Monotype and Barrett machines have increased. No money was borrowed during the year. Profits before taxes and depreciation totalled $1,009,362.91.

DELAWARE BARS PRES FROM DIVORCE COURTS

New Law's Teeth Not Suspected Unt May Term When Justices Held Reporters Cannot Hear Proceedings

WILMINGTON, Del., May 12.—Passag of the recent act of the General Assembl of Delaware in closing divorce hearing to the public was met with but mild pr test on the part of the newspapers of th state, owing to the prevalent belief tha newspapermen were not included in th provisions of the bill, which provided tha the cases be heard in chambers by th presiding judges.

That the newspaper men were barre was first decided when the May term o Superior Court convened in Newcast County. The first cases before the cou were uncontested divorce actions and consultation was held between the new paper reporters present and Judges Her bert Rice and Richard S. Rodney. Th provisions of the law were discussed, an following the discussion, the jurists de cided they were left no alternative in th matter. The new law specifies that "a divorce cases shall be heard by the judg in chambers, unless for some good reaso the judges believe the case shall be hear in public."

Commenting upon this Judge Rodne was of the opinion that "as far as I ca see there can be no good reason why an case should be heard in public." Di ferent members of the bar were con sulted regarding their views on the la and opinion was divided among the law yers. Some were of the opinion th newspaper men should be allowed to a tend but a majority were of the opposi view and following the consultation was decided that none but witnesses an principals in divorce cases would be a mitted to the chambers. The judg agreed however that at the close of th hearings the newspapers' representativ would be given an outline of the resu of the judges deliberations.

The law repeals one passed sever years ago which made public hearing mandatory after taking the power grant divorces from the state legislatu it was inspired by a recent case in Susse County, where salacious testimony wa voluminous in the action in which prominent Seaford resident named a ph sician as co-respondent. In this actio two children and girl 12 and a boy years old, were put on the stand testify against their mother and rela the alleged meetings between her and th physician. The case aroused much con ment and the courtroom was packed hear the details.

SHERIFF SUES EDITOR

Editorial in South Carolina Weekl Brings Criminal Libel Charge

Charged with criminal libel in publish ing alleged false statements about O. Limehouse, sheriff of Dorchester count and other persons connected with th sheriff's office, W. B. Tarkington, edito of the St. George (S. C.) Dorchest Eagle, a weekly, has been released o bail of $1,000. The warrant was swor out by the sheriff, who states that h would bring a civil suit, asking damag of $50,000 against the persons responsib for the charges printed in the newspape

The editorial upon which the warra was based, charged that a still found i a remote section of the county by tw deputy sheriffs was put in the coun jail, and that several weeks later th still was loaded on a wagon and haule to parts unknown. The editorial calle on the sheriff to tell where the still ha been taken.

GREATER MINNESOTA WEEK

"A Greater Minnesota Week," a driv launched by the Minnesota Editorial A sociation at the suggestion of J. V Weber, president, to "sell Minnesota t Minnesotans and the world," will be ob served during the week of May 22 to 2

ASKS HIGHER STANDARDS FOR NEWSPAPER MEN

Better Trained, Better Informed Press Workers Needed, Tom Wallace Tells Journalism Week Gathering—"Canned" Material Stripping Newspapers of Individuality

By TOM WALLACE
Chief of the Editorial Staff, Louisville Times

Address of Tom Wallace, chief of the editorial staff of the Louisville Times, before the students of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri and the Missouri Press Association, May 11.

HENRY WATTERSON used to say America needed more journalists, fewer newspaper men.

Here, at the eldest of American schools of journalism, the making of journalists is undertaken rightly. Certain finishing processes are left, necessarily, to the end of regular daily work, and to the mills of the gods. But I am not talking a bread and butter speech, as a guest of Dean Williams, when I say that the American press will be more efficient, more at ease, more respected when every newspaper man or woman goes through a school of journalism.

Anyone who takes a reasonable pride in the calling; anyone who has righteous consideration for newspaper readers, often affronted, and for the English language, often mutilated, in newspaper columns, must agree that those who write for newspapers should be more thoroughly educated than many writers are. It no matter what the academic training of the candidate for participancy in the immensely important work of making the daily newspaper, he should devote himself to courses of instruction designed to fit him especially for a calling which requires more of a man than that he be able to write good English. Assuredly the man who begins with sufficient education may, by self-education, or by other means, overcome his handicap, but there are several reasons why it is unlikely that he will do so.

Too often, men ill trained, culturally and technically, in newspaperdom, fill important positions in similar circumstances, with similar results.

It is appalling to ponder the power for evil that rests in the high officer of the press who is commissioned without due cultural training and, still worse, without proper moral fiber.

As long as avenues of approach are so numerous, terms of admission too easy, the culturally and morally unfit will commission the culturally and morally unfit. Hence the need of more training, and more than mere training, for betterment of newspapers and increase of their usefulness.

Writing often is a gift. An ignorant individual may write a successful play. It is done often. An ill-trained, ill-balanced, ill-informed man or woman may write good fiction, even poetry, for that we call genius transcends training. Writing is by no means all of journalism, but if we admit that the rare journalist endowed with qualifications which make training unnecessary for him the fact remains that in a group of 100 or 1,000 newspaper workers average efficiency will be much lower as long as special training is not required, and while not even a standard of academic education be required, than it would be if it were necessary to be first well educated, and then especially trained.

And we should have a code of ethics, a method of disbarment, that the shady individual be excluded from newspaperdom.

It is almost as important that crooked reporters be disbarred—by some method more effective than that by which crooked lawyers are, in theory, weeded from the bar—as that crooked editors be excluded from the practice of their profession.

But, returning, from dreaming of the future, to dealing with the present, the reporter today who is animated by right ideals, and attached to the staff of a great newspaper, which means a clean one as well as a live one, and at large is a student of this kaleidoscopic, romantic, fantastic, dramatic, fascinating world should envy no man his calling.

His sorrow should be that men rarely live to be 150 years old, and often die much younger.

Too much is said of the hardships of the grind, of ill-paid service.

The pay is not as bad as pessimists would have their sympathizers believe, and it is improving.

Mediocrity and ill luck—in any calling—receive meager returns, but there are many opportunities for rewards in newspaperdom, and not all of them are found in great centers of population.

Tom Wallace

Go to a metropolis for eminence as a writer of news. International journalism makes a De Blowitz or a Sir Phillip Gibbs. New York and London newspapers send to distant parts of the world reporters of great, if often brief, journalistic prominence; men whose names appear on distant horizons where stirring events are in progress; picked men of the managing editor's far-flung battle line; heroes of enviable antipodal adventures.

But they are not the money-makers of the calling. At middle age, often, they are writing reminiscences, or contributing heavy articles to dull magazines, or trying an unaccustomed hand at novel writing.

The man who casts his lot with a small, but growing city, and aims at ownership is the man of substantial opportunities. But there are so many attractions in so many kinds of newspaper work, in so many places, that it should be as difficult for a well-balanced, duly appreciative beginner to make up his mind where to settle down, if at all, as it was for Sentimental Tommy to decide upon the right word.

I sometimes envy a friend of mine who presides over the politics, the religious activities, the bootlegging, the births and deaths, the fights and friendships, of a charming community in Southern Kentucky, living in a century-old colonial-type mansion, and writing his editorials once a week.

There are bass in the little river in his neighborhood, and birds in neighborhood covers. He does not envy the boys who went to New York and became star reporters, or editors, or the boys who went to Florida and became millionaires.

The two great intangible assets of a newspaper should be integrity and individuality. A newspaper should be known at home for strict uprightness, and known, more widely than it circulates, for its peculiar tang.

Brilliancy?

Rare, desirable, but not one of the fundamental necessities.

The New York Times is today America's greatest newspaper. If it ever tried to be brilliant it never made the world aware of the effort. But it has individuality as the pre-eminent newsgetter of America, perhaps of the world.

It is an inspiring example of clean, high-headed, high-hatted journalism. Its reputation exceeds even its great circulation. Its profits exceed belief.

The New York Sun in the days of Dana, and of Laffan, was brilliant, but at the height of its vogue it did not influence, or upbuild, its community as did the Kansas City Star and Times under Nelson whose slogan was: "A newspaper should do things, not merely say things."

Joseph Pulitzer, America's greatest journalist, was not brilliant as a writer. The history of his achievement as builder of the New York World is not linked with any outstanding brilliant writer.

He hired and fired without regard to money in the first place or men in the second place, striving to buy brilliancy for his editorial columns, without conspicuous success, while his newspaper, under the magic of his genius as a publisher, under the influence of his resolute, uncompromising, fearless honesty, became a valued American institution.

It was after he had created the World that he discovered a broad-shouldered Kansan of rugged exterior—his hair did not take kindly to the guidance of comb and brush—who proved to be his ablest editor.

And Frank I. Cobb was not brilliant in any showy way. Pulitzer trained him in effective irony. But his real equipment was moral fineness with a generous dash of inspiring Middle Westernism which New York never subdued, or modified, and always respected.

I have mentioned integrity and individuality as major assets of the ideal newspaper.

Both are impaired—temporarily, let us hope—by the prominence, and dominance, of syndicates.

Newspapers flooded with writing which is as alien to their soil as the work of Amy Lowell would have been on the range of James Whitcomb Riley, or that of one of the Brook Farm Philosophers in the bailiwick of Booth Tarkington, lose the savor of their soil.

Each section produces its own literature. Each section should be known by its journalism, but that is not the only objection to overdone syndicate distribution of copy. The newspaper which is loaded with canned features, syndicate writers' "interpretation" of national news, syndicated editorial cartoons, syndicated signed articles labeled "editorial," which disregard its editorial views, is inconsistent, incoherent, anything but influential.

The growth of syndicates, the skilled merchandising of their canned goods is taking the daily press—temporarily, I believe—back toward the state of the old-time weekly with patent insides. But there's a difference. The daily press has patent outsides as well. Its front page no less than others is devoted, often, to the highly touted contents of the can.

All of us—or almost all—are guilty. The smart drummers have, in luncheon club phraseology, sold us the idea that the cannery product is essential. It is always ready, requires no preparation, can be served hot or cold.

Expensive? Yes, rather, but necessary to convenience, it is argued. Business is flourishing. It is, proverbially, difficult to make an effective argument against the party in power in a period of prosperity.

No discussion of journalism seems complete without reference to crime news. The public, which has sat as a grand jury in continuous session since the first newspaper was published, indicts the press oftener for publishing crime news than for any other crime.

We're over-doing it, no doubt, making a routine murder on the Atlantic Seaboard first-page news in the Mississippi Valley.

Something seems wrong, to many critics, when an ordinary sex crime calls for a loud speaker in the court room, and as many press seats as are provided for the newspapers of every land and every language at Geneva.

But crime is a part of life and of romance, drama, poetry, music and, inevitably, of news.

Is there not, even in the Snyder-Gray murder case, material which would have served August Strindberg, if not Henrik Ibsen, in the making of a tragedy or one of the great composers in the writing of grand opera?

Taken all in all, journalism has much to boast and little for which to apologize. With all of its faults, it is the most constructive of our institutions. But we need better educated, better trained, better informed men and women on newspaper staffs.

Not otherwise shall we procure better education so surely as through schools of journalism, which time and recognition will improve, plus self-examination, self-criticism, self-condemnation, which time and education should improve.

SEEKING DISSOLUTION OF J. E. SCRIPPS TRUST

Mrs. Grace S. Clark Starts Action Involving Detroit News—Would Place Control with Children

DETROIT, May 10.—A suit to force dissolution of the trusteeship of the James E. Scripps estate, which includes 83½ per cent of the $10,000,000 capital stock of the Detroit News, has been filed in Circuit Court here by Mrs. Grace S. Clark, of Pasadena, Cal., daughter of the late founder of the News.

Mr. Scripps created a trust before his death in 1906, leaving control of his three corporations, the Evening News Association, the Bay City Times and the James E. Scripps Corporation, a real estate concern, to three trustees. The trust property was to be distributed to his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren in 1936.

George G. Booth, William E. Scripps and Edgar B. Whitcomb were named trustees, and have had charge of the estate, distributing part of the income from the trust to Mrs. Harriet J. Scripps, widow, and to the children, William E. Scripps, Ellen S. Booth, Anna S. Whitcomb and Grace S. Clark.

The remainder of the income was used for improvements of the Detroit News and other enterprises, as specified in the will.

In 1922 the stock of the News was increased from $50,000 to $10,000,000. Eighty-three and one-half per cent of it went into the trust fund.

The effect of the suit, if won by Mrs. Clark and her husband, would be to take control of the various enterprises from the hands of the trustees and give it direct to the children of James E. Scripps.

The James E. Scripps estate is in no way associated, directly or indirectly, with the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

HODGES NEW PRESIDENT OF N. Y. AD CLUB

New York Sun Man Named to Succeed Green at Annual Meeting —Three Honorary Members Elected

Gilbert T. Hodges, member of the executive board of the New York Sun, was elected president of the New York Advertising Club at the annual meeting held May 10 at the club.

Other officers named are: Lee J. Eastman, president and general manager, Packard Motor Car Company of New York, vice-president; H. R. Swartz, president of R. Hoe & Co., treasurer (re-elected); directors: Charles C. Green, president, Charles C. Green Advertising Agency, and Frederic W. Hume, public relations counsel.

Gilbert T. Hodges

Officers holding over automatically without re-election are: Vice-President: John G. Jones, vice-president of Alexander Hamilton Institute. Directors: H. H. Charles, president, Charles Advertising Service; Colver Gordon, vice-president, Outdoor Advertising Agency of America; Charles E. Murphy, account executive, James F. Newcomb Company; and Grover A. Whalen, general manager, John Wanamaker's.

The retiring officers are as follows: President, Charles C. Green; vice-president, Frank W. Harwood, advertising manager, American Tobacco Company; directors: F. H. Deknatel, treasurer, Bigelow-Hartford Company, and Paul Meyer, publisher, Theatre Magazine.

Three honorary members of the Club were elected, all of London, England, as follows: Sir Charles Higham Will Crawford, and Thomas McDougall.

GEORGIA EDITORS SAIL

Leave Savannah for Trip to Boston—To Visit New Hampshire

Members of the Georgia Press Association sailed from Savannah Wednesday on their trip to Boston. About 150 were in the party. They will arrive in Boston Sunday morning and will go immediately by train to Portsmouth, N. H., where they will be entertained by the Portsmouth Chamber of Commerce and New Hampshire publishers. The group will return to Boston Sunday night.

On Monday the visitors will be officially welcomed to the city by Mayor Malcolm B. Nichols and Walter D. Allen, president, Massachusetts Press Association, at a breakfast at the Hotel Statler, following which they will visit Governor Alvan T. Fuller at the State House and be shown points of interest about the city. Monday afternoon the party will be taken by automobile to Quincy as guests of the Massachusetts Press Association and the Quincy Patriot Ledger. In the evening a dinner will be tendered by the American Mutual Alliance, at which Robert Lincoln O'Brien, editor of the Boston Herald, will speak.

FRENCH PRESS SALARIES LOW—SAUERWEIN

Matin Foreign Editor Tells New York Correspondents Italian Journalists Are Best Protected—Describes Russian Life

Jules Sauerwein, managing editor of the foreign bureau of Le Matin, Paris, in New York for a week completing his journey from Paris through Moscow, Peking, Shanghai, Japan and the United States, was entertained at the Lawyers' Club on Thursday by the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents. Leonce Levy, president of the association and New York correspondent of Le Matin, greeted the guest at the luncheon given in his honor, and said he believed that M. Sauerwein had interviewed more celebrities, princes and presidents than any other living journalist.

M. Sauerwein gave a glimpse of journalistic conditions in France. The salaries there, he said, were not as good as in America. "They are very low, they are very poor," he remarked in English, for which he apologised, but for which no apology was needed, for everyone understood him perfectly. (His introduction was given in French). "Most of the French journalists are underpaid. In Italy one finds the best journalistic conditions. Every journalist is entitled to a pension, and if he is with one paper for fifteen years, for example, and changes to another paper, his years on the first paper are added to those on the second for the purposes of the pension."

He related the story of a friend who had lost his job on an Italian paper for political reasons. M. Sauerwein hastened to see him, expecting to commiserate with him in his damaged fortunes. Instead he found him established in a luxurious flat, apparently in the utmost prosperity. The explanation was that he had claimed and received the legal indemnity to which he was entitled, which in his case amounted to 750,000 lire!

Speaking of social conditions in Russia, M. Sauerwein said the people were reverting to a state of mediaeval economics. The purchasing power of money has descended. Superior elegance and prosperity on the part of individuals was not in evidence. It would not be permitted, and it was not communistic. In the theatre, even, one scarcely ever saw a white collar. Everything had to have a communistic flavor—houses, clothes and general appearance.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER CALENDAR

May 16-21—Secretary of the Navy Wilbur Entertains Newspaper Men Aboard Ships for Annual Fleet Maneuvers.
May 16-18—Associated Business Papers, meeting, French Lick, Ind.
May 17—New England Daily Newspaper Association, annual meeting, Copely Plaza Hotel, Boston.
May 19-21—Arkansas Press Assn., annual meeting, Hot Springs, Ark.
May 20-21—Advertising Affiliation, annual convention, Erie, Pa.
May 24—Inland Daily Press Assn., meeting, Chicago.
June 8-9—Mississippi Press Assn., annual meeting, Clarksdale, Miss.
June 8-9—American Newspaper Publishers Assn., mechanical conference, Harrisburg, Pa.
June 10-11—New York State Press Assn., meeting, Long Island, N. Y.
June 10-11—Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Assn., meeting, Waynesboro, Pa.
June 12-17—National Editorial Assn., annual convention, Omaha, Neb.

THIS "OILY" BIRD—

Failed to Catch Free Space Worm in Moline Dispatch's Garden

In addition to the Oil Heating Institute, through which oil burner manufacturers who claim to have an invested capital of $40,000,000, are expecting to get free space in the daily press, some individual oil companies are also working the press agent game early hoping to make the public conscious of cold days ahead and of an alleged uncertain coal supply.

One of these "oily" birds is the Williams Oil-O-Matic Heating Corporation of Bloomington, Ill. It is clearing "free" stuff through what it calls the "National Syndicate" of Chicago. But it does not always succeed in capturing the free space worm.

In Moline, Ill., for instance, F. A. Klann, city editor, of the Dispatch knows puffery and propaganda from news. After receiving about four dispatches weekly from the National Syndicate, he finally wrote C. U. Williams, president of the Williams Oil-O-Matic Company, himself to tell him he was wasting his money. The objectionable copy quoted the manufacturer on the bituminous strike.

FRENCH NEWSPAPER MEN CALL ON PRESIDENT

Count de Sartiges, Counsellor of the French Embassy at Washington, recently presented three of the leading newspapermen of France to President Coolidge at the temporary White House. Left to right: Count de Sartiges, Lucien Romier, Gabriel Villard and Jules Sauerwein, chief editor of Le Matin

PRESS CHIEFS CRUISE WITH U. S. FLEET

Thirty-nine Assigned to Units of Navy Force Leaving New York May 14 for Two Weeks on North Atlantic

Thirty-nine writers, editors, publishers and public officials will sail May 14 with the United States Fleet from New York for a fortnight's cruise in North Atlantic waters. They will return to New York May 28. Assignments have been made to the various ships as follows:

H. C. Adler, general manager Chattanooga Times—U. S. S. Decatur.

Willis J. Abbot, editor Boston Christian Science Monitor—U. S. S. Maryland.

V. H. Berghaus, assistant editor Harrisburg (Pa.) News—U. S. S. Mood

Ralph H. Booth, President Booth Publishing Company, Detroit—U. S. S. Idaho.

W. Bolton, New York Herald Tribune—U. S. S. Langley.

James W. Brown, President EDITOR & PUBLISHER—U. S. S. Mississippi.

Garrett D. Byrnes, assistant editor Providence Journal—U. S. S. Mississippi.

Philip Coldren, editor Joplin (Mo.) News-Herald.

James B. Connally, writer—U. S. S. Somers.

J. T. Cushing, editor St. Albans (Vt.) Messenger—U. S. S. Omaha.

V. Y. Dallman, editor Springfield (Ill.) State Register—U. S. S. Farquhar.

Charles H. Dennis, editor Chicago Daily News—U. S. S. Mississippi.

G. O. Ellis, editor American Boy, Detroit—U. S. S. Thompson.

H. J. Forman, North American Review, Redding, Conn.—U. S. S. Maryland.

Earle Godbey, editor Greensboro (N. C.) News—U. S. S. Arizona.

Louis T. Golding, publisher St. Joseph News-Press—U. S. S. Lamson.

Walter M. Harrison, managing editor Oklahoma City Oklahoman—U. S. S. Arizona.

Clark Howell, editor Atlanta Constitution—U. S. S. Arizona.

Walter C. Johnson, vice-president and publisher Chattanooga News—U. S. S. Pennsylvania.

J. J. Kelley, assistant editor Army & Navy Register—U. S. S. Maryland.

B. Livingston, writer, Westport, N. Y.—U. S. S. Osborne.

H. H. McClure, general manager Associated Newspapers, New York—U. S. S. Mississippi.

S. R. McKelvie, editor and publisher Nebraska Farmer, Lincoln, Neb.—U. S. S. Idaho.

M. H. McIntyre, Army & Navy Journal, Washington, D. C.—U. S. S. Seattle.

H. W. Marshall, publisher Lafayette (Ind.) Journal & Courier—U. S. S. Coghlan.

B. H. Peace, publisher Greenville (S. C.) News—U. S. S. Seattle.

Allen Potts, vice-president and business manager Richmond (Va.) News-Leader—U. S. S. Reuben James.

A. K. Remmel, editor Fort Wayne News-Sentinel—U. S. S. Paul Hamilton.

H. H. Smith, New York Times—U. S. S. West Virginia.

John Steel, Chicago Tribune—U. S. S. California.

F. D. Schroth, assistant editor Trenton Times—U. S. S. Litchfield.

G. K. Stimson, editor Lansing State Journal—U. S. S. Pennsylvania.

P. B. Talbot, editor Corn Belt Farmer, Des Moines—U. S. S. Pennsylvania.

G. Weymouth, editor Farm Life, Spencer, Ind.—U. S. S. Langley.

B. Bell, Associated Press—U. S. S. Seattle.

K. Clark, International News Service—U. S. S. California.

C. C. Morand, United Press—U. S. S. Texas.

Hon. John Taber, Auburn, N. Y.—U. S. S. Omaha.

Hon. Frank Hitchcock, New York City—U. S. S. Arizona.

PRESS MUST WARN OF INTERNATIONAL PERILS

atesmen May Well Heed Dispatches of Foreign Writers, Edward Price Bell Tells Journalism Week Gathering—U. P. Demonstrates News Transmission—Record Attendance at Missouri School

By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

OLUMBIA, Mo., May 12.—Journal-ism internationally has much to say statesmen may well heed, Edward ce Bell, Lon- correspond- of the Chi- Daily News, d newspaper- and students last night. fr. Bell, one the speakers the program he Eighteenth nual Journal- Week of the iversity of souri School Journalism, ke on "Jour- sm Internationally on the qui vive," ating out the great influence and re-nsibility of the press and the foreign respondent.

EDWARD PRICE BELL

Journalism is pre-eminently the pro-sion of opportunity and duty," he said. 's opportunity comprehends the whole d of human interests, moral, intellect- and material. Journalism can help n in their hearts and souls; it can help lm in their minds and in their practical tunes."

Bell likened a newspaper man without viction of public duty to a son without il affection, declaring that such a per- is in the wrong trade.

Explaining what "qui vive" means in rnational journalism, the speaker said, French it means 'who lives.' It is French sentinel's cry, 'who's there?' an think of no expression which sug-gts more vividly the position and the itude of journalism. What is mov- in the moral, in the mental, in the rsical world—it is journalism's uni-sal and insupressible cry."

Bell spent much time discussing the ited States' position in international airs, pleading for a more understand-r attitude on the part of American tesmen.

'Is it safe for us to slumber and mum-our shibboleths of delusive disen-aglement?" he questioned. "Journalism rnationally on the qui vive will ommend no such course. It will search the facts and face them when it finds lm.

'We in the United States have dreamed national insulation against interna-nal shock. Let us enlarge our vision. t us look not only beyond our own ntiers, but beyond the frontiers of the stern hemisphere. Let us look across oceans and realize that there is in this rld today no gap that the spark of war l not jump."

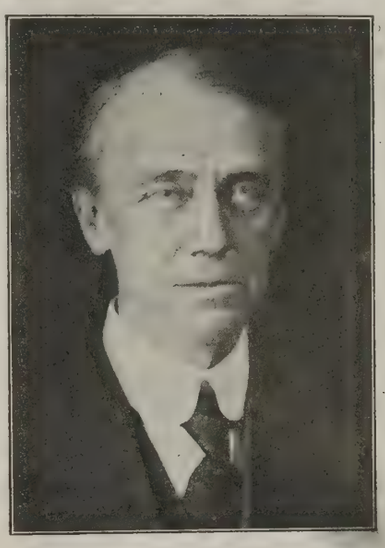
t is the duty of this type of interna-nal journalism to warn the public of ils and dangers of war, Bell said. will point our smoldering war-fires verever they may be and support with its power efforts to stamp them out ore they leap into uncontrollable me."

Regarding China, Bell expressed the belief that had the statesmen of this and other countries heeded the correspondents' warning of coming trouble there would be no foreign troops there today. International journalism had long been telling the truth about China, he said, and had our statesmen listened "there would be constructive work going on in China long before cannon and bayonets were the only recourse."

"If I extol journalism internationally on the qui vive, and if I plead for journalism and statesmanship as team mates," he concluded, "I do so because I am convinced that in their cordial and steadfast joint service the world has its first promise of peace."

Journalism Week opened Monday with an all-day session of the Missouri Writers' Guild and was to close Friday night with the annual banquet, this year sponsored by the United Press Associations. Karl A. Bickel, president of the U. P., and Ralph Turner, assistant general news manager, were to speak at the banquet.

An attempt is to be made to break the record for circling the globe with a cable message while the guests are assembled at the United Press dinner, Friday night. The message, "Unipress around world greets Missouri," will be sent from the speakers' table bearing the signature of Ralph Turner, assistant general news manager, who is a Missouri alumnus. From Columbia the message will go by a U. P. wire to New York, then transferred to the Commercial Cable Company for transmission to London via automatic relays at Canso, the Azores, and Waterville, Ireland. In London the Great Northern Telegraph Company puts the message on the wires for Shanghai, via Newcastle, Libau, Leningrad, Irkutsk, Vladivostock, and Nagasaki. From Shanghai the dispatch goes by Postal Pacific Cable Company wires to San Francisco, via Manila, Guam, Midway Island, and Honolulu, then flashed to New York and back to Columbia, bearing the signature of U. P. men who handled it on its journey of 26,605 miles. Cable officials were confident that the message would be back at the starting point before the end of the dinner.



Another communications feature planned is the broadcasting from New York, after wire transmission from the banquet hall, of this message by the Radio Corporation of America:

"To all ships—Please report position in miles from New York or San Francisco for marine radio demonstration before 400 newspaper editors attending United Press night banquet given by University of Missouri at Columbia, Mo."

As fast as replies are received from vessels at sea, they will be relayed from New York and San Francisco to Columbia and read to the guests.

Dean Walter Williams presided at the dinner, using the gavel which was used by President Bickel of the U. P. at the 20th anniversary banquet of the U. P. in New York, April 25. The gavel is to be preserved in the university museum. Speakers included Mr. Bickel and Gov. Sam A. Baker.

A wireless telephone conversation between Ralph Turner and Ed L. Keen, vice-president of the United Press in London, took place Thursday morning, Mr. Keen telephoning the latest news in the British capital, while Dean Williams and a number of distinguished guests listened on head-phones.

Dean Walter Williams

Attendance at Journalism Week will probably surpass that of last year, according to registration figures today. It is estimated that 400 editors and students will attend the banquet Friday night.

Wednesday was Missouri Press Association Day, the annual spring meeting of the association. President C. L. Hobart presided and problems of the rural press were discussed.

Journalism Week, started 18 years ago, one year after the establishment by Dean Walter Williams of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri, has grown in popularity each year. Prominent newspaper men from all sections of the country are on the programs.

Perhaps one of the greatest attractions on this year's program was the appearance of Fannie Hurst, novelist of New York, on the program Tuesday. Every available space in the auditorium was taken and many were turned away. The writer spoke on the duty of the press, emphasizing its spiritual mission as an agency for truth and service. She urged that journalism "keep pace spiritually with the mechanical achievements of our time, and be worthy of them," and condemned the practice of "giving the public what it wants."

"Is the press all dressed up and no place to go?" she asked, after stating that we are inclined to smother ourselves under our mechanical equipment. "Are our ethical standards up to the level of mechanical perfection?" she queried in condemning the tabloids.

One of the most forceful addresses delivered during the week was that of Tom Wallace, chief of the editorial staff, Louisville Times, which is carried at length on another page of this issue.

Marc A. Rose, executive manager of the International News Service, in his address on "China and the Cables," discussed the criticism directed at press dispatches from China during the present trouble there.

He pointed out that the charge that American correspondents in the Orient are under the influence of the British is without foundation, since all of the American correspondents are Americans, American trained. British censorship, he said, has not interfered with a line of International News Service material sent from China.

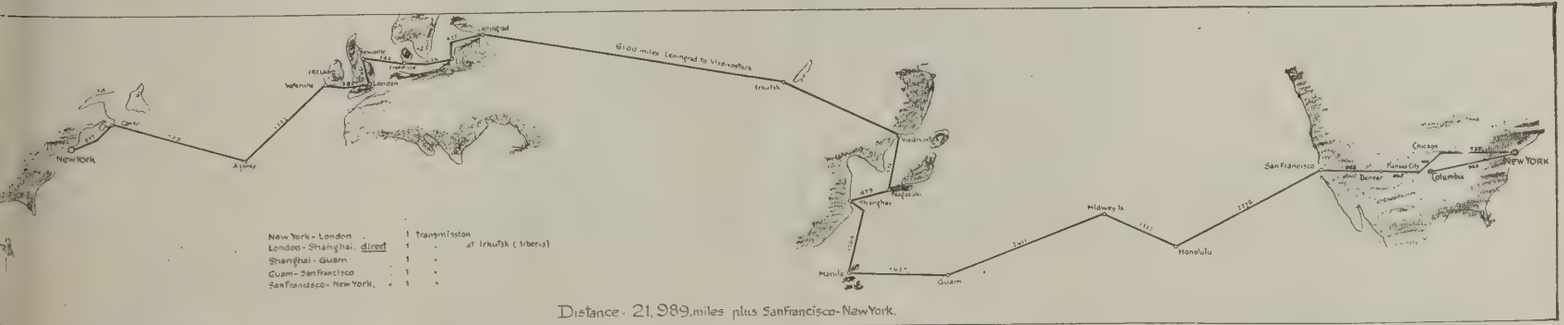
The charge that American news services were caught unprepared for the crisis in China and rushed hastily recruited men to the scene, was disposed of by Rose with the statement that all of the I. N. S. correspondents in China have been there for several years. The news associations sensed the coming crisis and have been training men in the Orient for it for years, he said.

Rose explained the process of gathering foreign news, cable costs and the constant struggle to cut down cable costs. One of the greatest needs today is for radio service from the Pacific coast to the Orient, he believes.

"Changes in the Syndicate Fields" was the subject of the address by John H. Millar, president of Associated Editors, Inc., Tuesday, in which he explained tendencies in the syndicate field.

Over-development, which will probably lead to merging, was given as the situation in the field today. "The syndicate is a new business. It is about the same age as the moving picture business," he said.

"This is a superstitious age and one of the popular superstitions of the day is that advertising will accomplish marvels, and that its force may be invoked only by some hidden process known only to the few."



This was the tenor of the talk by Robert W. Jones, associate professor of journalism at the University of Washington.

"Advertising is bottomed on factual reporting," he declared. "To advertise anything it is necessary to know the facts on which a sale would be made. Advertising copy cannot be effective unless it is based on knowledge of the thing advertised, coupled with a knowledge of the group to which the article is to be sold.

"Advertising copy has to be read, so it has to be bottomed on fact, has to be suited to the people who are to read it, has to talk straight to the point and has to keep at it steadily to reach the objective, sales."

Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, a reporter for the Chicago Tribune, spoke about her work, and her observations in the field of the woman reporter. "Among the fallacies regarding the feminine reporter," she said, "is the old fairy tale

(Continued on page 16)

Starting at Columbia, Mo., the United Press greetings to guests at Columbia, Mo., will circle the globe in what is hoped will be record-breaking time, picking up a new signature at each point where it is handled by a U. P representative

STURDEVANT NOW EDITS N. Y. TELEGRAM HALL NAMED BUSINESS MANAGER

Former Comes from Editorship of Youngstown Telegram Where Brunner Succeeds Him—Hall Recently with Denver Scripps-Howard Dailies

WILLIAM L. STURDEVANT and Harold Hall this week became editor and business manager, respectively, of the New York Evening Telegram, completing the metamorphosis of the former Munsey paper into a typical member of the Scripps-Howard group of dailies. Both new executives are Scripps-Howard trained in the middle west; both are under 40 years of age; and both are beginning their first New York experience as chief executives of the Telegram.

Harold Hall

Mr. Sturdevant comes to New York from the Youngstown (O.) Telegram, of which he has been editor since 1921, when it was first purchased by the Scripps-Howard interests.

Promotion of Mr. Sturdevant to New York caused a number of changes in Youngstown. Felix F. Brunner, managing editor, was made editor; Albert A. Reilly, associate editor, was promoted to the office of vice-president of the Telegram Company; Ned Brooks, city editor, became managing editor, and Fred McCluer, of the local staff, city editor.

The former Youngstown editor who has now entered the New York field has had 20 years of newspaper experience, beginning as country correspondent in Geneva, O., for the Ashtabula Beacon-Record. He was born 38 years ago in North Girard, Pa., where he attended school, later entering Allegheny College at Meadville, Pa. After his initiation into newspaper work at Geneva, Mr. Sturdevant later became editor of the Geneva Press Times.

His next step was to Warren, O., on the staff of the Warren Chronicle. In 1917, having attracted attention for his work at Warren, Sturdevant was given a place on the editorial staff of the Cleveland Press. He made rapid progress there as a reporter and in various editorial capacities, finally attaining the managing editorship, a position he held for a year and a half before his transfer to Youngstown.

Soon after he arrived in Youngstown he started, through the Telegram, a crusade against corrupt politics in the city. the town was wide-open.

Mr. Sturdevant borrowed some reporters from other Scripps-Howard papers. They were brought to Youngstown, but never came near the office of the Telegram. Instead they obtained employment at the mills and frequented the gambling joints. When they had gathered enough information, the Telegram began to publish daily smashing stories on conditions, eventually winning a fight by publicity against an evil that had been tolerated by Youngstown for many years.

The Cleveland Press, on which Mr. Sturdevant had most of his experience, is considered the Scripps-Howard training ground for editorial men. Under George B. Parker, now editorial director of the 26 dailies in the group, Mr. Sturdevant was grounded in the newspaper policy which has made the Press known among newspaper men everywhere as a great stunt paper.

Among big and amusing local beats in Cleveland in which Mr. Sturdevant played a hand was one concerning the secret marriage of Mayor Fitzgerald.

Now, Clevelanders generally considered Mr. Fitzgerald a bachelor, when one day the tip came into the Press office:

"Mr. Fitzgerald is married to a girl who lives in New York, and what is more they have a child."

That was all the Press had, and it was hard to believe. Mr. Sturdevant got the Mayor on the telephone. There was something very important he wanted to talk to him about, he said. He would see the Mayor immediately, coming over himself. It was too important to send a reporter.

Felix F. Brunner Albert A. Reilly

Once in the Mayor's office, Mr. Sturdevant banged right into the important matter.

"We have," he said, "the story of your marriage."

Mayor Fitzgerald started. The start was sufficient to convince the editor of the truth of the tip.

"Don't you think," he cajoled, "it would be better if you made a formal announcement of it, giving the affair the dignity it deserves, instead of having us run it as 'just a newspaper story?'"

"I think," the Mayor rejoined, "it would be better if you didn't print the story at all."

Mr. Sturdevant explained that the Press didn't entertain thoughts such as the one just expressed by the city's chief executive. News was news, and shouldn't be suppressed. However, he would be glad if Mayor Fitzgerald would come over to the Press office and talk over the story with Mr. Parker, editor-in-chief.

The Mayor acquiesced. Mr. Parker supported his managing editor, declaring that as long as they had the story, and it was true, he could see no reason why the Press should withhold it.

What was worrying the newspaper men all this time, however, was that having said they had the story they were now wondering how they could get the names of the Mayor's secret wife and their baby. Mr. Sturdevant from downstairs gave Mr. Parker's office a ring on the telephone.

Mr. Parker turned from the 'phone.

"The boys are going to press with that story now," he smiled at the Mayor. "They want to make sure of the spelling of Mrs. Fitzgerald's maiden name."

The Mayor spelled it out.

"And the baby?"

Again the Mayor complied.

TELEGRAM'S NEW CHIEF

W. L. Sturdevant

It was in time for the 1 o'clock edition. Still the Mayor argued. The edition went to press and was out in the street. The Mayor and Mr. Parker continued their argument. Other newspaper offices gasped at the Press' beat. They didn't dare lift it, however, without confirmation. Where was the Mayor?

At 3 o'clock, too late for any serious damage from the opposition, the Mayor and Mr. Parker walked smilingly together from the latter's office. It was best, they had agreed, that the story be told. It had been.

Mr. Hall, the new business manager of the Telegram, has had as long a newspaper training as his editorial partner, but has not been as many years with the Scripps-Howard organization. He was born in Maine, where his father had been a music instructor and his mother, Rosa Beall, a newspaper woman on the staff of the Lewiston Journal.

When Mr. Hall was still a young boy the family moved to Missouri, and the present business manager of the New York daily, had his first newspaper experience on the St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press as a reporter. After a few months he transferred to the St. Joseph Gazette, then owned by C. D. Morris and G. H. Luke. Mr. Hall became managing editor of the Gazette when he was 17 years old.

Mr. Luke became interested in this newspaper prodigy and personally instructed him in newspaper work. When Mr. Luke sold out his interest in the Gazette, Mr. Hall therefore left with him. For a while Mr. Luke, with Mr. Hall as assistant, engaged as a newspaper efficiency counsel, becoming associated with a number of papers in an advisory capacity in this way. Finally he accepted a position as general manager of the W. D. Boyce Company in Chicago, and Hall came with him and was placed in charge of circulation work for the weekly publications issued by this firm, including the Saturday Blade and the Chicago Ledger. This was in 1915.

About 10 years ago Mr. Luke and Mr. Boyce purchased the Indianapolis Sun, which later became the Times. Mr. Hall was vice-president of the W. D. Boyce Company at the time, but also was impressed to assist in the management of the Indianapolis daily. Eventually Mr. Hall left Chicago and became resident-manager of the Indianapolis Times. In the fall of 1922, the Times was purchased by the Scripps-Howard newspapers.

Shortly afterward Mr. Hall resigned from the W. D. Boyce Company to become assistant to W. G. Chandler, president of the Central Group of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. Two years ago he was made president of the Newspaper Supply Company, a title he retains. He came to New York from Denver, where he was business manager of the Rocky Mountain News.

BOSTON POST IS SUED B ATLANTIC MONTHLY

Violation of Copyright Charged Complaint Based on Premature Release of Gov. Smith's Letter

Legal action was instituted by the A lantic Monthly Company of Bost against the Boston Post when a bill complaint was filed in United States D trict court, Boston, Saturday, May seeking damages for the premature pu lication in that newspaper of Govern Alfred Smith's reply to Charles C. Ma shall of New York concerning the sta of a Roman Catholic as President of t United States.

The allegations accuse the Boston Po of sending one of its most trusted r porters to Concord, N. H., to the pla of the Rumford Press, where the artic which, it alleged, was copyrighted, w printed, and obtaining from a nig watchman at the plant two copies fro the bindery, that were put aside becau of alleged defects. It is further alleg the newspaper knew the article was cop righted and that Gov. Smith transferr all rights in the article, entitled "Catho and Patriot," to the Atlantic Monthly.

The publishers of the magazine, a cording to the bill, on April 9 sent publishers all over the country, includi the defendant, a notice regarding the pr posed printing of the Smith article the May issue of the magazine whi was to be circulated April 25, and call attention to the fact that arrangemen had been made to release the artic simultaneously with the May issue of th Atlantic Monthly. The notice serve warning on all publishers that the own ers of the magazine intended strictly t enforce the copyright law. A reporte of the Boston Post in an interview wit an official of the magazine, April 11, wa given additional warning against an in fringement of the copyright, it is alleged

An official of the Boston Post whe asked by a representative of Editor & Publisher for a statement regarding th suit, said that an editorial covering th situation already had been published som time ago and that there was no furthe statement to make at this time.

Officials of the Atlantic Monthly Com pany referred Editor & Publisher t Romney Spring, of Boston, the company' attorney, for information concerning th case.

Spring said that the article was copy righted April 8, eight days before th article appeared in the Post.

The article upon which the suit of th Atlantic Monthly is based, was printed by the Post, Saturday morning, April 16, on page one, under a New York dateline. It carried a five-column head reading "Gov. Smith Defines Faith and Politics."

Attorney Spring does not expect the case to come up for trial before next October.

PROVIDENCE PAPER SUED

Atlantic Monthly Starts Another Action Based on Gov. Smith Article

Providence, R. I., May 12.—The Atlantic Monthly Company is suing the Providence (R. I.) News for premature publication of the Gov. Smith reply to Charles C. Marshall. The case will be handled for the plaintiffs by a Rhode Island firm of lawyers, according to Romney Spring, of Thompson, Spring & Mears, Boston attorneys. The extent of the damages against the News will be based on circulation as is the suit against the Boston Post.

Damages will also be asked from the New Bedford (Mass.) Times, the New York American, New York News and Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

BECOMES SEMI-WEEKLY

The Rosenberg (Tex.) Fort Bend Reporter has changed from a weekly to a semi-weekly.

ADVERTISERS BLAMED FOR "HIGH SPACE COST"

Publishers Have Attained Mass Circulation at Demand of National Firms A. B. C. Director Tells Association of Advertisers at Detroit Meeting

DETROIT, May 11.—They talked much about daily newspapers at the 7th anniversary convention of the Association of National Advertisers, held here this week. It was a semi-annual meeting unmarked by elections or the declarations of policy that are usual at the fall sessions, but there were plenty of speeches and discussions and the newspaper thread ran through most of them. C. C. Harn, now managing director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations and one of the founders and a past president of the A. N. A., told the 200 members attending the May 10 session that they should call upon publishers to define the elements of their circulation and to sell these elements rather than mere quantity of circulation.

"We have been passing through a dissipating era of indiscriminate buying," said Mr. Harn. "Circulations of newspapers and magazines have been increased with no attendant increase in value, but with decided increases in the cost of advertising. You advertisers have but yourselves to blame. Publishers do not want to perpetuate this uneconomic thing, but you force them to do it when they sell that you select your lists of media solely on the basis of circulation supremacy. It is not at all uncommon for a newspaper of 25,000 circulation to go on an advertiser's list for the lone reason that it has 300 or 400 more circulation than its rival, without any study of the comparative merits of the papers for the particular campaign.

"Study your A B C statements, make the publishers sell you the elements of their circulations, and don't be afraid to buy the smaller circulation, if the indications are that it has the larger proportion of the right kind of readers. To give for larger and larger gross circulation is to load yourself up with a burden of your own creation. It is a big factor in the load of increasing costs of which you are loudly complaining."

The Westinghouse newspaper campaign was outlined at length by J. C. McQuiston, advertising manager of the company and also a former president of the Association.

"Advertising in the industry with which I am identified—the manufacture of everything electrical—in a forty-year period of evolution has passed through three stages. These stages may be termed the technical, general magazine, and newspaper, the last of these three representing the period in which we are now.

"Having built up our distribution and sales organization through years of general magazine advertising, it was believed that the time had come to reach our market more intensively and more intimately service the distribution. In order to do so, after research we decided to utilize the newspaper columns and on April 1 of this year began our newspaper advertising plan.

"Since the newspaper part of our 1927 advertising campaign has been stressed I make haste to say that we will continue to use the technical and trade magazines, for these are basic to our industry. We will also use direct mail effort, in fact, more so than ever before in our history. Our campaign for this year is a co-ordination of these three forms of media, using more than 300 newspapers to carry the popular appeal of the Westinghouse company and its products to the general public.

"Our newspaper advertising not only promotes the sale of Westinghouse products, but it is also of great value to the local electric light, power and transportation companies.

"I wish to emphasize that the outstanding features of our all-newspaper plan to reach the general public are flexibility and intimacy.

"By flexibility I have in mind the opportunity afforded to positively regulate the advertising to fit the sales needs in the different territories. For example: fans being a seasonal article, the advertising in the different districts must be released when the weather is hot enough to sell fans. We all know that heat conditions are varying throughout the country and only by the use of newspapers can your advertising be regulated to fit into these conditions.

"Another illustration might be that of street lighting. It is useless to advertise all over the United States, street lighting, particularly when by using newspapers you can 'spotlight' your advertising where street lighting is a possibility and the taxpayers able to support by taxation the expenses necessary to bring about this very much desired improvement.

"Another illustration—even though our plans were all set in the southern cities where floods are now playing havoc, we were able to postpone the release of this advertising knowing that the people in that section are not now thinking of purchasing electrical conveniences, but rather of real necessities. Later on, we will run this advertising, but it will be when, in our opinion, the public is ready to buy the articles we advertise.

"By intimacy I mean having the name Westinghouse recognized within communities. It is one thing to know a name in a general way and it is another thing to have that name regarded as having real local significance. Westinghouse products in so many direct and indirect ways affect everybody in a community that it is very much to be desired that our identification in the city will be known to the citizens of the community. It is certainly the objective of advertising to make known the thing we desire to sell and at the same time to indicate where that article can be furnished and serviced locally. The newspaper plan makes it possible to accomplish both these things.

"It will be seen, therefore, that this plan of ours with its full page spread, to carry the institutional and public relations copy interspersed with direct product copy all carrying addresses and local identifications, accomplishes the much to be desired objective in our case, at least, that of nationalizing and localizing at the same time.

Establishment of a selling policy by national advertisers that will eliminate for department stores future dangers growing out of lack of control of brands and merchandise thus involved and treatment of department store distribution as a unique problem for firms engaged in selling nationally advertised products were advocated by Ralph L. Yonker, advertising manager of the J. L. Hudson Company, Detroit.

He emphasized that, from the standpoint of the department store, the basic difference between privately branded and nationally branded merchandise is in the matter of control. He said that the need for department stores to adhere to this standpoint had been stressed from a number of unfortunate experiences with national advertised merchandise.

He said this had been accomplished successfully in a number of instances by headlining of the stores' own brands. He pointed out that during the past month one large department store used in its headlines the names of 72 of its own brands as against 58 manufacturers' brands.

A "buying power index" for the various trading areas of the country, as a basis for market analysis, was urged by T. O. Grissell of the George Batten Company, advertising agency, in pointing out that only by such means could an advertiser determine the amount of money he was justified in spending in a given area. Trading areas, he showed, vary widely, and there can be no such thing as a national sales operating statement. The problem, to be specific, must be concerned with units. In the Detroit area, for example, he found that about three-fifths of the buying power was located in the city itself and the rest scattered throughout surrounding counties.

He presented graphs to show that, although actual sales have increased in most areas in the past four years, the net return per sale has been lower on account of higher selling costs.

"Stalking the prospect"—the process of attempting to browbeat the prospect into buying—was deplored by Professor John L. Brumm of the University of Michigan at the Tuesday afternoon's session.

"On the whole," said he, "it may be doubted whether an advertisement ever sold anything to anybody. It may supply one or more steps, but in the last analysis the prospect sells to himself, and all the advertisement can do is to make him more vividly conscious of his desire and help him to rationalize himself to its attainment."

Lee H. Bristol of Bristol Myers Company, New York, outlined the functions of "magazines as a primary medium." He showed that magazines offer the opportunity for "editorializing" advertisements. It is necessary, he thought, that an "arbitrary distinction" be made as to the primary medium in any advertising campaign.

The growing power of radio as a medium of advertising was discussed by Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company. Edward T. Hall, another former president of the association, who also discussed newspapers, said in part:

"A newspaper that closes its eyes to the real interest of national advertisers cannot continue to enjoy the support of keen buyers. The newspaper or periodical that realizes it is a partner with the buyer in economically developing business in a given territory is finding an eagerness on the part of the national advertiser to spend money where the channels are open.

"A new spirit of co-operation between the buyer and the newspaper has taken hold of all advertising interests. Matters that a few years ago could not be discussed between them are now frankly analyzed. One of these discussions has been the morning and evening newspaper combinations that are forced on national advertisers, though not on local firms.

"The results of these discussions have already placed several newspapers on a more sound basis and have eliminated dangerous practices. This has encouraged expenditures in these newspapers that recognize the space buyers' viewpoint and so follow farsighted policies."

Herbert Metz of the Graybar Electric Company of New Jersey was elected to the board of directors to succeed C. F. Beatty of the New Jersey Zinc Company.

The annual meeting will be held in New York the week of October 24.

MRS. PARSONS AND DAUGHTER SAIL

Geoffrey Parsons, chief editorial writer for the New York Herald Tribune, bidding bon voyage to Mrs. Parsons and their daughter Miss Mary Parsons, who sailed this week for a trip abroad

DINNER BELL RINGS!

Testimonial for Beazell and Lynch at N. Y. Newspaper Club May 19

A testimonial dinner will be given next Thursday night, May 19, by the New York Newspaper Club to the newly elected president, Dennis Tilden Lynch, of the New York Herald Tribune, and the retiring president William T. Beazell, assistant managing editor of the New York World, at the club house, 133 West 41st street.

The speakers and the orchestra music as well as the "stunts" of other artists are to be broadcast through WJZ for an hour and a half.

Tickets are $3.00 each.

The dinner committee is: Robert E. Livingston, chairman; Richard W. Lawrence, Leslie Allen, Charles S. Salomon, Harry Kingsbury, William J. Guard and Roy Daniels.

NEW A. N. P. A. MEMBER

The New York City Nowy Swiat has been elected to membership in the American Newspaper Publishers Association, L. B. Palmer, general manager, announced this week.

McGIVERAN PROMOTED

J. T. McGiveran, Jr., for seven years a salesman in the national department of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, has recently been appointed head of that department.

"Shoot to kill" is a new order given Chicago police. What were their former instructions, "Aim to please"?—Brooklyn Eagle.

E. H. MACKLIN ELECTED PRESIDENT OF CANADIAN DAILIES AT TORONTO

Puzzle Contest Advertising and Local-National Differential Chief Topics—Ontario Provincial Papers Meet

E. H. MACKLIN, Winnipeg Free Press, was elected president of the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association at the annual meeting held May 5, in Toronto. He succeeds Hon. Frank Carrel, Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph. The annual meeting of the daily publishers followed the annual convention of the Canadian Press, which was reported in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Other officers elected were Vice-President, W. B. Preston, Brantford Expositor; treasurer, N. T. Bowman, Toronto Telegram, and past-president, Hon. Frank Carrel, Chronicle-Telegraph, Quebec City.

A board of directors consisting of 18 members was also elected. Those chosen are, A. W. Robb, Herald and Mail, Halifax; T. F. Drummie, Telegraph-Journal and Times-Globe, Saint John, N. B.; Hon. Frank Carrel, Chronicle-Telegraph, Quebec, P. Q.; Henri Gagnon, Le Soliel, Quebec; Georges Pelletier, Le Devoir, Montreal; James R. Henderson, Gazette, Montreal; W. G. Jaffray, Globe, Toronto; H. B. Burgoyne, Standard, St. Catharines, Ont.; W. B. Preston, Expositor, Brantford, Ont.; J. E. Atkinson, Star, Toronto; George E. Scroggie, Mail and Empire, Toronto; E. H. Macklin, Manitoba Free Press, Winnipeg; Burford Hooke, Leader and Post, Regina, Sask.; Senator W. A. Buchanan, Herald, Lethbridge, Alta.; R. J. Cromie, Sun, Vancouver; John M. Imrie, Journal, Edmonton; W. J. Motz, News-Record, Kitchener; H. B. Muir, Whig-Standard, Kingston, Ont.

Reports presented showed that the dailies' organization is in sound condition. Owing to amalgamations three members were lost during the year but three were added, the Vancouver Star, Le Progres du Saguenay, Chicoutimi, and the Montreal Jewish Eagle. The association has a membership of 80.

Apart from the presentation of reports and the election of officers, interest centered in the discussion of several topics placed by members on the agenda. The attitude of publishers towards puzzle contest advertising came in for considerable attention. The point stressed was that this type of advertising often carried with it the danger of disturbing faith in advertising generally, especially among children. Quite a number of publishers stated that they declined to carry it. Others said that they insisted on having all conditions set out fully in the copy before accepting it. The consensus was that this kind of advertising should be very carefully censored and if found at all questionable not carried.

Another question discussed was whether contracts covering the advertising of associated or subsidiary companies should be classed as blanket contracts. It was practically the unanimous opinion of the meeting that the tendency to offer blanket contracts should be resisted as strongly as possible and that they should be refused unless there was sufficient proof that the parent company was actually and in fact the holder of the stock of the subsidiary.

The old question of the differential between local or retail and foreign or national advertising came up again. It was found that most papers had a well-defined line between the two, though cases arose from time to time that were hard to settle. It was felt that it was better to retain some latitude in such cases than cover the situation by definition. Free publicity for professional sports was also discussed, the feeling being that this material should be more carefully scrutinized.

Social features included a luncheon tendered to the members by the retiring president, Hon. Frank Carrel. There were no speeches but the company were amused by the holding of a story-telling contest, in which Henri Gagnon, Quebec Le Soleil, won first prize and J. H. Woods, Calgary Herald, second prize. Mr. Carrel was later thanked by resolution for his hospitality.

The annual dinner took place in the evening.

At a meeting on the afternoon of May 4 of the Ontario Provincial Dailies Association, J. H. Burnet, Charlottetown (P. E. I.) Guardian, presented a proposition for organizing the smaller dailies throughout Canada into an association, within the C. D. N. A., but one which would look after questions on which there might be differences of opinion between the small and large dailies, such as postal matters, etc.

The proposal was fully discussed but some doubt was felt as to its efficacy in view of the great distances separating the members. It was felt that papers in the Maritime Provinces might first organize and then deal with the other groups through correspondence. There would also be the opportunity to come together at the C. D. N. A. gathering each year.

WORCESTER DAILY SUED

Insurance Man Claims Circulation Manager's Letter Libelled Him

Trial started May 10, in the Worcester County Superior Court before Judge Charles H. Donahue and a jury in the suit for $15,000 against the Worcester Telegram Publishing Company and another suit for $10,000 against Edward F. Dolhenty, circulation manager of the Telegram-Gazette.

The plaintiff is Frederick L. S. Coates of Worcester, who charges libel in both actions. He claims that on Feb. 17, 1923, he was in the employ of the North American Accident Insurance Company and the United States National Adjustment Company, and that on that date Mr. Dolhenty wrote a letter to his employers making inquiries about certain insurance policy deliveries and money collections which libeled him. The policies were in connection with subscription promotion.

NEW BRITISH PLANT

The London Daily Mirror having moved from its premises in Bouverie street (a turning off Fleet street) which is leased from the News of the World, the Sunday paper owned by Lord Riddell, the building and others nearby are to be pulled down and on the site will be erected new premises for the News of the World. The total floor area of the new building will be nearly five acres, over an acre being devoted to the machine halls.

COMPLETING NEW MILL AT KAPUSKASING

Work Going Forward Rapidly on Joint Enterprise of New York Times and Kimberly-Clark Company

A year of activity at Kapuskasing, Ontario, finds the new paper mill and power development in which the New York Times and the Kimberly-Clark Company are jointly interested progressing according to the schedule originally planned.

Along the fifty-mile railroad connecting the mill with the power site at Smoky Falls the new transmission lines are now erected and power is being sent from Kapuskasing to assist in the power house construction in the opposite direction from the way in which it will flow when work is completed.

At Smoky Falls itself the river has been diverted from its westerly channel and a large body of men are engaged in the construction of the permanent dam and power house.

With the frost just leaving the ground, active digging is recommencing at Kapuskasing and foundations for the buildings which will ultimately house the four paper machines, whose contemplated production is 550 tons daily, are being prepared.

The entire stock capitalization of the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company is owned by the Kimberly Clark Company and the New York Times Company. First mortgage 5½ per cent. serial gold bonds were recently sold at par.

SAIL FOR HONEYMOON ABROAD

Captain and Mrs. W. H. Wells photographed on the S.S. DeGrasse before sailing for abroad on a honeymoon trip. Mrs. Wells is the former Jane Dixon, feature writer for the New York Evening Telegram

A. P. TO START PHO SERVICE AUG. 1

Will Begin Furnishing News Pictur 100 Members Contemplating E tension of Co-Operative Idea to Field of Photography

The Associated Press will start op ing a news picture service on Au N. A. Huse, member of the exec staff who is in charge of organizing new enterprise, informed EDITOR & LISHER this week. It will be called Associated Press News Photo Servi

The beginning of the service wi modest, Mr. Huse said. It will nc supported by the entire membershi first, but he expects that more than members will be subscribers when it s this August.

The bulk of the pictures, accordin Mr. Huse, will be obtained from me papers and correspondents, but to in a steady supply a contract has been si with Paramount for still enlargement all Paramount Newsreel pictures.

"We are starting a year's experim Mr. Huse said. "Enough members agreed to participate to enable us to b operations Aug. 1.

"We will have no staff of news pho raphers in New York or elsewhere. plan to obtain our photographs from m ber newspapers wherever possible. T has been no point raised in regard whether or not pictures come under A. P. by-law safeguarding the exclus ness of the report and requiring mem to furnish news it gathers to the A We expect, however, cordial co-opera from a great many members. To in a steady supply we have arranged to still enlargements of all Paramo Newsreel pictures, which, of course, give us a world-wide coverage. Th will be at least 40 prints a week from one source alone.

"We expect to be able to effect v economies by the co-operative in change of pictures just as we have in case of telegraphic news. We believe t co-operative effort in the field of n pictures is as sound as in the field of printed word."

Mr. Huse said the plan for the n picture service had been under conside tion for about three months. It was p sented to the board of directors by K Cooper, general manager, in response a demand from the membership, and ceived their approval.

Mr. Huse was guarded regarding fut plans. He said, however, that teleph would probably be used in emergenc He also pointed out that the gathering prints for the use of members with graving plants would also enable the As ciated Press to add more pictures to mat service for the smaller newspape

PARSONS IN AGENCY FIELD

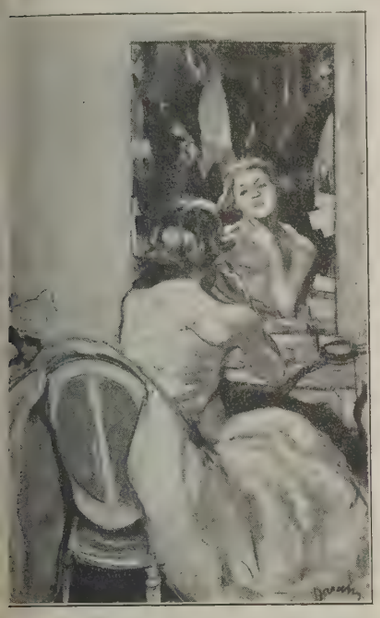
E. W. Parsons, until recently adv tising manager of the Chicago Tribu has established his headquarters in C cago with the Capehart-Carey Corp., vertising agency, of which he is vi president and western manager, w plans to conduct a general advertis agency business in Chicago. His offi are at 64 West Randolph street. Celes M. Horton, who has been associated w Mr. Parsons on the Tribune, resign to go with him.

PRIZES FOR KENTUCKY PAPER

Prizes for the best newspapers in Ke tucky will be awarded at the annual m summer meeting of the Kentucky Pr Association to be held at Mayfield, K June 23-25. Malcolm Bailey, Louisv Courier-Journal, is association preside Prof. Enoch Grehan, University of Ke tucky School of Journalism, is chairm of the committee of awards.

PLANNING PRINTING BUILDING

Plans have been filed with the Ma hattan Bureau of Buildings for a 13-sto $450,000 newspaper printing and man facturing building at 343 to 349 We 52nd street, New York.



AGENCIES SPENDING HUGE SUMS FOR ART

As High As $15,000 Paid for Paintings on View at Sixth Annual Advertising Art Exhibit in New York —Critic Finds Much of Work Unrelated to Selling

By GUY GAYLER CLARK

Art Director of Street & Finney, Inc.

A SWINGING stride forward has been taken by the "Class A" division of advertising art, it is shown at the sixth annual art exhibit of the Art Directors Club of New York. In the exhibit, which will continue at the Art Center until May 31, an observer sees a continuation of progress in the right direction, with the possible reservation that the acknowledged champions of advertising art are more like tennis than golf champions, in that they stay put from year to year.

A medal winner among the paintings, by Drian, Paris artist. It was used in an advertisement for Woodbury's Facial Soap.

The primary purpose of this exhibit, organized yearly by the art directors of New York's general advertising agencies, is, it must be understood, to foster the use of more æsthetic paintings and drawings in advertising. Selections are made with a view to emphasizing the technical excellence of a work, its art and craftsmanship, entirely apart from its so-called selling or advertising value. There are some, of course, who quarrel with such a purpose. Be that as it may, the paintings, sketches, designs and photographs so chosen are well chosen.

Pierce Johnson, art director of the J. Walter Thompson Company, New York, who was president of the art directors club last year, this week expressed his belief to me that the show "ought to be an improvement on its predecessors and probably is." He offered no definite reason for his qualifying verb, but continued by saying that if there was any improvement in the exhibit it was "due to a quality of 'aliveness' and vigor which impresses those who give it even a quick inspection."

"Both in the large hall devoted to oil paintings," Mr. Johnson continued, "and in the adjoining galleries, the exhibits seem to indicate more original thinking on the part of artist and art director and what might be termed a conservative daring on the part of agency and advertiser.

"One is not conscious of any improvement of technique, but rather of a subordination of technique to idea."

What impressed me most in the exhibit was how in the main the works selected for hanging seemed so unrelated to advertising, when viewed apart from the finished advertising copy, which, in each case, was hung directly beneath the work on exhibition. Of course, it must be admitted that the selection of some 300 works from a total of 3,000 submitted was varied. From the noteworthy contribution of the great Spanish master, I. Zuloaga, the portrait of Paderewsky done for Steinway & Sons, to a simple line drawing of a shoe, the collection of advertising art this year extended through a wide gamut of interest and activity.

Even so, the exhibit doesn't pretend to show all the good advertising art created during 1926. But it does show that the agencies are spending more money for art than ever before. The monetary value on the exhibits this year range from a few hundred dollars to as high as $15,000 for one painting.

Whether this is sound, economic advertising business or not is a matter of opinion.

In visiting the Art Center this week for the readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, I turned naturally first to the gallery on which were shown the illustrations and sketches in black and white, advertising art obviously of most interest to newspapers.

The medal winner in this section was Rockwell Kent, with a pen and ink drawing for Marcus & Co., New York jewelers, used in an advertisement placed by N. W. Ayer & Son. The title of the drawing is "Inspiration." Mr. Kent has brought a noble mood of poetry to these advertising pages. His drawings have much the same qualities of mystery and symbolism that we find in the works of the great Englishman, William Blake.

C. W. Flammer, associate art director of N. W. Ayer & Son, who with Paul Froelich, art director, selected the Kent drawing to do the advertising job assigned to it, has the following to say in regard to his selection:

"In an advertisement featuring jewelry there are several things to be taken into consideration from the artist's standpoint. The type of illustration in an advertisement of this kind should be one with a great deal of dignity and perhaps conventionality. I always think of jewels in terms of their appearance in boxes at the opera, at theaters, dinner parties and such. I believe a drawing of this kind combines dignity and artistry.

"This type of drawing also harmonizes perfectly with the very fine typesetting we have planned for this page and gives it color."

The black and white exhibit contains many clever outline drawings, offering fool-proof reproduction in newspaper space at no sacrifice to charm, and proving once again that a work of art need not necessarily be a work of labor. One of the most prolific of this school of advertising artists is Charles Baskerville, who draws many of the fine illustrations for the Southern Cotton Oil Company's advertisements placed by Calkins & Holden, Inc. The light outline in an ocean of white, so popular and effective in current newspaper space, reminds us once more that "Gentlemen prefer blondes."

James Preston's prize-winning painting "The White Swan Hotel" executed for a Procter & Gamble advertisement

For newspapers again William Oberhardt, the artist, has created a unique technique, rich in color and texture and most susceptible of perfect reproduction in line or halftone plates on newspaper stock. He is represented by a drawing for P. Lorillard Company, placed by Lennen & Mitchell, Inc., and by another for G. W. Van Slyke & Horton, an Erickson Company account.

A medal winner among paintings and drawings in color is the pastel by Etienne Drian for the Andrew Jergens Company, makers of Woodbury's Facial Soap, whose advertising is directed by the J. Walter Thompson Company. This Paris artist has established his reputation not only as a brilliant draughtsman but as a designer whose motifs affect the dress and fashions of the hour. He is known to a large section of the New York public for his window screens done for Lord & Taylor. His pastel medal winner at the advertising art exhibit, which pictures an actress at her make-up table, is remarkable chiefly for its vitality and spontaneity. Mr. Johnson, art director of J. Walter Thompson, has emphasized to me that Drian was allowed some latitude in illustrating the subject of the advertisement.

The award for the best still life represented in the collection went to Rene Clarke, himself an art director as well as artist for Calkins & Holden, Inc. The race for supremacy in this particular classification might be keener but for Mr. Clarke's consistent leadership, which makes of it a stately procession. The fact that it happens to feature Ketchup for the H. J. Heinz Company is but one of the 57 reasons why this drawing boasts a medal.

The Blackman Company may well be proud of the showing of its artists, with a total of 26 exhibits out of the entire 300, and one of the 26 a medal winner. I asked George L. Welp, the art director of the Blackman Company, to comment on the prize-winning painting, which is reproduced with this story, and he replied by simply offering his congratulations to James Preston, the artist, who painted the scene at the White Swan Hotel for the Procter & Gamble Company.

"All the credit belongs to Mr. Preston," Mr. Welp declared.

The small group of exhibitors in the division of advertising photography seems to be inadequate as a comprehensive review of the amazing progress in the technique of this medium in recent years. American photographers, both amateur and professional, lead the world and more of our great masters, whose work has been successfully reproduced in the editorial and advertising columns of our magazines and newspapers, should have been represented.

The medal in this class went to Grancel Fitz, for a picture of glassware for the Fostoria Glass Company, an N. W. Ayer & Co. account.

Mr. Flammer, quoted before in connection with another award won by the same

(Continued on page 42)

The black and white medal winner by Rockwell Kent, designed to give dignity and conventionality to jewelry copy for Marcus & Co., New York

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT DEMANDS CONTROL OF MISSISSIPPI FLOOD BY NATION

Publicist and Civic Leaders Applaud Call to End Regional Handling and Prevent Periodic Disasters to Great Valley

AN editorial suggestion made by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat in its issue of May 5 that a National Flood Commission be appointed by President Coolidge, composed of engineers and experts of high character, to make an exhaustive study of flood control and navigation and to report a comprehensive program to Congress in December, brought forth hundreds of recommendations and expressions of approval.

Publishers, members of Congress, United States Senators, Governors, heads of civic organizations and others responded to the telegrams sent by the Globe-Democrat, eliciting expressions of opinion.

An immediate extra session of Congress was favored by Congressmen and United States Senators in the Southern states, where more than 200,000 have been rendered homeless by the greatest flood in the history of the Mississippi Valley.

The editorial, which created so much comment, declared in part:

The States watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries, and especially the Southern States, are suffering from the most calamitous flood in the history of the country. The floods of this great river have brought disaster many times in the past, and for years the need of flood prevention has been impressed upon people occasionally by such events. But the impress has always been regional rather than national, and even within the region of impress it has usually been but momentary. Congress has given some attention to the matter and from time to time has made appropriations for flood protection. Hundreds of miles of levees have been constructed by the Federal Government, and by the states subject to overflow, and for more than forty years the Mississippi River Commission has labored intelligently and diligently, though always hampered by lack of adequate funds. Three years ago Congress provided for an expenditure of $10,000,000 a year for six years for levee construction, the most generous and the most sensible provision it has ever made for this purpose.

But the government has never yet taken hold of the problem as a great national obligation, which it is, nor as an enterprise demanding large and comprehensive study and planning. Now is the time to recognize that obligation, and to lay out a program of construction of such proportions as to meet the full requirements of the future, with sufficient money to make its completion certain at no distant time. We say "Now is the time," because the present calamity has brought the need before the whole country as never before, and the whole nation is giving sympathetic thought to the problem. The mind of the country is thereby prepared for the consideration of large proposals that could have little support but for the tremendous object lession that is now before all eyes.

Now is the time to set to work at this colossal tack, with the determination to carry it through to completion. And to this end we think the President should at once appoint a National Flood Commission, composed of engineers and other necessary experts of the highest ability, men who would command the confidence of the nation, to study the problem and to have a comprehensive program of action ready to submit to Congress when it meets in December. At the moment there is great confusion of opinion as to what ought to be done. That confusion will exist when Congress meets, and it will be difficult for it, so charged with other duties, itself to devise a plan of the requisite largeness and scientifically sound, without the help that such an expert inquiry and proposal would bring to it. Such a plan from such an authority and for such a purpose would concentrate the attention and interest of the nation upon something definite: it would have the support of the people, and we believe, the support of Congress itself.

Almost without exception the view expressed by those who commented that control of navigable streams is a national obligation, one which should not be left to local initiative and supervision. Many expressed appreciation of the Globe-Democrat's suggestion. Friday's issue of that paper contained about 18 columns of indorsement of the program.

PORTLAND DAILY TO MARK 25TH YEAR

Diamond Studded Service Buttons to Be Awarded Veteran Staff Members of Oregon Journal at Banquet July 25

Ninety-five employes of the Portland (Ore.) Journal are to be honored on July 25, when the Journal's "family" will have a great party, commemorating the 25th anniversary of the Portland newspaper under Charles Samuel Jackson, late publisher, and his son, Philip L. Jackson, present publisher. The actual beginning of the 26th year falls on July 21, but, because of the vacation season, the party will be delayed until the following Monday evening.

On the night of the party, six of the 96 employes will be called forward to receive service buttons with three diamonds each. Hyman H. Cohen, Thomas James, M. A. Jones, Felix R. Mitchell, W. H. Wells and Z. M. Young have served the Jacksons, father and son, for the full 25 years.

Twenty-year pins, each with two diamonds, will go to 32 employes, as follows: C. V. Becksted, A. K. Bishop, F. W. Bowen, J. A. Bowen, L. R. Buzan, P. A. Campbell, N. L. Casaday, A. W. Cauthorn, E. Chalman, Mrs. D. F. Dryden, W. W. Duckworth, R. Gittings, W. H. Graham, Clyde Gregoire, R. W. Hagood, H. S. Harcourt, Will F. Hessian, B. Frank Irvine, B. S. Jones, H. A. King, E. E. Oliver, E. J. Putnam, David H. Smith, J. C. Smith, Jennings F. Sutor, J. L. Wallin, R. B. White, E. E. Wickham, George E. Willard, C. F. Yezerski, J. C. Yezerski and Walter Fink.

Almost as numerous are the 15-year employes, who will receive pins with one diamond each, the 30 named being: Art Anderson, George Bertz, Florence Bostwick, W. E. Brown, H. E. Carpenter, Marshall N. Dana, F. W. Gardner, F. H. Green, B. F. Hecox, W. H. Hooker, Harold E. Hunt, Mrs. B. F. Irvine, J. A. King, Fred Lockley, Frank C. Loomis, J. E. McCall, Bert Rue, F. C. Simmons, Claude Simpson, N. L. Starkel, Donald J. Sterling, G. E. Story, W. H. Thomas, J. L. Tickner, T. C. Warner, Ralph Watson, E. D. Weaver, E. R. Wickham, W. O. Krause and Fred W. Bell.

A gold button will be the mark of distinction for the 10-year employes, the 27 being: Harry Atkins, Gordon Brown, W. F. Cornwall, A. J. Doyle, John Eudey, George E. Haeflinger, Charles T. Hoge, Philip L. Jackson, Robert C. Johnson, C. O. H. Linde, Floyd L. Loomis, Winnie McLaren, O. C. Merrick, W. C. Murphy, J. E. Myers, LeRoy Norr, Louis F. Otto, Ernest W. Peterson, J. Proctor, Louis Ragone, Carl Smith, Kennedy D. Smith, Julia Hobday, Fred H. McNeil, Lloyd Holmes, Guy McCormick and Mike Ritter.

The committee in charge of the party is headed by Louis F. Otto, with Ernest W. Peterson as assistant chairman. Plans call for a banquet at which more than 800 employes of the Journal and invited guests will be seated.

MERGER IN MARIETTA

Times Owners Buy and Consolidate Register in Afternoon Field

MARIETTA, Ohio, May 10.—A consolidation of the Times and the Register, Marietta's afternoon dailies, to take effect on May 16 was announced today following the sale by B. B. Putnam and H. G. Chamberlain of the Register to Will P. McKinney and Frank B. McKinney, owners of the Times. After that date Marietta and Washington county will have only one daily newspaper for the first time in more than 30 years.

The Register, which is the oldest local daily, was founded in 1894 and the Times in 1898. Both papers had published weekly editions for many years previous to that time.

The Times, which will be the surviving paper, has been in the McKinney family for 37 years. Ben J. McKinney bought the weekly in 1890. He founded the daily in 1898 and published it until 1908, when he sold the paper to his two sons and retired from the publishing business. At that time the city had three afternoon dailies and an independent Sunday paper. The Times bought the Sunday Morning Observer and has since continued publication as the Sunday Times. In 1920 it purchased and absorbed the Marietta Journal and reduced the number of newspapers to two.

Chamberlain and Putnam, who retire from the publishing business with the sale of the Register today, bought the paper three and a half years ago.

The Times is represented in the national advertising field by Robert E. Ward, Inc. It is a member of the Ohio Select List of Daily Newspapers.

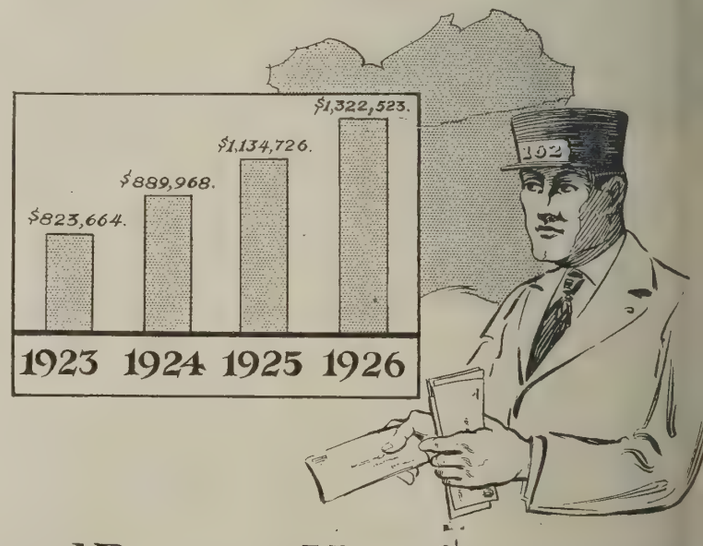
NEW PRESS GROUP FORMED

Newspapermen in the San Antonio section, guests of the Chamber of Commerce and Fiesta Association at a dinner in San Antonio, April 23, organized the South Texas Press Association, electing as president H. P. Hornby, Uvalde Leader-News. Ray Carney, Robstown Record, was named vice-president; Fred Herndon and Charles Davis, San Antonio, secretary and treasurer, respectively.

MECHANICAL MEETIN CALLED BY A. N. P. A.

Pressmen, Stereotypers, Printers a Superintendents Invited to Attend Harrisburg Conference, June 8-9

Pressmen, stereotypers, printers a mechanical superintendents have been i vited to a mechanical conference to held under the auspices of the Americ Newspaper Publishers Association at t Penn-Harris Hotel, Harrisburg, P June 8-9.



In making the announcement, W. Wines, manager of the mechanical depar ment, emphasized that the conference not being held "for pleasure purposes."

"The time will be devoted solely to t discussion of mechanical topics accordi to a program which is to be arranged Mr. Wines said. "There will be no e tertainment features of any descriptio The sessions will be executive and the a tendance will be confined to direct repr sentatives of A. N. P. A. members and few invited guests."

Mr. Wines is asking A. N. P. A. mer bers to suggest topics for discussion.

HOLDS COOKING SCHOOL

The Albany (N. Y.) Times-Uni this week conducted a three days' sessi of a free cooking and home-makers' scho under the direction of Miss Floren Waterman, lecturer on home economi The school, open to all women, start May 9. Daily prizes were awarded.

Postal Receipts Keep Stepping Up in Jacksonville

IF you want an index to the population and business growth of a city or territory, just study its postal receipts over a period of years.

The chart above shows clearly that the postal receipts of Jacksonville, Florida, have been stepping up rapidly and steadily year after year.

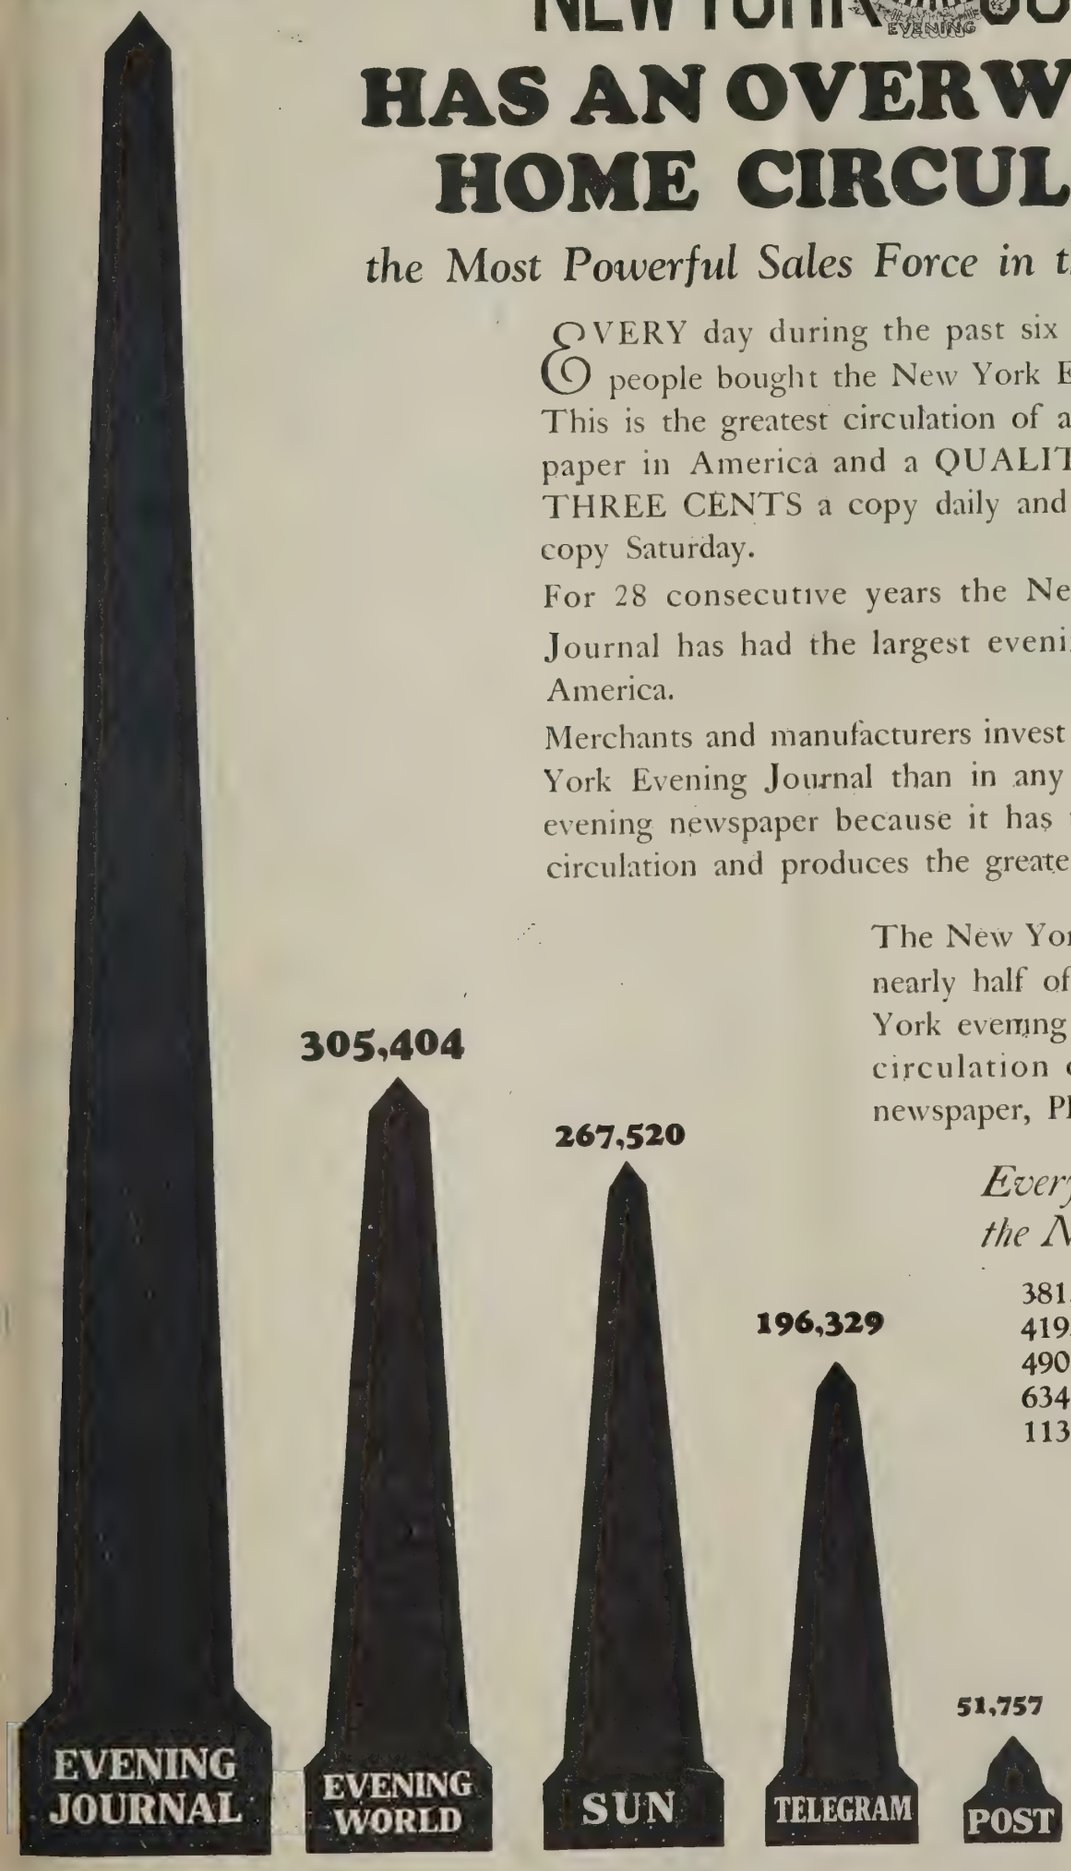
This city and the great Florida market it represents are experiencing a remarkable development which has created here buying power and buying needs that are extraordinary.

This market, which offers outstanding opportunities to manufacturers and distributors of all kinds of products, can be economically reached by advertising in—

The Florida Times-Union

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL



HAS AN OVERWHELMING HOME CIRCULATION—

the Most Powerful Sales Force in the New York Market

EVERY day during the past six months 686,740 people bought the New York Evening Journal—This is the greatest circulation of any evening newspaper in America and a QUALITY circulation at THREE CENTS a copy daily and FIVE CENTS a copy Saturday.

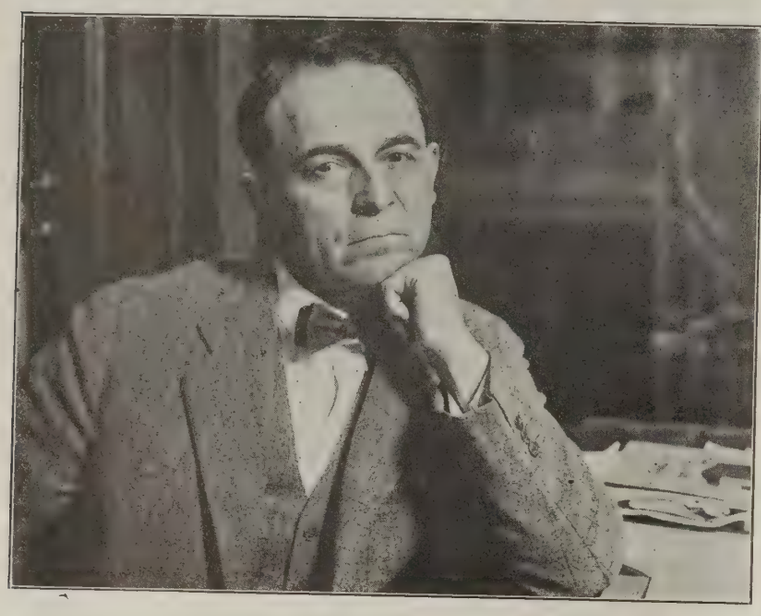
For 28 consecutive years the New York Evening Journal has had the largest evening circulation in America.

Merchants and manufacturers invest more in the New York Evening Journal than in any other New York evening newspaper because it has the largest home circulation and produces the greatest sales volume.

The New York Evening Journal is purchased by nearly half of all the people who buy any New York evening newspaper—and has DOUBLE the circulation of the next New York evening newspaper, PLUS 75,932 copies a day.

Every day the home circulation of the New York Evening Journal is:

381,336 more than Evening World
419,220 more than Evening Sun
490,411 more than Telegram
634,983 more than Evening Post
113,816 more than Evening World and Evening Sun combined!



THE Official sworn statements of Net Paid Circulation made by New York Evening Newspapers to U. S. Post Office for six months ending March 31, 1927:

	Copies a Day
EVENING JOURNAL	686,740
Evening World	305,404
Evening Sun	267,520
Evening Telegram	196,329
Evening Post	51,757

O. L. PRICE SUCCEEDS C. A. MORDEN AS OREGONIAN GENERAL MANAGER

Successor of 75-Year Old Veteran Also Trained Under Henry L. Pittock—Morden Once Itinerant Printer—Worked in St. Louis, Washington and Boston

THE recent choice of O. L. Price as general manager of the Portland Oregonian means, in effect, a continuation of the same administration that has prevailed on that paper since it was established as a daily on February 4, 1861, having at that time been published as a weekly for more than ten years.

O. L. Price

Henry L. Pittock was publisher of the Oregonian from the time of its founding as a daily up to his death in 1919, one of the longest records in America of continuous and active ownership of a newspaper property. Mr. Pittock was succeeded as manager by C. A. Morden who had long been assistant manager of the paper, close friend and confidential advisor of the pioneer publisher. Mr. Price, likewise, was closely associated with Mr. Pittock, having been his secretary and legal advisor, so that to all intents and purposes his selection is a continuation of the Pittock administration which has built up the Oregonian into one of the great newspaper properties of the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Morden retained the responsibility of general manager of the Oregonian up to his 75th birthday. He expressed himself as reluctant to resign, but anxious to be freed of the strain involved in a position of so much responsibility and willing to pass the task on to younger hands. In resigning he paid a high tribute to Mr. Price and to Edgar B. Piper, editor of the Oregonian, who was in that position even before Mr. Morden became manager, having succeeded the late Harvey W. Scott.

The retirement of Mr. Morden, although he will still remain as a trustee of the Henry L. Pittock estate, marks the closing of one of the outstanding newspaper careers of the west. As a youth he had a varied career as a printer in many cities. That he went to the Oregonian as a "sub" in the composing room and rose to the position of chief executive of that newspaper is indicative of the opportunities open to young men of ability on American newspapers.

Mr. Morden was born near London, Ont., April 26, 1853, but when he was a small child the family moved to Nebraska City. It was in the latter place that he learned his trade as a printer. He was an adventurous youth, with a desire to see the world, and soon set off on a Mississippi boat for St. Louis but he found that place crowded with jobless printers and moved on to Chicago. One of his most valuable experiences came later in Washington, where he worked in the Government printing office and spent his spare time listening to debates in the House and the Senate. Finally he went to Captain Bryan, in charge of the printing office, and handed in his resignation.

"Going to quit, are you?" asked Captain Bryan. "Don't you know you are breaking the rules?"

"Of course there are lots of rules in any Federal establishment and I took him seriously enough," said Mr. Morden in recounting the experience.

"'What rule is that?' I asked.

"'Few die and none resign,' he answered as solemn as a judge."

But the young printer did resign and went on to other fields. He worked in Columbus, O., and later in Boston. Upon his arrival in Boston he attended a meeting where he heard Ralph Waldo Emerson, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Julia Ward Howe, James Russell Lowell and other celebrities speak. He went to work for the University Press in Cambridge where he set copy from the manuscripts of famous authors.

Many other cities claimed him temporarily before in 1881 he turned in his card as a "sub" in the Oregonian composing room, destined to remain for half a century associated with that newspaper. He became a close friend and business advisor of the late Henry L. Pittock, publisher of the Oregonian. Mr. Morden's rise was rapid, as with each promotion his industry, good judgment and business ability fully justified the confidence that had been placed in him. At the time of Mr. Pittock's death in 1919 he was assistant general manager of the Oregonian and the publisher relied on him largely in conducting the affairs of the newspaper.

Through provisions of his will, Mr. Pittock made Mr. Morden and Mrs Price trustees of his large estate. Mr. Morden, by stipulation of the will, became manager of the Oregonian and has remained in that position through the great growth that the newspaper has made in the intervening years. Mr. Price also has been closely in touch with the publication and takes up a work with which he is entirely familiar. A third who has been a great factor in the conduct of the Oregonian, both before and since Mr. Pittock's death, is Edgar B. Piper, the editor, who now continues to direct the editorial end of the newspaper under the regime, as manager, of Mr. Price.

OKLAHOMA GROUP ELECTS

C. S. Storms Named President of State Editors at Poteau Meeting

C. S. Storms, editor of the Waurika (Okla.) News-Democrat was elected president of the Oklahoma Press Association at the close of the annual meeting here May 7. Altus in the western part of the state was chosen as the place for the 1928 meeting. H. G. Spauling, editor of the Shawnee Morning News is the retiring president.

Officers chosen were: C. S. Storms, Waurika, president; Jim Biggerstaff, Wagoner Record, first vice-president; W. R. Martineau, Oklahoma City Livestock News, second vice-president; Robert L. Kidd, Poteau News, third vice-president; Mrs. Lucy Eastin, Fairfax Chief, fourth vice-president; N. A. Nichols, El Reno American, was re-elected secretary-treasurer and M. R. Marley, Comanche Chief, Raymond Weaver, Skiatook News, W. S. Livingston, Seminole County News, members of the executive committee.

A committee was named to confer with the state board of affairs on plans to turn state printing over to the smaller newspaper plants in the state. A resolution commended Governor Henry S. Johnson on his stand for equal distribution of printing.

The executive committee at a meeting following the convention passed unanimously a resolution appealing to the board of regents of the state university to hire an instructor with five years of practical newspaper work as a minimum.

SUPREMACY IN building circulation!

A SUBSTANTIAL, bona-fide increase of thousands in circulation—all NEW subscriptions, all PREPAID, and all secured within ten weeks' time, will solve a publisher's most pressing problem ninety per cent of the time. Increased circulation, increased linage, increased revenue! The HOLLISTER CIRCULATION ORGANIZATION has clearly proven itself the world's greatest and most efficient circulation builder, with successful campaigns on such newspapers as The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, The Memphis Commercial Appeal, and many others to attest its supremacy. Until June 1, address care THE CHICAGO HERALD & EXAMINER.

HOLLISTER'S Circulation Organization
Home Ad.: 717-8 Commercial Exch. Bldg., Los Angeles

ROTO-GRAVURE Sections for Newspapers & Magazines
STANDARD Gravure Corporation
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

Our Policy
One Size all mats 20"x24"
One Quality only the best we can make
One Price 15% on standing order

To Compare is to Know Certifieds

The experiences of several hundred publishers who have either discarded wet mats or other makes of dry mats, and have adopted Certifieds, is the best proof of Certified Quality.

Our ambition has never been to make the most mats; but it has always been to make the BEST mats we know how.

Whether our best is as good or better than others we leave to you to judge. Perhaps the experiences of over 350 of your fellow publishers point the way for you, too.

That is why we suggest that you investigate, for to COMPARE is to KNOW.

CERTIFIED DRY MAT CORPORATION
340 Madison Avenue New York, N. Y.
for wet mat printing with DRY MAT facility—use Certifieds
MADE IN U. S. A.

Virginia's Greatest Newspaper

The Richmond News Leader Leads in every phase of newspaper supremacy..

CIRCULATION: "The News Leader Covers Richmond Like A Roof" is a fact—not a mere slogan. There are only two other newspapers in the United States with as great a degree of saturation of their markets as The Richmond News Leader.

The News Leader also reaches and covers the thirty counties which comprise Richmond's trading area—making a total coverage of 550,000 people with a tremendous purchasing power.

The Richmond News Leader has the largest circulation of any newspaper in Virginia.

ADVERTISING LINEAGE: In both foreign and local advertising The News Leader leads in Richmond. In 1926 The News Leader gained 581,826 lines of advertising, while the other Richmond paper lost.

CONFIDENCE: The News Leader has the confidence of its advertisers—and of its reading public. The citizens of Richmond and a large part of Virginia have come to depend upon the reliability and the policy of The Richmond News Leader.

National Representatives

KELLY-SMITH COMPANY

Marbridge Bldg. New York City | Waterman Bldg., Boston, Mass. | Atlantic Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa. | Tribune Tower Chicago, Ill.

J. B. KEOUGH, ATLANTA, GA.

Advertise to Richmond and its Trading Area through Virginia's Greatest Newspaper

The Richmond NEWS LEADER

"On News Leader Square"

Covers Richmond Like a

FREE SPACE GRAB OF OIL INTERESTS SCORED BY NEW YORK PUBLISHERS

Business Office Executives Denounce Lord & Thomas and Logan's Advertising Plan for Oil Heating Institute—Call for Unity of Press to Combat Press Agent Menace

IN no uncertain terms New York newspaper executives this week denounced the plan revealed last week by EDITOR & PUBLISHER by which the advertising agency of Lord & Thomas and Logan hopes to publicize the $40,000,000 oil heating industry by placing paid space in the magazines and relying on the expectation of free space in the news columns of the daily press.

Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, characterized such an advertising program as "unwise"; to J. F. Bresnahan, business manager of the New York World, it was "inefficient"; while L. W. Barnhart, business manager of the New York Daily News called for "solidarity on the part of the press" to combat the press agent menace illustrated by the contemplated free space grab of the oil interests. The Oil Heating Institute, organized by oil burner manufacturers and associate companies, have obtained $30,000 in free newspaper space in two weeks' time, J. D. Barnhill, an executive of Lord & Thomas and Logan, declared in an EDITOR & PUBLISHER interview published May 7.

Mr. Wiley sent the following statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"It is unwise, I think, for any association to appropriate any sum of money, large or small, to attempt to accomplish by means of publicity what only paid advertising can do.

"If any association has real news of public interest to tell it will cost practically nothing to put it before the editors of newspapers. All the newspapers, including the ones in which space is most desirable, publish news. Only the less desirable ones will print pure publicity stuff.

"The Oil Heating Institute and other associations, I assume, have a story worth telling to consumers. It is far better for their purposes to tell it complete in the advertising columns. There is never any guarantee that publicity will appear in a way to create the effect desired. Furthermore, rival interests may use adverse, harmful publicity—and those less desirable newspapers which print publicity do not exercise the same censorship to exclude unfair competition in publicity that they do in the advertising columns.

"The market for oil burners is among intelligent, substantial people. Publicity influences them least.

"It all boils down to the proposition that products worth advertising are worth advertising and are too good to depend upon the makeshift of publicity."

Mr. Barnhart of the News made his appeal for solidarity in the newspaper ranks in the following terms:

"If there was the same degree of solidarity in the offices of the publishers as there seems to be in the ranks of the press agents, the free publicity situation would soon be rectified.

"Too many publishers fail to realize that they are actually losing revenue by publishing press agent publicity. As long as there are some who let the press agents by, it will not be possible for those publishers who exclude free publicity to keep up the battle.

"We must work as a unit."

Mr. Bresnahan was amazed at the "list" of 111 newspapers claimed by the agency concerned as being "practical for publicity," and commented that the newspaper publishers must some day come to the realization that there is "mighty little nourishment in giving away a commodity that has a very definite and well established market value."

His statement follows in full:

"I am somewhat amazed that there are 111 newspapers, including 'many metropolitan dailies,' who hold their space so cheaply as to turn it over without charge for the identical purpose for which the magazines are collecting $15 per word.

"My belief is that any advertiser who deliberately embarks on a policy of free newspaper advertising and paid magazine advertising, and makes a virtue of it, will find the experiment a costly one in its very inefficiency. An oil heater, like any other household appliance, needs the immediate touch with the home-owner which only the newspaper can give successfully.

"Newspaper publishers will one day have to come to a realization that there is mighty little nourishment in giving away a commodity that has a very definite and well established market value."

Edwin S. Friendly, business manager of the New York Sun, expressed his views on the matter as follows:

"The decision of leading oil-burning equipment manufacturers, as reported in the May 7 issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, to purchase space only in magazines and attempt to obtain free publicity in the newspapers in their advertising campaign, will, I believe, as regards the newspapers, fall far below their predicted plans and expectations.

"And in my opinion, which you have requested, it certainly should. Because of the article news editors will now be on their guard and such propaganda will probably find its way to the wastebasket along with other propaganda that now flows so copiously into newspaper offices.

"It is unfair to newspapers to try to use them in such a manner as is outlined in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER article. The newspaper part of this campaign was planned, it seems to me, with inadequate knowledge of the possibilities of obtaining free publicity, and without the proper consideration of the value of newspaper advertising for a product of this character. The free publicity possibilities have been overestimated.

"Free publicity is always limited. It is always uncertain.

"There is little question about the supremacy of newspaper advertising over any other form for most commercial products. Three large national advertisers who have heretofore relied mainly on magazine advertising have within the last several weeks turned to newspaper advertising almost exclusively. They are the Westinghouse Electric Company, the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company and Congoleum-Nairn, Inc.

"It seems reasonable to predict that oil burner manufacturers and associate companies which are planning to use the magazines for paid advertising and the newspapers for free publicity, will turn to paid advertising in the newspapers if they are to succeed in selling their products in large quantities in any given territory."

The Advertising Manager

AN EXCLUSIVE TRADE JOURNAL

1417 Chapline Street
WHEELING, W. VA.

Devoted to

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING!

Many notable and exclusive features, intelligently and authoritatively presented. An extensive circulation—NOW. Published monthly. Size 9 x 12". Illustrated.

Single copy, 25¢; year, $2.50; SPECIAL TRIAL, 5 months, $1.00

CLASSIFIED, 05¢ a word, any heading. Display 16¢ line. All advertising subject to approval. An excellent medium for reaching NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING EXECUTIVES, advertisers, agencies and others. Your inquiries are invited.

PRESS MUST WARN OF INTERNATIONAL PERILS

(Continued from page 7)

about her being employed only after she had scooped the town in the face of a dozen experienced reporters. It is a fallacy, too, to say a woman can do anything a man can do.

"Women cannot get positions on a newspaper as easily as men do; for that reason, must write better in order to hold their jobs. But once on a newspaper staff she has a better chance to be pushed further ahead."

Ralph Turner, assistant general news manager of the United Press, explained the operation of the great American news associations, and told how the big news events are covered. Operation of a press association is a big city editing job with the whole world before you, is the way he explained it.

Turner told how the Mississippi flood was covered and the great difficulties under which the press services worked.

The American newspaper reader is receiving more for his money today than at any other time in history, he said. The two or three cents he pays for his newspaper represents "the biggest bargain in the world."

Norman Dow Becker, president of the Intertype Corporation, discussed newspaper appearance, citing as examples of different make-up British and other foreign papers and then comparing them with American newspapers. Becker stated that a newspaper can develop a character by following a certain style make-up.

Vincent Massey, Canadian Minister the United States, will be unable to in Columbia for Journalism Week, wired today.

Robert S. Wright, of Baylor Unive sity, Waco, Tex., hiked 875 miles to a tend Journalism Week. He left la Wednesday and arrived here Sunda Wright did little actual walking on t trip, having walked only eight miles. T rest of the distance was traveled wi passing motorists.

Senator Capper of Kansas is on t morrow's program. He will speak o "Journalism and the Nation."

Mrs. Maebelle McCalment of Kans City was elected president of the Missou Writers' Guild Monday. A banquet Mo day night concluded the annual meetin held in connection with Journalism Wee

Other officers elected were: First vic president, Ray Settle of Slater; secon vice-president, Miss Ella I. Deininger o St. Joseph; secretary-treasurer, Town send Godsey of Maryville.

J. Breckenridge Ellis of Plattsburg the retiring president.

PUBLISHER-MAYOR RE-ELECTED

E. B. Jeffress, publisher of the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News, was re-electe mayor of his city on May 10, by unani mous vote of the new city council. H has served two years as mayor.

U. S. DAILY RAISES PRICE

The subscription price of The United States Daily has been increased to $18.00 a year, 10 cents a copy.

Attractive Appearance —A Big Element

A big element in the success of a daily newspaper is its physical appearance, for this must first attract the favorable attention of the reader.

Every newspaper man knows that worn, broken and battered headings cannot give an atmosphere of snappy freshness to the news columns nor to the up-to-the-minute merchandise featured in the advertising. On the other hand, clean, bright headings and advertisements set in attractive, clean-cut faces command attention and not only attract readers to your news columns, but also get better results for your advertisers.

The fact that you can have these bright, new faces as needed daily, in unlimited quantities, at no extra cost and in the most desirable faces is the real secret of the tremendous success of the Ludlow. This is the reason why the country's successful newspapers, large, medium-size and small, have almost universally adopted the Ludlow System for producing ads and heads.

Regardless of what your idea of the best method of setting run-of-the-hook ads and heads may be, the system that sets the advertising of the nation's leading papers will be of interest to you. Let us tell you about it.

Ludlow Typograph Company
2032 Clybourn Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Boston: 470 Atlantic Avenue
New York: 63 Park Row
Atlanta: 41 Marietta Street
San Francisco: 5 Third Street

PRINCIPAL DISPLAY LINES SET IN LUDLOW CAMEO

A smaller size Ionic is as legible as a larger size of some other type face and the comparatively short ascenders and descenders give the lines an open appearance even when set on the same body size as the face; however, various degrees of leading may be used, based upon the paper's space requirements. The outstanding advantage of this new face is its conservation of vision, which it achieves mainly through its even, restful tone and the notably clear, full proportions of both the lower case and the capital letters. There are no pin-holes to fill up with ink and no fine lines to break down in stereotyping, both important factors from a mechanical standpoint, because they speed up production.

Boston Herald and Traveler

First Papers to Adopt

6¾ Pt. Ionic No. 5

The Newest Member of This Popular Family

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Now there is a complete range of sizes to meet every requirement. For news matter there is 6 ½ point if you want the greatest possible word count; 7 point if you want maximum legibility; 6¾ point if you want to strike a happy medium.

And for classified, markets, and legals there is 5 ½ point.

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

219.43

LINOTYPED IN THE GARAMOND FAMILY EXCEPT LARGE TITLE LINE

Now Set in TRADE LINOTYPE MARK Ionic No. 5

OEM SERIES S TODAY
Page 2

THE BOSTON HERALD

XI. NO. 122 MONDAY MORNING, MAY 2, 1927—TWENTY-FOUR PAGES

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK — TEXT SET IN 6¾ POINT IONIC NO. 5 WITH BOLD FACE NO. 2 — TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Psychologist Praises Paper Using New Ionic Body Type

Points Out Ease with Which It is Possible to Recognize Letter and Word Forms In New Linotype Face

From The Philadelphia Record

When the "Philadelphia Record" first came out in its new Ionic dress, a number of its readers quickly acclaimed the improvement. Among them was Dr. Thaddeus L. Bolton, psychologist, who wrote:

"The appearance of this new type in the 'Philadelphia Record' shows at once several advantages over the type face previously used. The page makes at first sight a much better appearance and is much more pleasing to the eye. The difference thus noted is due to several things. The letters have heavier lines in a majority of their parts. The width of the letters is greater.

"Here are two factors of importance. The dark line is more easily fixated. The greater width of the letters makes the letters more readily recognized. Reading involves two forms of movement—the swing of the eyes from left to right and again from right to left, and the infinitesimally short halts that the eye makes in going from left to right during the actual reading process.

"There is a movement of the eye more or less characteristic of every letter, although in the actual process of reading there come to be movement.. characteristic of words and phrases only. Each of these types of movement involves starting and stopping.

Saves the Eye Muscles

"This fatigues the muscles. The less the number of stops, the less fatiguing will be the process of reading. The number of stops will be reduced in proportion to the readiness with which letters, then words and finally phrases are recognized.

"Any type that makes a word or group of words take on a character which is quickly grasped will be a boon to the reader. This new type used by 'The Record' does this.

"There is a minimum size of letter as well as a maximum size. The small letter will not be immediately recognized, the large letter will require a greater swing in eye movement. The aim is to get the greatest amount of reading done with the least muscular action.

"Another point is to be found in the ease with which the lines may be followed across the page and back again to the next line below. The body of the type is important in this respect. The new type used by 'The Record' does much to increase the facility with which the eye travels back and forth across the page, thus making it a most desirable addition to the newspaper, a boon to the reading public."

A Larger Lower Case Gives Ionic Better Legibility

Absence of Hairlines, Short Sturdy Serifs, and Space Inside Letters Are Among Many Contributing Factors

Lower case letters almost as high as the capitals accompanying them is the explanation of the great legibility of Ionic No. 5, the new Linotype text face. The relation between the two is purposely close because Linotype designers heeded the fact that small characters compose fully three-quarters of the average newspaper column. They produced an easy-reading font by giving greatest attention to its most read portion.

Not only did these designers make the ratio between Ionic's lower case and capitals greater than that of the average roman face. Descenders were shortened, capitals were heightened, and even more body added to the lower case. Into this large framework they built elements making for maximum legibility. As a result Ionic No. 5 has no hairlines; there is practically no difference.

Eye Specialists Endorse Linotype Ionic No. 5

"Bold faced type is always preferable for the eyes. It requires less strain and meditation. Any type which demands concentration is certain to strain the eyes and prove detrimental to them. In a quite natural way, the newer and larger type will prove beneficial to public eyesight."—Dr. C. A. Evans, Eye Specialist.

"The new type is a very great improvement and I was greatly interested when I saw the first copy of the News this morning presenting its news clearly and boldly. It can be read with perfect ease under an ordinary light."—Dr. J. M. Foster, Eye Specialist.

Ionic Type Is Appreciated by Readers Everywhere

"This new type is simply marvellous. I consider the use of this new type as one of the most marked advancements made in the printing of newspapers for many years. Here is a type that can be read with ease, which reduces the eye-strain, relieves fatigue and adds materially to the pleasure of reading."—Dr. Paul J. Pontius, Philadelphia, Pa.

"As one who is interested in more reading for every one, the great improvement in the legibility of The Journal type is a pleasing thing. The new type is easily read and, if possible, gives The Journal more personality."—Matthew Dudgeon, Milwaukee, Wis.

"Permit me to offer my sincerest congratulations to the News for the new type used in its pages. When I picked up the paper the improvement was so noticeable as to be almost startling. The improved type surely must be of great benefit to the eyes of the News' readers. —Mrs. J. H. Troutman, Denver, Colo.

"I noticed that the new Ionic carries a much heavier color without the muddy effect which is so noticeable in other type. Undoubtedly, there is less strain on the eyes in reading the new type than in reading the old. Anything that can be done to make newspaper print more legible is certainly a thing to be commended."—Dr. James Vandevere, El Paso, Texas.

"Without question the finest, clearest, most easily read type-face ever designed,

Motorists Race Train on Tracks; Hit; Emerge From Junk Little Hurt

Japo Speeds Slippers to Bride-to-Be While John Waits at the Church

Now Set in TRADE LINOTYPE MARK Ionic No. 5

Boston Traveler
ONE HUNDRED AND ONE YEARS A NEWSPAPER
ESTABLISHED 1825, 102D YEAR—NO. 234 BOSTON, MONDAY, APRIL 11, 1927 FORTY-FOUR PAGES PRICE TWO

OUR NEW TYPE

REPRINTED FROM THE BOSTON TRAVELER
OF APRIL 11, 1927

With today's issue, the Boston Traveler adopts a new style of body type.

This is the type that you, our readers, selected when we printed specimens of various kinds on our first page and called for your votes. It was your overwhelming choice.

This new type, large, clear and above all strikingly legible, is known as Ionic No. 5. It is the product of years of study, research and scientific experiment by the world's most skilled printing engineers. It has been indorsed by optometrists, oculists and scientists of national and international reputation.

For 101 years the Boston Traveler has been publishing a newspaper. Always it has kept pace with scientific achievement in the newspaper business. Always it has led in the adoption of everything that meant a better newspaper.

We know you will like and appreciate our—your—new type.

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Linotyped in Garamond

A Complete Range of Sizes in

IONIC No. 5

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

7 Point

The British delegation of trade-union representatives, who came here on Tuesday at the invitation of "The London Daily Mail" to study reasons for the disparity between the high wages and prosperous living conditions of the American worker and their own lower wage standards, gained considerable light in a tour of several industrial establishments in Brooklyn yesterday.

They were curious to know how it was that the average wage of the American toiler virtually doubled that of his British brother, and how it was possible for industries here to offer such fat envelopes to their employees and at the same time compete successfully in world markets.

American More Productive

After a study of the Brooklyn Edison plant and the factory methods of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company in Brooklyn, the delegates remarked that one of the vital reasons for the disparity was that the American worker was capable of producing and actually did produce more than the British toiler in a given time.

This he was enabled to do, they learned, because of the high standards of efficiency obtaining here, mass production methods, the utter perfection of organization for which the American industrialist seems always to be striving, and labor-saving devices evident on every hand.

The comments of the delegates were voiced by Sir Percival Phillips, special correspondent of "The Daily Mail"; Fenton MacPherson, of the same newspaper, and William Mosses, J. P., who had a prominent part in the British Labor Ministry during the war.

English Conservative

Mr. MacPherson also noted that the welfare facilities offered by the American plant were much more elaborate than in England and that equipment and quarters were more beneficial. This was evidently the result, he observed, of the frequent scrapping of plants here to make way for expansion and development. His countrymen are loath, he said, to tear down a building that has served twenty years or more.

Mr. Mosses dwelt on the turnover capacity of the American employee.

Set on 8 Point Body

6¾ Point

The British delegation of trade-union representatives, who came here on Tuesday at the invitation of "The London Daily Mail" to study reasons for the disparity between the high wages and prosperous living conditions of the American worker and their own lower wage standards, gained considerable light in a tour of several industrial establishments in Brooklyn yesterday.

They were curious to know how it was that the average wage of the American toiler virtually doubled that of his British brother, and how it was possible for industries here to offer such fat envelopes to their employees and at the same time compete successfully in world markets.

American More Productive

After a study of the Brooklyn Edison plant and the factory methods of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company in Brooklyn, the delegates remarked that one of the vital reasons for the disparity was that the American worker was capable of producing and actually did produce more than the British toiler in a given time.

This he was enabled to do, they learned, because of the high standards of efficiency obtaining here, mass production methods, the utter perfection of organization for which the American industrialist seems always to be striving, and labor-saving devices evident on every hand.

The comments of the delegates were voiced by Sir Percival Phillips, special correspondent of "The Daily Mail"; Fenton MacPherson, of the same newspaper, and William Mosses, J. P., who had a prominent part in the British Labor Ministry during the war.

English Conservative

Mr. MacPherson also noted that the welfare facilities offered by the American plant were much more elaborate than in England and that equipment and quarters were more beneficial. This was evidently the result, he observed, of the frequent scrapping of plants here to make way for expansion and development. His countrymen are loath, he said, to tear down a building that has served twenty years or more.

Mr. Mosses dwelt on the turnover capacity of the American employee. The average industrial worker here, he noted, was of as high moral type as his British confrere, and is much better equipped for his job both with respect to knowledge and tools. "There is no doubt," he

Set on 7½ Point Body

6½ Point

The British delegation of trade-union representatives, who came here on Tuesday at the invitation of "The London Daily Mail" to study reasons for the disparity between the high wages and prosperous living conditions of the American worker and their own lower wage standards, gained considerable light in a tour of several industrial establishments in Brooklyn yesterday.

They were curious to know how it was that the average wage of the American toiler virtually doubled that of his British brother, and how it was possible for industries here to offer such fat envelopes to their employees and at the same time compete successfully in world markets.

American More Productive

After a study of the Brooklyn Edison plant and the factory methods of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company in Brooklyn, the delegates remarked that one of the vital reasons for the disparity was that the American worker was capable of producing and actually did produce more than the British toiler in a given time.

This he was enabled to do, they learned, because of the high standards of efficiency obtaining here, mass production methods, the utter perfection of organization for which the American industrialist seems always to be striving, and labor-saving devices evident on every hand.

The comments of the delegates were voiced by Sir Percival Phillips, special correspondent of "The Daily Mail"; Fenton MacPherson, of the same newspaper, and William Mosses, J. P., who had a prominent part in the British Labor Ministry during the war.

English Conservative

Mr. MacPherson also noted that the welfare facilities offered by the American plant were much more elaborate than in England and that equipment and quarters were more beneficial. This was evidently the result, he observed, of the frequent scrapping of plants here to make way for expansion and development. His countrymen are loath, he said, to tear down a building that has served twenty years or more.

Mr. Mosses dwelt on the turnover capacity of the American employee. The average industrial worker here, he noted, was of as high moral type as his British confrere, and is much better equipped for his job both with respect to knowledge and tools. "There is no doubt," he commented, that with this high rate of production the American worker earns his pay."

"And this is how we are permitting

Set on 7 Point Body

5½ Point

COUPLE, $1.25; German cook, butler-useful man; also Swiss-American first-class chauffeur-mechanic, cook; four years last position; thoroughly efficient; excellently recommended. Modern Agency, 200 East 72d. Butterfield 04.

COUPLE, German; gardener-houseman; excellent cook; 2½ years last position; $164. United Agencies, 165 East 72d. Chelsea 0283.

COUPLE competent cook, housekeeper, experienced useful butler, valet; references. Lennert. Butterfield 4265.

GARDENER - CHAUFFEUR, married, one child; fifteen years' experience any make car. Grow flowers, vegetables, out and indoor, landscape gardening; capable supervising estate; wages $150 month; unfurnished cottage with privileges; highest references. L 146 Herald Tribune Bldg.

GARDENER, head, single, long practical experience under glass and all outdoor gardening; references. L 147 Herald Tribune

LEGAL NOTICES

SUPREME COURT, NEW YORK COUNTY—PETER F. MURPHY, Plaintiff, against E. DEAN FULLER, Defendant.

YOU ARE HEREBY SUMMONED to answer the complaint in this action, and to serve a copy of your answer, or, if the complaint is not served with this summons, to serve a notice of appearance, on the plaintiff's attorney, within twenty days after the service of this summons, exclusive of the day of service. In case of your failure to appear, or answer, judgment will be taken against you by default for the relief demanded in the complaint.

The foregoing summons is served upon you by publication, pursuant to an order of Hon. Phoenix Ingraham, dated the 3rd day of December, 1926, and filed with the complaint in

Set 14 lines to the Inch (Short Descenders)

HAVANA RESULTS

FIRST RACE—Purse $700; claiming; three-year-olds and upward; five and one-half furlongs.

Play Hour, 115.....(Henslein) 4-1 8-5 4-5
Gussie P., 107.....(Dale) — even 1-2
Kalakaua, 110.....(Catrone) — — 6-5

Time—1:07 3-5. Liborio, Bellefonte, Voorfloor, Pilades, Seapen, Baalbeck II, Zoona, Clean and Bachelor's Error also ran.

SECOND RACE—Purse $700; claiming; three-year-olds and upward; five and one-half furlongs.

Lew Pope, 115.....(Groos) 8-1 3-1 8-5
Lieut. Farrell, 110...(Fishman) — even 1-2
Cappie, 107.....(Pickens) — — 2-1

Time—1:07 3-5. Ceres, Adventuress, P. T. Barnum, Acquitted, Little Jennie, Eileen M. Ranock also ran.

THIRD RACE—Purse $700; claiming; three-year-olds and upward; five and one-half furlongs.

Appellate, 108 .....(July) 4-1 8-5 4-5
Winding Th'gh, 107..(Pickens) —even 1-2

DOMESTIC BONDS

Sales (000 omitted).	High.	Low.	Last.	chge.
1 Alum 7s '33.....	106	106	106	——
37 Am G & El 6s.....	100½	100	100½	+ ⅛
21 Am P & L 6s.....	100	92½	99½	——
2 Am Roll M 6s.....	103	103	103	——
20 Am Seating 6s.....	99½	99½	99½	——
6 Am W Wks 6s.....	97⅞	97¾	97⅞	——
3 Anacon Cop 6s.....	102	102⅞	102⅝	— ⅛
10 Appala'n Pr 5s...	94⅞	94⅞	94⅞	— ⅛
16 Assoc G & El 6s..	102	101⅝	101⅝	— ¼
18 Assoc S H 6½s...	97½	97½	97½	——
5 Atl Fruit Inc 8s...	19	19	19	——
9 Beaver Bd 8s.....	99	98¼	98¼	— ½
5 Bell T Can 5s....	100¾	100¼	100¼	— ¼

Set on 5½ Point Body

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

Display in Linotype Garamond except large title line

ADVENTURES IN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING

I.—BATTLING THE OLD FREE LIST

By N. E. W. SOUTH

This is the first of a series of intimate stories written from "the inside" by a newspaper publisher, who for obvious reasons cannot disclose his own identity or that of the newspaper about which he writes.

AVE been through many battles in ny newspaper career, but I think nost illuminating and soul satisfy- scrimmage was that which came as the result of my determination ean up the free list of the Blanks- Eagle.

il I say scrimmage? It was more a battle-royal, with all the other cipants joined in the one fell pur- of handing me a K.O. so that they t retain their ancient privilege of ug the paper, and as many copies as they liked, free gratis, for noth- or words to that effect.

ortly after going to Blanksburg as al manager of the Eagle, I began idy of its circulation methods, and the first thing I discovered was the free list ran somewhere around copies daily. Now, the total net circulation at that time was some- less than 8,000, so you can see the free list percentage was rather to put it politely.

alled in the circulation manager and l him the why and wherefore of open-handed liberality.

Well," he said, "pretty nearly every ess man in town gets a free copy by of the advertising department, and politicians of our party get free cop- by order of the old manager, who also an owner, and members of the e staff have their friends they want n care of and they get free copies, that's the way the list has been built see," I said, adding, "I suppose the s here listed comprise our total free bution?"

Well," said the C. M., "that's all to n we deliver free copies every day. it's not the entire free list. There's s, the janitor of the building next —it's owned by one of the paper's holders; Jones gets 20 copies every And Singer's department store s a man up every evening for 25 s. And the police get another 25, the firemen the same, and quite a few he office-holders at the court house by on their way home and pick up s, and—"

And I think it's about time all this t came to an end," I broke in.

Do you mean we'll cut off the free s?" the C. M., asked, aghast.

ust that," I said, "and at once."

There'll be hell to pay," he pro- d. "Why, a lot of these men, and re leading citizens of the town, too, been getting the paper free for as as I have been on it and I started s a newsboy."

Tell me," I said, "isn't it true that ably a thousand copies of this paper being given away every evening to st anybody who has had the nerve alk up and get his?"

he C. M. reckoned that I had just t guessed the sum total of the le's free daily distribution.

Well," I asked, "how would you, as Eagle's circulation manager, like to his free circulation go over into your net paid column? That is just re it is going in the next few weeks." s the first definite step toward that I drew up a letter to be sent to all business men of the town, advertisers non-advertisers, whose names ap- ed on the free list.

Dear Fellow Business Man," it ran. inning with the issue of March 10, Eagle will no longer be delivered to each evening by boys in the em- of the Eagle Company, but by in- ndent carrier boys.

These independent carrier boys are, effect, business men like yourself. y buy the Eagle at wholesale from and retail it to you for 15 cents a k, delivered at your home or place business, as you may designate, and collecting from you each week for the paper.

"In other words, the Eagle, after March 10, will no longer have a means of delivering the paper to you free, and we feel sure that you will be only too glad to recognize the business enterprise of the new independent carrier boys by giving them your order for the paper to be delivered at your home or place of business at the regular price of fifteen cents a week.

"Of course, it is understood that whenever you have an advertisement in the Eagle, copy of same to show proof of publication will be sent to you by us, but such copy will be forwarded by mail, following a customary newspaper practice."

The advertising manager of the paper actually talked himself hoarse when I showed him this letter. His assistants were equally voluble and earnest in their pleas not to take this step. And running all through their torrent of protest was this refrain: "We've got to give them the paper free if we're going to get their advertising."

That was the basic argument—you had to give the business men of Blanksburg petty graft in the way of a free paper if you hoped to get business from them.

"All right," I said, at last, "maybe you're right." The faces of the advertising department began to brighten. "And maybe you're wrong. The sooner we know the facts, the better for all concerned. I am going to let this letter find out the facts for us. It is going out at once."

I had it set up in the job shop as a form letter, and sent it out without superscription, so as to minimize that "important look" as much as possible in the recipients' minds. Then I sat back and waited for the explosion that I had been duly warned would follow.

I never knew letters to be delivered so quickly. It seemed as though I had scarcely finished signing the last of them as general manager before I began hearing from them.

The first protest was from the highest class merchant in the city—a man who is known far and wide for the top-notch quality of his merchandise and his fair dealing with the public. He fairly spluttered his indignation over the telephone —declared it was the most outrageous thing he ever heard of, and if he couldn't continue having the paper delivered to him at his home, the Eagle needn't look to him for his continued friendship. Not that he objected to paying any one 15 cents a week for the paper—that wasn't it—it was the principle of the thing. As long as he had been in business in Blanksburg, he had received the Eagle free, advertising or no advertising, and just because there was a new management, why, that was no good and valid reason why he could not have the paper free any longer.

There was a great deal more from him like unto the above—and from his fellow business men, who were only seconds behind him breathing fire and slaughter. It was quite the worst hornet's nest I ever stirred up in my life, and friends and enemies have never classified me among the pacifists.

To add to it all, quite a few of the free-listers carried their angry protests to my silent partner, for many years a resident of the town, and got him all worked up. And to cap it all, three advertisers who had been regular Friday "copy" for years refused to go in the current Friday issue and, what's more, swore they'd stay out until they were given back their free copies of the Eagle.

The advertising department was in a deep blue funk, and so was everybody else, pretty near, on the paper. I'll admit that I was a bit nerve-shaken myself. But somehow I couldn't bring myself to believe that the leading business men of Blanksburg were really as "small" as their vehement and threatening protests to me apparently made them out to be, and in the hope that I could find a way to appease their wrath and make them see straight, I determined to call upon the more vigorous of the protestants who had not yet reached the point of ordering their advertising out of the paper. As to the fellows who had actually stopped advertising because of the new no-free-copy rule, I instructed the advertising department to leave them alone.

"They will have to walk into this office and offer us their advertising without any solicitation on our part," I said. "That's the only way in God's world they can ever get back into the paper."

Well, the first man I called on was the high-class merchant with the reputation for fair and honest dealing who had beat all the others to it in registering his kick. He was standing by a counter displying fine handkerchiefs when I met up with him. An inspiration flashed over me.

"Mr. Dodge," I said, "those are very beautiful handkerchiefs. I am going to take one and walk out of your store with it without so much as thanking you for it."

"You just try it," he retorted, "and you'll find me hanging on to your coat tails before you have taken two steps toward the front door."

"Certainly you would," I grinned, "and you'd be right in grabbing me and hollering for the police, besides. Every one of these handkerchiefs is the product of a factory. It has cost some one so much to make it. It has cost you so much to buy it for sale here in Blanksburg. You can't afford to give it away and still hope to keep this fine store of yours going for the benefit of the people of this part of the country.

"Mr. Dodge, that's just the fix I'm in with the Blanksburg Eagle. It isn't a charitable institution, any more than your store is. It has certain things to sell. One is printed copies of the paper each day, and these copies are just as much a factory product as these handkerchiefs or anything else you have for sale in this store of yours. But you want me to give you my product free every day, and you won't let me have free just one of these handkerchiefs. I'll admit that each of these handkerchiefs cost more to make than a copy of my paper does, but it costs me a large part of the 3 cents that I ask for a single copy of the paper to manufacture it in my factory, and if I am to give you free every day in the year that which I manufacture at such heavy cost, why shouldn't you do the same by me once in a while?"

Mr. Dodge left off rearranging the handkerchiefs and turned to me.

"I'm going to tell you something," he said. "I have been so doggoned mad over that letter from you that I did not want to see you when you came in here a few minutes ago, and I'd just about made up my mind to quit advertising with you. But I also want to say that talking here with you has made me see the thing in a different light. You sell a factory product, so do I, and we've both got to get a fair price for it if were to do our part in building up the community. Put me down for the paper and tell the boy who delivers it to collect his 15 cents a week for it."

That afternoon I called on perhaps a dozen disgruntled business men. I used the same argument on them that I had on my first "prospect," fitting the talk in each case to what the man had to sell, and invariably I got him to see the "light."

Then I went back to the office and called in the advertising, circulation and business departments. I told them what I had said to Dodge et al and instructed them to sing sweetly the same song to all who kicked to them. They did forthwith, and nine times out of ten the argument worked with them, too.

But before we could get around to handling all the irate "subscribers" (please note the quotation marks) in this way, one man, a lawyer, threatened to bring suit to enforce free delivery of his paper. In the real estate business on the side, he had been in the habit of inserting classified ads from time to time, and he held that an implied part of the agreement between him and the paper was that in return for this occasional copy he would get a free paper 365 days in the year!

A garage proprietor who had not advertised for months blustered that we would never get another nickel's worth of business from him. The answer to that one was easy—I ordered the circulation department to stop buying gas and oil from him for its delivery equipment, and the gentleman in question walked meekly in in due course and ordered that the paper be sent to him at the regular price for city delivery—15 cents a week. The prize remonstrance, however, came from one of the wealthiest men of the town. He and the former manager had been boys together and, by God, it was an insult to his old friend's memory to cut him off the free list. Yea, verily, the tribulations that came upon me when I attempted to cut off the Blanksburg Eagle's free list taught me the bed rock truth in that old saying, "Ain't human nature grand?"

NEW JIJI SHIMPO BUILDING IN TOKIO

Erected at a cost of 2,150,000 yen (about $1,000,000), the plant of the Tokio Jiji Shimpo shown above is one of the most modern newspaper publishing plants in the Orient. The newspaper occupies the basement and the first three floors, while the upper two floors are given over to business offices.

After two or three weeks we had the business men, as a whole, pretty well pacified and in the net paid column on the daily circulation reports. Meanwhile, as the miscellaneous free readers—police, firemen, politicians and "friends of the paper" generally—pouted, sulked and squawked, they were told simply, and in good humor, that, whereas the paper might not have been worth anything before, it was now a darn good 15 cents' worth a week, and wouldn't they like to join the constantly increasing list of paid readers and keep up with what was what and why in town, because never again was there going to be a free list on the Eagle. One by one, they, too, came in as paid readers, and pretty soon the office force began to wear the look of a cat that has dined sumptuously on a cageful of canaries.

Oh, yes, about those business men who actually did withdraw their advertising because of no more free Eagles.

Following my instructions, the advertising department left them to their own devices, though I must confess that the "boys" more than once asked me to renege and also personally to solicit the stubborn ones. But I had my Dutch up, too, and—

Well, late one Saturday afternoon, just as I was starting to dinner, I bumped into the biggest of the "hold-outs" coming out of the deserted advertising quarters. I shot him a hearty handshake and asked if I could do anything for him.

"Well—er—well, I was looking for an advertising man to have a little talk."

"They're all gone, so let's you and I have the talk," I said, and led him to an easy chair.

As he settled into it, he cleared his throat.

"First off," he began truculently, "I don't want you to get the idea that we quit advertising with you just because you stopped my free copy of the paper and my partner's."

"Not at all," I said, heartily.

"We quit because we had been planning for quite a while to use only one paper," he went on.

"Certainly," I said. "It was your money and you had a perfect right to make your choice without my butting in."

"Oh—er,—well, what are your rates now?"

"The same as when you were advertising with us, but with our steady increase in actual net paid circulation, they will be raised shortly."

"Well, if I come back, do we get free copies of the paper?"

"Mr. Lundin," I said, "no man appreciates that which he gets for nothing. I hand you a 25-cent cigar. As you light it, you consciously, unconsciously or subconsciously ask yourself, 'What's he working off on me anyhow?' I fail to offer you a cigar, so on your way out you stop at the corner cigar store, plank down a hard-earned dime for a smoke, light up and get unqualified satisfaction out of the first puff, and all because you have had to pay for your enjoyment. No, I will not put you and your partner on the free list if you come back with your advertising, because I want you and him to appreciate the real value of the Eagle to your firm as an advertising medium, and I want each of you to appreciate the real service it is giving to you as an individual every evening in putting the news of the day before you."

For perhaps 30 seconds Blanksburg's leading clothing merchant stared at me without saying a word. Then, still without speaking, he got up out of that easy chair and went away from there out into the street.

The business manager, who had been hovering anxiously in the offing, stuck his nose in the door. "What did he say?" he asked.

"Nothing—not a word."

The business manager beamed.

"Then he's coming back in," he said.

I had my "doots." But the business manager knew his man. Within an hour after the office opened up on Monday morning, a Lundin clerk brought in an envelope addressed to the advertising department. It contained an order to run a Lundin ad three times a week, beginning that day, and copy for the first insertion was enclosed.

Lundin's came back for no other reason under heaven than that it had hurt their business to stay out. For the same good and sufficient reason the other hold-outs one by one walked up to the counter and began doing business in the same old manner—minus the free copy of the Eagle delivered every evening at the paper's cost at home or place of business.

So at last the battle of the free list came to a happy ending. It was exciting and nerve racking while it lasted, and we probably committed our full share of errors of strategy and tactics, but, as I look back on it, I am more than ever convinced that it was worth while fighting to a finish and a good thing for every one taking part in it.

It taught the business men generally to respect the paper and to look upon it not as a plaything of a group of politicians, but as a business with very definite problems of income and outgo akin to their own. It proved to the "hold outs" that the old sheet after all was the real business getter for them they had always been told it was—a statement which they had discounted as advertising soliciting exuberance.

It made police, firemen, politicians and "friends of the paper" generally realize that the Eagle really was not dependent upon their favor for the news. It taught the Eagle's workers in every department that a newspaper was just as much a business institution as any store or factory or bank in Blanksburg and had to be run as such if they were to get "theirs" regularly. And that slant on the newspaper "game" is something that, even in this so-called crassly material age, too many otherwise bright newspaper men fail lamentably to get hep to.

The second article of "Adventures In Newspaper Publishing" will appear in an early issue.

POLICEMAN ON TRIAL FOR MELLETT MURDER

A JURY of nine men and three women will try Floyd Streitenberger, former Canton policeman, for the murder last July of Don R. Mellett, editor of the Canton Daily News. The jury was completed in record time Tuesday.

Immediately after it was impanelled the jury was taken to the Mellett home where the killing occurred.

Streitenberger is the fourth man accused in connection with the shooting. Patrick McDermott, convicted of the actual slaying, and Ben Rudner, convicted of having hired McDermott for the deed, are serving life sentences in the Ohio penitentiary. Louis Mazer, the first man arrested, is still in jail and is expected to be used as a state witness against Streitenberger.

PUBLISHING FIRM FORMED

The Fox Valley Publishing company, Dundee, Ill., has been incorporated with $6,000 capital to own, operate and publish newspapers. Merrill O. Calame, W. Stanley Roberts and Warren S. Jackman are the incorporators.

DAILY'S EXPEDITION RETURNI

3,700 Specimens Obtained by Chica News—Field Museum Party

The Chicago Daily News Field Muse scientific expedition, having completed seven months' trip through Abyssinia, in Khartum. In their travel by mule a camel caravans over 1,600 miles of mo tain country, the explorers obtained total of 3,700 specimens comprising 2,(birds, 1,400 mammals and 300 other cr tures.

As a tribute to the backers of the e pedition, Dejusmatch Ayalu, a chief in northern provinces of Abyssinia, h named a high mountain in his distr "Strong's Peak" in honor of Walter Strong, publisher of the Daily News.

EDITOR'S SENTENCE SUSPENDE

Capt. Harry Allen Ely, 73-year-o New York editor, who was sentenced a penitentiary term for criminally lib ling Municipal Court Justice Willia J. A. Caffrey of the First District November, 1925, made a public apolo last Tuesday, which won for him a su pended sentence. His sentence was stay for three years by General Sessio Judge Francis X. Mancuso, who order Ely to report to a probation officer on a month for two years. Ely was edit and publisher of the New York Tena a rent payers' publication, which March 21, 1924, published an article e titled "Scofflaw Judges."

SATURDAY PAPER LAUNCHED

The Troy (N. Y.) Saturday Globe, outgrowth of the abandoned Utica Sat day Globe, was published for the first ti this week, coming close on the heels absorption of the Troy Sunday Budg by the Troy Sunday Observer. T Globe started as a four-page tabloid, i corporating many of the features of t old Utica Globe. Thomas H. Curry Troy is publisher.

FOR PROMPT SERVICE

TYPE

BORDERS ~ ORNAMENTS ~ BRASS RULE

Printers' Supplies

KELLY PRESSES ~ KLYMAX FEEDERS ~ PAPER CUTTERS
HAMILTON WOOD AND STEEL EQUIPMENT, INCLUDING OUR AMERICAN CUT-COST EQUIPMENT

Carried in stock for prompt shipment at the following Selling Houses of the

American Type Founders Company

BOSTON, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE, RICHMOND, ATLANTA, BUFFALO, PITTSBURGH, CLEVELAND, DETROIT, CHICAGO, CINCINNATI, ST. LOUIS, MILWAUKEE, MINNEAPOLIS, KANSAS CITY, DES MOINES, DENVER, LOS ANGELES, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, SPOKANE, WINNIPEG

Leads!

Every Newark and New York week-day newspaper in volume of Advertising.

Leads ALL week-day newspapers in the United States in National, Automobile and Classified Advertising.

Leads in productiveness to its advertisers.

Leads Every New Jersey Newspaper in volume and class of Circulation.

HOME DELIVERED TO 8 out of 10 of the English-speaking families in Newark, New Jersey, and read by every member of every family.

Newark Evening News

Eugene W. Farrell
Business and Advertising Manager
215-221 Market Street
Newark New Jersey

O'MARA & ORMSBEE, Inc.
General Advertising Representatives
New York Chicago Detroit San Francisco

More than 195,000 Daily

CHARACTER QUALITY AMERICA FIRST! ENTERPRISE ACCURACY
Los Angeles Examiner
AN AMERICAN PAPER FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE — THE GREAT NEWSPAPER OF THE GREAT SOUTHWEST

More than 425,000 Sunday

Daily — MAY 14, 1927 — 10¢ Sunday

OS ANGELES EXAMINER GROWTH AMAZES JOURNALISM

STIMONIAL FILES GIVE UP INTERESTING "THANK YOUS"

HEST PRICED AND THOUT PREMIUMS

aling achievements in circulation that rought expressions of amazement from ion managers, newspaper publishers and sing agencies throughout the land, the geles Examiner with its Government re- March 31, exhibited a seven-year growth, he U. S. Census of 1920, that bids fair nd alone in the annals of American perdom.

he first place, the figures as of March 31, showed a growth during the circulation at was greater than that of any other n Los Angeles whether morning, evening nday. To the already supreme morning readership six days a week, The Examiner 25,867 circulation. To its Sunday read- up, which has been double the other Sun- per for a considerable period, it added brought the net-paid six months' average week-day Examiner up to 197,641, and nday Examiner up to 425,308, at a higher han subscribers have to pay for any other in Los Angeles.

ulation managers, acquainted with The ner's policy of never giving premiums to old subscribers, will be particularly in- g in the figures above, as will advertisers preciate the additional value of a reader- ained on merit alone.

Seven Years Upward

consider further analysis of the trend wspaper reading in Los Angeles. The for the past seven years show:

66 out of every 100 NEW readers of a week-day morning paper in Los Angeles chose The Examiner

75 out of every 100 NEW Sunday paper buyers also preferred this paper.

how about the other newspapers? Here's very 100 NEW buyers of ANY newspaper s Angeles during the past seven years ed their choice of reading.

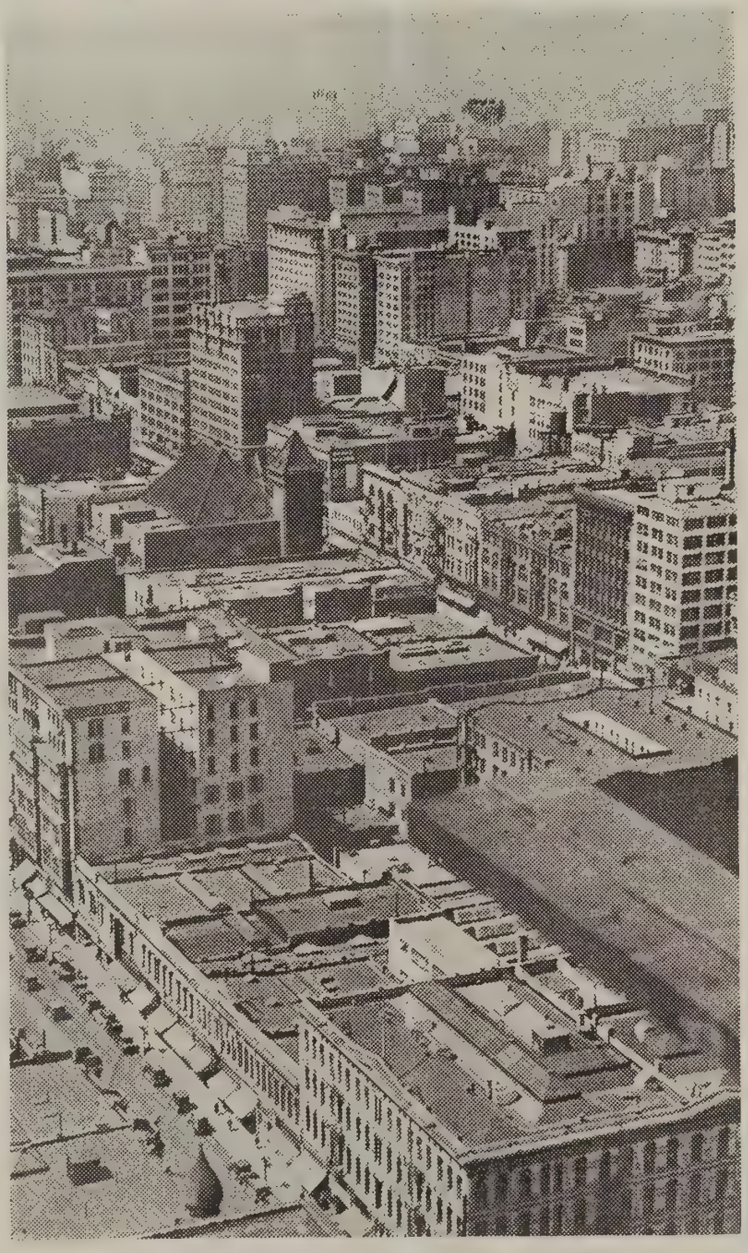
l on six-day only, in fairness to evening which publish no Sunday editions.)

36 chose The Examiner
22 chose an evening paper
20 chose another evening paper
16 chose the second morning paper
6 chose a third evening paper

100

though that were not a sufficient bit of ce, Los Angeles added approximately 0 families in that seven-year period. The ner, six days a week, added 126,261 cir- n, and on Sundays 275,283!

case for reader-preference rests with the



Angeles P. O. Increase Nearly Twice Average

postal receipts of Los Angeles for March a gain of 6.51 per cent over the re- of March, 1926, whereas, according to re- made to the Postmaster-General, the e gain of the fifty largest cities for this period was but 3.39 per cent.

Los Angeles receipts were $816,358; arch last year they were $766,449.

Francisco's receipts were $757,404, as ed to $724,580 in March a year ago, a of 4.53 per cent.

Just a Small Part of Fifth U. S. City

Southland in Prosperity Era!

Los Angeles and Southern California Enjoying Fruits of Productive Wealth!

Los Angeles is riding on the peak-wave of prosperity!

Deluged by productive wealth that brought $90,000,000 from Los Angeles County's agricultural activity last year, a billion and a quarter from her factories, and over half a million barrels of oil into her lap every day for 365 days, and is still doing it, Los Angeles is spending her money lavishly, piling up material comforts.

Homes are being reared at the rate of one every 46 minutes; over $850,000,000 is going through the clearing house monthly, or close to $850 for every man, woman and child in the city; bank deposits are piling up and have gone well past the $1,100,000,000 mark; during the month of March, in Southern California (over half the population of which is in Los Angeles County) 11,265 automobiles were sold, while a further analysis of automobile sales show that 33⅓ per cent of Southern California automobile owners have more than one car, as against 18 per cent for the Nation.

Additional wealth is pouring in from exports which, last year, increased 30% over the previous year, while imports went up 11 per cent, showing a net trade balance in favor of Los Angeles, of 19 per cent.

Los Angeles is well off; in fact, better off than any other large city in America, for purchasing power analysis by such experts as H. G. Weaver of General Motors and Dr. Paul H. Nystrom, foremost authority on retail trade, show this section to have a spending ability per individual twice as great as that of the nation as a whole, while the per capita annual income of $1107 for Los Angeles County, surpasses that of any other county in America.

THOROUGHNESS AND VERSATILITY SHOWN

Dipping into the files of current expressions of thanks we emerged a few days ago with three choice bits of testimony of The Examiner's ability and versatility in delivering for the advertiser. Number One came from a man who sells cabin-sites up at Arrow-Bear Lake, in the mountains above Los Angeles, a playground place for people who can afford to indulge in such pleasant ways of life. The gentleman goes down rather heavily on the loud pedal, but that was his enthusiasm expressing itself. You may apply restraint where good judgment dictates, in reading this, but you'll understand, we believe, that the writer felt rather grateful: Here's the letter:

"It is little short of remarkable the way we are securing answers to our 'Historical Contest' running each Sunday in The Examiner. This contest has proven to us that your paper is the largest medium in the West, and I am almost baffled at the great returns from the small space used. As an experienced advertising man I am used to successes as well as disappointments—but it is my candid opinion that our advertising now being used in your paper is bringing returns far greater than could be secured from any other similar medium in the World.

"In addition I might add that the people who enter our contest are of the very highest type—the very class of people we desire to patronize Arrow-Bear Lake and secure homes in Arrow-Bear Park—the 'Playground Above the Clouds.'"

(Signed) M. P. Carlock, Pres.
Arrow-Bear Realty Company.

From a Clothier

Number Two came from Mr. Leo S. Fonarow, who sells clothing, and who has a sagacity for analyzing his advertising expenditures that is little short of remarkable. It is no new thing for him to write us of Examiner resultfulness from his viewpoint, but this time he has discovered a somewhat different slant. He has found that new business secured for his establishment through his Examiner advertising, costs 60% less than new business secured through other advertising. Not for just a day, not for just a month, not for just a year. . . . but for fourteen consecutive months!

We offer his letter herewith:

"As you know, we tabulate how we get each new customer and in checking over the results for the past fourteen months, we find that the Examiner new business costs us 60% less per customer than any other paper we are advertising in.

"This should be good news to you and is very gratifying to us. We do not hesitate to give credit when credit is deserved."

Admires Survey

A. J. Olsen, guiding hand of the A. J. Olsen Advertising Agency of Los Angeles, wrote letter Number Three, neither about summer-cabin sites on the rim of lakes, nor about clothes, but in connection with the thoroughness that characterizes every Merchandising Service survey the Examiner lends its talent to. Many papers now have Merchandising Service Departments. The Examiner claims no distinction on that score. What it does claim is intelligent guidance of that department and thoroughness and accuracy of reports for the guidance of salesmanagers. Mr. Olsen writes:

"The survey of the hand cleaner market, made by your merchandising service, reached me today. Let me compliment the Examiner on the thorough way in which it was conducted and the neat way in which it was presented. I found the information contained in it very interesting and helpful.

"The advertisements which have run during April seem to have pulled unusually well."

ADVERTISER'S FAITH IN NEWSPAPERS STRENGTHENED BY EUROPEAN TRIP

Grace Walton Finds "Women the Same the World Over"—Respond Quickest to Advertising Placed in the Dailies, She Says—Sees Opportunities for Americans Abroad

By GRACE WALTON

Advertising Manager, Julius Kayser Company

Miss Walton returned recently from a trip abroad undertaken with a view to studying market and merchandising conditions in the Scandinavian countries. EDITOR & PUBLISHER asked her to write her impressions, which are herewith reproduced.

"WHAT fools we advertising mortals be—or is it only I"—that was the question which knocked on my brain after leaving first Oslo, then Stockholm and then Copenhagen. And I kept saying, "How can American manufacturers who advertise know these countries from an advertising point of view without coming to them—and studying the possibilities, the marketing value, the ways and methods?" How can it be put across without knowing, for certainly a little bit of knowledge and theory is dangerous business.

GRACE WALTON

I answered this by "They leave it to the advertising agency." With all due respects to agencies, that system reminds me of a doctor who takes it upon himself to recommend by mail, medicine for a patient he hasn't seen for five or ten years. If long distance medicine recommendation was put into effect it ought to stimulate the undertaking business greatly. And the same takes effect in advertising and merchandising in foreign lands—it's bound to.

I believe I am quite safe in saying people are the same the world over—what differs is the country. They all have legs, arms, hair, etc., and they all react to the beautiful and personal decoration which can better be termed in this instance as "Style." They all have minds, and they all read and write. The great difference comes in language, food, inconsequential habits and climate.

Have you ever stopped to think that the entire world reads newspapers? People in litle towns and big cities follow them as they would the Bible. If one must make the cruel comparison between the number of papers with the number of magazines printed in a country, it is safe to say there are 100 to 1. There is no question but what nine American advertisers out of ten get a mental picture of advertising being divided in the same proportions between newspapers and magazines in foreign lands as they are in the United States. Yes, and with this mental picture we all make the mistake of preparing copy of a magazine good will nature for both mediums. Or if the job is left to the foreign agency the copy is bound to be heavy and uninteresting because they have never known anything else or yet felt the results from quick selling style advertising. One must never lose sight of the fact that newspapers were created to carry news—that is their prime object—therefore, the advertiser should use this medium with the sole idea of announcing something new and creating an impression.

A newspaper is dead in less than 24 hours and once read is thrown away and forgotten. Of course, if a manufacturer can afford to use the newspaper every day in the week and every week in the year, he can also afford to use and run the kind of copy he jolly well pleases, for constant repetition always wins. There are few, however, who are lucky enough for this, and therefore must be of an analytical nature in order to put the game across in the most profitable way. We Americans should make our ads tingle with news and interest, for surely our products are far more novel to the foreign reader than those made in their own country.

Picture Oslo with a population of 250,000, Copenhagen with 900,000 and Stockholm with 500,000 and compare them with St. Paul, Detroit and San Francisco. What do you see? First of all busy streets which are crowded with smartly dressed women and, of course, men (the latter being of little account) who are rushing in and out of up-to-date stores and buildings. "Smartly dressed"—that means nothing at all except that instead of visualizing style as a bird which flies from Paris to America one finds a nest of birds, which fly north and south, east and west. In some respects it is easier for these style birds to get into these countries, for Paris, at most, is only two days away—which means people travel and bring back the ideas almost over night—but for the poor people who cannot travel, news is delayed, for there are few, very few, good style magazines, and these people must rely on the stores to give them the styles through their daily advertising and store displays. What a chance for the American manufacturer—whether he be one selling automobiles or fancy goods—for here the newspapers can carry the message with little or no competition.

One notices how far superior the foreign posters are to those in America—so full of color, simplicity and striking design. How strange, then, that the newspaper ads are so backward. Is it because America with her ideas of advertising has stunted their initiative or is it because the medium of black and white, small space strikes fear into their colorful souls? It takes a bigger man than I am, "Gunga-Din," to answer this deep question. All I can say is there is a big chance for someone to revolutionize.

I had a young advertiser say to me: "Why, those modern selling ideas will never go across in Copenhagen." I'm wondering how many young American advertisers said that very thing about this country no more than ten years ago. I, for one, can think of several who felt and talked like that and later lost their jobs. And so, if American women will respond to up-to-date advertising of a style nature, it is my belief that women who are American in every way, save language, will also.

ISSUES MARKET SURVEY

The Indianapolis News recently issued the 1927 edition of the "Indianapolis Radius," which carries market data for general advertisers.

BARTHOLOMEW PROMOTED

Made U. P. Pacific Coast Manager—Palmer in Charge of News

Announcement was made this week of the appointment of Frank H. Bartholomew as manager of the Pacific division of the United Press, in charge of both news and business succeeding H. E. Swisher, who has become managing editor of the Hollywood (Cal.) Citizen.

F. H. BARTHOLOMEW

Bartholomew heretofore has been Pacific Coast business representative. Prior to that time he was manager of the United Press bureaus in Los Angeles and Portland, Ore., and business representative in Texas.

Associated with Bartholomew on the coast will be D. N. Palmer, as manager of the San Francisco bureau. Palmer was formerly in the Denver bureau. He will be on "the desk" at San Francisco, in direct charge of handling the news, while Bartholomew plans to spend much of his time traveling.

NEW TEXAS DAILY

The Midland (Tex.) Daily Gusher has been inaugurated as an afternoon, except Saturday, and Sunday morning publication, by Noble & Bailey. Calvin Noble, managing editor, has been publishing the West Texas Gusher, weekly, at Midland. Joe L. Bailey is from Brownfield, Tex.

GRAPHIC'S SPORTS BANQUET

The New York Evening Graphic held its second annual sports dinner at the Hotel Astor on May 12.

EDITORS TO TOUR STATE

A "Know Tennessee" press tour been arranged to follow the second an convention of the Tennessee Press Ass ation which will be held at Nashv Monday, May 16. The tour will be 17, 18 and 19. Towns and cities on itinerary are Dickson, Bruceton, Pa McKenzie, Milan, Humboldt, Jack Trenton, Union City, Martin, Gi Dyersburg, Ripley, Covington, Memphis.

GATINEAU MILL PRODUCING

Production of paper on a commer basis has been started at the Gatin mill of the Canadian International Pa Company. One machine is in opera and three others will begin produc within a few months. The machines designed to produce 1,200 feet of 256-i paper a minute, or 150 tons of pape day.

WANTS E. & P. BACK NUMBER

To complete the EDITOR & PUBLIS files, Herbert Putnam, librarian of Library of Congress is asking for following issues of this paper, now of print:

Jan. 26, 1924; Jan. 31, 1925; Feb. to May 18, 1918; and June 8, 1918. Putnam will appreciate any assista readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER can g him in completing the files.

TO PRESERVE EDITOR'S HOME

The log cabin of Charles W. Penro editor of the Deseret News for a num of years and a hymn writer who die year or two ago at the age of 93, is to preserved as a memorial. It is located Farmington, near Salt Lake City.

GIFT TO LIBRARY

T. P. Hause, editor of the Interla (N. Y.) Review, has presented the Int lake Library with bound copies of Review for the past 39 years, making complete history of the community.

The ALTOONA MIRROR

published

1,120,448

lines of advertising in April

158,200

lines of the above was national advertising, a gain over April, 1926, of 31,640 lines.

Circulation statement for six months ending March 31st—29,231.

96.8% of the families who receive the Mirror are conscious of preferring the Mirror for advertising purposes.

The ALTOONA MIRROR

Altoona, Pa.

Business Direct

Fred G. Pearce, Manager of Advertising

Margy's coming to town in a new daily comic strip

"MERELY MARGY—

an awfully sweet girl"

by the great John Held Jr.

Neat

Sweet

Petite

THE FLAPPER WIT OF THE AGE OF YOUTH

Copyright 1927 King Features Syndicate, Inc.

All the World Is Falling in Love with Her, for She Is Indeed Adorable!

For Release NOW! — In Six Column Mat Form

Wire or Write for Terms and Reservation

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, Inc.

241 West 58th St. M. KOENIGSBERG, President New York City

SULLIVAN DENIES INDUCING TRADE BODY TO ISSUE ADVERTISING COMPLAINT

Former Secretary of Association of National Advertisers, Controverting A. N. P. A. Agency Report, Says He Fought for Years to Keep A. N. A. from Commission Controversy

JOHN SULLIVAN, who resigned as secretary of the Association of National Advertisers in November, 1924, in a communication received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week denies that he was in any way concerned with the initiation by the Federal Trade Commission of its complaint against several organizations in the advertising agency and publishing fields charging illegal practices and restraint of trade. Mr. Sullivan's letter, which was called forth by a statement in the recent annual report of the Agency Committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, follows, in full:

John Sullivan

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Although a subscriber to the EDITOR & PUBLISHER, I missed a statement in the report of the A. N. P. A. Advertising Agency Committee, printed in your issue of April 30, as follows:

"Some two years ago some members and the Secretary of the Association of National Advertisers are alleged to have induced the Federal Trade Commission to issue complaint against the Association of Advertising Agencies, the American Newspaper Publishers Association—which includes the Bureau of Advertising—the Special Representatives Association of New York, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association and the American Press Association."

(I have not referred to any record, but I remember that the issuance of the complaint came to my notice in December, 1924, at almost the beginning of the long illness which was the occasion of my having resigned from the A. N. A. in the previous month; so it may be assumed that the "Secretary of the Association of National Advertisers" referred to is myself.)

The statement is gratuitous in view of the fact that the initiation of the complaint by the A. N. A., or even the involvement of the A. N. A. in the matter, has already been publicly denied at least three times—in 1923, 1924 and 1926. But because I know that it has been stated many times viva voce that I brought about the complaint to the Federal Trade Commission, I am really thankful for being at last given an opportunity to deal personally with this matter.

It is true that as long ago as the fall of 1922, information had come to me as to the possibility of certain advertisers making complaint to the Federal Trade Commission concerning the activities of the A. A. A. A. during the almost three previous years. (I will refer again to this date later on.) The first intimation, however, that came to me that any government department had moved in this matter was when I was requested by telephone to go down to the offices of the Department of Justice in the Federal Building. On arriving there, I learned that my name had been given to the attorney by an official of the A. N. P. A. as a man supposed to be well informed concerning advertising agency practice and relationships. In the course of two and a half hours' questioning, I learned definitely that not only the Department of Justice, but the Federal Trade Commission, had begun to act on a complaint made to them by certain advertisers against the A. A. A. A., not, at that time, any other body.

Now let me go back to the fall of 1922. Here is something that is not known generally, the recital of which should end the gossip concerning myself which has been current since the spring of 1923 in relation to this complaint. There had come to the A. N. A. a definite request—practically an invitation—for the Association to father a complaint to the Federal Trade Commission against the A. A. A. A., alleging conspiracy in restraint of trade in interstate commerce. It was my duty, as Secretary, to bring this letter before the Executive Committee. I read the letter aloud and then, laying it down, I said:

"Now, gentlemen, I hope you will permit me to speak first concerning this matter. Since the action of the A. N. A. in May, 1921, in, unwisely, as you will remember I held at the time, reopening controversy on the agency commission system, I have been regarded as so opposed to advertising agencies as to be willing to go to any length against them. This, as you know, is absolutely untrue and you also know that I opposed the A. N. A. Agency Committee in the steps that were taken throughout 1921. My firm opinion is that the A. N. A. must not do anything with this proposed complaint to the Federal Trade Commission. It is not any business of the Association as an Association. It is purely a matter for an individual company or individual companies. Moreover, it is obvious that no action whatever can be taken in such a matter without a vote of the whole Association and without that vote the Executive Committee can scarcely undertake to change a long established policy, viz., that the A. N. A. should always endeavor to settle disputes between itself and other interests without recourse to any government department."

The members of the Executive Committee concurred, inevitably and naturally. They were, of course, exceedingly interested, but they agreed unanimously that no action could be taken by the Association.

Let me reveal something else: When I learned of this complaint being made to the Department of Justice, as stated above, I at once sensed something of probable serious import to advertisers' interests. It was apparent that any consequent and subsequent action by the Department of Justice might secure a degree and volume of publicity that might be of such a character as to affect adversely public confidence in advertising. (If anyone should think that a far-fetched hypothesis, let him come into my office some day and I'll tell him a story of how a simple, innocent A. N. A. investigation unexpectedly and astoundingly made a number of its members the targets of political parties in a Middle West State.)

After consulting with another, and superior, officer of the A. N. A., I butted right into that end of the complaint situation and—well, it was not long before further action by the Department of Justice was suspended. The suspension was observed at the time by the advertising trade papers, but the reason then given for the suspension was not the correct reason. I may add that the facts were given nearly four years ago to a president of the A. A. A. A. who ventured to allege what the A. N. P. A. Committee has wrongly assumed.

Still other information: I was requested while in Washington on one occasion in 1923 to call upon one of the chiefs of the Federal Trade Commission to discuss not the advertiser-agency situation, but the factors and fundamentals of national distribution. I wanted some information also myself; and, toward the close of the interview, I brought up the complaint against the A. A. A. A. and asked whether it was the intention of the Commission to take action against the system of agency compensation. The answer was definite and downright, No. I said, "I am very glad to know that because I am firmly of the opinion that that is a question to be settled not by any government agency, but solely between individual advertisers and individual advertising agencies."

So much for the allegation of the A. N. P. A. Advertising Agency Committee which has, I am glad to say, given me the opportunity to give, or endeavor to give, the quietus to other and verbal allegations of the past four years. Mind, I am not saying that the complaint was unjustified; that is not my business anyway. What I do say is that the A. N. A. was not in any way connected with or involved in it and that I took the initial step against any such connection or involvement. And, further, that I used influence to prevent extreme harm resulting from the complaint to advertisers and agencies and also that I took steps not only once, by the way, but three times, to prevent any interference with the method of agency compensation; not because it is necessarily the best method, but because any method, so long as it is legal, is the affair of the advertiser and his agency—not of advertisers and agencies collectively, but of individual advertisers and individual agencies.

Now, may I say something else; this time about the agency commission system itself and my personal views on that question; not necessarily to advertise my personal opinion, but to show the unwisdom of any attempt to change the system, say, overnight—something which, by the way, is impossible of accomplishment:

In 1912, not 1910, and before I joined the A. N. A., the A. N. A. M., afterwards the A. N. A., did call into question the commission system of agency remuneration; not, however, with any real hope of changing it quickly, but with a desire to increase and improve agency service to advertisers. The famous A. N. A. Agency Committee Report issued at that time was written, in the main, not by an A. N. A. man, but by a notable in the publishing world of fifteen years ago—a big executive of a very big publication.

The agitation of the advertisers—perhaps I should say the advertising managers—broke out again in May, 1921, after a long-sustained effort, covering three and a half years, on the part of several of us to keep it under ground and to endeavor to work out something co-operatively with the A. A. A. A. This is not the place for the complete story, but, again, the causes of the agitation were deeper than any mere desire to destroy the commission system. Nevertheless, there was that desire. I was personally opposed to the question being brought on to the public street of advertising, so to speak; again, not because a better system was impossible, but because that better system must come gradually by evolution and not by revolution, by individual action and not by collective action. I was sure that no publisher would cease paying commission to agencies and that the movement for change, i.e., change overnight, must necessarily come to the end of a blind alley; and I do not like blind alleys in business affairs.

I would like to tell a quite detailed story, but will confine myself to stating why the commission form of agency compensation cannot easily pass away. There is sufficient material available for a small book on the subject, but only an outline can here be given:

In the first place, if the commission system were abolished, publishers as a whole would not reduce their advertising rates to the net, i. e., they would not take 15 per cent off those rates. They wouldn't dare to do so, because they could not know to what extent their space selling expenses might be increased. They would most certainly be increased—by larger sales forces, new or larger service organizations, greater and more intense sales promotion effort. Consequently, advertisers would have to pay gross rates for net.

The vast majority of the advertisers would keep their agencies—couldn't do without them. That being so, their Boards of Directors would have to appropriate at least 15 per cent more money for agency fees—probably an additional aggregate sum of $50,000,000 to $75,000,000. Many of them, of course, would refuse to pay even the equivalent of 15 per cent in fees, and, in consequence, much agency service would have to be cut down if the agencies wished to remain in business.

The payment of these large additional sums of money to the advertising agencies would undoubtedly lead to the cutting down of industrial advertising departments and even the salaries of department executives and subordinates. And I guess that the association through whose efforts the abolition of the commission system might be brought about would lose the bulk of its membership as a consequence of resentment by Boards of Directors and the need for economy.

No, the change to another method must slowly—in fact, imperceptibly. It must between individual manufacturers and indiv agencies, with no one agitating the matte no one, of course, violating the United S constitution. New and general practice in vertiser-agency relations cannot come about denly. If it could, it would be paralyzing publishers, to agencies and especially to ad tisers. Moreover, if a new and general pra should be warranted, it will not come abou all unless the advertisers are willing to sufficient to render the agencies economi independent of third party interests.

"My goodness," someone, I know, is say "John Sullivan has changed his opinions cally in the last two and a half years." On contrary, he has not changed his opinion the subject of the agency commission syste ten years.

Those opinions (I really think they are l than opinions) can be found in a documen the files of the A. N. A. under date of J 1923. They were expressed in a report by self to the A. N. A. Agency Committee and report was afterwards adopted unanimously the Executive Committee—even the actual thors of the outbreak of May, 1921, voting the affirmative.

That is why the question of the agency c mission system has not been, openly at le agitated in the A. N. A. since July, 1923. any rate, it was not agitated again up to cember, 1924, and since then nothing has b visible on the outside.

May I say that in September, 1923, I all this to a president of the A. A. A. A. had challenged me as to my personal views the subject. He had intimated that those vi differed from the views of the Directors of A. N. A., meaning, of course, that the Direct were the conservatives and I was the radi and I told him the facts with the knowledge the A. N. A. Directors at the time. All the man who wrote the A. N. P. A. Age Committee Report doesn't know; perhaps doesn't wish to know. I would, however, s gest that in future it might be well for him follow a policy that I consistently followed wh in the A. N. A., viz., always to get informat at first hand before making any statement.

JOHN SULLIVAN.

BUYS KINSTON NEWS

W. W. Weaver, former publisher the Durham (N. C.) Sun, an afterno newspaper, and later the Durham Com Progress, a weekly, has purchased co trol of the Kinston (N. C.) News.

Service Beyond Service
---local art and engraving for client papers.

NEA

NEA Service, Inc.,
1200 West Third Street
CLEVELAND, OHIO

IN THE City of Homes
The Philadelphia Record
Opens the Door of 150,000 Families Every Morning

People who read the best buy the best

Consolidated Press dispatches
"go where money is"

ALABAMA
First State in the South

ust read his letter—

'Nuf Sed"!

J. H. AXT, VICE PRESIDENT
H. E. WALDRON, VICE PRESIDENT

W. A. SHEAFFER
PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER

W. A. SHEAFFER PEN CO.
FORT MADISON, IOWA

C. R. SHEAFFER, TREASURER
W. A. SCHERFE, SECRETARY

SHEAFFER'S "PROFEL-REPEL-EXPEL" PENCIL

BRANCH OFFICES
NEW YORK, 60 FIFTH AVE
CHICAGO, 506 7 REPUBLIC BLDG
SAN FRANCISCO, 681 MARKET ST
DENVER, 503 JACOBSEN BLDG

SHEAFFER'S "Lifetime"

April 20, 1927

Mr. Frank Bull,
National Advertising Mgr.
BIRMINGHAM NEWS,
Birmingham, Alabama.

My dear Frank:

You should know of Sheaffer's phenomenal success in the Birmingham market and of the important part played by the NEWS in helping us attain such success.

Birmingham has always been recognized as an exceptionally fine market for Sheaffers, but not until recently did we realize exactly the headway being made, a great part of which has been possible through the excellent cooperation of the BIRMINGHAM NEWS.

We have experienced an average of 140% increase in sales in Birmingham since 1924. The year 1926 gave us 160% increase over 1925. That means Birmingham is a better market for Sheaffers, four times over than any average market. In other words, when we obtain $100.00 in sales from the average market we can expect $400.00 from the Birmingham market.

And the fact that we have been in the NEWS consistently and exclusively since the beginning of Sheaffer newspaper efforts in Birmingham should be extremely gratifying to you.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes.

Very truly yours,

W. A. SHEAFFER PEN COMPANY

By Carl K. Hart
Advertising Manager.

CKH:D

The Birmingham News

The South's Greatest Newspaper

NATIONAL REPRESENTATIVES

KELLY-SMITH CO., New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia—J. C. HARRIS, Jr., Atlanta

THE LIFE and LETTER

Private Wilson Letters R... Many Secrets of...

Woodrow Wilson's private unpublished let... hav... been purchased by the Boston Evening Amer... chusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, an... lished serially exclusively by this paper and the... vertiser.

Ray Stannard Baker, the chosen biographer, has been at work ever since the late President's death col- family and to close friends. A staff of trai...

Letters Of Wilson To A...

Unsuspected Reve... Documents Obta... of War Pr...

DROW WILSON... unpublished let... have been pur... Seattle Post-Intelli... be published excl... Hearst papers on t... They have be... explanatory note... Stannard Baker... the most... biography in o... ry and... in next S... for wi... publication wil... Sunday for s... ever since Mrs. Woo... announced two... had committe... task of asse... ical form the l... of the late ... competition ha... publishing he... papers for the pr... shing this intimat... life of the great...

,000 LETTERS

The contract for bri... e work, which will be... n four large annual vo... first of which will ap... November, was signed... by Mr. Baker with ... Page and Company. ... widespread demand fo... tion rights, the Hear... were successful in get...

More than 200,000 le... ten by Mr. Wilson t... his lifetime were turne... Mr. Baker, including th... most revealing characte... bers of his family and... loved friends. ... tants was e... four ... of w...

WILSON'S INNER LIFE REVEALED BY HIS LETTERS

Herald and Examiner Will P... lish Great Private Docum... of the Late President.

Woodrow Wilson's privat... lished letters and papers ... purchased by the Herald ... ner and will be published ... by this paper.

Ray Stannard Baker ... biographer, has been ... since the late Preside... lecting his private le... The most importa... tory and biography ... tion will begin nex... its publication w... and Sunday for si...

Ever since Mr... announced two ... had committed ... task of assem... form the lette... late Preside... has gone ... houses had ... lege of ... story of ... President ...

The Sentinel Will Publish Personal Letters of Wilson

WOODROW WILSON'S private, unpublished letters and papers have been purchased by The Milwaukee Sentinel and will be published exclusively by this paper. Mr. Ray Stannard Baker, the chosen biog... the late presidents' death collecting letters.

t impor... of his... biography ... eneration ... ext Sep... its pub... ll con... nd Sun... to eight ...

ce Mrs. ... ilson an... o years ... she had ... to Mr. ... task of ... in blo... form the ... memoirs ... president, ...

TIMES HERALD WILL PUBLISH WILSON'S LIFE

OBTAINS RIGHTS FOR NORTH TEXAS OF NOTABLE BIOGRAPHY

The serial publication rights for "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson," by Ray Stannard Baker, have been acquired for North Texas by The Times Herald.

Beginning in September and continuing for approximately ... weeks, this newspaper wi... daily installments ... epochal bi... ever under...

Ever sinc... announced ... had commit... task of colla... biographical ... memoirs of th... ited competiti... publishing ho... dicates and ot... for the privile... the reading p... story of the life ... son.

The contract f... work, which wi... four large annual ... of which will ap... ber, was signed re... ker with Doubled... of Garden City, N... Herald was successf... work for Dallas and ... tory prior to its appe... form.

Discloses the Real W...

The real Woodrow ... on will ...

THE TIMES BUYS RIGHTS TO REAL LIFE OF WILSON

Ray Stannard Baker's Biography To Be Started In September.

FIRST INTIMATE STORY

New York P...

TIMES to Publish "Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson"

Authentic and Dramatic Picture of Great... dent Told in Wonderful Autobiogra... Be Published Exclusively in Buffalo ... Newspaper.

Following the dramatic account of how a New Yo... and his wife secured the serial rights for "The Life ... Wilson," for newspaper publication ... have paid more ... for the four-year ... to publish in New York thi... biography of a Democratic presi... dent. Western North Carolin... rights for the four volumes wer...

TIMES GETS WILSON'S LETTERS

Woodrow Wilson's private unpublished letters and papers have been purchased by The Detroit Times and will be published exclusively by this paper. Mr. Ray Stannard Baker, the chosen biographer, has been at

Herald Tribun... Will Publish... Wilson's Life

Acquires Rights in 3 State... to Baker Biography o... President, and Begins In... stallments in Septembe...

Prize Was Sought By Many Paper...

Appearance Will Preced... Doubleday, Page & Co.'... Publication of Volume...

The serial publication rights fo... "The Life and Letters of Woodro... Wilson," by Ray Stannard Baker, ha... been acquired for New York, Ne... Jersey and Connecticut by the Herald Tribune.

Beginning in September and co... tinuing for approximately ... week... this newspaper will publish daily in... stallments of the most epochal biogra... phy of a President ever undertaken.

Sought by Many Newspapers

Ever since Mrs. Woodrow Wilso... announced two years ago that she ha... committed to Mr. Baker the task o... collating and assembling in biographi... cal form the letters and memoirs o... the late President, spirited competi... tion has gone on among publishin... houses, newspapers, syndicates, and... other publishing media for the priv... ilege of presenting to the reading pub... lic this intimate story of the life o... Woodrow Wilson.

The contract for bringing out the... work, which will be published in fou... large annual volumes, the first of whic... will appear next November, was signed... recently by Mr. Baker with Doubleday, Page & Co., of Garden City. Despite... a widespread demand for publication... rights by other newspapers, the Herald... Tribune was successful in buying the... work for New York and adjacent terri... tory prior to its appearance in book... form. The biography will be published... simultaneously in "The Paris Herald," European edition of the Herald Tribune.

Discloses the Real Wilson

The real Woodrow Wilson will live again in this story of his life as revealed by his own letters to friends, relatives, college and political associates, schoolmates and strangers with whom he was brought into personal or official contact.

It is estimated that more than 200,000 letters written by Mr. Wilson throughout his lifetime were turned over to Mr. Baker, including those of the most revealing character to members of his family and to close and beloved friends. A staff of trained assistants was engaged to assemble

f WOODROW WILSON

ERIAL rights of "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson" have been acquired by newspapers covering half of the United States.

After the first release of 80,000 or more words, this year, there will be e other volumes issued about twelve months apart. Each of the four als will run daily for a period not exceeding eight weeks, before book pub- tion. The newspapers which hold exclusive rights will have the most able feature of our times.

The narrative will be largely autobiographical—Mr. Wilson's own story through private letters and papers hitherto unpublished. Besides revel- ns of history and diplomacy, the biography will contain a wealth of anec- s. A joyous Woodrow Wilson will emerge from behind the screen of a olar's reticence. A human, friendly Woodrow Wilson will be disclosed eath the mantle of serious student, philosopher, diplomat, and statesman.

Two years of active efforts by many publishers to obtain the worldwide lication rights ended when the contract was signed between Doubleday, e & Company and Ray Stannard Baker, whom Mrs. Wilson had selected he biographer. Requests for serial rights came from cities all over the ld. Nearly every newspaper in New York made application. It is a que tribute to the undertaking that the successful purchaser was the New k Herald Tribune, one of the foremost Republican journals of country.

More than 200,000 of Mr. Wilson's letters and other unpublished uscripts were turned over to Mr. Baker, who organized a staff of ed assistants to aid in compressing the vast material into four volumes. ddition to the original material from the Wilson family, the author has ived thousands of letters, filled with anecdotes and memories of Mr. on's early life, from boyhood friends and relations.

Of the four volumes, perhaps the most surprising will be the first. Even mature Wilson was little known to the public, for he shunned personal licity all his days. The youthful Wilson was known hardly at all. Mr. er makes him live again—this extraordinary boy who played at games of l strategy, became known in his college days as a mimic and jig dancer, indulged in ludicrous high-jinks with his close friends, but always kept his focused upon the ambition to excel in oratory, literature, and maybe ical preferment. The story of the young Woodrow Wilson, never told re, will fascinate the reading world.

The later volumes will contain political history heretofore unchronicled, nside story of American diplomacy through eight vital years, and the first plete narrative of our part in the war from the viewpoint of Woodrow on.

Comments of Our Friendly Rivals

From George H. Doran,
President, George H. Doran Company:

I have just had from Mr. Everitt confirmation of the announcement in the New York Herald-Tribune of your forthcoming publication of "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson," by Ray Stannard Baker.

I congratulate you upon having this great work. It must ever remain one of the most important contributions to the literature of American history, and letters, and none the less do I congratulate the Herald-Tribune on securing the newspaper serial rights. It is a master stroke of genius upon their part, for apart entirely from the great public interest and intrinsic newspaper value of the book, they have exhibited rare good sense and broad-mindedness in thus exploiting the life of a man whose political faith differed from their own. Altogether, it is a great event in American Letters.

From Frederick A. Stokes,
President, Frederick A. Stokes Company:

Heartiest congratulations on your great coup in securing "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson!" This is a publishing achievement that should fill you with pride. You have certainly brought to your list a work of notable historical interest and of vast importance generally. It should, of course, have not only an immense immediate sale, but one that should continue for many years to come.

While I envy you both the prestige and the prosperity coming from your achievement, I wish you the greatest possible success in all respects.

From Horace Green,
President, Duffield & Company:

Now that the time approaches for the publication of "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson," by Ray Stannard Baker, I can't resist sending a line of congratulation on your achievement.

The house of Doubleday, Page & Company is the logical publisher of the book, and the fact that The Herald-Tribune—generally supposed to be of opposite political faith from Mr. Wilson—should secure and publish the first serial rights, is a happy comment on American journalism. In the field of American biography I recall no greater event since the publication of General Grant's Personal Memoirs of the Civil War.

Where Serial Rights Have Been Sold:

New York
Chicago
Boston
Washington
Detroit
Baltimore
San Francisco
Los Angeles
Kansas City
Buffalo
Dallas
Milwaukee
Atlanta
Seattle
Houston
Oklahoma City
San Antonio
Harrisburg
Mobile
Montgomery
Oakland
Asheville
Paris
Mexico City

. P. SYNDICATE, Garden City, N. Y.

EDITORIAL

And hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth.—Revelation, V; 10.

RIVER CONTROL

DURING the week St. Louis Globe-Democrat offered the country an excellent piece of constructive journalism. It carried a ringing editorial asking that a commission of distinguished engineers be formed to study control of the Mississippi river and report findings to Congress in December. Did thoughtful, patriotic citizens rise to this suggestion? Indeed, the Globe-Democrat published 18 columns of appreciative comment in a subsequent issue.

Regular annual losses, sometimes terrible tragedies, due to failure on the part of the government to control a flood situation that is susceptible to scientific engineering, is an indictment of the nation. Behind it lies apathy and false economy. Now a newspaper has stepped out and demanded that this constant peril be met and we shall expect that at last something sensible will be done to protect the people of the Mississippi Valley. It required a Dr. Gorgas to challenge unnecessary annual yellow fever epidemics. Indeed, all great reforms and developments trace their origin to some sincere, intelligent, zealous person or group who not only had the idea but energy to press it to a conclusion.

The Rhine is a controlled river. Once it did its annual damage. The same may be said of the Nile. A famous German engineer discovered that the secret of river control was to start at the source and work to the mouth. In Egypt British engineers followed the same principle. Both rivers today appear free of flood danger. France has not controlled her river system, with resultant losses and dangers. In the United States we have tackled Mississippi control at the mouth and in very weak spirit. The subject demands just what the Globe-Democrat has advocated.

Perhaps, in the long run, more harm is done by overselling than by underselling advertisers. Common sense and honesty dictate the amount of space a dealer can profitably use.

A SENSIBLE JUDGE

IT would be to the advantage of the press of the United States if our bench could be apprised of the conduct of Mr. Justice Logie in a case which occurred at Toronto last week. In anticipation of some disgusting testimony during the trial of a doctor charged with manslaughter and attempt at illegal operation the judge excluded the public, but allowed the press to report the hearings after warning the reporters to be discreet and "not send certain details of this case into every home."

The publication that two Toronto newspapers made of the first day's testimony caused the defense to contend that the Judge's rule had been violated. The responsible editors were summoned. The judge declared the references were improper. If Mr. Justice Logie had been the typical tyrant of the bench he might have listened to the argument of the lawyer who urged that the editors be held in contempt. Instead he said: "It is only in extreme cases that the extraordinary jurisdiction of the court to fine or commit a newspaper editor is resorted to." He thought that the newspaper references were improper, but were made though mistaken judgment. This did not warrant harsh treatment by the court. He acknowledged the high standards of the papers involved. He hoped the editors would take greater care, lest there be a miscarriage of justice. After the trial was over he was willing, he said, that newspapers might criticize the court and the jury as they should see fit, as that was the true function of the press. He then dismissed the editors.

This even-handed judge did not immediately assume, because he had an editor before him, that he had hooked a horned culprit and his power to punish must be exercised to the limit. On the contrary, he knew that the disposition of the press is to play fair with courts and not interfere with justice. He recognized that mistakes in judgment are common enough even in well regulated families. Mr. Justice Logie's zeal did not run away with his good sense and he did not seek to play judicial dictator as judges so often do in such circumstances. What was the result? The newspapers in question freely and honestly acknowledged their error and the court received from them and the public fresh confidence and strengthened respect.

WHEN ERRORS OCCUR

INTERESTING inquiries are made in a letter received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER from the business manager of a prominent Western newspaper:

> In case a newspaper has made a mistake in the price of an article, and the merchant advertiser has insisted on selling the article at the advertised price, the newspaper standing the loss, do you know of any instance where the matter has been taken to court, and if so, what was the ruling of the court as to the limit of liability on the part of the newspaper?
>
> What is the practice of newspapers generally in this matter?
>
> Do they furnish a correction or a letter to the advertiser, stating that a mistake has been made, or do they generally stand the loss, and if so, to what extent? This is all on the presumption that the newspaper was to blame for the error.
>
> Please give us information on the subject.

If there has ever been an instance where an advertiser recovered on a judgment in such a case it has not come to the attention of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Type errors in advertising, although common, have rarely resulted in disputes that reached the courts. In March, 1923, EDITOR & PUBLISHER recorded the case of a summer resort hotel that brought an action against the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, claiming losses through alleged reckless handling of a series of advertisements, and judgment was rendered for the defendant, it being the decision of the jury that the loss was speculative and problematical. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has recorded other cases where suits were started, but were privately settled. It is not, therefore, possible to give any guiding information regarding an actual adjudication of the question.

Generally it is possible to make an equitable adjustment of such a case when both the management of the newspaper and the advertiser act in reason and sincerely seek to find the line of justice. The trouble begins when either party seizes upon the error to take advantage of the other's misfortune. First, the unavoidability of the accident must be recognized and a decent sympathy felt. Promptly the newspaper should attempt in every possible way to correct the mistake. It is not often possible to do this in the paper, and in such case the newspaper should give the advertiser a letter, explaining in clear and reasonable style how the unfortunate mistake occurred and asking the indulgence of the store's customers who might have been misled.

Most people have wholesome instincts and do not wish to profit from the unavoidable mistakes of others, and when such a letter is shown to a customer he is usually satisfied and bears neither the paper nor the store ill-will. When a customer is not satisfied and presses for his advantage it is customary for the store to sell the article at the advertised price, the newspaper accepting the loss without grudging. However, precautions must be taken to prevent unscrupulous advantage being taken of such a situation. There are cases, for instance, where clerks in the "know" immediately telephone to all of their friends to come in and do a little easy plucking of the winged goose. The store management may be willing to agree to sell only a minimum number of articles at the advertised price and then remove the stock. If the error is glaring and involves a great deal of money it might be the part of wisdom for the newspaper to attempt to buy up the stock at a fair wholesale price and sell it back to the manufacturer or to some store elsewhere and thereby reduce the loss. If the loss is not staggering and the store is disposed to be fair in reducing the volume of merchandise to be unloaded at the price the newspaper customarily pays the store the difference between the advertised price and the price marked in the store's copy. A fair and just merchant will, of course, recognize that a big rush to buy an article which is greatly underpriced due to a type error represents abnormal demand. He w therefore, estimate about what he would have s in normal circumstances and settle on that bas temporarily withdrawing the balance of the stock fr his counters.

Ten years ago the American Newspaper Pu lishers' Association membership passed a resoluti not to be responsible for losses that might accr from typographical errors in advertisements. T provision still stands. It is equitable and serves purpose when the statement is clearly made in advertising contracts that the newspaper and the a vertiser have agreed that the newspaper shall not held responsible for typographical errors.

At any rate, the moment a newspaper is notified its publication of an advertised price below the ra marked in the copy the management should be qui to call on the advertiser and make just settlement wi him. These answers to our friend's query are, course, based on the presumption that the fault li with the newspaper.

Delaware ousts press and public from divorce courts and the hissing sound you hear is the whispering of conspiring shyster lawyers and disloyal husbands and wives who will now do in private what they dared not do in public.

SPIRIT OF DOMINATION

THE action of the Texas ranger who tore news telegrams that an A.P. correspondent h filed at a telegraph office and put the report in jail as punishment for his failure to write wh the ranger thought should be given to the public, a bit crude, but it represents a spirit that is not u common in this country today. In every departme of the newspaper and in every city and town whe reporters and editors work it is encountered. M in high and low office are seen to react identical

It is typical of the bluff-and-stick-and-win poli that is now so common. Have things your own wa Dominate the situation! Submit to no criticis Never mind the facts and don't bother with the righ of others! Demand and get results that are favorab to yourself, the devil take the hindmost! People w operate on that gentle principle often get the reput tion of being "he-men," "giants," "super-men," a sometimes they are even credited with possessi genius. Of course, they are only bulldozers.

Interesting, thoughtful, practical Henry A. Wise Wood foresees the 100-page daily within ten years. We don't much care how big or little they are if they contain the stuff that leads upward and onward.

OWNERSHIP

"IT is immoral for some men to own newspapers The epigram was rather hotly stated by o Luminous Sage during a little office conf this week. Our Luminous Sage never comes into t office empty-handed, or rather empty-headed; invar ably he leaves some treasure for us to toy with. H knows as much about the newspaper business as a man we have met in our travels, and here is an e planation of his views on ownership.

It is immoral for a man to own a newspaper if h does not take seriously the public responsibility th runs with such proprietorship. He regards h property as merely a business, whereas it is a busine plus a civic trusteeship. He is in nowise interest in it as an art, but it does represent a high functi in the artistry of a community. He is unwilling make any sacrifice for it, financial, social or politica But a newspaper demands of its owner consta sacrifice in every department of life. He sits the in full occupancy of the field, yet he is not cultivatir that field. His ploughing is only half done and h crop is a half crop.

It does not seriously matter what the effects of i competent ownership may be to the individual co cerned, but very serious public results are involve His newspaper is the community's very heart and t whole body of citizenship reacts to its pulsation Weak paper, weak town! Strong paper, strong town Therein lies the complete analysis of the immorality indifferent ownership.

PERSONAL

PAUL BLOCK, publisher of the Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle and other newspapers, was a guest of President Coolidge, May 7, at luncheon.

Emil Maurice Scholz, president of the World Wide Advertising Corporation, New York, has returned from an extended trip through France and Italy.

Wade H. Harris, editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, has been chosen to deliver the awards to the various units and individuals in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at Davidson College, Presbyterian institution in Mecklenburg County.

W. L. Champe, editor of the Garnett (Kan.) Review, and Mrs. Champe celebrated their golden wedding anniversary April 30. Mr. Champe has been in the newspaper business in Anderson county, Kansas, for more than 50 years.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

R. H. DUNLAP, advertising director of the Miami Daily News, expects to attend the American Legion convention in Paris this fall.

Laurence Russell has resigned from the New York Sun to join the advertising staff of the New York Telegram. Previous to his activities with the Sun, he was for three years connected with the Brooklyn Daily Eagle in charge of radio advertising.

James Lleyllen, of the national advertising department of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has been placed in charge of financial advertising, succeeding William Tugman who resigned May 7 to go to Eugene, Ore. Mr. Lleyllen has been with the Plain Dealer more than 15 years.

Miami (Fla.) Daily News business changes are: A. B. McDonald, formerly advertising director Miami University Stadium Board, to staff; W. Stacy, formerly assistant advertising manager Fromer-Cassell's, to staff; George F. Fechler promoted to be local display advertising manager; R. R. Williams, roto department, resigned; W. E. Church, roto department, resigned; Miss Marjorie Andrews appointed secretary to the advertising director.

Albert L. Newson, advertising manager of the Richmond (Va.) Labor Herald, who recently was operated on for appendicitis, is recovering.

Eldon J. Hoar, Tipton, Okla., has been made advertising manager of the Woodward (Okla.) Daily Press. He was formerly advertising manager of the Enid (Okla.) Daily Events.

John Shumway of the Miami Daily News business office staff is on a vacation in New York City and Philadelphia.

John Watters, business manager, Youngstown (O.) Telegram, sailed from New York for Paris this week.

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOMS

THEODORE E. BUELL, formerly managing editor of the New Haven Union, last week became editor of the Long Island Weekly News. The publishers of the Richmond Hill Record took over the paper at that time.

John J. O'Brien, police reporter, Worcester (Mass.) Gazette, and Mrs. O'Brien, are the parents of a son, born last week.

Thomas Hamilton, formerly of the Buffalo Courier and Express editorial staff, is now with the Buffalo Times.

Buffalo Evening News has opened a news bureau at Niagara Falls, in charge of William Lee of the city staff.

Howard White, formerly of the Buffalo Commercial and Post staff, has joined the editorial staff of the Buffalo Evening News.

Carl Brown, for 19 years "snort editor" of the Atchison Globe until his retirement last September to become owner of the Ida Grove (Iowa) Record, returned to his former position with the Globe May 9. Brown was city editor of the Globe for 12 years. He is one of the best known paragraphers in the Missouri Valley.

Robert K. Smith has been made editor of the Richmond (Va.) Labor Herald.

Donald R. Waugh, of the Boston (Mass.) Traveler staff is conducting a weekly column on "Men and Affairs at the State House."

Bert McDonald of the night rewrite staff of the New York Herald Tribune is on vacation.

Fred Hunt has resigned from the editorial staff of the Quincy (Mass.) Patriot Ledger preparatory to starting out on a cruise along the Atlantic coast in his 33-foot boat Bluffwind. He will be accompanied by Warren S. Carberg, formerly on the Worcester Telegram.

Hugh B. Hostetter, treasurer and managing editor of the Hanover (Pa.) Evening Sun, accompanied by Mrs. Hostetter, is sailing May 21 on the Leviathan on a six weeks' vacation trip abroad.

F. Raymond Daniell, reporter of the New York Evening Post sailed on the liner Cedric, Saturday, with his wife, Miss Blanche Naylor, for a vacation abroad. Mr. Daniell, who covered the Hall-Mills case in Somerville and the Peaches Browning trial at White Plains this year was taken ill while covering the Snyder murder trial at Long Island City and decided to take an early vacation.

John Steverding, 36, of Cleveland, has been made editor of the Havana Telegram, an afternoon newspaper in Havana, Cuba. Steverding started his newspaper work on the Cleveland Press.

George V. Callahan, veteran marine editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has returned to his work after an absence of several weeks, caused by a nervous breakdown.

There have been a number of changes in the personnel of the city desk of the Brooklyn Eagle. Lee M. Pasquin, assistant city editor, owing to ill health, has taken a desk on the rim, and Joseph K. Conroy, formerly in the slot, becomes assistant to City Editor Wilson. Horace G. Posey, formerly Long Island editor, has taken the slot position, and Kenneth Youell has been made Long Island Editor.

Joe de Ganahl is a new member of the reportorial staff of the New York Herald Tribune.

Will B. Johnstone, artist on the staff of the New York World, returned Monday from a Canadian vacation, during which he put into rehearsal his new musical comedy. Ernie Bushmiller substituted for him.

SPECIAL EDITIONS

OTTAWA CITIZEN, 32-page edition on convention of 28th district Rotary Clubs, April 29.

Chatham (Ont.) Daily News, Mothers' Day edition, May 5.

Salt Lake City Tribune, a special 12-page section for the Paris Company, Salt Lake City department store, Sunday, May 1.

Hudson (N. Y.) Daily Star, special "paint-up section" on May 6.

Marquette (Mich.) Daily Mining Journal, 112-page Progress edition, May 7.

HOLDING NEW POSTS

THEODORE EDIGER, from reporter, Kansas City Kansan, to city editor and sports editor, Lawrence Journal-World.

Elmer S. Ingalls, from reporter, Augusta (Me.) Kennebec Journal, to staff, Portland Press Herald, as Augusta correspondent.

Joseph Dyson, from assistant night city editor, Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, to Hudson (Mass.) Daily Sun staff.

Dal Dalrymple, from telegraph editor, Shawnee (Okla.) Morning News, to news editor, Drumright Derrick.

MARRIED

STUART HAWKINS, who conducts the column "On the Radio" under the name of Pioneer for the New York Herald Tribune, to Miss Elizabeth Freeman Kirkham, at her home at Melrose, Mass., May 9.

V. H. Torrance, San Antonio Evening News reporter, to Miss Willie Kate Stone, recently.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

OKLAHOMA'S youngest newspaper editor and owner gets out a weekly newspaper chock full of rural correspondence — a newspaper designed to appeal to the farmer's family. The young man is Everett Purcell, 16 years old, of Enid.

EVERETT PURCELL

He recently became the owner of the Enid Events through a provision in the will of his late father, Everett Purcell, Sr., who was an old-time Oklahoman, newspaper editor and politician. He became editor of the paper immediately after the death of his father. The boy and his mother, Mrs. Pearl Purcell, determine the policies of the newspaper.

"I have 62 rural correspondents. We believe in telling about the little things the farmers are interested in and therefore cover the field thoroughly.

"I'm going to study journalism and learn about the best way of editing a newspaper," the young editor says. He is now a high school senior, finishing this spring in Enid high school. He has been a member of debate teams and school newspaper staffs.

Clarence Griffith, news editor of the Forest City (N. C.) Courier, to Miss Thelma Clay, April 30, in Gaffney, S. C.

CHANGES OF OWNERSHIP

E. G. McCOY, editor and manager of the Drumright (Okla.) Journal for the last two years, has purchased the controlling stock in the Drumright Journal Publishing Company. He was elected secretary-treasurer. The Journal will become a semi-weekly as soon as new machinery is installed.

T. E. Childers, founder of the Marfa (Tex.) Big Bend Sentinel, has repurchased the paper from Edwin Moss Williams.

F. X. Stockman, Ree Heights, S. D., has purchased the Draper (S. D.) Tribune from A. H. Tobiassen, who has published the weekly the last three years.

M. D. Townley, Sherman, Tex., has purchased the Boswell (Okla.) News from Norman Bonds. Bonds will remain in charge temporarily.

Glenn F. Scott, co-partner with H. C. Culver in the Manly (Ia.) Signal, has sold his interests to Mr. Culver, who will continue as sole owner of the paper. Mr. Scott has been associated with the paper several years.

R. W. Childress has purchased the Williamsburg (Ia.) Journal-Tribune, one of the Farquhar publications, J. S. Farquhar having disposed of his interests in the Cedar Rapids Republican, disposed of this paper, also, to engage in newspaper work in California. John P. Gallagher remains in charge of the Journal-Tribune editorial work.

Western Clackamas Review of Oswego, Ore., has been sold by R. C. Cooke to Rhoads & Richards of Portland.

Walter Paull, formerly of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, has acquired the Eastern Clackamas News of Estacada, Ore., from Douglas Johnson.

Calhoun (Mo.) Star has been sold by F. E. Pattee to L. P. Jones of Clay Center, Kan.

PRESS ASSOCIATION NOTES

G. P. OVERTON, who for the past two weeks has been in charge of flood coverage in the Memphis area for the United Press, has been transferred from managership of the Indianapolis bureau to the Denver United Press bureau succeeding J. W. Palmer, who becomes manager of the San Francisco bureau.

(Continued on page 32)

Interest the Youngsters and you interest the Parents, Pleasing Present and Future Newspaper Buyers.

SECKATARY HAWKINS STORIES and the

SECKATARY HAWKINS CLUB PAGE

Once a week fascinate Boys and Girls from the tots to the 'teens.

"The best boys' feature since 'Huckleberry Finn'."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Metropolitan Newspaper Service

Maximilian Elser, Jr., General Manager — Earl J. Hadley, Associate

150 Nassau Street, New York City

(Continued from page 31)

J. W. Douthat, night editor of the Associated Press, Charlotte, N. C., bureau, has been transferred to New Orleans, where he will be day editor.

Jack Hiertz, United Press bureau, Springfield, Ill., has been appointed manager of the St. Paul bureau.

James S. Sheehy, former head of the International News Service in Portland, Ore., has returned to that city after a year in the East and South where he has been recovering his health.

Ross Downing of Harrisburg, Pa., and formerly of Kansas, has joined the New York staff of the United Press.

Henry Minott of the United Press Boston office, has returned to work after a long siege of illness.

Robert V. Peterson, former Associated Press correspondent at Wichita, has been made an instructor in the journalism department of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College at Stillwater, Okla.

G. McClelland has been transferred from the United Press bureau at Columbus, Ohio, to the Springfield, Ill., bureau.

W. E. Hallberg, formerly manager of the St. Paul United Press bureau, has been appointed manager at Indianapolis, succeeding G. P. Overton, transferred to Denver.

SCHOOLS

CLAUDIA FLETCHER, a Portland student in journalism, was elected president of Theta Sigma Phi, national women's honorary journalistic fraternity, at the University of Oregon recently.

Forrest H. Witmeyer, Rochester, N. Y., has been elected editor of the Daily Orange, of Syracuse University. He is also editor of the Onondagan, the junior year book.

Dr. C. D. Johnson, who recently resigned as head of the department of journalism and business administration, Baylor University, Waco, Tex., to go to the University of Louisville, has decided to remain at Baylor to be professor of journalism and publicity director.

Huston Boyd, editor of the Courier, publication of Northeast High School, Kansas City, Mo., last week was elected president of the Missouri Interscholastic Press Association.

Hanselle L. Hester, representing the Chronicle, Duke University publication, was elected president of the North Carolina Collegiate Press Association at the thirteenth annual convention held at the North Carolina College for Women, recently.

Students of Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., who are in charge of publishing the Wasp, one of the college publications, made use of an airplane to aid them in getting out the edition. The covers for the magazine were being printed at Troy, N. Y., and it was found that they would not be received at the college in time for the regular date of publication. John Byrne, a Wesleyan student, who owns an airplane, saved the day. He left Middletown at 3 a. m., arrived at Troy in record time and was back at the college at 4 p. m. Then the staff of the Wasp worked all night and it was printed on schedule.

ASSOCIATIONS

BOSTON ADVERTISING CLUB held its third annual golf tournament at the Pine Brook Valley Golf Club at Weston on May 12.

Spring meeting of the WEST TEXAS PRESS ASSOCIATION will be held at Sweetwater, June 4, according to Secretary W. E. Reid of Colorado.

PEORIA (Ill.) ADVERTISING & SELLING CLUB has elected officers as follows: B. W. (Rex) Post, president, unopposed; E. E. Johnson, vice-president; Howard B. Martin, secretary-treasurer; C. C. Wheeler, assistant secretary; O. A. Brock, F. W. Zinn and Melville Hill, directors.

Midsummer meeting of the INDIANA REPUBLICAN EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION will be held in Lafayette July 28 and 29. James J. Patchell, editor of the Union City Times, is president of the association.

John Z. Miller, president and treasurer of the Mutual Telephone Company, has been elected president of the ADVERTISING CLUB of ERIE, Pa. Other officers elected are: E. S. McCumber, vice-president, D. E. Hefferan, treasurer and L. E. Young, secretary.

Press Club Whirl, annual social function of the NEWBURGH (N. Y.) PRESS CLUB, took place in the State Armory on Wednesday night, May 11. The feature was a revue staged by Ned Wayburn.

Prof. C. H. Fernald of the college of commerce and business administration of the University of Illinois, Champaign, Ill., was elected president of the ASSOCIATED ADVERTISING CLUBS OF ILLINOIS at the directors' annual meeting last week in Chicago and Champaign-Urbana were designated for the 1928 convention. The date, tentatively agreed upon for February or March, will be decided later. Harry Clatfelter, Peoria, was named vice-president; Charles J. Scheetz, Joliet, re-elected treasurer and Ethel May Pierce, Chicago, re-elected secretary.

Annual outing of the NORTHERN MINNESOTA EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION will be conducted at Two Harbors with side trips to Grand Marias and the Superior national forest July 21, 22, 23 and 24.

J. Barrye Wall, president of the VIRGINIA PRESS ASSOCIATION, announces that the annual midsummer meeting of the association will be held at Williamsburg, Va., on July 14, 15 and 16. Officers will be elected at that time for the ensuing year, and the question of employing a full-time secretary will be further discussed.

A thousand members of the GREATER BUFFALO ADVERTISING CLUB joined hands with the Red Cross on May 1, in a benefit for the flood sufferers of the Mississippi valley by arranging a midnight vaudeville performance.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) JUNIOR TYPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY celebrated its second anniversary at a banquet May 9.

ON THE MECHANICAL SIDE

CHARLES M. BEETY, compositor for the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, has been nominated president of the Worcester Typographical Union. Election will be May 25.

Casper J. Hellhake, superintendent of the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press composing room, has been named production manager, of a newly created office.

NEW AID FOR ADVERTISERS

Chicago Tribune Making Monthly Surveys of Business Trends

The Chicago Tribune has started a new service for advertisers in the form of a monthly survey of the trends in business activity, purchasing power of consumers and consumer buying. The trends in these three types of business factors are to be studied concurrently in Chicago, the middlewest and the entire country, and the results will be published monthly in a new publication, The Chicago Tribune Survey.

In announcing the new publication, the Tribune points out that there is constant need for appraising business situations close at hand, whereas most trade figures become available a year or more after the period to which they relate and commonly are on an annual basis. The plan of the new service is to furnish monthly information and to do so while the figures are still fresh.

KANSAS VETERAN RETIRES

After 69 years in newspaper work in Kansas, W. H. Johnson, founder of many Kansas papers, has retired from the field upon disposing of the Salina Sun, a weekly publication, to C. P. Bissell of Salina. The paper will be continued as a weekly.

ARM MANGLED IN PRESS

Marvin Hilton, 20, an employe of the press room of the Bluefield (W. Va.) Telegraph, was forced to undergo amputation of his right arm at the elbow after it had been mangled in the press folder while the Sunday edition of the Telegraph was being printed.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Emma Bugbee Re-elected President of New York Newspaper Women's Club—Estelle Mendelsohn Named Assistant Promotion Manager of Chicago Herald and Examiner—League Dinner May 17

MISS EMMA BUGBEE, reporter on the staff of the New York Herald Tribune was re-elected president of the New York Newspaper Women's Club at the annual meeting held May 6.

EMMA BUGBEE

Miss Bugbee, who was elected first vice president at the last election, filled the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Theodora Bean last September. She is one of the 37 charter members of the club, which was organized in 1920, and has held the offices of secretary, vice president and president.

A graduate of Barnard College, Miss Bugbee came directly to the Tribune, now the Herald Tribune, and has been with that paper ever since.

She has covered chiefly women's political news. Among her interesting assignments were the suffrage hikes to Albany and Washington, Republican and Democratic conventions, the Anglin murder, and a trip up in an airplane during the war when a test was being made of an armored airplane with sheet metal wings.

Other officers elected were as follows: Mrs. Josephine Robb Ober, New York World; Mrs. Helen Rowland, King Features Syndicate, and Jane Grant, New York Times, vice-presidents; Martha Coman, treasurer; Eileen Creelman, assistant treasurer; Charlotte McLevidge, Chicago Daily News, recording secretary; Lentilhon Gilford, assistant recording secretary; Olive Hurlburt, New York American, corresponding secretary; Freida Wyandt, assistant corresponding secretary; Madeline Riordan, New York Evening Post, chairman house committee; Deborah Corle, chairman of the membership committee, and Caroline Harding, chairman of the associate members.

Maurine Watkins, former Chicago newspaper woman, and author of the play "Chicago," and Peter Brady, financial advisor of the club, were guests of honor.

Miss Watkins led a discussion on "Covering Murder Trials," in which Jane Dixon, Charlotte McLevidge, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and Marie Montalvo, who covered the Snyder murder trial, participated.

Miss Jane Dixon was presented with a wedding cake in honor of her recent marriage to Capt. W. H. Wells.

It was announced that the club would give a tea on May 14 to the girls of the graduating class of the Columbia School of Journalism.

Members of the Indiana Women's Press Club met in Indianapolis May 10. The chief speaker was McCready Huston, associate editor of the South Bend Tribune. Mr. Huston is the author of numerous short stories and of two novels, "Huling's Quest" and "The Big Show."

League of Advertising Women, New York, will hold its 15th birthday dinner May 17 at the Advertising Club of New York.

Miss Estelle Mendelsohn, formerly advertising manager of B. Kuppenheimer & Co., has joined the staff of the Chicago Herald and Examiner as assistant promotion manager.

The engagement of Miss Olive Foote Strong, society editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican and Perry Wales Goodrich of Pittsfield, son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Goodrich of Lee, has been announced. The date of the marriage has not been set.

REPRESENTING THE DAILIES

G. HOWELL MULFORD, formerly of the New York Times, has joined the New York office of Allied Newspapers, Inc., Stuart Schuyler, president, announced this week.

J. W. Turnbell, secretary of the Alcorn-Seymour Company, Inc., was in Providence, R. I., this week on business.

The Lawrence (Mass.) Telegram and Sunday Sun has appointed Benjamin & Kentnor its national advertising representative.

The Six Point League of Newspaper Representatives in New York held an executive session at the Advertising Club on May 10. No statement was issued after the meeting.

Stuart Schuyler, president of Allied Newspapers, Inc., George Reichard, eastern manager; C. J. Feldman, Detroit manager, and John M. Peterson, Chicago manager of Allied Newspapers, Inc., are planning to attend the June convention of the International Advertising Association in Denver.

Will F. Hessian, national advertising manager of the Portland (Ore.) Journal, is visiting the office of his national representative in New York, the Benjamin & Kentnor Company.

FLASHES

THE recent murders in Hollywood may simply be due to the movie world's jealousy over the publicity given to the Snyder case.—Worcester (Mass.) Telegram.

The president of the University of Chicago says that a scholarship thrill can exceed an athletic thrill. But the trouble is that no one else thrills with you.—New York Evening Post.

Cast iron paving is being tried out in France. We understand that the pedestrians are solidly against it.—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

The Prince of Wales advised a blind soldier what horse to bet on in the Grand National, The Herald says. Few persons have had better tips on horses than the Prince of Wales.—El Paso Times.

If this slapping of Kerensky is going to be kept up he will have to wear a baseball catcher's mask while he is in the United States.—J. R. Wolf in Milwaukee Journal.

An advertisement for a lecturer says he "speaks straight from the shoulder." Too bad some of these talks can't originate a little higher up.—San Francisco News.

According to the Treasury figures, 82 per cent of our people do not pay income taxes. All these slackers do is provide the incomes for the other 18 per cent to pay taxes on.—The New Yorker.

Accuracy—

COMMERCIAL CABLES

POSTAL TELEGRAPH (Landline System Throughout the United States)

THE MACKAY SYSTEM
COMMERCIAL CABLES
POSTAL TELEGRAPH
"THE PULSE OF THE WORLD"
CLARENCE H. MACKAY, PRESIDENT.

RECEIVED AT 20 BROAD STREET
TEL. HANOVER 1140

9 JB F55 PARIS 116 101PM
UNIPRESS NEWYORK

THANKS SURENESS AND RAPIDITY OF UNITED PRESS SERVICE AND SANG FROID WHICH WE MAINTAINED THE AGENCE RADIO WAS ONLY FRENCH AGENCY WHICH DID NOT ANNOUNCE ARRIVAL NUNGESSER AT NEWYORK STOP TO THE CONTRARY AGENCE RADIO AS EARLY AS SIX PM FRENCH TIME IN COMMUNICATING YOUR CABLE ANNOUNCING NEGATIVE RESULTS OBTAINED BY FIVE AMERICAN AVIATORS SENT TO MEET NUNGESSER AND COLI PUT FRENCH NEWSPAPERS ON GUARD AGAINST PREMATURE REPORTS STOP WE RESISTED PRESSURE OF FRENCH NEWSPAPERS WHICH WERE MISINFORMED AND WHICH SOUGHT CONFIRMATION FROM US WE EVEN RESISTED OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS AND TODAY PRESS IS BEGINNING TO RENDER US JUSTICE STOP EYE DES'RE TO SHARE THIS HOMAGE WITH UNITED PRESS

MAY 11-845AM.

MARIUS GABION

DIRECTOR AGENCE RADIO

UNITED PRESS

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

Developing Home Delivered Circulation—How Chicago News Caters to Sports Fans—El Paso Herald Keeps Home Folks Interested by "Hall of Fame" Stunt

SUCCESS he has enjoyed in developing home delivered circulation was told this week by Samuel N. Rosoff, circulation manager of the New Bedford (Mass.) Times. Through "an office controlled, semi-independent carrier system," the Times has increased its circulation from 2,800 to more than 20,000 in less than three years, Mr. Rosoff said.

"Under the home delivery system we have followed," Mr. Rosoff explained, "each carrier boy has a monopoly of a few streets in the city. He serves only customers living in his territory, canvasses for new readers on his route and pays for his draw each week. Each carrier collects from his own customers and pays the office regardless of whether a subscriber has paid him or not. The same methods are used in suburban towns.

"Carrier lists are kept on file in the office. Each time a new customer is started the office lists that subscriber. Stops are received through the carriers by the carrier superintendent, and investigated by him. Service to the subscriber can thus be guaranteed, as in no other system.

"To deliver the Times daily requires a force of more than 300 carriers. They are supervised by one man in the office, who controls 190 carriers in the city and 65 in the suburbs, and is assisted by a road man who takes care of the 50 or more carriers on the country routes.

"There are disadvantages in the home delivery system as outlined. It is hard to keep the right kind of boys. They grow out of their jobs in rapid order. The turnover on the Times is more than 150% each year and has reached as high as 200%. It is costly to obtain new boys, to break them in. A change in carriers means a loss of subscribers. New boys seldom deliver on time.

"With all these disadvantages, the carrier system is the best yet devised under ordinary conditions. Contests, trips, shows and carrier organizations help to keep the turnover down. District manager systems keep complaints and losses to a minimum. Weeding out the poorer class of boy tends to keep the wheels of delivery well greased.

"Eighty-five per cent of the circulation of the Times is home delivered, office controlled. The subscribers pay the boy 12 cents per week, the boy pays the Times 7 cents giving him a net profit of 5 cents. Without the carrier system devised and stimulated as at present, the Times would not have reached its present status.

"We are now aiming for over 90 per cent home delivered, carrier circulation."

To expedite service for the convenience of baseball fans during the afternoon the Chicago Daily News has established a sports information bureau, the telephone lines of which may be used only for baseball and other sporting information. To supplement this service, the Daily News radio station, WMAQ, broadcasts results of all big league games every evening except Sunday.

The Chicago Herald and Examiner will award three model homes, five dozen enclosed automobiles and numerous cash awards in a subscription contest ending May 14. Every subscription turned in nets competitors a certain number of votes in the contest. In addition to the regular awards, the Herald and Examiner will give a $1,000 gold prize for the most money covering new subscriptions received during the two-week period ending May 4.

The El Paso (Tex.) Herald recently conducted an entertaining "Hall of Fame" contest.

Cash awards were paid to the wniners of the following questions: "What El Pasoan Over 60 Years of Age Leads the Most Active Life?" "What El Pasoan Possesses the Greatest Number of Hymn Books Issued Before 1890?" "What El Paso Family Has the Largest Number of Wage Earners Living Under One Roof?" "What El Paso Woman Follows the Strangest Occupation—for a Woman?" "What El Pasoan Owns the Oldest Bound Book?"

Readers were asked to send in entries, and the prizes, $5 to the winner of each question, were awarded to those who furnished the information. Judges decided the best among the entrants.

W. R. Buck, formerly circulation manager of the Greenville (N. C.) Daily News, has assumed new duties as circulation manager of the Durham Sun. Mr. Buck has had 20 years' experience and has been associated with the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, the Spartanburg (S. C.) Sun; the Daytona Beach (Fla.) News; Wilmington News-Dispatch; and the Jacksonville (Fla.) Journal.

The Elizabeth (N. J.) Times has applied for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, John S. B. Mitchell, managing editor, announced this week. Mr. Mitchell claims the Times has doubled its circulation in less than four months.

Jere C. Healy, circulation manager, has built up a carrier organization of 150 boys.

Joseph F. Moran, of Brooklyn, formerly owner of the Jersey City Baseball Club in the International League, and Philip A. Payne, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror, have owned the Times since last July.

The Brooklyn Eagle is seeking to locate the oldest married couple in that borough. The search is being made in connection with the celebration of the centenary of the Mansion House, in Hicks street, which will be the scene of the oldest couple's Memorial Day jubilee on May 30.

Alfred W. Cockerill, circulation manager of the Utica (N. Y.) Daily Press, spoke at a recent meeting of the Men's Club of the Y. M. C. A.

The May number of the Little Times, house organ of the New York Times, is a special circulation edition, celebrating the new circulation record of more than 400,000 of the newspaper owned by Adolph S. Ochs.

It contains in full the address of Mr. Ochs delivered before the circulation department recently; the reminiscences of Charles A. Flanagan, head of the circulation department for 22 years and member of the staff since 1888; and articles telling how the daily copies of the Times are printed and distributed.

Mr. Flanagan remembers the years when two horses and two wagons comprised the delivery system of the Times. At present 40 auto trucks, each having a capacity of two tons, are in motion almost continuously on Saturday nights between midnight and 6 A. M. and thirty are needed to handle the daily edition.

Eighty newsboys of the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post circulation staff were taken on a week-end trip to Boston, Lexington and Concord last week. H. H. Sloan, Israel Isenberg and James T. Kelley had charge of the outing.

A chance for anglers to profit by their best fish stories is offered by "Fisherman Joe" in the Binghamton (N. Y.) Press. A novel contest is announced with prizes of fishing tackle and supplies for those who catch the biggest fish in six specified classes. The fish must be caught in waters within a radius of 100 miles from the Binghamton court house. Sporting goods dealers are co-operating as officials. Incidentally, they are to tie up advertising with the contest.

In connection with the contest the Press will conduct a fishermen's column giving the latest news of the condition of the various streams, game laws, and stories about what fishermen are doing.

Representatives of Schenectady (N. Y.) newspaper circulation departments instructed principals of public schools in the provisions of the state laws governing newsboys at a meeting arranged by A. J. Stoddard, superintendent of schools. A system of badges to be given authorized newsboys was agreed on.

An old-fashioned house-warming was given in the new circulation department of the New York World by N. R. Hoover, director of circulation, to all other departments of the World. The circulation department has recently moved to new quarters in the building. Rooms 204, 205, 206, 207 and 208 have been thrown together, intervening walls taken down, and one light, airy and spacious room made to house the entire department. More than 500 employes of the World attended the party. Refreshments were served; dancing and other entertainment was offered.

ED HOWE'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED BY STAFF

Old-Fashioned Home Gathering of Atchison Globe Employes Held in Veteran's Honor at City Park

The elaborate dinner given for Ed Howe, recently in New York, by representatives of American journalism and literature held no more of enjoyment for the veteran editor than the fried chicken picnic with which his employes honored him upon his return to Atchison, Kan., for the actual celebration of his seventy-third birthday anniversary.

It was just an old-fashioned "home" gathering, a birthday party with a cake and candle for the man who fifty years ago founded the Atchison Globe. There was no speech-making or formality, but just "talk." Ed Howe looked up and down the two long tables under the elm trees of the city park where the Globe "family" had congregated and chatted familiarly of the old-time members present.

"Now there's Lyman Roberts," he said. "Lyman, how old did you say? Sixty-five? Well look at me and learn how to keep young.

"He's 65, Lyman is, but he's been all the pressmen the Globe ever had. Gordon, Foster, Country Campbell, Goss perfected 8-page and Goss 16-pager, he's handled them all. Further, he learned stereotyping and went right up in the business.

"Then there's Joe over there (J. E. Rank, managing editor). Been with the Globe off and on for 40 years. He started out carrying papers for it."

Mr. Rank is now one of the stockholders of the Globe, which is owned by the Globe Publishing Company. Eugene Howe, son of the writer, is editor.

Mr. Howe pointed out his city editor Evan Tonsing.

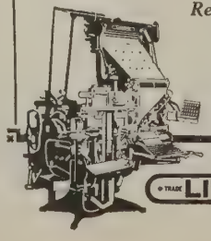
"He's the grandson of John A. Martin, once governor of Kansas," said the editor. "Martin was the editor of the paper in 1859, when Abe Lincoln came to town and made a speech that later won him the nomination for president at Cooper Hall, New York. Well Martin thought Lincoln was a young upstart and didn't even print a word about Lincoln's being in Atchison."

Back of Ed Howe sat Charles O'Keefe for many years foreman of the Globe's pressroom. Across the table sat Miss Adelaide Howe, his niece, who accompanies him on all his travels. She is the daughter of Bruce Howe, who lives next door to Ed. When the latter is in Atchison the two brothers chop wood together regularly mornings on vacant lots back of their homes. Chopping wood Ed admits, is one of his "constitutionals."

Miss Nellie Webb, for 30 years society editor of the Globe, was another attendant with whom the veteran journalist delighted in matching wits throughout the dinner. He also spoke of Leo Nusbaum, one of the Globe's reporters, and of N. W. Todd, advertising man.

"Good boys," he praised. "Why, I knew Todd's mother when she was only so high."

In the midst of the fun Mr. Howe pulled something from his pocket. "If you'll promise not to steal it or drop it," he warned, and passed it around.



It was the beautiful platinum watch given him at the New York dinner and inscribed, "to Ed Howe, for fifty years inspiring service in American journalism."

From the Linotype Mailbag

Prompt Service by Telegraph

Please accept our thanks for prompt service in making shipment of pot pump lever spring which we ordered by wire on Tuesday afternoon. The telegraph was sent after three P.M. so when it reached you at 3:26 it had been well handled by the Western Union and your getting the part to the post office in 44 minutes was certainly splendid service. It was delivered to us at 8:10 the next morning.

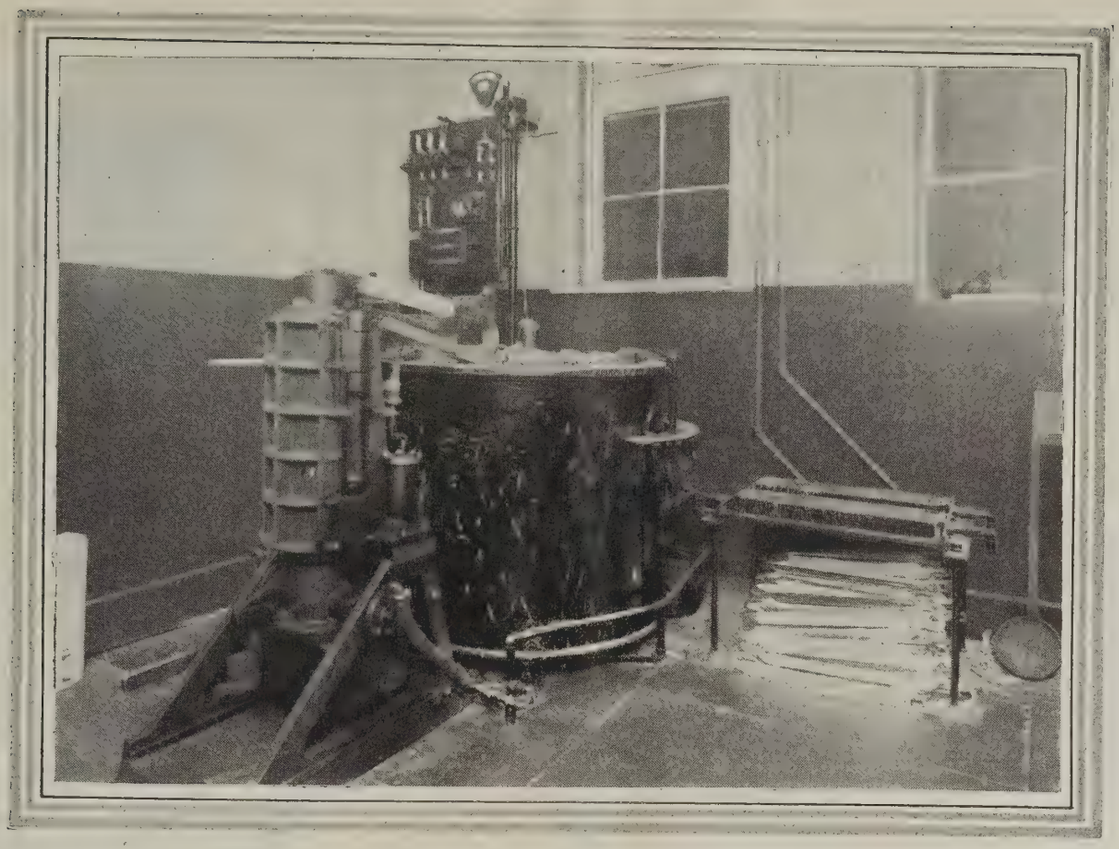
Republican-Leader
Marion, Illinois

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

GRAHAM BROTHERS TRUCKS
SOLD BY DODGE BROTHERS DEALERS EVERYWHERE

Thorough Coverage in One of the World's Richest Buying Centers—Coupled with the Ability to Produce Results

Pittsburgh Gazette Times
(Morning and Sunday)
AND
PITTSBURGH CHRONICLE TELEGRAPH
(Evening except Sunday)



These newspapers in News and Advertising have the confidence of their readers. Their readers have the power to purchase.

Sold Singly or Combined

URBAN E. DICE, Nat'l Advg. Mgr.
Gazette Square, Pittsburgh, Pa.

E. M. BURKE, Inc.,
1457 Broadway, New York.
122 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago.
Constitution Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

R. J. BIDWELL COMPANY,
742 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Times Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.
White-Henry-Stuart Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

Electricity melts the stereotype metal for The Appleton Post Crescent

Electric Heat—dependable, economical, and comfortable—has replaced fuel heat in the stereotype pot of the Appleton Post Crescent, Appleton, Wis. The pot has a capacity of 5000 lbs., is fitted with expertly designed G-E heating equipment, and is operated with G-E full automatic control.

The installation is an outstanding success. The temperature of the casting room is 25 degrees lower than before. The high efficiency of the equipment and the accurate, automatic temperature regulation have reduced operating expense. There is less wear and tear on the pot. There is practically no dross on the metal—no contamination by fuel impurities. The saving in metal alone amounts to $1.50 per day.

G-E stereotype pot equipment offers every newspaper a simple and inexpensive method of reducing operating costs. A phone call or letter to the nearest G-E office will bring a G-E industrial heating specialist who will advise you as to the equipment best suited for your casting room.

Phone or write to your nearest G-E office for complete information

Although electric heat will not supplant all other forms of heat for industrial purposes, there are processes in every industry where it is the ideal heat—the most economical heat—the heat that ultimately will be used.

ULTIMATELY ELECTRIC HEAT
IN EVERY INDUSTRY

570-39

GENERAL ELECTRIC

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, SCHENECTADY, N. Y., SALES OFFICES IN PRINCIPAL CITIES

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Merritt Bond Joins N. A. N. A. Staff—Conselman to Write New Strip for Metropolitan—D. P. Announces Unexpurgated Serial of "Greville Memoirs"

MERRITT BOND, former managing editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, this week joined the staff of the North American Newspaper Alliance, David E. Smiley, general manager, announced.

Mr. Bond was for some time managing editor of the New York Evening Post, when it was first purchased by Cyrus H. K. Curtis. Mr. Smiley was at that time editor of the Curtis papers in Philadelphia and New York.

William M. Conselman, author of "Ella Cinders," is writing a new comic strip for the Metropolitan Newspaper Service called "Good Time Guy." He will use the pseudonym "Frank Smiley," since he will be concurrently writing "Ella Cinders" under his own name. Drawings for "Good Time Guy" will be by Mel Cummin. Charlie Plumb draws "Ella."

WM. M. CONSELMAN

Born in Brooklyn and reared in New York, Conselman worked on newspapers in the East, small and large, until 1920, when he went to Los Angeles and did a bit of writing for the films. Returning to newspaper work, he joined the staff of the Los Angeles Times, and while with that paper he served as reporter, re-write man, feature writer, assistant city editor, picture editor and feature editor. Mr. Conselman is married and has two children.

Mel Cummin, the artist of "Good Time Guy," served for more than two years with Hal Coffman as one of two editorial cartoonists on the New York Journal. Before that he was known as the artist of a series of full-page "Birdseye Views" for the New York Sunday World. He has also drawn for McCall's Magazine, Life and Judge.

D. P. Syndicate, Garden City, N. Y., this week announced it had the first unexpurgated edition of the "Greville Memoirs" ready for newspaper publication.

Bobby Cruickshank, golf star, is writing a series called "Stroke Savers" for NEA Service, Inc.

The Wide World Photos Service of the New York Times sped by wireless a picture of the White Bird as the French airplane left France on its ill-fated voyage to America. It was taken by a staff photographer from another airplane. It was received in this country and reproduced in the Monday morning newspapers.

Harry C. ("Bud") Fisher, cartoonist, inherited the entire estate of his father, A. A. Fisher, according to terms of the will filed this week in New York. Mr. Fisher died Dec. 23 at the age of 75.

"Who, What, When, Where?" is the title of a new daily question answer feature announced by the International Syndicate, Baltimore. It is being written by Richard Hoadley Tingley.

Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia, has a new series called "My Favorite Dish." Fifty women contribute their recipes.

"What Do You Know About Radio?" is the title of a new feature offered by Post Syndicate, New York. It is written by Joseph Rubinstein under a nom de plume.

Technical radio information is being furnished in weekly newspaper articles by the D. P. Syndicate, which has started a radio laboratory at Garden City.

Don Wooton, cartoonist formerly of the Cleveland Press and the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has joined NEA Service, Inc., as its new editorial cartoonist.

PROGRAM READY FOR INLAND MEETING

Association Will Convene in Chicago, May 24-25—Income Tax and Cost Finding Committees to Report

The program for the May meeting of the Inland Daily Press association, to be held at the Palmer House, Chicago, May 24 and 25, will include reports by standing committees and discussions on all phases of news, circulation and advertising. The meeting is the first since the election of John H. Harrison, publisher of the Danville (Ill.) Commercial News, as president of Inland.

JOHN H. HARRISON

The Income Tax Committee, and the Postal committee, each having matters of importance to bring before the meeting, will report, as will the Cost Finding committee, which was not ready to report at the annual meeting.

Questions which have come to the office of the secretary, and which are believed to be of general interest to the Inland members, will be taken up and discussed. Among them are the following:

"What is the real status of an advertising agency? Does an advertising agency buy and sell space and trade as a principal, or is it an agent only for the buyer of space and the seller of space?" Discussion will be led by J. K. Groom, Northern Illinois Group, Aurora, Ill., and Arnold L. Guesmer, Minneapolis (Minn.) Tribune.

"What do you do to prevent advertisers from discussing competitors in your advertising columns and still retain desired business?" Discussion to be led by A. L. Richmond, Mt. Carmel (Ill.) Republican-Register.

"Do you publish a trade extension edition and do you have permit to mail one?" N. L. Gordon, Lincoln (Ill.) Star.

"Display space with annual contracts." Director T. O. Huckle, Cadillac (Mich.) News.

"Varied charges for daily mail by baggage." F. W. Schaub, Decatur (Ill.) Review.

"Contest subscriptions lists. How are they handled? A. B. C. reports on them." Gardiner J. Thomas, Marion (Ind.) Chronicle.

"Addressing machines and mailing systems." Mrs. Mabel S. Shaw, Dixon (Ill.) Telegraph.

"Twenty cents a week. How is it succeeding?" J. R. Fornof, Streator (Ill.) Times-Press.

"How to manage to eliminate waste." General discussion.

"Good-will as a selling value. How to estimate it. Is it taxable?"

"There is nothing like the newspaper for reaching everybody, everywhere, every day." Will O. Feudner, Rushville (Ind.) Republican.

Imperial METAL

Des Moines Takes Up the Plus Plan

DES MOINES, in the state where the "tall corn grows," has taken up Imperial Metal and the famous Plus Metal Plan. In this beautiful city, The Des Moines Register and the Evening Tribune give the citizens of Des Moines the news of the day from the four corners of the world.

If you could talk to the publishers of these two excellent newspapers, or the thousands of other users of the Plus Plan, they would no doubt tell you that their reasons for choosing Imperial and the Plus Metal Plan were based on a need of a reliable, economical plan to keep their metal constantly in perfect balance, at the same time adding years of working life.

Let us tell you how you can save by the Plus Plan!

IMPERIAL TYPE METAL CO.

Manufacturing the following metals:

LINOTYPE
ELROD
INTERTYPE
LINOGRAPH

MONOTYPE
LUDLOW
STEREOTYPE
THOMPSON

Philadelphia
Cleveland

New York
Chicago

ASK YOUR OPTOMETRIST

about the vital importance of the proportionate length and height of descending and ascending letters for maximum legibility

Examine the specimen below. Compare the Intertype Ideal News face with standard news faces in use today. You will find that the length and the height of its descending letters (such as m or p) and ascending letters (such as a or n) are in the same general proportion to the small lower case letters (such as m or o) as is usual in popular newspaper and book type faces.

It is not accident that certain news faces have lived while others have gone into the discard.

Intertype designers have cut the Ideal News face as close to generally accepted standards as possible. That's why the Intertype Ideal News will live.

Correct length and height of descending and ascending letters is vital to easy legibility. Ask your Optometrist.

Intertype IDEAL News Series

8 POINT ON SOLID SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary lightface type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and the descenders were made a little longer. The sharp contrast between thin and thick lines has been modified. Characters like a e s g, which always have been pinched in deference to old standards, are here made

8 POINT ON 8½ POINT SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary lightface type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and the descenders were made a little longer. The sharp contrast between thin and thick lines has been modified. Characters like a e s g, which

8 POINT ON 9 POINT SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary lightface type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and the descenders were made a little longer. The sharp contrast between

Intertype matrices will run in other slug-casting machines

Write nearest branch for larger specimens

Standardized INTERTYPE TRADE MARK

Designed in 5½, 6½, 7 and 8 Point

INTERTYPE CORPORATION: New York 1440 Broadway; Chicago 130 N. Franklin St.; Memphis McCall Bldg.; San Francisco 560 Howard St.; Los Angeles 1240 S. Main St.; Boston 80 Federal St.; London; Berlin

WOODWARD, VETERAN PUBLISHER, DIES

Directed Keene (N. H.) Evening Sentinel for 56 Years—Served in State House and Senate and as Bank President

Col. Clement J. Woodward, 76, president of the Keene (N. H.) Evening Sentinel, and for 56 years part owner and publisher of the New Hampshire Sentinel, weekly, and the Evening Sentinel, died May 8.

Col. Woodward, who was one of the oldest newspaper men in New England, was regularly at work at his desk up until 10 days before his death.

The New Hampshire veteran rose from newsboy to a position of high prominence in his native state. At 13 he delivered the Keene New Hampshire Sentinel, one of the oldest weeklies in the country, founded in 1799. He continued this work during his school years, and when he was 18 he was given a job in the office. When he was 20 the partner of Thomas C. Rand, editor and part owner, decided to retire, and young Woodward was taken into the firm.

The years that followed were years of hard work. In 1890 the Daily Sentinel was established.

"My ambition has always been to give our readers the best of service," he declared in an interview in EDITOR & PUBLISHER in 1923. "I determined to make our daily the best of any city the size of Keene in New England."

Many honors came to the veteran publisher. He served in the state legislature both in the house of representatives and the senate. He served as aide-de-camp on the staff of former Governor John McLane with the rank of colonel. For 30 years he served as a director of the Keene National Bank, and later as its president. He had no hobby, he often declared, but hard work.

COLONEL ROBERT BINGHAM

Colonel Robert Bingham, pioneer educator and headmaster of the Bingham Military School, Asheville, N. C., died at his home there May 9. He was 89, and had been ill for several weeks. At the bedside at the time of his death were his son, Judge Robert W. Bingham, publisher of the Louisville Courier Journal and the Louisville Times, and his daughters, Mrs. R. T. Griffin and Mrs. S. R. McKee.

DR. CHARLES R. WILLIAMS

Dr. Charles R. Williams, former editor-in-chief of the Indianapolis News, died in Princeton, N. J., May 6. He was 74. He served as editor-in-chief of the News from 1892 until 1911. For nine years previous to that he was assistant general manager of the Associated Press. As a young man he had served as literary editor of the New York World and as a teacher of Greek and Latin.

KILLED BY POLICE

H. Clement Easton, manager of the service department of the New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune, was killed early Saturday morning, May 7, by police in Lafayette Square, New Orleans. Easton, who is said to have been "acting queerly" for the last several days, asked several persons who were passing through the square to "telephone the police and tell them a man is holding-up Lafayette Square." When the police arrived, Easton fired two shots, which were answered by a volley from the police guns.

Obituary

HENRY B. MUSK, 55, for the past 20 years correspondent of the Boston Globe, died at his home in Lawrence, Mass., May 7.

W. E. BRANCH, 51, former editor of the Woodsboro (Tex.) Times and more recently editor of the Sinton News, died at Corpus Christi recently.

MARION M. DUMBLE, 64, died May 7 at his home in Buffalo, N. Y., after an attack of heart trouble. He was 14 years proofreader for the Buffalo Times.

MAX EUGENE LINDHEIMER, 80, former pioneer German newspaper editor of New Braunfels, Tex., died recently at his home in San Antonio.

MRS. PEARL FRANCES JEWELL, for many years Northboro correspondent for the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette, died May 1 in a Worcester hospital.

MRS. MARTIN SPEIDEL, 80, mother of Merritt C. Speidel, publisher of the Iowa City (Iowa) Press-Citizen, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Harry B. Davis, at Chester, N. Y., on May 7.

FRANK TITUS, attorney and member of the editorial staff of the Kansas City Star in 1882-83, died last week at his home in Kansas City, Mo.

MAX R. HYMAN, 68, special advertising worker for the Indianapolis Star and a veteran Indianapolis newspaper man, died last week at his home in Indianapolis after a short illness. Mr. Hyman founded the old Indianapolis Herald many years ago and also a comic weekly, Scissors, one of the first of its kind in that part of the country.

EDGAR D. DAVIS, for 41 years a compositor on the Brooklyn Eagle, died on May 5.

J. LEO HARKINS, 32, a Chicago attorney and representative for the Daily News Record and Women's Wear Daily, died suddenly April 30 following a heart attack.

INDIANA A. P. TO MEET

Forty Publishers Expected to Attend Indianapolis Sessions May 17

Spring meeting of the Indiana Associated Press Editorial Association will be held at the Claypool Hotel in Indianapolis, Tuesday, May 17. Approximately 40 editors and publishers will attend.

A business meeting will open the session, followed by addresses by Henry W. Marshall Jr., publisher of the Lafayette Courier-Journal; C. L. Houston of the Marion Leader-Tribune and Max Fowler of the Frankfort Times. Edgar T. Cutter, Central division superintendent of the Associated Press, Chicago, will attend the meeting. The session will terminate with a luncheon at the hotel. Benjamin F. Lawrence, general manager of the Star League of Indiana, is president of the group.

DROPS SUNDAY EDITION

The Buffalo Press, a tabloid which began publication at Buffalo about six weeks ago, issuing a daily and Sunday edition, has discontinued Sunday publication. The daily continues.

PURCELL ESTATE $100,000

The will of the late Everett Purcell, editor of the Enid (Okla.) Events, filed for probate, disposed of an estate of $100,000. The property was left to the son, Everett, Jr.

Modern
Composing Room Furniture

as made by us will speed up production and reduce costs—a real saving in your Pay Roll. Are you interested? If so, consult your regular dealer in printers' supplies or write us direct.

Do it now!

HAMILTON MFG. CO.
TWO RIVERS, WIS.

Indiana
Always in the Limelight

RICH IN BUYING POWER—

Buying power is best determined by the value of manufactured products—and the value of farm crops and live stock.

Indiana is very rich in buying power because it ranks 6th in the production of manufactured products. Its industries produce annually over 2 billion dollars worth of wealth. Nearly 300,000 people earn a payroll of almost 400 million dollars annually.

In farm crops and live stock Indiana's productive wealth is approximated at 600 million dollars annually.

It is conclusive then that the buying power of Indiana's people is unusually high.

Here is a 2½ billion dollar market for the national advertiser. The most economical and most efficient way to reach this buying power is through the newspapers listed below.

	Circulation	Rate for 5,000 lines
Columbus Republican (E)	5,027	.03
Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette (M)	38,539	.08
Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette (S)	30,255	.08
Fort Wayne News-Sentinel (E)	44,217	.10
†Frankfort Times (M&S)	8,231	.04
Gary Evening Post-Tribune (E)	17,002	.06
Huntington Press (M&S)	5,058	.03
Indianapolis News (E)	130,079	.25
*Lafayette Journal & Courier (M) 7,794 (E) 13,336	21,130	.06
††La Porte Herald-Argus (E)	6,839	.04
*Marion Leader Tribune (M&S)	9,711	.04
††Shelbyville Democrat (E)	4,063	.025
*South Bend News-Times (M) 9,771 (E) 17,070	26,841	.07
*South Bend News-Times (S)	25,133	.07
††South Bend Tribune (S) 23,482 (E)	24,351	.07
†Terre Haute Tribune (E&S)	23,273	.06

*A. B. C. Statement, Publisher's, October 1, 1926.
†Government Statement, October 1, 1926.
A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, March 31, 1927.
††Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

Reader Faith Like This Means —

1. Added Circulation
2. Increased Editorial Power
3. Greater Advertising Returns

This is REAL Reader Confidence

March 10th, 1927.

Dr. McCoy: I have been reading your articles each day in the EDMONTON BULLETIN for many months and have been greatly helped by them. My trouble was asthma, which began during infantry service in France. My wife was also cured of an attack of inflammatory rheumatism by following your directions.

J. L. WRIGHT, Parkland, Alberta, Canada.

March 23rd, 1927.

Dr. McCoy: It has been with eager interest that I have followed your articles in the EVENING EXPRESS and must say that it is indeed fortunate that the American people have had a genius like you come to light in this country.

MARION PETERSON, Portland, Maine.

January 24th, 1927.

Dr. McCoy: You were kind enough to help me once—now I am coming to you for more advice * * * * I have been digesting each article as it appears in the OTTAWA JOURNAL, and I am convinced that I, like thousands of others, have been eating the wrong combinations of food * * * * It's wonderful work you are doing—trying to educate people to the right way of living and caring for their bodies. At bridge parties, clubs, etc., even in our own small town, one hears Dr. McCoy quoted on all sides.

(Miss) MINNIE MacPHERSON,
Carleton Pl., Ontario, Canada.

Dr. McCoy: "The Fast Way To Health" is a book full of sound common-sense.

B. C. FORBES, New York City.

What Medical Doctors Really Think of Dr. Frank McCoy

Dr. McCoy: It would surprise you to know the percentage of readers who actually read your syndicated health articles in the CINCINNATI POST. I know that my patients read your articles. I see to that.

DR. L. C. BEARD, D.C., Cincinnati.

Dr. McCoy: If every family based its life habits upon the articles published under your name every morning in the DENVER NEWS, we Doctors would have little to do.

DR. W. V. GAGE, M.D., Denver, Colo.

Dr. McCoy: I have studied diet for 25 years and know your treatments will do what is claimed for them.

DR. E. J. FAVELL, Director,
Dr. Koch's Cancer Service, Rice Lake, Wisc.

These are a few samples from thousands of unsolicited letters!

¶ At the New York Convention, Dr. McCoy's Health Articles were THE subject of conversation. This is the first time that our 150 subscribing publishers have had an opportunity of exchanging with each other ideas regarding the value of the McCoy Service.

¶ Their enthusiasm is shown by the fact that in the convention hall, dining room, corridors and corners, they actively urged their friends to take on the McCoy Service.

¶ Dr. McCoy's Health Articles create a reader faith and confidence that react to the benefit of every department of your newspaper.

¶ Their circulation-increasing power has been demonstrated over the past months by leading newspapers throughout America.

¶ Obviously, readers who have confidence in one feature of your paper, develop confidence in the whole editorial policy.

¶ When you secure the confidence of your readers to such an extent that they consult Dr. McCoy regarding the most vital thing in life—personal health—you cannot help securing the same faith in your advertising columns.

Only One Newspaper In Your City Can Get This Service! Will That Paper Be Yours?

McCoy Health Service

305 Brack Shops Bldg. Los Angeles, Calif.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

To Explain Classified to Display Men at Denver Meet—T. J. Mulhern Transferred to Display Desk on N. Y. Telegram—McCabe in Business for Himself

CLASSIFIED advertising will be thoroughly publicized and explained to managers of display advertising at Denver this coming June.

Tentative arrangements to this end were agreed upon at a meeting of leaders of the Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers held in Baltimore, Md., this week. This association, of which Charles W. Nax of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat is president, will be meeting in Denver, June 26-29, dates also set for the convention of the Association of Newspaper Advertising Executives. Both associations are meeting as departments of the International Advertising Association.

At Baltimore, this week, it was decided to appoint two members of the classified association to address the display group, explaining the problems of classified and the importance of this department of a newspaper. Ten other members of the association will also be named to act as an "information jury of 12" to answer all questions regarding classified which may be put to them by the newspaper executives. This idea is in line with the policy of Mr. Nax to promote the development of classified advertising generally throughout the United States. He himself addressed the last fall meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Those meeting in Baltimore this week included: Harold Goldman, New York Sun; Chester Nolan, Brooklyn Eagle; Charles Murdock, Detroit Free Press; H. D. Copp, Washington Times; N. D. Miller, Washington Star; Charles Horn, New York American; Henry Moehlman, Baltimore Sun; James Finneran, New York Times; C. C. Armstrong, Baltimore (Md.) News and American; James McGovern, Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker-Press.

Mr. Nax represented the classified association at the meeting of the National Commission, which was held in Baltimore this week also.

T. F. Mulhern has been transferred from the position of classified manager of the New York Telegram to that of display advertising manager. Who his successor in the former job will be has not yet been announced.

Frank McCabe, for many years classified advertising manager of the New York World, has gone into business for himself as a classified advertising promotion expert. His headquarters are at 285 Madison avenue, New York.

T. L. Dedman, formerly of the Louisville Courier, and J. L. Scroggs, formerly of the Chicago Tribune, have joined the classified advertising sales staff of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

The Newburgh (N. Y.) News is following up its classified advertising for real estate by making news items of transactions that result from the ads. The News calls its realty classification the "silent partner" of dealers.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Don Francisco Appointed General Manager of Pacific Coast Office, Lord & Thomas and Logan—Charles W. Hoyt Company Elections—Agencies Move Offices

DON FRANCISCO, Los Angeles advertising man, has been appointed first vice-president of Lord & Thomas and Logan and general manager for the Pacific Coast, according to an anouncement made in Chicago Saturday by Albert D. Lasker, Chairman of the Board of that firm.

DON FRANCISCO

During the last ten years Francisco has been closely identified with the advertising of many California products. For six years he was advertising manager of the California Fruit Growers Exchange. As an executive of Lord & Thomas and Logan he has represented his firm in preparing the advertising and sales promotion plans of oranges, lemons, raisins, prunes, walnuts, apricots, and ripe olives during the last six years. In 1923 the Michigan Agricultural College gave him the degree of Master of Agriculture for his work in stimulating the sale of farm products through advertising.

In 1920 Francisco was president of the Los Angeles Advertising Club, and later was president of the Pacific Coast Advertising Clubs Association.

The Pacific Coast offices of Lord & Thomas and Logan handle the advertising of The All-Year Club of Southern California, Southern Pacific Railroad, Dollar Steamship Lines, Union Oil Company, American Mail Lines, and other western concerns.

R. L. Talley and G. N. Wallace were elected vice-presidents of the Charles W. Hoyt Company, Inc., at the agency's recent annual election. Gilbert S. tillo of the Boston office was chose retary and Arthur H. Gates, trea R. F. Flanagan and A. Smith elected to the board of directors.

O. S. Tyson & Co., Inc., has over the entire fourth floor at 16 E street, New York.

The Burton Bigelow adver agency has been incorporated for $ at Buffalo to do a general agency ness. The agency is formed by the ger of the business formerly con by Mr. Bigelow and that formerly ducted by C. Louis Wilson who be vice-president of the new corporat

---

Thomas A. Lowery, formerly ma of the financial and real estate d ment of the Chicago Herald an aminer, has gone into the adve agency business at 29 South La street.

Irvin F. Paschall Company, adve agency, have moved their offices fr South Michigan avenue, to the A Franklin Bldg.

The Wade Advertising Agency located at 208 West Washington Chicago.

Benson & Gamble Company, ad ing agency, has moved its offices 7 South Dearborn street, Chicago Adams Franklin Building.

The Carl W. Art advertising of Spokane and Seattle has added Punter to its Spokane staff and Champion to its Seattle staff, the as artist. Mr. Punter is in cha contact and service departments a kane.

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

Book Sellers Plan Co-operative Newspaper Campaign—Advertiser Announces Winners of National Contest—Orphos Company President Optimistic on Business Conditions

MEMBERS of the American Booksellers' Association meeting in New York this week considered a plan of co-operative newspaper advertising by book sellers presented by Franklin Spier, a specialist in book advertising.

The plan, as proposed, included a central bureau for the preparation of high class advertising material which is to be used co-operatively by the book sellers in various cities in a newspaper campaign to meet the competition that the various book clubs are now giving the book stores.

W. B. Foshay Company, controllers and operators of public utility companies, on May 9 announced winners in a national advertising contest it has been conducting.

Miss Gertrude Percival, of New York, won the first prize of $2,500. Milton Nachman, advertising manager of the Clarksburg (W. Va.) Telegram, won a $100 prize. There were more than 1,000 entries.

An optimistic view of business conditions throughout the country is taken by R. A. Carmichael, president and general manager of the Orphos Company, Inc., New York manufacturers of Orphos tooth paste, who returned from a 20,000-mile journey visiting cities in the country of 50,000 or more. He said:

"I have failed to run across a single city between New York and the Pacific Coast where business this year is not better than that of 1926. We all looked upon last year as a pretty good year and hoped that 1927 would equal it, but in point of sales, in the volume of business done, and in the absence of unemployment, every city that I have visited shows a better record than 1926. Nowhere did I find the remotest sign of a lull. Nor a feeling among merchants and business men that the future urge retrenchment. I have never seen optimism so universal."

Mr. Carmichael has just emerged from the flooded zone of the Mississippi Valley, and although he saw scenes that would indicate a set-back in production and in buying in that locality, there was little despair and no seeming abatement in the purchasing of supplies by merchants in Memphis and other key points.

Headquarters for Apples for Health, Inc., which will soon begin a $4,000,000 advertising campaign for the apple industry of the country, will be established soon in Indianapolis, according to information received from Paul C. Stark of Louisiana, Mo., president of the organization.

According to Mr. Stark's announcement $1,000,000 a year for the next four years will be spent on advertising apples. Newspapers will be largely used as the advertising medium. The Millis Advertising Company of Indianapolis has been retained as advertising counsel.

An unusual type of advertising was featured in a special section of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, May 8, when the Clover Farm Stores Company, an organization which operates 250 retail groceries in Cleveland and a dozen suburbs, took the public into confidence and explained the novel methods by which the concern built up its business. The special newspaper section was profusely illustrated and most of the company's methods of buying merchandise, distribution and selling were fully explained.

G. E. Crandell has been appointed to take charge of sales and advertising for Montgomery Ward & Co. He joined the company in 1921 to direct catalogue production, and in 1924 became vice-president in that department.

AD TIPS

Atherton & Currier, 420 Lexington avenue, New York. Now handling account of the Potter Drug & Chemical Company, Cuticura, Malden, Mass.

Harry Atkinson, Inc., 410 No. Michigan avenue, Chicago. Placing orders with newspapers in various sections for the Thomas Products Company, hair tonic, Chicago.

Aubrey & Moore, 410 North Michigan avenue, Chicago. Adding a few towns to the list on Casement Hardware Co., Chicago.

Barton, Durstine & Osborn, 383 Madison avenue, New York. Now handling account of Lehn & Fink, Inc., Dorothy Gray toilet preparations, New York. Also placing orders with newspapers in selected sections for Wm. Peterman, Inc., Peterman roach food, New York.

Buchen Company, 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago. Has secured account of the Novo Engine Company, Lansing, Michigan.

Glen Buck Company, 39 S. La Salle street, Chicago. Getting ready spring and summer schedules for newspapers on Sheaffer Pen Company, Fort Madison, Iowa. Canadian papers will be used this spring.

Cahill Advertising Company, Pacific Building, San Francisco. Placing orders with some Western newspapers for W. M. Willett, cannelline toilet preparations, San Francisco.

Critchfield & Co., 36 West 44th street, New York. Has secured account of the Automatic Movie Display Corporation, New York.

Cutajar & Provost, Inc., 120 West 42nd street, New York. Now handling account of the Frank A. Hobby Corporation, oil burners, New York.

Donovan & Armstrong, 1211 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Reported to have secured account of Otto Eisenlohr & Bros., Henrietta cigars, Philadelphia.

Dorrance, Sullivan & Co., 130 West 42nd street, New York. Making plans for an introductory newspaper campaign for the Reichardt Cocoa & Chocolate Company, New York.

John H. Dunham Company, 431 North Michigan avenue, Chicago is using a few middlewest towns for the advertising of Wilson Chemical Co., (Wilson Cleaner) Chicago.

A. R. Elliott, Inc., 53 Park Place, New York. Placing orders with some New Jersey newspapers for the J. M. Horton Ice Cream Company, New York City.

Lawrence Fertig Company, 183 Madis nue, New York. Has secured account Solvent Company, New York.

Fuller & Smith, 1501 Euclid avenue land, Ohio. Expected to handle some tising this season for Great Lake Tour

E. T. Howard Company, 33 West 42n New York. Now handling account o Inc., Peter Pan toilet preparation, Ci Ohio.

LaPorte & Austin, Inc., 21 East 40t New York. Has secured account of M. Higgins Company, Ink, Brooklyn, N

H. K. McCann Company, Nation Building, Cleveland, Ohio. Has made spring list on Perfection Stove Co., C

Miller Agency Co., 2144 Madison Toledo, Ohio. Has made up the list issuing orders on Toledo Rex Sp (Flytox) Toledo, Ohio.

Maurice H. Needham Company, 36 Michigan avenue, Chicago. Now hand count of the Trav-Ler Mfg. Compar sets, Chicago.

Peck Advertising Agency, 6 East 39t New York. Has secured account Andes Stoves and Ranges, Geneva, N.

Reimers & Osborn, Inc., 285 Madison New York. Placing account of E. rowitz, Inc., opticians, on their Luxor Goggles.

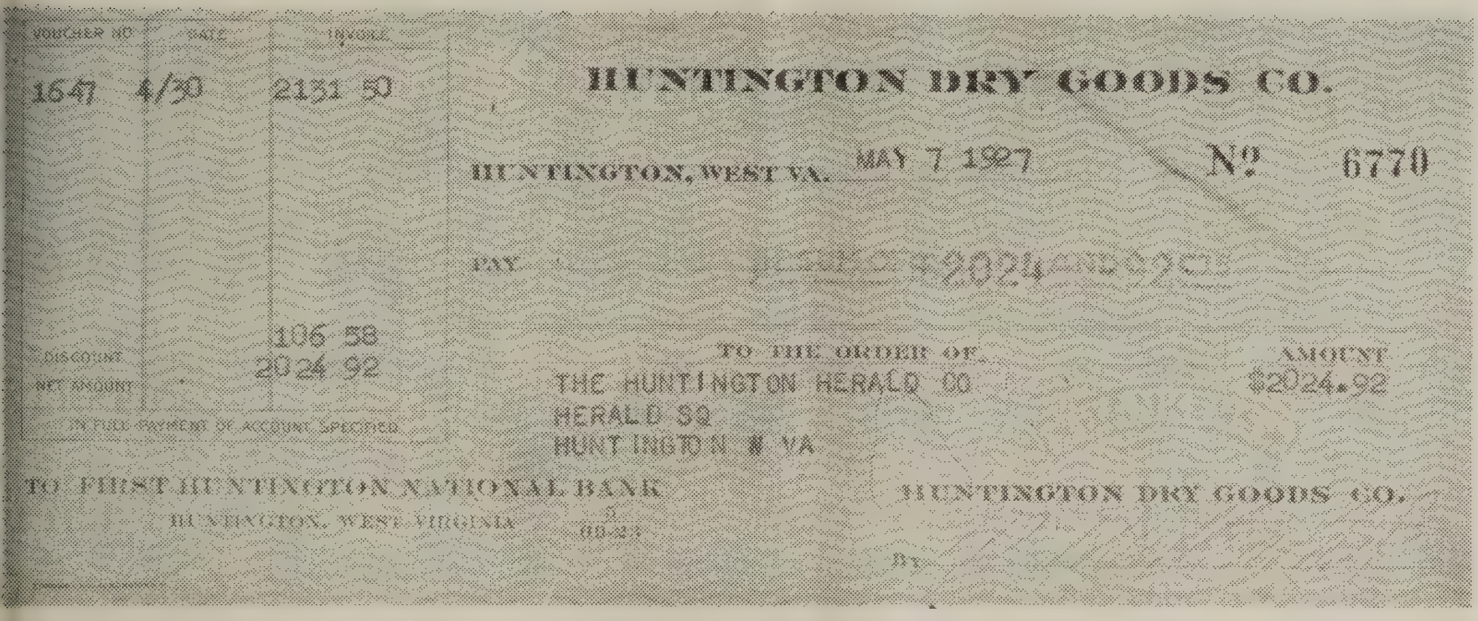
Richardson-Briggs Co., 216 Superior Cleveland, O., will try a limited cam Plant's Magnesia Wafers, Cleveland, C

Frank Seaman, Inc., 470 4th aven York. Again placing orders with ne in various sections for the Thomas Ec Inc., Orange, N. J.

W. A. Shaughnessy & Co., 12 E street, New York. Placing account fo Bros., cocoa, New York.

J. P. Storm & Sons, 2 West 46th str York. Placing orders with newspa various sections for J. W. Wuppern gostura Bitters, New York.

J. Walter Thompson Company, 420 I avenue, New York. Again placing or newspapers in selected sections for t sylvania R. R. Company, Philadelphia.



W. I. Tracy, Inc., 270 Madison ave York. Placing orders with newsp various sections for the Chisel Edge Cl mer Company, Hoboken, N. J.

L. H. Waldron Advertising Agency avenue, New York. Now handling a the Baisa Wood Reproducer Corporati horn, New York.

A STORY OF PRACTICAL RESULTS

That should Guide National Advertisers and Their Agencies in selecting a newspaper medium in

HUNTINGTON, WEST VIRGINIA

VOUCHER NO. 1647 DATE 4/30 INVOICE 2131 50
DISCOUNT 106 58
NET AMOUNT 2024 92
IN FULL PAYMENT OF ACCOUNT SPECIFIED
TO FIRST HUNTINGTON NATIONAL BANK
HUNTINGTON, WEST VIRGINIA
HUNTINGTON DRY GOODS CO.
HUNTINGTON, WEST VA. MAY 7 1927 No. 6770
PAY $2024.92
TO THE ORDER OF
THE HUNTINGTON HERALD CO
HERALD SQ
HUNTINGTON W VA
AMOUNT $2024.92
HUNTINGTON DRY GOODS CO.
By

The check reproduced above is for space used in the Herald Papers during the month of April only

Herald Papers,
Huntington, W. Va.

Huntington, W. Va., April 29, 1927

Gentlemen:

We believe that you will be interested in learning that the Huntington Dry Goods Company month of April has been the most successful month, outside of Christmas business, that this institution has ever enjoyed.

We showed a gain of 35% over April, 1926, and this store now enjoys a business of over one million dollars yearly, which is the largest cash business done by any store in the state of West Virginia.

We believe the phenomenal growth of our business, during the month of April should be a matter of gratification to the Herald Papers in view of the fact that our well planned advertising campaign was carried in your newspapers exclusively.

Permit us to assure you that we highly appreciate the spirit of co-operation which has been evidenced.

Very truly yours,
HUNTINGTON DRY GOODS CO.
By M. Mittenthal.

National Advertisers can cover the Huntington field completely at one low cost by using

THE HERALD PAPERS

The Evening Herald — The Herald-Dispatch

Largest city, suburban, country and total net paid circulation in the Huntington market.

National Representative

DEVINE-WALLIS CORPORATION — New York and Chicago

SHOP TALK AT THIRTY

By MARLEN PEW

ON this glistening spring day, with unfolding Nature trilling a siren's song, with golf and the family 'bus beckoning, we leave our Himalaya heaped desk to attend a luncheon at the Advertising Club of New York. In general we find clubs, particularly luncheon clubs, deadly dull sepulchral joints where lounge Babbitts shake hands by use of the fist and elbow action and cut each other's throats in back-stairs conversation, and where the waiters are usually the only pleasant or interesting human beings to be encountered. On such a diamond-studded day as this voluntarily to spend our leisure at the ordinary luncheon club would be like giving ourselves up at the Tombs.

* * *

BUT the Advertising Club of New York is not the ordinary club. It is an extraordinary institution in every way. Never have we entered its classic portals and failed to receive a welcome from regular fellows and never have we attended an entertainment there which did not provide substantial inspiration and food for thought. There is something doing, something which might titillate the pituitary gland if, indeed, it does not give one an over-all thrill like the program that we have just witnessed and now hasten to pass on to the members of this sewing society.

* * *

IN the dim past editorial men used to get together to discuss in intimate relationship public questions of the hour as well as their own affairs. They used to seem to enjoy each other's company. There was genuine craft feeling among them. Those occasions smacked of the legendary spirit of the Cheshire Cheese and the Beaver Street coffee house. But that sort of communion among the writing and artist craft appears to have been boiled hard in an inferiority sauce. It prevailed long before editors and reporters made the great surrender to the status quo and then went into business for themselves. The free spirit of the former day, which concerned itself with public wrongs and private rights, unquestionably still exists in individuals to be found here and there, but we now rarely attend "upstairs" parties where men are heard to express their true, independent thoughts concerning the flesh and blood they write about. The great open forum in New York at present is the Advertising Club of New York. The freest and best talk that is being uttered may be heard there. The membership is interested in the "low-down" on public affairs, as well as on matters related to dauntless and profitable publication of news and its auxiliary interests.

* * *

ANY fellow who is interesting can get a hearing at the Advertising Club, from the Prince of Wales to the last man-jack who has succeeded in unearthing a glittering fact from the fathomless depths of bunk. When Carl Magee had fought the first round of his sanguinary battle with the wolves of politics and protected business in New Mexico this notable advertising club called him in, heard his story and gave the cheer that his brave soul deserved. After he had finally won the long fight in the Southwest the club called him again, heard the last chapter and stood applauding at his feet. That's the way the advertising men regard the heroes of the profession. And you never saw men in a finer brotherhood among themselves. When a member has achieved success, been elected vice-president or something of his concern, retired, married, had twins put into his arms by Dr. Black, has returned from roaming in distant parts or has written an ad that made some geezer rich overnight, the members of this club lovingly and appropriately celebrate the event with parties and with all the fixings. When a member has been snagged by hard-luck he finds himself surrounded by hands that pull upward, never push downward. I never hear advertising men knocking. They are all for one and one for all. Even some very greedy and objectionable persons among them are permitted to slide by with nothing worse than tolerant shrugs as criticism. Behind all this the vast club membership, more than 2,000 at last accounts, has perfected a marvelous system of collective effort which seeks to promote the advertising trade and control it as an ethical institution. The effort is in behalf of advertising as an art as well as a business and this calls for education, reformation of practice, cooperation in a soundly practical sense and glowing social intercourse. The beauty of the clubhouse in Park Avenue is far-famed. Its sweeping marble staircase and its collection of fireplaces brought from ancient palaces of Europe are sufficient to distinguish it as one of the most beautiful houses in America.

* * *

TO-DAY our first speaker is Julian Mason, upstanding editor of Mr. Curtis' New York Evening Post, and the genius publisher of Philadelphia, now in his 77th year, is sitting at the guest table, twinkling his blue eyes and having a first-rate time among folk who have something worth while to talk about. He seems to regard Mason as a favorite son. In his coat pocket, located right over the heart, is the Post's circulation record for last week, highest in the history of that ancient and honorable daily. Now, what has Julian Mason to hand to the advertising brotherhood? A red-hot talk about the evils of free publicity in this mad age. He tells of the effects upon newspapers, on newspaper men and upon advertising men. It is all bad. It is all wrong, mistaken, futile and to be avoided. He puts the blame where the blame belongs, on the shoulders of the editorial folk who weakly and meekly pass the grafting stuff into print. Mr. Mason in nowise pussy-foots, but calls everything by its right name. He gets a warm hand.

* * *

AND then comes an eloquent address by F. Lauriston Bullard, author of the editorial entitled "We Submit," published last year in the Boston Herald and selected last week as the Pulitzer prize-winner of the year. No sooner had EDITOR & PUBLISHER announced that Mr. Bullard and his newspaper had been so honored than the entertainment committee of the club demanded his attendance at a luncheon in his honor. He offers a masterful presentation of the essential facts in the world-renowned case of Sacco and Vanzetti, the Massachusetts radicals who are awaiting execution for a double murder which they may or may not have committed. Mr. Bullard, checking his every utterance by proofs which can not be challenged, convinces his audience that a reasonable doubt exists and certainly that his state's legal machinery, which permits of a man going to death without a review of the facts as well as the law, by a tribunal higher than the trial judge, needs some repairs.

* * *

MR. BULLARD'S stuff is the good old newspaper stuff that we all love to talk about. He is an editorial writer for one of the most careful and conservative newspapers of the United States. His interest was attracted by some seemingly glaring discrepancies in the testimony upon which the two Italian radicals had been convicted. Mr. Bullard got the court record and read it through, though it contained more than 3,000 typewritten pages of testimony. He digested this great mass of words and came to the conclusion that at least a reasonable doubt existed. Men cannot be put to death in this civilization when reasonable doubt exists as to their guilt. For a trial judge, as in this case, to posssess the power of deciding on the facts without the safe check of the state's higher court, is repellant to the fair mind. And so, unhesitatingly, despite the bitterness of the feeling in New England against radicalism, the Boston Herald challenged the court's action. The Governor of Massachusetts is reviewing the whole matter as Mr. Bullard tells his story. Justice shall be done to these despised men. Mr. Bullard receives a cheer from the advertising men. He is the latest hero. On with the next! There's a club for you!

* * *

A FEW months ago we chanced to have had a talk with a newspaper reporter who had just returned from Boston where he had made an investigation of the Sacco-Vanzetti case. He said: "They didn't kill the paymaster and his assistant. They are not guilty. There isn't a chance that they were not framed up. But they are two of the dirtiest scum that Europe has ever unloaded on our shores, one a philosophical anarchist and the other a rank communist. They will get burned in the chair and they deserve it." Mr. Bullard today impressively said: "Sacco and Vanzetti dead are worth more to communism and anarchy than they would be alive."

MORE MONEY BEING SPENT FOR ADVERTISING ART

(Continued from page 11)

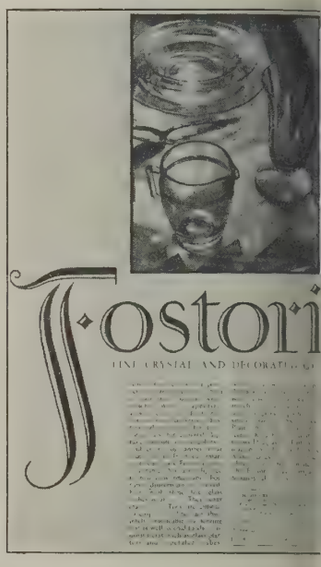
agency, said in connection with Mr. Fitz's work:

"In the advertisements featuring glassware it is no longer our problem to show a perfectly set table. The public knows how to set a table, and are more concerned with the artistic possibilities of our product. The arrangement is important, as are the lighting effects.

"We have been using photographs in our Fostoria advertisements for several years, and have gotten some very excellent effects. In this photograph we have gone just a little farther. We have tried to get, in addition to a splendid reproduction of the glassware itself, an illustration with artistic merit."



In conclusion, I must repeat the exhibit at the Art Center does not pretend to show all the good advertising art produced during 1926.

Much of the accepted art on display has been used to establish a personality or identity for a given manufacturer or his product. And again, much of it has been superimposed on the advertising message in such a manner as merely to exploit the culture and good taste of the advertiser himself at the expense of direct selling power. With this in mind, it may readily be seen that it is often difficult for the average visitor at this exhibition to say just what product or service was intended to be advertised by some of the illustrations. They seem to require the accompanying text and editorial captions which are written to intrigue the interest of the reader indirectly to the subject.

Many of the illustrations on display, costly illustrations, too, bear the same relation to the advertising message, perhaps, as that of the concert broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra does to La Touraine coffee, in the latter's so-called advertising radio programs. No question is raised as to the æsthetic charm and craftsmanship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but some of us challenge the suitability of such material as part of an advertising program. The oily illustrators of the "Wilmington" school, who imitate so eagerly the superficial mannerisms of Howard Pyle and Frank Brangwyn, seem to stray farthest from the advertiser's subject in their strenuous efforts to attract the reader's attention. As Mr. Jordan, of "Playboy" fame, has told us, "You advertising men are often too darn clever."

There is rapidly developing benea surface in a less picturesque and ol manner an American technique in tising design which is being reco by the public at large in a very su tial way, to wit: the signing of cc by the thousands and the purcha advertised articles. Such results a ing achieved by a new kind of tean the enthusiastic and sympathetic co- tion of the copy, art, research and chandising departments of an adve agency, and through various inve tions, the most helpful co-operation consumers themselves.

By this method it is often foun a most sophisticated drawing, thor approved by artist and critic, has no than a negative effect upon the ho in the corn belt. What passes fo verve, charm and abandon on Bro is scorned as fairy tale and nurser in the hinterland.

A photographic study which is a fine reproduction and an illu tion with artistic merit.

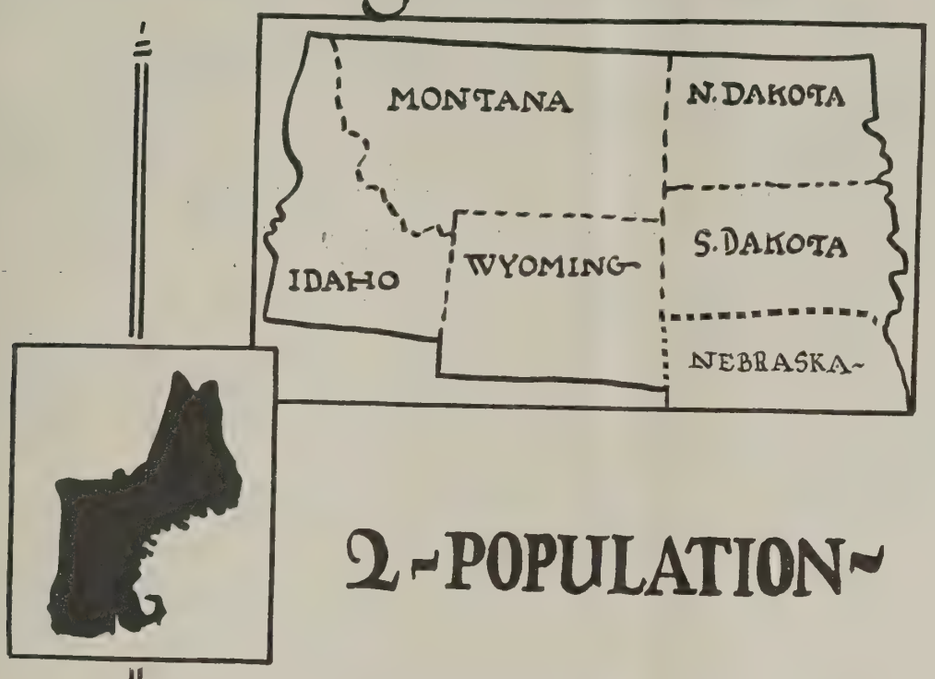
I know myself of a drawing do the Winchester Repeating Arms b Held, whose genius for satirizing cana is supreme. Mr. Held dashe huntsman in his inimitable styl togged out in approved sporting about to pop off his toy gun, just smart, into a swirling mess of mar mals, skunks, rabbits, partridge a like. But the hard-boiled hunters a billies of the West and South muff point completely. They said it sportsmanlike to get so close to a and not have sense enough to keep "Where'd you get them God-fo lookin' animals anyway?" "I w trust no dude to know shells"—and

This drawing must have cost a l by accepted standards of value worth its price as a work of art, no But this brings us to a moot point. pictures are sometimes extravagant it is the result of a bad habit, whic of our best agencies indulge. Th advertisements to their clients and a day, when they might have done In their enthusiasm in obtainin client's okeh they have occasionally looked the necessity for selling the product more efficiently to the con



"Bigger and better art for adver is a mesmeric slogan, perhaps, bu we have asked the question, "Is i art?" should we not as emphatica sist that someone also ask, "Is i advertising?"

GOLF BUG IS LOOSE

A number of golf tournaments vertising newspaper men are plann the summer months. The first n the New York Advertising Clu Association was held at the West Hills Country Club at White Plain 10. The Metropolitan Advertisin Association has set the following for tournaments: Wingfoot, Ma Baltusrol, June 14; and Oakland 12.

COMPARATIVE NEW ENGLAND

As Your Market-----

2-POPULATION-

ACCESSIBILITY is measured by the density of population. That is, in population per square mile and the number of stores. Compare the New England territory with these six Northwestern States. In compact New England live over 7 million people. In these Northwestern States dwell a little over 4 million. In other words, New England, less than one-fifth in size, has nearly twice the population.

Which market offers greater opportunities for the national advertiser? Which market can be covered quicker and reach more people at less cost? The answer is—NEW ENGLAND. Why not concentrate your energies here.

The newspapers listed below are ready to help you. Get in touch with them.

MASSACHUSETTS—Population, 3,852,356

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
*Attleboro Sun	(E)	5,497	.03	.03
*Boston Globe	(M&E)	278,988	.50	.50
*Boston Globe	(S)	325,234	.55	.55
†Boston Transcript	(E)	38,245	.20	.20
*Boston Post	(M)	394,851	.60	.60
*Boston Post	(S)	350,627	.55	.55
*Fitchburg Sentinel	(E)	12,069	.06	.045
*Haverhill Gazette	(E)	16,061	.065	.05
*Lynn Item	(E)	17,004	.065	.05
†Lowell Courier-Citizen and Evening Leader	(M&E)	21,310	.07	.07
*New Bedford Standard Mercury	(M&E)	32,607	.10	.10
*New Bedford Sunday Standard	(S)	29,262	.10	.10
*North Adams Transcript	(E)	10,427	.05	.04
*Pittsfield Eagle	(E)	18,264	.05	.05
*Salem News	(E)	21,495	.09	.07
*Taunton Gazette	(E)	9,414	.045	.035
*Worcester Telegram-Gazette	(M&E)	99,207	.28	.25
*Worcester Sunday Telegram	(S)	52,740	.21	.18

CONNECTICUT—Population, 1,380,631

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
*Bridgeport Post-Telegram	(E&M)	44,446	.15	.15
*Bridgeport Post	(S)	21,910	.10	.10
*Hartford Courant	(M)	34,725	.09	.09
*Hartford Courant	(S)	57,795	.13	.13
††Hartford Times	(E)	56,077	.13	.13
Middletown Press	(E)	8,560	.05	.03
†New Haven Register	(E&S)	48,076	.145	.135
New London Day	(E)	12,293	.06	.045
††Norwich Bulletin	(M)	12,842	.07	.05
Norwalk Hour	(E)	6,429	.04	.04
††South Norwalk Sentinel	(E)	5,320	.04	.03
*Stamford Advocate	(E)	10,619	.05	.04
*Waterbury Republican-American	(M&E)	24,018	.08	.08
*Waterbury Republican	(S)	15,214	.08	.08

MAINE—Population, 768,014

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
Portland Press-Herald Express, Sun & Telegram	(M&E)	59,356	.20	.16

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Population, 443,683

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
Concord Monitor-Patriot	(E)	5,773	.0375	.025
††Keene Sentinel	(E)	3,980	.036	.023
Manchester Union Leader	(M&E)	32,585	.15	.12

RHODE ISLAND—Population, 604,397

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
††Newport Daily News	(E)	6,249	.0336	.0293
Pawtucket Times	(E)	28,188	.08	.08
Providence Bulletin	(E)	71,443	.20	(B).27
Providence Journal	(M)	38,599	.12	(B).27
Providence Journal	(S)	74,009	.20	.20
*Providence News	(E)	28,189	.08	.08
*Providence Tribune	(E)	21,808	.10	.09
Westerly Sun	(E&S)	5,273	.03	.03
Woonsocket Call	(E)	14,880	.05	.05

VERMONT—Population, 352,428

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
Barre Times	(E)	7,282	.03	.025
††Brattleboro Reformer	(E)	3,520	.035	.02
Burlington Free Press	(M)	14,265	.05	.05
*Rutland Herald	(M)	11,539	.05	.05
††St. Johnsbury Caledonian-Record	(E)	4,061	.03	.02

* A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
 A. B. C. Publisher's Statement, March 31, 1927.
† Government Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
†† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.
(B) Combination rate Daily Journal and Eve. Bulletin.

CANDIDATE'S FALSE TIP ABOUT HIMSELF TO PRESS LANDS HIM IN COURT

Jury Acquits Him of Giving Untrue News to Brooklyn Eagle, Though He Admitted Charge, Calling His Act a "Joke"

UNIQUE in the history of court trials and newspaper suits was the case of William E. Skillman, young attorney and unsuccessful insurgent candidate for the Republican nomination as New York State Assemblyman in the Twenty-first Assembly district, who sent false news in forged telegrams to four Brooklyn newspapers because his "campaign was waning and it needed stirring up."

Skillman, who was acquitted Thursday afternoon by a jury in Judge W. Bernard Vause's part in the Kings County Court, had been indicted on five charges, four of which were made by the newspapers who received the false information. The other was brought against him by Frederick J. H. Kracke, United States Port Appraiser of the Port of New York, who charged that Skillman forged his name to the telegrams addressed on Aug. 25, 1926, to Brooklyn Daily Eagle, Daily Times, Standard Union, and the Citizen.

On Wednesday of this week, Assistant District Attorney Louis Goldstein moved for the trial of the one involving the Eagle.

The telegram which was alleged to contain misinformation read as follows:

"It is reported that William E. Skillman, insurgent candidate for member of Assembly from 21st A. D., Kings County, is living with a woman not his wife. Investigate.

"KRACKE."

Skillman's defense was that the text of the telegram was true, because at that time, he maintains, he was residing with his mother at 315 East 18th street, Brooklyn. In testifying for himself, Skillman said:

"Yes, I sent the telegrams as a joke. The campaign seemed to be waning. There wasn't much doing. It needed stirring up. I wanted to see how the Commissioner (Mr. Kracke) would take it. I didn't think he would take it as seriously as he did. At the time I sent it I knew it would not be published."

Skillman admitted that he sent the telegrams in the heat of a political fight with Mr. Kracke, who was running on the opposition ticket. He said that he did not realize exactly what he was doing. He maintained that, although the telegram's implication was bad, the text was correct.

In discussing the case, Assistant District Attorney Goldstein said: "The question in the case was whether or not the telegrams were intended for publication. This law which went into effect six years ago, making it a misdemeanor to send false information to a publication, was passed with the intention of preventing fraud or libel through the use of the press. It would not have been such a 'joke' if the Eagle had not investigated the message, and had published it."

In the course of the trial, Port Appraiser Kracke went on the stand to say that he had nothing at all to do with the sending of the telegram. A representative of the Postal Telegraph Company was also called to the stand. The telegrams had been sent from the company's branch office at 1277 Lenox avenue, New York, and, after a checkup, Samuel Sherner, branch supervisor, said he remembered Skillman sending the telegrams.

After a half-dozen character witnesses had testified that Skillman has a good reputation as a lawyer and had distinguished himself as an aviator in the World War, the jury was given the case. After three minutes of deliberation, the jury acquitted Skillman.

In a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER concerning the case, Harris M. Crist, managing editor of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, said:

"This is the first prosecution in Kings County under this new State law and it is likely to have a wholesome and widespread effect. The law is intended to provide punishment for those who wilfully give misleading information to newspapers. Skillman was a candidate for office at the time, and sent a phony message to the Eagle and other newspapers, evidently thinking that stories helpful to him would be published. His idea was to appear as a martyr suffering from false accusation. Although a lawyer, Skillman seemed to think that editors would swallow his message without investigation. Inquiries quickly revealed the falseness of the tip and the fact that the messages were bogus.

"When the fraud was exposed Skillman disappeared. The district attorney acted promptly and wisely and an indictment followed. Skillman stayed out of town for many weeks after he was indicted, but finally surrendered and was brought up for trial. The Eagle has played up this incident so that all readers may know of it. It will doubtless have a wholesome influence in curbing the thoughtless and vicious who, for various reasons, might be tempted to make use of the press to exploit misinformation.

"Skillman was found not guilty by a jury, in spite of the fact that he took the stand and admitted sending the false telegram, and he said he did it as a joke."

BONUS FOR STAFF

The loyalty of the staff of the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union in working a continuous stretch of approximately 30 hours on top of more than two weeks of twelve-hour days was recognized by payment of a salary bonus by Dan Carroll, managing editor, and Wilson Sullivan, city editor. This was in connection with a sensational trial of two youths for hold-up murder, which culminated with the Times-Union, afternoon daily, printing three complete special editions over-night in less than ten hours. The third edition, issued four hours after the verdict, carried complete stories of the court room scenes and other details.

PAPER INSURES STAFF

Executives and other employes of the Journal-Chronicle company, publishers of the Owatonna (Minn.) Journal-Chronicle, last week received the benefits of group insurance under a plan sponsored and worked out by E. K. Whiting, president.

LOCAL AGENTS PLEASED WITH AD CAMPAIGN

Automobile Liability Insurance Men Report Success in Cooperative Drive in Mid-West States

Local automobile liability agents were well pleased with the results of their co-operative advertising campaign staged in Illinois, Indiana and Michigan during April, according to reports received by Leo E. Thieman of the Casualty Information Clearing House, Chicago, which prepared the mats for the local agents.

"The campaign has had a number of desirable effects which might be expressed as follows: Increased sale of automobile liability insurance, a better understanding of that form of coverage by the public, and better spirit of the public toward the agents and the insurance business," Mr. Thieman states.

"During the 'Insure in April' movement, advertising campaigns were inaugurated and run in scores of cities in each of the three states."

The following excerpt from a letter received is from F. J. Budelier, a local agent of Rock Island, Ill., is indicative of the general situation and the value of appealing to the public through newspaper advertising, Mr. Thieman said.

"The next morning after this meeting was held, I called in the advertising man from the Rock Island Argus, which is our only local newspaper, and gave him a list of the agents to call on in order that we might put on the advertising campaign as put out by the Clearing House Association, and within an hour he had a sufficient number of the le agents to put over such a campaign a very small cost to each agent.

"I have found that the adver which we are putting in the pape creating considerable comment, as p seem to be discussing automobile lia and property damage protection, an also stressing larger liability limits good many of the agents have tol that people are coming into their o and ordering liability and property age protection on their automobiles we find the same to be true in our office.

"This campaign seems to be going big, as the agents informed me that are getting results from it. Not that, but it has started a good ma the people thinking, and even if they automobile insurance of this kind, small limits, a good many have bee creasing their limits up to where should be."

NEW YORK STATE
Westchester County's
Fastest Growing Cities
Mount Vernon and
New Rochelle and
The Vicinity Towns
Are Covered Completely by
THE DAILY ARGUS
of
Mount Vernon
THE STANDARD STA
of
New Rochelle
Both Members of A. B. C.
Westchester Newspapers, Inc.
Franklin A. Merriam, Pres.
Mount Vernon—New Rochelle

ADVERTISERS who understand the Iowa situation know from experience that the consumers' market there cannot be properly sold without the use of newspapers in these twenty-one key cities.
IOWA DAILY PRESS ASS'N

Ames Tribune
Boone News-Republican
Burlington Gazette
Burlington Hawkeye
Cedar Rapids Gazette
Centerville Iowegian & Citizen
Council Bluffs Nonpareil
Davenport Democrat & Leader
Davenport Times
Dubuque Telegraph-Herald
Fort Dodge Messenger & Chronicle
Fort Madison Democrat
Iowa City Press Citizen
Keokuk Gate City
Marshalltown Times-Republican
Mason City Globe-Gazette & Times
Muscatine Journal & News-Tribune
Oelwein Register
Oskaloosa Herald
Ottumwa Courier
Sioux City Journal
Sioux City Tribune
Washington Journal
Waterloo Courier
Waterloo Tribune

Detroit
Fourth
Largest City
Complete coverag
with one paper.
The Detroit New Offers advertise unusual opportuniti

Largest Circulation
and Largest Volume of Advertising
of any Daily west of the Missouri river
LOS ANGELES
EVENING HERALD
REPRESENTATIVES
Chicago, JOHN H. LEDERER, 910 Hearst Bldg.
San Francisco, A. J. NORRIS HILL, 610 Hearst Bldg.
New York, HERBERT W. MOLONEY, 604 Times Bldg.

America's Complete
Newspaper
NEW YORK
Herald
Tribune

Buffalo, The Wonder City of America
Buffalo—a profitable Market for Advertisers
Sales in Buffalo are splendid for advertising goods. Employment conditions excellent, retail and other business thriving. One newspaper will put your story over to 83% of the people—that paper is the
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Read in 4 out of 5 Buffalo Homes
EDWARD H. BUTLER
Editor and Publisher
KELLY-SMITH COMPANY
Representatives
Marbridge Bldg. New York, N. Y.
Atlantic Bldg. Philadelphia
Tribune Tower Chicago, Ill.
Waterman Bldg. Boston

Sell COLUMBUS and the G·C·O·M
During 1926 The Columbus Dispatch carried more agate lines of paid advertising than any other Ohio newspaper.
Advertisers who use The Daily Columbus Dispatch are guaranteed a total net paid circulation of 113,678. . . . . Many, many thousands more than any other Columbus newspaper.
Dispatch
OHIO'S GREATEST HOME DAILY

Pennsylvania's greatest assets

Mines and Industry—

How many people realize that the mines of Pennsylvania produce 85 times the value realized from her forests and more than twice the value realized from her farms.

To express it more emphatically, practically two out of every three freight cars hauled on the railways of Pennsylvania are filled with the products of the mines. Some idea of the magnitude and volume of these products may be gained if it be realized that a freight train carrying a year's production of the mines would reach more than twice around the world at the equator or would reach 17 times from Philadelphia to San Francisco, or 147 times from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, or if traveling continuously day and night at 25 miles an hour, would require 86 days to pass a given point.

Roughly, the mines and industries using mineral products are responsible for two-thirds of the industry and wealth of Pennsylvania. A State that is so rich in natural resources, in productive wealth, is always a good market for the national advertiser.

These newspapers listed below invite you to investigate this market.

		Circulation	2,500 lines	10,000 lines
Allentown Call	(M)	34,660	.11	.11
Allentown Call	(S)	23,813	.11	.11
††Beaver Falls Tribune	(E)	7,141	.03	.03
††Bethlehem Globe Times	(E)	14,147	.06	.06
††Brownsville Telegraph	(E)	7,818	.04	.04
*Chester Times	(E)	19,742	.09	.07
††Coatesville Record	(E)	6,866	.035	.03
Connellsville Courier	(E)	6,012	.02	.02
Easton Express	(E)	34,476	.10	.10
Erie Times	(E)	30,594	.08	.08
††Greensburg Tribune Review	(EM)	14,800	.05	.05
††Hazleton Plain Speaker	(E)	20,582	.08	.07
††Hazleton Standard-Sentinel	(M)
*Mount Carmel Item	(E)	4,340	.0285	.0285
Oil City Derrick	(M)	6,903	.04	.04
Pottsville Republican and Morning Paper	(EM)	15,887	.08	.07
Scranton Times	(E)	43,000	.13	.12
*Sharon Herald	(E)	7,456	.0357	.0357
Sunbury Daily Item	(E)	5,922	.035	.035
*Warren Mirror-Times	(ME)	9,291	.043	.043
*Washington Observer and Reporter	(M&E)	17,384	.06	.06
††West Chester Local News	(E)	11,941	.04	.04
Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader	(E)	26,442	.08	.06
††Williamsport Sun and Gazette & Bulletin	(ME)	29,931	.09	.09
††York Dispatch	(E)	20,131	.05	.05

*A. B. C. Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
†Government Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
††Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

N. Y. WORLD VETERANS CELEBRATE 44TH YEAR OF PULITZER OWNERSHIP

Members of Quarter Century Association Hold 17th Annual Dinner May 10—Mayor Walker Speaks—Group Has 275 Members

NEARLY 200 veterans of the New York World organization got together in Turn Hall, 85th Street, at Lexington Avenue, Tuesday night, and drank a toast to Joseph Pulitzer, who purchased the World from Jay Gould 44 years ago May 10.

I. D. White

The occasion was the seventeenth annual dinner of the World Quarter Century Association, made up of men and women who have been associated with the World and the Evening World continuously for 25 years or more, and the chief speaker was Mayor Walker.

"The first paper I remember coming into my father's home was the World," said Mr. Walker. "There is no paper for which I have a higher regard, no paper in which I can find more news in the newsiest way.

"Politically the World is independent. No politician owns the World, and I never knew a politician it wanted to own. I admire it, although it has said some things I haven't framed or preserved to hand down. I don't care what politically it writes, but I hope it continues to have the approval of the citizens of New York. An institution founded on the principles on which Mr. Pulitzer founded the World must continue to have its following."

Other guests who were speakers included James W. Barrett, city editor; John F. Bresnahan, business manager; Joseph D. Sullivan, assistant business manager, and Martin King of Attala, Ala.

The association's membership now is 275, more than 11 per cent of the 2,354 persons employed by the World, it was remarked by Isaac D. White, president and toastmaster.

Those present included William Jenkins and Charles Monaghan, who have been with the World more than 50 years, long before the change in ownership. Also there was John D. Hadwin, who came from St. Louis with Mr. Pulitzer and was celebrating his forty-fourth anniversary in the financial department. The ten feminine members had a long-service representative in Miss Isabel Groves of the telephone department, known over the wire to staff members as "Jessie."

Edward Weisman headed the committee in charge of the dinner.

The association's membership includes:

EDITORIAL AND ART

Frank W. Conkling, Fred W. Shipman, Isaac D. White, Robert R. Wilkes, Frank Neimeyer, Erastus W. Osborn, Theodore E. Murray, Marc McGrath, John Pollock, Frederick B. Saumenig, Thomas P. Orr, Samuel S. Fontaine, Charles McCarthy, Robert H. Lyman, Timothy Walsh, James W. Wells, John H. Tennant, Edward E. Bowns, John Fay, John McNevin, Vincent Treanor, Albert E. Wood, John L. Heaton, William Mason, Elton E. Burroughs, William F. Warnecke, George F. Murray, Edward A. Roth, Frank Seymour, George Amy, Edmund F. Flinn, Samuel G. Cahan, Martin Green, Robert S. Ament, Edward F. Casey, Daniel B. O'Shea, Alfred M. Snediker, Edward Rudolph, Will Van Benthuysen.

ADVERTISING

Harry T. Cook, Thomas S. Lonergan, Sigmund Eiseman, John C. Kerrigan, Frank Miller, Edward M. Rogers, Charles L. Huson, Miss Isabel Groves, John F. Evans, George Myer, Joseph P. Crynes.

COMPOSING ROOM

William Jenkins, Henry Jenkins, John Rutan, Miss Mary Sullivan, John Loehr, James Quinn, Arthur H. Torkington, John C. Wardell, John H. Hayes, T. Joseph Rooney, Thomas Boyd, Robert Campbell, Albert Finn, Mrs. M. L. Kingsley, Charles E. Lytle, Charles W. Drew, Charles C. Harrison, Morris Morse, Samuel H. Crane, William A. Kelly, E. Betz, George J. Buckley, George A. Perry, Fred B. Ilsley, William H. Thornton, George R. Wagner, Leonce Levy, Patrick J. Quigley, John J. Lambert, John J. Farrell, Joseph Conrad, James A. Brown, Harry J. Convery, Harold E. Dean, John R. Farlow, Arthur B. Fessenden, Frank M. Horn, James C. Lambert, Marshall Rufus Lydy, William S. McCord, George W. Maine, James F. MacLauchlin, Fred R. Muller, Elihu B. Perry, George W. Ruckoldt, Daniel O'Brien, Austin A. O'Brien, Gustav Peyser, James J. Nolan, Joseph Gardiner, C. B. Gillette, Thomas P. Hayes, H. M. Vanderslice, John A. O'Brien, William B. Tindle, Jay C. Seager, James R. Kirwin, C. F. Shepard, Walter H. Bock.

PRESS ROOM

Patrick J. Butler, Ira Kingsbury, Otto Kirsch, William J. Butler, George Casey, George W. Gee, James T. Maloney, John J. Wilson, Charles Butler, James P. Condon, William Knowlton, John Ludwig, August J. Bly, William E. Johnston, Frank J. Schlosser, William J. Sullivan, Henry E. Dahl, Michael Blink, Joseph W. Brochu, Clarence J. Dickinson, Frank T. Dickinson, George A. Flecker, John J. Maloney, Samuel E. Speare, Peter Conners, James Cogan, James S. Laverty, Frederick A. Lundy, Thomas Quigley, Augustus Shopp, Andrew Swansson, Thomas J. Cooke, William A. Thompson, Joseph C. Searing, John Daly, Wesley Graham, Frank Vail, John Cahill, Michael Madigan, John Meiers, Andrew Noble, Charles Derry, Frank Taylor, James Byrnes, Louis Rogers, Edward Dermon, John Atwood, William Biersack, Thomas Gafford, Conrad Greisel, William Kellington, George Miller, David Palmer, T. Quigley, Edward Ralpi, Fred Hollweg, William Keatley, James Fagin.

STEREOTYPE

Fabian Le Febyre, Ambrose J. Dean, James F. Roney, James S. Brown, William H. Hammill, George Ware, William Wilder, Theodore Claasen, Winfield T. Keegan, Joseph J. McKeegan, George Garrison, James J. Williams, E. Guile.

CIRCULATION

Charles Monaghan, Henry Heuss, Philip Heinrich, Charles Roach, Isaac J. Woolf, Edward Weisman, William S. Davis, William O'Brien, Samuel Samuels, Philip Gerdinger, Harry C. Openshaw, Morris Samuels, George Eull, James F. Kehoe, George H. Price, Vincent Morello, William Willis, John Schwerein, Thomas L. Wallace, Barney D. Samuels, Tillie E. Kivlen, Joseph M. Claire, Walter J. Dempsey, Dennis Monks, Henry Meiers, Murray J. Riddle, Joseph M. Scott, James O'Brien, John J. Jackson, Frank Brosnan, Joseph Cosgrave, Conrad Hepp, John Tuscano, Pierce Halbert, Charles Lamake, William McElroy, Michael Tessler, Thomas Wilson, Morris Kapplan, Edward F. O'Shaughnessy, Philip Sullivan, Joseph Lannon, Benjamin Diamond, Meyer Weisse, Joseph Shinbine, Joseph Eisenberg, Jeremiah Murphy, Adolph Nagler.

PUBLICATION

Henry Muller, John Armstrong, Ben Jacobs, Frank D. Caruthers, John Seymour, Glenn S. Williamson.

FINANCIAL

John D. Hadwin, William I. Shimer, Charles M. White, Louis Feinberg, George Salmon, Nelson H. Botsford, Charles E. Nifenecker, Fred Springer, Miss Jane M. Fleury, Harry V. Hartman, George W. Miller, Joseph Martoccio, Margaret T. Sloan, James Tate, Miss L. V. Snyder, Asa Lippincott, Miss May Davis, Harold M. Forker, Paul Haywood, Rebie McCue, Mary Herries Kelly.

PHOTO ENGRAVING

Anthony Bucher, William H. Adams, Michael Kuhn, Edward F. White, William J. Anderson.

PULITZER BUILDING

Ervin A. Pratt, Thomas Stephens, Charles Hill, Edward Roufberg, Miss Julia Radican, John McGrath.

ELECTROTYPING DEPARTMENT

John Ficken, Willard Walsh.

RETIRED

Samuel C. Collins, George F. Newton, Norris A. Clowes, James Quinn, James McKernan, Don C. Seitz, William W. Gray, Charles Menzies, Harry S. Rushmore, Willis C. Ring, Alfred B. Travis, John H. Gavin, Timothy Gorman.

DAILY CRIME NEWS FROM PAGE ONE

ACCOUNTS of murder trials have been banned from page one of the Warren (Pa.) Tribune. The new policy was adopted, it was explained, "because the Tribune believes a majority of its readers are in favor of a clean paper."

"News is news," the Tribune said, "but in the future items pertaining to vulgar or unsavory cases will be carried inside and as inconspicuously as possible."

SPRINGFIELD VETERAN RETI

Carl Withe, mechanical superinte of the Springfield (Mass.) Union Evening Union for more than 25 and an employee of the newspape nearly 40 years, retired this week. position is being filled by Harold I hue.

EDITOR GIVEN HOLIDAY

Sherm F. Myers, editor and pub of the Anita (Ia.) Record, weekly was recently sent on a holiday b subscribers, has a contemporary in stralia. Reverend R. B. S. Ham editor and owner of Grit, weekly, brated its 21st birthday last month. readers of Grit gave him £200 as a " ing of Age" birthday present, so th might take a long needed vacation. Hammond is president of the Prohi Party in Australia and has visited An several times.

BUILDINGS
PLANT LAYOUTS
PRODUCTION
OPERATION

An organization specializing solely in newspaper building design, manufacturing and production problems.

S. P. WESTON

Newspaper Buildings
Plant Layouts
Production, Operation

120 West 42nd Street New York

CLINE SYSTEM
CLINE ELECTRIC MFG. CO. CHICAGO
CLINE WESTINGHOUSE

Cline-Westinghouse Double Motor-Drive with full automatic push button control is used by

Nashville Banner
Nashville, Tenn.

Ask them about it.

CLINE ELECTRIC MFG. CO.
Chicago: 111 West Washington Street
New York: 47 West 34th Street
San Francisco: First National Bank Building

Where better Classified mediums are being built — the best publicity is helping build them

THE BASIL L. SMITH SYSTEM, Inc.
International Classified Advertising Counsellors
Packard Building, Philadelphia

Away Ahead!

2,196,676 - 1925
3,699,155 - 1926

1,502,479 - Gain

The New York Evening Graphic shows greater gain in lineage (41%) than any other New York paper.

Largest Newspaper West of Chicago

500,000 Copies DAILY

The KANSAS CITY STAR

in Detroit—

Free Press circulation reaches 31,000 more than the total number of families owning their own homes.

The "Free Press

"Starts the day in Detroit"

With a stable, uninflated, liberal pursed circulation productive of greater advertising returns at lower cost.

Peoria

The Try-Out Cit

THE PEORIA JOURNAL Transcrip

Puts Tryouts Over!

CHAS. H. EDDY CO.
New York - Chicago - Boston

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

will begin the publication of

Mr. Seubert's eagerly awaited articles on

THE KEY TO CONSUMER BUYING ABILITY

NEXT WEEK, IN THE MAY 21st ISSUE

These articles will be hailed far and wide as the most important development of recent years in the science of National Marketing.

No collection of business data can be complete without their carefully computed, thoroughly tested INDEX NUMBERS revealing the approximate purchasing capacity of every State, every County, every City of 10,000 population or more FOR EACH OF SIX CLEARLY MARKED CLASSES OF COMMODITIES WITH A POPULAR APPEAL.

With these charts before him, every sales manager, every advertising manager, every agency account executive, can determine whether or not enough promotion effort is being placed in any given trading area—where the lines can be drawn a little tighter—where more advertising can be done with reasonable expectation of producing commensurate results.

These articles will be a part, exclusively, of EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S service to the general advertiser and his agency. And securing the rights to their publication is one of the biggest things EDITOR & PUBLISHER has ever done for the craft, in all its long years of service. Watch for the first of the series—preserve every copy—make sure that you have enough copies coming to your organization for those who can make use of these data.

Within the past week a letter and a circular describing "The Key to Consumer Buying Ability" have been mailed to every Advertising Agency and every General Advertiser in the country. If by any chance this literature did not reach your organization—or was routed to the wrong individual—we shall be very glad to send you another complete set, including a proof of the first article, explaining the basis of these new Index Numbers, telling how to use the Charts, and giving the Buying Ability figures for Massachusetts—the first state treated.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

ONE of the most interesting characters in the history of American journalism was Mordecai Manuel Noah who edited first one newspaper and then another in New York City. His whole life was one of adventure and romance. Of him it was said somewhat humorously that he tried to edit every newspaper in New York. In addition to his newspaper work he held numerous public offices. These facts along with other pivotal points in his career are brought out in "History of the Jews in America"—a work of rare scholarship by Peter Wiernik, editor of the Jewish Morning Journal.

For another reason Mr. Wiernik's volume deserves mention in "Our Own World of Letters." It contains valuable historical matter about the Yiddish press and the neo-Hebrew periodicals—material that is not found in any other volume.

Mr. Wiernik pays a very nice tribute to Isaac Mayer Wise, the father of Mrs. Adolph S. Ochs. Best known as a great educational leader, Mr. Wise was at various times interested in journalism. Soon after his arrival in Cincinnati he established the Israelite and through this paper he promoted his various reforms for the betterment of his race. In 1855 he established a German weekly the Deborah, through which he reached that part of the Jewish public that did not read English. In addition to writing numerous articles for periodicals, he was the author of various works on historical and theological subjects. He even wrote several novels and two plays (in German). But his chief strength, as the volume points out, lay in his ability as an organizer. To the college which he founded in Cincinnati, Mr. Ochs recently made a very handsome donation.

* * *

MOST American histories quote only American newspapers in their attempts to show the attitude of the people toward Great Britain at the time of the Stamp Act and the outbreak of the Revolution. For some reason historians have completely overlooked what Englishmen read in their newspapers about such events as the Stamp Act, the Townsend Act, the Boston Tea Party, and the punishment of Boston.

This field that has long lain fallow has well been plowed over by Fred Junkin Hinkhouse as he gathered material for "The Preliminaries of the American Revolution as seen in the English Press (1763-1775)." To read this volume is to take a seat in a London coffee house and to read contemporary comment about the news events in the American colonies overseas.

The opening chapter discusses the newspapers of the day. It warns the reader that the English printer brought out his paper without one word of editorial comment. Expression of opinion must be found in the letters from contributors who were volunteer and unpaid editorial writers of the period. Professor Hinkhouse points out that such letters were a characteristic feature of English journalism during the years covered by his volume. In other words, the printer took no sides in his own paper but looked upon himself only as a purveyor of the opinions of others. "He was scrupulously impartial in his choice from his letter-bag. Merit and immunity from the law of libel were the only conditions exacted." The verdict of Professor Hinkhouse is that the London printer in what he inserted about American affairs lived up to his professions and lived up to the boast of the printer of the Morning Chronicle, "I am the servant of the public—their messenger—their mouthpiece."

The opening chapter gives just the right background to understand those that follow. The following contemporary comment presents an interesting view of how the press was regarded:

> You seem to think the Channel of a Pamphlet more respectable and better suited to the Dignity of your Cause, than that of a News-Paper. Be it so. Yet if News-Papers are scurrilous, you must confess they are impartial. They give us, without any apparent Preference, the Wit and Argument of the Ministry, as well as the abusive Dullness of the Opposition. The Scales are equally poised. It is not the Printer's Fault, if the greater Weight inclines the Balance.

Americans in England worked the press for publicity for their views. The charge that a "number of anti-American letters were printed for pay," is confirmed by a writer in the London Chronicle who speaks of "the host of pitiful scribblers retained in constant pay for the purpose of misrepresenting and slandering Americans." The chapter concludes with some interesting sidelights on how the newspapers of the day were edited and made.

The chapter dealing with what the British press printed about the Stamp Act is one of the most valuable contributions. The scarcity of news from America prior to 1755 is interpreted by Professor Hinkhouse in the light of a maxim, "No news is good news." Before the outbreak of hostilities the news from America most worth publishing was that which forecast the contest. But the Stamp Act broke open the columns for more news and comment about America.

Attention is called to the fact that in the English publications there had been some slight mention of American taxation before the act became a law, but there was no realization of its significance. Mention is made that in this failure to appreciate the importance of the attempt to tax the colonies the press and parliament were alike, for the latter passed the legislation in a most perfunctory way. One of the first bits of disquieting news was the report that American printers were planning to discontinue or curtail publication on account of the tax. From the middle of October, 1765, the Stamp Act became "by far the leading topic of English journalism" which covered the American event with considerable thoroughness in view of the limitations of the press in getting reports which were six weeks late.

Three ways are given to show how British newspapers received and distributed news from America. In the first place, accounts in American papers were reprinted either in entirety or in extract—"rarely were they condensed or rewritten." In the next place, London newspapers inserted letters or extracts from letters that came from America. In the last place, official state papers were given publicity in the columns of the press. It is interesting to note that the London papers remembered their professions of impartiality and that no reasonable claim can be made that such impartiality was not deserved—the proof may be found in the volume.

Professor Hinkhouse mentions in passing that when the vote on the repeal was taken newspapers were chary about printing the results. "The heavy hand of government was likely to fall upon those who dispensed news of Parliament before several months had elapsed." Enterprising printers, however, found ways to intimate the result. The St. James's Chronicle, for example, in its issue for Feb. 22, 1766, inserted, "We are assured, that the Betts now run 275 to 167, that the Stamp Act will be repealed; and it is thought that the Odds will be still higher by Monday."

What brought about the repeal is listed by Professor Hinkhouse as follows:

> The conclusion is irresistible to one who reads the contemporary newspapers that the Stamp Act was repealed, not because of any recognition of justice in the American claims, but because of the pressure brought to bear by the trading and manufacturing interests of England. Foreseeing their business ruined if the Stamp Act was forced upon America, they sought and gained the repeal. On March 18, a committee of London merchants wrote a letter to John Hancock and other merchants in Boston, relating the very large part the British merchants had had in the repeal and recommending to the Americans that they behave with moderation, without affecting to triumph.

Other chapters take up the constitutionality of taxation, colonial and imperial points of view, the controversy over the introduction of Church of England bishops into the colonies, the Townsend Acts by which the reduction in land taxes was to be met by raising new revenues, the famous Boston Tea Party, the punishment of Boston, and last of all the news of Concord, Lexington, and Bunker Hill.

The English public received its first news of Lexington and Concord through a reprint from the Salem (Mass.) Essex Gazette. The first version given to the London public, therefore, presented the American side. It was some little time before the government organ, the London Gazette, printed the official report which differed materially from the ican version. Writers for the pr began to throw back and forth t of being the first to fire. Professo house frankly admits that bot knew the propaganda value o atrocities and that the American accused of scalping and cutting off the wounded. Extracts printe volume seem, however, to show British press set forth the Americ timent with remarkable accuracy

In its concluding chapter P Hinkhouse calls attention to the a significant aspect of his study h to make evident the great am support the American view poin in the English press and that ma lish letter writers considered th of America as a common cause a the friends of America in Englar "not limited to a few advocates liament, but included a large a vocal group outside."

The volume is published by the bia University Press of New Yor

Over 260,00 Homes Michig served Booth Newspap

The Grand Rapids Press
The Flint Daily Journal
The Saginaw News Courier
The Kalamazoo Gazette
The Jackson Citizen Patriot
The Bay City Times Tribune
The Muskegon Chronicle
The Ann Arbor Times News

National Advertising Representati

I. A. KLEIN
50 East 42nd Street
New York City

J. E. LU
6 N. Michiga
Chicago,

IN some cities, the "leading" newspaper may have merely a few hundred more circulation than its competitor. The Press has 40,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two evening newspapers combined—and 35,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two Sunday news papers combined.

THE PITTSBURGH PRESS

A Scripps-Howard Newspaper
Member of the A. B. C.

South America's Greatest Newspap

"Buenos Aires IS the Arge Republic"—

"If you introduce an article in Bu Aires it is introduced in the of the Argentine."

"We know that LA PRENSA a larger circulation than all local papers put together, that this circulation is amo the very best class."

(Extract from letter written by t distributor in Argentina of importa American products, urging his pri cipals to place their advertising in PRENSA—)

National sales and distributio Argentina can quickly be att by advertising in LA PRENSA

JOSHUA B. POWE
Exclusive Advertising Represent
250 Park Avenue New

The Morning Telegraph

the leading newspaper in Theatricals, Turf, Finance and Motion Pictures, prints all of the day's worth while general news, with exclusive features covered by a great staff of special writers.

It has the largest professional circulation of any newspaper in the United States.

The Place to Push Sales—

Kansas—made unusually prosperous this year by excellent crop yields—offers an attractive market to persistent advertisers.

The Topeka Daily Capital—thoroughly covers Topeka and its big trading radius. The only newspaper with a circulation throughout the State.

Included in primary distribution campaigns by leading national advertisers.

40,000 Guaranteed Circulation

Published by Arthur Capper Topeka, Kansas

THE WELFARE COMMIT
of the
INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION MANAG ASSOCIATION

Can supply you with c petent circulation men capacity and ability cap to take entire charge of y department or to fill im tant posts in the departm

Address the Secret Treasurer please, Mr. C ence Eyster, care Building, Peoria, Ill.

...GER SUSPENDED ...TRIED CENSORSHIP

...fficial Threw Borger Reporter ... and Threatened Managing ...ditor—Governor Acts Promptly

..., Tex., May 11.—A Texas ...who apparently attempted to ...ws he didn't like met with swift ...n from his job at the hands of ... Dan Moody, Saturday, May 7. ... A. P. Cummings, one of sev... to Borger, oil field town, ar...ictor Wagner, reporter of the ...erald and put him in jail, after ... articles printed in the paper. ...ngs not only allegedly was a ... the reporter's arrest without ...ut he forcibly prevented tele... of news dispatches bearing upon ... predicament, according to T. E. ... managing editor of the Herald. ...r, held in jail from 6:30 one ...until after midnight, was re... on the telephoned order of Gov...n Moody. No charge had been ...inst the reporter, whose deten... attributed more to publicity ...to the rangers and to certain ...ers than, as was claimed, to make ...tell officers where he got infor...s printed in the Herald, report... purported presence in Borger ... Kimes and Ray Terrell, out... Managing Editor Caufield said he ...agner tell the officers where the ...on came from. Another story ...erald quoted court testimony to ...t that two police officers struck ...with their fists after a futile ...f his place for liquor.

...d went Friday night to the ... Union office and wrote a tele... the Associated Press advising ...gner was held without bond. ...gs, who walked in, snatched the ... from his hands, according to ... dragged Caufield by the collar ... the street, pulled Caufield's ...ff and told him that if he sent ...gram containing the ranger's ... would give the editor "the ...st beating he ever had."

...d went back and wrote another ... "Wagner held without bond. ...gram dictated by rangers," and ... also snatched out of his hands.

... Saturday ordered Adjutant ... Robertson to instruct Ranger ... Cummings by wire that he was ...d, and to order Cummings to ...for investigation, and he di... thorough investigation of the ... conduct.

...r. Cummings does not know it," ... Moody wrote to Attorney ... Robertson, "he ought to know ...has no authority to exercise a ...p over the press and that he ...ight to arrest people and place ... jail because they write things ...ewspapers which are not pleasing ...

...er he ought to realize that any ...to prevent the use of the tele-graph wires for either of the purposes above mentioned" (reporting to officers or sending out reports to newspapers of the reporter's arrest) "would be beyond his authority as a peace officer.

"I am responsible for the rangers being in Borger, and I expect to support them thoroughly in all lawful attempts to enforce the law and quiet conditions in that place, but I do not expect to meet lawlessness with lawlessness."

Editor Caufield in a statement said the ranger told him, before tearing up his telegrams that no charges had been filed and that he couldn't make bond for the reporter "until I am ready."

SELLING ELEMENTS OF SNYDER-GRAY STORY

(Continued from page 4)

The Times did it by using three reporters for this work alone. Each "took" the testimony for from ten to 15 minutes, and then dictated it over one of the direct telephones into the Times office. Frequently, at recess, the Times was only ten minutes behind the court, Lister said.

Five Times reporters were in the courtroom during most of the trial. Inside the office were two members of the staff taking the dictated testimony, a rewrite man who wrote the leads, and the city editor, who devoted himself solely to the story.

It was a reporter who had been on the scene during the whole case who insisted that New York overplayed the story. Mefford, who covered the Hall-Mills case for the Daily Mirror, and is now with the New York Daily News said the Snyder affair was "hippodromed."

"At best, it was nothing but a cheap, sordid murder, with the one element that really makes a good newspaper yarn—mystery—missing," he said.

"There never was, except for the first day, any mystery about it. I believe everybody realized this long before the trial began but in their enthusiasm had maneuvered themselves into the position of having started something they couldn't stop. Consequently, every paper in town had about fifty per cent of their staffs out digging, or at least supposedly digging—for the mystery that did not exist.

"Never, in my opinion, was there another story in which so much bunk got into print; nor another story so badly faked. The reporters themselves were to blame for this.

"The district attorney's office handed out great quantities of pure bunk; so did the police; so did Gray's attorneys; so did Mrs. Snyder's counsel; so did the sheriff's office and jail attendants. Shyster lawyers chipped in with tips on certain non-existent angles of the story, fabricated out of the whole cloth, just to get their names in print.

"And the reporters, fighting frantically among themselves, swallowed it whole and begged for more. Toward the last, except for a few of the older heads, the gang covering the courthouse and jail, made no effort to verify the thousand and one rumors that sprang into existence out of thin air. Instead, they rushed to the telephone, hurried it into print and then had to deny it in the next edition.

"At the trial the same conditions prevailed. The whole affair was hippodromed.

"Little attention was paid to the evidence. Even before the jury was selected Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray had been tried, convicted, electrocuted and buried by every paper in town.

"Naturally when the actual trial began, they had to resurrect the two principals and in order to do so, had to write more bunk to carry the thing through.

"I survived five months of the Hall-Mills story, which in my estimation was a real story, and managed to retain my good disposition. This darned Snyder-Gray thing, however, I am forced to admit, got my goat—if I ever had one—and just completely ruined about two months of my young life.

"That is my opinion and I'm going to stick to it. I might mention, however, that perhaps the foregoing illustrates the reason I have never become a managing editor—maybe I don't know a good story when I work on one."

Reporters who covered the Snyder-Gray murder trial were the guests of playwrights at two plays in New York during the past two weeks. Last Tuesday evening they attended a performance of "Crime" on the invitation of Samuel Shipman, co-author of the play. About 200 seats were reserved for them. Last week Maurine Watkins, author of "Chicago," was hostess to the newspapermen and women at an evening performance of the play on Tuesday, May 3. On Wednesday evening the reporters attended a dinner at the Hotel McAlpin, New York, tendered to District Attorney Richard Newcombe, prosecuting attorney at the murder trial.

Most of us envy the fellow who is morally and financially independent enough to stay away from people and places that bore him stiff.—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

...be World

...These two newspapers offer ...e most powerful all-day ...rvice in New York avail...le as a unit under a single ...ntact. The 600,000 DAILY ...ORLD — EVENING WORLD ...aders constitute a highly ...ncentrated force to be reck...ed with in any campaign ...signed to effect distribu...n in Greater New York.

...he Evening World

...litzer Building, New York
...Tribune Tower, Chicago

Personal Deliveries in Chicago and New York

This part of our regular service is one of the greatest helps to agencies, not only because we deliver our checking proofs direct to the proper party in the agency, but because it keeps us in close touch with their checking requirements. Even though an agency may misplace or lose some of the proofs we deliver we are in a position to give them "duplicates" immediately so that their records are always complete on our list of papers. This is just another advantage of our Complete Checking Proof Service that has helped to solve a newspaper publisher's checking proof problem.

NOW—400 subscribers

The Advertising CHECKING BUREAU Inc.
79 Madison Ave. New York — 538 So. Clark St. CHICAGO

The Baltimore News

has the largest circulation of any evening newspaper in the entire South 137,022

Baltimore looks to THE NEWS for the news.

The List Grows

ALBANY News
BALTIMORE News
BOSTON Herald and Traveler
CLEVELAND Press
HARRISBURG News
LANSING Capital-News
MILWAUKEE Journal
NEWARK Star-Eagle
NEW BEDFORD Standard
NEW ORLEANS Times-Picayune
NEW YORK Evening Graphic
ORLANDO Sentinel
PITTSBURGH Press
PHILADELPHIA News
SAN FRANCISCO News
SYRACUSE Herald
TOLEDO Blade
TWIN FALLS, Idaho, Times
WASHINGTON Star
WORCESTER Gazette
YOUNGSTOWN Vindicator

These papers placed orders on our announcement that we had secured

First Publication Rights to

ANNE NICHOLS'

Novelization of

ABIE'S IRISH ROSE

A general offer throughout the country will go into the mails Monday, May 16

First Release June 14

There are sixty instalments, each one illustrated by specially posed photographs.

Detailed working plan and complete layout of material for local promotion supplied to purchasing newspapers.

UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE
World Bldg., New York

STUDENTS UPHOLD EDITOR

Refuse to Ratify Attempt to Supervise Editorial Policies

Students of the University of Oregon upheld the editor of their paper, the Daily Emerald, by an overwhelming vote in his fight for editorial independence. The student council of the university had proposed an amendment to the student body constitution whereby the editor would be required to submit his editorial policies in advance of publication to the council for its O. K.

Sol Abramson, editor, made an aggressive fight for freedom of the press and received letters from editors of daily papers in Oregon and elsewhere in support of his stand. The students defeated the amendment by a vote of 1,329 to 368.

CHURCH GROUP USES DAILY

London Catholic Federation Buys Column to Print Archbishop's Letter

Following up the story in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER on how a British missionary employed advertising to spread the Gospel in Japan, comes this item from the London Bureau of Universal Service:

"The Westminster Catholic Federation used a full length column in the London Times of April 7 to present the annual Lenten Pastoral Letter of the Archbishop of Westminster.

"The story was boxed its full length and headed, 'The Union of Christendom.'

"The same day the Manchester Guardian, reporting the 80th birthday of the Archbishop of Canterbury, stated that the Archbishop starts a busy day by running through the newspapers."

TORNADO DAMAGES PLANT

The plant of the Poplar Bluff (Mo.) American, evening newspaper, was badly damaged by the tornado which struck the city May 8. The building is still standing, but the interior was swept by water, which poured in through the opened roof. Publication was temporarily suspended. State Senator Dwight H. Brown is publisher.

Supplies and Equipment

Rebuilt
GOSS & HOE
PRESS
BARGAINS
ALL TYPES
SEND for LIST
THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS CO.
CHICAGO – NEW YORK – LONDON

USED NEWSPAPER PRESSES

Scott 16, 24 and 32-Page Presses

GOSS 24 and 28-page presses good for black or color work, also Goss Sextuple.

HOE Pony Quadruple, Quadruple, Sextuple, Sextuple color Press, Octuple and Double Sextuple Presses.

DUPLEX Metropolitan Quadruple stereotype presses—print up to 32 pages.

Available for Early Delivery

WALTER SCOTT & COMPANY
Main Office & Factory.....Plainfield, N. J.
New York Office..Brokaw Bldg., 1457 Broadway
Chicago Office.....Monadnock Block

FOR SALE

COX-O-TYPE
WEB PERFECTING
FLAT BED PRESS

Prints 2-4-6-8 pages directly from the type forms. Practically new, in use only two years. Will sell at a bargain. Replaced by Duplex Flat Bed Web Perfecting Press.

DUPLEX PRINTING PRESS COMPANY
Battle Creek Michigan

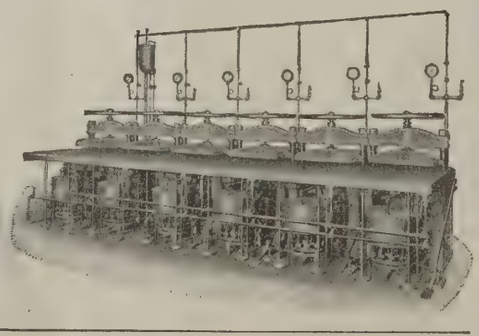
GOSS
STEREOTYPING MACHINERY
Carried in Stock

Fastest, most easily operated, most accurate and durable flat casting box you can buy. Perfectly balanced. New design lock-up bar allows for quick change when regulating thickness of casts. Positive quick lock-up at four points on box with one lever movement. Write for complete catalog of Goss Stereotyping Machinery.

THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS CO., CHICAGO

PRESSROOM EFFICIENCY

Continuous operation at High Speed, with a minimum amount of waste and finely printed newspapers is efficiency. 90% of all paper breaks can be avoided if your machines are properly blanketed.



We manufacture blankets that will meet any newspaper printing problem in the world.

New England Newspaper Supply Co.
Worcester, Mass., U. S. A.
Cable Address NENSCO, Worcester

BATTERY OF SIX HOE PNEUMATIC MATRIX-DRYING PRESSES

With Independent Gas-fired Steam Generators.

The quickest and the most economical Presses for the moulding and drying of Matrices.

More than 800 in use

R. HOE & CO., INC. 504-520 Grand St., New York City
7 South Dearborn Street CHICAGO, ILL.
Pere Marquette Bldg. NEW ORLEANS, LA.
7 Water Street BOSTON, MASS.

Classified Advertising will locate efficient Salesmen

Classifie

EDITOR & PUBLIS

Classified Advertisin Information

TRANSIENT RATE

SITUATIONS (Cash with Orde
1 Time — .40 per line
3 Times — .30 per line
ALL OTHER CLASSIFICATIO
1 Time — .60 per line

ADVERTISING

General Promotion

If You Want More Local Advertising to work for you selling our "Wor Features. Write F. G. Hogan S Lemcke Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind., or K

Increase Your Local Lineage with a special page. No cost to publisher. supervision. Let's show you. Intervi time New York or within 200 miles. Editor & Publisher.

Classified Advertising developed for bu lishers. Limited engagements. 20 ye success. Large or small newspapers. McCabe, 285 Madison Ave., New York

Supplies

Shading Sheets for Art work and Ben fects. Bourges Service, Inc., 144 We St., New York.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNI

Brokers

Offering Only Daily in city of 8,000 an trade area; northern state; over 5,000 tion; splendidly equipped with 4 machin operating profit in 1926 over $22,000. able for $90,000, terms $40,000 cash, easy. Prop. 1495x. The H. F. H Agency, Litchfield, Ill.

Some Real Bargains—A morning paper Pacific Coast either in whole or in par clusive field, fine plant, earning over 1 An evening paper in Wisconsin. Exclusiv good modern equipment, earning larg dends. An evening paper in North C Exclusive field, good plant, earning goo dends. A very desirable weekly in New J. B. Shale, Times Bldg., New York.

Trade Journal, established, in good co capable of expansion. Gross about Asking price, $17,500 cash. Harris-Dibl 345 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Newspapers for Sale

Controlling Interest in afternoon daily grossing about $40,000. Town of abou in border Southern state. All equipmen C-516, Editor & Publisher.

Newspapers Wanted

Weekly or Small Daily in growing com will consider controlling interest on paper anywhere. C-611, Editor & Publ

Will Purchase half or controlling inte evening paper in city of 40,000 or ove perienced publisher will pay all cash if Address in confidence. C-604, Editor lisher.

Representative Wanted

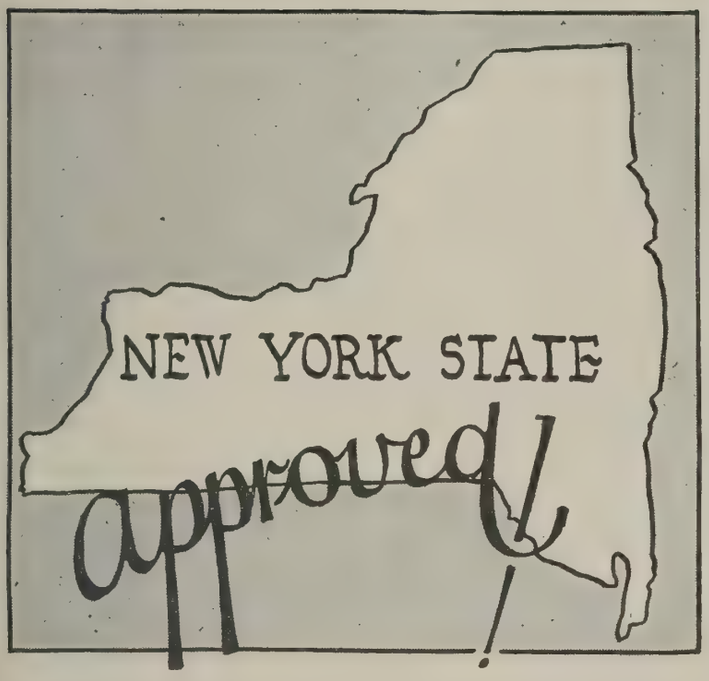
Publishers' Representative Wanted—Daily paper in city of 8,000 population, ap recently by Palmer, DeWitt & Palmer York City at over $150,000, will sell or interest in business to live publishers' sentative for $15,000 cash. Would al sider selling interest to man connecte good advertising agency, but do not care to person seeking position as editor or a ing manager.

Present profits on business will pay indebtedness on business in short time, i tion to paying reasonable interest on inve Proposition will stand closest invest Paper now carrying more local advertisin any other newspaper in state in any to 12,000 population. Nearest daily fort away. No real competition within on dred miles. National advertising now $12,000 per year. Should be increased t 000 to $25,000 within next year or e months.

We believe this is unusual opportun good publishers' representative, and yo too, if you investigate. Deal must b pleted by June 15th at very latest. C-560, care Editor & Publisher.

Service

To Out of Town Concerns. You can sec the advantages of a New York address, ing the services of established, fully fu and equipped offices, where your interes quiries, callers, literature, mail, or s will be intelligently and properly handl a nominal annual charge. Address (by only) Suite 1004, at 1841 Broadway (Co Circle), New York City.



EDITORIAL

Syndicate Features

The Atlantic City News is the new pap week. For samples of a live, up-to-date write the Graphic Syndicate, 25 City Place, New York.

NEW YORK STATE—

The Approved Selling Market—

If you want to know why the Empire State is the approved selling market glance through some of the papers that are listed below. There you will find advertising campaigns of the most prominent national advertisers, running week after week, month after month, year after year, whose appropriations run into 6 and 7 figures. They never think of cutting down their appropriations or transferring their advertising to some other market. They know the value of the New York State Market. They know it's the country's major market where they can find the greatest population, wealth, buying power and highest living standards. They know that its people respond to an intelligent appeal and buy readily.

If you are not yet familiar with this approved market you should investigate it. If you want a record of the experiences of the advertisers who are using this approved market, these newspapers listed below will gladly furnish you with same.

		Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
*Albany Evening News	(E)	40,552	.13	.13
*Albany Knickerbocker Press	(M)	36,970	.12	.12
*Albany Knickerbocker Press	(S)	55,870	.17	.17
Amsterdam Recorder-Democrat	(E)	7,845	.04	.04
††Auburn Citizen-Advertiser-Journal	(E)	10,295	.065	.055
Brooklyn Daily Eagle	(E)	77,991	.24	.24
Brooklyn Daily Eagle	(S)	90,532	.24	.24
Buffalo Courier Express	(M)	110,686	.22	.22
Buffalo Courier Express	(S)	161,164	.30	.30
*Buffalo Evening News	(E)	145,648	.25	.25
Buffalo Evening Times	(E)	109,285	.21	.21
Buffalo Sunday Times	(S)	128,158	.21	.21
Corning Evening Leader	(E)	9,029	.05	.05
*Elmira Star-Gazette Advertiser	(E&M)	34,370	.11	.11
Freeport Daily Review	(E)	10,480	.05	.05
Geneva Daily Times	(E)	5,627	.04	.04
Gloversville Leader Republican	(E)	7,177	.035	.035
††Ithaca Journal-News	(E)	7,711	.05	.05
Jamestown Morning Post	(M)	11,705	.04	.035
Mount Vernon Daily Argus	(E)	9,866	.05	.05
Newburgh Daily News	(E)	12,506	.06	.06
*New Rochelle Standard-Star	(E)	7,976	.04	.04
The Sun, New York	(E)	265,440	.65	.60
New York Times	(M)	375,249	.80	.784
New York Times	(S)	653,427	1.00	.98
*New York Herald-Tribune	(M)	290,534	.6435	.624
*New York Herald-Tribune	(S)	343,716	.693	.672
*New York World	(M)	283,870	.595	.58
*New York World	(S)	553,400	.72	.58
*New York Evening World	(E)	295,472	.505	.69
Niagara Falls Gazette	(E)	21,817	.07	.07
Port Chester Item	(E)	5,065	.045	.035
Poughkeepsie Star and Enterprise	(E)	13,411	.06	.06
*Rochester Times-Union	(E)	70,660	.21	.20
Troy Record	(M&E)	22,426	.07	.07
††Watertown Standard	(E)	17,825	.07	.07

 A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
* A. B. C. Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
 Merged as Buffalo Courier-Express, June 14, 1926.
† Government Statement, Oct. 1, 1926.
†† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

THE DEPARTMENT STORES

Month after month the Department Stores of New York advertise in THE SUN more than in any other newspaper—morning or evening.

They prefer THE SUN because it is a home newspaper. It brings them the best results—the largest number of customers—the greatest volume of sales.

The Sun

280 BROADWAY NEW YORK

THIS ISSUE: KEY TO CONSUMER BUYING ABILITY

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

1884 The Oldest Publishers' and Advertisers' Journal in America 1927

SUITE 1700 TIMES BUILDING, NEW YORK
42ND STREET AND BROADWAY.

MEMBER A.B.C.

MEMBER A.B.P.

ginal second class entry The Journalist, March 24, 1884; Newspaperdom, March, 1892; The Editor & Publisher, December 7, 1901; The Editor & Publisher and Journalist, October 30, 1909; Advertising, February 7, 1925; Revised entry, Editor & Publisher, May 11, 1916, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879.

ol. 59. No. 52 NEW YORK, MAY 21, 1927 By Mail in Advance $4, U. S. A. $4.50, Canada; $5, Foreign 10c Per Copy

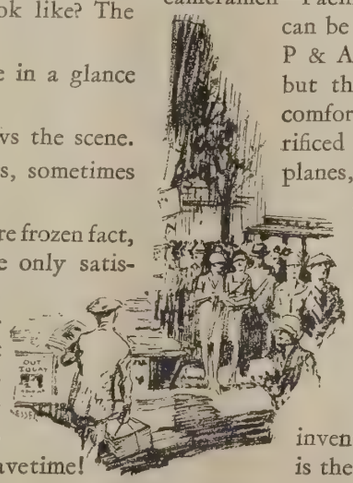
JOURNALISM LIBRARY
Not to be taken from this room

the largest circulation in America daily and Sunday

THERE are six morning papers published in New York City, sold on all the newsstands. But two out of every five people in New York who stopped at a newsstand this morning to buy a morning paper, bought a picture paper—The News.

There is nothing new about picture papers. Eight years ago, however, a picture *news*paper did not exist. Today, more than 1,100,000 people buy The News in preference to five other papers. Because they know a picture newspaper is a better *news*paper!

Pictures have a place in a newspaper; properly used, they are vehicles of news.



What is the most interesting item in any news story? People! WHO are they? What do they look like? The pictures portray them.

WHAT happened? The picture gives more in a glance than a world of words.

WHERE did it happen? The picture shows the scene.

How did it happen? The picture answers, sometimes showing cause as well as effect.

Good news pictures reflect reality. They are frozen fact, excerpts of action, testimony of truth, the only satisfactory substitute for personal observation. They tell what someone sees, vividly, thoroughly, comprehensively. Any psychologist will tell you that a picture conveys a message, presents a fact, teaches a lesson—better than text, more clearly, more quickly. Everybody gets something from pictures. And they save time!

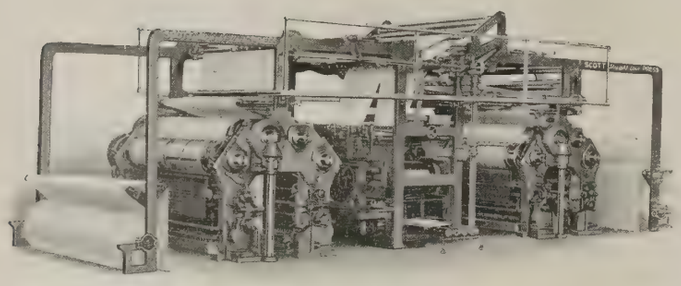
FOR a long time, papers were unable to get newspictures. The real development of the newspicture started with The News seven years ago. The newspaper camera man used to be a photographer. On The News, he is a reporter who gets his stories with the camera. He has a harder job than the regular reporter. He can't fake, can't guess, can't take somebody's version of what happened and phone it to the office. He must get the story in the picture, and the picture back to the office—on time.

In seven years, The News has come a long way in developing newspictures. News cameramen are artists and mechanics as well as reporters. They work under difficult circumstances, hampered by lack of light and lack of time. They use cameras small enough to fit in the vest pocket; and cameras with telescopic lenses, large enough to take two men to carry. They daily do the impossible. Every morning, the picture pages of The News are a record of their splendid accomplishments, of obstacles overcome, of time and space and difficulties outdistanced. Their marvelous newspictures are a contribution to better journalism, to clearer understanding, to saving time.

In addition to our own camera staff, we have our own picture syndicate that literally covers the world with cameramen—Pacific & Atlantic Photos. Wherever stories can be caught with a camera, you will find P & A men. They not only get the picture, but they get it to the paper. Sleep, time, comfort, money, convenience—all are sacrificed to get the picture here first. Special planes, special trains, speed boats, pigeons, horseback—every possible conveyance is used. And within the last two years, they have been able to occasionally send pictures by wire and cable.

The News also has the best printed pictures of any newspaper. Special methods of making plates, making inks, making impressions have been invented and developed. The presentation is the best possible.

SO today more than a million people prefer this picture newspaper. Can a million people be mistaken or misguided in picking a newspaper?



Advertisers! Can you make a mistake in using a paper that a million people prefer?

THE NEWS

New York's Picture Newspaper

Tribune Tower, Chicago 25 Park Place, New York

There is only ONE PRESS regularly rated a 400 r.p.m.

—it's the SCOTT!

YOU don't have to discount speed for quality printing nor sacrifice quality printing for speed with Scott "Straight-Unit" and "Multi-Unit" Presses. Both high speed and fine printing are built-in features of Scott manufacture. These presses run regularly at a 36,000 per hour speed and still have a 33 and 1/3% reserve that can be called upon at any time. There are no "smudgy" pages in a paper that is printed by a Scott Press. There is no difference in printing whether they are run at high, average, or low speeds. And you can drive them to the utmost without sacrifice of quality in output or any undue strain or wear.

Scott "Straight-Unit" and "Multi-Unit" Presses have solved the problem of speed in presses

Scott

"Multi-Unit" or "Straight-Unit" Presses

WALTER SCOTT & COMPANY

Main Office and Factory - - - - - - Plainfield, New Jersey, U. S. A.
New York Office - - - - - - - - - - - 1457 Broadway
Chicago Office - - - - - - - - - - - 1330 Monadnock Block
Cable Address: WALTSCOTT NEW YORK

THE NEW YORK NEWSPAPER EVERYONE IS TALKING ABOUT

RECORDS

During the first four months of 1927 the New York Herald Tribune gained 31,415 lines of National Advertising. Its principal competitor lost 314,133 lines of National Advertising in the same period.

The Situation is Changing

This record, and an analysis of the April lineage figures in National Advertising, indicate that a change is taking place in the New York newspaper situation.

In April the New York Herald Tribune led all New York City newspapers in National Advertising gains.

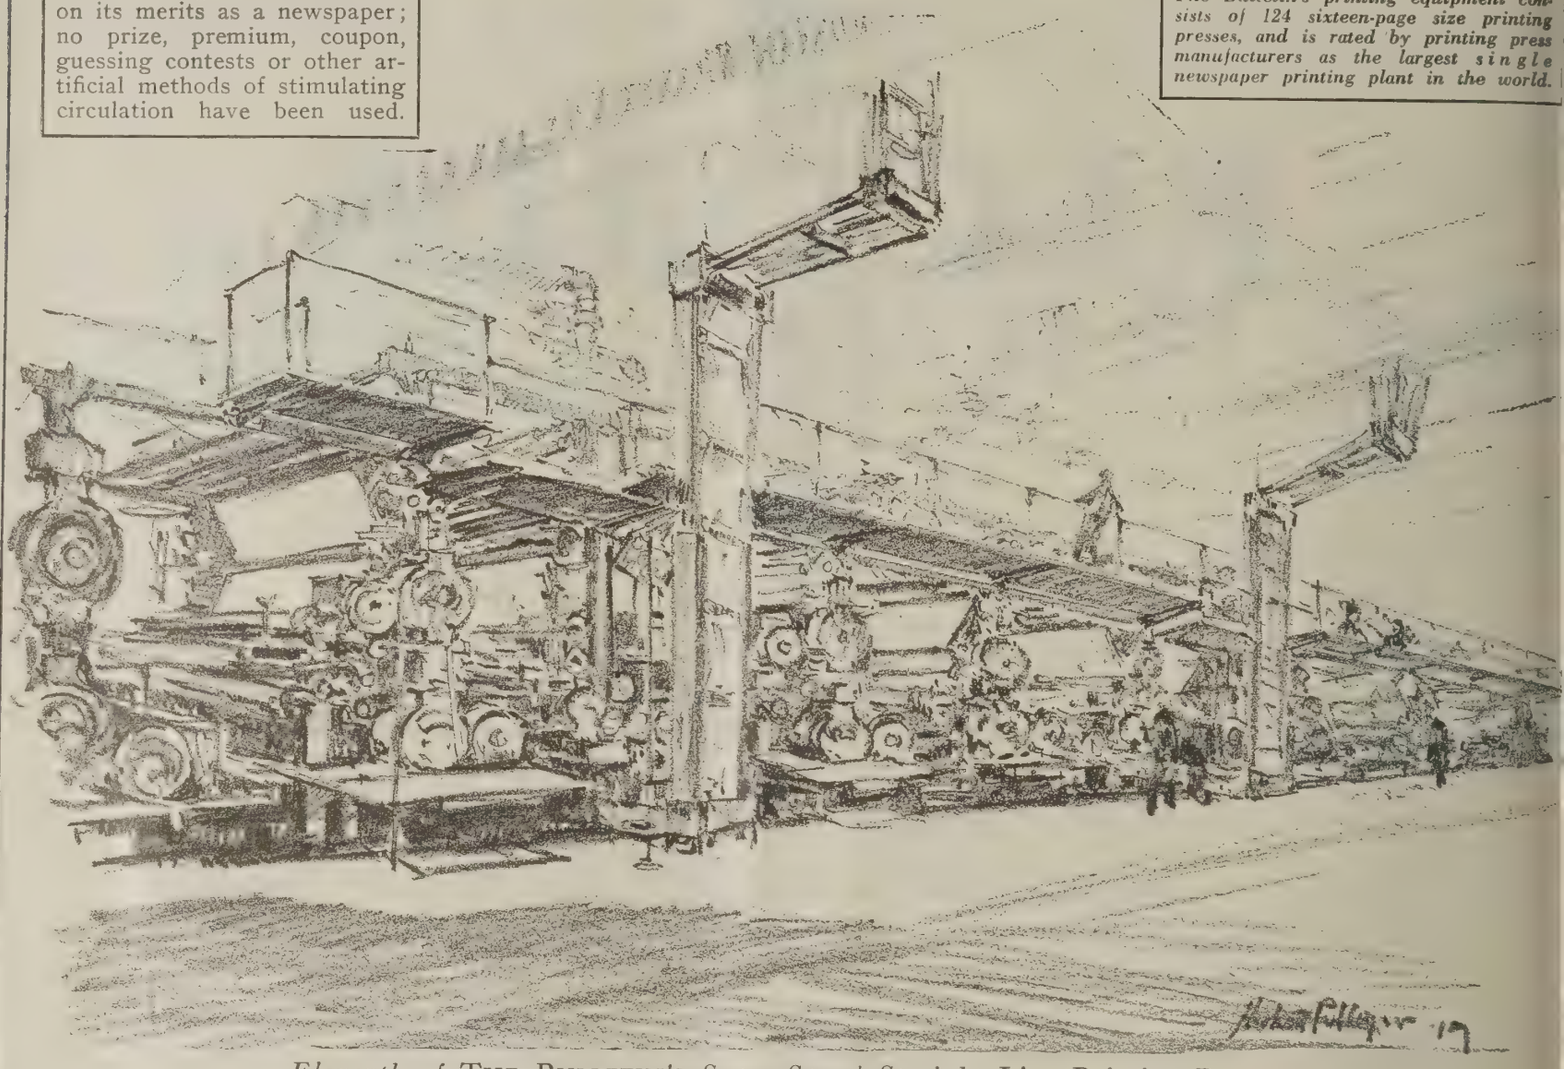
In April, the New York Herald Tribune carried more National Advertising on weekdays than any other morning newspaper.

In April, the New York Herald Tribune was first among all New York morning newspapers in the following classifications, both weekdays and Sundays:

Building Materials	Office Appliances
Boots and Shoes	Magazines
Foods	Tobacco

Church Notices

These are some of the reasons why the New York Herald Tribune is the New York newspaper everyone is talking about.



NEW YORK

Herald  Tribune

Again, Another Giant Printing Press Installed in The Philadelphia Bulletin Press-Rooms to Keep Pace with Circulation Growth

The Evening Bulletin is sold on its merits as a newspaper; no prize, premium, coupon, guessing contests or other artificial methods of stimulating circulation have been used.

The Bulletin's printing equipment consists of 124 sixteen-page size printing presses, and is rated by printing press manufacturers as the largest single newspaper printing plant in the world.

Eleventh of THE BULLETIN'S Super-Speed Straight Line Printing Presses

The above illustration shows the latest printing press installed by The Bulletin. Like its mate, which was put into operation on March 10th, it embodies all the latest principles in mechanical design and efficiency. The new idea in printing presses is to align all the separate printing units in a row, instead of the old practice of superimposing them in upper deck form. The paper, in the new machines, runs through in a straight line, receiving the printed impression from revolving printing cylinders and hastening to the folders, is cut, folded and ejected in separate copies of The Bulletin.

Dominate Philadelphia

3,005,090 people live in Philadelphia's Retail Trading Area. U. S. Census figures average 4.5 persons to a family. Dividing the population in this area (America's Third Largest Markets) by the size of the average family, the result shows that The Bulletin goes daily into "nearly every home."

Create maximum impression at one cost by concentrating in the newspaper "nearly everybody" reads—

The Evening Bulletin.

PHILADELPHIA'S NEWSPAPER

"In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin"

Average paid circulation for the month of April

557,090 copies a day

Circulation for January, 1927, was 543,973; February, 559,450; March, 560,832; and April, 557,090

New York.....247 Park Avenue (Park Lexington Building)
Chicago.....Verree & Conklin, Inc., 28 East Jackson Blvd.
Detroit.....C. L. Weaver, Verree & Conklin, Inc., 321 Lafayette Blvd.
San Francisco...Thomas L. Emory, Verree & Conklin, Inc., 681 Market St.

The circulation of The Bulletin is the largest in Philadelphia and one of the largest in the United States.

MEMBER OF ASSOCIATED PRESS

(Copyright 1927, Bulletin Company)

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Issued every Saturday, forms closing ten P. M. Thursday preceding Publication by The Editor & Publisher Co., J. W. Brown, Publisher; Marlen E. Pew, Editor; Suite 1700 Times Building, 42nd St., at Broadway, New York. Telephones, Bryant 3052-3053-3054-3055-3056. Charter Member Audit Bureau of Circulations. Member Associated Business Papers, Inc.

Vol. 59 NEW YORK, MAY 21, 1927 No. 52

Daily Newspapers Sold During Fortnight Represent Millions In Value

High Appraisal Given to Sound Circulation Demonstrated Again in Transfers of Memphis Commercial Appeal, Canton Repository, Brooklyn Standard Union, and Springfield (Mo.) Leader

SINCE the first of May, several great newspapers with an aggregate value running deep into seven figures have passed to new ownership. All of the new ownerships are composed entirely of men with established reputations as newspaper executives, or are dominated by experienced newspaper men, associated with capital from outside the newspaper sphere.

Ten days ago, announcement was made that the Brooklyn Standard Union had passed for a price said to approximate 1,000,000 to Joseph J. Early, managing editor who has been on the staff for 28 years, and a number of prominent and wealthy citizens of Brooklyn. Details of this transfer are being completed as this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER goes to press.

Most important among the numerous transactions listed this week is that of the Memphis Commercial Appeal from the Commercial Publishing Company to the Commercial Appeal, Inc., headed by Col. Luke Lea, publisher of the Nashville Tennessean, and Rogers Caldwell, wealthy Nashville capitalist. The Commercial Appeal, a morning and Sunday paper with more than 100,000 circulation daily and more than 130,000 Sunday, and the Evening Appeal, a six-month-old edition with 44,000 circulation, passed to the new ownership for more than $3,612,000, not including the plant and real estate.

Another famous journal to change owners this week is the Canton (O.) Repository, an evening and Sunday paper with 37,000 daily and 32,000 circulation, sold on Wednesday by George B. Frease and associates to Louis H. Brush and Roy D. Moore, who already owned the Marion (O.) Star, East Liverpool (O.) Review and Tribune, Salem (O.) News, and Steubenville (O.) Herald-Star.

In Springfield, Mo., the Leader was sold by H. S. Jewell to Stuart Olivier and G. N. Gunderson, who until recently had been associated with the former Frank A. Munsey newspapers in New York and Baltimore. Unofficial reports of the consideration place it at $750,000. The Leader has about 25,000 circulation evening and Sunday.

Frank E. Gannett added another to his New York group when he and Frederick H. Keefe, associated with Mr. Gannett in the ownership of the Newburgh (N. Y.) News, stepped across the Hudson and purchased the Beacon (N. Y.) Herald. The price is said to have been about $40,000. The Gannett Newspapers now include the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union, Utica (N. Y.) Observer-Dispatch, Elmira (N. Y.) Advertiser, Elmira Star-Gazette, Elmira Sunday Telegram, Ithaca (N. Y.) Journal-News, Newburgh (N. Y.) News, Beacon (N. Y.) Herald, and Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News, the latter paper having been purchased late in April.

While detailed figures as to the appraisals upon which the sales were based are not available, only a casual examination of the figures is necessary to indicate that the new high values noted for newspaper circulation and goodwill in the sales of the Kansas City Star, New York Sun, and the Chicago Daily News, have been maintained in the recent transactions.

No one any longer proposes that the goodwill of a going and profitable newspaper be appraised at $10 or $12 per net paid subscriber—and as recently as five years ago this figure was regarded as too high for general application. On the other hand, many experienced newspaper men regard the prices which have prevailed in recent sales as too high to be considered as permanent values. They reflect, in the view of these men, the tremendous gross revenues and consequent profits that have come to many newspapers during 1925 and 1926, with circulation increases no greater during that period than the average gain of the previous five years, and of course, a higher net earning value per circulation unit.

In the Chicago Daily News and Kansas City Star sales the indicated goodwill value was in the neighborhood of $25 per subscriber. The New York Sun's stated price included other elements than newspaper properties, but the estimated value placed on the Sun's circulation was even higher than that of the previous two examples.

The Memphis transaction, in which an average daily circulation of 140,000 (morning, evening and Sunday) was sold for $3,600,000, the latter figure including also $800,000 in surplus account, the goodwill figure appears to be above $20 per subscriber. The morning and Sunday papers are long established and profitable, the evening edition is not yet six months old.

The Springfield Leader's sale price of $750.000 (in round figures) and its seven-day circulation average of more than 25,000 indicate a goodwill valuation in excess of $20 per subscriber, deducting a third of the price for tangible assets.

The last previous sale in Springfield was that of the Republican by E. E. E. McJimsey to E. K. and Joel Bixby, publishers of the Muskogee (Okla.) Phoenix and Times-Democrat, last January. This morning and Sunday paper had an average circulation of about 15,000 and its sale price was said to have been $190,000, indicating a good will valuation well in excess of $10 per subscriber. The Republican's name has been changed to News since the purchase.

The Memphis Commercial Appeal and the Memphis Evening Appeal were sold this week to Col. Luke Lea and Rogers Caldwell. Col. Lea is a former United States Senator from Tennessee, and is owner and publisher of the Nashville Tennessean. Mr. Caldwell is a prominent Nashville capitalist.

The sale, including all stock, was made by the Commercial Publishing Company to the Commercial Appeal, Inc., a new company, the officers of which are as follows:

President, Col. Lea; vice-president, George Morris; secretary-treasurer, A. Bolin.

Col. Lea succeeds as president Lovick P. Miles, prominent Memphis attorney, who became president of the Commercial Publishing Company, following the death of C. P. J. Mooney last December. Mr. Miles returns to his law practice. He assumed the presidency temporarily because of his large financial interest in the company and also because he had been a member of the board of directors for many years and early in his career had been a member of the paper's staff.

Mr. Morris is editor and managing editor of the Evening Appeal, which he started a week after Mr. Mooney's death. He had been editor of the News-Scimitar until its sale by Paul Block to the Scripps-Howard Newspapers last November, and, according to Col. Lea, he has had phenomenal success with the Evening Appeal from the start. Its circulation is now stated to be more than 44,000 daily.

Capt. Thomas Fauntleroy succeeds Mr. Miles as managing editor of the Commercial Appeal. He was assistant managing editor for many years under Mr. Mooney's regime and has been in actual charge of the news department for a long period.

"It is the purpose of the new owners to maintain the policies that have made possible the growth and development of the Commercial Appeal and the Evening Appeal and to preserve largely intact the splendid organizations that have operated these papers so successfully," Col. Lea stated in his announcement of the purchase.

Directors of the new company are announced as follows:

Col. Lea, Mr. Morris, Mr. Caldwell, E. J. Heitzeberg, Enoch Brown, W. E. Norvell, John M. Branham, Mr. Miles, G. T. Fitzhugh, Paul Dillard, Hardwig

(Continued on page 23)

IMPORTANT NEWSPAPER SALES OF 1927

Transactions involving well known newspapers or newspaper men since the beginning of 1927 have been recorded by EDITOR & PUBLISHER as follows:

Holyoke (Mass.) Transcript purchased for $200,000 and consolidated the Holyoke Telegram.

Middletown (N. Y.) Times-Press purchased for $225,000 and consolidated the Middletown Herald.

St. Johns (N. B.) Times-Star purchased and consolidated the St. Johns Globe.

Palm Beach (Fla.) Times sold by Frank B. Fildes to unnamed group of buyers for $360,000.

Omaha (Neb.) Bee purchased for $400,000 and consolidated the Omaha News.

Winston-Salem (N. C.) Twin Cities Sentinel sold by Frank E. Gannett and associates for about $1,000,000 to Owen Moon, proprietor of the Winston-Salem Journal and Star, the latter an evening paper which was immediately afterward suspended.

New York Telegram sold by Frank A. Munsey Estate to Scripps-Howard Newspapers for price unofficially said to exceed $2,500,000.

Des Moines (Ia.) Tribune purchased for $600,000 and consolidated the Des Moines Capital.

Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald sold by Frederick I. Thompson to Edwin D. DeWitt, for unstated consideration.

Tampa (Fla.) Tribune sold by syndicate of Tampa business men to S. E. Thomason and John Stewart Bryan for $1,000,000.

Montgomery (Ala.) Times sold to Frederick I. Thompson for unstated consideration.

Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican purchased and consolidated by Cedar Rapids Gazette, for unstated consideration.

Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News purchased from Charles H. Frost Estate by Frank E. Gannett, Chauncey F. Stout and William Morrison.

San Jose (Cal.) News purchased for $200,000 by G. Logan Payne.

Brooklyn Standard Union purchased from William Berri Estate by Joseph J. Early and associates for $901,000.

Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal purchased from Commercial Publishing Company by Col. Luke Lea, Rogers Caldwell, and associates for $3,612,000.

Canton (Ohio) Repository purchased from George B. Frease by Roy D. Moore and Louis H. Brush.

Springfield (Ohio) Leader purchased from H. S. Jewell by Stuart Olivier and Gilbert N. Gunderson for about $750,000.

Beacon (N. Y.) Herald purchased from Mrs. George F. Donohue by Frank E. Gannett and Frederick H. Keefe for about $40,000.

The total values stated in the sales listed above amount to almost $12,000,000.

COOLIDGE MAKES A NEW RESTRICTION GOVERNING WEEKLY PRESS MEETINGS

Unanswered Questions Submitted Must Not Be Referred to in Stories—Crisis Approaching in Press Relations, Writers Believe

By J. BART CAMPBELL

(Washington Correspondent of EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

WASHINGTON, May 18.—In the judgment of many members of the Washington corps of newspaper correspondents, the moot question of the news elasticity of the so-called conferences President Coolidge holds with the writers for the press at the White House at noon every Tuesday and at 4 o'clock every Friday afternoon is rapidly approaching a crisis.

Some correspondents are even wondering whether Mr. Coolidge is on the verge of abandoning abruptly the custom of receiving newspaper men in his private office twice a week just as President Wilson suddenly decided to grant no more "interviews" to them. And President Harding more than once threatened to so decide.

The relations between President Coolidge and some correspondents are noticeably becoming strained. It cannot be stated, however, that his contact with any of the correspondents are "close" as was that of the usually genial Mr. Harding or the often impetuous Mr. Roosevelt. Only the correspondents for a few New England newspapers may be said to have an approach to the Presidential "ear." To most of the correspondents he is a sphinx who keeps them guessing.

In the days of Mr. Wilson the urbane Joseph Tumulty, as the President's secretary, received the correspondents even when Mr. Wilson would not, and gave them many a "tip" regarding what was passing through the Presidential mind. Everett Sanders, Mr. Coolidge's secretary, adheres to an unwavering policy of silence. The correspondents therefore seek out "Ted" Clark, Mr. Coolidge's obliging private secretary, who has been with Mr. Coolidge ever since he first came to Washington as vice-president. Mr. Clark is always accommodating.

The latest development in the peculiar relations between Mr. Coolidge and the correspondents came at the Tuesday conference this week. Mr. Coolidge then made it plain to the newspapermen present that he did not desire them to refer in a newspaper story to questions they submitted to him, in writing, as is the invariable rule, which he left unanswered.

As Charles Michelson, veteran head of the New York World bureau here, expressed it, "'No comment at the White House' now joins the general discard."

Following the President's request recently that he no longer be referred to by the newspaper men as the "Official Spokesman," or the "White House Spokesman," in their efforts to interpret what he might have to say to them when they are forbidden to quote him directly or indirectly, a question was submitted to him in writing at a subsequent conference regarding a story in general circulation at Washington that he had in his early political career once signed a document opposing the idea of Mr. Roosevelt seeking a "third term."

The question remained unanswered, if only because Mr. Coolidge is not saying anything about the widely debated "third term" issue which just now is agitating politicians and newspaper writers alike. Some correspondents left that conference and wrote stories for their newspapers that Mr. Coolidge had refused to comment on the charge made by a certain Massachusetts politician that the Coolidge signature had been affixed while he was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature to a "round robin" in which it was declared that Roosevelt should follow the example of George Washington, and not try to enter the White House for the third time, or words to that effect. Other correspondents made no mention of the incident. These correspondents received inquiries subsequently from their editors as to why they had left the story unwritten. So one of them submitted a question to Mr. Coolidge at the Tuesday conference this week as to whether any question left unanswered by the President might, in the President's judgment, be worked into a newspaper story afterward. The gist of the President's reply to this inquiry was in the negative.

Mr. Michelson made the following comment in describing the situation in a dispatch he sent to the New York World: "The net effect of the new rule is to make the White House conference merely a vehicle for the issuance of such publicity as suits the President's purpose rather than a means of letting the public know its Chief Executive's views on matters of public interest.

"It is really a corollary to this idea that the newspapers would abstain from criticism of the administration's conduct of foreign affairs, which have frequently been broached at these conferences, and which formed the text of the President's recent speech in New York."

J. Fred Essary, chief of the Washington bureau, Baltimore Sun, made the following comment: "When Mr. Coolidge holds back legitimate questions submitted to him by accredited correspondents in the performance of their duty to keep the public informed as to what may be the White House attitude upon issues involving the people of the United States, my opinion is he is making the so-called presidential conferences with newspapermen a one-sided proposition from which the president alone can benefit. He constricts legitimate newspaper correspondence and news gathering; he put himself in the position of seeking to use newspaper correspondents for personal political and party purposes."

"Raymond G. Carroll, chief of the Washington bureau of the Philadelphia Public Ledgers and the New York Evening Post, said: "In my humble judgment, I believe the importance of the situation has been grossly exaggerated. There is a palpable effort of the part of certain correspondents writing for partisan or anti-Coolidge newspapers to belittle and undermine Mr. Coolidge and his administration. The Hoover - Kellogg story was only one example. Sure the President cannot be expected to reply to questions obviously submitted to him for the purpose of either embarrassing him or his administration, or of making political capital at his personal expense."

Paul J. McGahan, Washington bureau, the Philadelphia Inquirer: "I was present at Tuesday's conference with the President this week, and I came away with the opinion that the President had acted exactly within his rights. I can see no reason why the President should be expected to answer or discuss every question submitted to him. If he were to pursue such a silly policy what would there be to prevent him from being placed in a false position by those who for obvious reasons would like to employ the White House conferences as a vehicle for partisan or political attacks upon the President and his administration?"

COMBINATION BROKEN

Philadelphia Public Ledgers Announce Change in Rate Policy

A change in policy whereby the Philadelphia (Pa.) Morning, Evening and Sunday Public Ledgers will be sold either in combination or separately was announced May 14 by John C. Martin, vice-president of the Curtis-Martin Newspapers. Mr. Martin, in announcing the change which became effective May 15, said it was in line with his newspaper's desire to "co-operate with the advertiser and his agent in every way possible to make advertising most profitable."

A cash discount of two per cent will be given when bills are paid by the 15th of the month following insertion in any of the Curtis-Martin Newspapers and also the New York Evening Post, Mr. Martin said.

New rate cards are being prepared.

REPORTER IS ARRESTED IN ATLANTIC CASE

Fred Thompson of Boston Post Charged with Procuring Commission of a Felony in Getting Smith Article

(By telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

BOSTON, May 19.—Fred H. Thompson, reporter for Boston Post, was arrested yesterday at his home in Newton on a warrant charging him with being a fugitive from justice from the State of New Hampshire in connection with the alleged larceny of pages from the Atlantic Monthly containing the Governor Alfred Smith article on Catholicism and the Presidency.

A warrant was issued by the Newton court at the request of the Concord, N. H., police, and Herbert Rainie, Merrimack county solicitor. The specific charge in the warrant, which is returnable in the Concord court, is procuring the commission of the crime of larceny by William E. Callahan by inducing him to steal eight printed pages, numbered 721-728, of the May issue of the Atlantic Monthly, the pages being copy of Smith's reply to Charles C. Marshall's letter published in a previous issue. The warrant places a value of $600 on the pages.

Thompson was released on $1,000 bail for arraignment in Newton Court. Callahan, formerly employed as night watchman at the Rumford Press, Concord, printers of the Atlantic Monthly, was also arrested yesterday in that city, charged with larceny.

It is alleged he stole from the plant copies of the magazine containing the article. Callahan was released in $12,000 bail. The value of the printed pages as named in the warrant is the value which Thompson is said to have placed on them with Callahan.

Thompson, Thursday, pleaded not guilty, and the case was continued to May 24.

WRIGHT NEW PRESIDENT NEW ENGLAND DAILIES

Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette Publisher Named to Succeed William J. Pape at Annual Meeting in Boston

Robert L. Wright, publisher of the Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette, was elected president of the New England Daily Newspaper Association at the annual meeting held in Boston, May 17, succeeding William J. Pape, of the Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American.

Other officers elected were: Howard C. Rice, Brattleboro (Vt.) Reformer, vice-president; James M. Langley, Concord (N. H.) Monitor, secretary (re-elected), and Charles L. Fuller, Brockton (Mass.) Enterprise, treasurer (re-elected).

The Board of Governors includes the officers and the following, elected at the meeting: Julius Mathews, Biddeford (Me.) Journal; John A. Muehling, Manchester (N. H.) Union-Leader; David W. Howe, Burlington (Vt.) Free Press; George B. Utter, Westerly (R. I.) Sun; Theodore Bodenwein, New London (Conn.) Day; George F. Booth, Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette; William H. Reed, Taunton, (Mass.) Gazette William J. Pape, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American.

Frank E. Phillips was re-elected manager of the association.

BORAH MAY SPEAK AT DENVER I. A. A. MEET

Hoover Informs Association Flood Commission Has Taxed His Time and He May Be Unable to Attend Advertising Convention June 26-29

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, may be a speaker at the annual convention of the International Advertising Association to be held in Denver, June 26-29.

Gilbert T. Hodges, of the New York Sun, and chairman of the "On-to-Denver" committee, went to Washington with Frederic W. Hume, vice-chairman of the program committee, on Thursday this week in an effort to obtain the services of the Senator from Idaho. This action was taken when word was received this week from Secretary of Commerce Hoover, to the effect that his work in the flood district had taken up so much of his time that he believed he would be unable to go to Denver to attend the I. A. A. convention.

Other plans for the convention are rapidly rounding into shape. C. K. Woodbridge, association president, came to New York this week to put the finishing touches on his annual report, which contains an important recommendation regarding the future of I. A. A. and is to be published in pamphlet form for distribution prior to the convention.

A meeting of prominent leaders in the organization has also been called in New York for Monday, May 23, at which a suggestion for the 1927-28 program of I. A. A. will be discussed.

Meanwhile advertising clubs in various cities throughout the country are piling up reservations, and the number of those attending it was said this week would easily pass 1,000.

The Adcraft Club of Detroit, it is expected, will send an unusually strong delegation. Detroit is bidding for the privilege of entertaining the convention there in 1928. Clinton F. Berry, assistant vice-president of the Union Trust Company, is president of the Adcraft Club.

NAMED FEATURE AD MANAGER

Newark Department Store Creates New Post for Hirschmann

I. A. Hirschmann, assistant advertising manager of the L. Bamberger & Company store, Newark, has been appointed advertising manager in charge of feature advertising. He will be succeeded about June 15 by Herbert S. Waters, for the past two years assistant director of publicity of the William Hengerer Company store, Buffalo.

The appointment of Mr. Hirschmann to the newly created position of manager in charge of feature advertising marks a departure. Clayton E. Gibbs remains as advertising manager, and Mr. Hirschmann gives up his duties as assistant and continues to sponsor store publicity through demonstrations, exhibits, etc., under Walter S. Moler, the store's publicity director.

SOUTHERN CLUBS TO MEET

John A. Park to Address Third District I. A. A. Convention

John A. Park, of the Raleigh (N. C.) Times, and president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, will represent the daily newspapers at the annual convention of the third district of the International Advertising Association to be held at Greensboro, N. C., May 23-24.

Other speakers will include: R. I. Douglas, vice-president of the Greensboro Bank & Trust Company, "Psychology in Advertising"; DeSales Harrison, assistant to the vice-president in charge of advertising, Coca Cola Company, "Advertising and the Nation's Drink"; and St. Elmo Massengale, president of the Massengale Advertising Agency, Atlanta, on "The Place of the Advertising Agency in Building the South."

LAUNDRIES PLAN BIG FREE PUBLICITY RAID

lemarkable Prospectus Gives Magazines the Money and Newspapers the Chance to Sell Local Laundrymen—What Appropriation Might Buy in Straight National Newspaper Campaign (OMES now the laundry business to plead for justice before the great ierican Public.

With pledged funds expected to total 000,000 a year for the next four years, laundry owners in association asabled propose to keep a daily barrage publicity before the American housee during that period and to raise the ual volume of their industry to $1,-),000,000 by 1930.

Their method in brief is—

1. Paid advertising in "dominant gazines."

2. Mat service to members of the asiation for use at members' expense in al newspapers.

3. Organized effort to secure many orable stories and articles in newsers and magazines.

All of which, freely translated, means t the laundry owners intend to brush the great strokes of their picture with d magazine space, to the extent of 000,000 a year or as much under that ount as they can raise, leaving the fine tle touches that will make Madam connect the washing-machine and send clothes to the association member to delivered by adroit "news" pieces that newspapers will be delighted to print the sake of filling their gaping colns.

Mr. L. C. Ball, as director of the sales motion department of the Laundryners' National Association of the ited States and Canada, will be ased in the free publicity campaign by tionally known authorities and writers home economics," according to the idsomely printed document in which need of the advertising fund is made wn to the members of the association. note is made in this 28-page booklet, the way, that the men who conceived wrote it, the artists who created the strations, the engravers and printers o prepared it for the public did their rk for the good of the cause or credit a printed line on the front page.

Nor is any hint given that Mr. Ball his distinguished colleagues in the iness of "securing many favorable ries and articles in newspapers and gazines" will take their reward in the m of certificates or medals for meritious service.

Nor do we find any suggestion that -hearted artists, printers, engravers lithographers will supply gratis the ters, wagon-signs, package and direct-il inserts, or newspaper mats which promised free or at cost to subibers desiring to use such sales helps. Nor is there any talk of "organized rts to secure" a radio broadcasting optunity to tell the laundry story over air. The plain assumed inference is t the laundryowners will step up to radio counter and pay their money everybody else for the privilege of ing fifteen minutes or half an hour. Everybody gets his pay—except the wspaper publisher!

Originally, the plan called for starting magazine advertising as soon as $300,- had been provided for the fund. This later increased to a minimum of 0,000 and the initial blast of the camgn is to be an announcement of a test in which $50,000 will be awarded cash prizes for the best letters written housewives on "Why the Laundry uld Do My Washing." It will be annced in full pages in several magas, the copy carrying the footnote that ws of this great $50,000 prize con will be broadcast over the continent radio."

The magazine plans are laid before the scribers in an alluring double-spread tables, in which the number of aders" for the selected media are set h for New York City, Crawfordsle, Ind.; Fargo, N. D.; Houston, Tex.; Atlanta, Ga.; and Sacramento, Cal. The total of "readers" was reached by multiplying by four the stated circulation of each magazine in each city. The results are startling:

In Crawfordsville, Ind., a town of 10,-200 people, the magazines are credited with 16,320 "readers," or one for every man, woman and baby in the town, including all illiterates, non English-reading, blind and otherwise uninterested folks.

In Fargo, N. D., with a population of about 25,000, the magazine "readers" are given as totalling 39,705.

Sacramento's 100,000 people become 107,304 magazine readers by the laundryowners' adding machine.

By the same apparatus, the total number of magazine "readers" reached by the chosen list is set down as exceeding 72,-000,000.

That is the display of wares to be sold to the laundryowners upon whose shoulders the finance burden will fall to the extent of $1,000,000 a year, plus whatever local newspaper advertising these individuals elect to do locally in order to get returns on their contribution to the magazine fund.

The rate per page in each of these publications—and a magazine page is bought for the total circulation and not for the number of "readers" in any designated market area—follows:

Saturday Evening Post, double page, 4 colors	$19,000
Literary Digest, page 4 colors	6,000
Colliers, page, 4 colors	5,750
Liberty, page, 4 colors	6,500
Woman's Home Companion, page 4 colors	8,200
Ladies' Home Journal, double page, 4 colors	25,000
True Story, 1 page	4,500
Pictorial Review, 1 page, 4 colors	12,000
Good Housekeeping, 1 page, 2 colors	5,200
M'Call's, 1 page, 2 colors	8,400
Total rate for one insertion in above magazines	$100,550

The million dollar appropriation might thus just squeeze through the year, with no allowance for administration expense or the cost of preparing the attractive copy that is planned, with no allowance for the advertising continental broadcasting of the contest news by radio, with no allowance for the making of newspaper matrices, posters, wagon-signs, package and direct-mail inserts and dealer-helps that the retail laundries are promised in return for their contributions.

Either the magazine schedule as advertised represents hopes rather than plans, the copy and space demonstrated in the promotion folder bespeak an ideal, rather than a practical display of the association's message, or the promoters have sadly miscalculated the amount of money needed to execute their ambitious promises. Certainly a million dollars expended in the magazines as outlined above will not permit the daily bombardment of the public with the laundry message by the plan outlined. In a moment of caution, probably, the committee qualified its double-page display of the magazine case with these paragraphs:

"No guarantee has been made to anyone that this entire list of magazines will be used. We must raise our four million dollars to use this large space. We must have the entire amount or some of these magazines will have to be dropped."

It is then set forth:—

"City quotas have been established on the basis of the number of magazine "readers" listed and subscribing members of the association are informed that they will be required to pay only for the amount of magazine circulation that they recieve in their own territory. The quotas, it will be noted, are determined on the basis of four readers to each circulated copy of the magazines.

Obviously, the principal purpose of the campaign is to build a backfire against the advancing popularity of the home equipment washing machine which for the past five years have been using newspaper and magazine space, both on a national scale, and in 1926, the washing-machine people are said to have sold equipment valued at $185,000,000 on an advertising investment of about $9,000,-000, or little more than 5 per cent. The laundryowners' association folder sets forth that the washing-machine salesmen took away from the laundry industry last year the "almost inconceivable total of 1,101,990,240 pounds of washing"—$52,895,532 out of the laundryman's pockets.

The newspaper appropriations of only two washing-machine companies—the Maytag and the Syracuse, total more than $2,500,000. It was the instrument by which the greater part of the $185,000,-000 production of machines was sold.

For the million dollars a year with which these laundryowners propose to sell their intangibles, to overcome the natural and deeprooted old prejudice against laundries, plus the new prejudice created by the washing-machine missionaries, an extremely useful allotment of newspaper space could be purchased. For approximately $113, an agate line can be purchased in every daily newspaper of the 2,000 published in the United States. One thousand lines, or half a page, in every individual daily can be bought for $113,000 or ten half pages in the course of a year—about the same amount of space measured on an "acreage" basis as is afforded by the listed magazines, but with double the circulation afforded by the magazines—36,000,000 daily against 18,000,000 daily.

That space would all be in black and white, without the fancy red lines and green gadgets that decorate the specimen magazine pages. But black and white space was what most of the Maytag and Syracuse appropriations of $2,550,000 purchased and black and white space sold the goods.

Sunday newspapers, with a third more circulation than that afforded by the listed magazines, offer space in every individual of the 545 papers for less than $60 an agate line, but that figure can be taken for a quick calculation. A thousand line advertisement in every one of the 545 papers would cost $60,000 in black and white, and for 25 per cent over that amount would permit rotogravure or color in the many large city papers which furnish those services in excellent quality. The space would be more than equivalent to that afforded by the magazines listed and, as stated, would reach 33 1/3 per cent additional circulation.

No question of city quotas arrived at by curious multiplications and divisions arises here. The local laundry owner knows his local newspapers, knows where they are circulated and what their space costs. The wise ones know also that they produce sales, something which they must take on faith when the so-called national media come before them.

It is absurd, of course, to consider a campaign in every individual newspaper for any such plans as the laundryowners contemplate, for there are numerous isolated places in the United States where neither the washing machine nor the city steam laundry present any problem to the family budget. The newspaper appropriation can be directed to regions where results are at least a possibility, and the $113,000 for the daily campaign and $60,000 for the Sunday campaign, individual advertisements in well-informed hands, can cover all the necessary ground and cover it far more frequently and more effectively than any campaign in national media.

The laundryowners' plans appear to promise another series of fat years for the washing-machine manufacturers, who take their newspaper advertising straight.

CONSTRUCTION WORK STARTED ON NEW MONTGOMERY JOURNAL-TIMES PLANT

CONTRACT has been awarded for the building of the new home of the Montgomery Journal and the Times at the southeast corner of Lawrence street and Washington avenue and work has already begun upon the project. The contract calls for having the structure ready for occupancy within 60 days.

The new Journal and Times building was designed by Okel & Cooper, Montgomery architects, and is believed to embrace every modern feature for efficient publication. It will be built of dark red texture face brick with pilasters and trimming of Indiana limestone.

The building fully equipped will represent an investment of more than $250,000.

The main entrance will be on Lawrence street, and the news, editorial and business departments will occupy the main floor separated by marble counters.

The composing room where the linotypes and other mechanical equipment are located will face Washington avenue.

The presses will be located in a basement whose ceiling extends some nine feet above the sidewalk level, and an expanse of plate glass windows will permit those passing on the street a full view of the presses and stereotyping machinery in operation.

The new mechanical equipment for the Journal and the Times has already been shipped to be ready for installation immediately the contractors are ready for it. It includes a Hoe sextuple.

Frederick I. Thompson is president of the Journal-Times.

PARIS DAILY FAKED EYE-WITNESS STORY OF NUNGESSER'S ARRIVAL IN N. Y.

Other Papers Tell Success of Flight and Duped Public Threatens Newspaper Offices When Truth Is Learned—Newsboys Mobbed by Eager Buyers

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

PARIS, May 10.—Paris evening newspapers broke all records in premature news when Nungesser and Coli attempted to fly across the Atlantic. Disaster to truth was brought about by competition. One paper at midday stampeded all the rest. It appeared on the streets with a banner-line, "Nungesser And Coli Have Crosed The Atlantic." This was on the strength of a dispatch that they had been sighted off Nova Scotia. The other evening papers, in order to get in on the sale, came out with news that the French aviators were within sight of the American coast, and when yet another telegram reached the Paris newspaper offices that the intrepid flyers had been sighted off Boston, it was but a step—or shall we say tempting jump?—to their arrival in New York, described as follows:

"When Nungesser's airplane appeared above the roadstead of New York, Commander Fouillois, chief of the Navy air chaser service, flew out with a squadrilla to meet the aviators, and as soon as the plane was visible from the shore, ships, sirens and whistles blew and flags flew from every mast. Numbers of pleasure craft went out to meet the incoming plane as well as many military and civil planes, the last-named hired by cinematograph undertakings and the newspapers.

"The descent to the water was made under excellent conditions, and the plane was immediately surrounded by numbers of boats, whilst hydroplanes flew over it at a low altitude.

"Nungesser and Coli, once their machine was safely on the water, remained a moment motionless as though unconscious of the acclamations and salutes from boats around them. Then they stood up and embraced each other. A motorboat came alongside the plane and took Nungesser and Coli to the shore. A huge crowd awaited them; among those who reecived them officially were several delegates from the Government, Mr. Harmon, brother of Mr. Gilbert Harmon, President of the International Aviators' League. . . .

"Nungesser made no declaration on his flight, simply saying that he was glad to have succeeded and that he was in a hurry to get a rest."

Never in the last 20 years—not even in the early days of the war—have newspapers been so eagerly bought in Paris. The newssellers were mobbed and could not hand out papers fast enough, although nearly all of them were charging double the usual price. Those who could not get a paper craned their necks over the shoulders of more fortunate citizens, or listened at the edge of a news-thirsty knot of people as the good news was read out with unction to them. Some street paper-sellers made as much as 500 francs —$20—in a few hours.

As midnight approached and no official confirmation was forthcoming, crowds that had been parading up and down the Boulevards with bands and improvised banners took on an angry mood and soon gathered around the offices of some of the newspapers, which had to be protected by police.

One of these crowds, outside the New York Herald Paris office, was fired with a ridiculous rumor that the Herald was keeping back the news from some foolish idea of spite. An employe of the Herald had to make a speech to the crowd that that paper was not going to post up bulletins until it felt sure they were true.

Outside Le Matin the crowd began to shout for confirmation. Stupid rumor spread through the crowd that if the aviators had not arrived it was because of misleading weather reports from America, and there was a demand that the American flag, which was flying with a number of French flags, should be withdrawn. The Matin authorities took down the American flag, but in a praiseworthy spirit of fairplay, they took down all the other flags at the same time.

On the following morning, crowds of commuters who had gone home with papers in their pockets telling of the successful termination of the great attempt, returned to the city angry at the way they had been duped, and precautions were taken to guard the premises of the evening papers.

When a few hours later these appeared they bore the following notice:

"The undersigned evening newspapers, united in a common feeling of respect for their readers and for the exactness of the news it is their duty to give them, feel it incumbent upon themselves to declare that during the afternoon of yesterday they published only dispatches on the flight of Nungesser which had been successively confirmed by official manifestations of the Ministries of Commerce, of War and of the Interior.

"L'Intransigeant,
La Liberté,
Paris-Soir,
La Presse,
Le Soir."

So the blame is laid at the door of the Ministry, although the paper which gave the glowing description of the arrival at New York quoted above, one of the signatories, does not say the Ministry supplied that piece of information.

The Havas report contained no suggestion that the plane had reached New York, and of all the evening papers, Le Temps alone withstood temptation.

TELLS HOOSIERS OF RUSSIA

Mills, A. P. Moscow Correspondent, Guest at Indiana Members' Luncheon

Indianapolis, May 17.—Matters pertaining to distribution of state news by the Associated Press were discussed Tuesday at the annual spring meeting and luncheon of the Indiana Associated Press Editorial Association at the Claypool Hotel.

Means of improvement of the service to bring about quicker action on state stories were discussed. Printer service was introduced in the state only in the last few weeks.

At a luncheon held between sessions, James A. Mills, for several years at Moscow for the Associated Press, spoke on his experiences. Mill was in Indianapolis as the guest of Hilton U. Brown while on a leave of absence prior to leaving for Vienna as correspondent.

Those who attended the meeting were: B. F. Lawrence, James A. Stuart, Earl Mushlitz, Marvin G. Kuhn and Bret Hawkins, Indianapolis Star; Hilton U. Brown and Ray Everson, Indianapolis News; Ross Nelson, Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette; Henry W. Marshall, Jr., Herbert C. Light, W. H. Robertson, Lafayette Courier and Journal; J. A. Kautz, Kokomo Tribune; George Padgett, Terre Haute Star; W. F. Cronin, A. C. Keifer, Terre Haute Tribune; J. C. Kerlin, Evansville Journal; C. T. Jewett, Anderson Herald; Don Scism, Evansville Courier; Rudolph H. Horst, South Bend Tribune; George D. Grittenberger, Anderson Bulletin; Tom H. Keene, Elkhart Truth; Will G. Ross, Max Fowler, Frankfort Morning Times; Carl L. Houston, Marion Leader-Tribune; Arthur K. Remmel, Fort Wayne News-Sentinel; Foster W. Reddick, Wabash Citizen; C. H. Clay, Richmond Item; Frank E. Harrold, Muncie Star; Edgar T. Cutter, superintendent central division Associated Press; James A. Mills, Foreign Service Associated Press; S. P. Ochiltree, Indiana correspondent Associated Press; Herman Olsen, Gerald Bowman and Claude H. Wolff, Indianapolis office of the Associated Press.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER CALENDAR

May 23-24—International Advertising Assn., Third District, annual convention, Greensboro, N. C.

May 23-24—Conference of Allied European News Agencies, Warsaw, Poland.

May 24-25—Inland Daily Press Assn., meeting, Chicago.

May 26-28—Arkansas Press Assn., annual convention, Hot Springs, Ark.

June 8-10—Mississippi Press Assn., annual meeting, Clarksdale, Miss.

June 8-9—American Newspaper Publishers Assn., mechanical conference, Harrisburg, Pa.

June 10-11—New York State Press Assn., meeting, Long Island City, L. I.

June 10-11—Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Assn., meeting, Waynesboro, Pa.

NEW ENGLAND PRESS GROUP FORMED

Organization Effected at Boston, May 14, With Walter D. Allen President—To Employ Paid Field Man

The New England Press Association, organization for the betterment of the weekly newspapers of New England, was launched in Boston, May 14, at a meeting at the Boston City Club, where officers were elected. State committees have been at work for the past six months in developing the plans.

Walter D. Allen of Brookline, Mass., president of the Massachusetts Press Association, was elected to head the new and larger body. Regional vice-presidents were chosen as follows: New Hampshire, Francis Donovan of the Hanover Gazette; Vermont, W. H. Gilpen of the Barton Monitor; Maine, F. B. Nichols of the Bath Independent; Connecticut, Gordon J. Gale, of the Danielson Windham County Transcript; Rhode Island, Royal Sawin of the Warren News; Massachusetts, Robert F. Osterhout of the Hudson News-Enterprise.

Gardner E. Campbell of the Wakefield (Mass.) Item was named secretary-treasurer. The Association plans to employ a paid field secretary to further its work among the 520 papers in New England which are eligible for membership.

DECLARE JUDGE BIASED

Newspaper Men Sign Affidavits in Sacco-Vanzetti Case

Among the many letters received by Gov. Alvan T. Fuller of Massachusetts asking for a review of the Sacco-Vanzetti case is a communication signed by Will Irwin, author; Frank P. Sibley of the Boston (Mass.) Globe, Robert Benchley, dramatic editor of Life; Mrs. Lois B. Rantoul of the Greater Boston (Mass.) Federation of Churches, John N. Beffel of New York, press correspondent, and Mrs. Elizabeth Bernkopf of Boston, International News Service correspondent, who have all signed affidavits charging Judge Webster Thayer with making improper and biased statements against the defendants, their counsel and the radical cause during the progress of the trial.

Gov. Fuller recently took exception to an interview published in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle as written by Joseph Lilly on the grounds that he did not give any interview, refusing twice to make any statements on the case and considering whatever remarks were made as confidential. The governor feels that his confidence has been betrayed by the interview. Lilly on the other hand states that the governor knew he was talking for publication and that a representative of a Washington newspaper organization wrote substantially the same report.

$2,000,000 COOPERATIV AD DRIVE APPROVED

Plans for Photographic Industry's Ca paign Approved by Committee at Indianapolis Meeting This Week

National advertising and merchand ing programs under the $2,000,000 adv tising campaign of the photographic dustry of the United States and Cana were approved at the first meeting of t industry's national advertising comm tee in Indianapolis this week.

Detailed plans were submitted for committee's consideration by the Mi Advertising Company of Indianapo national advertising counsel for the dustry.

It was announced at the meeti which was in session for three days, t the Photographers' Association of Am ica is launching the largest single as ciation advertising campaign in Ameri The program contemplates an advertisi investment of $2,000,000 over a per of four years.

In addition to leaders of the pho graphic industry outstanding figures the business world attended the meeti Among those in attendance were: M Grady, Seattle, Wash.; Charles Kauffman, Chicago; Horace W. Dav president of the Ansco Photo Produ Company, Binghamton, N. Y.; Alva Townsend, president of the Photo raphers' Association of America, L coln, Neb.; George W. Harris, of Ha ris & Ewing, Washington, D. C.; Z. Briggs, Kansas City, Mo.; Charles Pettinger, Indianapolis; Mr. Imray, a vertising manager of the Eastman Kod Company, Rochester, N. Y.; Robert Hall, Indianapolis; L. C. Vinson, sec tary of the Photographers' Associati of America, Cleveland, O.; Clare Stearns, Rochester, Minn.; Fred Mil Indianapolis; G. A. Cramer, St. Lou Mo.; F. C. Medick, Columbus, Harry Armer, Indianapolis; Donald Walker, Indianapolis, and D. H. Bratt Indianapolis.

QUARTERLY INCOME $120,000

New York Journal of Commerce R ports Prosperous Quarter

Preliminary figures for the New Yo Journal of Commerce indicate an inco of $120,000 for the first quarter of 19 applicable to interest on the ten-year 6 per cent sinking fund gold notes and doul the requirements on the notes for the e tire year. After provision for note terest, federal taxes, and dividends on p ferred stock, the balance was at the a nual rate of $3.35 a share on the 100,0 outstanding shares of common stock.

The Ridder brothers, Joseph, Berna and Victor, purchased the Journal Commerce and merged it with the Ne York Commercial last Jan. 1.

PRESS CONVENTION POSTPONED

The annual convention of the Miss sippi Press Association which w scheduled to be held in Clarksdale, Mis June 8-10 has been postponed until Se 21-23, due to the flood conditions alo the Mississippi River, James H. Skew publisher of the Meridan Star and pre dent of the Association, has announce

APPRAISERS VALUE DAILY

Bankruptcy appraisers have set valuation of $706,959 on the Portla (Ore.) Telegram for purposes of sa Sealed bids for the newspaper will opened May 28. The valuation includ $500,000 for good will.

STAFF DINNER AT RITZ

Annual dinner of the staff of the Wa Street Journal was held in the Cryst Room of the Ritz-Carlton, New Yor May 11. Clarence W. Barron, publishe and Kenneth Hogate, managing edito spoke.

MAIN STREET WANTS NEWS OF WALL STREET

Analysis of Stock and Bond Holdings Show That "Era of Financial Democracy" Is Here—Big Issues to Be Floated Look for Buyers Through the Newspapers

By LEMUEL F. PARTON
Consolidated Press Association

OF all the profound changes brought about by the war, none has more decisively reshaped newspaper activity, or opened more doors of opportunity, than the new nation-wide mass interest in financial news.

Reconstruction after the war left many new problems on the publisher's desk. Not the least of the these was the problem of serving the needs of "the new investor." What his demands have meant to the news department and what he promises to do in return for the advertising department is the subject of this article.

The story of this transition period is essentially a story of great economic changes and re-adjustments, so complex and far-reaching that their final effect on the masses of America still remains unestimated and incalculable. The one most observable result, so far as newspaper circulation is concerned, has been a quick and decisive shift from speculative to investment interest in finance. Consideration of a few significant happenings of the last few years reveals not only the cause of this, but shows that, in its wide implications it has a place well up toward the top of the schedule of "live" events.

European capital built nine-tenths of the American railroads. The war compelled foreign holders to hypothecate their securities. Small holdings were turned loose in the American market. In the period from 1918 to 1925, inclusive, railroad stockholders in America increased from 660,645 to 989,949.

In the entire field of finance, including all utilities, packers, oil, iron and steel, manufacturing and distributive industries, this story was paralleled. Three things had happened. The impact of the war had broken the levees of narrowly centralized control; the government thrift stamp and liberty bond campaigns had given millions their first lesson in investing; America's huge gold reserve, with the collapse of foreign buying power, had turned inward a flood of productive capital incessantly seeking a wider investment market.

Capital immediately saw the possibilities in furthering and using this wide dispersal of securities in stabilizing industry and in building good will. Employes were urged to purchase stock, intensive customer ownership campaigns were carried on. In the above period of seven years, gas electric light and power companies gained 815,955 customer stockholders, 75,000 employe stockholders and 70,324 stockholders from the general public.

Greater production required greater consumption. This meant higher wages and more leisure—more money to spend and more time to consume. Better organization of labor helped bring capital to the point where it recognized this fact. Wages rose and hours shortened. The net result has been a new economic cycle of greater production, greater consumption and—here is a fact of primary importance—a distribution of wealth among a greater number of individuals than was ever dreamed of before.

This was not merely the result of great accumulation of capital turned inward, but the accident of America's possession of vast natural resources. It was also the triumph of America's technical genius, plus the realization of the necessity of stimulating new desires.

American newspapers profited first from a tremendous new volume of merchandise advertising. Our surplus capital and our great technical establishment, left over from the war, had to be kept at work. Manufacturers advertised and goods were sold. The American standard of living rose steadily. Economists who had contended that advertising was economic waste began to admit that the factor of new desires brought in a new human element, which revealed advertising as a creative, rather than an exploiting force.

Alert newspapers saw this and drove in hard on commodity advertising. But only a few realized that, with the shift from speculative to investment interest a situation of profound importance to American newspapers had been created overnight. This is what is happening today:

About $600,000,000 worth of new securities are being put into the American market every month; transactions in old securities total about the same each month. Thus, to move $1,200,000,000 securities each and every month, more and more security advertising is necessary. In 1914, public utilities in America spent $14,000,000 for advertising. Last year they spent $27,000,000. This year, their estimates run about $35,000,000. Foreign, state and municipal issues are now running ahead of even utility issues. Last week's advertised issues included $77,963,000 foreign, $32,627,000 state and municipal and $26,000,000 utility.

Intelligent investment advertisers are studying American financial pages closely, seeking out the papers which are recruiting this widespread new interest in financial news by building superior financial pages—printing the news the day it happens, supplying complete stock and bond tables, analyzing and interpreting, humanizing and dramatizing that most intimate and universal of human concerns—provision for the future.

The papers which understand what is happening and are profiting by it are merely following highly intelligent newspaper technique. They are concentrating on what is indisputably important and interesting to large numbers of people, rather than lying awake nights trying to find some magic formula for getting mass circulation. They have learned that financial news is big news, important news, dramatic news, and that it is a sound basis for new advertising.

When the recession of the waters left a few billion crustaceans high and dry, the winners, and the progenitors of later species, were the ones who were adaptable enough to develop a new breathing apparatus. When a new economic fact blows up the old cliches of newspapering, the winners will be found among those alert enough to understand what is happening and to act accordingly. The war blew up many things beside the Cathedral of Rheims—among them the old time financial editor, who survived long past his time by virtue of long legs and a pair of shears.

A look "before and after" gives a complete picture of the beginnings of the American financial page, new economic alignments, a transition period and the opening of rich new fields to newspapers. Any old-time newspaperman has a birds-eye view of the whole process. In the old days, some obscure personage on the paper covered "markets." He filled his meagre allotment of space with a few produce and hay and grain quotations and occasionally some gleanings from a broker's wire. He was usually an elderly, preoccupied man, with a sleazy office coat and a pair of vest pocket shears. Like the vermiform appendix, he performed a vague and unromantic function.

America was building. The sixties and seventies saw the first millionaires emerging on the Atlantic seaboard. The nation granted to the Pacific system land greater in area than that of the original thirteen states; development followed; the Messaba range and the greater mineral resources of the West were opened; the oil industry developed.

Here and there were newspapers which somehow felt that all this was important. Press association members began to make little deals, one agreeing to ask that Kansas City livestock be carried, if the other would make a plea for Georgia turpentine. Communication facilities rapidly improved. The foundation of the modern financial page was laid.

Old Sam Snip, the archaic financial editor was slipping, but it took a war to send him all the way down the slide. There is today scarcely a paper in America which does not realize the necessity of having some kind of a decent financial page, but there are still many papers which still have failed to grasp the full meaning of the tremendous economic upheaval which has followed in the wake of the war, with its resultant opportunity in financial reader interest and advertising.

It is a truism of newspaper work that the job of an editor is two-fold—to interest a few people a great deal or to interest everybody at least a little. In the old days, the possibilities of financial reader interest consisted in the appeal to the few; today, with the amazing distribution of securities, it is pushing farther and farther into the field of universal interest. Thomas Nixon Carver, professor of Political Economy of Harvard University has found this phenomenon of such profound importance that he has made it the subject of his last book, "The Present Economic Revolution in the United States." Dr. Carver shows a steady, accelerated spread of stocks and bonds among millions who before the war had never dreamed of owning securities. He quotes authorities to show that "there has been an increase from about 4,400,000 stockholders in 1900 to 14,000,000 in 1922, or about 250 per cent."

Various estimates have placed the present number of stockholders in the United States at around 19,000,000. These figures have been challenged by others who insist that there are no accurate statistics covering this, as one stockholder may hold many securities and nothing short of an analysis of all stock lists, and a check of duplications could possibly give the correct number of individual holders. This is unquestionably true, but the estimate of 250 per cent increase remains unchallenged, and the indisputable fact is that there are many millions of new stockholders and that their number is constantly increasing.

A few months ago, the National Industrial Conference Board identified the purchasers of a new issue of stock put out by a large public utility corporation. The inquiry was confined to holders of 50 or more shares of this stock. Fifty-seven occupations or trades were represented, listed as follows, with the number of individual subscriptions from each occupation:

Accountants	166
Artists	81
Bakers	153
Barbers	155
Beauty Culturists	52
Bricklayers	65
Butchers	115
Carpenters	483
Chauffeurs	601
Clerks	2,987
Domestics	623
Draftsmen	149
Dressmakers	372
Electricians	582
Engineers	558
Factory workers	1,058
Foremen	518
Housekeepers	4,029
Janitors	119
Laborers	499
Laundry Workers	65
Machinists	499
Metal Workers	157

(Continued on page 52)

BANISH NURSERY CRIME NEWS!

By BOB SIBLEY

IF crime news and fake stories are to be prohibited, I demand that before the matter goes any farther crime news be done away with in the nursery and kindergarten.

Beset and surrounded by yeggs, bandits, women's clubs, ministers, ex-police reporters and advertisers, I went into research work this week and discovered that conditions in the nursery are terrible.

The Mother Goose (N.Y.) Gazette, which has been getting away with all kinds of murder for years without a single libel suit and right under the eyes of mothers and fathers, should be called to the attention of the reformers at once for immediate action.

The Mother Goose Gazette's final edition for yesterday carried a page 1 story about a bird named Tom Piperson carrying out a successful pig theft, with nothing in the way of a crime prevention moral about the story. In fact, the story was handled from a flippant angle, the reporter concluding "and away he ran," referring to Tom.

The first edition came out with an exclusive story about some lad from our town jumping into a bramble bush and scratching out both his eyes. He declined hospital treatment and then jumped into the bush a second time, scratching his eyes back in again. This was killed in the second edition when a denial, branding the story as a fake, was received. Imagine, however, the numbers of children who got only the first edition and were forced to believe it!

One of the most flagrant instances in the nursery crime news line is the case of Miss R. R. Hood, who was attacked while walking in the wood, on her way to her grandmother's house. This has been rewritten with new leads over and over again, although it was practically valueless in the first place. It is probably the worst offense in years.

Fake stories are getting by in the Gazette from all sorts of places. There was the story only last week about a Cockney named Dumpty in London, who jumped off a wall to commit suicide. The correspondent would have his readers believe that the militia, including some horse troops, were called out to give first aid, which was unsuccessful.

Another fake story was the one about a cow which jumped over the moon after feeding on moonshiners' mash. These stories have become unbearable since the advent of prohibition.

They kick about alarmist stories. How about Miss Muffett? Is it advisable to instill fright and timidity into the minds of the nursery readers with horror stories about spiders?

Another yarn unfit for Mother Goose Gazette readers was the ghastly story about a fellow named Jack getting a fractured skull in a fall down hill. Of course it was a neat human interest story—Jack being out with Jill—but is that any excuse for an editor or publisher?

The Gazette is filled with them. If my daughter were a little older I'd probably know more myself. But all she has ever done with her copies of Mother Goose is chew them up and rip them apart.

Which is my idea of the proper attitude to take toward this very important matter.

SAN JOSE MERCURY HERALD ERECTING NEW PLANT COSTING $125,000

Architects' drawing of Mercury-Herald building

AFTER nearly a quarter of a century of active journalism in its present quarters on Santa Clara street, the San Jose (Cal.) Mercury Herald is preparing to erect a handsome three-story building on the original site, to be ready for occupancy shortly before Christmas.

According to Binder & Curtis, architects, the structure will cost in the neighborhood of $125,000.

The new building will be one of the finest newspaper plants (exclusive of the mechanical department) of the size in California. Of steel frame and concrete, it will rise three stories on 130 pre-cast concrete piles, sunk 40 feet into the ground.

Santa Clara street frontage is 37 feet, with a depth of 121 feet. A jog to the west gives a rear width of 73 feet.

In the basement will be storage rooms, a modern steam-heating plant, and a lead-melting room.

The first floor will have a 20-foot ceiling, giving a bank-like effect. In it will be housed the business, advertising and circulation departments.

The editorial rooms will be on the second floor; library, publishers' suites and consultation rooms on top. A pair of fast elevators will connect the floors.

Comfort for employes, convenience for the public, and facilities for speed and efficiency will be provided on the ground floor. From the lofty entrance lobby the public has access to the elevators and by large double doors to the main business office. The entire room will be open construction, eliminating all columns. Wood work will be mahogany, with a marble floor. In the public space will be marble floor and wainscoting, the elevators being enclosed by glass and bronze partitions.

The first floor is equipped with a large mezzanine floor at the rear. On it will be situated the women's locker and wash rooms, and several large work rooms.

Three offices, for business, advertising, and circulation manager, will run across the rear of the main business office, under the mezzanine floor.

The entire front of the third floor, lighted by three huge windows opening onto Santa Clara street, will be occupied by the paper's library. On this floor also will be offices for Messrs. E. A. and J. O. Hayes, publishers.

The building will require seven months to complete.

USES PENCIL FOR FICTION

Huston of South Bend Tribune Tells How His Stories Are Written

"Of the many short stories I have written, published in Scribner's, Pictorial Review, the Red Book, Century and other magazines, all have been worked out painstakingly, word by word, with lead pencil on newspaper copy paper," said McCready Huston, associate editor of the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune and writer of short stories and novels, in a talk before the Women's Press Club of Indiana in Indianapolis last week.

"I was trained a journalist," Mr. Huston explained. "I have worked on a number of newspapers as reporter, copyreader, city and night editor and editorial writer, and so I can compose some things on the typewriter, but I can not do fiction that way in a manner pleasing to myself. I have written two novels in longhand, never approaching the typewriter until the work was completed.

"The advantage in working this way is that one never hesitates to change or revise, destroy, interline and otherwise work over the written material. He can carry his pencil scratches wherever he goes, working on a story line by line, detail by detail, until it is as nearly right as he can make it. Then, after he is all through, he can go to his machine and turn out the nice looking copy the editors like to see," said Mr. Huston concerning the industry of writing.

MERGERS HAVE AIDED BRITISH NEWSPAPERS

Higher Wages One Result Chief of Journalists' Union Says, but Warns of Danger to Free Press of "Trusts"

Newspaper amalgamations have resulted in improvement both in the standard of wages and in conditions of work, A. J. Rhodes, president of the National Union of Journalists, declared at a recent meeting of union delegates at Plymouth, England, according to the London Bureau of International News Service.

Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, successful novelist and essayist but more proud of his journalistic connections, said in a speech to the delegates that what kings could not do to destroy the liberty of the press, commercialism might do.

"There are many trusts in England," said Sir Arthur, "but none over which I feel more apprehensive than that which tied up free speech and free opinion. The nation is concerned most radically, for free speech is the oxygen which alone can aerate the blood of the body corporate."

The president, Mr. Rhodes, said he saw no sign of a limit to newspaper amalgamations.

Following the presidential address the conference adopted a resolution expressing serious concern at the development of combines resulting in groups of newspapers coming under the control of big trusts, and urging all working journalists to realize that their interests can be safeguarded only by maintaining an effective trade union organization.

MICHIGAN GROUP MEETS

F. Guy Davis Addresses Home Dailies Members at Grand Rapids

The regular quarterly meeting of the Michigan League of Home Dailies was held at the Rowe Hotel in Grand Rapids on May 19 and 20.

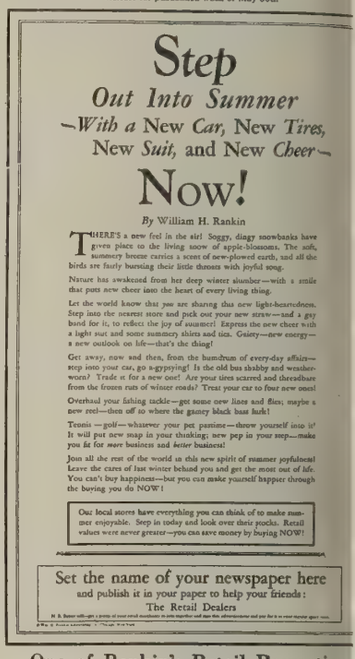
F. Guy Davis, Western manager of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, was a speaker.

The Michigan League of Home Dailies is composed of 25 leading small city newspapers of Michigan.

The officers of the League are H. H. Whitely, president, Dowagiac Daily News; W. Shumaker, vice-president, Three Rivers Commercial, and H. Edmund Scheerer of Scheerer, Inc., Chicago, secretary and treasurer.

H. C. MILHOLLAND, JR., ENGAGED

Harry Carter Milholland, Jr., son of the advertising manager of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press, is engaged to marry Nancy Waterbury, daughter of Lawrence Waterbury, the polo player, it was announced this week. Mr. Milholland met Miss Waterbury on a recent cruise around the world. No date has been mentioned for the wedding.



$10,000 EXPLOSION DAMAGES

The building and press equipment of the Sioux City (Ia.) Journal was damaged to the extent of $10,000 by an explosion and fire in a next door battery shop on Tuesday of this week.

RANKIN AGENCY TRIE PUFFERY SUBSTITUTE

Sends Out "Help the Retailer Adv tisements" to Stimulate Sale of H Clients' Products—Copy Contain No Brand Names

The William H. Rankin Compa New York and Chicago advertis agency, sent out to 900 dailies a n series of its "Help the Retailer Adv tisements" on May 10. It consisted a set of five advertisements designed stimulate retail sales during the Release for publication week of May 30th

Step
Out Into Summer
—With a New Car, New Tires,
New Suit, and New Cheer—
Now!

By William H. Rankin

THERE'S a new feel in the air! Soggy, dingy snowbanks have given place to the living snow of apple-blossoms. The soft, summery breeze carries a scent of new-plowed earth, and all the birds are fairly bursting their little throats with joyful song.

Nature has awakened from her deep winter slumber—with a smile that puts new cheer into the heart of every living thing.

Let the world know that you are sharing this new light-heartedness. Step into the nearest store and pick out your new straw—and a gay band for it, to reflect the joy of summer! Express the new cheer with a light suit and some summery shirts and ties. Gaiety—new energy—a new outlook on life—that's the thing!

Get away, now and then, from the humdrum of every-day affairs—step into your car, go a-gypsying! Is the old bus shabby and weather-worn? Trade it for a new one! Are your tires scarred and threadbare from the frozen ruts of winter roads? Treat your car to four new ones!

Overhaul your fishing tackle—get some new lines and flies; maybe a new reel—then off to where the gamey black bass lurk!

Tennis — golf — whatever your pet pastime — throw yourself into it! It will put new snap in your thinking; new pep in your step—make you fit for more business and better business!

Join all the rest of the world in this new spirit of summer joyfulness! Leave the cares of last winter behind you and get the most out of life. You can't buy happiness—but you can make yourself happier through the buying you do NOW!

Our local stores have everything you can think of to make summer enjoyable. Step in today and look over their stocks. Retail values were never greater—you can save money by buying NOW!

Set the name of your newspaper here and publish it in your paper to help your friends:
The Retail Dealers

One of Rankin's Retail Promotion Advertisements

spring period, to be published as p motion copy by the newspaper or p for by retail merchants co-operative The advertising copy is all signed William H. Rankin, agency president.

Mr. Rankin, interviewed by EDITOR PUBLISHER, described the service as substitute for free publicity, a serv newspapers can sell to retailers, or they want to please retailers can give them for nothing." The service been offered now for four years, acco ing to Mr. Rankin, who said it was u by 155 newspapers last year. He show letters of thanks from publishers, co plimenting him on the idea.

The advertising copy is written to p suade people to buy tires, radio batteri trunks and sporting goods, among ot things. The principal Rankin accou are for these products. Brand names not mentioned in the advertisements.

"Of course I am trying to get public for my clients' products," Mr. Rank agreed. "I'm not ashamed of that. want to help their business, but I do want to help them by begging spa Instead, I offer this plan, which I lieve will help newspapers increase th revenue and at the same time get pu licity for my clients' products.

"I believe national advertisers a advertising agencies should devote mo time to helping the retailers sell goo This is my contribution to this end. send the service out in May because about this time of year people customari begin to complain that retail trade poor."

CHANGES ON IOWA DAILY

George A. Croft, recently with the A sociated Press in the Chicago and D Moines offices, has been named managi editor of the Creston (Ia.) Daily A vertiser, and George R. Crane, on t Daily Advertiser staff the past 18 mont has been named business manager. T two positions formerly were held by t publishers, Carl Davenport and W. Roseberry.

CARTOONING—"DRUDGERY THAT'S NEVER DULL"

That is the Paradoxical Definition Nelson Harding, Brooklyn Eagle, Gives the Art Which Won Him 1926 Pulitzer Award—Has Drawn 6,000 Cartoons in 19 Years

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

WHEN the "Gobs" were on Broadway recently, an arch pessimist in New York remarked:

"No wonder the myth was spread abroad about the carefree life of a sailor. He's only seen when he's having a good time."

Somewhat the same thing might be said of a newspaper cartoonist.

Nelson Harding

Nelson Harding, for instance, the cartoonist of the Brooklyn Eagle, who won the Pulitzer prize, got all dressed up and went to a party in his honor in Brooklyn on Thursday, this week. The staff wanted to show their appreciation of his ability to win $500 by a single drawing. For all he tried to pull the long sad face of the traditionally gloomy humorist, those seeing Harding were certain he was having a good time. Many at the party probably sighed wistfully saying one to another: "These cartoonists have a soft life, don't they?"

But maybe such a person hasn't traveled up by elevator to the eighth floor of the Eagle building, climbed still another flight, and lingered long near the nitric acid tang of the engraving room, adjoining which Mr. Harding has his "studio." Nor have they talked to this Brooklyn satirist, perhaps, in one of his "I Confess" or "True Story" moods.

Mr. Harding, a blue smock over his tweed suit, sat near a north light window at his drawing board this week, and painted a picture of the darker side of cartooning. Then it was he defined cartooning as "drudgery that is never dull."

"Cartooning is," he began, "a terrible drudgery. A man who takes it up has no tranquillity, ever; no security. The field is limited.

"But it is always interesting drudgery, there is no doubt about that. There is enough excitement to keep one enthusiastic.

"Think, however, of having to express on paper a new idea each day. This is a little harder than it sounds. Editors suggest some ideas, of course, but a cartoonist who is worth his salt ought to think up his own.

"And have you ever considered the critics a cartoonist has? Organized women are forever objecting to the artist with wet ideas, for example. I'm not a heavy drinker, but you'd think I was a hell-bent souse, if you read some of the letters received, objecting to the anti-Volstead cartoons I've drawn.

"Most critics are very unaccommodating. They say: 'Won't you please take up some other subject?' and then, of course, they always neglect to say what subject I should take up.

"To help such people out, press agents hover about every cartoonist with brilliant ideas for him to draw. I call them cartoon panhandlers. The calendar has actually become day-ridden. Last week was 'Clean-up Week,' then it was 'Music Week,' before that it was 'Reindeer Week,' and in close proximity came 'Be Kind to Animals Week.'

"I guess I get an average of three requests a week to make cartoons for some cause or other. I refuse them all, except the old stand-bys, the Salvation Army and the Red Cross. When I refuse, these panhandlers are added to the army of critics.

"Then there are the captious critics. The other day I drew what I thought looked like a camel to stand for the dry party and it wasn't long before I received a letter advising me to go up to the Zoo and study the animals. The writer phrased his advice in a most caustic manner, too.

"Another time I drew an automobile in one of my cartoons. I'm sure it expressed an excellent idea, but the only letter I received about it was to inform me in a very superior fashion that there were 11 spokes in one wheel and 10 in the other.

"Occasionally one gets real straightforward and constructive criticism. That's worth getting. No one minds that.

"While cartooning is drudgery, the really dull periods on the Eagle, fortunately, are few and far between. The Eagle is always doing something, always crusading, and that's what a cartoonist lives on. We have plenty of real subjects to draw pictures about on the Eagle.

"I would hesitate to make the assertion that these cartoons are effective. Often, just when I think they aren't worth a hoot, we win a campaign, and someone says the cartoons helped. That cheers me up.

"When the lead news story, the lead editorial and the cartoon are all hitting on the same subject, something usually is accomplished. Then the infantry, cavalry and artillery are all brought into action at once and the chances are the objective will be taken. Naturally, I think the cartoon is the heavy artillery."

For 19 years, Harding has drawn cartoons for the Eagle scarcely missing a day during all that time. In fact he has never missed except on rare occasions of illness and on vacations. For 15 years he has also written a short illustrated front page column of pungent paragraphs called "Here and Now." It was first started during a political campaign when Harris M. Crist returned from Washington where he was the Eagle correspondent to become managing editor. Harding and Crist worked the feature out together first, and Harding has kept it up steadily ever since. His first miss on this feature came not so long ago, and it was just a miss of an edition. He wrote it and forgot to carry it downstairs on time.

"Toppling the Giant," the cartoon which won the $500 Pulitzer prize this year for Mr. Harding, was but one cartoon among 6,000 which he has drawn for that newspaper. And he insisted it was not, to his way of thinking, his best one. It showed the League of Nations felling the God of War.

"But certainly," he added hastily, "I have no fault to find with any jury kind enough to give me $500."

The $500 is safely deposited in the National City Bank, Mr. Harding having reluctantly refused, he explained, all offers made by kind friends anxious to help him spend it at "general thanksgiving parties." The jury, therefore, may not object if it is revealed that Harding himself might have awarded the prize to some other of his own cartoons, had he been consulted by the jurors of award.

"I am very seldom pleased with cartoons I make," Mr. Harding said.

"Last year I drew some 350 cartoons, and there were only about four I thought were any good. The prize winner was one of the four, but there is one I think was better."

He half rose from his chair to indicate a cartoon hanging at the opposite side. It was entitled "The Light That Failed," and showed a lighthouse labeled "Home-Influence" standing in the right foreground, while at the left background the "Ship of Youth" was shown wrecked on the "Rock of Crime."

"What I like to see in a cartoon is a striking pictorial effect expressing a simple idea. That's what gets over best. I can tell by its effect on me, whether or not a cartoon I draw will please the readers.

"My rule is to leave out everything in a picture that isn't doing any work, unless, maybe, it helps out pictorially. It has often been said that what is left out is art. I try not to clutter up my cartoons; to allow as much white space as possible.

"Cartoonists sometimes find it hard to do this. Their managing editors or editors think that every bit of space ought to be put to work.

"'Why don't you put a flag in here?' they ask, or 'Wouldn't it look nice to have Uncle Sam standing there?' And before you know it, your drawing is all filled up with useless stuff. The idea is fog-bound in a gray mass of detail.

"I'm glad to say I'm not bothered that way on the Eagle," he concluded.

Another cartoon, which Mr. Harding liked better than the winning drawing, was called "Alladin and the Dazzling Lamp." It showed a Chinaman flashing the light of Nationalism into his eyes, and the glare was blinding him. The effect was at once striking and simple. "Canada Solves a Flood Problem" was another favorite of the artist. He liked it, he said, because there was no unnecessary detail in it. The drawing was of a huge dam from a regulated sluice in which an orderly stream of liquor flowed. The sluice was labeled "Government Control."

Mr. Harding said it takes him about two hours to draw most of his cartoons. He has drawn them, he declared, in as little time as three-quarters of an hour. He enjoys most those cartoons which permit some picturization of nautre in them; such a sketch, as for instance, one he drew not long ago entitled "The Great Adventure," in which a tiny speck of an airplane was contrasted with the turbulent waters of the Atlantic.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Harding started out to be a landscape artist. He was a lithographer, and, he recalled, "not a very good one either."

"I was drawing on stone as a lithographer for a number of years," he said. "But I never became an expert. Instead I much preferred to draw caricatures of my associates.

"They knew I would never become a great lithographer and beat me out of their jobs, and so perhaps they were sincere when they urged me to quit lithography and become a cartoonist."

At any rate, Harding quit. He free lanced for a while, and then, after the Eagle had bought several of his cartoons, he took a position on a salary basis in 1908 remaining on the paper ever since.

The Sunday editor of the Eagle the other day asked Mr. Harding what it felt like to be a Pulitzer Prize winner, and he obliged with the following:

"Well, for the first minute and a half you feel fine and dandy. There is a sensation of comfort and well-being in your checking account where an aching void had been a minute and a half before.

"This is followed by a momentary humbleness—a feeling that you really don't deserve a prize. That state of mind, however, doesn't last. Directly you ob-

(Continued on page 49)

"Alladin and the Dazzling Lamp," a cartoon picked by Nelson Harding, Brooklyn Eagle, as one of his favorites.

GEORGIA GROUP ROYALLY ENTERTAINED DURING THREE-DAY BOSTON VISIT

Party of 125 Including Wives and Guests of Association Members Arrive from Savannah by Boat—Visit Portsmouth, N. H., and Quincy—Sailed for Home Monday

AFTER a three-day visit to New England on a "good-will" trip during which they were royally entertained this week by Massachusetts and New Hampshire newspaper publishers and other organizations, members of the Georgia Press Association, their families and guests, approximately 125 in all, sailed for their homes.

To an EDITOR & PUBLISHER representative, President Ernest Camp, of the Georgia Association, expressed, during his visit, pleasure and gratitude at the warm welcome which they had received everywhere during their visit.

Following their arrival in Boston Sunday morning on the steamship City of Chattanooga, from Savannah, members of the party went at once by train to Portsmouth, N. H., where they were the guests of the Portsmouth Chamber of Commerce on a sightseeing tour of that city and nearby summer resorts.

Sunday evening a farewell banquet was tendered the Georgia editors at the Hotel Rockingham, Portsmouth.

The return to Boston was made later in the evening by special train.

During their stay in Boston members of the party made the Hotel Statler their headquarters.

During the day the group visited the State House, where the visitors were greeted by Lieut. Gov. Frank G. Allen, after which they continued to the Charlestown Navy Yard, being welcomed there by Rear Admiral Philip Andrews. They were shown around the Navy Yard and boarded the famous Constitution and other war vessels there.

At 1 o'clock Monday afternoon, members of the party were guests of the Southern Club of Boston at luncheon at the Copley-Plaza Hotel. Major Robert E. Greene, president of the Southern Club, delivered the address of welcome, to which President Camp responded. Royal Daniel, of the Quitman (Ga.) Free Press, also spoke.

Walter D. Allen, president of the Massachusetts Press Association, Inc., expressed the pleasure of his association that the Georgians had come to Massachusetts.

Following the luncheon, the visiting editors were taken on a bus ride to Quincy, as guests of the Massachusetts Press Association, Quincy Chamber of Commerce and the Quincy Patriot Ledger.

Ex-Mayor William A. Bradford, officially greeted the party on arrival in Quincy. Russell C. Low, general manager of the Quincy Patriot Ledger; Miss Annie L. Prescott, treasurer of that paper, and Oscar L. Stevens, managing editor, were members of the reception committee.

Monday evening the visitors were guests of the American Mutual Alliance at dinner at the Hotel Statler, Boston. Speeches in behalf of New England newspapermen, of which there were many in attendance at the dinner, were made by Robert Lincoln O'Brien, editor of the Boston Herald, and Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Manchester (N. H.) Union and Leader, and regional director of the Hearst newspapers in New England.

Motor trips to the historic battlegrounds of Lexington and Concord, Franklin Park, Harvard College and the Arnold Arboretum occupied the final day of the Georgians' visit to Boston. At 4 o'clock Monday afternoon the visitors steamed down Boston harbor homeward bound for Savannah.

Active in arranging for entertainment of the Georgians were President Walter D. Allen, of the Massachusetts Press Association, Inc., publisher of the Brookline (Mass.) Chronicle, and Secretary Carl F. Prestcott, of the Weymouth (Mass.) Gazette-Transcript.

Members of the Georgia Association making the trip and the newspapers represented were:

President Ernest Camp, Walton Tribune; vice-president, Miss Emily Woodward, Vienna News; secretary, C. E. Benns, Butler Herald; corresponding secretary, H. M. Stanley, The Editor's Forum, Atlanta; treasurer, J. J. Mowell, Cuthbert Leader; attorney, Gordon Saussy; photographer, Walter S. Wynn, Atlanta; chaplain, Rev. Bruce Nay, Savannah.

Wiregrass Farmer, Ashburn, Mrs. Nora Lawrence.

Atlanta Journal, John Paschall, J. R. Gray and Walter Wynn.

The City Builder, Atlanta, B. S. Barker.

Fulton Daily Report, Atlanta, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kempton.

Georgian American, Atlanta, Mr. and Mrs. James B. Nevin and Mrs. Mary Nevin Vaughn.

Augusta Labor Review, Mr. and Mrs. Max Wilk.

Barnesville News-Gazette, B. H. Hardy and Miss Elizabeth Hardy.

Brunswick News, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Leavy.

Butler Herald, C. E. Benns, Miss Martha Benns and Miss Marie Garrett.

Cairo Messenger, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Wind and Miss Thelma Vanlandingham.

Bartow Tribune News, Cartersville, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Fleetwood and Lenna Fleetwood.

Chatsworth Times, J. Roy and Frank McGinty.

Tri-County Advertiser, Clarksville, E. H. and Charles Graves.

Cordele Dispatch, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Brown.

Covington News, C. L. Snowden.

Dalton Citizen, Miss Mary Louise Horan and Miss Helen Shope.

DeKalb New Era, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Hall.

Coffee County Progress, Douglas, Fred Ricketson.

Douglas County Sentinel, Douglasville, N. M. Dozier and J. M. Taylor.

Elberton Star, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Skelton.

Campbell News, Fairburn, the Misses Lurline and Elizabeth Parker.

Fitzgerald Herald, J. Jarratt Pryor, O. L. Bradshaw and Rev. Bruce Nay.

Fort Valley Leader Tribune, John H. Jones.

Griffin News & Sun, R. L. Duke.

Hartwell Sun, Mr. and Mrs. Louie L. Morris.

Jackson Herald, Jefferson, Mrs. John N. Holder and Mrs. F. T. Holder.

LaGrange Shuttle, J. C. Prather.

Cobb County Times, Marietta, Mrs. John H. Couch and Miss Elizabeth Dobbs.

Walton Tribune, Monroe, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Camp.

Moultrie Observer, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Allen and Miss Frances Allen.

Montgomery Monitor, Mount Vernon, Hugh Peterson and W. B. Morrison.

Telfair Enterprise, McRae, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Horton.

Ocilla Star, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Flanders.

Quitman Advertiser, W. A. Walker.

Quitman Free Press, Mr. and Mrs. Royal Daniel and Miss Catherine Cain.

Rome News-Tribune, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Edwards.

Savannah Morning News, H. V. Jenkins.

Savannah Press, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Sutlive.

Vienna News, the Misses Emily and Elizabeth Woodward.

Waycross Journal Herald, Jack Williams and Jack Williams, Jr.

Waynesboro True Citizen, H. Perry Sullivan.

Guests with the party were: Attorney of association Gordon Saussy and Mrs. Saussy.

Auxiliary members: Southern Telephone News, Mr. and Mrs. Evelyn Harris, Atlanta. Western Newspaper Union, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McCartey, Atlanta. American Type Founders Company, Neal Printup, Atlanta. Mergenthaler Linotype Company, O. F. Bading, Atlanta.

Honorary members: Linton K. Starr, Atlanta. Mr. and Mrs. Jack D. McCartney and Miss Gertrude Butler, Savannah.

BIG PRESS ORDER

K. C. Star Buys 30 Units From Goss Company Costing $800,000

The Kansas City Star's entire press equipment is to be removed soon and 30 new Goss press units of the latest model installed. The order involves the expenditure of more than $800,000, and is said to be the largest ever received by the Goss Company.

According to officials of the Star, the change is made necessary by the growing needs of the paper.

A few months ago the Star placed an order with the Goss company for six units to be installed by the middle of July. Now the thirty additional units have been contracted for. The complete installation is to be made by March 1 of next year.

AID FLOOD VICTIMS

Obtaining special permission from the city authorities for Sunday movies, the Albany (N. Y.) Times Union, co-operating with motion picture theatre owners and film exchanges, raised approximately $7,000 for the Red Cross flood relief fund May 15. The Albany (N. Y.) Evening News had previously sponsored a special Sunday show of the local stock company and donated $1,554 proceeds to the fund.

N. Y. LINAGE SHOWS SLIGHT DROP IN APRIL

TOTAL volume of advertising in New York City newspapers for April, 1927, was 15,708,572 lines, as compared to 15,904,500 lines in April, 1926, a net loss of 195,928 lines, according to figures just issued by the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post.

The table follows:

Pages 1927	Pages 1926		Percentage of Total Space	1927	1926	Gain	Loss
1,404	1,306	American	7.0	1,105,644	1,090,906	14,738	.....
1,678	1,618	Herald Tribune	10.9	1,708,922	1,669,612	39,310	.....
2,130	1,990	Times	16.6	2,602,334	2,557,372	44,962	.....
1,318	1,370	World	8.7	1,367,512	1,513,710	.....	146,198
992	856	*Mirror (Tabloid)	1.7	274,588	307,744	.....	33,156
1,648	1,376	News (Tab'oid)	5.0	789,062	657,596	131,466	.....
1,036	1,200	*Evening Graphic	2.1	325,016	348,368	.....	23,352
1,272	1,226	*Evening Journal	8.7	1,366,850	1,400,896	.....	34,046
914	776	*Evening Post	3.3	525,254	432,274	92,980	.....
846	888	*Evening World	5.8	906,120	965,876	.....	59,756
1,146	1,156	*Sun	9.7	1,521,622	1,500,242	21,380	.....
714	628	*Telegram	3.6	562,408	532,572	29,836	.....
1,294	1,344	Brooklyn Eagle	10.3	1,618,614	1,717,220	.....	98,606
740	768	Brooklyn Times	3.7	585,414	678,128	.....	92,714
448	556	Standard Union	2.9	449,212	531,984	.....	82,772
17,580	17,058	Totals	...	15,708,572	15,904,500	.....	195,928 Net Loss

* No Sunday edition.

	1927	1926	1925	1924	1923	1922	1921
American	1,105,644	1,090,906	1,172,800	1,329,024	1,180,716	1,078,400	859,706
Herald	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,108,986	1,110,250	1,065,668
Herald Tribune	1,708,922	1,669,612	1,358,718	1,230,772	932,930	860,570	861,466
Times	2,602,334	2,557,372	2,347,434	2,363,724	2,373,312	2,311,328	1,923,902
World	1,367,512	1,513,710	1,402,098	1,473,920	1,678,706	1,522,700	1,199,486
Mirror (Tab.)	274,588	307,744	366,428	.....	.....	.....	.....
News (Tab.)	789,062	657,596	567,804	507,208	354,300	292,548	215,212
Eve. Graphic	325,016	348,368	149,744	.....	.....	.....	.....
Eve. Journal	1,366,850	1,400,896	1,477,432	1,436,386	1,181,504	1,008,140	936,928
Eve. Mail	.....	.....	.....	‡	568,064	518,558	541,688
Eve. Post	525,254	432,274	420,174	381,664	364,844	346,624	518,050
Eve. World	906,120	965,876	820,742	745,068	774,756	763,970	831,042
Globe	.....	.....	.....	††	821,162	603,772	568,130
Sun	1,521,622	1,500,242	1,252,174	1,293,520	915,318	806,366	725,396
Telegram	562,408	532,572	617,226	846,110	603,450	614,652	649,752
Brooklyn Eagle	1,618,614	1,717,220	1,478,646	1,566,624	1,542,888	1,396,412	1,177,088
Brooklyn Times	585,414	678,128	450,252	395,644	311,206	283,106	269,762
Standard Union	449,212	531,984	602,542	673,680	679,974	669,546	533,342
Totals	15,708,572	15,904,500	14,484,214	14,243,344	15,392,116	14,186,942	12,876,618

‡ Telegram and Mail combined January 28, 1924.
†† Sun and Globe combined June 4, 1923; name changed to Sun March 10, 1924.

U. P. WARNS AGAINST SOLICITORS

Syndicate with Similar Name Thought to Be Asking for Compensation for Distribution of Autobiographical Matter, and Photos to Newspapers

Warnings are being sent out by the United Press Associations against solicitors representing themselves as coming from the United Press and asking for compensation for the distribution of autobiographical matter. The United Press never accepts money for distributing news material, a letter being mailed to prominent citizens points out.

Tom W. Gerber of the U. P. staff who is handling the matter said complaints had been received from many prominent people. He said he believed they had been solicited by companies trading on the name of the United Press. There is a United Press Syndicate listed in the New York telephone book at 415 Lexington avenue. It is not connected with the United Press Associations.

The letter of warning signed by Karl A. Bickel, president, reads in part as follows:

"We are frequently advised by persons of note and position in New York and elsewhere that they have been approached by solicitors representing themselves as coming from the 'United Press' and asking for compensation for the distribution of autobiographical matter, photographs, etc., among newspapers and magazines. The activity of this organization has caused us no little embarrassment.

"The United Press Associations headquarters World Building, New York, does not accept money or any character of compensation under any circumstances for the distribution of news material.

"This cannot be too strongly emphasized

"If at any time you are approached by any one alleging to represent the 'United Press,' with any character of a 'publicity' proposition involving the payment of money, you may be certain he does not represent the United Press Associations. We would appreciate it also if you would get in touch with us by telephone immediately and a representative will be sent to investigate the matter."

NEW CONNECTICUT DAILY

Danbury Times Launched May 17 by George B. Clark

The Danbury (Conn.) Times started publication May 17 as a new evening daily. George B. Clark, formerly publisher of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Star, is publisher. The editor is Lee Wilson, who was also formerly editor of the Bridgeport Star.

The new daily is represented in the national advertising field by Hamilton-DeLisser, Inc., New York.

INDUSTRIAL GROUP TO MEET

"Can Advertising Underwrite Prosperity" Is Cleveland Topic

Between 400 and 500 industrial advertising men, representing practically all of the leading industrialists of the country, are scheduled for a convention at the Hotel Statler, Cleveland, June 13, 14, 15, and 16. The gathering will be the sixth annual convention of the National Industrial Advertisers Association, and the underlying theme of the addresses to be delivered and the questions which will be discussed will be—"Can Advertising Underwrite Prosperity?"

George H. Corey, advertising manager for the Cleveland Twist Drill Company, is general chairman of the committee in charge of convention arrangements. He is also president of the Cleveland Division of the Cleveland advertising Club.

One of the features of the convention will be a large exhibit of industrial advertising. Paul Teas, of Cleveland, is chairman of the exhibit committee.

WHY NEWS IS NEWS ANALYZED BY PROFESSOR

Stories Which Stir Basic Instincts of Readers Eagerly Read—Newspapers Necessarily Must Cater to and Reflect Public's Wants—Primitive Emotions Still Dominate

By RAYMOND D. LAWRENCE
School of Journalism Faculty, U. of Oregon

[F, when sitting down to the breakfast table for coffee and eggs, your attention is caught by the headline "Millionaire Elopes With Waitress" in the newspaper, stop to think why you are interested in this unknown millionaire and his obscure maid.

Here is a story obviously of the romance type; but, since you know neither of the principal characters and since it can in no way affect your personal fortunes or happiness, why should you read it through? Some particular quality in this event has caught your attention, impinged itself on your consciousness, perhaps to the extent that it provides the breakfast-table conversation with your wife.

Why are we interested in the various kinds of news that fill the newspapers?

Textbook writers in journalism tell us that human beings are naturally interested in romance. "All the world loves a lover." In addition, our attention is always caught by prominent or wealthy persons whenever their actions are sufficiently unusual to print newspaper stories about them. Further, the students of journalism have pointed out, we are primarily interested in struggles for supremacy, like football games or political contests; adventure, like the attempt to climb Mt. Everest; animals, like the cat that walked 100 miles or so to return home; children, like the little girl's plea in court to save her father from being hanged for murder; amusements, like the theatre, radio, and photography; the extraordinary, like the story of the man who was re-united with his wife after 35 years of separation; success, like the man who rose to bank president from newsboy.

As these stories flicker through our consciousness, certain ones are accentuated and made to seem important to us by the technique of newspaper typography. This accentuation, accomplished by the selection and arrangement of stories and the size of headlines, is based on what the newspaperman knows as reader-interest. Pragmatic tests tell him that readers will be most interested in certain kinds of news; consequently, these are the stories that are "played up," as in the case of the millionaire and the waitress. They are isolated events seized from the flux of life. But the problem, both from the journalistic and psychological standpoint, is now what is taken from the stream of daily events but why.

Why should we be most interested in romance, or struggles for supremacy, or adventure? The answer lies in psychological facts regarding "instincts." Our solution comes in relating to news material contained in technical investigations of psychologists; a relation heretofore overlooked, it seems, by scholars. I have used the term "instincts" advisedly, for psychologists are still quarreling over its meaning. For the purposes of this article, it makes little difference whether we call the tendency toward pugnacity, for instance, an "instinct" or a want, or a behavior tendency. "Almost all men," Irwin Edman has written in Human Traits, "exhibit in varying degrees the 'fighting (pugnacity) instinct'; that is, the tendency, when interfered with in the performance of any action prompted by any other instinct, to threaten, attack, and not infrequently, if successful in attack, to punish and bully the individual interfering." Knowing that there are these fundamental impulses in human beings, we can avoid psychological controversies by calling them behavior tendencies instead of instincts, and the question of whether these impulses are innate or the result of social conditions is immaterial.

II

"Smith and Mills Enter Last Stage of Battle" is a headline which arrests my attention as I glance at the newspaper during a political campaign. Here, obviously, is a "battle," a struggle for supremacy between two gladiators in a political arena. It is a conflict, a competition, arousing our emotions. Our sympathies are with one or the other of the participants just as much as in a prize-fight. In fact, there is more than one similarity between a presidential contest and a heavyweight championship. But the essential point is that we are witnessing a conflict, and the explanation lies in our past. Man is the product of history, someone has said; the influence of the past is more than we ordinarily imagine. This interest in conflicts is based on the pugnacity tendency.

Pugnacity is probably a racial thing, a development of what John Dewey calls the "hunting pattern" of the human mind. The pursuit of game and mating were the two main activities of primeval man, and, to a certain extent, they both involve the same behavior tendency—pugnacity. In order to live man had to hunt; in order to procreate he had to mate. Consequently, the tendency toward pugnacity was developed. How this tendency originated is not important here; but, it is essential to remember that the primeval fight was the vital basis of primitive man's mind and culture.

Modern life is to a large extent founded on competition, the essence of which is a fight or struggle between individuals who are contending for the same rewards. It is the soul of business and the zest of sports. Our western "conflict" culture is exemplified in our active, hurried, competitive, bustling life; and we unconsciously exalt and admire the man who has surmounted all obstacles, who by dint of hard fight has reached the top.

The reason I say that pugnacity tendency is probably a racial or social development is that, when we contrast the western conflict culture with Oriental passivity, the theory that this tendency is inherited seems to break down. If it was inherited, why should we not see it manifested in India, for instance? Gandhi, in spite of his challenge to the British Empire, has capitalized Oriental submissiveness.

As a result of this development, today we understand fighting better than anything else. The word "fight" in the newspaper instantly arouses our interest. "Crowds Fight to Hear DeValera" screams headline, and we are alert with interest. Hundreds of thousands of persons flock to football games every fall, for there we find the epitome of conflict. It is a glorified battle, a dramatization of the primeval pugnacity tendency, complicated by an emotional desire to see our side win. We actually identify ourselves with one or other of the teams, and feel it a personal reflection when our eleven loses.

Much of our present interest in the fight, because of the civilized conditions under which we live, is vicarious. The political contest between Coolidge and Davis and the Harvard-Yale football game give us a socially acceptable outlet for the original tendency toward pugnacity exhibited by the primitive man in the battle for food and mate.

III

Emotion and habit form the basis for most of our actions. With habit we are not particularly concerned here, but often the part emotion plays in determining an individual's life and success is overlooked. Our reactions to persons are almost always based on love or hate, using both terms in the widest sense. Love, for instance, may extend from the feeling of common sympathy with fellow beings to the more intense desire that leads to marriage. What McDougall calls the tender emotions or what Aristotle called the principle of affection is manifested in nearly every phase of life. In politics it is particularly evident, as Graham Wallas has pointed out: "If we look for this political affection in its simplest form, we see it in our impulse to feel 'kindly' towards any other human being of whose existence and personality we become vividly aware." Wallas cites examples of candidates showing themselves to the electors during campaigns, of monarchs having their pictures printed on coins in order to inspire the affection of their subjects.

In the news these kindly feelings are what the newspaper man calls "human interest." The old story of the mother who stole bread to feed her starving children is an excellent example. Immediately our sympathies are aroused. Unconsciously the love we bear our own children reacts to extenuate the mother's crime, if crime we call it.

In news, the love emotion may be engaged in a more intense form: the relation between the sexes. Psychologists would probably grant that the sex tendency is the most palpable of our "instinctive" actions. The love story in news or fiction has a vital interest, which probably accounts for the large amount of newspaper space devoted to divorces and "love" scandals.

The love tendency may be traced back to the original need of men to propagate the species. Mating aroused not only love but pugnacity, for in order to capture the primitive maiden the male resorted to the fight, or what we call "cave man" methods. Thus, opposite tendencies were involved in the same process.

Transferred into civilized life, much—not all, of course—of our interest in love is based on the sex tendency. However, just as in the case of the pugnacity tendency, the interest as far as reading is concerned, is vicarious. Although few readers ever heard of the persons involved in the following story, it was printed on the top of page one in one of the leading New York newspapers because the news editor realized that it would elicit an emotional response from ninety-nine percent of his readers:

"Two footsore, hungry, bedraggled, fourteen-year-old elopers for whom Northern Maine had searched since last Wednesday awaited arrival of their parents at the County Jail today, undismayed by the unromantic ending of their second elopement in two weeks. Starvation had ferreted them out.

"We want to be married," protested John Jones and Bessie Smith as Sheriff Brown locked them up. Instead the sheriff gave them the first real meal they had tasted since Friday when they went to sleep on jail cots that were at least more comfortable than the floor of the deserted barn that had been their hiding place. . . . . ."

Here is the love interest, enlivened by a struggle to escape a conflict with the authority of parents and law. The latter point explains partly why so many persons sympathize with criminals when they are hunted by officers. Popular sentiment was decidedly in favor of Roy Gardner in his spectacular escape from prison. We are bound to be interested in a conflict whether in crime or tennis.

Because of this legitimate interest in love many newspapers of the less desirable sort pander to morons by printing salacious details which are obviously unimportant but, having a degree of sex interest, they do contain an appeal.

In the magazine field, publications purporting to portray the "true" amorous life of authors also appeal to the romantic interest. They offer a vicarious outlet for the natural desire to love or be loved. Thomas has shown in "The Unadjusted Girl," that "the desire for response is primarily related to the instinct of love and shows itself in the tendency to seek and to give signs of appreciation in connection with other individuals."

IV

Bootlegging is to modern life what cowpunching was to the '90s and early part of this century. Men used to become cowboys because they felt the urge of a rigorous, romantic life; in 1926 they became bootleggers because, like cowpunching, it provides an adventurous, dangerous, thrilling existence. This is, of course, an exaggeration, but it is partly true, for bootlegging actually is one of the few ways left in which the adventurous type may find physical outlet.

All of us, however, do not require an actual outlet for our urge to adventure. We satisfy that craving in literature, in our interest in news of the adventurous doings of others, in magazine stories of the romantic, out-of-door type. Interest in certain classes of news is based on an escape mechanism, just as it was in the case of romance. Recently, a western metropolitan newspaper printed several columns of news and pictures about a college lad who traversed the whole length of the dangerous Columbia river in a canoe.

"Cascade Locks, Ore.—Amos Berg, Jr., canoeist, staged a dramatic battle for his life yesterday afternoon in the Cascade rapids before the click of two movie cameras which recorded in films the passage of the final barrier of the young adventurer from the highwaters of the Snake river to the ocean.

"After successfully negotiating the first two barriers of the dangerous rapids, the young adventurer, out in the river about a quarter of a mile, turned his frail craft into the last of the treacherous waters that have never been conquered by a canoeist.

"For a few seconds the craft withstood the boiling maelstrom, then capsized. With death near, Berg made a miraculous escape, and landed three miles below."

Why? Because their readers were interested. And why were they inter-

SIR THOMAS CHEATED SELF PLAYING NEWSBOY

SIR THOMAS LIPTON, Irish yachtsman, raconteur and tea advertiser, told one on himself while in Chicago this week on a "purely business trip."

"Was I ever in the newspaper business? Once," said Sir Thomas. "I was making a trip across the English Channel with John Dewar, the famous Scotch whiskey man, some years ago. Before boarding the boat to England we had bought a large number of English papers. I was standing at the rail with these under my arm when an Englishman approached and asked me whether I had an Express. I realized he had mistaken me for a newsman.

"I thought that I might please my Scotch friend, Dewar, by selling a one penny Express for two pence, so I let the man have the paper. Later, I told Dewar about it. He was angry.

"'What do you mean?' he said. 'The Express sells for three pence in France.'" ested? Because this thrilling canoe trip vicariously satisfied their own—unconscious perhaps—craving for excitement. We all live rather mundane, uneventful lives, and we either consciously or unconsciously imagine ourselves in the adventurer's role.

This desire and admiration for adventure also is a factor in our interest in crime news as well as contests, political campaigns, explorations, and travel tales. Thomas, in "The Unadjusted Girl," points out that "men crave excitement and all experiences are exciting which have in them some resemblance to the pursuit, flight, capture, escape, death which characterized the earlier life of mankind. Behavior is an adaptation to environment, and the nervous system itself is a developmental adaptation. It represents, among other things, a hunting pattern of interest. 'Adventure' is what the young boy wants, and stories of adventure. Hunting trips are enticing; they are a survival of natural (primitive) life. All sports are of the hunting pattern; there is a contest of skill, daring, and cunning. It is impossible not to admire the nerve of a daring burglar or highwayman. A fight, even a dog fight, will draw a crowd. In gambling or dice throwing you have the thrill of success or chagrin of defeat. The organism craves stimulation and seeks expansion and shock even through alcohol and drugs. 'Sensations' occupy a large part of the space in newspapers. Courtship has in it an element of 'pursuit' . . . " The philanderer, the siren, the vampire are all examples of the adventurous spirit—they indulge in love conquests because of the lure of new excitement. Of course, as we pointed out, this primitive impulse has been largely modified by civilization. Where the cave-youth on courtship bent said it with a club, the modern lad says it with flowers.

V.

Animals and children, to a large extent, bring the same behavior tendencies into play. The newspaper public is delighted in stories about any kind of animals, tame or wild. We read of anecdotes about them, their traits and doings, with keen interest. Any newspaperman knows that children lend the story "human interest." This interest may be related to the tender emotions. Man naturally pities and protects the weak and suffering, and, according to Edman, this tendency is closely akin to the parental "instinct." Pity and sympathy are aroused in the case of both animals and children. Toward them we have what has been called a feeling of beneficient superiority. An example follows:

"Cold Ash, England—As dogs are known to have returned to their master after long spells of enforced absence, so did 'Bossy,' one of the best cows on any farm in this section, return to her old stall after being sold to a far-away neighbor. Her owner drove 'Bossy' to market and disposed of her to a farmer 12 miles away. The buyer took her home. But when milking time came next morning 'Bossy' was back home in Cold Ash a little tired from her long walk but seemingly happy, in a bovine sort of way."

A dog fight, or bull dogging at western round-ups, or bull fighting in Spain and Mexico, it might be objected, do not arouse a poignant emotion and yet many newspaper readers are keenly interested. Man is prone to project human qualities on animals and they are personified, unconsciously probably, as human beings. Consequently, when they are engaged in contests or conflicts man's pugnacious tendencies are called into action. For the same reason, i. e. thinking of animals in terms of ourselves, we have an admiration for animal intelligence. An audience will watch with breathless interest the antics of a trained seal or horse on the stage.

VI.

About the middle of the Ninteenth century the Utilitarian philosophy of Bentham and Mill, which held that pleasure was the basis of man's actions, was commonly accepted. Today this viewpoint is thoroughly discredited, and modern psychology has turned to other motives to account for the tendency to play—basically a desire for pleasure. Much of the play of children is a method of getting rid of stored-up energy. In adults, where activity is directed toward a conscious end or purpose, there is a necessity for variety. A continued response to the same set of stimuli, as in the case of work, grows tiresome, and the individual finds it necessary to vary the stimuli. Therefore, this variety is called play. The musician probably would not play the violin after going home from an evening in concert orchestra any more than a carpenter would find recreation in building a house after a hard day's work.

The play tendency may be gratified in hundreds of different ways: sports, the theater, radio, photography, cards, etc. Our interest then is centered about one or more of these recreational activities, which if they contain the contest element further capture our attention; and a large amount of newspaper space is devoted to them. Sport sections, theater pages, radio columns, advice to bridge players are all illustrations of the journalist catering to the play tendency.

VII.

Is Mars inhabitated?

Will perpetual motion machine ever work? Can we communicate with the spirit world?

This type of question, the extraordinary, probably hold more interest for the reader than any other kind. The secret of their fascination lies not only in the fact that our lives are mainly dull and unusual. There is a more fundamental reason that is genetic.

Ages and ages ago the primitive man was surrounded by every imaginable kind of danger. His environment was a constant threat to his safety. The necessity for self-protection was the greatest factor in his life. Gradually he came to know that the things he saw every day were not dangerous and that it was the new, the extraordinary, behind which death lurked. Therefore, his attention was always caught by these unusual factors in his environment which lead to exploration habits. Everything that was new must be investigated. Consequently, a whole habit pattern was built up around this protective necessity.

These patterns have been carried over into modern life, leading to a fascination in the supernatural and the extraordinary.

Fear plays a large part in this interest. Even in modern times men fled from the locomotive and airplane when they were first exhibited. Strange or unusual political or economic doctrines are quite likely to arouse fear. Bolshevism, Socialism or Anarchy may stimulate a feeling of insecurity because they are attacks on property or they may stir up violent hate because they are unaccustomed.

Mystery and detective fiction attract readers for the same reason as does a newspaper story about Clara Phillips. The very definition of news recognizes the fundamental importance of the unusual, and every newspaper man knows that a story is not worth printing unless it is out of the ordinary.

VIII.

Leading among the profit-making magazines in the United States today are those which exploit the success of prominent citizens. "How I Made a Million Dollars in Twenty Years" is a familiar story. The adage nothing succeeds like success is not only true in America with its material culture but all over the world, for man everywhere is attentive to unusual achievement. A record-breaking airplane flight, a hero rescuing a drowning woman, an outstanding financial feat all catch our interest in the newspaper columns.

Partly this interest is based on the desire and necessity for recognition of our fellow men. Quoting Thomas again, he says that "this wish is expressed in the general struggle of men for position in their social group, in devices for securing a recognized, enviable, and advantageous social status."

The individual requires the attention of society for the development of his personality. but, whether or not he gets it, he admires the distinction and accomplishment of others. The same is true of interest in prominent persons, but success interest is not confined to notables, to wit, the following story printed on the front page of a New York newspaper:

"Beverly Hills, Calif.—John W. Neal, chauffeur for King C. Gillette, safety razor maker, is going to quit. He bought an $1800 lot on the installment plan in Beverly Hills six years ago.

Yesterday it was announced that he had leased his lot to W. D. Longyear, Los Angeles banker, for a total rental of $732,800 for a ninety-nine year tenure of the property, terms $20,000 cash and $600 a month.

Unconsciously we are inclined to put ourselves in the successful person's place, and especially is this true if we have reached no distinction ourselves, which, of course, the majority of men have not.

IX.

This interpretation would be misleading if I failed to point out that each of these behavior tendencies have been considered individually purely for the purposes of illustration. A news story generally allures readers not because of one motive but because of several; thus, the account of a college football game may appeal to our interest in conflicts, adventure, recreation, and success. The same is true of behavior tendencies themselves.

I have made them seem isolated and simple. In reality they are complicated and almost never function singly. This whole account of news-interest demonstrates the fact that a newspaper is no more than a reflection of the community, and must, in the very nature of its interest basis, give to the readers what they want.

SAYS COURT RECORDS MUST BE OPEN

District Officials Are Not News Censors, Iowa Attorney Rules in Unusual Test Case—All Public Property

(By telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Des Moines, Ia., May 19.—District court clerks or other public officers having custody of public records are not censors of news and cannot withhold from the newspapers or the public any records filed with them, Attorney General John Fletcher of Iowa ruled yesterday. The ruling was prompted by the announcement of C. R. Albright of New Hampton, Ia., Chickasaw county clerk that hereafter he will refuse newspapers access to records filed in his office. Failure to suppress all, or parts, of certain items of news at the request of the clerk or of members of the bar, was one of the reasons assigned by Mr. Albright for his decision to refuse newspaper permission to inspect documents filed in his office.

The clerk contended that only interested parties are legally entitled to examine the records and that newspapers or their agents do not come under this classification. The Iowa attorney general declared, however, that either his office or any district judge will frustrate the plans or Mr. Albright if the Chickasaw county clerk attempts to exercise censorship over the publication of records filed with him.

There is no law specifically declaring filings in public offices to be public records, the attorney general said, but all records of any public office are public record and become public property when filed, he ruled.

The records once filed can neither be sequestered nor censored, and must be made available to anyone asking to see them at reasonable time within reasonable hours and under reasonable conditions, Mr. Fletcher said, and a public officer must make his records available during office hours. Court petitions, applications for marriage licenses, divorces, court decrees and other similar legal documents legally enjoy the same privacy as a pet goldfish or canary the attorney general commented in amplifying his ruling.

The only records in a public office which are not public, he said, are those which the state legislature may determine should not be disclosed on account of public policy. Mr. Fletcher could recall no case where an Iowa legislature has singled out any public records for such action.

THIRD MAN GETS LIFE FOR MELLETT MURDER

Streitenberger, Former Canton Policeman, Convicted of Aiding in Daily News Editor's Assassination

Floyd E. Streitenberger, former Canton, O., policeman, was convicted of first degree murder by a Canton jury Tuesday night for the part he played in the murder of Don R. Mellett, editor of the Canton Daily News, last July.

A jury of three women and nine men found Streitenberger guilty but recommended mercy, which made a life sentence mandatory. In Ohio penitentiary Streitenberger will join Pat McDermott, gunman, who did the shooting, and Ben Rudner, "pay-off man," who also have been sentenced to life for their part in Editor Mellett's murder.

Streitenberger took the verdict calmly. Once in his cell, however, he turned in denunciation against Louis Mazer, the witness who brought about his conviction.

Mazer, as a State's witness, told of the plots against Mellett, to which he was a party; told of Streitenberger naming the date, July 16, on which Mellett was killed "because there would be a lot of people and a lot of noise" at a sham battle in a park, and testified that they drove around in Streitenberger's car to assist McDermott, the gunman, escape.

It was this testimony which convicted him, and was the first statement to come from any of the principals accused of Mellett's death, which followed an editorial campaign against members of the underworld.

Streitenberger appeared as the apex in a triangular plot against the crusading editor. McDermott first was convicted as the hired gunman. Rudner next was convicted as the "pay-off man" who paid McDermott to do the actual killing. The former policeman worked out details of the getaway and promised police protection for Mellett's slayers.

Mazer admitted that his interest in the plot was protection of his bootleg trade, and his activities were directed principally toward helping any of the three who needed him.

An echo of the Mellett investigation was heard Tuesday night when Police Chief John Wise suspended Daniel Van Gunten, who was on duty in the Canton station house the night Mellett was killed.

Testimony in the investigation was that a signal summoning policemen to headquarters went unanswered twenty-two minutes.

TO TEACH JOURNALISM

De Puy Named Head of "Floating University" Courses for 1927-28

William Atherton Du Puy, newspaper and magazine writer, has been appointed head of the department of journalism and editor-in-chief of the daily publication of the co-educational "Floating University" which leaves New York, Sept. 21 next, aboard the Cunardar "Aurania" for another round-the-world cruise of eight months.

Du Puy will be accompanied on the cruise by Mrs. Du Puy, before her marriage, Ada Lee Orme, a newspaper woman who once did Sunday stories for the New York World, and their two daughters, 18 and 15 years respectively.

NEWS OF FOREIGN MARKETS

The first issue of a Foreign Market Bulletin to be published as occasion requires by the specialties division of the Department of Commerce appeared May 16. Over the signature of Eric T. King, chief of division, it is stated that the bulletin is being sent to firms which have recently sought information concerning advertising in foreign countries, and that in addition to information on such matters it will also announce from time to time lists of mediums in foreign countries, special reports, etc., as they become available for distribution.

ADVENTURES IN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING

II.—OVERCOMING RELIGIOUS BIGOTRY

By N. E. W. SOUTH

This is the second of a series of intimate stories written from "the inside" by a newspaper publisher who, for obvious reasons, cannot disclose his own identity or that of the newspaper about which he writes.

(NE of the immediate problems that confronted me when I took over general management of the Blanks-g Eagle was how to wean back ap-ximately 4,000 circulation that had in-nantly left the paper when it pro-ted itself into the very front and ter of a nasty religious fight.

Briefly, here was the situation:

At the height of the nationwide agita-n against the Ku Klux Klan, the then nager of the Eagle hired an out-of-n detective, who wormed himself into local membership and every time the n held a meeting a full report of it uld appear the next day in the Eagle. sult, the Eagle's circulation began to t like snow in the presence of a ical Fourth of July sun. The rival er, keeping discreetly still, picked it and within a few weeks was the cir-ation leader in the field for the first e in its existence.

Also the morning paper began to make vy inroads on the evening's local and ional advertising—business, as we all w, being all too prone to go to the ow who can flaunt the largest circula-n figures. Then the Eagle woke up, l, in an effort to win back some of lost circulation, began rubbing it into Catholics. Their church announce-nts were placed last among such news Saturday, instead of alphabetically as ore, and their auxiliary organizations, h as the Catholic Daughters of Amer-, suddenly found the social columns sed to them. All of which meant that a few Catholics also quit reading the gle; and as none of the 4,000 Protes-ts came back, the Eagle's latter state s worse than its first. Thus, when I k over the management of the paper, erness towards it in both Catholic and otestant circles was widespread. For ny months its circulation, following first weeks of wholesale cancellations, l shown a steady decline. Something l to be done to win back both camps. natever that something should be, it l to be done quickly, for by this time bulk of the national advertising, which this particular field had for many years n the Eagle's "meat," had been taken ay by the morning, and even the gle's staunchest adherents among the al advertisers had become exceedingly bious over the circulation outlook.

As I was pondering over the first move make, two things, that in themselves l no relation whatever to the problem hand, happened. Over the telephone ne an invitation to the new general nager of the Eagle to address the Ro-y Club the next day at its regular ekly luncheon. I accepted and as I ched for my memorandum pad to make e of the date, my eyes fell on a pocket booklet labeled "Constitution of the ited States." Instantly and without conscious effort on my part, this idea shed into my mind:

'The Blanksburg Rotary Club is com-ed largely of business and professional n prominent in Protestant and Klan cles. The Constitution of the United tes of America guarantees to every the right to worship God Almighty he or she pleases—or not at all, if that pleases. Tell the Rotary Club of nksburg just that, and stand or fall that message."

The next moment I caught myself ghing at the absurdity of the idea l put it from me. But, so help me, it ne singing back into my brain 24 hours er when I found myself on my feet the presence of some 200 of Blanks-g's leading citizens, and before I knew I heard my voice saying:

'And now there is one thing more that should like to say to you so that in future there will be no misunderstand-about it between us.

'Gentlemen, the Constitution of the United States of America guarantees to you and to me, to every man, woman and child in Blanksburg, the right to worship God Almighty in any way each of us sees fit. This basic law under which we live takes no cognizance of the church to which you or I belong or what religious beliefs yours or mine are—all our common country asks of us is to be good Americans under that basic law. You, gentlemen, didn't ask us who were in the World War whether we were Catholics or Presbyterians or Episcopalians or Holy Rollers or Jews when we marched away to defend your liberties—who, then, among us, in peace time, dare make any man's religious belief a test of that man's Americanism? Both personally and officially as general manager of the Blanksburg Eagle, I take my stand on the Constitution's guarantee of religious liberty for us all and the Eagle from now on will be run on that basis. If this, in your opinion, is not good Americanism, then the sooner you gentlemen tell me so, the better for all concerned. And the day I cannot run the Eagle successfully on this basis, that day I will lock the front door and shake the dust of Blanksburg off my feet for good and all."

As I stopped talking, I suddenly realized that all the time I had been shaking a clenched fist at my auditors, and it was with an inward feeling of dismay at my own temerity that I sat down. A second later a prominent Rotarian at my left was whispering excitedly in my ear:

"By God, you've won 'em, The damned nerve of it won 'em. I haven't heard such applause in months. And I want to tell you personally, old man, that I'm with you from now on."

Well, that speech did win quite a few folks back to the Eagle—influential folks, too.

One was a Klan leader. The next day he called on me at my office.

"I heard what you said yesterday," he began, "and I am glad you have taken that stand. It is time to heal the old religious sores in this community, and you can count on my support."

Another was the rector of Blanksburg's largest Catholic church.

"I've heard about your speech before Rotary," he said; "I want to thank you for it and to tell you that you can count on my support."

A third was the pastor of the largest Methodist church in the state. He, too, said in so many words that I could count on his support.

So it went, the volume of approval swelling with every repetition of that speech. I made it before practically every civic organization in Blanksburg before I was through, and not once were my remarks received with any outward signs of disapproval. In sooth, how could they be by men and women who claimed to be good Americans, for were they not based on the Constitution of the United States itself? And therein, I think, lay the secret of my successful attack of the problem before me; what I had to say was founded on a Constitutional guarantee, and for any man to question the justness of that guarantee and withhold approval of my espousal of it for the Eagle was to deny, in effect, his own personal right to worship as he saw fit.

In such fashion I got over to all of Blanksburg and its contributory territory that the Eagle didn't give a tinker's dam what a man's religion was, or to what quasi-religious organization he belonged, so long as he conducted himself as a good American should under the Constitution. At the same time I helped to reduce the old soreness by seeing to it that church announcements were run in alphabetical order according to the individual names of the churches, and by throwing open the social columns to the auxiliary organizations of every denomination. And pretty soon news of the social doings of the Catholic Daughters of America and the women's auxiliary of the Ku Klux Klan was appearing regularly cheek by jowl in the Blanksburg Eagle without devastating results to any one!

But the thing, I think, that helped most of all to back up my straight talking before the Blanksburgers in meetings assembled was this:—

Every day for weeks I printed in the first column of the first page of the Eagle a copious extract from the Bible!

Sometimes this extract took up two-thirds of a column, sometimes a fourth of a column; as a rule it occupied about half a column. And always over it appeared this box head in prominent type: GREAT PASSAGES FROM THE BIBLE.

Here I printed the Genesis account of creation; the Twenty-third and other famous Psalms; the Lord's Prayer; the Sermon on the Mount; indeed, chapters from practically every book of the Bible—every quotation having to do with right living and right thinking, regardless of one's religious belief, whether Protestant, Catholic or Jew.

I did this with the thought that no creed or denominational auxiliary could object to the printing of these passages, and that if I could get people generally to read them, the teachings contained therein might help to soften the religious intolerance that too long had held sway in Blanksburg. In any event, I did not see where printing these passages could do the Eagle any material harm.

And it didn't. Quite to the contrary, and strange as it may seem, people actually began buying the Eagle to read the Biblical passages, and we received scores of letters from subscribers in all walks of life commending us for publishing them.

One letter showed a curious, yet to us pleasing reaction. Simply signed "K. K. K.", it read:

"By printing your 'Great Passages from the Bible' on the front page of the Blanksburg Eagle, you are making people read the Bible every day. The K. K. K. stands for the Bible and more reading of the Bible. Keep up the good work."

Another out of the ordinary comment came from a leading Jewish merchant: "I read 'Great Passages from the Bible' every day. They are the first things I read. And good Jew that I hope I am, you have not printed even one verse from the New Testament that I cannot heartily subscribe to."

Gradually, under all this procedure, followed up by a carefully planned canvass, the lost circulation came back to the Eagle. Then one day, after months of effort, we made the discovery that we had regained our old circulation leadership. But almost in the same moment, so to speak, two situations arose to make us wonder whether, after all, we had safely put the old trouble behind us.

First, two men known to be active in Klan circles walked into the office and handed me a circular which stated that on such and such a date Miss So-and-So would lecture at Mechanics Hall on "Why I became a nun, what I learned as a nun, and why I fled the convent."

I handed the circular back with the statement that we could print no such news announcement; that the Eagle would not be a party to any attack, open or covert, direct or indirect, on any religion as long as I was its general manager.

"But we want to pay for this," said one of my callers. "We haven't come here to ask you to print this as news and for nothing; we propose to buy some of the advertising space you have for sale here."

"There is no advertising space for sale in the Eagle for an attack on any religion," I said.

"Then there is no such thing as a free press," the other caller shot back.

"You are wrong," I said. "What you propose is license, and not liberty, and I won't join you in it."

CORRESPONDENTS AT U. S. CONSULATE IN SHANGHAI

This photograph taken a few weeks ago shows from left to right: Lawrence Wilson, North American Newspaper Alliance; Frederick Moore, New York Times; Glen Baff, Associated Press; F. Misselwitz, United Press; Stanley High, Asia Magazine; a United States sailor on guard duty; and J. B. Powell, Chicago Tribune and Manchester Guardian.

"Then the whole town will know about your unfair stand," said the first speaker, while the other nodded, and both stalked out of the office, two subscriptions being cancelled on the way.

That was on Saturday. On Monday, when two Catholic priests, stirred to action by publication of the "nun" advertisement in the Sunday issue of the Eagle's rival, called on me, our subscription cancellations still numbered two. These priests proffered a paid reply, in the form of a display advertisement, to the "nun" ad. I repeated to them what I had said to my other visitors. When they found me firm in my decision, they, too, left and on the way out one of them subscribed for the Eagle—making a net loss to the paper of one subscriber.

As far as we ever were able to determine, that was also the grand total loss to the subscription list brought about by our refusal to run these two ads. Incidentally, we found out later that the two men who brought the "nun" to town did so in their private capacity and not as representatives of the local Klan, which had nothing to do with the venture and were opposed to it as a body.

The second situation that held the seed of trouble arose out of the county primaries. One of the candidates for president of the county court was a klan leader, and it was believed by many that he stood a good chance to win the Republican nomination. Unfortunately, for his prospects, a few days before the primaries he was arrested on the charge of driving an automobile while drunk and held for trial under bond.

"The darned galoot," said the city editor, in reporting the news to me. "Here we're well over this bigotry mess and now Jones goes and gets himself arrested on a serious charge. What in hell to do?"

"Print the news," I said. "But do not scream it."

"My God," gasped the C. E. "Do you want to lose our circulation all over again?"

"No," I said. "And I have a hunch we won't."

So the news of Jones' arrest was printed on page one, where it rightly belonged. As far as his candidacy was concerned, it "blew him out of the water," as one political leader patly put it. But as for doing any damage to the Eagle's circulation, "thar warn't nont."

And today the Eagle is enjoying a constantly increasing circulation, the largest in its existence of 60 odd years.

VERDICT FOR U. P.

Court Rules Against Paper Which Refused Pay for Printer Service

A jury in Circuit Court, Judge Frank Smith presiding, May 16 rendered a verdict of $1,500 in favor of the United Press in a suit against the Orlando (Fla.) Reporter-Star, charging violation of contract.

The United Press alleged that the Reporter-Star failed to carry out an agreement for night leased wire service, under which the paper had been receiving the service since Nov., 1925. In Jan., 1927, the alleged breach of contract occurred, when the paper refused to make its regular payments for service.

The Reporter-Star sought to prove that the news report as received over automatic printer-telegraph machines had been unfit for use, because of mechanical difficulties.

R. B. Brossier and J. C. Brossier, publishers, and R. Taggart, city editor, testified for the newspaper.

Clem J. Randau, sales manager, and J. A. Wicker, Atlanta printer operator of the United Press; E. J. Conover, district service supervisor of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company and W. C. Dewstoe, head of the telephone company's test board at Orlando, testified for the United Press.

Their testimony sustained the contention that the United Press had carried out its contract and, while admitting minor interruptions in the service, showed that normal service had been delivered.

BIG DIVIDENDS PAID BY DETROIT NEWS

$14,100,000 Has Been Paid to Four Children of James E. Scripps, Court Testimony Reveals —Suit Continues

About $14,100,000 in cash dividends has been paid to the four children of the late James E. Scripps, founder of the Detroit News, by his estate, since his death in 1906, it was brought out in Circuit Court, Detroit, May 12.

The estimate was given by Cecil Billington, secretary of the Evening News Association, which controls the Detroit News, testifying in the suit of Mr. and Mrs. Rex B. Clark, who are suing to force distribution of most of a $10,000,000 stock dividend.

Billington said Mrs. Clark, one of the newspaper founder's four children, had received $3,700,000 in cash dividends since her father's death in 1906. A similar sum was received by the others, he said.

Scripps left a trust fund of all his property, naming his son, William E. Scripps, and two of his sons-in-law, George G. Booth, president of the Detroit News, and Edgar B. Whitcomb, as trustees.

In 1922, the Detroit Evening News Association increased its capital stock from $50,000 to $10,000,000, and 83 1/3 per cent of it was put into the trust fund.

Mrs. Clark, in her suit, is seeking to have the increased capital stock declared profits and distributed to the four children.

The will provided that the trust fund should be distributed in 1936 to the Scripps children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. It also said profits should be given to the children and the remainder used in improvements.

Scripps was a half brother of the founder of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, but was not connected with that organization.

Mr. Clark addmitted on cross-examination May 13, that he was satisfied with administration of the Detroit News, which was shown to have raised the earnings of that newspaper from $144,000 in 1906 to $3,400,000 last year.

Clark complained, however, that he had not been informed of the major changes in the handling of the news, such as discontinuing of the Detroit Tribune, a morning paper, and purchase of the Detroit Journal and its suspension by the News, after the moves had been completed.

Clark was given a one-half interest in the share of his wife by her several years ago.

Closing arguments in the suit were heard Thursday and Judge Bingeman took the case under advisement.

LAUNCHES EARLY EDITION

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch began the issuance Tuesday of what is termed their first city edition which is on the streets at 9 A.M. The edition is complete in editorial features as well as news and advertising matter received in time for publication. Previously the first edition of St. Louis afternoon newspapers was the home which appeared at 11:30. Several years ago a midday edition out about 10:30 was issued. The Post-Dispatch is the only afternoon newspaper issuing the early edition.

DAILIES MERGED IN DUBOIS

The DuBois (Pa.) Courier has purchased the DuBois Express and is publishing the latter as an evening paper and the former as the Morning Courier. Space is being sold only in combination. The combination is represented in the national field by Lindenstein-Kimball, Inc.

NEWS AGENCIES TO MEET

Allied news agencies of Europe will hold their annual conference in Warsaw, May 23-25. The conference this year will be attended by Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, now in Europe, visiting A. P. bureaus. It is the first time that Mr. Cooper has visited the Continental offices of A. P. since he became general manager.

NEW COMPANY FORMED FOR NEWSPRINT SALES

Montreal Firm Will Handle Output of Eleven Mills With a Total Capacity of 5,000 Tons a Day

The Canadian Newsprint Company, Ltd., with head offices in Montreal, has been formed as a selling agency to handle the output of eleven Canadian newsprint mills.

The directors of the new company will be George Chahoon, Jr., Sir Herbert S. Holt, George H. Mead, Alexander Smith, John H. Price, J. H. Gundy, G. H. Montgomery, Frank W. Clarke and W. N. Hurlbut.

The officials of the company will consist of W. N. Hurlbut, president; E. L. Crooker, vice-president; T. T. Walkers, vice-president; Frank B. Common, secretary. It is expected that the new company will commence operations immediately.

H. P. B. Wilson, vice-president of Spanish River, who has been located at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, has taken up permanent residence in Montreal and will in the future devote himself to the activities of the newly formed merger of Canadian newsprint selling agencies. It is understood that Mr. Wilson will continue as a director of Spanish River, but is to occupy an important executive position in the newly formed Canadian Newsprint Company, Ltd.

The new company, which has a capitalization of $5,000,000 preferred stock and 10,000 common shares of no par value, has arranged to acquire the G. H. Mead Company, the Canadian Export Paper Company and the St. Maurice Sales Company, Ltd.

Through these subsidiary companies the Canadian Newsprint Company will have for sale a daily output of approximately 5,000 tons of newsprint paper, being the combined production of the following Canadian mills: Laurentide Company, Ltd.; Price Brothers & Co., Ltd.; Port Alfred Pulp and Paper Corporation; St. Maurice Valley Corporation; Canada Paper Company; Ste. Anne Paper Company, Ltd.; Spanish River Pulp and Paper Mills, Ltd.; Fort William Paper Company, Ltd.; Ability Power and Paper Company, Ltd.; Manitoba Paper Company, Ltd., and the Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Company, Ltd.

The aim of the new sales company will be the energetic broadening of the market for Canadian newsprint through the development of overseas business. Through the merger of the above selling organizations it is felt that three factors will materially contribute toward more economical distribution, namely, the lowering of selling costs due to the elimination of duplication in selling effort, the saving in freight by shipping from the mill best favored by geographical location and the better service to publishers with quick and assured deliveries.

The new company will handle the production of mills well located with reference to the American market.

CITY NEWS ELECTS FORD

Managing Editor of New York Telegram Elected President

Andrew W. Ford, managing editor of New York Telegram was elected president of the New York City News Association Wednesday, succeeding Osmund Phillips, city editor of the New York Times.

Other officers chosen for the ensuing year were:—William P. Beazell, New York World, vice-president; Howard E. Sands, secretary; William G. Henderson, treasurer-manager. The new executive committee is composed of Vincent G. Byers, Evening Post; Endicott G. Rich, Herald Tribune; William E. McKernon, Associated Press; Edwin B. Wilson, Brooklyn Eagle, and Osmund Phillips, New York Times.

"NEWSPAPER" DEFINED BY FLORIDA COURT

Papers Carrying Court News Not Newspapers and Disqualified from Printing Legal Ads by Ruling

TAMPA, Fla., May 18.—The Florida Supreme Court has defined a "newspaper" in the sense of the statutory requirement that legal notices be published in a "newspaper of general circulation." The decision holds that papers published merely for the purpose of chronicling court news and printing legal advertisements, with circulation limited to a few persons specially interested in court records, is not a newspaper as required by the statute and, therefore, legal advertisements printed in such papers do not constitute legal notice by publication.

Copies of the decision were received in Tampa yesterday. The case came before the court on a mandamus proceeding, brought by the Miami Daily Record, to compel Circuit Judge Rose, of Dade county, to recognize the Record as a newspaper for the publication of legal notices.

The decision, by Justice Terrell, concurred in by Justices Ellis, Strum, Whitfield and Buford, says:

"Construing the term newspaper as used in our constructive service statute in the light of foregoing facts, we think it must have reference to some publication appearing at daily or weekly intervals, representing the news or happenings of local or foreign interest, or both, such as social, religious, political, moral, business, professional, editorial and other kindred subjects intended for the information of the general public.

"It would not only be unjust, but it would be contrary to the letter and spirit of law to recognize as a newspaper those publications designed for the benefit of any one class of the whole population, and that class a negligible percentage of the entire public."

The court finds that the Miami Daily Record has a circulation of less than 350, "that it is devoted to the particular purpose of disseminating information with reference to transactions in the courts of Dade county, property advertisements, directories of the court, current papers filed in the court house, and that the said Daily Record is published obviously for one class of people, which class comprises a small part of the entire population." It therefore holds that, "reporting little or no news in which the general public would be interested," the Daily Record "is not a newspaper in contemplation of our constructive service statute."

Tampa attorneys expressed the opinion yesterday that the decision applies equally to papers of this character printed in other cities. Two papers of this kind are published in Tampa. Attorneys say that unless the decision of the court is modified, it affects the validity of all legal notices heretofore printed in these papers. With limited circulation, this class of paper has been used largely for advertisement of divorce proceedings which the litigants desired to conceal from general public knowledge.

BOSTON GOLFERS ELECT

Daniel J. McGuiness of Boston Globe Heads Newspaper Group

Daniel J. McGuiness, of the Boston Globe, was elected president of the Newspapermen's Golf Association of Boston at the annual meeting held May 10 at the North Shore Golf and Tennis Club, Salem. Other officers elected were: first vice-president, Nick Flatley, Boston American; second vice-president, A. Linde Fowler, Boston Transcript; third vice-president, William E. Mullins, Boston Herald; secretary, Thomas B. Forsyth; treasurer, Henry T. Claus.

Members of the association were the guests of A. S. Brown, Jr., at luncheon at the club, after which the first golf tournament of the season was held.

Low advertising costs and high returns—

Sounds like the millennium, but in the Detroit market use of The Detroit News accomplishes this fact.

THE problem of sales and advertising managers is no different from that of the purchasing agent. Cost must be weighed against results and the medium that produces the most adequate returns at lowest per unit cost is the medium that should come first on your list.

In the Detroit market—a favorite one among sales and advertising executives because of its marked prosperity and buying power—you have one newspaper that thoroughly covers the local trading territory and covers it at one of the lowest milline rates available among metropolitan newspapers.

And The Detroit News consistently has been proven the most effective sales producer of all media in this field for any product depending on home reading for results. The Detroit News has on file letters from food producers, specialty manufacturers, sales agencies, advertising agencies and mail order houses congratulating it on the low cost results obtained from its advertising columns. Its great lineage record of 1926 when it again led the world in advertising is more evidence of its effectiveness. Employ The News to bring you results at low cost and to cover the Detroit market impressively and thoroughly.

The Detroit News has the greatest circulation in Michigan both weekdays and Sundays. During the six months, ending April 1st, The News made Detroit's greatest circulation gains.

The Detroit News

360,000 Sunday Circulation The HOME newspaper 330,000 Weekday Circulation

PARIS WRITERS DEFEND INTERPRETIVE TREATMENT OF FOREIGN NEWS

Correspondents Must Explain Meaning of Events to Readers They Agree, Opposing Stand Taken by New York World Editorial

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

THE New York World editorial attempting to show the dangers of interpretive dispatches from China, reprinted in Editor & Publisher recently, has caused the veteran special correspondents of Paris, men who have covered for various metropolitan papers, world happenings of as serious portent as the present disturbances in China, to spring to the defense of their fellows.

They take instant exception to the attitude of the World editorial writer that the public must be warned against "sensational interpretations of events in China" and agree that it is the duty of the special correspondent to interpret and explain the news for the benefit of the readers of his paper.

They are supported in this contention by Laurence Hills, managing director of the New York Herald of Paris, whose interpretive dispatches to the Sun first attracted attention in connection with the meeting of the League of Nations Council at Geneva in 1919.

Wilbur Forrest, Paris correspondent for the Herald Tribune, who covered the Western front during the World War for that paper and earlier for a news agency, maintains that the special correspondent's task is largely interpretive and charges that the writer of the editorial "interprets the interpretations from China by ignoring the bulk of avowedly good ones and emphasizing the few which have not exactly pleased him."

Edwin James, head of the New York Times European bureau cites the case of an apparently favorable vote in the French Chamber of Deputies which, in reality may be nothing of the sort but have special significance because of the "abstention" of hundreds of Deputies, to support his contention that unless a special correspondent goes behind the news to explain its relation to and bearing on events, he falls short of his proper function.

"The readers of an American paper," Mr. James said, "have had neither the time nor the opportunity to study a situation which may arise in a foreign country. They must depend upon the special correspondent to tell them not only what is happening but what it means.

"There has never been any objection to the interpretive dispatches sent out by political correspondents in Washington to their papers all over the country and the duty of the special foreign correspondent to explain the events he witnesses should no more be questioned."

Henry Wales, Paris correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, believes that the portion of the China dispatch quoted in the World editorial goes beyond the function of a special correspondent but he also believes that it is an isolated case and cannot be used as a basis for argument.

"The line between interpretation and editorializing is not very clearly drawn," Mr. Wales continued, "but unless the special correspondent makes an honest effort to explain what he is writing about there is little reason for his existence."

Mr. Hills thinks that the writer of the editorial fails to distinguish between purely local news and the type of news handled by the special correspondent. He cites the dispatches sent to the old Dana Sun by H. R. Chamberlain and calls attention to the development of the special correspondent's work during the process of international readjustments since the World War.

Mr. Forrest, from years of experience as a special correspondent both at home and abroad, is more specific. "I think the writer of the editorial quoted in Editor & Publisher goes considerably out of his way to condemn interpretive news from special correspondents," he says.

"As I understand the function of the special correspondent, it is to be assigned to remote posts such as China, because of his knowledge and ability to analyze and interpret situations as they arise for readers of his newspaper.

"The reader is certainly interested in 'what does it all mean.' The press associations tell what it is. The special correspondent is only duplicating the agencies and is not doing his duty if he fails to tell both what it is and what it means.

"It becomes extremely easy for the comic columnist to sit in an easy chair in some large city and make quips out of the country exchanges. It is just as easy for an editorial writer in New York to sit back and interpret interpretations from China by ignoring the bulk of the avowedly good ones and emphasizing the few which have not exactly pleased him.

"If a special correspondent believes the Chinese are harming themselves by fighting one another, that is evidently an honest opinion which he is willing to express under his signature. He is on the spot, he evidently has reasons to believe it and the fact that he says so is not twaddle just because one individual sitting quietly in Park Row disagrees with him.

"If the correspondent is wrong and consistently so, his employer will not continue to employ him. Thus by virtue of a natural process of elimination, special correspondents, sent on long and expensive assignments, are not usually such incompetents as the writer of the editorial would apparently ask the public to believe.

"Moreover, the powers that be in Washington have duly qualified diplomatic representatives in China to interpret the news for them. They will hardly send an expeditionary force to China even if bidden to do so by a whole squad of special correspondents. But I must maintain that the special correspondent's task is interpretive."

JAPANESE NEWSPAPERS FIGHTING CENSORSHIP

Opposing Drastic New Publication Bill Which Prohibits Many Types of Stories—Called "Thoughtless Legislation"

Leading newspapers and news agencies in Japan are energetically organizing for more effective protest against the new Publication Bill which provides for drastic powers of censorship of the press, according to an International News Service dispatch.

The bill prohibits:

1. Matters derogatory to the dignity of the Imperial Family.
2. Matters intended to revolutionize the national organization.
3. Matters intended to revolutionize the general frame of the political system under the Constitution illegally or to negate the system of private property.
4. Matters calculated to prejudice the interests of the Empire with reference to military or diplomatic secrets.
5. Matters purporting to instigate or shield crimes, praise or sympathize with criminals in regard to criminal facts or praise or sympathize with or incriminate persons accused or suspected of crimes.
6. False or exaggerated paragraphs calculated to cause social unrest or to have serious effects on the maintenance of order.
7. Matters immoral, obscene, cruel, or otherwise calculated to prejudice good morals.

Representatives from leading Japanese newspapers and news agencies at a recent meeting passed a resolution characterizing the bill as "a most thoughtless piece of legislation which is not only anachronistic but calculated to put undue pressure on the organs of public opinion."

PLAN WHITMAN MEMORIAL

A number of prominent people of Brooklyn, N. Y., are proposing to have a memorial erected in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, to Walt Whitman, "the Good Gray Poet," made famous by "Leaves of Grass" which he began while working on the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, and the type for which he helped to set in a Brooklyn job printing office.

NEWSPAPER CLUB DINNER

Irvin S. Cobb, Robert H. Davis, Heywood Broun, Hendrick Van Loon, John McGraw and Rogers Hornsby were among the speakers at a dinner given at the Newspaper Club on Thursday night, to Denis Tilden Lynch, newly elected president, and William P. Beazell, retiring president. The speeches were broadcast over station WJZ.

Largest Newspaper West of Chicago

500,000 Copies DAILY

The KANSAS CITY STAR

OMAHA WORLD-HERALD

THE FIRST COMPLETE MONTH WITH BUT TWO NEWSPAPERS IN OMAHA—MARCH 1927

ADVERTISING SUMMARY (FIGURES IN LINES)

	World-Herald	Bee-News
Local Display	605,150	412,104
National Display	195,972	98,098
Automotive	58,842	29,204
Classified	200,872	74,564
Total Clean Paid Advertising	1,060,836	613,970
Medical	None	65,996
Total Paid Advertising	1,060,836	679,966

63.3%

Of the total clean paid advertising appearing in the Omaha Newspapers in March, 1927, was published by the World-Herald

NOTE:— During the major portion of the month the local advertising rates of the Bee-News were the same as the former old rates of the Bee alone.

THE OMAHA WORLD-HERALD

Circulation, March, 1927, 114,900 DAILY—117,920 SUNDAY

uses Certified Dry Mats

Certified Stereotyping is Simplified Stereotyping

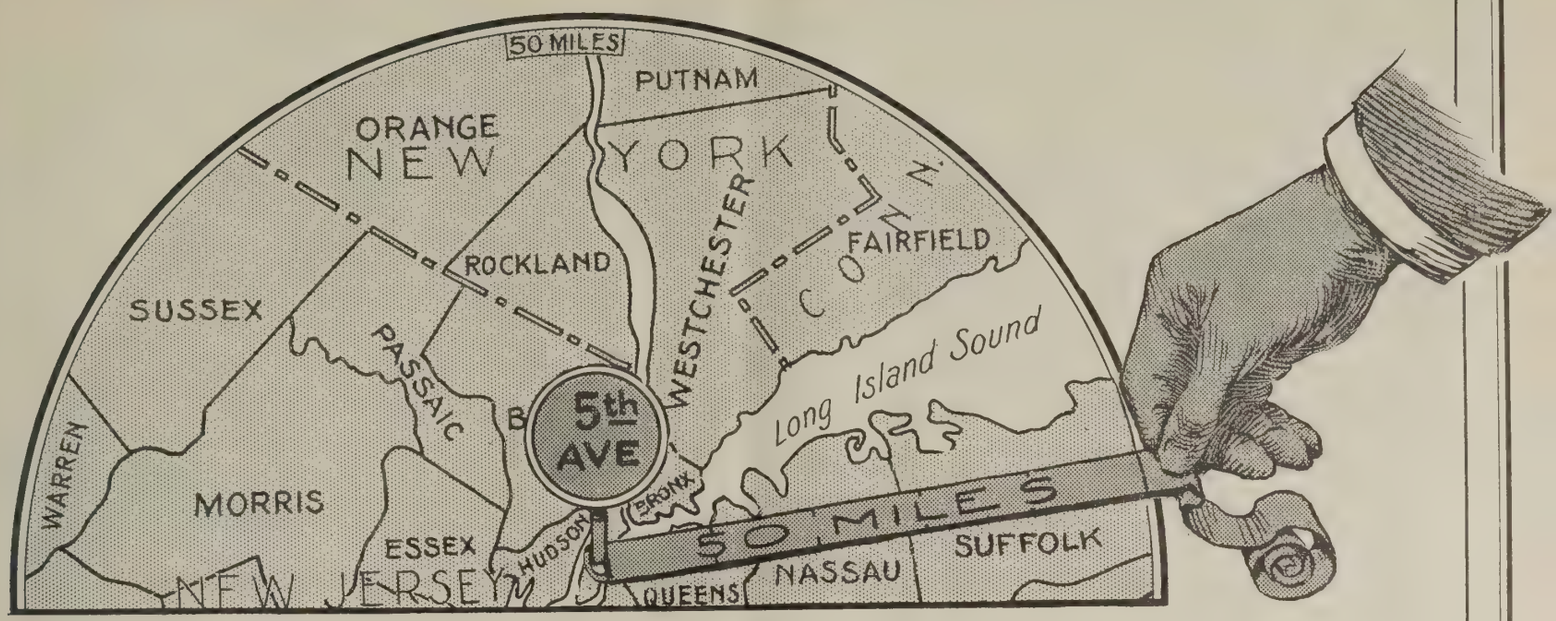
CERTIFIED DRY MAT CORPORATION

340 Madison Avenue New York, N.Y.

For wet mat printing with DRY MAT facility — use CERTIFIEDS

MADE IN U.S.A.

MADE IN CERTIFIED DRY MATS THE U.S.A.



WHITE FIRE

The Love Story of a Staid, Middle-Aged Lawyer Whirled into the Colorful Theatrical Life of New York.

"I believe you will be interested in learning that our current daily serial, WHITE FIRE, is, with possibly one or two exceptions, attracting more favorable attention than anything in the fiction line we have run in years—and for eight years we've never put an edition to press without an installment of fiction."—Dayton Daily News.

LEDGER SYNDICATE

INDEPENDENCE SQUARE PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Within 50 Miles of Fifth Avenue—

it costs less per thousand copies to reach high quality readers through the advertising columns of The New York Times than through any other New York morning newspaper.

Advertisers in The Times reach a greater number of readers of high quality in the New York market than through any other newspaper, morning or evening.

The Times has a greater sale in the New York market daily than the total sale of any other newspaper of quality circulation.

Average daily net paid sale 370,000 copies.
Sundays greatly in excess of 650,000.

All advertising subject to censorship.

The New York Times.

MESSAGE FLASHED FROM COLUMBIA, MO., CIRCLES GLOBE IN EIGHT MINUTES

New Speed Record Established by United Press Say Wire Officials—Stunt Staged for Editors Attending Journalism Week Banquet—Ships at Sea Report

WHAT is believed to be a new communications speed record was set at the University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo., Friday night, May 13, when a United Press message was sent around the world and back to its point of origin in eight minutes. Another message was sent around South America and back in seven minutes.

The speed demonstrations were staged at the annual Journalism Week banquet, attended by more than 400 editors and students. In addition to the two foregoing stunts, the U. P. put those assembled at the banquet in contact with more than 100 ships at sea.

The demonstrations were made directly from the banquet hall, with two United Press leased wires operating into the room, connecting the diners with the New York news room of the United Press and with the Radio Corporation of America, which cooperated in the ships' reports feature of the program.

Dean Walter Williams of the School of Journalism presided. The United Press was represented by President Karl A. Bickel, by James I. Miller, vice-president and South American manager, and by Ralph H. Turner, assistant general news manager, who earlier in the day had been elected president of the Alumni Association of the University of Missouri School of Journalism.

The first announcement by Dean Williams, a few minutes after the diners were seated, was that the United Press would send a cablegram around South America against time, in a demonstration of rapid news communication. At 7:14 p. m. the following message was handed to United Press Operator Joseph Frayne:

"Unipress Around South America greets Missouri. (signed) Turner."

Over the United Press wire to New York the message sped, and in New York a relay operator of the All America Cables was awaiting it. The message was flashed to Lima, thence to Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro by All America Cables, and from Rio back to New York by Western Union, and then over United Press wires again to Columbia.

At 7:21 p. m., while Dean Williams was still speaking in explanation of the demonstration, the cablegram arrived back in the banquet hall, bearing the signatures, besides that of Turner, of Easterling in New York, Riley in Lima, Haas in Buenos Aires, Rodgers in Rio de Janeiro and Jones in New York. The All America Cables reported that the transmission time from New York to Lima was 30 seconds.

Immediately afterward the around-the-world message was dispatched over the leased wire. It was flashed from New York to London by Commercial Cable, and in London was transferred to the Great Northern Telegraph Company for transmission over the trans-Siberian telegraph route to Vladivostok and Shanghai, thence by Pacific Commercial cables to San Francisco, and by United Press wires from San Francisco via Denver to New York and back again to Columbia.

This message read: "Unipress around world greets Missouri."

In just eight minutes the globe-circling cablegram was back in the banquet hall bearing the signatures of Wilson, New York; Keen, London; Gould, Shanghai; Marshall, San Francisco; Funkhouser, Denver; and Parry, New York.

There is no known record of a message circling the globe in such a short time as eight minutes, and the United Press demonstration is generally regarded among cable men and news service officials as establishing a record.

"Visible relays" had been set up at all the cable and telegraph relay points to facilitate the handling of the message. At each station where the message had to pass through human hands, when the receiving operator started to copy it, a sending operator started immediately sending the message on to the next station, reading it over the shoulder of the receiver.

The around-the-world message left Columbia at 7:25 p. m., and was back from its long trip at 7:33 p. m. It arrived in Shanghai, cable companies reported, at 9:30 a. m. Saturday. Thus the message actually passed from Friday night into Saturday and back into Friday night again.

With their dessert the diners were treated to reports from ships at sea.

At 8:42 p. m. Operator Frayne dispatched a message for radio transmission to ships at sea, asking each to report its position in miles from New York or San Francisco for the benefit of the editors at the meeting. The message was sent directly to the marine room of the Radio Corporation of America in New York, and from there relayed to wireless stations at Chatham and Tuckerton on the Atlantic coast and Bolinas, Cal., on the Pacific. Radio operators at those points were awaiting the message, and within a few minutes ship reports began rolling into the banquet room in Columbia.

The steamer Conte Rosso, 1,440 miles east of New York was first to report. The Leviathan, the Aquitania, the Orbita and scores of smaller ships reported their positions within a few minutes. The Broad Arrow, 3,816 miles west of San Francisco was probably the farthest-distant ship "spoken" in this demonstration. Within 20 minutes more than 100 such reports had been received by the Radio Corporation. Of these more than 40 were read to the assembled diners by Dean Williams.

The United Press night banquet was held in Columbia's Knights of Columbus hall, and was attended by approximately 600 people.

In his address to the Missouri editors, President Karl A. Bickel of the United Press complimented the University of Missouri school of Journalism upon the character of its graduates.

"Missouri men," he said, "are to be found throughout our entire organization. Missouri men have made good with the United Press. A man who comes to us with the 'O. K.' of the University of Missouri comes on the basis of a preferred applicant. We know that he comes to us with an imbedded ideal of work and service, and that is a very great asset indeed."

In reviewing briefly the history of the United Press, Bickel said:

"We are a young organization. We are going to stay young. We know full well the value of the shining ideals and the fresh and unburnt enthusiasm of youth, soundly trained and solidly developed."

TABLOID IN DULUTH

Examiner, Weekly, Will Be Delivered Free First Two Months

The Duluth Examiner, a weekly tabloid, was launched Friday, by the Examiner Company headed by Harry Cohen, former news editor of the Duluth News Tribune.

The paper will "tell the news in pictures" according to Mr. Cohen, and will average 16 pages. He declares the venture has the support of the local stores.

The paper will be delivered free by carriers to every home in Duluth for a period of two months, the publisher said. Subscriptions will be solicited during that period.

WINS LIBEL VERDICT

Jury Awards $500 to Insurance Man in $15,000 Action Against Daily

A verdict for Frederick S. Coates of Worcester for $500 against the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram for libel was returned May 18 by a jury in superior civil court before Judge Donahue.

The plaintiff had sued for $15,000, charging that the Telegram wrote a letter to his employers, the North American Accident Insurance Company in which he was libeled. The insurance company was furnishing policies for subscription campaign work and difficulties arose over the delivery of certain policies and the collection of money.

In a $15,000 suit against Edward D. Dolhenty, circulation manager of the Telegram, the jury found for the defendant.

SUPREMACY IN building circulation!

A SUBSTANTIAL, bona-fide increase of thousands in circulation—all NEW subscriptions, all PREPAID, and all secured within ten weeks' time, will solve a publisher's most pressing problem ninety per cent of the time. Increased circulation, increased linage, increased revenue! The HOLLISTER CIRCULATION ORGANIZATION has clearly proven itself the world's greatest and most efficient circulation builder, with successful campaigns on such newspapers as The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, The Memphis Commercial Appeal, and many others to attest its supremacy. Until June 1, address care THE CHICAGO HERALD & EXAMINER.

HOLLISTER'S Circulation Organization

Home Ad.: 717-8 Commercial Exch. Bldg., Los Angeles

FOR PROMPT SERVICE

TYPE

BORDERS ~ ORNAMENTS ~ BRASS RULE

Printers' Supplies

KELLY PRESSES ~ KLYMAX FEEDERS ~ PAPER CUTTERS
HAMILTON WOOD AND STEEL EQUIPMENT, INCLUDING OUR AMERICAN CUT-COST EQUIPMENT

Carried in stock for prompt shipment at the following Selling Houses of the

American Type Founders Company

BOSTON, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE, RICHMOND, ATLANTA, BUFFALO, PITTSBURGH, CLEVELAND, DETROIT, CHICAGO, CINCINNATI, ST. LOUIS, MILWAUKEE, MINNEAPOLIS, KANSAS CITY, DES MOINES, DENVER, LOS ANGELES, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, SPOKANE, WINNIPEG

4

Dry Mat Experts

constantly comb the country making WOOD DRY MAT installations and rendering, gratis, assistance to our old customers.

This dependable service and our prompt shipments make it safe and easy to go to WOOD DRY MATS.

Wood Flong Corporation

Stillwater, New York

NUMBER SEVEN OF A SERIES

THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Getting Away from an "Empty Custom"

Of the host of newspapers published today, only a few are known and bought for their editorial columns. The editorial page, once a revered institution, has dwindled in importance until, in the opinion of one authority, it is very often maintained as an "empty custom."

The blame cannot be laid upon the editorials, for we are not without our Greeleys, Godkins and Danas. The change has come about in readers. We have developed into a race of headline-scanners, and take time to read only those paragraphs whose heads tell us that below is something of definite interest.

This fact is recognized by The Distinguished Newspaper. Accordingly it dresses its editorial page in a fashion to attract the modern reader, a fashion in distinct contrast to that employed by its contemporary, the ordinary newspaper.

The editorial pages of the two are visualized on the following spread, that of The Distinguished Newspaper pre-eminent in appearance and certain of attention—qualities it has taken unto itself through the adoption of Linotype Typography.

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE CO., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

LINOTYPED IN THE GARAMOND SERIES

319.38

THE ORDINARY NEWSPAPER

PUBLISHED EVERY AFTERNOON, EXCEPT SUNDAY, BY

THE ORDINARY PUBLISHING COMPANY

OFFICE, 100 MAIN STREET, ANYWHERE, U. S. A.

The masthead may be considered in the same light as a business card. It can leave a favorable impression, or, as is likely with a masthead like this, leave no impression at all.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

DAILY, per year	$6.00
DAILY, per month	.50

BY MAIL, OUTSIDE OF SMITH COUNTY

DAILY, per year	$7.00
DAILY, per month	.60

APRIL 1, 1927

WHY EDITORIALS ARE NOT READ

Grant Milnor Hyde, in his authoritative work, "Newspaper Editing," says, "The old-time American newspaper featured its editorials and gave them at least a page. Now, however, editorials have generally lost much of their prestige and in many papers are being maintained as an empty custom." To be sure, our day sees few occasions for such editorials as Greeley's masterpiece, "The Prayer of Twenty Millions." In many ways these times are not as stirring as some that have gone before; there are not the crises that urged on and distinguished the efforts of the editors who loom in history. Nevertheless, every circling of the clock's hands sees the writing and the publishing of any number of well-written, powerful editorials. Good editorials are more numerous than ever. The real difficulty lies in the comparative scarcity of editorial readers. Mr. Hyde, in supporting his indictment of the present-day press, employs a sentence which gives at once both the reason and the remedy for the current situation. He points out that "as the editorial page has shrunk into a column or two, it has become a problem of make-up." Editorials are not read because, in the rush to display news heads and advertising, the editorial page has been overlooked; because it is too broken up and its contents either over-displayed or under-displayed and hard to read. In short, editorials are not read because so many editorial pages look like this one.

HOW WIDE IS A COLUMN?

Here is another poser to be classed along with those familiar queries about Ann's age and the chicken that crossed the road. The width of a news column is determined with comparative ease. Precedent, born of practical usage, gives the news column a measurement ranging from twelve to thirteen picas, but the span of an editorial column is not so readily set. It is generally conceded that editorials should be set wider than news. At the same time it is impossible to say arbitrarily that they should not be set double-width or that they should be set to some measure between single and double column. The factor to finally decide the point is the size of the type to be employed in their composition. A safe rule is the use of a type whose point size is over half the pica width of the column; or again, that the pica width of the column should be not more than twice the point size of the type. Thus this eight point type makes difficult reading because it is set twenty-five and a half picas wide, rather than because it is eight point type. Set in a column sixteen picas, or less, in width, this face would be considerably more legible. Applying the rule to the column width, twenty-five and one-half picas, indicates that the use of a twelve point face, or larger, is essential to readability. The question, "How wide is a column?" may be answerd by another—"How large is the type it will carry?"

Editorial paragraphs can be deprived of their interest if they are set in small type on a wide line.

Particularly if they do not reach across the column.

A POEM FOR TODAY

Poetry is not difficult to set if some thought Is given to its arrangement in connection with the space it will occupy.
It should be composed in a thoroughly legible type
On a line that is not too wide in relation to the type size.

Next in importance is the question of leading,
For poetry, which depends upon the line for its measured effects,
Should be easily read in the manner intended,
And not made difficult to read as is the case with these two stanzas.

—Anonymous—

Our City Day by Day

Again we turn to Grant Milnor Hyde's valuable book, "Newspaper Editing." There, in a discussion of editorial pages, he has this to say:

"Very often the page deteriorates into a dead wood section which is devoted to space fillers, and no one is expected to read it. The development of features that make it as interesting as the rest of the paper is an indication of great enterprise. Certain newspapers have demonstrated that careful make-up and some consideration for content will make their editorial pages very valuable features."

It is apparent that the author ranks make-up as more important than content in its contribution toward the improvement of the editorial page. This point of view in no way detracts from the importance of the page's content. Instead, it emphasizes the value of good typography and pleasing arrangement. No matter how trenchant an editorial, nor how interesting a feature, its effect is entirely lost if it is not presented to the reader in inviting fashion, if it does not appeal to him as being easy to read and worth the reading.

The newspaper that fails to make its editorial page as attractive as possible not only loses its investment in the features it carries. It invites classification as an ordinary newspaper.

Daily Editorial

THE SALT OF THE EARTH

By Dr. John Doe

If a newspaper has a mission in this world, it must be one thing—it must be read. The day of boiler plate and filler is pretty well past. In its place has come a time when circulation is gained only through service, and advertising is gained only through circulation to satisfied readers. Competition has brought about a "buyer's market," where the successful traders are those publishers who get their papers read.

The situation necessarily demands a consideration of the public's reading habits, and even a cursory investigation will disclose the fact that the average reader, so called, is a casual reader rather than a thoughtful one. The man who will wade through an unattractive newspaper is growing more rare each day. He has given way to the headline reader, the man who determines from a glance at an item's heading, whether or not he will delve into the matter that follows. This is a circumstance which elevates the heading to high importance. If the heading is attractive, he will read it, and if it is interesting, he will read on. If the heading is unattractive, he is not likely to read it at all.

The headings on this page are candidates for the latter class. Most of them are in caps and hard to read. Those over the editorials fail to stand out from the body matter as they should; the others provide a rude contrast, a boldness likely to be offensive. The boxes set around them can scarcely be termed decorative or attractive. Certainly they contribute little to the page but blackness and, if anything, render it more difficult to read than ever.

This page, as a whole, can hardly be called pleasing. The wide, unbroken editorial column and the black feature heads and advertisement, give the effect of a page divided in two. This situation shows the result of careless make-up and what is likely to happen when the make-up man considers the editorial page as so much space to be filled, no matter how.

READERS' LETTERS

Sir:

A letter from a reader is evidence that he is sufficiently interested in a paper or its viewpoint, to take the time to comment upon its policy or content. An interest thus awakened is lost if the letter is used as a filler and stuck in some corner only because the make-up man finds a gap in the column. Undoubtedly others are interested in the same subject, and if properly handled, these letters can be developed into a feature as valuable as any other on the editorial page.

A Constant Reader.

ADVERTISEMENTS

DO NOT BELONG ON THE EDITORIAL PAGE

The columns of the editorial page should be reserved for an intimate contact between the editor and his readers. Advertising on the editorial page reacts against such a contact and decreases the page's appeal. Advertisements on the editorial page characterize

THE ORDINARY NEWSPAPER

THE Distinguished Newspaper

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY, except Sunday, by The Distinguished Newspaper, Inc., from its office at 100 Newspaper Square, Anywhere, U. S. A.

THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER employs a masthead that gives all essential information, set in a readable style in keeping with the balance of the editorial page. It leaves a favorable, lasting impression.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES are as follows: By the year, $6.00; by the month, 50 cents. By mail, outside of Smith County, Per year, $7.00, per month, 60 cents.

FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1927

Emancipating the Editorial

Consider the editorial. In its initial element it one man's idea, a vague chimera. Built into ords the idea becomes intelligible to other men, nd acquires an incalculable power, for ideas are ne mainspring of all mankind.

Unfortunately, however, the average editorial a Hercules in irons, a great force fettered by a ck of readers. Only when it is read does the litorial attain toward its potential strength.

"Of the requirements that an editorial should be seen, read, believed and acted upon, the first nd second are, to a great extent, matters of typography." Thus Leon Nelson Flint, in his book, The Editorial," phrases the realization that uides THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER in its fort to permit its editorials the achievement of eir full power. On this page the phrase is transted into practice. The result is a telling exposion of typography and make-up aiding in the nancipation of the editorial.

When the Type Fits the Column

IN THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER, the type ze and column width go hand in hand. But ree columns bloom where four bloomed before, is true, though what appears to be a loss is in ality a gain. The re-arrangement permits the e of a larger, more legible type, and gives it a ne length of suitable proportion. The combinaon is a happy one, for, by the simple expedient making reading easier, it makes more readers.

The Typography of This Page

The masthead above is set in fourteen and thirty- point Narciss and eight point Garamond; the itorials in ten point Garamond on an eleven int body. The same face is used for the poetry, hile feature text is composed in seven point nic No. 5 on a nine point body. Boxed heads e in thirty point Garamond with the exception "A Daily Editorial," set in twenty-four and ghteen point Garamond. The italic headings are twelve to eighteen point Garamond.

The editorial paragraph takes on added forcelness when set in type of this size in a column this width.

Even the very short sentence can hold its own.

Along Highway and Byway

Grant Milnor Hyde is a handy authority. His book, "Newspaper Editing," is replete with sidelights of the reader, views that may be had from the editorial desk.

For instance, there is Mr. Hyde's comment upon the habits of the modern reader and the efforts of the up-to-date newspaper to conform to them. He says, "Ease of reading has become so important that 'Easy to Read' has already appeared as a newspaper slogan. All but the most conservative of journals have accepted the idea that their pages must be easy to read. In making this decision they acknowledge that they are catering to the casual reader rather than the thoughtful reader. They are admitting that the man who will wade through an unattractive newspaper is fast becoming extinct. Some of them are forgetting this rare creature entirely and catering to the casual reader; others are trying to reach both.

"When the latter ideal prevails it is not a matter of news, but a matter of type and display, a matter of putting the words in the most attractive, legible form."

Needless to say, "the latter ideal" is prominent among the policies of THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER. While its contemporary, The Ordinary Newspaper, has appealed to the thoughtful reader with a gray, monotonous make-up, or, again, to the casual reader in black, screaming heads, THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER has steered a middle course, knowing that from there it could reach the readers of both types and thus enlarge its power, its service and its profits.

The policy of "putting words in the most attractive legible form" is applied to the editorial page with particular vigor. The publishers of THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER realize the opportunity the editorial page gives them to reach the reader — casual or thoughtful — on both his plane and their own, appreciate the fact that while the features may interest him, he is capable of being moved by the editorials.

It is for this reason that the editorial heads are displayed, and the editorials themselves are set in larger type. It accounts for the leading of the feature copy, and the displayed heads over it. Above all, it explains the care taken to see that all of these were made up into an attractive, pleasing page — a page to appeal to all classes of readers and to please them.

And in the last analysis, it is the readers who make THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER. Their interest builds circulation, and a circulation among interested, satisfied readers increases the desirability of the publication as an advertising medium. Thus the whole welfare of the paper devolves upon the reader, an excellent reason for making reading easy.

Today's Poetry

The Whirring Presses

Contrast the form in which these lines are set
With that upon the opposite page and see how much
Is gained by using just a little larger type size,
And putting ample space between the lines as well.

Even when the lines are long, and each one turns,
A deep indention helps the reading of the poem
And adds to its appearance in the column, too,
Which makes a little effort with it well worth while.

—ANONYMOUS

Readers' Views

Heading the Reader's Letter

To the Distinguished Newspaper:

There is abundant reason for heading each letter from a reader in the same fashion that an editorial or any other feature is headed. In the first place it impresses the person who wrote it and leaves him kindly disposed toward the paper for its seeming attachment of importance to his words. Then again the plan takes into consideration the habits of readers, and presents the subject of the letter in a few words, so that they may read it or not, as they wish.

Communications from readers are usually kindred to the topics of the day, and because of this, have a wide general interest. The Distinguished Newspaper capitalizes the possibilities of the letters when it treats them as a readable and valuable feature.

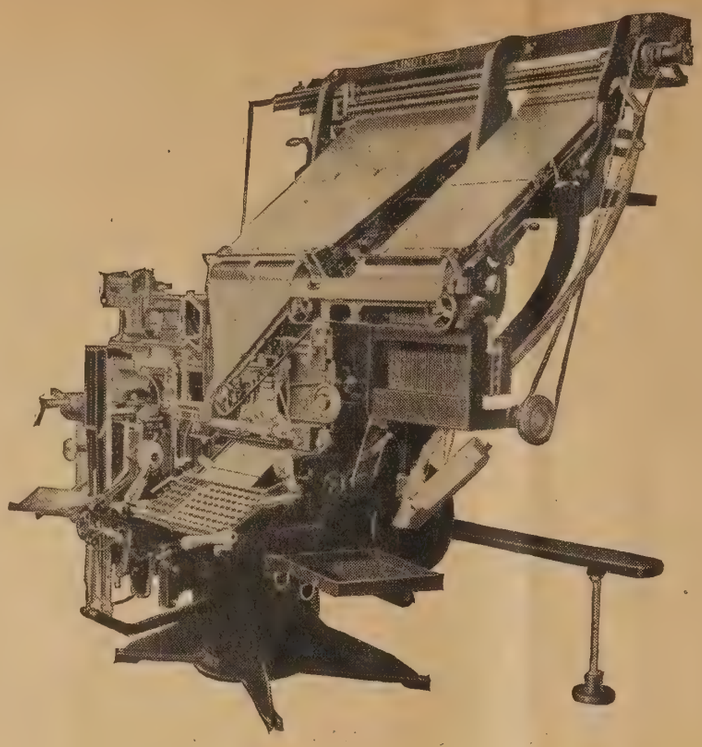
A CONSTANT READER,

Anywhere, U.S.A., March 31, 1927

A Daily Editorial
By Dr. John Doe

The Salt of the Earth

Comparisons may not always be odious, as the adage would have it, but there are times when they are quite unnecessary. The feature headings on this page offer an example.



To say they are different would be very similar to saying, "There is the sun." It would be pointing out the obvious. However, a consideration of the advantages gained by THE DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPER in the use of these heads should not be out of place.

First is the matter of uniformity of style. This is maintained not only because it enables the reader to immediately distinguish the features, but because of mechanical economies which follow its adoption.

In selecting the type to be used, legibility was the first consideration, and after that attention was given to the tone or "color" of the face to avoid either over-boldness or weakness. When the selection advanced to the point of choosing type sizes, care was taken to prevent spottiness, at the same time allowance was being made for word lengths.

The question of color and insurance against spottiness were also factors in the selection of the border enclosing the feature heads. The danger of over-ornamentation was obviated by the choice of a comparatively simple border harmonizing with the tone of the type.

All feature headings, it will be noticed, are so composed as to be usable from day to day. Where the feature title is subject to change, the title is carried in a single line outside the box, a plan which makes for economical composition, speedy make-up, and attractive appearance.

When Attractive Typography Shows Two Profits

The increased attractiveness of The Distinguished Newspaper does not involve a greatly increased expense when it is set the Linotype way. To the contrary, attention-getting faces on Linotype matrices and rapid, easily made-up Linotype composition effect a considerable saving over ordinary, inefficient production methods.

Applied to the editorial page, these economies make possible the conversion of what may be an "empty custom" into a valuable, circulation-building feature. Employed thus, Linotype methods become doubly profitable for the publisher adopting them.

The Garamond Series

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

36 Point (36△93)

Along high

30 Point (30△165)

Along highwa

30 Point Italic (30△167)

Along highwa

24 Point (24△227)

Along highway a

24 Point Italic (24△229)

Along highway a

18 Point (18△265)

Along highway and by

18 Point Italic (18△269)

Along highway and by

14 Point (14△156)

Along highway and byway

Along highway and byway

12 Point (12△278)

Along highway and byway wit

Along highway and byway wit

10 Point (10△304)

Along highway and byway with repo

Along highway and byway with repo

8 Point (8△372)

Along highway and byway with reporter and c

Along highway and byway with reporter and c

6 Point (6△274)

Along highway and byway with reporter and cameram

Along highway and byway with reporter and cameram

Swash Characters

A B C D E G L M N
P R T Y &

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

MONTH'S NEWSPAPER SALES INVOLVE MILLIONS

(Continued from page 3)

'eres, B. L. Mallory and Capt. Fauntle-oy.

The new owners assumed charge of the roperty at once. Their new company has 50,000 shares of no par value common tock, and 60,000 shares of 7 per cent umulative preferred stock valued at $100 er share, of which 20,000 shares have een issued. The company is also issuing 2,500,000 in 15-year sinking fund gold ebenture bonds, bearing 6½ per cent in-erest. These bonds were sold at whole-ale last week at 97 and were put on the etail market Monday at 100 and interest. t is understood the issue was oversub-cribed when offered to underwriters.

Mr. Caldwell, who has been directing he financing, at 37 years of age, is one of he leading capitalists of the South. Within recent months he has purchased he Missouri Life Insurance Company, vith assets of $70,000,000; the Inter-Southern Company of Louisville, the Cot-on States Company of Memphis and the Southern Surety Company, of Des Moines. The investment income of these companies is estimated at between $2,500,-000 and $3,000,000 a month.

Mr. Caldwell's financial genius was well demonstrated in the Commercial-Appeal purchase. He gave the stockholders $700 a share, a total of $4,200,000, less the real estate, which was appraised at $587,337. The total purchase price was therefore $3,612,663. The sale of $2,500,000 worth of bonds at $2,425,000 brought down the cash needed to complete the transaction to $1,187,663. If the 20,000 shares of 7 per cent preferred stock are sold to under-writers at as low as 95, their proceeds will total $1,900,000, which will wipe out the purchase price and leave $712,337 to be added to the $822,551.64 surplus the new company acquired from the Commer-cial Publishing Company. By his plan, Mr. Caldwell and his associates purchase the two papers with money received from the sale of bonds and preferred stock, and can control the company by purchasing at a nominal sum the no par value common stock.

The present home of the Commercial Appeal and Evening Appeal will be leased for two years from the old stockholders. In the meantime the new company is expected to erect a larger plant on Front street, which will provide railroad track-age that the paper now lacks.

In the contract of sale, it was specified that the new owners shall pay Walker Hays, business manager of the Commer-cial Appeal for many years, a salary of $500 a month during his lifetime. Hays retired recently after devoting much of his life to building up the paper.

Much of the newspaper's greatness was due to the administrative, organizing and editorial genius of the late C. P. J. Mooney, its managing editor for more than 20 years at the time of his death. He took control of the paper shortly after the merger of the old Avalanche and Ap-peal as the Morning Commercial Appeal and developed it steadily until it stood in the front rank of Southern newspapers in circulation, and among national leaders in reputation and advertising patronage.

Mr. Mooney died of apoplexy a few months ago, the stroke being attributed to the overwork and strain of launching the new Evening Appeal after the Memphis Press and Memphis News-Scimitar were consolidated by Scripps-Howard. His work was immediately assumed by his lieutenants and associates, Capt. Faunt-leroy taking charge of the Commercial Appeal and George Morris, who had been appointed by Mr. Mooney just before the end, directed the organization of the new evening edition.

The papers will be represented in the National field by the John M. Branham Company, New York and Chicago.

Sale of the Springfield (Mo.) Leader was announced May 13 by H. S. Jewell, for 32 years its owner and publisher. The purchaser was Stuart Olivier of Balti-more, who will have associated with him as resident general manager of the property, Gilbert N. Gunderson. The price was not disclosed, but is understood to be in the neighborhood of $750,000. Ownership of the Leader building is re-tained by Mr. Jewell.

The Leader has a circulation of more than 25,000 and holds the unusual record of being delivered into more than 13,000 of the 13,404 homes in the city. Its out-side circulation in the Ozark section of the state about equals the city circulation, It is an evening paper with a Sunday morning edition.

Mr. Olivier announced that positively no changes were contemplated in any de-partment of the paper. R. L. Kennedy will continue as editor, F. M. Sullivan as managing editor and Paul Page as city editor. No changes will be made in typog-raphy or general make-up of the paper, except for the addition of new features from time to time.

Mr. Olivier for more than 15 years was general manager of the Baltimore News and later was associated with the late Frank A. Munsey in the management of the New York Sun and New York Telegram. He is regarded as a conserva-tive newspaper manager.

Mr. Gunderson began his newspaper career in Montana, later moving to St. Paul and Minneapolis. He joined Mr. Olivier in Baltimore in 1920 and later was associated with him in New York. About a year ago Mr. Gunderson purchased the Pekin (Ill.) Times, disposing of it recent-ly in order to rejoin Mr. Olivier at Springfield.

Negotiations for the sale of the Spring-field paper were conducted by Harwell & Cannon, of New York.

After 40 years of association with the Canton Repository, for 20 years of which he has been president, publisher and principal owner, George B. Frease re-tired May 18 from active management. Stock control of the paper was consoli-dated with the Brush-Moore newspapers owned by Louis H. Brush of Salem, William M. Vodrey of East Liverpool and Roy D. Moore of Marion. Stock-holders of the Repository acquire a sub-stantial interest in the Brush-Moore Company. Mr. Frease is president and general manager of the Frease Realty Company.

The transaction was consummated af-ter Mr. Frease and his associates had made a comprehensive and careful study of the policies, character and manage-ment of the Brush-Moore newspaper properties, which include the Marion Star, formerly owned by the late Presi-dent Harding; Salem News, East Liver-pool Review-Tribune, and Steubenville Herald-Star. No consideration was made public.

General headquarters of the publishing company will be located in Canton and Mr. Moore, who becomes general man-ager of the Repository and the allied newspapers, will make his home there. Mr. Brush is president of the Brush-Moore Company, Mr. Vodrey is secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Frease will be-come a member of the board of directors. No changes in policy or organization are contemplated.

Mr. Frease took over the management of the Repository in 1893, several years after the paper had been incorporated by President William McKinley as ad-ministrator of the estate of Thomas W. Saxton.

Palmer DeWitt & Palmer, of New York, assisted in the negotiations.

Frank E. Gannett of Rochester, N. Y., president of the Gannett group of news-papers, in association with Frederick H. Keefe, general manager of the New-burgh (N. Y.) News, this week pur-chased the Beacon (N. Y.) Herald.

This newspaper was founded about 20 years ago by George F. Donohue of Beacon. He died about 10 years ago and the paper since had been managed by his widow. Mrs. Donohue is an invalid and confined to her home.

The price mentioned in unconfirmed reports is $40,000.

Roy D. Moore and Louis H. Brush add Canton Repository to their prosperous and growing Ohio group

FIGURES IN WEEK'S NEWSPAPER SALES

F. E. Gannett

F. H. Keefe

Stuart Olivier

G. N. Gunderson

I. C. M. A. LISTS BEST ROUTES TO ATLANTA

Annual Convention of Circulation Managers Scheduled for June 21-23 and Timetables Are Studied by Transportation Committee

Various routes available for eastern delegates expecting to attend the annual convention of the International Circula-tion Managers Association in Atlanta, June 21-23, were announced this week by James McKernan, member of the trans-portation committee as follows:

On the railroad leaving from New York, delegates have the choice of the Southern Railway System and the Sea-board Air Line. On the Southern Rail-way System, the Cresent Limited leaves the Pennsylvania Station, New York, at 7:40 P. M. Daylight Saving Time, the distance to be made in about 23 hours. An extra fare of $4.00 is charged on this train in addition to the regular fare which is $31.11, lower berth on Pullman $9.75.

There is also another train on this system, leaving New York at 4:40 P. M. daylight saving time arriving at Atlanta at 3:55 P. M., on which no extra fare is charged. The one way rate to At-lanta, $31.11 plus Pullman, $9.75, mak-ing a total rate one way $40.86.

Those members who travel by this or any other railway system should notify the agent when buying their tickets that they are attending the I. C. M. A. Con-vention and ask for a certificate, and if they return by the same road they will be granted one half rate on the certificate plan. This also applies to reservations from all points. This would make the rate returning $15.56 instead of $31.11. On the round trip rate $46.67 instead of $62.22. Those who intend to travel on this route should make their reserva-tions at once, address P. A. Schumpert, 152 West 42nd street, New York.

On the Seaboard Air Line a train leaves the Pennsylvania Station at 12:10 noon, daylight saving time, arriving in Atlanta at 4:10 the next afternoon. There is another train leaving at 12:30 mid-night arriving in Atlanta at 6:40 A. M. the second morning. The fare one way is $31.11, lower berth $9.75. The re-duced rate on the certificate plan is also available on this road. Those who de-sire to use this road should notify J. J. Hassett, passenger agent, 142 West 42nd street, New York, at once.

On the Savannah Steamship Line boat leaves Pier 52, North River, New York, at 3 P. M. daylight saving time, Friday, June 17, arriving in Savannah at 6 A. M., Monday, June 20. The train leaving Savannah for Atlanta at 7:40 A. M. arrives in Atlanta at 3:35 P. M. First class one way fare on the boat from New York to Atlanta is $32.79. This includes meals and stateroom accommodations aboard ship when at sea.

Passenger and baggage transfer at Savannah, also train transportation be-tween Savannah and Atlanta with the ex-ception of the Pullman accommodations is $1.80 for seat in Parlor car.

If you intend going by boat write J. M. Egan, Pier 50, North River, New York, at once for reservations. The rate on the boat from New York to At-lanta is $32.79, from Boston to Atlanta $39.06.

VERO BEACH MERGER

The Vero Beach (Fla.) Daily Press was recently taken over by the Vero Beach Journal, and consolidated with that paper as the Press-Journal, a twice-a-week publication. J. F. Schumann is ed-itor of the combined papers and J. J. Schumann business manager.

TABLOID SECTIONS DROPPED

The tabloid style of Sunday magazine section has been abandoned by the news-papers affiliated with the News League, owned by former Gov. James M. Cox, of Ohio, the new type magazine section con-forming in size with the remainder of the paper.

KEY TO CONSUMER BUYING ABILITY

Statistical Rating of Counties and Cities for Products of General Appeal, Graded in Six Major Classes of Quality and Cost—An Original, Simplified and Tested Formula from Basic Data

Copyright 1927, by Editor & Publisher Company. All rights are reserved and warning is given that reproduction of these results, in whole or in part, without written permission of Editor & Publisher Company, will constitute copyright infringement.

By NELSON H. SEUBERT

ONE of the most difficult problems as well as one of the most debated subjects that a manufacturer or distributor has to contend with is that of Buying Power for his class of products in various territories. When he has checked off every element that seems to affect this or that territory, his salesmen will give him a dozen more which he hasn't taken into consideration. Again he may be using one of the general indexes of buying power as a guide to the market for his product (let us say laundry soap), and he finds his neighbor manufacturer is also using this same index as a guide to the buying power for expensive period furniture. One of them is obviously wrong. Maybe both.

But when all the elements which have been frequently used in constructing indexes to buying power have been named over—manufactured wealth; farm values; number of retail outlets, etc.—two basic elements stand out as of prime consideration. They are population and income. Given the human animal in great enough density in a certain community with money above the average, and you have a buying power in that community which must be reckoned with for a large number of products.

A study of these two elements properly related will give a close approximation of the potential worth or buying power of any community for products of mass appeal.

Certain products common to the needs or desires of practically all human beings and within the humblest means already flow very evenly over the country practically paralleling the percentage distribution of population. Other products, because they are very much in the desires of everyone, would have a similar even flow to all territories if everybody were equally prosperous.

However, people and money are not distributed evenly or anything like it. In some communities even though the people may be plentiful, the lack of education, lack of transportation, the lazy climate, may express itself in low income and while such a community might be an average one for the consumption of low priced necessities (the common wants of everyone), it would not be worth much as a market for fancy priced luxuries.

How then can these two known prime elements be related to give at least a working outline for the various classes of buying power of communities?

An arbitrary weighting which checks fairly accurately is given to the various classes as follows: In Class I, the class for cheap necessities and bulk staples, percentage distribution of population counts 90 per cent and percentage distribution of income 10 per cent because no matter how much of a necessity an article may be, the money available for buying will have an influence and should be set over against the population figures. For brevity's sake "percentage of population distribution" will hereafter be referred to as "Population" and "percentage of income distribution" as "Income." In the same way quality, high priced luxuries and non-staples of mass appeal should come somewhere near following the figures under Class V because that is a weighting

(Continued on page 26)

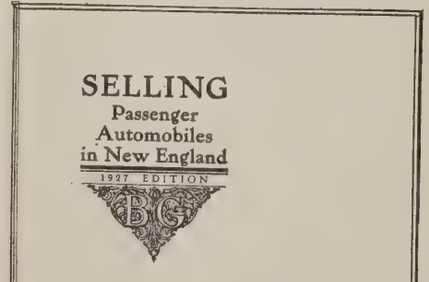
HOW TO USE THIS CHART

THE first step is to determine as accurately as possible which of the six classifications best fits your product. The figures under this class in the chart are the only ones that you use. When this is determined, comparison can be made between the buying power of any city or trading area and your sales or advertising circulation by the following method:

Take your sales figures or your advertising circulation figures of the particular city or trading area under consideration. Translate these figures into a percentage of your total figures for the United States. Carry these figures out four places beyond the decimal point (i.e. If your sales are about 2 per cent, you might have an actual figure something like this, 1.9837 per cent).

The next step is to point off four places in the buying power index which then becomes a percentage of the total buying power of the United States. You now have two comparable percentages. A comparison of these two percentages will immediately show you whether you are placing enough sales or advertising effort on that city or trading area. Any group of cities, counties or trading areas can be compared by merely adding together the figures of the various cities or counties that make up the area or group. Then follow a similar process as outlined above.



Every Advertising Agency—Every Sales and Advertising Manager should have in his files ready for reference Mr. Seubert's analysis of buying power in Massachusetts

Before planning a campaign in the Boston Market they should also have the two booklets reproduced below, which contain extremely valuable information concerning this territory.

"The Individual Home" contains—besides an indexed map of Boston's 30-mile radius (A.B.C. "City & Suburban" district) the following data on each of the 152 cities and towns in this district: area in square miles, 1925 population, number of families, number of assessed dwellings, number of residential electric meters, 1925 per capita valuation, number of passenger autos both with and without Fords, number of automobiles (excluding Fords) per 100 families, Globe's circulation daily and Sunday. The number of families living in private houses, 2-family houses, flats and apartments is also given for 18 sections of Municipal Boston and for 40 suburban divisions within a 10-mile radius.

"Selling Passenger Automobiles in New England" contains the 30-mile map, also a map of New England showing 15 major trading zones, and the sale of new cars in New England in 1926 in each county in four different price classes.

In each book the 152 cities and towns within 30 miles of Boston are grouped into three classifications, upper, middle and lower, according to the number of dwellings per 100 families and the number of automobiles per 100 families.

Seldom have market statistics been compiled in a more readable and accessible form. If these booklets are not now in your files, extra copies will gladly be sent. Address Dept. of Market Analysis.

The Globe's strength in the more substantial communities is reflected in the fact that, without special inducements, rate concessions or similar methods of swelling lineage, the Globe has carried the largest total volume of advertising of any Boston paper for 33 consecutive years.

THE BOSTON GLOBE

Sells Boston's BUYING Group

The MERRIMACK MARKET

New England's Most Important Textile Center

LAWRENCE
EAGLE-TRIBUNE

LOWELL
COURIER-CITIZEN & LEADER

You can cover one of the richest and most important textile centers in the New England States, comprising the Lawrence and Lowell, Massachusetts, trading area, which include 22 cities and towns with a total population of nearly 400,000 inhabitants, all industrious citizens and workers, through the two leading papers, the LAWRENCE EAGLE-TRIBUNE and the LOWELL COURIER-CITIZEN & LEADER. These papers dominate this territory completely. They enter the homes of over 45,000 families. This concentrated area is easily reached and is an ideal territory for quick and thorough distribution.

FACTS

Population	333,896
Native White	210,756
Foreign	108,335
Number of Homes	70,877
Individual Income Tax Returns Federal	27,043
Savings Bank Accounts	237,373
Passenger Car Auto Registration	29,844
Retail Outlets	2,906

The above facts and more available on request

NATIONAL ADVERTISERS — Let us work with you to establish Consumer Buying Ability

HOW?
our Service surveys sales effort
+ yours

WHEN?
as soon as your sales organization is ready

WHERE? your office our office agency office or newspaper office
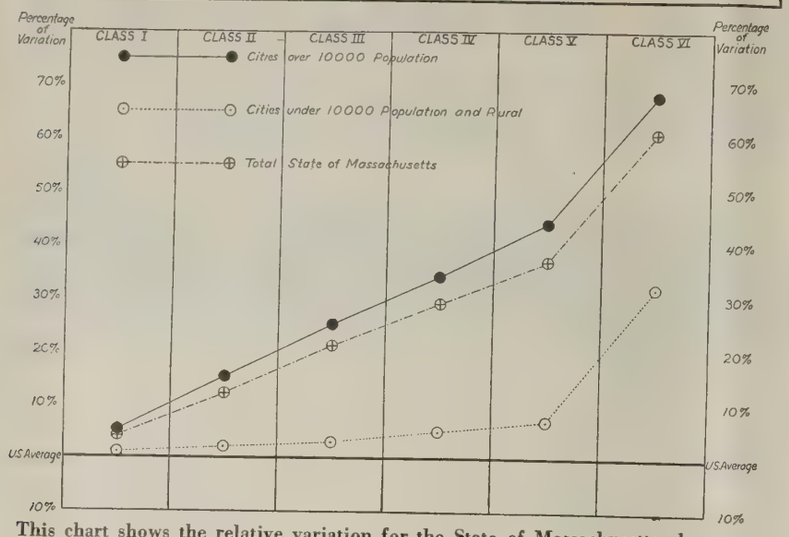
by appointment



Write us for surveys and service on this market

BRYANT, GRIFFITH & BRUNSON, Inc.

New York	Chicago	Atlanta	Boston
9 E. 41st St.	Bell Bldg.	Walton Bldg.	201 Devonshire St.

KEY TO CONSUMER BUYING ABILITY

(Continued from page 24)

This chart shows the relative variation for the State of Massachusetts above or below the United States average for cities of 10,000 or more population, cities of less than 10,000 and rural population and the entire State for each merchandising class.

VI is for the fancy priced exclusive luxuries of high unit value and the weighting is the same as Class V except that incomes of $10,000 and more were substituted for all incomes. The reason for this substitution is obvious.

Here then are the descriptions of the six classifications and their corresponding weighting of population and income.

Class I — Cheap necessities and bulk staples. Population 90 per cent. Number of incomes 10 per cent.

Class II — Moderate priced necessities and packaged staples. Population 70 per cent. Number of incomes 30 per cent.

Class III — Quality priced necessities and staples. Cheap luxuries and low priced non-staples. Population 50 per cent. Number of incomes 50 per cent.

Class IV — Fancy priced necessities and staples. Moderate priced luxuries and non-staples. Population 30 per cent. Number of incomes 70 per cent.

Class V — Quality priced luxuries and non-staples. Population 10 per cent. Number of incomes 90 per cent.

Class VI — Fancy priced exclusive luxuries of high unit value. Population 10 per cent. Number of incomes over $10,000 90 per cent.

The computation of the index numbers was done in the following manner:

The population of the United States is represented as 100 per cent (1925 estimates) the percentage of population in each State, County and City over 10,000 population was figured and carried out four places beyond the decimal point in order to have a figure for the smallest communities. The same process was followed with the "number of all income tax returns" (1924 returns) the total for the United States was represented as 100 per cent, or, carried out four places beyond the decimal point 100.0000 per cent. The same process was also followed with the "number of income tax returns over $10,000" (1924 returns) Boston for example shows:

.6858 per cent of the total United States population.

1.2290 per cent of the number of income tax returns in the United States.

1.4405 per cent of income tax returns over $10,000 in the United States.

In the weighing process for Class I (low priced necessities), we multiplied the percentage of population (.6858 per cent) by .90 and the percentage of all incomes (1.2290 per cent) by .10 and added the two results, making a figure of .7401 per cent for class I.

This figure then represents the percentage of the low priced necessity market of the United States that lives in Boston.

Class number two is computed as follows:

Percentage of population .....6858%x.70=.4801

Percentage of income tax returns .....1.2290%x.30=.3687

Percentage of moderate priced necessity market living in Boston .8488%

This same process is continued according to the schedule of weighting for the six classes.

Your resultant figure each time is in realty a percentage of that particular class market located in Boston. However, for the sake of simplicity the decimal points have been omitted, also the zeros to the left of the number have been dropped, and the resultant figure has been called an index number.

If the zeros and decimals were replaced Massachusetts would look like this:

	I %	II %	III %
Massachusetts	3.7968	4.0999	4.4029
Barnstable	.0249	.0223	.0197
Berkshire	.1065	.1063	.1061
Adams	.0114	.0103	.0093
North Adams	.0202	.0205	.0208
Pittsfield	.0429	.0462	.0495
Bristol	.3377	.3381	.3385

	IV %	V %	VI %
Massachusetts	4.7060	5.0090	5.8739
Barnstable	.0171	.0145	.0315
Berkshire	.1060	.1058	.1182
Adams	.0083	.0072	.0079
North Adams	.0211	.0214	.0239
Pittsfield	.0528	.0561	.0631
Bristol	.3389	.3393	.2939

The proportion of increase or decrease in these index numbers from Class I to Class VI will give a fairly accurate picture of how far above or below average the county or city is in middle or upper classes.

If the index number in class I is the largest number of the six classes the city can be roughly classed as a lower class city or county.

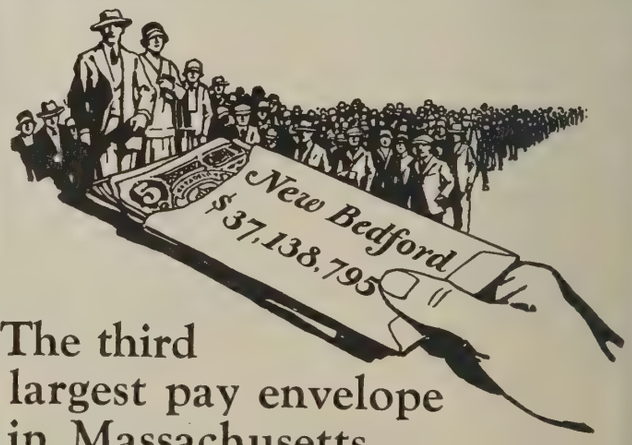
If Class V is the highest number the city or county can be classed as middle class.

But if the largest number is in Class VI then it should be classed as an upper class locality.

The above outline must be taken only in its most general terms but when a manufacturer has classified his product properly, the index figures in that class should be helpful as a guide or comparison with his last year's sales percentages or the percentage distribution of his advertising effort within the same territory.

Charts and Map of Massachusetts markets appear on page 28.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.



46,877 Population — 1925 State Census

Pittsfield's index of buying power starts at a high figure and goes steadily up through all the six classes of tax payers, which indicates that this city has a well paid buying population.

To prove that the merit of Pittsfield as a market has been appreciated before by national advertisers, it is added that the Berkshire Evening Eagle last year carried 1,300,000 lines of national advertising—secured without an advertising representative or any solicitation.

Berkshire Evening Eagle

18,287 Circulation—A. B. C. Report

The third largest pay envelope in Massachusetts

THE size of a man's pay envelope is the best indication of his buying power. The same thing applies to a market. In 1925 New Bedford's pay envelope held $37,138,795—the third largest payroll in Massachusetts.

There are markets with larger pay envelopes, but few where you can make a good volume of sales as cheaply and easily as in New Bedford. The people who receive this money read one newspaper, almost to a man. The Standard Mercury is read morning and evening in 97 out of every hundred homes in New Bedford. And the rate is only 10c a line. A couple of thousand dollars will do a good advertising job for you in New Bedford.

One newspaper wins this market

We'll be glad to give you more facts—or write to the Charles H. Eddy Co., our New York, Boston and Chicago representatives.

Member of the Associated Press

NEW BEDFORD
The 4th market in Massachusetts
Completely covered by the STANDARD MERCURY

An Actual Campaign in Two Newspapers in One City Produced a Profit Where Theory Said, "Use Only One":—

A prominent 4A Agency recently wrote to a newspaper publisher—"My client,....., had a rather interesting and instructive illustration in connection with his campaign in.....this past year. On account of a certain competitive situation, he expended in.....a sum for advertising several times as much per thousand population as in any other part of the world. He was willing to take a loss temporarily in order to establish his product in a predominant position.

"Much to his surprise, when he balanced his books he found that he had not over-advertised, but had actually made some money.

"This demonstration of the result of consciously over-advertising almost tempts him to double and triple his advertising everywhere."

Thus an old dog CAN learn new tricks.

Invest in Newspaper Advertising

E. Katz Special Advertising Agency

Established 1888

Publishers' Representatives

New York
Chicago
Detroit
Atlanta
Kansas City
San Francisco

BUYING POWER ANALYZED BY PRODUCT CLASSES FOR MASSACHUSETTS

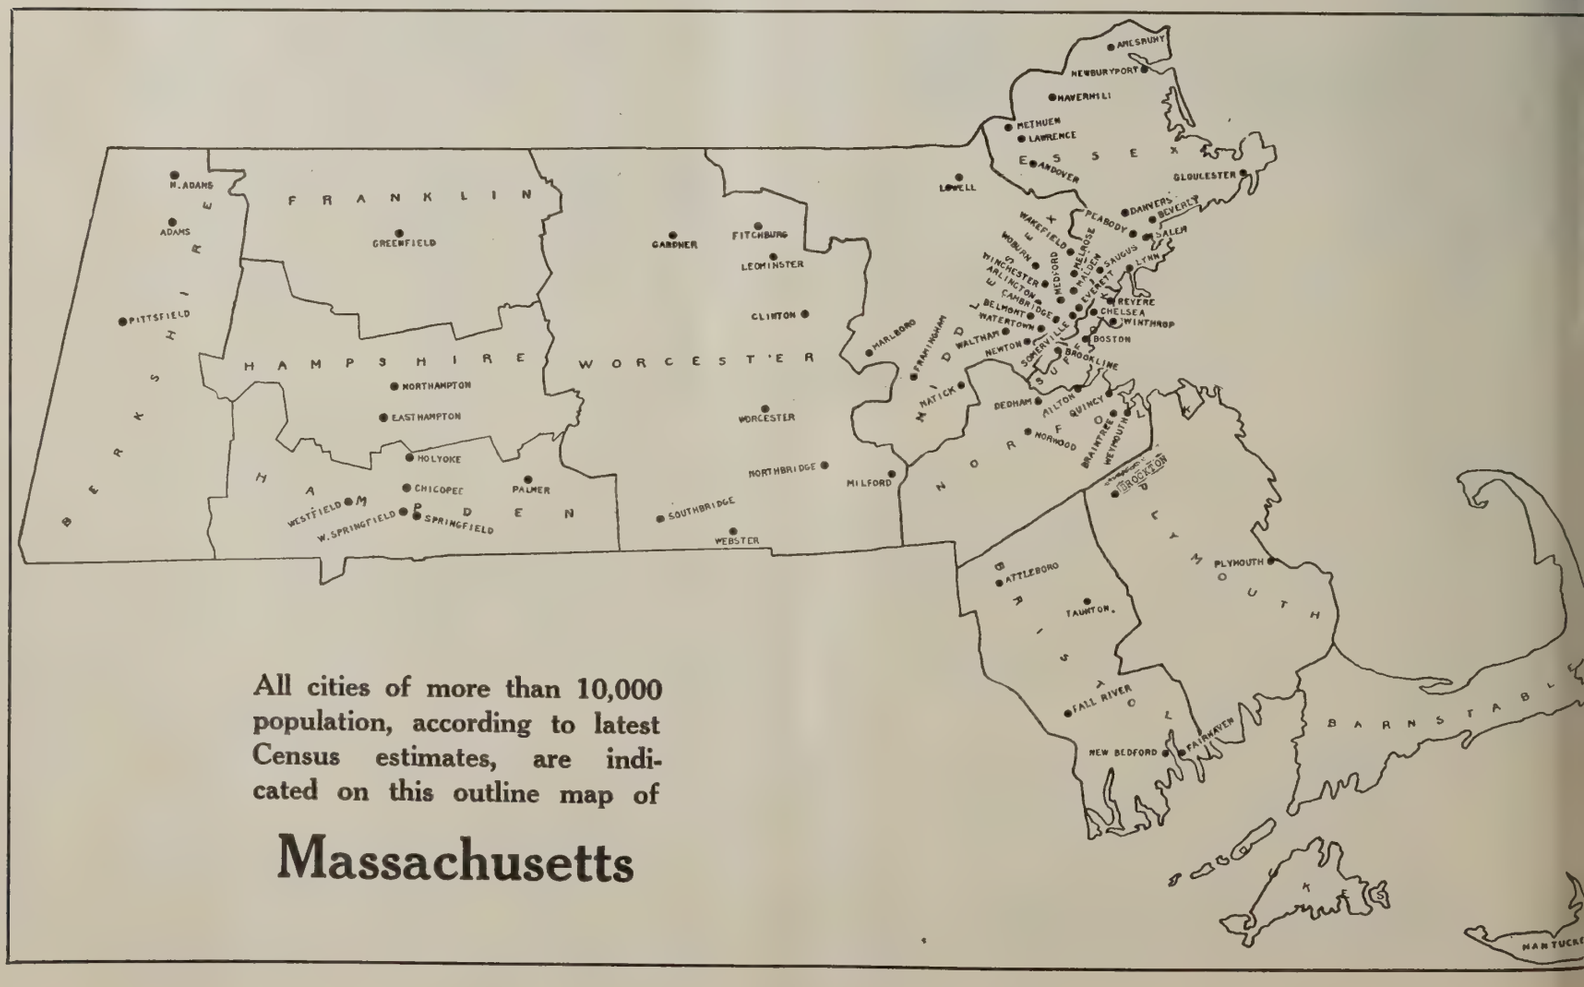
NOTE:—Figures below represent percentages of U. S. total carried out four places: To use mark off four places and insert decimal point

Counties in bold face capitals—Cities in capitals and lower case

	Cl. No. 1	Cl. No. 2	Cl. No. 3	Cl. No. 4	Cl. No. 5	Cl. No. 6
MASSACHUSETTS	37968	40999	44029	47060	50090	58739
BARNSTABLE	249	223	197	171	145	315
BERKSHIRE	1065	1063	1061	1060	1058	1182
Adams	114	103	93	83	72	79
North Adams	202	205	208	211	214	239
Pittsfield	429	462	495	528	561	631
BRISTOL	3377	3381	3385	3389	3393	2939
Attleboro	194	219	244	269	294	251
Fairhaven	93	89	86	82	78	70
Fall River	1111	1065	1020	974	928	805
New Bedford	1062	1083	1105	1126	1147	991
Taunton	339	327	316	304	292	253
DUKES	40	35	30	25	20	22
ESSEX	4537	4872	5207	5541	5876	5430
Amesbury	101	104	107	110	113	105
Andover	96	108	121	133	145	132
Beverly	212	237	262	287	312	288
Danvers	109	118	127	136	145	134
Gloucester	206	205	205	205	204	190
Haverhill	457	506	555	604	653	600
Lawrence	830	843	857	871	884	828
Lynn	973	1104	1236	1368	1499	1382
Methuen	181	181	182	182	182	170
Newburyport	141	150	158	166	175	165
Peabody	192	223	255	286	317	293
Salem	400	448	497	545	593	546
Saugus	105	92	78	64	51	46
FRANKLIN	437	439	441	443	445	326
Greenfield	147	173	199	225	251	179
HAMPDEN	2973	3165	3358	3550	3742	3431
Chicopee	363	354	345	335	326	301
Holyoke	550	589	627	665	704	646
Palmer	92	84	75	66	57	52
Springfield	1322	1469	1616	1763	1910	1749
Westfield	168	165	162	158	155	144
West Springfield	135	135	135	134	134	123
HAMPSHIRE	632	575	518	461	404	489
Easthampton	100	97	94	91	88	109
Northampton	195	160	126	91	56	64
MIDDLESEX	7917	8613	9308	10005	10700	14124
Arlington	236	269	302	335	368	480
Belmont	144	164	184	204	224	296
Cambridge	1097	1186	1274	1362	1451	1915
Everett	373	378	384	389	394	517
Framingham	190	201	212	223	234	308
Lowell	997	1050	1103	1156	1209	1589

Counties in bold face capitals—Cities in capitals and lower case

	Cl. No. 1	Cl. No. 2	Cl. No. 3	Cl. No. 4	Cl. No. 5	Cl. No.
Malden	468	494	520	546	572	7
Marlboro	146	151	157	162	167	2
Medford	440	481	523	565	606	8
Melrose	201	250	299	348	397	5
Natick	113	114	114	114	115	1
Newton	523	638	752	866	981	13
Somerville	935	1062	1189	1316	1443	19
Wakefield	139	142	146	149	152	2
Waltham	321	352	383	413	444	5
Watertown	207	173	139	104	70
Winchester	117	146	176	205	234	3
Woburn	170	186	203	219	235	3
NANTUCKET	27	26	25	24	23
NORFOLK	2473	2806	3139	3473	3806	92
Braintree	125	144	162	180	199	4
Brookline	474	671	868	1065	1262	31
Dedham	128	140	152	164	176	4
Milton	121	136	152	168	183	4
Norwood	119	108	98	88	77	1
Quincy	536	553	569	585	602	14
Weymouth	162	181	200	219	238	5
PLYMOUTH	1514	1652	1790	1927	2065	15
Brockton	629	738	846	954	1063	8
Plymouth	119	124	130	135	140	1
SUFFOLK	8279	9419	10558	11697	12837	149
Boston	7401	8488	9574	10660	11747	136
Chelsea	416	415	415	415	414	4
Revere	296	301	306	311	316	3
Winthrop	166	215	263	311	360	4
WORCESTER	4448	4730	5012	5294	5576	46
Clinton	125	125	125	124	124	1
Fitchburg	389	398	407	416	425	3
Gardner	164	163	162	161	160	1
Leominster	196	197	198	199	200	1
Milford	182	285	389	492	595	4
Northbridge	81	68	55	42	29
Southbridge	137	140	142	144	147	1
Webster	124	136	149	161	173	1
Worcester	1778	1978	2179	2379	2579	21



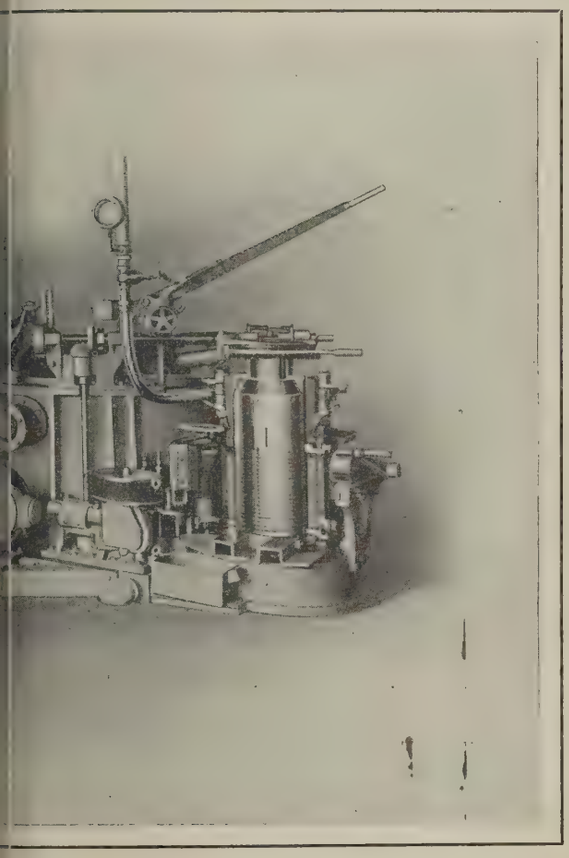
URBAN MARKETS OF MASSACHUSETTS ARE MUCH LARGER THAN THEIR POPULATION INDICATES

CITIES OVER 10,000 POPULATION, 2.9837

Cl. No. 1	Cl. No. 2	Cl. No. 3	Cl. No. 4	Cl. No. 5	Cl. No.
3.1304	3.4239	3.7187	4.0109	4.3044	5.002

CITIES UNDER 10,000 AND RURAL POPULATION, .6616

Cl. No. 1	Cl. No. 2	Cl. No. 3	Cl. No. 4	Cl. No. 5	Cl. No.
.6664	.6760	.6842	.6951	.7046	.871



All cities of more than 10,000 population, according to latest Census estimates, are indicated on this outline map of

Massachusetts

plate-Autoshaver Unit

Equipment of the World

uring long periods of hard work at high speeds l plates a minute

efruits of the experience ised it

Los Angeles Times
Louisville Courier-Journal
Memphis Press Scimitar
Miami Herald
Milwaukee Journal
Milwaukee Sentinel
Milwaukee Wisconsin News
Minneapolis Tribune
Minneapolis Journal
Montreal Herald
Montreal Presse
Montreal Star
Nashville Banner
Newark Evening News
New Orleans Daily States
New Orleans Item
New Orleans Times-Picayune
New York American
New York Bronx Home News
New York Daily Mirror
New York Daily News
New York Evening Post
New York Graphic
New York Herald Tribune
New York Sun
New York Telegram
New York Times
New York World
Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch
Omaha Tribune
Omaha World-Herald
Philadelphia Bulletin
Philadelphia Inquirer
Philadelphia Public Ledger
Philadelphia Record
Pittsburgh Gazette Times
Pittsburgh Press
Providence Journal
Richmond News-Leader
Rochester Times-Union
San Francisco Bulletin
San Francisco Call
San Francisco Chronicle
San Francisco Examiner
Seattle Star
Seattle Times
St. Louis Globe-Democrat
St. Louis Post-Dispatch
St. Louis Star
St. Paul Dispatch
St. Paul News
Springfield Union
Syracuse Herald
Toledo Blade
Toledo News Bee
Toronto Star
Toronto Telegram
Washington Post
Washington Star
Washington Times

ıcity must always depend the celerity of your tıway

NERY CORPORATION
YORK CITY

EDITORIAL

NEW WHITE HOUSE PROBLEMS

"IT'S his show and he makes the rules," writes Charles Michelson in New York World, commenting on the new press restriction at the White House which prohibits mention of a question asked by a correspondent to which no reply is made.

Mr. Michelson speaks as a correspondent who uncomplainingly accepts conditions as he finds them and does his job as best he can within the limitations. This attitude of independent dignity is one of the admirable characteristics of the Washington Correspondents' Corps. However, in the broader sense the show is a public show and the rules which govern it should be considerate of the general interest.

It is unquestionably the fact that in political news a negative reaction from a person interviewed may be as important public information as is a positive result. Mr. Michelson says that the net effect of the new rule is to make the White House press conference merely a vehicle for such publicity as suits the President's purpose, rather than a means of letting the public know his views on public matters. That may or may not be the fact, depending on how Mr. Coolidge performs. Further, that it is really a corollary to Mr. Coolidge's idea that newspapers should abstain from criticism of the Administration's conduct of foreign affairs. We shall see.

The White House Spokesman is dead, the President may not be directly quoted and questions which are unanswered shall be as if never asked. That is the situation today. It surely means that the correspondents must accept full responsibility for statements made upon White House information. This to us seems unnatural and unfair and not calculated to work out to the satisfaction of the Administration, the public or the correspondents. The natural, workable and wholly admirable system is the original Harding plan of talking man to man with the correspondents, answering questions that can be answered, discarding those which cannot or should not be answered, and standing or falling on what the ball fans call the "batting average." Yes, partisans will take advantage of such a system to misrepresent the Administration, but ultimately they shall but foul themselves. The average correspondent who faces the President of the United States at a conference is a gentleman and his purpose is faithfully to interpret the news. When he is accepted on that basis any President can bring himself and his works through the press very close to the minds and the hearts of all of the people who certainly need to be better informed on national questions. Something strenuous must soon be done to clear away the gathering fog of apathy in relation to the conduct of the national government. When the majority of citizens do not even vote, the time has come for action. If any President will give to the correspondents as much time and care as he gives to small groups of individuals he will rekindle the fires of public interest the nation over. It would be like a transfusion of new blood in the body politic. Incidentally, to our way of thinking, it would be magnificent politics.

E. W. Scripps was fond of quoting, "Oh, what a tangled web we weave, when first we practise to deceive."

OH, WHAT A FLOP!

DEWEY M. OWENS says in the current issue of the American Mercury that "ninety per cent" of the material issued by newspaper syndicates is the "veriest drivel" and proceeds to tear down almost every author and artist that has gained popularity in the American press. Mr. Owens apologetically remarks, at the conclusion of his article, that in the scope of his "modest" piece he finds it impossible to cover the whole syndicate field or make mention of "several worthwhile and valuable features which gleam like nuggets of gold amid the tons of dirt and trash." EDITOR & PUBLISHER readers will share our disappointment at this announcement. If Mr. Owens had just been willing to write only one more page of Mercury copy he might have given us at least an insight into what a good newspaper feature is. It would have been the generous thing for him to do. But he drops us flat and even admits: "I have no suggestions for uplifting the quality of syndicate stuff." Now, dammit, isn't that provoking!

Absalom said moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice!—II. Samuel, XV; 4.

A TOUGH ASSIGNMENT

REX COLLIER says that covering the Mississippi flood, spread as it is over more than half a dozen states, has taxed the nerves and endurance of newspaper men as has no story in recent years, and we can well believe it. Watching sporadic developments from Memphis to New Orleans has in itself been a grueling task. So far spread has been the theatre of news that the reporters have not been able to write many eye-witness accounts. However, this week Will Irwin telegraphed a thrilling piece about the collapse of a levee which he chanced to see, but he made clear the fact that it was but an incident of the amazing devastation that has kept the country in a ferment of excited fear for weeks. Most of the stories of rescues have necessarily been told on second-hand testimony.

Yet, so splendidly have the events been relayed to the public that newspaper readers of the world have an understanding of the tragedy that has befallen a large section of the people of a thriving district and generous indeed has been the response to the Red Cross call for aid.

Mr. Collier says that the duration of the flood presented to the reporters a pretty problem from the standpoint of vocabulary. After they had referred to the Mississippi as "mighty," "masterful," "muddy," "meandering," "turbulent," "raging," "angry," "cruel," "drunken," "relentless," "yellow" and "swirling" there didn't seem to be much left to be said. But we are of the belief that the reporters on that job will not run out of descriptive words and phrases so long as the ruthless, surly, menacing, reeling, snapping, snarling, biting, wrathful, violent, rioting, foaming, frothing, lashing, rampaging, frenzied, tameless and tumultuous waters rush headlong to the gulf.

When advertising campaigns are deliberately written with paid space for magazines and press agentry for newspapers, which every intelligent newspaper man knows is now being done, it is just a little withering to receive a letter from a newspaper editor asking us to be "fair to the press agent."

AN OFFENSIVE PICTURE

DURING the week in New York an eleven-year-old school girl was murdered by a degenerate on the roof of her tenement home. The parents are poor, inconspicuous folk. The savagery of the crime elicited deep public interest and sympathy.

When the child's body was borne to the grave, the miserable overwrought mother completely lost control of herself and wailed in agony, her arms stretched out appealingly, her mouth open, her cheeks drenched with tears. Newspaper photographers at the grave snapped this wretched woman and several newspapers published the agonizing picture.

It is not often that EDITOR & PUBLISHER feels itself called upon to criticize editors for expression, although we are frequently critical of acts of suppression, but we wish to contend that the publication of the picture of a mother wailing at her child's grave is an offense that deserves rebuke. The line of decency does not extend to the grave. The sacred right of privacy of an afflicted individual in such circumstances must be respected. No picture is worth the forfeit of self-respect that runs with such an exhibition of bad taste. Keep photographers out of grave-yards!

ADVERTISING ART

AMERICAN advertising art, as represented at th sixth annual exhibit of the Art Directors Clu of New York, is lively, healthy and entertai ing, but the ordinary mortal somehow has the feeli that this art has sometimes strayed so far from i purpose as to be ridiculous. The function of adverti ing art is salesmanship, not aesthetics. It is busine not mere dreaming.

We do not, by any means, intend to indict th whole show on these grounds. That would be unfa for some of the stuff shown there is first class every particular as advertising art. But when v found ourselves walking enraptured among paintin that, however beautiful, seemed to have not the r motest relation to the sale of merchandise, we cou not throw off the notion that we were treading fool's paradise.

For instance, a bread concern paid an artist to pai a voluptuous Autumn scene. The mind would clic of course, to an autumn scene that suggested t "staff of life," in the advertising relation, but th admirable picture was of some ancestral park wi well-groomed idle folk in the foreground and ta poplars to the rear. What's it all about?

We shall not further particularize this criticis Our notion is that a deal of very good money is bei wasted these days on merely "pretty pictures." Gra that they attract attention, does it follow by a process of logic that they attract attention that creat a demand for the advertised article? Much of th real art of advertising would disgust the aesthet By the same token the unrelated art of the aesthe disgusts us. It is out of place and violates the sen of advertising efficiency. Advertising art that n only attracts but displays the merchandise or sugges it in a manner that creates a genuine craving, is th only advertising art that merits reproduction. Pret pictures in their own place, real advertising pictur in theirs!

A national advertiser tells us that a well-known syndicate writer recently offered to "write up" his merchandise for $500 to "cover the cost of research." Respect for newspapers went down a peg in that advertiser's estimation. A syndicate has been imposed on and newspapers that built this greedy man's reputation and made him rich have been humiliated and abused. Dismal, isn't it?

WE SAY "WELL DONE"

NOTEWORTHY among recent contributions t the advertising space-buyer's insatiable deman for unbiased, thoroughly analyzed market in formation is the monumental book just issued by th newspapers composing "The Hundred Thousan Group of American Cities." This issue, entitled "A Study of All American Markets," is much mor ambitious than its predecessor, covering in its 600-od pages the details first of the 93 markets of peculia interest to the newspapers sponsoring the undertaking and then covering in similar detail, but without som accessory trimmings, every city and town of mor than 1,000 population in the United States.

This is not the place for a detailed review of thi achievement. It is enough to say that it reflects valu for every cent of the $150,000 which its authors re cently stated had been expended to obtain and presen the information. The typography is clear and read able, even in the most condensed tabulations and the maps combine accuracy and utility with a grace o execution that makes them pleasant to look upon. Even if the second edition has not yet attained the perfection that its authors desire—and the only sug gestion EDITOR & PUBLISHER would now make for future editions is the more definite characterization of the cities in the tables—it is by far the most com plete, accurate, and intelligently useful work ever undertaken by any single newspaper or group of news papers.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER, which in 1918 and 1919 pre sented the first market surveys ever made for daily newspaper interest, and made the first national market surveys, is glad to say of "A Study of All American Markets"—well done!

PERSONAL

GEORGE BOOTH, publisher of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette, sailed Sunday on the Scythia for Europe. He will visit England, France, Belgium, the Rhine and Italy.

Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, addressed the weekly meeting of the Pittsburgh Advertising Club in the William Penn Hotel on May 17. In the evening he was the principal speaker before the Engineers' Society of Western Pennsylvania.

William A. Reade, president of the Sudlow Typograph Company, sailed Saturday, May 14, on the Majestic for a two months' business trip in Europe.

Walter Lippmann, editor of the New York World, will deliver the baccalaureate address at the University of North Carolina's one hundred and thirty-third commencement on June 6, according to an announcement by President Harry W. Chase.

S. E. Thomason, former general manager of the Chicago Tribune, and now publisher of the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune, has opened up his Chicago office in Room 1115 Tribune Tower. It is reported that Mr. Thomason plans on spending the summer months in Chicago.

A. L. Shuman, vice-president and advertising manager of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram and Record, is sailing on the S. S. Transylvania on May 25.

Homer Gard, editor and publisher of the Hamilton (O.) Evening Journal, has been elected a director of the Rotary Club of that city.

Frank Gannett, publisher of the Elmira (N. Y.) Star-Gazette, gave a dinner for members of the School of Journalism of Syracuse University following completion of their day's work as temporary editors of that paper, May 13.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

WALT GOING, formerly automobile editor of the Cincinnati Post, has resigned to join the national advertising department of the Cincinnati Times-Star, and will handle automobile and radio accounts.

Elliott C. Hensel, for seven years merchandising counsel in Los Angeles, has been appointed advertising manager of the Los Angeles Illustrated Daily News, according to E. M. Boddy, publisher.

B. A. Brewster of the business office of the Brooklyn Eagle has resigned to go to California, where he will study the dried fruit industry, preparatory to entering into business with his brother, who is a broker in that line in Cleveland.

A complete planning and copy service has been added to the advertising department of the Long Beach (Cal.) Press-Telegram, with Jack Horner in charge of the service.

E. H. Wilder, formerly advertising manager of the Pueblo (Col.) Chieftain, has become advertising manager of the Stanford (Cal.) Journal.

Harold H. Scott, for the past eight years manager of the merchandising service department of the Los Angeles Examiner, has resigned to become sales and production manager for Larrinaga Bros. Studio, Los Angeles, decorators.

A. Weiss has been named to succeed him on the Examiner.

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOMS

ROY A. ROBERTS, head of the Washington bureau of the Kansas City Star, sailed recently for a trip abroad.

Richard Henry Little, conductor of the column, "A Line O'Type or Two" in The Chicago-Tribune, has returned from a vacation in Cuba.

Tom Freeman, special writer on the staff of the Cincinnati Post and at one time assistant city editor, has resigned to become assistant professor of English at the Chicago University.

W. J. Arnold, recently with the Lynchburg (Va.) News, has been made city editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, to succeed Robert M. McCormick, resigned. Mr. Arnold at one time was with the Norfolk (Va.) Virginia-Pilot and, before that, with the New York Sun for five years.

Allen Reagen has resigned from the New York World to join the staff of the New York Herald Tribune.

Arthur Chamberlain has returned to the staff of the New York World after working for some time on the New York Times.

Richard J. Farrell, head of the copy desk of the New York Evening World, is recovering from a severe illness at Bellevue Hospital, New York. It is expected he will be able to return to the newspaper about June 1.

Ralph Frye and John O'Donnell have left the New York American to join the staff of the New York Daily News.

Jack Young, former city editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, and more recently a member of the staff of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, has been made managing editor of the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald.

Edward Cushing, music editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, will spend the coming summer in Europe, visiting the musical centers.

Wendell W. Hanmer has resigned from the reportorial staff of the Brooklyn Eagle to do publicity work and free lancing.

Harry A. Kenny, formerly political reporter of the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune is back on the local staff again after a vacation of several months.

Vincent Ayres has joined the editorial staff of the Eureka (Cal.) Humboldt Standard. He formerly worked for the Marshfield (Ore.) Coos Bay Times.

William McDermott, dramatic editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, will sail May 20 for Europe on his annual summer vacation. He will go to Egypt before returning.

Arthur R. Curley, formerly with the Boston American and later with the Baltimore American, has joined the staff of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram.

Edward S. Beck, managing editor of the Chicago Tribune, accompanied by his wife, returned home Wednesday after a seven weeks' trip to Europe.

Ed. G. Pinkham, correspondent of the Kansas City Star, spent last week in and around Louisville and at the Kentucky Derby.

Parker E. Branin has succeeded Verne Ayres as city editor of the Pendleton (Ore.) East Oregonian.

William S. Forman, rewrite man on the Chicago Daily News, who returned last week after almost three weeks in the Mississippi flood area, spoke on the flood conditions, over WMAQ, the Daily News radio station, Tuesday, May 10.

J. Edmond DeCastro, of the Buffalo Evening News editorial staff, has been admitted to the New York Bar after taking a course in the University of Buffalo Law school.

Glen Perrins, of the editorial staff, Salt Lake City Deseret News, has left for a vacation on the Pacific Coast.

Joseph A. Fleitzer, after an absence of three months, has resumed his post as editor of the Bell (Cal.) Herald.

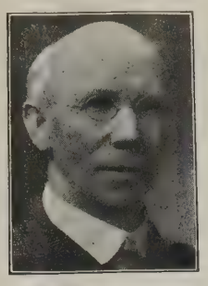
C. Walter McCarty, city editor and Paul Shideler, staff photographer of the Indianapolis News, are among the incorporators of the new White Lick Golf and Country Club. The incorporators have purchased 100 acres west of the city and will start development in 1928.

Theodore R. Hecker, police reporter, and Preston W. Grady, courthouse reporter, have resigned from the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union.

J. Raymond Adams, for many years connected with the Bank Director and the New York World has joined the staff of the American Banker.

MARRIED

JACQUELINE NICKELS of the circulation department of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, to H. G. Weagant of the art department.



Wallace Rushing, of the composing room, Eureka (Cal.) Humboldt Times, to Miss Marie Junell, also of Eureka.

Miss Emily J. Smith, for ten years business manager of the Wausau (Wis.) Record-Herald, to Frank A. Hermes, salesman for the C. I. Johnson Company, of St. Paul, Minn., in Wausau Saturday, May 21.

Randall Gould, manager of the Peking bureau of the United Press, to Miss Grace Cook of Rochester, N. Y., in Peking on Easter Sunday, April 17. Mrs. Gould worked for several months as reporter and book page editor on the China Press in Shanghai.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

AN experience of 32 years in the news rooms and a keen observation have taught J. S. Wilhelm a number of essentials for putting out a good newspaper. Wilhelm is managing editor and editorial writer of the Canton (O.) Repository.

J. S. WILHELM

His platform of newspaper essentials includes the following points:

To give the news — all the news that's fit to print — all the time, without fear or favor.

To tell the truth and make your paper so reliable that readers will swear by it.

To make it fit for the home circle.

To make it a home necessity.

To beware of "lopsidedness" and give the paper proper balance.

To remember that readers want advertising, as well as news, in readable and attractive form.

Wilhelm takes considerable satisfaction in his record of service and hard work with the the Repository. It is a record of 32 years of unbroken service as a member of the news staff of one paper.

He joined the Repository in 1895 as a reporter. Shortly afterwards he got into the thick of the McKinley preliminary campaign for president. In 1896, as special out-of-town correspondent in the famous McKinley front porch campaign, he served papers from St. Paul to New Orleans and from Boston to 'Frisco.

Previous to coming to Canton Wilhelm served as telegraph editor of the Johnstown (Pa.) Democrat, Congressman Warren Worth Bailey's paper.

In addition to newspaper work Wilhelm has been busy in out of hours service in various lines, including a period of trusteeship of Otterbein college, from which he was graduated in 1890.

HOLDING NEW POSTS

PAUL JENNINGS, from Indianapolis Star reportorial staff, to publicity agent, Stuart Walker Company, stock company playing at Keith's theater, in Indianapolis.

Ralph Donham, from copy desk, Indianapolis Star, to managing editor, Terre Haute Post.

Arthur C. Buck, from market operator, Associated Press, to copy desk, Indianapolis Star.

Gordon Hollier, from reporter, Buffalo Courier, to editorial staff, Buffalo Evening News.

PRESS ASSOCIATION NOTES

EDWARD McKERNON, superintendent of the eastern division of the Associated Press, addressed the faculty and students at Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y., and the Rotary Club at Norwich on May 10. Both talks were under the auspices of the Norwich Daily Sun.

Boyd D. Lewis of Milford, Mass., has joined the Boston staff of the United

(Continued on page 34)

This Is

GOOD TIME GUY

The Latest Public Personage and Hero of A New Grand-Slam Among Comic Strips.

Good Time Guy

The Best Guy in the World with a Heart as Big as His Appetite

By

William M. Conselman, author of the famous ELLA CINDERS, writing under the pseudonym of

Frank Smiley

with Drawings by

Mel Cummin

Starting on Monday, June 27

Wire Your Order Now

Metropolitan Newspaper Service

Maximilian Elser, Jr., General Manager — Earl J. Hadley, Associate

150 Nassau Street, New York City

(Continued from page 33)

Press. He is a student in the department of journalism at Boston University.

Wilbur Sanders, night editor of the Spokane bureau of the Associated Press and among those cited by the A. P. for outstanding work in 1926, has been transferred to the Seattle bureau.

Lawrence (Mass.) Sunday Sun the Lawrence (Mass.) Evening Telegram, and the Chelsea (Mass.) Evening Record have begun United Press service.

Walter W. Chamblin, Jr., of the Washington bureau of the Associated Press, who was singled out for special mention by that organization for his tax story written while he was covering the House last winter, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis at a Washington hospital.

Ralph N. Swanson, of the United Press, Kansas City bureau, has been named assistant bureau manager, succeeding Jim Jeffers, who went to the Dallas (Tex.) Dispatch. Joe Brewer, formerly of the Dodge City (Kan.) Globe, is the new pony editor.

Ralph H. Turner, assistant general news manager of the United Press, remained in the middle west following the University of Missouri Journalism Week activities, to inspect United Press bureaus at St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver and Chicago.

C. G. Morand, Philadelphia manager of the United Press, has been assigned to cover the United States fleet maneuvers in the theoretical invasion of New England now in progress. Morand is aboard the flagship Seattle. John Mouteaux of the New York office is relieving Morand at Philadelphia temporarily.

Weimar Jones, of Franklin, has been named night editor of the Associated Press bureau at Charlotte, N. C., to succeed J. W. Douthat, recently transferred to New Orleans, La.

L. P. Hall has been appointed chief operator of the eastern division of the Associated Press. Formerly he was doing special work out of Kansas City, but has now been transferred to New York. He succeeds George F. Moss, made supervisor of markets.

R. C. Wilkerson has been appointed Associated Press correspondent at Dayton, succeeding W. C. Pryor, transferred to Columbus.

F. J. McDermott has been sent from Richmond to the Atlanta Bureau of the Associated Press, succeeding F. H. Fuller, of Jackson, Mich.

S. M. Walter, formerly of Kansas City, has been made Associated Press correspondent at Wichita, Kan., succeeding R. B. Peterson.

L. R. Penn, formerly of Oklahoma City and New York, has been appointed the Cleveland correspondent of the Associated Press to succeed J. W. McGuire.

Robert Broad is the new Associated Press correspondent at Omaha, Neb., replacing P. R. Mickelson, transferred to Chicago. Broad was formerly the Lincoln correspondent, and has been succeeded there by L. R. Lindgren.

Arthur Marek was appointed manager of the International News Service bureau at Los Angeles this week, succeeding Harry Flanagan, who was temporarily in charge. Flanagan returns to the I. N. S. San Francisco bureau.

Theodore Goetz was appointed White Plains correspondent for International News Service this week, succeeding Lee Williams, resigned.

Robert Ginsberg has been transferred from the Indianapolis office of the International News Service to the I. N. S. bureau at Pittsburgh.

S. Neiman was appointed manager of the Harrisburg Pa. bureau of International News Service this week, succeeding G. R. Downey, resigned. Neiman was former assistant manager of the I. N. S. Pittsburgh bureau.

Hyman Vogel has joined the Kent Press Service Detroit bureau, replacing Jerome Luchek, resigned. Vogel was formerly with the Detroit Times. Lawrence H. Selz, managing editor of the Kent Press Service, recently took an extensive tour through eastern Canada.

NEW PLANTS AND EQUIPMENT

EUREKA (Cal.) Humboldt Times has purchased an adjoining one-story building, allowing it to double the composing room space and add considerably to the space of the editorial and business offices.

Interior improvements of the Elgin (Ill.) Courier-News building have been anounced and a new front for the building is projected. Work will start at once. New floorings, marble wainscoting, new plumbing system and new passenger elevator are among the principal improvements to be made.

Samuel H. Robie, publisher of the Chelsea (Mass.) Evening Record, has installed a new press.

Work will start soon on a $350,000 structure at the northeast corner of Hope and Thirty-fifth street, Los Angeles, to be occupied by the Downtown Shopping News. The building will be a Class A three-story and basement building with a mezzanine floor.

Artesia (Cal.) News, formerly located on North Main street, has moved to larger quarters on East Third street. A. C. Mayfield is editor and owner of the publication.

Two weeks after the start of operations the Garden Grove (Cal.) News building was completed and is now occupied by the newspaper.

A new one-story stucco office building 25 by 45, is under construction for the housing of the Reseda (Cal.) Banner, of which A. E. Hartman is publisher.

CHANGES OF OWNERSHIP

A. A. HEESER, publisher of the Mendocino (Cal.) Beacon, has purchased the Fort Bragg (Cal.) News and E. O. Thurston has become owner of the Fort Bragg Advocate. The two papers will be combined as the Fort Bragg Advocate-News.

Lyman King has bought the Napa (Cal.) Daily Journal from J. E. Walden, who has published it since 1884.

J. S. Daley has sold the Eagle Rock (Cal.) Reporter-Sentinel to his sons, J. S. Daley, Jr., and Max O. Daley.

Berkley Walker, formerly publisher of the Lawndale (Cal.) News, has bought the Willowbrook (Cal.) Journal, a weekly.

Byron G. Allen, Pocahontas county representative in the Iowa general assembly, has purchased the Pocahontas (Ia.) Democrat from J. A. Eckenrod, many years the only Democratic paper in the county.

John H. Moist, owner and editor of the Ida Grove (Ia.) Pioneer, and Stanley J. Mead, associated with Carl Brown, owner of the Record, have merged the two papers as the Record-Pioneer under their joint ownership. The combined paper will occupy the Record plant.

Kent (Md.) News has been purchased by the newly organized Eastern Shore Newspaper Corporation, according to announcement made by Lorie C. Quinn, Jr., of Crisfield, Md., president of the corporation.

Walter C. Adams, formerly editor and publisher of the East Salt Lake (Utah) Times, has purchased the Bingham Bulletin at a Sheriff's sale. He will continue the paper.

R. M. Griebel, Northwood, Ia., and G. F. Scott, Manly, Ia., have purchased the Guttenberg (Ia.) Press from J. M. Holmes, who two years ago leased the plant to I. L. Stenson. The new owners took possession of the Press this week.

J. H. Patton, owner and editor of the Tuscola (Ill.) Journal the last three years, has sold the plant to John Howk, until recently publisher of the Assumption (Ill.) Tribune.

Palmdale (Cal.) Reporter has been purchased by Dr. C. D. Williamson, of Claremont. James E. Davis was former owner.

A. E. Snider and J. Arthur Browning of Kansas City have purchased the San Fernando (Cal.) Sun, a semi-weekly newspaper and commercial printing plant, from Glenn Brothers and Hooper. Until recently Mr. Snider, who will be actively in charge, was with the United Press. Before going to California Mr. Hooper was for several years publisher of the Sherman (Tex.) Democrat.

C. C. Thorne, publisher of the Gayville (S. D.) Observor, has sold his paper to J. H. Hutchinson.

SPECIAL EDITIONS

WATERLOO (Ia.) Evening Courier, special section on 61st anniversary of Frank Bros. Store, May 11.

Mamaroneck (N. Y.) Daily Times, Greater Mamaroneck and Real Esta edition, May 14.

Eureka (Cal.) Humboldt Standar 8-page Better Homes Week secti April 30.

New Bedford (Mass.) Sunday Stan ard, Made in New Bedford Edition, t sections, Industrial and Textile Ne 28 pages, May 1.

Boston (Mass.) Sunday Herald, Hon Beautiful section edited by P. Irvi Schwarz, 16 pages.

Providence (R. I.) Journal, fashi supplement, Artgravure Section, eig pages.

FLASHES

What we can't understand is how Ne York picks out which of her murders s is going dippy over.—Dallas News.

Most of the 100-per-cent Americans f that valuation on themselves.—Des Moin Tribune.

We anxiously await news of the fir red-headed woman with six children wh swims the channel this year.

Probably the funniest thing that ha developed in our national politics lately the horified fear of the residue of t Ohio Crowd lest Tammany get hold of t Government and corrupt it.—Columb Ohio State Journal.

Correct this sentence: "Rich and poor said the cop, "I treat 'em all alike."— Vancouver Sun.

BRIGGS FEATURE PAGES

—can make new local lineage records for you. Our plan converts firms that have resisted every effort of your solicitors into regular advertisers in your paper.

Accounts developed under our plan involve absolutely no expense on your part.

THOS W. BRIGGS CO.
Columbian Mutual Tower
MEMPHIS, TENN

Said One Prominent Publisher to Another—

In a recent letter to the publisher of the London Daily Mail, Adolph S. Ochs, owner and publisher of the New York Times, said:

"The value of advertising, when properly safeguarded and selected with discrimination, cannot be over-emphasized for the newspaper reader. The advertising columns of a newspaper do not consist simply of sold space. To the greater bulk of readers they represent a vital source of news. They contain information which enters into the daily lives of the people and affects their interests frequently to an even greater extent than the news does. Many advertisements your daily publishes are read by far more people than any single item of news is, but to secure this reading public the advertiser must make his announcements so interesting and attractive that they can compete successfully with news."

The attractiveness of which Mr. Ochs speaks is largely secured for the New York Times, the London Daily Mail, and a big percentage of other leading dailies, by their use of the Ludlow system for setting ads and heads. With this system a large variety of styles and sizes of typefaces are always instantly available in any quantity and are cast fresh and new in slugs as needed for every ad. Display from the smallest sizes up to full-width 72 point, and even 84 point streamer lines, are cast on the Ludlow in bright, new faces and quickly delivered on the galley at the front of the machine ready for use.

Ludlow Typograph Co.
2032 Clybourn Avenue, Chicago
Boston: 470 Atlantic Avenue
New York: 63 Park Row
Atlanta: 41 Marietta Street
San Francisco: 5 Third Street

LUDLOW QUALITY SLUG COMPOSITION

ASK ME ANOTHER

1. What are the nine cities in the United States with the largest daily newspapers?

2. What newspaper recently conducted a state wide spelling bee in which more than 425,000 school children participated?

3. What is the only newspaper outside of New York, Chicago and Philadelphia that successfully syndicates its features to other metropolitan newspapers?

4. What daily newspaper has the largest circulation, except for St. Louis and Kansas City, between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean?

5. What newspaper covers its field, which consists of an entire state, more thoroughly than any other publication covers any other similar sized territory in the world?

6. How is it possible for a newspaper published in a city of only 150,000 population to have a paid daily circulation above 230,000?

Answers on Page 44

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Alicia Patterson Works for Daddy's Paper, the New York Daily News—Mrs. William Brown Meloney Returns from Flood District—Charlotte Mills Is on N. Y. Daily Mirror

ALICIA PATTERSON, daughter of Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson, is working for her father's newspaper, the New York Daily News, a tabloid. Miss Patterson, said to be only 18, is writing Sunday features under the direction of Miss Roberta Yates, the Sunday editor. At present she is ill and was not at the office this week, but for some time, it is understood, she has been covering Sunday feature assignments, with no little success.

Capt. Patterson has three daughters, Alicia, Elinor and Josephine. He has no sons. Elinor is interested in the stage and played part of the Nun in the Miracle, and has also played parts in stock.

Mrs. William Brown Meloney, editor of the Sunday Magazine of the New York Herald Tribune, returned this week from 13 days spent in the Mississippi flood zone with the Hoover Commission.

"Willing hands are needed down there," she declared on her return in an interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "I did more work with my hands and feet than as a journalist.

"Dispatches in the papers cannot half describe the actual conditions. I saw a great many refugee camps numbering from 5,000 to 20,000 white people.

"One of the most interesting things I noticed was on a levee 60 feet wide and some miles long near Hard Times, Miss. Several hundred people gathered there could not do without news, and an enterprising publisher was printing daily bulletins on a small hand press."

Mrs. Meloney obtained stories from engineers on the job of flood control, an interview with Secretary of War Davis, and her own impressions of conditions in the disaster district.

It is not generally known that Charlotte Mills, daughter of Mrs. James Mills, slain choir singer of the Hall-Mills case, is now employed as a regular staff member of the New York Daily Mirror. At present she is assisting the contest editor.

Someone asked Philip A. Payne, managing editor, why he didn't exploit Miss Mills during the Snyder trial. He replied that in his opinion it wouldn't be good taste, the girl deserved a rest from publicity, and besides, if left alone, she would probably develop into a really efficient newspaper woman.

Helen M. Rockey, of the New York Edison Company, was re-elected president of the League of Advertising Women, New York, at the recent annual meeting. Other officers were also re-elected as follows: Anna M. McLean, of J. B. Woodward, vice-president; Emily E. Connor, Marchbanks Press, corresponding secretary; Mae Shortle, Rogers & Co., recording secretary, and Elsie E. Wilson, American Radiator Company, treasurer.

Sophie Alexander, for eight years advertising manager of Flint & Kent at Buffalo, N. Y., has joined the John Wanamaker store of Philadelphia. Miss Alexander was formerly president of the Buffalo League of Advertising Women and a delegate to the London convention of the International Advertising Association in 1924.

Miss Mildred D. Babbage is writing a series "Breckenridge County Women in Business" for the Cloverport (Ky.) Breckenridge News.

Ida Bailey Allen, home economics writer, delivered the first in her series of lectures this week for the National Radio Home-Makers' Club, under the auspices of the New York American.

Miss Esther Sechrist, society editor of the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, resigned last week to do publicity work. She was succeeded by Miss Nell Freeman, formerly a newspaper woman of Birmingham, Ala., and Nashville.

A memorial tribute to the late Mrs. H. Effa Webster, dean of Chicago newspaper women, was given by Mrs. Addie Farrar Inman, president of the Chicago Press League, at its last meeting of the season last week. Mrs. Louise Barrett Chamberlin, a former president of the League, spoke on her new book, "Looking Back From Eighty-Five Years," at the meeting, which was in the form of a luncheon.

Emma Van Wormer, society editor of the Albany Knickerbocker Press, has resigned. She was society editor of the Albany Journal for several years.

CHAMBERLIN TO CHINA

William Henry Chamberlin, formerly of the New York Tribune, has been ordered to Shanghai, China, as correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Mr. Chamberlin has been Moscow correspondent of the Monitor for the last five years. He is a son of Ernest V. Chamberlin, a retired newspaper man now living in Sullivan County, New York. Chamberlin is a graduate of Haverford College, class of 1919. His grandfather, Major William H. Chamberlin, was for many years correspondent of the Associated Press at Cincinnati and was the dean in the Associated Press service at the time of his retirement.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

King Features Gets Ruth Snyder's Story—Harcourt & Brace Now Syndicating Elmer Gantry—Philip A. Payne of New York Daily Mirror President of New Syndicate

"MY Own True Story, So Help Me God!" is the title King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York, has given to Mrs. Ruth Brown Snyder's autobiography, announced this week. The life story of the doomed woman now in Sing Sing's death house is scheduled for 31 daily instalments of about 2,000 words each. Jack Lait, who recently obtained an exclusive interview with Mrs. Snyder, is handling the autobiography.

Harcourt-Brace & Co., New York book publishers, has decided to syndicate "Elmer Gantry" to the newspapers itself, instead of selling the rights to an established newspaper syndicate. Raymond Everet is in charge.

Philip A. Payne, managing editor and vice-president of the New York Daily Mirror, is president of the Payne Newspaper Syndicate, which has opened up offices in the Tribune Building on Park Row, New York. Lieut. Col. Guy T. Viskniskki is general manager, assisted by Frank Carson, formerly managing editor of the Chicago Herald and Examiner. Viskniskki was at one time head of the Republic Syndicate in New York. During the war he was editor of the Stars and Stripes, and most recently has been general manager of the Clarksburg (W. Va.) Telegram. Features are now being developed and first releases will be announced shortly.

United Feature Syndicate, New York, has a new daily comic strip called "Young Buffalo Bill." It is drawn by Harry F. O'Neil, an artist on the staff of the Baltimore Sun.

Gilbert Irwin has written a series of articles for the International Syndicate, Baltimore, under the title of "Camping and Outdoor Life."

Fulton Oursler, Dana Burnett, Fannie Hurst, Sax Rohmer, Rita Weiman, Sam Hellman and Dorothy Canfield are among the contributors to the short story service of the Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia.

John Held, Jr., artist and Westport, Conn., farmer, is now drawing a daily strip called "Merely Margy, an Awfully Sweet Girl," for King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York. He also does "Sentimental Sally," a Sunday page, for the same syndicate.

Harry B. Baker, general manager of P. & A. Photos, is at present in Europe visiting the Continental bureaus of his service.

now

195,000 Daily
425,000 Sunday

And The largest home-delivered circulation of any paper in its territory

Los Angeles Examiner

Covers Every Agency and Advertiser

A Correction

Editor & Publisher issue of May 7th stated that the Advertising Checking Bureau of New York and Chicago were serving 377 newspaper subscribers, whereas the copy should have carried the same total as several previous issues—namely 400 subscribers. As a matter of actual fact the checking proof service of this concern is now being used by 412 newspapers thruout the country.

NOW—412 subscribers

The Advertising CHECKING BUREAU Inc.

79 Madison Ave. NEW YORK — 538 So. Clark St. CHICAGO

We are pleased to announce the election of

NIGEL CHOLMELEY-JONES

and

HERBERT L. HASKELL

as

Vice-Presidents of our organization

Paul Block Incorporated

PAUL BLOCK, President
CHARLES J. BOYLE, Vice-President
HERMAN G. HALSTED, Vice-President
ARTHUR F. THURNAU, Vice-President
NIGEL CHOLMELEY-JONES, Vice-President
HERBERT L. HASKELL, Vice-President
CORNELIUS A. REGAN, Secretary
MAX BLOCK, Treasurer

ASK YOUR OPTOMETRIST

about the vital importance to legibility of the correct proportion of the small lower case letters to the descending and ascending letters.

The height of the small lower case of ordinary newspaper faces in use to-day is about two-thirds the height of the capital letters.

The Intertype designers increased the height of the small lower case very slightly—just enough to thicken hairlines and maintain sufficient openness in certain letters.

But the Intertype lower case is not enlarged to the point of absorbing the ascenders and descenders thus destroying balance and contrast so essential to easy reading. This is an important feature in legibility because 90% of the words in English contain ascending and descending letters.

The Intertype Ideal News face retains all of those fundamental characteristics of individual letters which have long been accepted as indispensable to legibility. A familiar face was re-designed along conventional lines.

Like an old friend, a familiar, accepted type face wears well on the eyes and reads easy. Ask your optometrist.

Intertype IDEAL News Series

8 POINT ON SOLID SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary lightface type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show a distinctly visible thickness. The serifs were shortened and bracketed, and

8 POINT ON 8½ POINT SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary lightface type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hairlines of Intertype News Series show

8 POINT ON 9 POINT SLUG

The Intertype News Series is meeting the approval of all those who believe that types should be made for the needs of the newspaper reader. The qualities which make the Intertype News Series easy to read are not free from the usual mannerisms of the standard newspaper type faces.

It's Familiar and Friendly.

The Intertype News Series conforms to the familiar and friendly design to which the majority of newspaper readers are accustomed, and yet gives a clearness to print which is not to be had by the use of ordinary lightface type. Intertype established the fact that easy to read type is familiar type. Unfamiliar type quickly tires the eyes. Intertype then set about to improve familiar type. The changes from old standards were, in most instances, not of great importance but most of them were in directions that have heretofore been avoided by type makers. The hair-

Intertype matrices will run in other slug-casting machines

Write nearest branch for larger specimens

Standardized INTERTYPE TRADE MARK

Designed in 5½, 6½, 7 and 8 Point

INTERTYPE CORPORATION: New York 1440 Broadway; Chicago 130 N. Franklin St.; Memphis McCall Bldg.; San Francisco 560 Howard St.; Los Angeles 1240 S. Main St.; Boston 80 Federal St.; London; Berlin

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

"Name the Baby" Contest is New One on New York Daily News—
Brooklyn Eagle Tries a Game Called "I Predict"— In Watertown They Start Pumpkin Planting

EDWARD DOHERTY, star feature writer, is turning out the daily copy on a "Name the Baby" contest, the New York Daily News' latest contribution to the gayety of Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx.

Baby Sloan was born in a Brooklyn hospital May 14. The Daily News paid Mrs. Ethel Elizabeth Sloan, whose husband died before the baby's birth, $1,000 for the privilege of letting its readers vote on a suitable name for the boy.

Hundreds of votes have come into the News office. The name receiving the largest number of votes will be given to the child.

Latest attempt to find a substitute for the cross word puzzle craze is under way on the Brooklyn Eagle, which this week started a game under the patented title, "I Predict."

Harris M. Crist, managing editor, thinks it is better than cross words, as far as newspaper promotion is concerned, because, in order to play the game one first must read the daily paper.

Every day the Eagle is publishing a list of 10 doubtful predictions covering the probable news developments of the next day. It is then the readers' job to decide how the predictions will turn out and give reasons for the decision. Prizes aggregating $150 are being awarded each week.

The "I Predict" published May 17 included the following conjectures:

"Mrs. Judd Gray Will Visit Her Husband"; "Robins Will Score Five Runs Against Pittsburgh Buccaneers"; "Brooklyn Plumbers' Strike Will End"; "Lindbergh Will Be Off In Trans-Atlantic Flight"; "U. S. Steel New Common Will Sell at $12 a Share on New York Exchange"; "Maximum Temperature, New York, will Be 68."

Beneath each conjecture a Yes and No are printed and readers are asked to underline their choice and give one reason why.

The Watertown (N. Y.) Times has arranged to distribute pumpkin seeds to its subscribers. In connection with the stunt the Times will conduct an exhibit in the fall awarding prizes to those who have grown the largest pumpkins from the seeds. It is claimed that pumpkins weighing as much as 100 pounds can be raised. Instructions will be given by the Times in pumpkin cultivation.

New York Daily Mirror is offering $2,500 in cash prizes to winners of "Horseplayers," described as "a game for race track fans to play."

The Lawrence (Mass.) Telegram and Sunday Sun is offering free gasoline to automobilists whose numbers are picked at random. These numbers are being published one a day. Owners of machines are requested to take a copy of the paper containing their number to a certain gasoline station selected by the newspaper.

The Columbus (O.) Ohio State Journal is now issuing a "Night Green" edition. It goes on the street every night at nine o'clock and carries up-to-the-minute sports, stock quotations and gossip and all other general news.

When the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union started a new sports edition on May 16, a band was hired to herald the event and the first issue contained greetings from the Mayor.

Carrier boys from two New England cities may meet in New York over Memorial Day. Winners in a contest being conducted by the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post are to be brought to Gotham by James T. Kelly and Israel Isenberg, while John Mackay of the New Bedford (Mass.) Times will escort a group from his paper. About 20 are coming from the Post and 50 will represent the Times.

Fall River (Mass.) Globe gained interest recently through a fly-swatting contest. A prize of $1 each was paid the first three children under 15 to bring in the "dead bodies."

Photographs of the completed Bear Lake Beach hotel, at the north woods resort in Michigan of the Chicago Daily Journal, were exhibited at the annual outdoor show in the Coliseum, Chicago.

The hotel, which is now ready for occupancy, will be formally opened May 28. Thousands of visitors at the outdoor show called at the Journal booth for information about the new hotel and the lots at Pine Ridge, the Journal's new north woods division, which are being sold to readers at very low rates, in conjunction with subscriptions to the paper.

In an effort to build up a strong state circulation over the obstacle of poor train service, the Milwaukee Journal has organized a truck delivery system for 200 towns within a radius of 150 miles of the city. The Journal is an afternoon daily.

A fleet of large trucks has been purchased by the Journal for the new suburban and statewide service. Under the new arrangement, thousands of present subscribers who have been receiving an early edition will get a later one (the home) and many who have been getting the Journal by mail the next day will now receive it the same afternoon or early evening. The new scheme will enable The Journal to offer better competition to the morning newspapers.

At present between 8,000 and 10,000 papers will be carried daily by the trucks and 40,000 on Sunday.

First district tests for gold medal winners of the Annual Greater Chicago Children's Piano Playing Tournament, sponsored by the Chicago Herald and Examiner, are now under way. Thirty-two contestants will compete in each of three tests—all gold medal winners entered in the first division. Four winners will be chosen at each test as district winners. The semi-finals in the contest will be staged the latter part of May.

PLANNING SUNDAY TABLOID

A new tabloid Sunday newspaper for Duluth, Minn., the Examiner, is being planned by H. Cohen, First National Bank Building, Duluth. Distribution will be free for the first few months until a circulation is established, Mr. Cohen has stated.

252,760

was the average net paid daily circulation of The Baltimore Sun (morning and evening issues) for the month of

April, 1927

The average net paid circulation of THE SUNDAY SUN per Sunday for the month of April, 1927, was 198,302.

Everything in Baltimore Revolves Around

THE SUN

Morning Evening Sunday

Circulation of impressive permanence

Readers of The Indianapolis News of ten, twenty, thirty or even forty years' standing are not rare.

News readers may read other newspapers occasionally. They read The News every day. They may miss another newspaper without any great sense of loss, but on those rare occasions when a carrier does miss a subscriber, The News circulation department gets complaints of such vigor and intensity that we know that missing a copy of The News is little short of a calamity!

This permanence of circulation is invaluable to an advertiser.

It means that advertisements number two, twenty and two hundred, will have the same interested, loyal audience that advertisement number one in the series had.

There is little loss, no waste, in readers who have transferred their newspaper affections elsewhere in the middle of your schedule.

Permanent markets are built from permanent circulations like this.

The Indianapolis NEWS

Frank T. Carroll, Advertising Director

New York Office
Dan A. Carroll
110 E. 42d Street

Chicago Office
J. E. Lutz
The Tower Bldg.

At the Convention!

THE newspaper publishers' convention just held in New York, was the first convention since the McCoy Daily Health Articles have been on the market. It was the publishers' first opportunity to get together and exchange confidences and views on what the service is doing for the various papers.

Over 150 leading papers are today carrying the McCoy Daily Health Articles, and executives of those papers mixing around at the convention, have done more in the past few days to sell the McCoy Health Service than our entire efforts in the past six months.

In the convention hall, in the hotel corridors, and in the dining room, the actions and reactions of the McCoy Health Service were frankly discussed. Publishers who carry it were asked one after the other what is the effect upon readers and what attention if any did they pay to professional jealousies or criticisms, and the frank reply in each and every case was that such attempted criticisms were dwarfed and meaningless in face of the actual good Dr. McCoy was doing for readers and the good the Service was doing for the Newspaper.

It was the finest thing that ever happened to the McCoy Health Service; because these questions, these discussions, developed a new viewpoint on the part of the publishers, and developed a consciousness of the publishers opportunity for real health improvement among their readers. PUBLISHERS POURED INTO THE McCOY BOOTH AT THE CONVENTION AND VOLUNTARILY TOLD US HOW PLEASED THEY WERE WITH THE SERVICE AND WHAT WONDERFUL GOOD DR. McCOY WAS DOING FOR THEIR READERS. FURTHER, IN ALMOST EVERY CASE, THE PUBLISHER VOLUNTARILY GAVE US NAMES OF OTHER PUBLISHERS AND EDITORS WITH WHOM THEY WERE FRIENDLY, AND TOLD US OF HAVING RECOMMENDED THE SERVICE.

We appreciate this because the McCoy Daily Health Articles actually show people how to gain and retain health, and throughout America and Canada are doing tremendous good. Ask the editor who carries this service. He is the greatest of all representatives and exponents of the McCoy Health Service and all it stands for.

In 6 Months

Over one hundred and fifty leading newspapers in the United States and Canada have taken on the McCoy Daily health articles. Such phenomenal progress has brought forward the admiration of Publishing America. It is talked of from Coast to Coast.

Such Facts Need No Coloring

Such enthusiasm as expressed by members of these newspapers as to what the McCoy Health Service is doing is a judgment that must be heeded.

150 Newspapers in 6 Months!

McCoy Health Service

BRACK SHOPS BUILDING

Los Angeles - - California

Write or Wire Today

McCoy Health Service
Brack Shops Bldg.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

Gentlemen:

Please send us Fullest Particulars and Price

Paper .....

City & State .....

Your name and title .....

CHARLES C. BALDWIN

Publisher and Treasurer of Old Worcester Spy Dies at 92

Charles Clinton Baldwin, 92, for 33 years publisher and treasurer of the old Worcester Daily Spy, since discontinued, died May 6 at his home in Worcester, Mass. Mr. Baldwin was born in Woodstock, Conn., son of John Denison Baldwin, who left the Congregational ministry to become founder of the Hartford Republican, and later to found the Boston Commonwealth.

In his father's newspaper office Charles Clinton Baldwin learned the business. He came to Worcester in 1859 with his father and brother to take over the Daily Spy. Under this leadership the Spy became one of the nationally influential papers in the period following the Civil War. When the Spy passed out of the Baldwin family, in 1892, Charles Clinton turned to seclusion in his library and garden, and was known as an expert in horticulture and antiquarian research.

ALVAH P. FRENCH

Founder of Mount Vernon (N. Y.) Argus and White Plains Paper Dies

Alvah P. French, 60, founder of the Mount Vernon (N. Y.) Daily Argus and its editor for 12 years, died May 14 at his home in Port Chester, N. Y. Mr. French devoted a large share of his life's work to a study of the history of Westchester county. He was a curator of the Westchester County Historical Society and owner of French's Atlas Literary Shop, which has back numbers of magazines and newspapers covering more than 100 years.

After founding the Mount Vernon Argus, later purchased by F. A. Merriam, Mr. French established the White Plains Reporter, which he also later sold.

GEORGE A. SCHOFIELD

George A. Schofield, Jr., 37, publisher of the Ipswich (Mass.) Chronicle, died at his home May 15. He succeeded to the management of the Chronicle a year ago on the retirement of his father, George A. Schofield, lawyer and ex-state senator, who survives him. At the time of his death the junior Schofield was a member of the Boston Press Club and the Essex County Press Club. He was also at one time a correspondent for the Boston Globe.

JOHN T. RONK

John T. Ronk, editor of the Newburgh (N. Y.) Journal for several years prior to the sale of that paper by former Governor Benjamin B. Odell, in 1917, and its merger with the Newburgh News, died May 18. He was fifty-seven years old. He suffered a paralytic stroke ten weeks ago. After the sale of the Journal Mr. Ronk was Mr. Odell's secretary for several years.

WILLIAM A. CARPENTER

William A. Carpenter, night telegraph editor of the Buffalo Evening News for several years, died in Washington May 18. He had been employed by newspapers in St. Louis, New York, Binghamton and several other cities.

JOHN E. SANFORD

John E. Sanford, veteran newspaper man, died at his home in Fredonia, N. Y., May 18. Mr. Sanford began his newspaper career under the late Lewis McKinsley,, of the Fredonia Censor, and had worked on New York, San Francisco, Chicago, Washington and Detroit papers.

MITCHELL ESTATE $766,131

An estate of $766,131 was left by Charles William Mitchell, former newspaper publisher and prominent Ottawa citizen, who died last January. His will was probated today. The personal property is valued at $462,531, and the realty at $303,600. The entire estate goes to his eight children, each receiving $95,766.

WALLACE H. JOHNSON

Wallace H. Johnson, veteran newspaper publisher, who a month ago sold the Salina (Kan.) Sun, died May 14 at the home of his daughter, Miss Jessie Johnson, Salina, Kan. Mr. Johnson had been in the publishing business 69 years.

Obituary

CHARLES COLBROOK SHERMAN, at one time religious editor of the New International Encyclopedia, died May 9 at New Rochelle, N. Y. He once was a member of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal staff.

ROBERT ORR, stereotyper on the New York World, died from a paralytic stroke Wednesday morning as he was leaving his work. He died before the arrival of an ambulance physician.

MRS. JULIA C. ALVORD, 64, wife of Thomas G. Alvord, Sr., for many years dramatic editor of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald, died May 8 at the House of the Good Samaritan in Glens Falls.

SUNSHINE ALICE BLACKBURN, newspaper woman, many years ago associated with her father, Walter Wightman, in publishing the Bethany (Mo.) Republican and other newspapers, died May 13 in her home in Elk City, Okla.

JOHN WEILER, 75, publisher of German language newspapers at Reading, Pa., died at his home there after an illness of a year. He was a native of Germany and located in Reading in 1872. He was for years editor of the Reading Post and finally became its owner. Some years ago Mr. Weiler discontinued issuing the Post and devoted his time to job printing and book work.

MRS. SUE ELIZABETH WRENN, 62, the mother of Henry S. Wrenn, managing editor of the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, died recently at her home in Greenville, S. C. Mr. Wrenn was with his mother when she died. Before joining the staff of the Pensacola Journal, Mr. Wrenn was for four years connected with the Greenville News.

MRS. AURELIA WHITMORE GREEN died at Medina, O., May 5. She was the mother of Charles C. Green, president of the New York Advertising Club, and head of the Charles C. Green Advertising Agency.

CHICAGO PRINTING EXHIBIT

The first exhibit of fine printing produced in Chicago, under the auspices of the Chicago chapter of the American Institute of Graphic Arts, will be opened May 24, with a dinner meeting at the Art Institute. More than a hundred Chicago printers, advertising agencies and artists have entered specimens of their work.

PANAMA DAILY SUSPENDS

The American Daily of Panama suspended publication April 30. The paper was established Oct. 7, 1925, and had a circulation of about 3,000, chiefly in the Canal Zone.

Automatic Stereotype Plate Handling Equipment, Automatic Roll Paper Lifts, Roll Paper Trucks, Track, Turntables, Switches, Bundle Lifts.

Sold by

The Cline Electric Mfg. Co.
Conway Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

The Capital Lift & Mfg. Co.
Manufacturers Columbus, Ohio

Announcing—

—for the special attention of the CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING MANAGER

A New Classified Checking Proof Service

On May 1st we privately announced to our present list of over 400 subscribers, the establishment of a new service—one that would solve the Classified Manager's checking problems, in the same successful manner that our Display Service solved the problems of the Foreign Advertising Departments.

Sixty-two publishers accepted this new service at once. Then our work began and in the short course of three weeks we have direct evidence that our simple practical plan of service IS the solution that will prove of direct value to the publisher, the agency and the individual advertiser.

With this service plan in operation, we guarantee to relieve the publisher's office of all detail work as well as save him considerable expense in sending out his checking proofs. Our service will cover EVERY checking requirement of BOTH the agency and the Advertiser.

The service is NOW being offered on a TWO MONTHS' trial test basis. We will gladly submit full details before your acceptance is considered, and if accepted on this trial test basis, you will be given absolute assurance that there will be no charge for the test, unless the service is continued, which continuance will be at the discretion of the publication.

The Advertising CHECKING BUREAU Inc.

79 Madison Ave. NEW YORK — 538 S. Clark St. CHICAGO

Are You Willing to Give Your Readers What They Want?

If you believe in giving your subscribers the kind of paper they want to read, will you make this test? Run in your paper a questionnaire similar to one shown below and let the majority decide. The nearest Linotype Agency will be glad to send you slugs of the sample column set in Ionic in this or any other wording you wish to use.

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE COMPANY

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO CHICAGO NEW ORLEANS

CANADIAN LINOTYPE LIMITED, TORONTO

Representatives in the Principal Cities of the World

Which Is Easier to Read?

Column One
THE OLD TYPE

These two columns of type, containing exactly the same wording, are set in two different kinds of type. The first column is set in the type we are using now. The second column is set in a new type called Ionic No. 5, recently brought out by the Mergenthaler Linotype Company after long study and experiment to develop a type for newspapers which could be read more easily and with less eye strain.

We are willing to change to the new type if our readers want it. It is up to you to decide. Write to the editor or use the coupon for convenience in registering your choice.

Column Two
THE NEW TYPE

These two columns of type, containing exactly the same wording, are set in two different kinds of type. The first column is set in the type we are using now. The second column is set in a new type called Ionic No. 5, recently brought out by the Mergenthaler Linotype Company after long study and experiment to develop a type for newspapers which could be read more easily and with less eye strain.

We are willing to change to the new type if our readers want it. It is up to you to decide. Write to the editor or use the coupon for convenience in registering your choice.

TO THE EDITOR

I Prefer to Read ☐ Column One (Old Type)
☐ Column Two (New Type)

Name .....

Street Address .....

City or Town ..... State .....

NOTYPED IN GARAMOND

530.27.S-P

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

Program Plans of Classified Association Announced—Kansas City Journal-Post Prints Sermonette on Blotter—Mulhern Entertains "Old Timers Classified Club."

AN address on the value of classified to a newspaper to be delivered by some well-known newspaper publisher or business manager who is a classified enthusiast will be a feature on the program of the annual convention of the Association of Newspaper Classified Managers Association to be held in Denver, June 27-28.

Round table discussion will center about the four sources from which newspapers obtain classified advertisements, over the counter, by telephone, by personal solicitation, and by mail.

J. A. Finneran, New York Times, will be chairman presiding over the discussion on counter business. Some of the questions to be taken up under this heading will be:

"Is it more advisable to have men or women wait on front counter? Which is most economical? Which renders quickest service?"

"What sort of information regarding your newspaper is in the hands of counter help to pass on to counter patrons? How are promotion ads used at front counter? Is cash discount given over counter? How much and why? Does discount aid counter help to obtain more space and more insertions?

Chairmen of the discussion on telephone business will be W. W. Murdock, Detroit Free Press and A. R. Kochler, Chicago Tribune. Mr. Murdock will lead consideration of problems connected with the soliciting room, while Mr. Kochler will take up questions affecting the voluntary telephone room.

John Irvin, of the New York American, will head round table discussion of direct mail as used by classified managers, while Harry Gwaltney of the Milwaukee Journal will be chairman on the topic of personal solicitation.

For part of the convention period the association will be divided into two groups for the large newspapers and the small newspapers, with H. J. Moehlman of the Baltimore Sun presiding over the former, and R. E. Ballou of the Peoria Star, the latter.

Charles Nax of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat is association president.

Tom Mulhern, newly appointed advertising manager of the New York Telegram, entertained members of "The Old Timers Classified Club" at a luncheon at the Advertising Club, Wednesday, May 18. The members presented Mr. Mulhern with a Gladstone bag. The presentation speech was made by Bill Kernahan, display classified manager, New York American.

Those present included Thomas Mulhern, Bill Metz, classified manager, New York Graphic; Lou Heaton, classified manager, New York Herald Tribune; Bill Fowley, classified manager, Brooklyn Times; Joe Kesler, president, Everite Advertising Agency; and W. E. Kernahan.

Mulhern was recently promoted from classified manager of the Telegram to advertising manager. Before joining the Telegram he was classified advertising manager of the Brooklyn Eagle.

A handy blotter with the following sermonette on the classified ad was distributed last week by the Kansas City Journal-Post.

I am extremely modest, but I am admitted into the personal life of potentate or the most humble.

No home is too magnificent for me to serve; none too humble.

I am extremely personal, but absolutely safe and confidential.

Although I am selfless, I accomplish great things and do so silently, inconspiciously and effectively.

I serve all classes.

I honor all men.

The secret of my sucess is that I fill the acute need of people everywhere.

I cost but little.

I have linked fortune with fortune.

I have united scattered families.

I am a globe trotter and a stay-at-home.

Do you know me?

I am a Journal-Post want ad.

"Everything from A to Z" is the name given to a new classification started by the New York Herald Tribune last Sunday, May 14. It is scheduled to run weekly, made up of 26 advertisers with one letter of the alphabet leading off each advertiser's space.

L. L. Heaton, classified manager, said the idea was not hard to sell. It took his salesmen only a week to get it underway. Z was hardest to sell, he declared, but it finally went to a public stenographer named Zeitlin.

The Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union is introducing its classified advertisers to a personality in charge of a new night service. Promotion ads on page one announce: "Miss Harper at your service anytime from 6 o'clock until 11 o'clock in the evening to take small ads."

Harry L. Ward has resigned as manager of the classified advertising department of the Long Beach (Cal.) Sun and will return to advertising work in Los Angeles.

William H. Hershey, manager of classified advertising for the Cincinnati Enquirer, is back on the job again after having recovered from a major operation.

The Saratoga Springs (N. Y.) Saratogian, in a page one box, likens its classified ad service to television, calling attention to results achieved by Fred Reagan in getting a lost motor meter returned twenty minutes after the paper appeared with his "lost and found" ad.

REPRESENTING THE DAILIES

APPOINTMENT of Nigel Cholmeley-Jones and Herbert L. Haskell as vice-presidents of Paul Block, Inc., was announced this week.

B. A. Ohlander, formerly advertising manager of the Great Divide, has opened offices as a publishers' representative at 617 C. A. Johnson Building, Denver, Col. He claims to be the first publishers' representative to cover the field of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah.

Frederic A. Kimball, of Lindenstein-Kimball, Inc., New York, addressed the members of the Lions Club of Sharon, Pa., on May 17.

HOWELL & THOMAS
3868 CARNEGIE AVE.,
CLEVELAND, OHIO,
ARCHITECTS AND
ENGINEERS OF NEWS
PAPER PRODUCTION
PLANTS - - - - - -

CLEVELAND PRESS
PITTSBURGH PRESS
HOUSTON PRESS
ROCHESTER TIMES
UNION

An organization combining newspaper production engineering with experienced architectural training.

The metropolitan touch in your news columns

BIG-CITY training has been the making of many a successful newspaper man. Without such training, a good man is still good—no one claims that metropolitan experience is indispensable. Yet most editors will agree that a few years' apprenticeship on one of the great dailies of New York, Chicago, St. Louis or San Francisco is one of the most broadening and formative influences to which an embryo newspaper man can be subjected.

To men whose experience has been restricted—men who are making good in the newspaper world but who would like to "make better"—the Newspaper Institute of America's course in big-city journalism will come as an unusually interesting opportunity. To the editor or publisher who wants to see the men on his staff advance to a higher standard of excellence and who wishes to improve the tone of his news columns, this course offers a logical means of attaining both ends.

Not a course—a reproduction of actual conditions

"Course" is perhaps the wrong word for Newspaper Institute training. What the N. I. A. method does is reproduce—as near as is humanly possible—the actual conditions under which a man works when he is attached to the staff of a great metropolitan daily. There are:—

1. Talks (not lectures) by some of the foremost newspaper editors and writers in the country. These talks sum up what a beginn would pick up from the hints a suggestions of the older membe of a newspaper staff—and fr "call-downs" by his superiors.

2. Typical important assig ments to be covered and written u

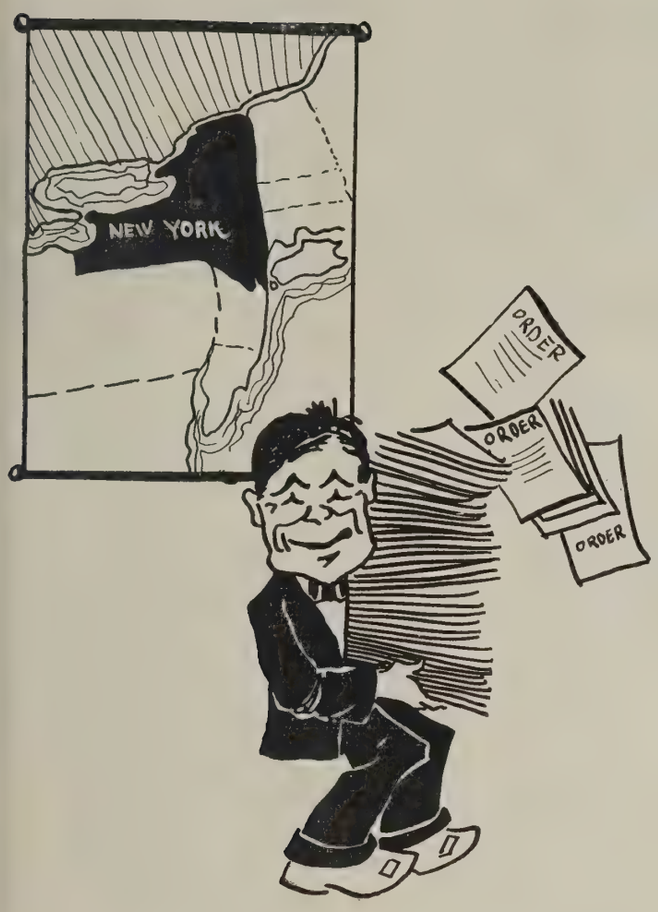
3. Individual criticism of eve piece of copy submitted—by t Copy Desk of the Institute. group of men with 182 years newspaper experience behind th are cooperating in the Institu instruction. Every sentence th the student writes is as carefu corrected and edited as if it we destined to appear in the pages one of the great New York daili

Examine this course—without obligation

We believe that metropolit training, coming straight from m now actively engaged in newspap work in the metropolis, will h any newspaper man do better wo and make his newspaper bett None is too expert and none t green to derive real advanta from it.

The cost either to the staff a group or to individual students trifling—low enough to permit ev a small newspaper to give it several or all of its men.

Let us send you sample sectio of the course. Give them yo most critical scrutiny. And then b fore enrolling you'll know just wh you can expect. Coupon for co venience.



Newspaper Institute of America
Approved as a correspondence school under the laws of the State of New York
25 West Forty-fifth Street, New York

Newspaper Institute of America
25 West 45th Street, New York
James McAlpin Pyle, Pres.
Please let me examine your course without obli gation, as promised in EDITOR AND PUBLISHER

Name.....
Title.....
Newspapers.....

Are you out for more Business?

NEW YORK STATE will give it to you—

You rarely hear of dull times or slack business conditions in the New York State Market. Regardless of what conditions may exist outside of the State there is always plenty of business to be obtained here if you go after it.

The Empire State is so rich in diversity of industry—in agriculture—in commercial enterprises—in shipping—and business is done on so large a scale that the people of this State have no time to think of hard times.

New York State is not a local market. It is international in scope. It produces products for the entire world. It receives shipments from every foreign port. Its people are always occupied either in production or distribution. Therefore their incomes are never curtailed.

This is the reason why the Empire State offers the greatest wealth—the greatest buying power and the highest living standards.

If you want more business come to New York State. These newspapers listed below can help you reach the very people who will buy your product.

		Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
Albany Evening News	(E)	44,444	.13	.13
Albany Knickerbocker Press	(M)	35,073	.12	.12
Albany Knickerbocker Press	(S)	57,320	.17	.17
Amsterdam Recorder-Democrat	(E)	7,845	.04	.04
††Auburn Citizen-Advertiser-Journal	(E)	10,295	.065	.055
Brooklyn Daily Eagle	(E)	77,991	.24	.24
Brooklyn Daily Eagle	(S)	90.532	.24	.24
Buffalo Courier Express	(M)	110,686	.22	.22
Buffalo Courier Express	(S)	161,164	.30	.30
Buffalo Evening News	(E)	149,773	.25	.25
Buffalo Evening Times	(E)	109,285	.21	.21
Buffalo Sunday Times	(S)	128,158	.21	.21
Corning Evening Leader	(E)	9,029	.05	.05
Elmira Star-Gazette Advertiser	(E&M)	34,213	.11	.11
Freeport Daily Review	(E)	10,480	.05	.05
Geneva Daily Times	(E)	5,627	.04	.04
Gloversville Leader Republican	(E)	7,177	.035	.035
††Ithaca Journal-News	(E)	7,711	.05	.05
Jamestown Morning Post	(M)	11,705	.04	.035
Mount Vernon Daily Argus	(E)	9,866	.05	.05
Newburgh Daily News	(E)	12,506	.06	.06
New Rochelle Standard-Star	(E)	8,458	.04	.04

		Circulation	2,500 Lines	10,000 Lines
The Sun, New York	(E)	265,440	.65	.60
New York Times	(M)	375,249	.80	.784
New York Times	(S)	653,427	1.00	.98
New York Herald-Tribune	(M)	289,674	.6435	.624
New York Herald-Tribune	(S)	366,220	.693	.672
New York World	(M)	302,199	.595	.58
New York World	(S)	593,383	.72	.58
New York Evening World	(E)	305,746	.505	.69
Niagara Falls Gazette	(E)	21,817	.07	.07
Port Chester Item	(E)	5,065	.045	.035
Poughkeepsie Star and Enterprise	(E)	13,411	.06	.06
Rochester Times-Union	(E)	73,856	.21	.20
Troy Record	(M&E)	22,426	.07	.07
††Watertown Standard	(E)	17,825	.07	.07

 A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.

 Merged as Buffalo Courier-Express, June 14, 1926.

†† Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

How Agency Man Is Studying Newspapers as Advertising Media—A. H. Packer Joins the Buchen Company—Agency Incorporated in Cleveland

AN impressed observer, by his own statement of the growing trend toward newspaper advertising, is Charles W. Hoyt, president of Charles W. Hoyt, Inc., New York advertising agency.

CHARLES W. HOYT

"Easily half of our business is placed in newspapers," Mr. Hoyt said this week in an interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "There is no question about it that this medium is doing the selling job well, very well, indeed."

Mr. Hoyt recently had the opportunity of studying newspapers in their home town environments. He realized, he explained, that it was bromidic to say that "travel broadens one," but that is exactly what he had to say when he returned to New York not long ago from a transcontinental tour during which he had a close-up view of the nation's daily press.

"Agents would do well to take frequent trips around the country to find out how the different local newspapers are serving their communities," he said. "It is impossible to obtain this information satisfactorily second-hand. Some 500 newspapers come into our office here every day. I suppose the publisher of each one thinks his is read regularly. Obviously, that is impossible.

"I have copies of six different out-of-town newspapers brought to me each day, and I read through them carefully.

"I read the advertisements most carefully. I want to see what accounts are placing heavy business in the newspapers. I want to see how the newspapers are printing the national advertising copy.

"By reading these papers I try to get the local touch. In New York we are too far away from the hinterland. We are apt to forget what the people there are thinking about.

"My ration the other day, for example, included newspapers from Atlanta, Ga., San Francisco, Bethlehem, Pa., and Pittsburgh, Pa. I looked at the national advertisements in these papers first. Then I looked to see what outstanding editorial features they were carrying, to see to what class of people they were aiming to appeal. And I also looked at the local moving picture advertisements to see what pictures were playing in these cities.

"Reading these papers this way is a revelation to the provincial New Yorker. There is no doubt about it, newspaper advertising is growing bigger and better all the time.

"And if newspapers are anxious to get more advertising and make more money for themselves, I believe they ought to refrain from negative salesmanship and increase their positive promotion. By negative salesmanship I mean attacks on press agentry. I think that issue is a dead one today. I know we haven't any customers looking for free publicity in the newspapers. By positive promotion I mean the spreading of constructive information on the best methods of using newspaper space."

A. H. Packer has joined the copy staff of the Buchen Company, Chicago advertising agency. He was formerly editor of Motor Age, and prior to that was engaged in service and engineering work in the automotive division of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa. Mr. Packer has written extensively on automotive subjects, and is author of a text book, "Electrical Trouble-Shooting on the Motor Car."

E. S. Diamond, a former president of the Advertising Club of Salt Lake City, Utah, will open an advertising agency under his own name shortly in Salt Lake City.

The Advance Advertising Corporation, of Cleveland, has been incorporated with 500 shares of no par value stock.

The Blaine-Thompson Company's advertising firm of Cincinnati is using whole pages in the Cincinnati newspapers, pointing out the firm's facilities for serving clients. This firm was established in 1901. Myer Lesser is president and treasurer; Edgar K. Woodrow is vice-president; J. L. Clough is second vice-president; and A. L. Pope is secretary.

The Z. L. Potter Company, advertising and sales counsel, of Syracuse, N. Y., is now established in its new offices in the new Syracuse Building, 212 Harrison street.

T. H. Yull, of Toronto, was elected president of the Canadian Association of Advertising Agencies at the annual meeting held in Toronto May 16. Matters of interest to advertising agencies were discussed and, in particular, ways and means of bringing to the attention of the public the value of national advertising.

DAILY WARNING PUBLIC

Beginning in its issues last week, the Kansas City Journal-Post preceded all crime and accident stories with three word captions, such as "Crime Never Pays" and "Accidents Are Avoidable."

OHIO A. P. EDITORS MEET

Payne Re-elected President—Mills Describes Russian Situation

Members of the Associated Press Editors of Ohio at their annual meeting in Columbus, May 12, elected George M. Payne, telegraph editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, president. Payne was re-elected, as were Richard Cull, editorial director of the Dayton Daily News, vice-president, and L. R. Penn, Ohio correspondent of the Associated Press at Cleveland, secretary-treasurer.

The 1928 meeting will be held in Akron, the members accepting an invitation from Charles L. Knight, editor of the Beacon-Journal, of that city.

Memorials of respect were adopted for the late Robert F. Wolfe of the Ohio State Journal and Columbus Evening Dispatch, and George M. Taylor, one of the owners of the Portsmouth Sun.

Among the speakers at the session were Edgar T. Cutter, superintendent of the Associated Press, central division; Erie C. Hopwood, editor, Cleveland Plain Dealer.

James A. Mills of the Associated Press European service, formerly corresponder at Moscow and booked to head a new Balkan bureau of the A. P., discussed the situation at present in Russia and the Balkan states.

PHOTO SPEED STUNT

Joseph Barrios, photographer for the Queens County News, Jamaica, Long Island, performed a speed feat last Sunday at the laying of the cornerstone of the $2,000,000 Mary Immaculate Hospital, Jamaica, when he photographed the ceremonies, rushed to his office, developed the picture, and returned to the ceremonies in time to have the completed picture sealed in the cornerstone. Only eighteen minutes elapsed from the time the picture was taken until Barrios returned with the print. The stunt was suggested by Eugene E. Early, publisher of the News.

Answers to ASK ME ANOTHER Page 35

	City	Population	Paper	Circulation*
1.	1. New York	5,978,694	News	1,082,976
	2. Chicago	3,074,637	Tribune	741,493
	3. Philadelphia	2,022,170	Bulletin	535,096
	4. Kansas City	455,728	Star and Times	493,092
	5. Boston	789,995	Post	392,002
	6. Detroit	1,391,297	News	311,832
	7. Baltimore	813,695	Morning and Evening Sun	248,248
	8. St. Louis	834,392	Globe-Democrat	238,594
	9. Des Moines	150,000	Register and Tribune-Capital	230,878

2. Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital.

3. Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital.

4. Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital.

5. Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital.

6. Because The Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital is fortunate enough to be published in the commercial, political and geographical center of Iowa, a state that is at the forefront in per capita wealth and highest of all states in percentage of literacy.

Circulation figures for six months ending September 30, 1926, the latest available when this ad was prepared, except Des Moines circulation is average for March, 1927.*

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Presents In This Issue, on Page 24

the first of a series of supremely important articles entitled

"KEY TO CONSUMER BUYING ABILITY"

by Nelson H. Seubert.

By the time the series is finished, the readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER will have been given weighted INDEX NUMBERS closely approximating the consumer buying ability,

For Six Different Classes of Commodities of every State, every County, every City of 10,000 or over, in the Country.

These are data which will be of tremendous usefulness to every marketer of nationally sold products, both in determining the value of his present sales and advertising efforts, and in mapping out future campaigns. They will appear only in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and will be available only to subscribers to its entire service. Hold on to your copies.

At the Recent Detroit Convention of the Association of National Advertisers

Mr. T. O. Grissell, of the George Batten Company, urged a BUYING POWER INDEX for the various trading areas of the country as THE ONLY WAY for an advertiser to determine the amount of money he is justified in spending in a given area.

Now, for the first time, is given a Buying Ability Index computed on a sane, adequate dependable basis

If you know of any advertising organization — Agency, Manufacturer, or Distributor—that, to your knowledge is not now on our subscription list, let us have, please, the name of the individual in the organization who would be most interested in receiving a copy of this first article, and a letter telling what it is all about.

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

United States Treasury Chooses Newspapers as Advertising Media—Saratoga Springs Uses 75 Papers—Resort Copy Planned in Adirondack Region

ABOUT 15,000 newspapers were picked by the United States Treasury Department for advertising copy placed to recall the approximately $1,650,000,000 of the second 4¼ per cent Liberty bonds still outstanding.

The list includes every English-language daily, weekly, semi-and tri-weekly newspaper in the United States mentioned in any available directory. It also includes 100 foreign-language newspapers. Matrices are being sent to the 2,200 daily newspapers and block stereotypes to the others.

Probably this is the most widely circulated advertisement in history. It is one of the most elaborate attempts ever made to reach all of the American people. The efforts of the Government to recall this issue compare in the breadth of their scope with those to sell the Liberty Loan issues ten years ago. This is, in fact, one of the few times the Government has advertised, and Secretary Mellon's department received special permission to do so.

Two months ago the Government offered to exchange the $3,000,000,000 of second 4¼s, then oustanding, for 3½ per cent bonds. The holders of only about $1,350,000,000 complied.

Albert Frank & Co. is in charge of the campaign.

Advertisements calling attention to the bounties of Saratoga Springs, health resort in New York State, are being placed in 75 newspapers in the State under a publicity program arranged by the Saratoga Chamber of Commerce. Frederick H. Putnam, newly appointed director of the Saratoga Chamber's information bureau, is directing the advertising campaign.

A newspaper campaign reaching across the country is being considered by chambers of commerce working together for publicity benefits in the Adirondack resort region. First intimation of the plan was given by Clarence C. Smith, secretary of the Watertown (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, at a Kiwanis club meeting at Alexandria Bay. Mr. Smith called for co-operation among the resort owners, railroads and boat lines, with a group to be known as the Guests' Association in a nation-wide advertising campaign, particularly in newspapers published within 300 miles of the Thousand Islands, but including nearly every metropolitan paper in the country.

"Mankind is 'don'ted' from the cradle to the grave," asserted Dr. Stanley Krebs of the Merchantile Institute of Art of New York in an address last week before the Cincinnati Advertisers Club on "Constructive Advertising." Dr. Krebs bewailed the use of negatives in advertising copy as being one of the worst problems to be solved by copy writers.

"Being as we are," he declared, "we are prone to say don't when we mean to say do. Negatives are almost never justified because they take the reader off on a tangent, mentally, and arouse his suspicions and often his rebellious reaction towards our product or idea.

"Negatives, words which express contrasts and unqualified superlatives, have no part in good advertising copy designed to create an interest and an acceptance. It is an infringement on the reader's freedom of mind to play up superlatives, draw unreasonable contrasts and clothe the printed thought in its negative sense," he concluded.

The George D. Roper Corporation, Rockford, Ill., has purchased the entire plant and equipment of the Kennedy Sheet Flame Radiant Heater, Brooklyn, N. Y., and will transfer the machinery to its Rockford plant, where a special factory building will be utilized to continue manufacture of the product which will be marketed as the Roper Sheet Flame Radiant Heater.

The L. S. Gillham Company, Inc., of Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, will handle from its Salt Lake City office an advertising campaign for Idaho, contract for which has been awarded. Newspaper copy in the Great Lakes district, the Rocky Mountain States, Middle Western States and the Pacific Coast will be placed. The contract was awarded by the Idaho State Board of Publicity. The Idaho legislature this year authorized an appropriation of $30,000 for publicity purposes, which was duplicated by the Idaho State Chamber of Commerce.

The Radio Manufacturers Association will discuss future advertising plans at a meeting at the Stevens Hotel, Chicago, June 13 to 17. All distributors will attend the meeting.

Sales of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, which recently announced an all-newspaper advertising program, reached the record of $185,500,000 in the year ending March 31, which is the period in the annual report published this week. The balance sheet shows cash of $13,477,607 against $12,606,180 a year ago.

The Western Electric Company has organized a new manufacturing branch at its Hawthorne works in Chicago to be known as the Specialty Products Shop. Jay W. Skinkle has been appointed superintendent.

NEW YORK B. B. B. ELECTS

James C. Auchincloss was re-elected president of the Better Business Bureau of New York, Inc., at the annual directors' meeting this week. Sherman B. Joost of Joost, Patrick & Co., was elected a director and treasurer. H. J. Kenner was reappointed general manager and recording secretary.

HOW BANK WON CLIENTS TOLD BY B. C. FORBES

Noted Financial Writer Quotes Dorsey, Vice-President of Louisville, Ky., Bank on Advertising Methods Used Successfully to Get Business

"Why not try to do likewise?" is the question B. C. Forbes, noted financial writer, asked his readers at the close of one of his newspaper columns this week, after he had told the story of how the Liberty Insurance Bank of Louisville, Ky. had enlisted close to 100,000 depositors in a city of little over 300,000.

Mr. Forbes quoted F. C. Dorsey, vice-president of the bank, as follows:

"Advertise. That is the key. In the last ten years our deposits have increased from $6,000,000 to nearly $19,000,000. The 'Home of more than 95,000 bank accounts'—we have in fact over 97,000—is due to the vision and pioneering of Mr. Huhn. It was he who recognized the importance of acquainting our citizens with elementary banking—the A. B. Cs of depositing money and withdrawing it by check.

"He started the savings habit in Louisville public schools. He made it a popular thing to do—to have a savings account. He believes in advertising, in newspaper advertising first and last.

"When thousands were buying Liberty bonds this bank spent thousands of dollars advertising its service in carrying these bonds for the people. It was a patriotic duty, but the spirit of helpfulness made thousands of friends. Service flags and gold service pins were given every depositor. Thrift was then taught as thrift was never taught before.

"Some newspaper man has said, 'When there is no news, make news.' When we want to advertise the bank, we make something to advertise. We have advertised the value of milk, cream and butter, and our advertisements tying the bank with the dairy interests have been reproduced all over the United States.

"We have filled hundreds of col with jingles to call attention to Christmas Savings Clubs, and the ji have proved the most popular ads have even run. We have asked for sl and we have printed cross-word puzz every one of them carrying a me from this bank."

GROCERS' COOPERATIVE DRI

Seattle Retail Grocers' Associatio cently formulated plans for an ener advertising campaign to popularize "corner grocery"; the campaign o the first of May and will continue April 1, 1928. Newspapers have selected by the grocers as the excl medium for their popularization paign. Each grocer participating i campaign has had his store iden by an emblem which has been ad as the official insignia of the associ and will figure in the advertising.

ADVERTISERS w h understand the Iow situation know from exper ence that the consumer market there cannot b properly sold without th use of newspapers in thes twenty-one key cities.

IOWA DAILY PRESS ASS'N
DAVENPORT, IOWA.

Ames Tribune	Iowa City Press Citi
Boone News-Republican	Keokuk Gate City
Burlington Gazette	Marshalltown Time Republican
Burlington Hawkeye	Mason City Globe-
Cedar Rapids Gazette	Gazette & Time
Centerville Iowegian & Citizen	Muscatine Journal News-Tribune
Council Bluffs Non-pareil	Oelwein Register
Davenport Democrat & Leader	Oskaloosa Herald
Davenport Times	Ottumwa Courier
Dubuque Telegraph-Herald	Sioux City Journal
Fort Dodge Messenger & Chronicle	Sioux City Tribune
Fort Madison Democrat	Washington Journal
	Waterloo Courier
	Waterloo Tribune

If Quality
of circulation is your first co sideration
The Evening St
With Sunday Morning Editio
Washington, D. C.
will have your preference—sam as it has the preference of pra tically everyone in the Nation Capital.
The Star's circulation is hom circulation—both quality an quantity—the kind that coun most with advertisers.
N. Y. Office—110 E. 42nd S Dan A. Carroll
Chicago Office—Tower Buildi J. E. Lutz

IN some cities, the "leading" newspaper may have merely a few hundred more circulation than its competitor. The Press has 40,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two evening newspapers combined—and 35,000 more net paid circulation in Pittsburgh than the other two Sunday news papers combined.
THE PITTSBURGH PRESS
A Scripps-Howard Newspaper
Member of the A. B. C.

Largest Circulation and Largest Volume of Advertising of any Daily west of the Missouri river:
LOS ANGELES EVENING HERALD
REPRESENTATIVES
Chicago, JOHN M. LEDERER, 910 Hearst Bldg.
San Francisco, A. J. NORRIS HILL, 610 Hearst Bldg.
New York, HERBERT W. MOLONEY, 604 Times Bldg.

NEW YORK STATE
Westchester County's
Fastest Growing Cities
Mount Vernon and New Rochelle and The Vicinity Towns
Are Covered Completely by
THE DAILY ARGUS
of Mount Vernon
THE STANDARD STAR
of New Rochelle
Both Members of A. B. C.
Westchester Newspapers, Inc.
Franklin A. Merriam, Pres.
Mount Vernon—New Rochelle

Where better Classified mediums are being built — the best publicity is helping build them
THE BASIL L. SMITH SYSTEM, Inc.
International Classified Advertising Counsellors
Packard Building, Philadelphia

ROTO-GRAVURE Sections for Newspapers & Magazines
STANDARD Gravure Corporation
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

)THERNER INVENTS BUNDLING DEVICE

'. Howell of Todd, S. C., Claims Ichine Does Work of Eight Men —To Test It in Charlotte Plant mailing room of the Charlotte .) Observer may be the scene of rst test under actual newspaper g conditions of a device, invented native of Todd, N. C., which is o do the work of eight men in ing, labelling and mailing news- as they come from the press.

inventor is W. M. Howell, lino- perator and mechanic, who plans to his model to Charlotte and have bserver newspaper try it out. If it cessful it will revolutionize mailing ds in large newspaper offices, and implify a labor problem that has worrying newspaper publishers ever papers reached their present stage pid publication and large circulaeady, one manufacturer of printing nery has so much faith in the de- hat he has offered Howell $18,000 e patent, but Howell has declined. Howell got his idea for the bun- attachment while he was working mailing room of the Hickory Rec- He had previously worked as a pe operator for the Morganton Herald, and even there he was im- d by the labor needed to label and newspapers—all of which had to he by hand.

r, when he was working tempo- in the mailing room of the Hickory d, he surveyed his blistered hands an hour of tying packages of apers and remarked that there to be some kind of machine to do bor and to save the hands of work- If a threshing machine could cut and oats, tie neat bundles, and ar- the bundles in straight rows across ld, why could not a similar ma- take newspapers from the press, them, label them, and put them in oper mail bags?

question sounded to Howell as if ht have a logical answer, and he out to find it.

t he began work with a wooden After some months of labor, he nt it to the point where it would apers from the press to a platform, a counting machine counted the . When the number of papers for the counting machine was set were pile, the stop against which they was automatically raised and al- the papers to slide on.

In came the task of making a ing and labeling machine. As the had to be tied in a more elabo- ashion than wheat is tied by the ing machine, the use of cord had done away with. Soon he had de- d a device which allowed the d pile of papers to slide from the ng machine to a roll of paper, they were turned over, in the wrapping paper, which was then cut with a knife similar to the one which cuts the papers on the printing press.

In the absence of cord, paste had to be used as a binding material. Again Howell went to the printing press for his model and constructed an automatic brush, which makes a stroke with heavy, strong paste as soon as the bundle is wrapped. The bundle then slides into the mail bag.

The machine can be operated directly from the press, or separately, as the foreman desires. It can wrap one bundle at a time or 12 bundles, according to the capacity of the press.

Mr. Howell explained that the counting machine, the labeling machine and the mail bags must be arranged in the same order, so that the entire operation can be carried out without error.

COAST GROUP ELECTS

Thad N. Shaw, of the Inglewood (Cal.) Daily News was elected president of the Centinela Valley Newspaper and Printers Association, at a recent meeting of that organization. Other officers elected included: W. L. Hadley, first vice-president; Bert Perrin, Gardena News, second vice-president; Lloyd P. Hamilton, secretary-treasurer.

APPROVE ADVERTISING TAX

Galveston voters last week approved a constitutional amendment authorizing a tax levy for municipal advertising. In the same election L. C. Elbert, general manager, Galveston News and Tribune, Democratic candidate for mayor, was defeated.

TO HONOR WILEY

The honorary degree of Doctor of Letters will be conferred upon Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, at the annual commencement exercises of Alfred University at Alfred, N. Y., on June 14 and 15.

TOLEDO BLADE — HOME EDITION

The Weather FOR TOLEDO AND VICINITY: Unsettled and warmer tonight; Tuesday, showers.

The Blade Is the Only Evening Newspaper in Toledo Receiving the Associated Press News Dispatches

TWO CENTS

Vol. 78—No. 104 THIRTY-TWO PAGES TOLEDO, OHIO, MONDAY, MAY 2, 1927.

COOLIDGE TOUCHES GOLDEN KEY TO OPEN NEW BLADE BUILDING

PRESIDENT STARTS PRESSES WHIRLING FOR INITIAL RUN

Magnificent Newspaper Plant, Equipped With Modern Machinery, Is Dedicated Monday.

President Pleased

President Coolidge

DEATH TAKES COMMODORE RICHARDSON

Sudden Illness Is Fatal to Noted Yachtsman and Civic Leader.

RUTH SNYDER STICKS TO HER STORY IN QUIZ

Cross-Examination Fails to Shake Stand Blaming Gray for Murder.

NEW LEVEE BREAKS ENDANGER HUNDREDS

Asks $10,000,000 for Flood Relief

Canada Now Facing Menace of Floods

Airplanes and Boats Used in Rescue Work as Flood Tears Down on Louisiana

BY ROBERT T. SMALL

One of the most modern and complete newspaper plants in the world is the new home of the Toledo Blade which occupies half a city block in Beech Street.

The sixteen Goss High Speed Low Construction Press Units and five pairs of Goss Imperial Folders have a capacity of 210,000 24-page papers per hour.

THE GOSS PRINTING PRESS COMPANY

Main Office and Factories, CHICAGO, ILL.

NEW YORK OFFICE
220 West Forty-Second Street

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE
646 Call Building

The Goss Printing Press Company of England, Ltd., London
Messrs. Edwards Dunlop Company, Ltd., Sydney, Sole Agent for Australasia

GOSS — STRAIGHT LINE — GOSS HIGH SPEED

CHOICE OF SUCCESSFUL PUBLISHERS EVERYWHERE

rvice Beyond Service

local art and engrav- ng for client papers.

NEA

NEA Service, Inc.,
1200 West Third Street
CLEVELAND, OHIO

SHOP TALK AT THIRTY

By MARLEN PEW

WE have been revelling this week in shop talk of a high order. Some weeks ago a friend at Washington informed us that J. Fred Essary would soon bring out a book that would relate the romantic story of the relations that exist between public men and newspaper correspondents at the nation's capital. A copy of the book, entitled Covering Washington, arrived in last evening's mail and kept us up until all hours. Mr. Essary, for 15 years Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, has long satisfied our star-reporter idealism. An able craftsman, an agreeable colleague, he has probably had as many interesting experiences in Washington as any correspondent of his time. He is a digger and writes the good language of direct, blunt terms, meaning exactly what is said. To me, his book is somewhat in the nature of a beat. It is distinctly "inside stuff" of public events in the historic period of Roosevelt to Coolidge, written from the advantageous position of a working reporter. Some of its pages smack of spot news. And some of its revelations concerning the practices of Congress and of impudent lobbies and of other shabby institutions that the people little dream exist are enough to bring a blush to patriotic cheeks. Covering Washington, incidentally, will give sound satisfaction to the thousands of young and old newspaper folk who are cherishing dreams of some day, somehow getting that assignment. It tells them exactly what it is all about and in the terms of a scholarly, fearless and witty reporter.

* * *

WE do not propose to swipe Mr. Essary's thunder, but some of his anecdotes concerning newspaper people are so distinctly appropriate for this wide open forum that we can't keep hands off. The book opens with a clear description of the queer society of climbers, both great and small, that is assembled in the incomparably beautiful city of Washington. There is a rare exposition of the manners and customs of those who turn the wheels of federal government. So intimate are the correspondent's contacts with the country's famous men that disillusionment comes to many, awe of sacred portals vanishes and the social and political scramble becomes absurd. Happy is the humorous newspaper man who stands at the curb, a detached witness and independent commentator on the endless parade.

* * *

MR. ESSARY estimates that full half a million words are written and sent out of Washington by the correspondents every 24 hours. He declares that Washington has become the great generator of propaganda in this country—political, religious, social and industrial. There are scores of organizations grinding such stuff, and every federal executive department is seeking publicity, with a press agent on the job. The boards and commissions have press representatives, and members of the House and Senate who can afford the luxury employ men to keep their names favorably before the public. There is a tremendous torrent of stuff dumped on the reporters in the form of hand-outs, much of it prepared by skilled craftsmen who know how to dress mendacious propaganda to appear like news. But good correspondents dig for themselves and have evolved a co-operative system of exchanging carbon copies of their stories which helps them to cover activities which no man could attend to individually. Mr. Essary regards Washington as the most competitive field in American journalism. Exclusive news is difficult to obtain, but the author cites some magnificent scoops. The late Matthew Tighe, of the Hearst newspapers, succeeded in scooping the nation on Sampson's victory over the Spanish fleet at Santiago. Maurice Low trimmed the world on the facts in the secret Four-Power Pacific Treaty negotiation for London Daily Post and New York Herald, and the latter paper was scared out by subsequent denials and apologized and fired Low out of its columns, but in less than a week his story had been officially confirmed. John Callan O'Laughlin, for Chicago Tribune, starred in the great scoop of the Russo-Japanese naval battle in the Sea of Japan. Baltimore Sun carried the first authentic story of President Wilson's illness. Robert J. Bender, of United Press, "hunched" the fact that Mr. Wilson would sail to attend the Peace Conference. Beats are possible but difficult to obtain.

* * *

THE Washington correspondent is pursued by an unending line of queries from home editors, some of which are funny. Here are some that Mr. Essary quotes: "We have information that there is something in the air. Get it and send us 1,000 words." "We understand that Congress will reconvene tomorrow after a six months' recess. Please cover." "Supreme Court about to hand down decision in local gas case. See Chief Justice White and get advance copy." "Get interview with President Roosevelt on local political situation. And tell him to make it short." "Please rush immediately names of all unknown dead soldiers from Wisconsin."

* * *

MR. ESSARY was written an excellent description of the Supreme Court. He does not, however, go into the perils of reporting the decisions of the court which old-timers have dubbed the "newspaper man's graveyard." Reporters attend like other spectators and catch what they can get as the justices speak, or mumble. Only once within modern times has the confidence of the Supreme Court been abused, Mr. Essary says, and he mentions the "leak" case that the present writer brought to the attention of Chief Justice White five years ago. The author describes the home life of the Presidents he has known, with a wealth of anecdotes concerning newspaper folk and public officials. The experiences of correspondents who have traveled with the Presidents form another thrilling chapter. Mr. Essary himself has traveled more than 300,000 miles with Presidents, from Roosevelt to Coolidge. Mr. Wilson's excursion to Europe is described in a way that is particularly interesting to the craft, since the author does not slight minor details that would naturally be the treasured recollections of an animated observer for the press. Many of his stories are new.

* * *

CONCERNING the Senate and House, Mr. Essary says: "If the Congress of the United States has fallen low in public esteem—who can doubt it?—if there is a lack of confidence in its collective wisdom, and if its passionate patriotism commands only a popular respect, that state of mind is to be charged not so much to the high crimes of that body as to its misdemeanors; not so much to the grand larceny as to the petty larceny which it practices; not so much to its transcendental failures as to its minor follies, its mountebankry, its moral cowardice. On the score of personal integrity Congress might challenge comparison with any average body of representative American citizens, notwithstanding the temptations that daily beset the national legislators. Bribery, for example, is so rare and perilous an evil that in the past 15 years exactly one member has been found guilty of selling his vote for money." But the author says Congressmen and Senators alike invite public reproach for deliberate falsification of the official records of their proceedings, for shameless increased pay through excessive mileage allowed, employment of rela on treasury funds, free seed graft, en junketing at public expense, log-ro methods to parcel out the pork. N paper men write speeches for membe the House and Senate, and make profitable business. One reporter vertly disposed of the same funeral tion to two members of the House both appeared, word for word, in Congressional Record, credited to the distinguished statesmen. Nothing easy as to start a congressional inves tion. A resolution, a brief but vi speech, a few newspaper interviews the game is on. Mr. Essary asks there is to show today for the exp ture of time and money and news space for even the most famous (o famous) investigations, such as the "money trust" inquiry, the Stanley inquiry, the Frelinghuysen coal in the Overman lobby inquiry, or any of the score or more inquisitions o past decade. He calls them simply

For the first four months this year THE TRANSCRIPT was the only Boston paper to show a gain in Financial advertising over the corresponding period last year—

23,072 lines gain

Highest Ratio of Buyers to Reade

Boston Evening Transcr

National Advertising Representative

CHAS. H. EDDY CO.

Boston New York Chica

Away Ahead!

2,196,676 - 1925

3,699,155 - 1926

1,502,479 - Gain

The New York Evening Graphic shows greater gain in lineage (41%) than any other New York paper.

CLINE SYSTE

CLINE ELECTRIC MFG. CO. CHICAGO

QUALITY MAKE SERVICE TRADE

CLINE WESTINGHOUSE

Cline-Westinghouse Double Motor-Drive with full automatic push button control is used by

Stockton Record

Stockton, Calif.

Ask them about it

CLINE ELECTRIC MFG. CO

Chicago: 111 West Washington Street

New York: 47 West 34th Street

San Francisco: First National Bank Buildin

BUILDINGS
PLANT LAYOUTS
PRODUCTION
OPERATION

An organization specializing solely in newspaper building design, manufacturing and production problems.

S. P. WESTON

Newspaper Buildings
Plant Layouts
Production, Operation

120 West 42nd Street New York

South America's Greatest Newspaper

"Buenos Aires IS the Argentine Republic"—

"If you introduce an article in Buenos Aires it is introduced in the whole of the Argentine."

"We know that LA PRENSA has a larger circulation than all the local papers put together, and that this circulation is amongst the very best class."

(Extract from letter written by the distributor in Argentina of important American products, urging his principals to place their advertising in LA PRENSA—)

National sales and distribution in Argentina can quickly be attained by advertising in LA PRENSA.

JOSHUA B. POWERS

Exclusive Advertising Representative

250 Park Avenue New York

in
Detroit—

Free Press circulation reaches 31,000 more than the total number of families owning their own homes.

The "Free Press"

"Starts the day in Detroit"

With a stable, uninflated, liberal pursed circulation productive of greater advertising returns at lower cost.

Sell COLUMBUS and the G·C·O·M

During 1926 The Columbus Dispatch carried more agate lines of paid advertising than any other Ohio newspaper.

Advertisers who use The Daily Columbus Dispatch are guaranteed a total net paid circulation of 113,678. . . . . Many, many thousands more than any other Columbus newspaper.

Dispatch

OHIO'S GREATEST HOME DAILY

rs of parliamentary mockeries, at best; pecies of polite fraud, at worst.

* * *

the Congressional Record, through he simple device of "leave to print," a gressman may print a flowing speech 50,000 words, not 100 words of which e spoken on the floor, garnishing it h such fraudulent fiction as parenthetic "applause," or "great applause" or ghter on the Democratic side." The ate does not permit this, but it does w its members to delete from the ographic record any statement made the floor which might later bring a h or call for disavowal.

* * *

HERE is no love lost between the two houses of Congress and the men chronicle their works. Hot-headed bers are forever threatening the press ery. There are elements that would blish absolute censorship if they d. Mr. Essary cites instances of y persecutions of correspondents. But newspaper men go on their way, write r news and take their chances. Mr. ary answers the familiar criticism that press is ignoring the news of Con s, displacing it with trivalities, by ng that Washington news writers give existing brand of statesmanship all it is worth and adds that if the coun will send more interesting representa s to Washington to promote interest news situations the facts will be heralded. That sounds reasonable s.

CARTOONING—"DRUDGERY THAT'S NEVER DULL"

(Continued from page 9)

e mentally, 'Be yourself,' and you n to wonder why you have never be been given a prize.

Succeeding this comes calm and simple h in the wisdom of the judges who e you their decision.

The first hundred seconds are the st. After them comes a bad half r of doubt and fear. You think that haps there has been some mistake. are fearful that certain persons will n that you have acquired $500.

Next comes the toughest time for a e-winner to live through. He must me a modesty he is far from feeling. the hearty handshake of congratula he must respond languidly and pre to belittle the achievement. He de es nobody who knows him.

Upon receiving a perfunctory hand ze and a mumbled 'Congrats' the e-winner has to suppress a desire y: 'What's the matter with you; don't realize what this means? * * *

Then, on the third day, only a hand lof letters arrive; and when two of n contain invitations to dinner but no tion of the prize you are as sore as a uncle.

There follows a steady process of ition. The head again feels quite fortable in its 7¼ size derby. The t contracts until a tight cough is no ible in the patient.

And there are those irritating fel workers who behave toward you just ney did before it all happened.

Finally, your eldest child concludes brief letter of congratulations thus: at do you do next? You go and an oculist, that's what you do!'

Can you imagine how it feels to be ulitzer Prizewinner?"

r. Harding was presented with a k by the Eagle management on rsday night this week, at the party n in his honor. Arthur M. Howe, or of the Eagle, a speaker, said Mr. ding's cartoons had been considered year by the Pulitzer prize commit ore than 200 attended the party.

NEW ITALIAN PAPER

new newspaper in Brooklyn, the ian-American Herald, made its ap rance last week. Vincenzo Campora is editor.

LIBEL CASE BEFORE COURT OF APPEALS

First of a Series of Five Suits Against New York Newspapers Heard in Albany, Tuesday

ALBANY, N. Y., May 17.—The first of a series of five libel suits brought by Mrs. Annie McCoy Campbell, New York Christian Science practitioner, against New York newspapers, to reach the Court of Appeals for argument today, was the action against the New York Evening Post, in which the Appellate Division, First Department, reversed a judgment of the New York Supreme Court of $8,000 in her favor and dismissed her complaint.

Mrs. Campbell sought to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by her because of the publication in the Post, March 30, 1922, of the details of a fraud action instituted against her and Allen A. Canton by Mrs. Elizabeth S. Nichols, a wealthy patient of Mrs. Campbell. The complaint in this action alleged that through the influence of Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Nichols was induced to purchase $10,000 worth of stock in a corporation in which Canton was interested and to loan her $6,000.

After the service of the summons and complaint the attorneys for Mrs. Campbell served an answer denying the charges of fraud and all the pleadings were filed in the county clerk's office. The papers were there seen by Bruce Rae, a New York Times reporter, who called on Mrs. Campbell and discussed the case with her. She testified at the trial that she requested him not to publish the story, which he denied. The Post re-wrote the article from the Times story.

Mrs. Nichols never prosecuted the action and two years later consented to its discontinuance when she discovered after a full investigation that Mrs. Campbell had not obtained the money and the charges of fraud could not be sustained in court.

Her counsel, W. Davis Conrad, contended the pleadings on file in the county clerk's office did not constitute a judicial proceeding of which a fair account may be published.

David Paine, appearing for the Post, argued that assuming that the pleadings served and filed may not constitute a judicial proceeding, yet when the plaintiff had made a statement for publication concerning the action, a newspaper has the right to publish a fair report of her statements and comments on the contents of the pleading and was privileged. He also declared that the trial justice erred in refusing to admit in evidence the comparative circulation of the Post and other newspapers against which similar libel actions were instituted and the settlements or verdicts received by her.

NEW INTERTYPE BOOKLET

A booklet announcing the cutting of a Garamond series for users of slug-casting machines is being sent out by the Intertype Corporation.

BY UNITED PRESS

UNITED PRESS ASSOCIATIONS
World Building New York

1ST.

FIRST in the SOUTH

FORT WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM

Fort Worth, Texas

The Official Score, Six Months Period, Ending April 1, 1927

Average Net Paid Circulation—Daily and Sunday Combined. As Obtained from Government Statements.

STAR-TELEGRAM
Fort Worth, Texas 110,065
Evening and Sunday Only (Does Not Include Record-Telegram)

COMMERCIAL APPEAL
Memphis, Tenn. 107,873
Morning and Sunday Only
(Does Not Include Evening Appeal)

TIMES-PICAYUNE
New Orleans, La. 92,781

JOURNAL
Atlanta, Ga. 84,228

NEWS
Dallas, Texas 84,181

CHRONICLE
Houston, Texas 82,650

NEWS
Birmingham, Ala. 81,490

OKLAHOMAN
Oklahoma City, Okla. 78,725

GAZETTE
Little Rock, Ark. 41,148

EXPRESS
San Antonio, Texas 39,177

The above newspapers are leaders in circulation in their respective cities

FORT WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM
RECORD-TELEGRAM
DAILY AND SUNDAY

Fort Worth, Texas

NOW OVER 125,000 DAILY OR SUNDAY

Has More Circulation Than Any Other Three Papers Combined in West Texas, One of the Richest Sections in the South, Covering 1,100 Towns.

NO CONTESTS, PREMIUMS OR SCHEMES
JUST A NEWSPAPER

AMON G. CARTER, President and Publisher
A. L. SHUMAN, Advertising Director
CHARTER MEMBER A. B. C.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

THE mail brought me the other day an autographed copy of "The Third Reader" (The Longacre Press, Inc.) by Fred Schaefer. I was sure that I took the book home with me for personal perusal. Seeking to find it to write a little comment for "Our Own World of Letters," I almost turned the rooms of the apartment upside down. But the search yielded nothing.

As nothing else had been taken from the apartment, I started a second search that was systematic. Finally I found the volume. My better half had put it among the heirlooms—the school books used by my daughter when she first began to toddle off to school.

But Schaefer's "Third Reader" does not belong in such a group. It is an advanced or adult edition. It comprises a selection from the contributions to the press made by Schaefer when he was "Press Humorist" for the Newspaper Enterprise Association. What gives the volume its name and also its charm is the manner in which the sketches are told. They are reminiscent of the decades from 1840 to 1890 when "McGuffey," "Parker & Watson," and "Butler" were best sellers.

The topics treated in Schaefer's edition are even more entertaining than the selections we read in the Little Red School House on top of the hill. The selections, "Wine Is a Mocker," "Ned Merton's Noble Revenge," "The Ant," "Susan Suetpudding's Lesson," and "Cuthbert's Courtesy" have the flavor of old wine; but they are put up in new bottles, though retaining the old labels.

In the days when the American Press Humorist Association was an active organization and met annually at a convention that reminded one of a gathering of undertakers, Schaefer frequently made the hit at the public banquets with his recitations that parodied the readers of our kid days. The fact that so many wanted these recitations in permanent form doubtless explains the present volume. A few slight changes are made as in "Wine Is a Mocker" in order to bring the subject matter strictly up to date and in accordance with the Volstead Act.

"The Third Reader"—advanced or adult edition—will please every newspaper man except the one who lacks a sense of humor. One thing that the "Reader" lacks, however, is the inimitable way in which Schaefer used to recite these pieces at the dinners given the press humorists by such newspapers as the Buffalo News, the Boston Post, the Detroit News—just to mention a few.

Of course the best thing in the volume before me is the inscription on the first page. But even without that, Schaefer's "Third Reader" is a wonderful bargain for any one who wants a brand of humor that can be found in no other container except that having the Schaefer trade mark. Justice demands, however, that some credit go to Schaefer's side partner, A. D. Condo, who has furnished the illustrations.

P. S. Don't overlook the glossary at the end of each lesson.

* * *

THE life story of Melville E. Stone is far more interesting than most novels. He has told it himself in "Fifty Years a Journalist" (Doubleday, Page & Company). Newspaper folk who want pivotal points in his career boiled down to a good newspaper story will find it in the little brochure entitled "Melville E. Stone and the Associated Press" (James T. White & Company).

The booklet traces with special emphasis Stone's journalistic career from 1864 when he began his first work in journalism as a reporter on the Chicago Tribune, through various editorial jobs he held on Chicago newspapers, down to his retirement as general manager of the Associated Press in 1918. The story of Stone is of course closely linked with the story of the Associated Press—a fact well brought out in his brochure.

* * *

THE Houghton Mifflin Company publishes this week "Covering Washington" by J. Frederick Essary. Mr. Essary, as every reader of EDITOR & PUBLISHER knows, is the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun. If he covers Washington as well as he covered "Maryland in National Politics"—a book previously published—he has done a good job and produced a book that members of the working press will want to read.

* * *

A BOOK that really has charm is "Charm" (Rae D. Henkle Co.) by Mary Margaret McBride and Alexander Williams—two well-known newspaper people.

Miss McBride, one of the authors of "Jazz," was formerly with the Cleveland Press and later with the New York Evening Mail. More recently she has been doing free lance work—especially for the Saturday Evening Post—and begins this month a regular department in the Country Gentleman. Mr. Williams broke into the newspaper business on the Post in Washington, D. C., but later hitched himself to the Evening Post of New York. For the past two or three years he has been doing a lot of work to popularize science and psychology. Even Mr. Henkle of the publishing house is an old newspaper man. Old New York Herald men who gather once a week for dinner at the Newspaper Club often speak of the days when Mr. Henkle was foreign editor and later Sunday editor under Commodore Bennett.

Few authors are so delightfully frank as those of this volume who in "Not a Preface" speak out as follows:

> We make no claim for the scientific thoroughness, nor the exactitude of this book. It is our opinion only. Our material is likely to be only as exact as our biases will permit us to be. The phrase "trained observer" is often used in schools of journalism and in the obituary notices of good journeymen writers. It means little. Pretty nearly any normal person sees a lot that is going on in the world and practically every one, when called upon to report what he has seen, reports something different. It is all a question of point of view and previous experiences.

The volume opens with a chapter of definitions as to what charm really means. The next chapter carries the rather amusing head "We Expose Our Ignorance." It tells what charm is and is not. Of local American interest is the chapter, "Yankee Doodle Charmers," which runs the gamut from George Washington to "Jimmie" Walker, the present mayor of New York. But why list chapter headings?

For members of the working press Part III has some practical value, for it limits itself to the etiquette of the table. If reporters knew how, frequently they were observed at banquets and how critically they were watched by those at other tables they might be a little more careful how they handle their knives and forks. A critical observer recently remarked, as he glanced at the press table, "You can tell to what paper each one of those reporters belongs by the way he eats." But "Charm" is mentioned in "Our Own World of Letters" because those connected with the writing and also with the printing are newspaper folk.

* * *

FABIAN FRANKLIN who resigned his professorship of mathematics at John Hopkins University to become editor of the Baltimore News—a post which he held until the News was purchased by Frank A. Munsey—opens McNaught's Monthly for June with an article of timely interest on "The Logic of the Sacco-Vanzetti Case." Although readers are familiar with this case, they will be glad to have such a scientific analysis as that given by Mr. Franklin. For over ten years Mr. Franklin, after leaving the Baltimore News, was chief editorial writer of the New York Evening Post.

Elmer T. Peterson, editor of the Wichita (Kan.) Beacon, prints in the same issue a local story, "A Kansas Phenomenon." In it he discusses the prophecy of Dr. Eugene Noble, secretary of the Juilliard Foundation, that "Kansas will be the musical center of the United States in 25 years."

Vincent Starrett, whose story is headed "The Battle of Xochimilco," describes a battle that was started to accommodate a group of newspaper correspondents. At the time of the events described in the story he was a member of the staff of the Chicago Daily News.

Another newspaper man to contribute to this issue of McNaught's is Russell Wilks, a member of the editorial staff of the Detroit News. The head describes the contents, "Prohibition in Detro All Wet!"

Short but right to the point is concluding paragraph which tells of passing of the official spokesman of White House.

* * *

WHENEVER an editor is asked give a list of books which ought be studied by any one who wants to bre into the newspaper business, one volu sure to be included is "The Autobiograp of Benjamin Franklin." High Sch days have made this classic autobiograp so familiar that any comment about contents would be obviously out of pl in "Our Own World of Letters." Bu new edition edited and containing an troduction by Oral Sumner Coad, P fessor of English at Rutgers Univers may be mentioned in passing. Publish by the Macmillan Company, it is m keted at a very low cost.

Personally I reread the volume w profit. In these days of newspa strings, multiple presses, wonderful ne gathering organizations, syndicated c toons, etc., it is an amusing diversion take a backward glance at the conditi obtaining when B. Franklin was a print first in Boston and later in Philadelp

A fact frequently overlooked is t Franklin's autobiography mentions philosopher's connection with Andr Hamilton, that great Philadelphia law who so ably defended John Peter Zen publisher of the New York Journal, possibly the most important libel s American journalism has ever seen.

Thanks should be given to Profes Coad of Rutgers for several notes t clear up points in the text that were cleared in previous readings of the bo SCIENCE Service of Washingt D. C., has published a somewhat markable biographical sketch of the E. W. Scripps. The booklet is from pen of William E. Ritter, the presid of Science Service, and sets forth clea Scripps's philosophy of life.

* * *

Especially interesting is the acco of how Scripps founded in 1878

The World

These two newspapers offer the most powerful all-day service in New York available as a unit under a single contact. The 600,000 DAILY WORLD — EVENING WORLD readers constitute a highly concentrated force to be reckoned with in any campaign designed to effect distribution in Greater New York.

The Evening World

Pulitzer Building, New York
Tribune Tower, Chicago

Key to the World's Greatest Market

The LONG ISLAND POST covers 60 towns and villages at the door of the world's biggest city.

Serving a community of close to 250,000 population.

More than 40,000 commuters, daily, traveling between these towns and New York City.

Edited and published by former Park Commissioner Edward T. O'Loughlin, of Greater New York, whose personal, intimate writings have brought the paper into close touch with a great clientele.

Issued twice a week—
Tuesday and Friday

Cleanly edited, perfect in typography and metropolitan in appearance.

A big city newspaper in the richest rural region in America.

Growing weekly in circulation and constantly winning the confidence of new readers.

LONG ISLAND POST

POST BUILDING LYNBROOK, L. I.

veland Penny Press on $10,000 "made ilable to him by other members of the pps family." Scripps's newspaper osophy is thus set forth:

et the truth just as far as possible; write essence of it so simply and clearly that body who can read it at all can understand nd publish it so cheaply that anybody who any money at all can afford to buy the tion.

nother quotation may be given even igh it reprints something that has ady appeared in the columns of TOR & PUBLISHER:

EDITOR & PUBLISHER for March 20, 1926, his quotation from the first issue of that paper: "We simply intend to support good and condemn bad ones; support good sures and condemn bad ones, no matter party they belong to. We shall tell no about persons or policies, for love, malice oney. It is no part of a newspaper's busi- to array itself on the side of this or that y, or fight, lie and wrangle for it. The spaper should simply present all the facts editor is capable of obtaining, concerning and measures, before the bar of the pub- and then, after having discharged its duty witness, be satisfied to leave the jury in case—the public—to find the verdicts." In r to see the full significance of this declara- of policy, it should be read in the light he extent to which we know newspapers of country at that period were party organs— founded and run primarily in the interest either the Republican or the Democratic y. A "party paper" in the earlier sense s hardly to exist now anywhere in the ed States.

hese two quotations show the news- er truthfulness and reliability for ch Scripps stood. The booklet is valuable because of what it has to about The Day Book, an adless news- er which he started in Chicago and ch he discontinued at the opening of war—possibly on account of the in- sed cost of white paper.

he pamphlet naturally concludes with connection which Mr. Scripps had the organization which has put out booklet in his memory.

* * *

I may be pardoned for using an over- worked phrase, "The Making of Mod- Journalism" (George Allen & Unwin, ., of London) by Harold Herd meets ng felt want for a little volume that forth in a comprehensive way Bri- journalism of today. The volume its itself to changes that have been le in the press and makes no preten- s of being a complete history of the ern newspaper press in England.

ccording to Mr. Herd, the transfor- ion of the British press was mainly work of three men. Of these three, were the sons of Congregational isters, and the other was a barrister's he author is very insistent that popu- journalism in England is essentially a product and not an adaptation of erican journalism. He pays a nice ute to the compactness of London spapers and by way of contrast re- ks that "it is one of the paradoxes the United States that a people who re hustle endure bulky journals which, properly digested, would leave no time the day's work."

n one respect Mr. Herd admits that press of his country has been greatly uenced by American journalism. This found in the exploiting of the human rest in the news. Yet even here he sts that the limits of good taste are in eral more rigidly drawn in Great tain than in America.

he first chapter tells the story of the th of popular journalism in England. e pioneer, according to the volume, s George Newnes, who incarnated a v journalistic policy—that of giving ders what interested them rather than at should interest them. The chapter cludes with a fairly long biographical tch of Mr. Newnes.

he second chapter takes up "The rbarian of the North"—to quote its dline. This was William Thomas ead, "who may be said to have taken at a run during the 41 dramatic years journalistic activity that began with editorship of the Northern Echo in 71." The Northern Echo, it may be marked in passing, was a half penny per established at Darlington and is day one of the string of papers con- olled by Sir Charles Starmer. A re- nt biography of Stead was reviewed in this department, but it did not contain this tribute from Lord Northcliffe:

How much he did to relieve the tedium of the dull evening newspapers of the early eighties, was but part of the great revolution which he effected in journalism.

The story of the third of the trio opens with chapter three. It traces the life history of Alfred Charles William Harmsworth who began his journalistic career at the age of sixteen on the Young Folks' Budget, owned by James Henderson who bought from Stevenson a serial story with the unpromising title of "The Sea Cook" and rechristened it with the undying name of "Treasure Island." Harmsworth was created baronet in 1904 and baron in 1905 when he took the title of Lord Northcliffe.

A separate chapter tells the story of "The Surprise of the Daily Mail." Another chapter takes up "The Rise of C. A. Pearson." A brief chapter deals with "Pictorial Journalism" and a longer one with "The Renaissance of the Times." The volume concludes with a chapter headed "Newspaper Makers of Today and Yesterday" — brief biographical sketches of the leading personalities in modern British journalism.

* * *

A RECENT issue of Press News, published by Goucher College of Baltimore, contained an article on journalism as a career for women by Harry T. Baker, and one on the ethics of modern journalism by Wilfred A Beardsley.

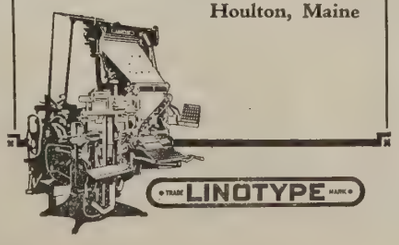
* * *

HARPER & BROTHERS announce for immediate publication "Modern English Playwrights" by John W. Cunliffe, director of the Pulitzer School of Journalism. The advance notice says Professor Cunliffe's volume is a short history of the English drama from 1825 down to the present.

* * *

AT the newspaper Club and elsewhere I hear a good deal about a forthcoming novel by Albert Frederick Wilson, formerly on the staff of the Literary Digest and later managing editor of Leslie's Weekly. Evidently some of the advance sheets have strayed outside trade channels and started something. Those who have read the original manuscript say that the story makes no bid whatsoever for the best seller class but is as simple and unassuming as "Cranford." The editors of book sections may be interested in this tip. The title of the novel is "Pok O'Moonshine," to be published next month by Dodd, Mead & Company.

* * *



EARNEST ELMO CALKINS is among the contributors to the current issue of The Scholastic Editor with an article entitled "The Way Advertising Works." The article is a general reply to the many letters that come to Mr. Calkins from undergraduates who want to know about the opportunities advertising affords as a career. In answering their inquiries Mr. Calkins offers some very practical advice to professionals.

From the Linotype Mailbag

Appreciates Service

Please accept our thanks for your promptness in sending matrices and repairs. We appreciate your service.

Times Publishing Company
Houlton, Maine

Home Building on Long Island

is increasing steadily every year. A continuous stream of families is moving into new homes in prosperous Long Island towns.

In their new environment these families will assume new buying habits. The new suburban life will become their life. The suburban home town newspapers will take their place in these new homes, because they are a necessary factor in suburban life.

Newspapers so intimately associated with family life offer national advertisers a background of unequaled reader interest for their advertising. Products with national distribution will find the following list of newspapers a valuable key to the rich Long Island market.

Town	Paper	Publication Days	Circulation	Rate per Inch
Babylon	Leader Suffolk	Friday	3,400	.35
Bay Shore	Consolidated Press (South Shore Sentinel, Islip Press)	Thursday	2,750	.45
Elmhurst	Newtown Register	Saturday	2,500	.75
Farmingdale	Post	Friday	1,100	.30
Floral Park	The Sunrise Trailer	Friday	5,200	.60
Freeport	Recorder	Friday	3,100	.42
Great Neck	North Hempstead Record	Wed.	2,400	.50
Jamaica	Queens County News	Friday	14,675*	1.00
Lynbrook	New Era	Tue. & Fri.	2,800*	.60
Mineola	Central Island Weeklies (Hicksville, Westbury, New Hyde Park)	Friday	4,000	1.00†
Oyster Bay	Enterprise & Pilot	Friday	2,000	.45
Patchogue	Advance	Tue. & Fri.	3,226*	.55
Queens Village	Queens-Hollis Times	Thursday	8,000	1.00
Woodhaven	Leader-Observer	Thursday	8,600*	.84

*Sworn Net Paid Circulation.
†This rate includes the Farmingdale Post.
Figures not marked with a star indicate total run of paper.

MAIN STREET WANTS NEWS OF WALL STREET

(Continued from page 7)

Mail carriers	115
Mechanics	530
Messengers	91
Nurses	274
Painters	182
Plasterers	60
Plumbers	257
Policemen	347
Printers	335
Railroad men	312
Seamen	51
Secretaries	314
Bankers and brokers	65
Dentists	63
Doctors	146
Lawyers	77
Managers	496
Manufacturers	153
Merchants	926

It will be noted that, as only purchasers of 50 shares were included each of the above subscriptions represented an investment of at least $5,000.

Two electric companies recently analyzed their sale of stock to 13,856 purchasers. Here are the occupations of the nine largest groups who purchased:

Housewives	3,347
Miners	1,054
Clerks	949
Salesmen	401
School Teachers	336
Laborers	326
Stenographers	250
Farmers	237
Grocers and Butchers	178

One of the smallest groups in the above was listed under "capitalists." The housewives outnumbered them one hundred to one.

In the days when financial interest and activity was confined to class, rather than mass, a carpenter fell off a five-story building in front of a bank. As the injured man was being placed in an ambulance, the president of the bank said to him:

"Don't you know you are apt to cause a run on our bank, by getting hurt in front of it this way?"

The old time note-shaving banker, with the pepper-and-salt suit and mutton chop whiskers, has gone down the chute to oblivion, along with the out-moded financial editor. He is, more than ever before, an economist and a builder and, he is realizing that advertising is a creative, constructive and energizing force. Advertising has played a tremendous part in the steady increase in the number of savings bank depositors during the last few years. On Jan. 1, 1918 there were in the United States 10,631,586 savings account depositors, with deposits aggregating $11,115,790,000. On Jan. 2, 1925, depositors numbered 38,867,994 and their deposits aggregated $20,873,552,000. Thus, in a period of seven years, savings account depositors increased 28,236,408 and the aggregate of their deposits increased $9,757,762,000.

These figures give an additional index of the distribution of wealth in America, and the increasing interest in finance. Furthermore, the banks do not encourage depositors to leave their savings indefinitely in the savings bank. Investors seeking counsel are advised to invest, above certain amounts to be left in the bank, in sound securities. The savings bank statistics are not alone a record of the distribution of wealth; they reflect countless transactions unheard of before this era of "democratic finance."

John W. Prentiss, while President of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, made the following statement:

"More than 90 per cent of the securities of this country are bought with less than a $10,000 a year income. The average retail bond sale is between $2,000 and $3,000, so you see our business depends on the common people."

George F. Roberts, Vice-President of the National City Bank, said:

"It requires no stretch of the imagination to foresee that the great organizations for production, transportation and distribution will be practically owned by their employers and by the people whom they serve."

Stuart MacKenzie writes in the American Magazine:

"An amazing thing has been happening in this country. Millions of men and women who never before had bought a bond or a share of stock have been doing it during the last ten years. As this has put them in the same class with Rockefeller, or with any other rich man whose surplus money goes into that kind of investment, they have a perfect right to say: 'Me and Rockefeller.'"

All of which sums up in the inescapable conclusion that financial news and interpretation, swiftly and intelligently handled is an indispensable activity of any newspaper which is alive to its duty and opportunity of supplying its readers with that which is timely, important and interesting.

Editors who printed not only routine financial news, but who thus intelligently interpreted it, and directed it to a constantly widening field of popular interest, began to assume leadership in financial reader interest, circulation and advertising.

Without exception, the newspapers of America which have gained the ascendancy in this field have found that it opened new doors to lucrative advertising patronage. The curve of issue advertising has gone steadily upward; utilities are spending increasing amounts not only on security advertising but on merchandise advertising; associations of bankers have constantly furthered increases in trust advertising; good will, or institutional advertising is steadily increasing in volume.

While the bulk of issue advertising orginates in New York, the 266 leading public utility companies of America continually schedule advertisements of local origin, particularly in the fields of institutional and merchandising advertising. Although in the past advertising lists have been bound by tradition and custom, advertisers are now beginning to "go where money is." They are examining the relative purchasing power of different communities, and the relative pulling power of different newspapers. The papers which have faithfully done their job of reporting and interpreting the epochal shift of interest from speculative to investment finance—that is the papers who print finance for the many and not for the few—are the ones which are beginning to profit from this new activity.

To repeat, housewives, laborers, artisans and clerks are now investors and readers of financial news. Financial news is big news and important news. It is an index to a newspaper's grasp of what is fundamentally timely and important.

More than two billions of dollars in securities is changing hands every month. Millions are being spent in advertising. Utilities are carrying through a $5,000,000,000 expansion program, and they are advertising for the money. Trust advertising is increasing everywhere throughout the country. These advertising appropriations will be spent in newspapers which have mobilized and stimulated potential investors by superior financial pages.

There is an old newspaper folk tale about a managing editor who offered a prize to his staff for the best definition of news. The office telephone operator defined news as "anything new, strange or unexpected." She was awarded the prize and put on the local staff. Covering a society wedding, she reported the next day that she had nothing to write becau the bridegroom did not appear. As t city editor sent her back to her switc board, he asked, "Where did you get th remarkable definition of news?" "O that!" she replied, "Why I got that o of the dictionary."

This particular editor lost out on a b piece of news because he went out aft a formula instead of a story. Mass ci culation formulas are as elusive and u dependable as the fountain of youth. big story is always news, and news circulation and circulation is advertising and financial news is the big story toda and tomorrow.

TUCKER JOINS N. Y. TELEGRAM

Ray T. Tucker has resigned as Was ington correspondent for the New Yo Evening Post to become Washington co respondent for the New York Telegra

An aerial taxi company has begun bus ness in Detroit. Passengers are hopin that there will be no tips.—New Yo Evening Post.

National Advertising

Year after year National Advertisers use more space in THE SUN than in any other New York evening newspaper.

During the first four months of 1927 THE SUN published 1,333,452 lines of National Advertising—leading the second New York evening newspaper by 220,592 lines.

The Sun
280 Broadway New York

Thorough Coverage in One of the World's Richest Buying Centers—Coupled with the Ability to Produce Results

Pittsburgh Gazette Times
(Morning and Sunday)
AND
PITTSBURGH CHRONICLE TELEGRAPH
(Evening except Sunday)

These newspapers in News and Advertising have the confidence of their readers. Their readers have the power to purchase.

Sold Singly or Combined

URBAN E. DICE, Nat'l Advg. Mgr.
Gazette Square, Pittsburgh, Pa.

E. M. BURKE, Inc.,
1457 Broadway, New York.
122 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago.
Constitution Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

R. J. BIDWELL COMPANY,
742 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Times Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.
White-Henry-Stuart Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

Over 260,000 Homes in Michigan served by Booth Newspapers

The Grand Rapids Press
The Flint Daily Journal
The Saginaw News Courier
The Kalamazoo Gazette
The Jackson Citizen Patriot
The Bay City Times Tribune
The Muskegon Chronicle
The Ann Arbor Times News

National Advertising Representatives

I. A. KLEIN
50 East 42nd Street
New York City

J. E. LUTZ
6 N. Michigan Ave.
Chicago, Ill.

IN THE City of Homes
The Philadelphia Record
Opens the Door of 150,000 Families Every Morning

The Baltimore News

has the largest circulation of any evening newspaper in the entire South 137,022

Baltimore looks to THE NEWS for the news.

Leads Again in 1926

In 1926 the Waco Times-Herald carried a total of 3,756,935 lines of local display advertising and showed a gain of—165,066 lines.

The Waco Times-Herald led the other Waco paper by 313,320 lines local display advertising in 1926.

In Waco, it's the

Waco Times-Herald

The Old, Substantial Paper, now in its thirty-sixth year.

Waco, Texas

Represented Nationally by The S. C. Beckwith Special Agency.

THE WELFARE COMMITTEE
of the
INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION MANAGERS ASSOCIATION

Can supply you with competent circulation men of capacity and ability capable to take entire charge of your department or to fill important posts in the department.

Address the Secretary-Treasurer please, Mr. Clarence Eyster, care Star Building, Peoria, Ill.

AD TIPS

B. Akin Co., Frick Building Annex. rgh. Handling the account of the Gulf g Company, makers of an insecticide, n to use some newspapers.

r Adv. Company, Cincinnati. Is pre- a small list of papers in the middle- or the advertising of Beaver-Remmers- Soap Company, Cincinnati, to appear the fall.

re Batten Company, 332 South Michigan Chicago. Making up a tentative list nch Carbon & Battery Company, Madi- is.

as M. Bowers Company, 304 South avenue, Chicago. Sending copy on Goldstone Company, Chicago, to a few ctions. Will release some copy within t few weeks on a new product of the Institute, Chicago, called "Wallace's land & Moore, Federal Commerce Trust g, St. Louis, Mo. Will place some adver- ith newspapers which can secure a bottler towns for the Mount Cabin Products y, St. Louis (Soft drink).

Gibbs Company, International Life g, St. Louis, Mo. Will handle the ac- f the Superior Hat Company, St. Louis.

M. Byerly Co., Renton Building, id, O. Now placing account of the aint & Varnish Co., Cleveland.

art-Carey Corporation, Times Building, ork. Has secured account of the Neslo Corporation, New York, "Picturette," tomatic photomachine.

bers Advertising Company, Starks g, Louisville, Ky. Sending schedules on Portland Cement Company, Louisville, all list of cities in the central west. field & Co., 14 East Jackson boulevard, Issuing additional copy for Sunday ns on Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, O. Will send copy on Lincoln Motor npany, Detroit, Mich., to roto sections.

ll, Williams & Co., 612 North Michigan Chicago. Placing the account of Mme. ford Laboratories, Chicago, manufactur- mouth wash.

y Adv. Company, 1501 Locust street, is, Mo. Will start a newspaper cam- n Coca Cola Company, Atlanta, Georgia. nd of the month. Is in charge of the ng in the near future, in Omaha, St. a few coast towns and a few Texas f a new shoe cream, Dellemode, being by the Barton Mfg. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Ensign Company, United Trust Build- tsburgh, Pa. Expects to use copy in ers, some black and white, some roto, on Laboratories (Fat Reducer) Pittsburgh. Also expect to use a few roto sections on the advertising of Iris Laboratories (Eye Wash) Pittsburgh.

Erwin, Wasey & Co., 844 Rush street, Chicago. Is releasing schedules to newspapers on the Northern Paper Mills, Green Bay, Wis.

Arthur Hirshon Company, Inc., 1440 Broadway, New York. Now handling account of the Luxurease Manufacturing Company, makers of the Luxurease, a newly patented porch swing.

Kling-Gibson Company, 310 South Michigan avenue, Chicago. Has secured the accounts of the Common Brick Manufacturers Association, The Kelley Island Lime & Transport Company and the National Builders' Supply Association all of Cleveland; the Brick Manufacturers' Association of New England, Boston; and the Chicago Brick Exchange, Chicago.

Eugene McGuckin Company, 1600 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa. Expects to do some advertising in the near future on Challenger, the new car of the Stutz Motor Car Company, Indianapolis.

Homer McKee Co., Kalin Building, Indianapolis, Ind. Has selected 22 cities for the new schedules, consisting of five pages, on Marmon Motor Car Company, Indianapolis.

Lewis H. Mertz Company, 400 North Michigan avenue, Chicago. Now placing the account of Bonney Company, Chicago.

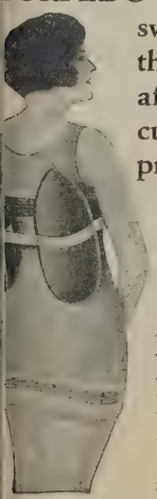
Nash Motor Car Company, Kenosha, Wisconsin. Copy is to be reinstated in newspapers next month.

Nelson Company, 1326 West Washington street, Chicago. Has been named to handle the account of the Allied Florists association of Illinois.

Olmstead, Perrin & Leffingwell, Inc., 250 Park avenue, New York. Has secured account of the Health Products Corporation, Newark, N. J., to advertise their product "Feen-a-mint."

Potts-Turnbull Company, 6 North Michigan avenue, Chicago. Have been appointed to place the advertising of L. P. Larson Jr. Company, Chicago, gum manufacturers.

Robbins & Pearson, 390 E. Broad street, Columbus, O. Will place the account of Hance Manufacturing Company, Westerville, O. (Lax-a-chu).



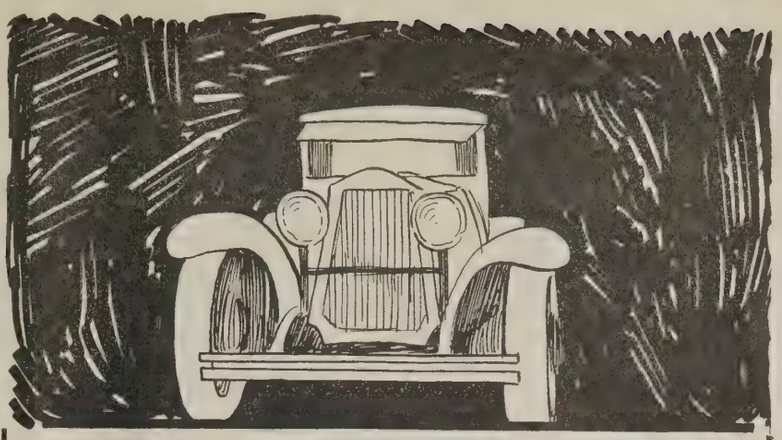
Story-Bellack Company, Wausau, Wis., will place the advertising of the Wisconsin Land-O-Lakes this year. The Chicago contact on Land-O-Lakes is 35 South Wabash avenue.

Sweeney & James, 1632 Euclid avenue, Cleveland. Have the account of Westinghouse Union Battery Company, Swissvale, Pennsylvania.

Young & Rubicam, 285 Madison avenue, New York. Has secured account of the Borden Company, New York. Malted Milk and Evaporated Milk advertising will continue to handled by the H. K. McCann Company.

Circulation Builders For the Summer Months

Every man, woman and child wants this practical TORPEDO FLOAT that changes bathers into swimmers. The TORPEDO FLOAT is the simplest, safest, latest, most sought after swimming device made. As a circulation builder it has no equal. The price is so low that every newspaper, and magazine can afford to use it in substantial quantities.



THE BIFF BAG

If you want a good all year around premium, the BIFF BAG is your best bet. Every boy and girl likes it and they will want it. The price is right. Send for quantity prices and catalog containing a number of other Airubber products.

Publishers Space Selling Service
West 45th Street New York City

The Automobile Market in ILLINOIS—

There are 1,314,101 families in Illinois. In 1926—1,062,584 Passenger Cars were registered in the State, averaging nearly one car per family.

1425 dealers were engaged in selling these cars to Illinois car buyers, while 5247 garages and auto supply houses served and supplied the spare parts for these cars.

Not only will you find sufficient buying power in Illinois for automobiles and supplies, but the merchandising outlets are so numerous and so well distributed thruout the State that a newspaper campaign ties up your consumer and dealer and reaches him in every nook and corner of the State.

These newspapers listed below are profitable mediums to reach Illinois' great army of automobile buyers. If you want quick, thorough and economical distribution, plan your campaign in these dailies—they produce Results.

	Circulation	Rates for 2,500 Lines	Rates for 10,000 Lines
Alton Telegraph .....(E)	11,035	.05	.05
†Aurora Beacon-News .....(E)	19,440	.07	.07
Belleville Advocate .....(E)	6,840	.03	.03
†Chicago Daily Journal .....(E)	125,007	.26	.24
Freeport Journal-Standard .....(E)	9,791	.05	.05
†Joliet Herald News .....(E)	20,107	.07	.07
†Mattoon Journal Gazette .....(E)	5,857	.04	.04
Moline Dispatch .....(E)	12,292	.05	.05
Monmouth Daily Review Atlas..(E)	5,574	.035	.035
Peoria Star .....(S) 23,872 (E)	31,103	.085	.07
Waukegan Daily Sun .....(E)	5,666	.035	.035

A. B. C. Statement, March 31, 1927.
†Government Statement, March 31, 1927.

POWER OF EDITORIALS DECLINING IN U. S.

Lack of National Newspapers One Cause Says T. E. Cadett, British Newspaper Man—Nation Too Large to Influence

The editorial in England is of vastly greater importance than the editorial in America, according to Thomas T. E. Cadett, first holder of the junior fellowship of the English-Speaking Union, who addressed students of the Columbia School of Journalism last week on "The English Press" at the New York school.

"In my eight months in the United States, I have yet to come to any place where the editorial has any importance," he said. "The United States has shown a decay in the power of its editorial voice."

The reasons for the better quality and greater influence of the British editorials he ascribed to the difference in the size of the two countries and the class circulation obtained by the papers across the water.

"You have no such thing as a national newspaper," he declared. "The reason is largely geographic; in England the London Times can be put anywhere in the country within 12 hours, and it is consequently known and respected throughout the nation. It can draw on the intelligentsia for its circulation, and does not have to depend on the feeble-minded. There is a vastly different scheme of distribution in the Kingdom."

"There are five or six nationally-known papers and no other class between these and the small-town papers. The larger papers devote their editorial page to discussions of national topics, leaving local matters to be disposed of by the local press. In the states, the opinion of a paper is limited by the radius of its distribution and its voice on national matters is drowned out by the clamor of local affairs."

Mr. Cadett had a word of praise for American journalism as a whole, tempering it, however, with his observations on the less-conservative papers. "American journalism at its highest could hardly be better," he said, "—and at its worst it is unspeakable."

"The quality of American journalism is different from that of English in that it is profoundly personal," he explained. "In England we are interested in the political situations, and in America you are interested in the personalities involved."

"Journalism is a biting thing like the stage," he declared. "Once you have become tainted with it, you aren't much good for anything else. The most fascinating part of a fascinating profession is that of a foreign correspondent. It is more important than the position of an ambassador, for he can present the people of one nation to his own countrymen in any light he wishes."

Mr. Cadett is 28 years old, and is the first Junior Fellow visiting the United States on an English-Speaking Union fellowship, which enables two British journalists to spend a year in America to study American life and the American press. He was in 1924 the London Times correspondent to Alsace-Lorraine. Since his arrival in America he has visited California and worked on the Chicago Tribune and newspapers of other large cities in order to compare news methods in widely separated parts of the country. He is now a reporter on the New York Times.

EAGLE CLUB ELECTS

The Eagle Club, an organization of the employes of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, held its annual meeting recently and the following officers were elected: Chester Nolan, assistant advertising manager, president; Herbert F. Gunnison, president and publisher of the Eagle reelected honorary president; John Bossert, assistant cashier, vice-president; Miss Harriet Hoppe, secretary; J. Joseph Feenan, treasurer, and John J. Farley, sergeant at-arms.

ADDRESSOGRAPH LITIGATION

Battle for Control Being Waged Among Chicago Firm's Stockholders

The Adrressograph company, which started in 1896 with $25,000 capital and has now grown into a world-wide business worth nearly $7,000,000, with Chicago offices at 90 West Van Buren street, is involved in a battle for control among its stockholders.

A group of shareholders, led by Frank H. Wood of Lincoln, Neb., appeared before a federal judge here May 12 to ask an injunction restraining President Henry C. Hubbard, Secretary David Hall, John B. Hall and others from disposing of a surplus of $2,500,000 said to be accumulated, and also asking federal supervision of the annual meeting of stockholders to be held May 23.

United States Senator Deneen represented the defendant officers of the Addressograph company, and William T. Alden represented the petitioners.

CALIFORNIA DAILY SUSPENDS

Oxnard Tribune Leaves Field After Two and One-Half Years' Publication

The Oxnard (Cal.) Tribune after an existence of two and a half years announced its suspension in its May 14 issue. The paper was first established in 1925 as a morning daily but changed early in 1927 to an evening daily. Norman H. Parks, formerly eitor of the Holtville (C Tribune, was publisher.

Arrangements have been made with Ventura (Cal.) County Star, publishe Ventura, ten miles distance, to take the Tribune's subscription list.

The Oxnard (Cal.) Daily Courier, lished by J. J. Krouser and Sons es lished with the city in 1897, as an eve daily, remains alone in the field.

IMPROVING PLANT

The Ventura County (Cal.) Star bought a 20-page Goss straight-line p with complete stereotyping equipm An addition to the Star's present buil is being erected to house the new chinery which is expected to be inst by July 1.

Supplies and Equipment

Drive and Control for Newspaper Presses

A representative installation which will soon be made on Hoe Presses is that of two 100-h.p., d-c. equipments on two 4-unit presses at St. Louis, Mo., Times.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Modern Composing Room Furniture

as made by us will speed up production and reduce costs—a real saving in your Pay Roll. Are you interested? If so, consult your regular dealer in printers' supplies or write us direct.

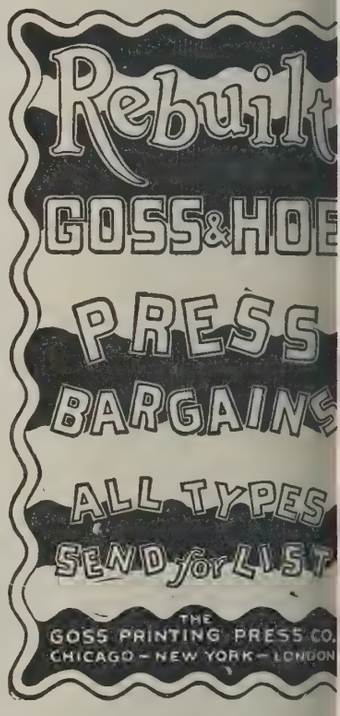
Do it now!

HAMILTON MFG. CO.
TWO RIVERS, WIS.

FOR SALE

COX-O-TYPE WEB PERFECTING FLAT BED PRESS

Prints 2-4-6-8 pages directly from the type forms. Practically new, in use only two years. Will sell at a bargain. Replaced by Duplex Flat Bed Web Perfecting Press.



DUPLEX PRINTING PRESS COMPANY
Battle Creek Michigan

BLANKETS of all kinds for all makes of Rotary Newspaper Printing Machines
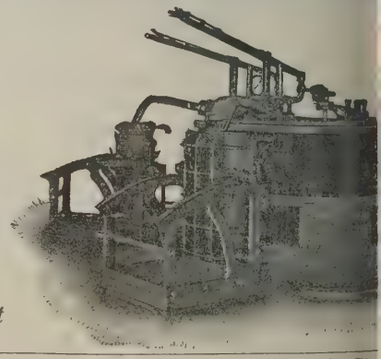
Automatic Efficiency Felt Blankets
Monocork Blankets
Oil-proof-face Rubber Blankets
Cutting Rubbers and Conveyor Wire.

You can save waste paper, increase production and obtain better printing when your machines are properly blanketed.



We specialize in the manufacture of Newspaper Printing Blankets and carry a complete line, including all widths and thicknesses.

New England Newspaper Supply Company
Worcester, Mass., U. S. A.
Cable Address NENSCO
Worcester, Mass.

The Quickest and Best Casting Unit

Hoe Stereotype Furnace with Hoe Equipoise Curved Casting Moulds and Pumps.

If it's a Hoe, It's the Best

R. HOE & CO., INC., 504-520 Grand Street, New York Cit

7 South Dearborn Street CHICAGO, ILL. | Pere Marquette Bldg. NEW ORLEANS, LA. | 7 Water Stree BOSTON, MAS

New Equipment

When it is installed, find a Buyer for the old through a Classified ad in Editor & Publisher. The Classified department has a record as a result-producer.

BOUND BY HNM

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
3 0112 072556902